Preface

This is the second of five planned books in the Bull's Eye series, and the first full length novel. If you haven't already, I'd recommend reading Bull's Eye 1: Discovering the Hotwife Fantasy. It's only $0.99 on most marketplaces and will set the context for what you're about to read here.

Most books are written from the perspective of either the wife, the husband, or both. Rarely can I think of one written from the POV of the "other man." When I began this series, it was more of a writing exercise than anything else. What I ended up creating was a story with characters that I kind of, sort of, maybe fell in love with.

I know that this is somewhat of an author's cliché—that all writers end up really liking their characters. I've felt this way before with Dani (Just Watch Me) and Katie (the Forbidden series) and Erin (Training to Love It). But this feels different. I'm really rooting for them, like someone sitting in a movie theatre munching on popcorn as I watch a Rom-Com.

The series has one more book left, and I'm still on the edge of my seat. Hopefully you will be, too.

Bull

[Unknown Number]: You were right. He's into it.

[Unknown Number]: This is Eleanor, by the way.

Two weeks have passed since the gala, since I took Eleanor Heller back to my room and officially made her a hotwife. Which, I guess in the parlance, makes me a bull.

I chuckle at the term. I've been with a lot of women over the years, but I've never thought of myself as a bull. Not until this past week, when I started reading about the hotwife lifestyle. The idea has grown on me. Elie was fun. The blonde from the Marriott, Manhattan, would have been fun, too. Why not give this thing a try?

I enjoy fucking. I get off on the wrongness that comes with taking another man's wife, as surely as Elie got off when I kissed her for the first time. That the husband knows—that he, too, gets off on it—introduces an added challenge to the mix, sparking a sense of competition in me.

These husbands want me to do something to their wives that they cannot. That's not the challenge, though. I know I can do that. No, the challenge is to make their wives believe it, too. To convert them from just humoring their husbands' fantasy to craving it themselves.

I add Eleanor Heller to my contact list, but wait until the end of the day to respond. She needs to stew.

[Me]: Elie! I was wondering when I'd hear from you.

She responds almost immediately. I imagine the English woman sitting in her home in a short, silky nightgown, staring out at the moon-drenched gardens of her inevitably large estate. I think of her nipples pressing hard and visible through the thin material. I think of her swirling her fingernails along the pale, white skin of her inner thigh.

She was hot, and not in the way that my one-night stands normally are. There was a sweetness to her, an innocence to her freckled cheeks. Even her body, despite her full breasts and curvy ass, was slender in a soft way that spoke to good genes more than hard work.

[Elie]: :P That's not my name, you know.

[Me]: It's not the name of the proper woman I met downstairs at the gala, but it's definitely the name of the girl who begged for me to come inside of her later on.

I stir at the memory. I can still feel her newly shaved pussy wrapped around my cock as I hammered her from behind, as she cried out, moaned, gasped, begged.

[Elie]: I can't believe I let you do that. Ronald was so pissed!

And then, immediately after, a follow up text:

[Elie]: Well, at first, anyway. Now he seems to get off on it. It's...odd.

From what I've read, that sounds about right. The husbands in these arrangements always seem so conflicted. Like they can't seem to make up their mind whether they want it or not. That's part of the excitement, though—the sense of being out of control.

I like things ordered. I'm a huge fan of being in control. It's probably one of the reasons I've never fallen in love. Takes a certain level of insanity to do that. These guys take the insanity further. I don't understand it, but I'm willing to take advantage of it.

[Me]: Send me the photo. I want a copy of my own.

For example, Eleanor Heller, wife of Ronald Heller, would never send a man she barely knows such a lewd picture. Ronald Heller, husband of Eleanor Heller, should have made her delete the photos immediately after seeing them. But I'm not dealing with Eleanor and Ronald. I'm dealing with their wilder personas—wild because of me.

[Elie]: You can't share it with anyone.

[Me]: Of course I won't.

I won't. I'm not that kind of guy. I don't need a trophy room to enjoy receiving trophies.

The photo comes through a moment later, and it's just as pornographic as I remember. I took the photos at the very end of the night. She was on her knees, staring up at the camera where I held it. Her soft brown hair was tied back into a tight ponytail, keeping it out of her face as I buried my cock to its shaved hilt in her mouth. It took some work, but we got her to take me fully, all nine, hard inches of my maleness. Her mascara had begun to run and tears glistened in her large, bright eyes, but she looked so fucking pleased with herself.

[Me]: So hot. Can't wait to feel that again.

A minute later, she responds that she can't wait, either.

[Me]: How about next Saturday night. I can keep the night open if you promise to show me a good time.

[Elie]: Let me check with my husband.

[Me]: Don't keep me waiting. My calendar fills up pretty quickly.

It's a cruel thing to say, but my cock is doing more of the thinking than it should. I really can't wait to see her again. I'm already thinking of new and exciting things I want to do to her.

[Elie]: I won't keep you waiting.

She gets back to me an hour later. We're on.

Saturday Night

Sequel hookups, as I like to call them, come with more pressure than the initial. There's more expectation. There are questions that weren't there when things were organic. Will it be as good as the first time? Was it even as good as I remember? What should I wear? Casual? Formal? Will we still want each other? And what do we even talk about?

To be clear, I don't have these questions. I'm doubt free. But some women do. So I try to alleviate them as much as possible. To set expectations. To remove doubt.

[Me]: Wear a dress. Something easy to take off. High heels. And nothing else.

[Elie]: lol. Should I now?

[Me]: You don't have to wear the dress if you don't want to. ;)

[Elie]: I'll keep that in mind.

I straighten up my apartment, which isn't so hard. A little vacuuming, a little sweeping. I try to keep a tidy home—never know when I'm going to bring someone back here. Besides, it was easy since I don't spend much time here.

After a quick shower and a longer bite to eat, the most difficult part of my day arrives—the waiting part. Women have stood me up before. I don't take it personally. Everyone's wrestling with their own demons, and I don't like to judge. I enjoy fucking more than anyone, it's the persona that I like to project after all, but it's far from the only thing in this life.

Still, I have a feeling that Elie is going to show. I'd be surprised if she doesn't because she's got her husband urging her on.

I researched the Hellers after the gala just to understand who I was getting tangled up with. Ronald Heller is an exec for a major angel investor, specializing in healthcare startups. Eleanor Heller comes from a family of money and privilege. The two are shrewd in the world of investment and business, and neither has simply sat on their wealth. While they don't reach Gregory Hamilton donation levels, together they're in the upper tier.

I try to imagine that life. They take vacations to exotic spots around the world. They charter private jets. Their children—I still can't believe that Eleanor has children at all—will grow up richer than they did. For a family, they want for nothing. As a man, Ronald Heller can have whatever, or whoever, he wants.

Yet here he is, sending his wife to my little apartment, where I plan to take photos of just how slutty she can be.

Life is so strange sometimes.

Her knock comes just a little after nine, tentative and quiet. I could almost miss it had I not been listening for it. I check myself in the hall mirror one last time. I considered answering her in just a robe, but that felt a little sleazy, even for me. So I put on a pair of jeans and a black button down shirt, rolled at the sleeves and with the top buttons undone. My dark hair is still damp from the shower, combed and styled like the Wall Street fox I try to project.

I open the door with a strange sense of déjà vu. We've done this before, back at the hotel after the gala. This time, there will be no soft seduction, no drinks by the window, no slow undressing. I have a much fuller night planned.

Elie is more dressed up than I am in a pale blue halter dress that looks designer. If her chestnut brown hair wasn't pulled back in a high ponytail, she could pass as a bridesmaid. Even her heels, matching blue sandals, make me think of wedding parties, which in turn reminds me that the beauty in front of me is married.

"Hi," I say, stepping forward to gather her into my arms. She's so slight against me, as delicate as a bird, and when I dip in to kiss her, she gasps. Her hesitation only lasts a moment, and then her lips part against mine and we're swept away.

I shut the door behind her, pin her against it, pulling her knee up to my hip as I kiss her. Her hand snakes up behind my neck, clutching the short hairs as she moans down my throat.

"Did you do as I told you?" I wonder aloud, sliding my hand up her thigh over her ass. I feel nothing there, no panties, nothing but warm flesh. "Good little slut."

She tenses at the slur, but doesn't protest. Must be hard for her, who's always lived a controlled and proper existence, to be debased like that. But at the same time...

"You don't like that word?" I ask, pulling back to look at her.

"It's..." Her eyes slide away. I reach up with my free hand and force her to look at me.

"Tell me that you don't want to be my slut and I'll let you leave."

Fear flashes across her face. She shakes her head.

I slide my hand beneath her thigh, edging it closer to her pussy. I can feel her heat, feel the balmy excitement even before I reach those smooth lips.

“You don't want to be my slut?”

“No.” It's like the word is ripped from her, then, quickly she adds, “I mean yes. I do.”

“Yes, what?”

There's no hesitation or defiance. That's gone as I press my fingers against her wet cunt. She moans, takes a ragged breath, and says, “Yes, I want to be your slut.”

“Give me your phone.”

She looks confused, but does so, reaching into her small purse. I flip on the video camera and point it at her. Her beautiful face fills the screen. “Say it again.”

Her lips curl up at the ends as she realizes what I'm doing. Perfect. With more confidence, she repeats, “I want to be your slut.”

Watching her shift in attitude is like opening the blinds and letting the sunlight in. All of a sudden, we become co-conspirators. What we're about to do is more than just an act of passion, more than a booty call.

“Are you going to suck my cock?” I ask.

She lifts a brow. “Can't wait.”

“Then what are we waiting for?” I end the video. She giggles before sinking down to her knees. I navigate to her text app and find her husband, quickly scanning the last exchange they shared—because it's right there and I can't not. She tells him that she's just arrived. He tells her to have fun. They tell one another, I love you.

And then I attach the video clip of her stating that she wants to be my slut. I shouldn't enjoy this as much as I do. I hit send just as Elie opens my jeans and pulls my semi-hard cock from my pants.

Any hint of shyness is gone as she begins to handle me. At first, she's mesmerized by it, watching it grow and thicken in her warm, pumping hands. When she takes it into her mouth, though, she shifts her attention up to me—not because I taught her that last time, but because she wants to check my reaction, to see what gets me off. When she tongues the spot just beneath the ridge of my cockhead and sees my eyes lose focus, she concentrates there.

The phone rumbles in my hand. I raise it, forgetting that it's Elie's phone, not mine, and read.

[Ronaldd]: That's so hot!

Takes me a moment to process that he's talking about the video—that he's not actually here, watching his wife suck my cock. That's too bad, but he's not getting that. Not yet, anyway. Instead, I hit the audio record button on the phone and hold it down to where Elie bobs.

“That's it, baby, suck my cock.”

The phone captures every detail. The liquid smack as her lips and tongue travel along my shaft. The moans, trapped in her throat. The sound of wet friction.

“Touch yourself while you suck me,” I order.

Soon, her moans grow louder, a hum that fills the microphone and surrounds my shaft with pleasure.

“That's a good slut,” I say. “A good, little, cocksucking whore.”

Elie pulls back with a muted slurp and smiles right at the phone. Her right hand jerks it, smearing her spit along the smooth skin at the base. “It's so big,” she says. “I don't think I can get it all.”

“Just relax your throat. Do it. I already know you can.”

She goes back to work, and the mic catches her gags and gurgles as more and more of my shaft disappears between her lips. She opens her throat, just as I told her to, and I feel the soft tightness as I press past her esophagus.

She gags harder, enough that she has to pull back and catch her breath. I watch the levels on the microphone app jump. She attacks again, determination written in hard lines across her face. This time, she swallows me to the root, and the microphone captures it all.

I reach down with my free hand, grabbing her by the ponytail, and hold her still so I can start to fuck her mouth. A part of me regrets not filming this. The rest of me revels in the rush of control. She opens her mouth wide, fighting to breathe as I fuck her face and she uses both hands on her pussy.

I try to imagine what this will be like for Ronald—try to think about how this audio will play, what it'll do to his already wild imagination. He's sent his beautiful, proper wife to me, and now he's alone, listening to her choke and gag as she takes my thick cock into her throat.

My orgasm almost catches me by surprise. My balls tighten, and I only have a split second to pull back. “I'm going to come all over your face,” I say, fighting to hold my climax at bay for just a few more seconds.

“Do it,” she says, eyes on me, phone forgotten. She reaches out and wraps her pussy-slickened fingers around my cock. They flash up and down it, but I'm already there, my fuse already blown.

I curse and groan, louder for the mic, messier for my unwitting audience of one, as I explode across Elie's elfin face. She tries to catch what she can in her mouth, sticking her tongue out like a porn star. A burst splashes her across the forehead.

She laughs. “I'm going to need a shower.”

“Let me give you the tour.” I end the audio recording and take a pic of her come-splattered face. I hand it back to her. “First, send those.”

She nods, shivering with excitement.

I leave her there in the hall and go to the kitchen-area of my one-bedroom, giving her a moment. I pour myself a glass of water and watch her as she writes to her husband. Despite what we just did, despite what we will do, there's a tenderness as she composes her texts. She smiles at his response, giggling quietly. She pauses, thinks, and then writes something back to him before shutting the phone off.

I dampen a dish towel and hand it to her as she joins me.

“Thanks.”

“You two good?” I ask.

Surprisingly, I feel envy spike through me. The burn of my competitive spirit rises in me. I reach out and finger the clasp behind her neck, the one that holds her halter up.

“Good,” I say. “Time to get this night started.”

The dress falls from her body like mercury, leaving her nude before my hungry eyes. She’s fit in a natural way, blessed by genes and good instructors and the time to use them, all curves and no hard lines. Her hips flare just perfectly, her legs taper in harmony with her narrowing waist. Only thing slightly out of proportion are her tits, which hang like ripe grapefruits from her slender chest. Natural, too, I know from experience.

Seeing me looking, Elie doesn’t shy away or cover herself. Maybe last week, she would have. Tonight, she puts a hand on her hip and poses. My cock begins to rise, despite the recent blowjob.

“Fuck, you’re hot,” I growl as I step close, pulling her against me. Our lips crash, our tongues duel. Her hands quickly go back to my cock, squeezing and urging it back to life. As if it needs it.

“Come on, let me give you the tour.”

The tour is easy, being an open-floor concept one-bedroom. The kitchen and living room can be viewed with a sweep of my hand. “Bathroom’s through there. Bedroom is in here.”

She goes first, letting me admire her plush ass, accentuated by the heels that she still wears. I wonder if she's ever had anal sex. My guess is no. My vow is to change that. Maybe not tonight, but before our fling has run its course.

“A king,” she says.

“Of course.” I follow her in. “Don't they say we spend a third of our lives in bed? I take my comfort seriously.”

“No black satin sheets?” she muses.

I snort. “I’m not that big a cliché.”

She floats into the room, and I consider the woman I’d fucked after the gala. That version of Elie was filled with doubt, with more uncertainty than the nude brunette I watch now. Not that she’s completely sure of herself and what she’s doing. When she half-turns to regard me over her shoulder, there’s a tentativeness to the way she looks at me. To the way she keeps her eyes off my cock, even though I know that’s where she wants to look.

“Take a picture. Send it to your husband.” I lean against the door frame and cross my arms across my chest. My cock hangs swollen, yet not hard enough to rise. “Show him what a man can look like.”

I wasn’t exactly sure what kind of relationship these two had. Was humiliation part of their game? Now I know. At least for Eleanor. I see it in the way her eyes glaze over, the way her breath quickens as she toys with her phone.

“Tell me something. When you went home after being with me, did your husband ask you if I had a bigger cock?”

I watch as my question registers with a flare in her eyes. He did. Typical question for any kind of dynamic. The revelation will come with how she answered. “And what did you tell him?”

Elie hesitated, and I let her hesitate. Let her work through this on her own. I just stand there, naked and waiting, as her gaze drifts down to my cock. She doesn’t lick her lips, but seems to want to. “I told him that you were.” She glances back up at me. “Much bigger.”

My cock begins to stiffen. I know I am large, but this validation comes with a rush anyway. “What else did you tell him?”

“That... that I’ve never come as hard before.” She turns some more, enough that I get a profile of her tits, full and capped with long, very hard nipples. “That you touched places inside of me that I never knew I had.”

“And how did he take it?”

She bites her lip. Like she is about to reveal a secret she shouldn’t. Like she’s still debating whether she’s going to tell me. This woman is a tease, whether she knows it or not. “He got so hard. So excited. He kept asking me to tell him how much bigger you were. As we fucked.”

I grin. Such a strange fantasy, but I’m game to take it for a ride as long as I can. “Then take that picture. Show him.”

It’s not about another man having a pic of me naked, of course. Despite the cuckold dynamic here, Ronald Heller most likely isn’t into men. But he’ll look at this and see the man his wife truly desires. Think about his own inadequacies. And it’ll turn him on even more. Which will, in turn, send her back to me.

Elie gets over her hesitation, pointing the phone’s camera to me with a shaky hand. “Don’t get my face,” I say at the last moment. I’m nearly fully erect once again. That’s what’s most important.

She nods, takes the photo, then taps something out, sending it. I detach myself from the doorframe and enter the room, my lair, approach my prey.

She's all soft, supple, English meat, ready for me to tear into.

"Give me your phone," I order. She does. "Now on your hands and knees on the bed. Time to give you what you came here for."

Her nostrils flare and a smile touches her lips. Yes, she says without saying, crawling up onto the bed. I'm right behind her, staring at her beautiful ass, plump and pale and so ready to be slapped. I place my hand on it as I climb into place behind her, sliding my fingers down her crack, across her asshole. I note the shudder before I curl my fingers forward and slide them into her smooth sex.

"So wet, Elie. For me?"

"Mm."

"Tell me, did your husband get mad when you told him I fucked you bare back?" I press my unprotected cock against her pussy, pushing the tip inside.

"So mad," she says through a sigh.

"But also...?"

"It—" I press deeper, taking the breath from her words. She gasps. "It turned him on, too."

"Did you promise you'd use a condom tonight?"

"Uhhh, huh."

I sink an inch deeper. "You have them in your purse?"

She nods, unable to talk. Her purse is back in the living room, forgotten. "I'm clean," I reassure her.

"I know."

“I haven't been with anyone since we were last together.” That's actually true, too. It's been a busy couple weeks. “Have you?”

“Just...just Ronald.”

I start to pull back, slowly, letting her feel my thickness slip from her. “Want me to go get one?”

Elie whimpers.

“What’s that?”

“Please...” She moans.

“Please what?”

“Just...” She pushes her hips back, wiggling them. “Just fuck me.”

“But Mrs. Heller, how naughty of you?” Before she can whine again, I slam into her, pushing all nine inches into her depths. Her whole body contorts, bowing inward like someone just used the middle of her back as a hammock. “But if this is what you really want...”

“Yes!” Her cry seeps through her clenched teeth. “It’s what...uhh... I want!”

I grab her phone, point it down at her ass, where my cock dips in and out of her, and hit record. “This is what you want?” I demand.

“Yes!”

“Tell me how you feel.”

“So...full,” she manages to say.

I spank her, watching her ass jiggle. The camera picks it up. “You’re a bad girl, Mrs. Heller. You’re a naughty, naughty woman.” I spank her again.

“Coming over here when you should be home with your husband.” Spank!

“Begging me to fuck you.” Spank! “Wanting to feel my come deep inside of you.” Spank!

She moans and gasps throughout, hissing out yesses and pleases, her agreement captured by her phone, ready to drive her cuckold husband wild.

“You’re so...big.”

I fuck her harder. Spank her harder. Ride her until I can no longer train the camera on her coupling. She’s close though, and I ignore the burn in my arm. “Touch yourself. Make yourself come for me, my slut.”

Resting her shoulders on the bed, she does as she’s told, reaching between her legs. I feel her fingers there, playing with her clit, her knuckles occasionally brushing across my balls. It’s enough to almost make me come. Almost. But I’ve already blown my load on her face. I’m good for a bit longer.

She buries her face in my comforter as she screams out her orgasm. Her pussy tightens around my driving shaft, tempting me to join her, to fill her with my seed. I almost do it. Almost. Later on, I know I will. I know I’ll leave a little surprise for her husband. But not now, when the evening is young and there’s so much more I want to do with this sweet, corruptible beauty.

I pull out of her and flip her over, straddling her body. She looks up at me, her eyelids droopy in the aftermath of her climax. “You’ve got some great tits,” I say. “Your husband ever fuck them?”

Elie shakes her head. I slide my cock up the middle of her chest.

“Wrap them around my cock,” I say. She reaches up, pressing them together, forming a soft canal for my cock to rest in. They truly are beautiful, perfectly sized to fuck. “I bet he never even asked.”

Elie nods. I begin to slide my cock through her cleavage. It’s soft and warm, pillowy pressure on my balls each time they press against her underboob. Elie tips her head forward each time the tip gets closer, swirling her tongue along the cap before I pull away.

“I want you to tell him that you did this for me,” I say. “And that I’m the only one who gets to fuck them.”

She nods, understanding. “These are mine.”

“Okay.”

“In fact...” I grab the phone again and snap a picture off—my cock resting between her tits as she pushes them around it. I send it off, with a message, Your wife’s such a naughty girl.

“What else hasn’t he done to you?”

“Loads of things.” My balls tighten at her accent.

“Things you’ve thought about?”

“Some.”

“Things you can’t ask your husband to try?” I know the answer, because this is part of the fantasy. I’m a plaything, not a partner, and Elie knows she can do things with her toys that she could never ask her husband. “Tell me what you like, Elie.”

“I liked it when you spanked me.”

“You deserve to be spanked.”

“I’ve never been...tied up before.”

“That’s such a shame.” I reach behind her, trailing my fingers along her pussy and tease her clit. She moans. “Want me to tie you up, Elie? Tie you up and have my way with you?”

She pushes her hips up against my hand as she moans. “Please...”

“First, say it. Tell me exactly what you want.”

“I want you to...tie me up...blindfold me...punish me...”

I oblige her, sinking two fingers into her snatch. “Why would I punish you, Elie?”

“Because I’m so bad. Because I shouldn’t want these things.”

“I’m not the first man you’ve fantasized about, am I?”

She shakes her head. I don’t know whether Ronald primed her before I came along, or she just had these desires buried deep down. If I had not struck when I did, though, I know that it was only a matter of time. Mason Coles probably would have fucked her that very night. She’d been ready then; she is more than ready now.

“We’re going to have fun,” I tell her, fucking her chest faster. She presses her tits around my cock, sensing things building. “Maybe I’ll invite a friend over to share you with. How would you like that?”

It’s like I reached into her and tore her moan free. She squeezes her thighs around my wrist.

“Ah!”

I thumb her clit as I finger her, as I fuck her full tits. I’ve done it a couple times—long time ago, when I was in my twenties and doing all kinds of stupid things. For Eleanor and her freckles and her English accent, I’d do it again. The thought of her twisting and moaning between us is so wrong, it turns me on.

“Not tonight, though. Tonight, you just get me and my cock. You need to earn the restraints. The punishment. You need to prove to me just how naughty you can be.”

I push a third finger into her pussy and she goes off. I’m there, too, yanking myself free of her tits to angle my cock down over her face. As soon as my cock touches her lips, she takes me into her mouth, her tongue working magic along the ridge of it. It's all I need. The trigger is pulled. I explode, thinking of all the fun we're going to have, of all the ways I'm going to enjoy corrupting this sweet woman and her naive husband.

I'm not a good person, I realize with the kind of epiphany that only comes at the height of orgasm. But I'm the exact right person that this woman—that this couple—needs in her life. And I'm more than happy with the arrangement.

We fuck late into the night, until my body is sore and Elie can barely walk. I take more photos. We send them to her husband. She comes countless times. I come once more, deep inside of her—the promised surprise for her husband. I don't tie her up, even though I have the restraints in my nightstand. That's for next time, a promise of what can be. I want her back here not for her husband, but because she can't keep her mind off of me.

We kiss at the front door as she waits for her Uber ride to arrive. It's playful and familiar, but somewhere in the back of my mind, I know that the kiss she's going to share with her husband will be nuclear. I almost take her one last time, just to prove to her that I'm more a man than Ronald. Even I recognize how crazy that sounds, though, and I let her go.

"I'll text you when I'm free," I say.

"Can't wait." She bounces out of my apartment, a different woman than the heiress to millionaires, off to share her latest adventure with her partner.

Me? I'm left with memories.

Scandal

I read about it on Twitter before I get into the office. A Tuesday. Just a week and a half since my time with Elie.

Hashtag #HamiltonFundScandal. It's not huge news as things go, but in the charity world, it's nuclear. I just happen to work in the charity world, and the Hamilton Fund? It was just rolled out by my charity.

Gregory Hamilton is one of the biggest donors we have at the Dawning Foundation, a non-profit charity that helps the fight against Alzheimer's Disease. We just recognized him a month ago, at the Annual Donor Recognition Gala, which also kicked off the Hamilton Fund. Turns out, it was all an elaborate fraud. When he asked for contributions, he did not match them. When he promised new research grants, only the smallest were awarded. The rest was funneled into offshore accounts, or used to fuel his own private investments. Millions of donor dollars were stolen.

The emails start to fly before I walk in the front door of the Foundation offices. They are as confused as the tweets I read on the way in. Larry Park, the director, summons the whole staff into our largest conference room—all 48 hard working, good-natured souls—to explain what he knows.

Apparently, this isn't the first time Hamilton has done this. The FBI was watching him, waiting to gather enough evidence to strike. Unfortunately, the evidence they needed is tied to the Dawning Foundation, and while we knew nothing of the scam, we will be connected to it in the eyes of the public—and worse, our donors.

Larry looks more composed than any of us feel as he lays out the situation. As I look around the room, I see the confidence that inspires in others. “To help us, we've reached out to a PR firm that specializes in helping non-profits and charities. They have their best people on it already, and I expect everyone’s full cooperation with them.” There are nods around the room. “We’ll get through this. We all believe in this cause, and I'm not going to let it fail because of some greedy con man.”

We break slowly, each of us stunned and adrift as we move back to our offices. How are we supposed to get any work done?

I go to mine, sit in silence for a good five minutes, then start to update my resume. Life is all about change. I like what we do here, but it doesn't define me. I've had other jobs before, and I will probably have new ones, regardless of how this scandal plays out.

Larry comes into my office. He doesn't ask if he can come, and I don't expect it. He's the boss, and he's earned my respect time and again. “How's it going, Paul?”

“Been an interesting morning.”

He chuckles sardonically. “Seriously. Starbucks got my order wrong again.”

“Those assholes.”

He laughs, but his eyes are flat. Troubled. I've never seen him look at me like that. I know what he's going to say next, but let him say it on his own terms.

“I'm going to have to step down,” he says at last. He doesn't grimace. He’s not whining. He's taking it like a man.

The board’s forcing him out at the recommendation of the PR firm, the assholes. What I don't expect is what comes next.

“They're going to need someone to act as interim director, and I'm going to recommend you.”

My phone buzzes, and I check the text reflexively. Shows how out of it I am that I do that in front of my boss.

[Elie]: Did you know?!

I groan.

“Need to take that?” Larry asks with a smirk.

“Sorry.”

“The PR folks will be here this afternoon. I need your answer now. Sorry, buddy.”

“You're an asshole.”

“Hey, I wish we hadn't hit this iceberg on my watch, but there's no one else I can turn to.”

“Fine.”

“Atta boy.” He rises. “Stop looking like this is your funeral or something. The donors haven't killed you yet.”

He leaves. I regard my phone, Elie's text. They haven't killed me yet.

[Me]: No, just found out this morning.

[Me]: Are you free tonight? We can meet and talk.

This is messy. I mean, I knew it would be messy when I got involved with a donor, but whatever. Time for damage control.

[Elie]: Yes, I'm free.

[Me]: My place. 9.

[Elie]: Really? A booty call?

I wish I could see her face, hear her voice. At least then I would be able to interpret the proper tone here. If she is mad, though, I don't have much to lose.

[Me]: If you want information, you're going to have to earn it.

It's a long time before she responds. Long enough that I worry, that I think maybe I really have screwed this up. Then:

[Elie]: Fine. 9.

I consider ordering her to wear something sexy, but decide I've let my luck ride long enough.

The news hits the mainstream press just after lunch. It's on CNN and Fox News. It's covered in the Washington Post and the New York Times. My mom calls me. I let it go to voicemail. I don't have time to talk to her, and I don't want to deal with it now even if I did.

The office is a flurry of activity, of damage control. We call donors. We're on the phone with lawyers. Mapping a strategy as best we can, it's like drawing a portrait in the dark. The PR firm, Smith & Kingsley, is due in the afternoon.

"Any advice you want to pass on?" I ask Larry, just before the PR meeting begins.

He regards me carefully. He's a good looking guy in his fifties. Carries it well. Still fit, still youthful despite his gray hair. He never married, never had kids. He never brought the same woman twice to a gala or Dawning event. In many ways, he's the man I'll probably be in twenty years. I'll miss having that beacon in my life.

"I recommended you for the interim job because you're what we need right now. Control. Control the message, control the damage, control the panic."

"I sense a but."

"I don't have the answers, Paul. I've made a lot of mistakes in my life. But if you want the job in the long term, being in control will only get you so far." He spreads his hands out. "This office, for example. This team. What we've accomplished with so few people is remarkable. Compare us to Susan G. Komen Foundation or Andrew Mellon. They're huge. We're not, but we leave a huge wake. That's not because I'm in control here. I gave that up long ago to people like you."

I follow him into the conference room, where the senior leadership of Dawning gather to wait our fate. I go to the windows and watch the afternoon rush hour traffic roll by. Heat rises off the cars, the sidewalk, the stream of pedestrians heading home. Life continues, even as The Dawning Foundation feels like the apocalypse has just kicked off.

The door behind me opens dramatically and five people enter—Henry Dawning, current president of the board, looking much older than the last time I saw him; two of our biggest remaining donors in Mason Coles and the matronly Gloria Westhouse; a slender Asian woman with a take-charge stride; and...Manhattan?

I almost say her nickname out loud. She sees me at the same time, her golden brows rising. Her lips part as the breath leaves her.

I echo that response. Never have I had the breath taken from me quite like this. Not even this morning, when the Hamilton scandal first broke. Seeing her now, in this place, is like seeing a ghost—a tall, beautiful, blonde ghost, but a phantom nonetheless.

“Sorry we’re late,” Henry says, gruff as ever. “Traffic in this city’s something else.”

Henry Dawning, son of the founder of the foundation, has small, black eyes, weathered with wrinkles, and wears glasses too large for his narrow face. He pushes them up the bridge of his nose now as he shuts the door behind him.

“Everyone, this is Heather Kingsley-Fletcher, from Smith & Kingsley, our PR firm,” Henry introduces. Manhattan looks around the room with a soft smile, although her eyes dart back to me in the end, as though confirming that I’m still there. “Her associate, June Wong. And you all know Mason and Gloria.”

I barely hear him. I'm consumed by the blonde. Heather Kingsley-Fletcher, of Smith & Kingsley. I wonder which is her maiden name. I wonder why the hell she’s even here. She’s dressed in a crisp, white suit over a black blouse. With her towering pumps and her blonde hair tied back in a tight bun, she's sexy in a corporate way that feels so different than the woman I met in the bar just a few weeks ago.

Our eyes meet as everyone sits. It really is her. I sit, too, automatically. Still in shock. She regards me like a puzzle to solve, her head cocked just a fraction off center. Must be how I look, too.

Henry launches into it, explaining Larry's abrupt retirement and my acting director status in his stead. This brings yet another look of surprise on Manhattan's face. She processes it swiftly, and I feel naked under her gaze. It's not a feeling I'm used to.

He continues to lay out the game plan. Mason and Gloria are here representing the donors, and their endowments to Dawning could be enough to keep us solvent for a few more months. Smith & Kingsley will handle damage control. He asks for questions. I let the other managers go first, telling myself that I'm interested in what they're struggling with. Really, it's just so hard to focus with Manhattan sitting in the same room, and the way our eyes keep finding one another.

I want to see her as Heather Kingsley-Fletcher, who will save Dawning from collapse. She wears less makeup than she did in my memory, looking more natural. But despite her smart clothes and poised professionalism, it's difficult not to look at her and remember. The crooked smile I spent so much time thinking about doesn't help. I was in that bar when she played the hotwife game with her husband. I watched the way Mr. Manhattan—Mr. Kingsley-Fletcher—reacted when we flirted and know that when they left to go up to their room, they were all over each other. He probably pushed his cock inside her as they both imagined it was me.

At a break, I find myself standing at the Keurig machine as she passes by, a mug of tea steaming. "You know how much waste those little Keurig cups create?" she says. I can't help but hear laughter just behind her voice.

I ignore the question, taking my coffee from the single-serving dispenser and drink it black. "I thought you were from out of town."

“Thought you were, too.” Peering at me closely, she adds, “I keep thinking this is some kind of prank. You really work...at a charity?”

“What can I say? I’m all empathy.”

Manhattan scoffs at that. She blows across her tea, takes a sip, and removes the tea bag. “Sure. And so is our friend, Mason Coles.”

Good. At least she sees through him like I do. “Got to work to support my playboy lifestyle,” I say.

Something moves in my chest, hearing Manhattan laugh. This is awful. I don’t want to have a crush on this woman. I blot that thought out immediately.

“But a charity?” she goes on. “A UPS driver maybe.” She squints at me. “Did you accidentally wander in here making a delivery and decide to stay?”

“I’d be happy to make a delivery for you.”

Manhattan rolls her eyes, but the laugh is still in them. “Yeah, that’s definitely you.”

She moves along. The meeting resumes.

We talk logistics. I snap out of my silence. I’m the acting director now. I need to start behaving like one—especially now that Manhattan’s here, watching me, weighing my worth. I want to prove that I’m better than the UPS driver she’s reduced me to. Pride can be a motivating thing.

Still it becomes clear that I’m not the decision maker. I’m tolerated the way a child is tolerated at a table of grownups. They smile and offer encouragement, but do not take me seriously. Mason, Gloria, and Henry Dawning do most of the talking, with Manhattan and her colleague, June, driving the conversation.

Frustrated and tired, I sit back as the day trudges along, as irritating as it is unstoppable. I wonder if Henry Dawning knew what Gregory Hamilton was up to. They are the same age, and I think it was Henry who landed the Hamilton account. The thought slides away from me, just as the time does. The sun sets. 8 o'clock comes and goes, and it's only then that I remember my meeting with Elie. At nine.

No one's watching me, but pulling a phone out in the middle of one of the most important meetings I've ever attended to text my booty call is unprofessional enough that even I can't do it. It's a conundrum, because keeping Elie waiting—or standing her up—could also create some problems for me. If she reveals our relationship to the board, I'd be out the door right behind Larry.

As Henry and Gloria get into the logistics of how to get the money back, I lean toward Manhattan and whisper, “You know how much longer we're going to go?”

Things have gone on long enough that even she's lost her sparkle. At my question, though, she perks up. “Hot date?” she whispers back.

I regret asking her almost immediately, but it doesn't change the fact that I had to. “Damage control,” I say. It's true, in a sense, although of a much more fun variety than this meeting.

Manhattan seems to read the nature of the damage control, too. “Your life's complicated,” she says. I sense judgment, but maybe I'm just imagining it.

“Not usually. Today's just been special.”

Manhattan's laughter draws the attention of the rest of the room. Henry and Gloria stop talking and turn to us. “Something you want to add?” our board president asks.

Manhattan speaks for us. “Just that I think we should probably call it a night, sooner rather than later. Regroup in the morning.”

Mason watches us, and I wonder what he's thinking. Henry agrees, though, and we all begin to rise. I gather my things quickly. I'm going to be late, but hopefully Elie will be, too.

“Hey, Paul,” Manhattan says, catching me just before I head out the door.

“Yes?”

She’s close enough that I can smell the delicate, vanilla aroma of her perfume—a scent that’s been vaguely haunting me these last few weeks. She says, “Be patient.” I know she doesn’t mean to come off as condescending, but after this whole afternoon, that’s exactly how it feels.

“What’s that mean?”

“You think no one’s listening. They are. Everyone deals with crisis in their own way.”

“Did you read that inside a fortune cookie?”

Rather than flinch at my bark, she just laughs and shakes her head. “I’m either going to enjoy working with you, or I’m going to have to recommend to Dawning over there to fire you.”

She’s flexing her position. Is that supposed to intimidate me? This morning, I was updating my resume. I say, “You gotta do what you gotta do, Manhattan.” We can both posture. Mine happens to involve a tawdry game that she and her husband play.

I expect her to correct me. To say something like, You know my real name now. Instead, she just smiles. “See you tomorrow, Jameson.” And with a little wave, she turns away from me to speak to the lingering execs.

Controlling the situation

The more I replay this afternoon, the more I fume. I didn't have to take the acting director position. I was asked. To then treat me with kid gloves really gets under my skin.

Manhattan's joke about having me fired needles me the most. The implication is that she also had Larry fired—a man who has nothing to do with the scandal. And she was so smug about it, playing with a man's career like it's a game. I think about the game she was playing when I first met her, toying with other men like that. What did she call me? "Foreplay."

By the time I arrive at my apartment building, it's 9:15 and I slam the car door hard enough that it sounds like a gunshot.

Eleanor Heller is waiting for me at my front door, but she's not alone. With her is Mr. Ronald Heller. Of course he's here. It's been that kind of day, and judging from the way neither of them look happy, I'm guessing this isn't about to go the way I expected it to—namely, cathartic, dominant sex with Elie Heller.

I want to do something reckless. I glance at Ronald Heller standing there in his khakis and his tucked in tennis shirt, looking very uncomfortable next to his pissed off wife. This is the same man I sent videos of Elie saying that she was my slut, begging for my come. The same man who texted back how hot that was.

I almost—almost—tell him thanks for dropping his whore off. The words form. "Thanks..." spills out before I can stop it. I rein it in. Somehow. "...for waiting. It's been a crazy day."

“I bet,” he says. I see relief there. He was afraid I'd say what I almost did.

I move my attention on to Elie. She looks lovely as ever, more professional than I've seen her. She wears a black wrap dress that compliments her slim figure. Her sunglasses are pushed up onto her head, holding her soft brown hair out of her face. This close, I really notice her freckles. I also see how unhappy she is.

“Mrs. Heller,” I say as I open my front door. “Please, come in.”

“Paul.” She nods, entering stiffly. Ronald follows.

She wears tall heels, I notice, and has taken her time to look good. At least that's a good sign.

“Can I get either of you something to drink?”

Ronald takes in my apartment. I see him connecting the place with the snippets he got in the photos and videos. There is where Elie knelt and sucked my cock. The bedroom door is open, the bed in view.

“No thanks,” Eleanor says, turning down my drink.

“Ron?”

“Um...”

“I'm getting one.”

“Sure, I'll take...something.”

I pull down my bottle of Jameson and a couple glasses. The Irish whiskey seems fitting, although the significance is lost on these two.

I throw back my first glass in one swallow, refill it, and turn to the Hellers. “Okay, you probably want a few answers. We are currently working to recover your money—or as much of it as we can. Your donations will go exactly where you allocated them, if not in the next few weeks, then by the end of the year.” I toss the second glass of whiskey down. “If that doesn't work, we can return the money, but I hope that's not what you want. The grants that you're funding are all legitimate ones." I hold up my glass, but don't drink this time. "Oh, and one other thing. Congratulations to me, I just inherited this mess."

The two are speechless, blinking at me. Confused.

"You're now looking at the acting director of Dawning, and I can assure you, I'm going to do my best to accommodate you. As director." I scoop up Ronald's untouched glass and hand it to him. "But it's been a long fucking day, and I'm about to hang up that hat for the night." I look at Elie. "And it's good to see a pretty face."

Her freckled cheeks turn a delightful shade of pink. "So you didn't know?"

"No one at Dawning did. Not even Henry Dawning." I hold my drink out to her. "You sure you don't want this? You look like you need it."

"What makes you say that?" She has such a sweet demeanor. Hard to believe the dirty things she's done. Then again, that makes her even sexier.

"Because you're about to have sex with another man in front of your husband."

Her intake of breath is sharp, but she doesn't deny it. She does take the drink though.

"How about it, Ron? I bet you came over here, half hoping you'd get to watch."

He doesn't deny it, either, and I know I have them both. I step up to his wife, reaching out to touch her face. I brush my thumb along her cheek. She looks up at me brightly. Ready.

"My last act of the day as representative of Dawning is to say, 'I'm sorry.' If I could hand deliver Gregory Hamilton's balls on a platter, I would."

Elie giggles, even as she makes a face. "Not sure what I'd do with them, but I appreciate the sentiment...Director." The way she says it sends a shiver of power through me.

With Ronald's eyes on us, I pull Elie to me and kiss her. Her mouth is soft and yielding, eager to accept the press of my tongue. Her hand grips my shirt between us, balling into a fist.

When I pull back, she's out of breath. I reach down and loosen the tie that holds her wrap dress closed. With a tug, I pull it open, revealing her breasts that seem a little too large for her pale body. She wears a satin black bra and a matching pair of boyshort panties—sexy in a girl-next-door way.

I slide my hand inside her dress and touch her narrow waist. Her skin is hot. “You want me to take you in front of your husband?”

Elie bites her lip. She's uncertain. I've read about this before, how sometimes wives who play can get self-conscious if their husbands are around. But Elie has also let me video her saying and doing all kinds of dirty stuff, so maybe that's not exactly it.

“You want to show him how much of a slut you are for me?”

With those freckles and that shy smile, her bashful reaction to me demeaning her is such a turn on. She nods her head. Barely. Like she's ashamed to admit it. Part of her is. But not all.

“Say it, Elie. Tell him who you are for me.”

She casts her eyes at the floor, taking a deep breath as more color springs to her cheeks. She glances at her husband, and when she speaks, her voice is clear. Almost...cruel? “I'm his slut.”

God, that accent!

Ronald draws a shaky, yet exhilarated, breath. Like a masochist who's just been lashed. It forces me to re-evaluate this man once again.

Ronald Heller is about my age—mid-thirties. He wears his tennis shirt tucked into his khakis, glasses, a beard that I think is new from the last time that I saw him. The only time I've seen him—across the room at the Dawning gala. If I met him under normal circumstances, as someone walking into our office, I'd say he looked like any other donor—moneyed and with the soft confidence that came with money. He is still that. He always will be that. But he's also a man desperately trying not to touch his erection as his wife tells him she's a slut for someone else.

Slowly, dramatically, I undo my tie. The top button of my shirt has long been unfastened, but the tie had remained, loose yet there. A pretense to professionalism despite the humiliating day. I drag it off slowly, wrap it around my fist like a boxer.

“Take off your dress,” I say. I turn to Ronald. “And you. Take a seat on the sofa. You'll be able to watch from there.”

He plays coy. “Watch?”

“Don't play dumb with me, Ron. We both know you're many things—cuck, wimp maybe? But not dumb. For that, though, I'm going to have to punish...this slut here.”

I try to imagine this same scene playing out with Manhattan and her husband. I can't. She would never tolerate me calling her a slut, and I'm pretty sure I'd never even try. I know next to nothing about Mr. Kingsley-Fletcher, but I also can't imagine that Manhattan would marry a man who'd let me call him a wimp.

But Elie and Ronald let me. They live in a clean and proper world where I represent the seedy underbelly of society to them. Me, an MBA working for a charity non-profit with an expensive apartment in the trendiest neighborhood in the city. I'm as close as they will get to dirty, and realizing this, I intend to take full advantage.

Elie's dress hits the floor. Ronald sits, the sofa angled to easily see what's going on. I spin his wife, grabbing her arms and holding them behind her, binding them fast with my tie. She gasps.

“So how should we punish you, Elie?” I shove her forward, bending her at the waist over my kitchen's island counter. With her hands tied behind her back, her chest and shoulders kiss the cold, black granite. She turns to rest her cheek on the countertop, facing her husband. "Should I spank you?"

"Yes," she sighs.

"Don't sound so upset," I say, brushing my hand across her ass. The silk of her boy shorts is thin and rides high between her cheeks. I pat each cheek softly, enough to watch it jiggle. Glancing at Ronald, who sits transfixed, I say, "She likes to be spanked, so that's not much of a punishment." I grab a wooden spoon from the container of kitchen implements. "Let's see how she feels about this."

Without further warning, I slap the bulging side of the spoon across her cheeks. I don't intend to strike her hard, but the sound it makes is loud and sharp. I grimace with her until I realize that her cry is more moan than protest. "Uh!" I spank her again, just to confirm. She's definitely moaning.

"Your wife really is a naughty one," I tell Ronald. "Did you know she liked it like this?" I slap her with the spoon again. Ronald shakes his head. "I wonder if she knew. Did you know, Elie? Did a past boyfriend ever do this —" Slap! "—to you?"

"No."

"I think that's enough punishment. For now." I set the spoon down and square up behind her, taking hold of her panties and pulling them off. They're damp. "She's soaking," I tell her husband. "See for yourself, Ron." I toss him the silky underwear, then turn back to my subject.

The black bra—her only scrap of clothing now—really highlights how pale her skin is. I run my hand down her back, tracing the soft perfection of her skin. She takes good care of herself, but more than that, must have taken care of herself just before she came here. This takes preparation. I dip my fingers between her legs, where she's wet and slippery and so smooth.

"Did you shave for me tonight?" I ask.

"I...I did."

“Even when you brought him here. On the pretense of talking business.”

“Yes.”

I dip my fingers into her pussy. “Part of you knew things would end up here, didn't you?”

I press against her g-spot. She cries out. I say, “Don't lie.”

She sucks air across her teeth at the clank and clatter of my belt buckle. “Ready to show him just how much you like this?”

Elie nods. My pants hit the floor, my erection unleashed in all its thick glory. I hear Ronald react, but don't bother looking. I step forward, steady her with a hand on her hip, and guide my cock against her pussy.

“You shouldn't have brought him here without asking me, you know. For that, you need to be punished some more.” I drive my cock halfway home in one hard thrust. Elie stiffens, jerking at the sudden, forceful invasion. Even struggles against the makeshift restraint. “What if I had other plans for you?”

“Such as?”

I pull back, almost all the way, then drive forward again. I don't answer her, mostly because I have no real answer, but also because I know the minds of both the Hellers will do a much better job of it. They will go to their darkest fantasies. I wonder what those are as I fuck Elie faster.

No more foreplay. Nothing soft and sensual here. This fuck is as hard and loud as the strikes I delivered earlier with the spoon. Reminded of that, I start to spank her with my hand, leaving red marks across those pale cheeks. Leaving her crying for more, more!

“Ever fucked her back here, Ron?” I ask, pressing my thumb against her asshole. “Does she like anal?”

“I...I don't know.”

“You don't know if you've had anal sex with your wife?” I push on her sphincter until the tip of my thumb enters. Elie cries out, exploding through an orgasm I do not see coming. “She's into it, man. She's wants it.”

I drive my thumb deeper, and her cries intensify. She bites them back, tries to fight it, but loses in the end.

“And I'm going to do it. I'm going to take your anal cherry, Elie. Do you like that? Does that turn you on, my little slut?”

She's nodding and moaning and crying, “Yes, yes,” over and over. Like I'm about to do it now. Like I'm about to just shove it in her ass. But where's the sport in that?

Instead, I shove myself deep into her pussy one last time, burying my thumb to the first knuckle in her ass. She goes off again. This time, so do I. I fill her pussy, warm and welcoming, as the ring of her anus tries to sever my thumb from my hand.

She screams. I slap her ass, spent and satiated. At least for now. For tonight. This was exactly what I needed after this long day, but now that it is over, I feel the weight of my exhaustion bear down.

I pull free and stagger back as Elie slumps against my counter. We both breathe hard. I catch myself on the counter, where my sink sits, and stare at her ripe body one last time. She glistens, her paper white skin marred red where I struck her. Now that the moment has passed, it's hard to believe that I did that. Even harder to believe that I said some of the things that I said.

Ronald's hushed moan reminds me that he's here, and reassures me that there will be no consequences to what I just did. At least no immediate ones. He comes in his pants, rubbing himself there on my sofa. If I had not already decided that this encounter is over, that awkward and delayed climax would have done it.

I want to throw them out. To zip up—I didn't even have time to take my pants or shirt off—head to bed, and tell them to lock the door on their way out. It's been a long day, and my wit and charm aren't quite where they normally are.

But even I'm not that uncouth. I summon some last reserve of energy, channel it into the kind of guy these two think I am, and step back up to Elie's prone body. I untie her wrists, although the knot was loose enough that she could have squirmed out, and pull her back to a stand, hugging her against me. With my lips so close to her ear that they practically touch, I whisper, "This weekend, when things settle down, I'm going to send you some instructions."

I'm quiet, but not so quiet that Ronald can't hear me. I am, after all, part of the show.

Running my hand down her naked side and across her ass, I continue. "You will follow those instructions without fail if you want to keep being my plaything. Understand?"

She nods. I grip her ass cheek hard. "Yes, I understand."

"Good. First rule is important, though, so I'm going to give it to you now. Ron there doesn't get to play with this." I tease my fingers across her asshole. "This is mine. If I learn you broke this rule, we are done."

Elie glances in her husband's direction. "Don't worry. He won't." I can hear the loving cruelty in her tone. She's good at playing him. I never would have guessed.

This time, when I whisper, it's for her ears only. "You are one evil woman. I love it."

She turns to me, kissing me deeply. Possessively. My, what a metamorphosis this lovely young woman is undergoing. But sexy butterfly or not, I don't have enough to fuck her again. Or do anything more than go to sleep.

“Look for my instructions. This weekend,” I say, heading for my bedroom. I have no idea what those instructions are going to be, but it sounds dramatic. Enough anticipation is set to allow me to say the thing I've wanted to say since I came. At my bedroom door, I turn to the couple and say, “Lock the door on your way out.”

Coffee

The next morning dawns too soon, and I desperately need coffee—and the coffee out of the office Keurig just won't cut it. On days like this, I have a secret weapon—Aroma House, the best espresso and coffee bar in the city. If it wasn't seven blocks from the office, I would probably go every morning. As it is, I hit up the small cafe at least once a week. Wednesday morning, with my body still sore from entertaining the Hellers, definitely qualifies.

It's already pretty warm by the time I get there around 7:15 in the morning. There's a line inside the cafe, but at least it hasn't emerged onto the street yet. Inside, of course, it's even hotter. I take my spot at the back of the line, pull out my phone to get a head start on my emails.

It's only after I put my order in and move into the crowd gathered at the pickup station that I see her—Manhattan. Haunting me again. Like everyone else, she's engrossed in her phone, head tipped down, scrolling through something. Oblivious to the world around her. Gives me a chance to check her out. Her hair is up this morning, and she has a pair of sunglasses pushed up onto her head. She's wearing a crisp, black pantsuit over a white blouse, and a pair of tall and spindly black pumps. She looks good, dressed like that. More professional than sexy, but also, because it's Manhattan, sexy.

“Someone is definitely stalking the other,” I say as I step into place beside her.

She looks up at me in surprise. “Paul. Morning.” I like that she sounds a little off balance. She quickly finds her footing. “Long way from the Dawning office, so I'm afraid to inform you that you're the stalker.”

“Same logic applies to you.”

“Didn't you just put in your order? By definition, you are following me.”

So she did see me, I note. And she then pretended not to see me. I almost call her on it, but she continues before I can.

“As it is, I come here all the time. Best espresso in the city, and my office is just around the corner. What's your excuse?”

I consider something flirty and forward, caught for a brief moment in the memory of our first meeting. But the circumstances are different. She's a colleague, and so I find decorum.

“Late night,” I say.

“Damage control?” she asks knowingly.

I nod as the barista calls her name—“Heather.” When she goes to collect it from the counter, I can't help myself from checking out her butt—colleague or no. Her black trousers are very tight, hugging a round, tight ass without a hint of a panty line.

I'm half surprised that she waits for me, sipping her coffee as my order is made. Retrieving my own coffee, I glance at her heels and just can't help myself. “Waiting to split a cab?”

“Why? Seven blocks too much for you, big guy?”

“If you need to lean on an arm...” I catch myself. “...I'm sure you can find some willing guy who's definitely not someone you're currently working with.”

This earns me a laugh, and it feels good. “Come on, Mr. Sharpe. Let's get moving.”

Out in the street, it's already hot. Things feel awkward between us, and I don't like that feeling. She exists in this gray area between flirty banter and off-limits coworker. I let her take the lead, and happy when she does.

"So I'm guessing 'damage control' went pretty well, based on that large cup of coffee and the bags under your eyes."

I had sex with a woman as her husband watched. I laugh to myself, imagining the shock of just telling her the truth. Then again, she asked, so clearly she is digging. Might as well give her what she wants. "I had sex with a woman as her husband watched."

To her credit, Manhattan only stumbles a bit, her brows going up a fraction. She stares at me, brushing a strand of hair that isn't there over her ear as she puzzles out whether I'm fucking with her or not. "Wow. Okay then." She laughs at the situation, more than at me. I think.

"Go ahead. Ask any questions you may have. I'm not shy."

"Apparently not! Okay then. Was it weird? That he was there?"

"Honestly? A little. I quickly got over it, though."

"How about for..." She hesitated.

"For the woman? Was it weird for her? Why ever would you ask that, Manhattan?"

"Nevermind."

"I don't think it was, no. She's an interesting woman, honestly. A lot more complex than she first appeared. Sweet and almost conservative on the outside, but with a really dirty side to her. If anything, I think her husband being there made it even hotter for her."

We walk in silence as my statement sinks in. At the time, I didn't think of it that way, but Elie's husband being there really did turn her on more. I wonder if the excitement was having an audience, or that the audience was her husband. Based on the way they kept looking at one another—and the evidence I found in the morning that they fucked on my sofa before leaving—I guess the latter.

Manhattan is somewhere else, lost in her own thoughts. The temptation to break into them is too juicy to pass up. “You and the mister cross that line yet?”

She glances at me out of the corner of her eye. “If you’re hunting, time to look elsewhere.”

I hold up my free hand, palm out. “You’ve already made that clear. No ulterior motive here. Just curious.”

“We haven’t. And we won’t. What you saw, back at the Marriott, was as far as it’ll ever go.”

“Says you.”

“Damn right, says me. It’s my body. I get to decide what I do with it.”

“I’m sorry, that didn’t come off right. I meant that your husband wants it to go further.”

“He says he does, but he actually doesn’t. He couldn’t take it.” She shakes her head, mostly to herself. “He’s a jealous man. Kind of possessive.”

“I’m surprised you settled down with a guy like that.”

Her smile is thoughtful. “What? You don’t think a woman like me wants to be possessed?” There’s more behind that question, but I don’t know her well enough to decipher it. Before I can ask, she moves on. “I love the guy, and the heart wants what the heart wants, right?”

It made sense. Someone like Manhattan needs a strong partner to balance her. She would walk all over a guy like Ronald Heller. There’s no challenge there, and she strikes me as someone who constantly needs to be challenged.

“So you don’t think he could handle the idea of you with another man? That the only reason you haven’t done it?”

She laughs even louder. “You do know that permission wasn’t the thing stopping me from sleeping around, don’t you?” She pauses. “Maybe you don’t. Have you ever been in love?”

“Plenty of times, but I always snap out of it in the morning.”

She shakes her head. “Point is, even if I was certain that Joshua would be fine if I did that, I wouldn’t.” She holds up her large, diamond ring. “I’m married, and I chose to get married for a reason. If I wanted to keep playing the field, I never would have put this ring on.”

She is certainly saying all the right things, but I was there when she was playing their game, and I felt the interest. If she wants to believe what she believes, though, who am I to tell her otherwise? “So you played the field, before Joshua?”

Manhattan smirks. “I’m sorry to say it, but you’re not a unique snowflake after all.”

Wish we’d met back then. Somehow, I keep the statement to myself.

We arrive at the Dawning office. Seven blocks never passed so quickly. “That was fun,” I say.

“Yes, surprisingly. It was.” She tugs on her suit jacket. “Ready to stop talking about sex?”

I laugh, and see the delight it brings to Manhattan. “I’m never ready for that, but I’m pretty good at pretending.”

Turns out, we work pretty well together. Over the next few days and into the weekend, the two of us, plus Dawning and Gloria, hunker down and work out our crisis strategy—press releases, talking points, interviews on a few radio shows. All things that until a week ago, I never thought I'd do, and apparently I do them pretty well.

"I'm trying to work you onto a few morning shows," she tells me the Monday morning after the scandal hit.

We're at Aroma House, which has become our unspoken meeting spot each day—a place for the two of us to flirt before getting down to business.

"Oh yeah? Like The Today Show?"

"Trying. Good news is that as big a bomb as this feels in your world, most people have already moved on to the next salacious thing."

I listen to the click of her heels along the pavement. Today, she's wearing a white suit, the pants as tight as any other she's worn, cropped just above her ankle in a way that should only be sexy in a Nineteenth Century way, but keeps me looking anyway.

She says, "So how's your damage control going?"

I can't keep the smile from her. "Can I get back to you next week?"

Just this morning, on the way to Aroma House, I dropped a package in the mail, addressed to Eleanor Heller. I almost didn't deliver it. It crosses so far beyond the line that if I looked back, that line would be over the horizon.

Inside the velvet-lined box, on top of my present, I hand wrote the instructions:

This Saturday, I'm going to slide my cock into your tight, virgin ass. I'm going to fuck it until you pass out, screaming. And your husband is going to not only watch, but capture video of it. But first, there are some things you need to do to prepare. I'm sending along one of those things with this note, which I expect you to use as much as you can tolerate. Your husband will go out and buy you a sexy lingerie set to present you in. In addition to that, I want you to get an enema, make yourself all nice and clean.

On Saturday evening, you're to shower and shave your pussy and asshole completely bare for me. I will be coming to your home, so make sure that no one else will be there but you and Ronny. Finally, and this is important, you are not to have sex with your husband. You can play with yourself, he can go down on you all you want, but hubby's cock doesn't get near you.

I will be at your place at 9:00 pm sharp. You are to greet me at the door wearing the lingerie that your husband bought for you, along with my gift.

See you then. xx

My gift, of course, is a shiny, black butt plug.

“You look proud of yourself,” Manhattan says, pulling me back into the present.

I shrug. If she thinks I look smug, then I'm hiding just how out-of-control this feels. “She's fun, what can I say?”

“You see her over the weekend?”

“No, no time. Next Saturday, though.”

“Just her?” I hear the tiniest hesitation in her voice—a curiosity she doesn't want to admit to.

I look at her and grin. “Actually, her husband will be there, too.” I bounce my eyebrows suggestively. “Guess I put on a good show.”

Manhattan rolls her eyes. “I don't want to know.”

I look at her, and for a second, I imagine her writhing beneath me, my cock pressed into her ass. I trip along the sidewalk. “You never know...”

“As much as I know you want to believe it, I could care less what you do on your own time. Unless it's going to lead to some PR nightmares.” She sips her coffee. “It’s not going to create any PR nightmares, right?”

Fucking a donor, humiliating her husband, all after we’ve just had a major scandal? There is no way Manhattan would approve of any of that.

“Of course not,” I lie. Helps that we’re not staring at one another, and I can keep looking forward. “Besides, despite what I’m sure you think, I spend most of my nights in bed alone.”

“How sad.”

“Whatever. My choice.”

“Is that the plan? Bachelor for life?”

I shrug. “Not really so much of a plan. Just how things have played out. But don't feel sorry for me. I have fun.”

“I’m sure you do. But one of these days, you’re going to realize it can be more fun when you’ve got a partner in crime.”

Following Instructions

The Hellers live in an ex-urb of the city that I've never been in. All the houses look obscene to me, each unique and ostentatious in their own ways. One is an Italian villa. Another looks like fucking Downton Abbey. The land they all sit on would take up city blocks, all of it landscaped into the owner's idea of paradise on earth.

The Heller's home is modest by comparison—but only by comparison. It's still huge by normal, suburban standards. It just didn't have a gate at the driveway or fountain out front. The two story colonial did have columns on either side of the front door, and the symmetrical facade was built of stone. Tall, brick chimneys dominate each side, and most of the tall, paned windows are lit and welcoming.

I pull into their driveway, parking my Ford F-150 out front, next to the Mercedes SUV with the child seats in the back. Rolling my shoulders back and puffing out my chest I take a deep breath. I'm not nervous. This isn't insane.

I step out and take in the warm, balmy night.

I'm in control here. I'm the one making these two nervous.

The doorbell is as rich as the neighborhood. I hear it echo through the house, beyond the stately, wooden door. I hear the clicking of approaching heels, and the door slides open.

Beyond is the vision that is Eleanor Heller, dressed in nothing but sexy, sinful, black lingerie. Her stockings are held up by garters that attach to a gauzy bustier that presents her freckled tits on a lace-fringed platter. Her g-string barely covers her pussy, and is translucent enough that I can tell she's shaved for me.

Before I enter the house, I twirl my index finger in the air. She does a spin for me, showing off that her panties are, indeed, a g-string, and beyond, I can just see the plug I'd sent her wedged between her plush buttocks.

"Very nice, Elie. Are you excited for tonight?"

Elie nodded sheepishly.

"And you've been wearing my gift?"

Again, another shy nod.

"Say it." I don't know why, but ordering this prim woman like that is such a rush.

"I've been wearing your...gift."

"Which is?"

"A...butt plug."

And the English accent makes it all even sexier. "Have you enjoyed it?"

"It's...not the most comfortable thing."

"That's not what I asked."

She blushes. "Yes, it makes me feel wrong."

"Does it make you think about what we're going to do tonight?"

She nods, remembers herself, and says, "Yes. I can't wait to feel you back there."

At last, I step through the door, scoop her into my arms, and kiss her passionately. “I’m going to enjoy it, too,” I say gruffly, swinging the door shut.

Just beyond, her husband Ronald stands awkwardly at the foot of the stairs. He's dressed like we are about to go out—slacks, a tucked-in plaid dress shirt, even a pair of loafers. I grin at him, wrap my arms tighter around Elie, and lead her toward the stairs.

“Evening,” I say as we pass. “Your wife is about to show me your bedroom. Join us?”

I don't even wait for his response. He'll follow. He's drawn to this flame as surely as I am.

Their house is nice, family photos lining the wall up the stairs. I avoid looking at them, feeling the stares of all that wholesome innocence. She wants this, I remind myself. They both do. I'm just a tool in this game. Foreplay.

It's enough to light a fire inside me. In the bedroom, I point at a chair—because of course these people have a bedroom large enough for a separate chair—and say to Ronald, “Sit. There. I've brought presents.”

In the bag at my side, I pull out some leather restraints and hand them to Elie. “Tie him to the chair. We wouldn't want him trying to interrupt us.”

“I wouldn't—” he begins, but I shut him down with a hard stare. Elie smiles wickedly as she takes the restraints from me and walks across to her nervous husband.

“Are you ready, darling?” she asks him, kneeling down to tie his wrist to the arm of the chair.

Ronald is enraptured by her. He nods.

“He's going to take my ass, and you're going to watch.”

“Actually,” I say, pulling a blindfold from the bag. “He's not. You're just going to have to get descriptive.”

It's a cruel thing, I know. I even see Ronald struggle against his restraints a little as he realizes what's about to happen. But I also know he's into it. He wants to be treated like this.

Elie seems to get off on it, too. Her hands shake as she ties the blindfold on, and I can hear her heavy panting as her breath runs away. “I love you, baby,” she whispers to him before backing away and coming to me.

“On your knees,” I tell her. “And take out my cock.”

My belt rasps as she unbuckles it, like she knows what those sounds do to her husband. When she fishes me out, she sighs. “It's so big.”

“You like them big, don't you?”

“Mmmm, I do.” Glancing up at me with her wide, hazel eyes, she leans forward and noisily kisses along my veiny shaft. “It's so hard.”

“Keep doing that and it'll get harder.”

When she glances back at her blindfolded husband, her smile is positively evil. “You mean if I do this?” she asks, tilting her hand as she slides the flat of her tongue along the underside of my shaft.

I groan—louder than I normally would, but I know how to be a showman, too.

“Or like this?” This time, her question is followed by the wet sensation of her mouth enveloping me fully.

“That's not a bad start,” I say. “I was thinking more like this.” I grab her head and shove my cock into the back of her throat. She gags, and as she does, Ronald shifts uncomfortably. I pull back, letting her gasp and gulp air. “You like that? You like it when I use your whore mouth?”

She nods, forgetting her audience.

“Say it.”

“I like it when you use my...whore mouth.” Her British accent almost makes the word sound elegant. Almost, but not quite.

“You want me to fuck that dirty mouth of yours?”

“Yes.”

I grab her, use her, moving her head up and down my shaft as though she is a toy. The sounds she makes—chokes and gags and a throaty, cut-off cacking—are almost as sexy as the way it feels.

But this isn't the main event. All I need to do is look down her body, where her ass juts out, juicy and round, bisected by that sinful thong, to be reminded of why I'm here. Still, all in good time.

“Your wife's gotten better at this,” I tell her blindfolded husband. “Too bad you can't see her take all of me into her throat.”

I pull her in until her nose crumples against me and her lips wrap around the root. She nearly wretches, her nostrils flaring, before getting things under control. Water builds in her eyes, but she never takes them off of me, staring up at me through her long lashes.

I release her, and she gasps for breath. It's another sound I know will get into her husband's head, filling the dark with wild thoughts. Those eyes, meanwhile, continue to smile up at me, mischievous, eager for more.

“So you picked out her lingerie? Very nice taste, Ron.”

This man isn't a donor. I don't directly work for this couple. Not tonight. Tonight, I'm in charge, and these two are my sexual playthings.

I would not be able to say things like that if I let a little reality leak in, so I don't let it. Lucky for me, Elie is just as game to put that aside.

“He likes my tits, honey,” she says. Looking up at me, she pushes the straps from her shoulders before reaching behind her, between her shoulder blades, where the clasps of the bustier run. The effect is breathtaking. Her breasts practically overflow that top, teasing me with what’s to come. “He likes it when I wrap them around his big, hard cock.”

Stripping the lacy lingerie away, her fleshy breasts are free.

“Did I tell you that he made me fuck them Saturday night?” I hear his strangled gasp. “I’ve never done that before. It felt so wrong.” She leans up on her knees, cupping her breasts in her hands. Meeting my gaze, she wraps them around my cock, folding the soft, warm flesh around it. “And you know how much I love things that feel so wrong, don’t you, baby?”

The question is for Ron. I think. But for a moment, I wonder if she’s teasing me a little, too. I think about control. It’s time to take it back.

“Squeeze them around my cock,” I order.

“Like this?” she asks, her innocence so saccharine and fake that it’s hot.

“Fuck yeah, like that.” It looks even better than it feels, and the rush that comes with making her do it is intoxicating. “Spit on them. Get them nice and slick as you titfuck me.”

That is for Ron, but the dirty talk urges a moan from Elie. She does as she’s told, releasing a frothy dollop of saliva into the channel where my cock emerges. Two passes through her cleavage and things get slippery and amazing. Each upward thrust is met by the pillowy undersides of her breasts. When she starts licking the crown, I nearly lose it.

Nearly.

“Your girl’s a naughty one,” I tell Ron without breaking eye contact with his wife. “But as amazing as these tits are, they aren’t what I came here to fuck.”

Elie's lips part in anticipation, curling up enough to draw out her cheekbones, high and ruddy.

"I came here for something a hell of a lot tighter."

I pull her away from me and stand, stripping off my shirt. I watch her gaze dance along my body, appreciating the long hours I've spent in the gym. She unsnaps her stockings from her discarded bustier before I help her to a heeled stand. We smile like co-conspirators before I turn her around and shove her onto the bed.

"Take off your panties," I order. She complies. I run my hand across her smooth ass, tracing it down between her thighs. She's sweltering. "You have a great ass."

"Thank you—"

SLAP!

"Have you done as I asked?" I trace my hands back down between her thighs, my thumb brushing the plug before moving lower, across her pussy. She's smooth. Completely smooth. "Tell me, Elie, did you do that? Or did you get Ronnie over there to shave you?"

"Ronald...haaa..." I shove two fingers into her slick gash. "Ronald shaved me."

I turn to him. "Very nice, Ron. I bet you liked that, didn't you? Getting your wife ready for another man."

He nods, knowing better than to say anything.

"Did you put the butt plug in her, too?"

The bed is high, expensive. Just the right height for me to take her standing up. I sink into her pussy, getting myself warmed up for her.

"Uh, yes," she gasps.

Behind me, Ronald says tentatively, “Is he...?”

“No, not yet, Honey.”

The term of endearment incites me. I spank her, hard enough that she squeals. “Just getting her ready,” I practically growl. This time, when my palm lands, I grab hold of her meaty cheek and squeeze it. I push my thumb against the plug. “Just getting my cock wet for this slut here.”

I pull the anal toy out and toss it aside. I don't even look back at the man. I'm fixated on the gaping hole of her anus, prepared for me and my cock. I circle her anus with my thumb, and she goes off like a blown fuse. Before her sphincter tightens back up, I push my thumb in, right down to the knuckle.

“You like that, Elie? You like how my thumb feels in your asshole?”

“Yes! Oh, yes!” Elie screams, her fingers sliding through her hair as she thrashes on my double penetration.

“I bet you can't wait to feel my cock there.”

“You can't?”

“Where?”

“In my arse. Please... please fuck me in the arse.”

Hearing that feels like rocket fuel in my veins.

“On the bed. On your back,” I order. I grab the bag and pull out the last remaining item—a tube of KY Jelly. Slathering it across my shaft, I climb up onto the bed with Eleanor Heller. I grab a pillow and slide it under her ass, lifting it closer to me. “Now lift your knees close and spread your cheeks open for me. Just like that.”

Open and presented to me, I stare down at her as I run a generous amount of lube onto her still distended asshole. She shudders, a moan escaping those succulent lips.

“Tell your husband what's going on.”

“He's putting his cock right against my...” She groans. “Against my asshole. It looks...” She looks up at me. “Is it going to fit?”

“It'll fit,” I say, pressing forward. I feel her tense, which isn't good. “It'll fit, Elie, but you need to relax.”

“I bet you do yoga.”

“I do.”

“Good. I want you to relax. Do that breathing thing you do at the end.” I know what the technique is called. I added yoga to my workout routine a couple years ago. But I need to sound dominant yet soothing right now, and somehow the word “Ujjayi” just doesn't sound very tough. “That's it. Relax. Relax.”

Elie shuts her eyes and starts to breathe slowly. It always strikes me as incredible, just how much these women can take up their asses with a little coaxing. It helps that she prepped all week for this, but even still, as I ease into her, the sensation around my girth is tight.

I enter her slowly, but even that's too much, too quick. She starts to hyperventilate, unable to maintain the yoga breathing. Unable to pace herself. I need to get her mind off of it. “Tell me what you want,” I say, quiet yet firm.

“I want—” She loses the thread of whatever she's saying.

I force her back. “Listen to me, Elie. And tell me. What do you want?”

Her reply is a whisper. “I want you to fuck me...”

“Where, Elie? Where do you want me to fuck you?”

Another whisper, even quieter this time. “In my arse.”

I sink another inch, reaching down to brush my thumb along her bare and empty pussy. I tease her clit, drawing a gasp, a hiss. “Yesss...”

She lets go of her ass cheeks, running her hands over her breasts. When she grabs her nipples, she’s not gentle. And her husband needs to know that.

“That’s it, play with those tits. Squeeze those nipples.” I say it for both of them—to give Ronald a visual, to spur the whore on inside of Eleanor. “Touch yourself as I fuck your ass.”

“Ohhh, my god, baby. It feels so...haaaa...” She loses herself for a moment, twisting her nipples harder than even I would feel comfortable twisting. When her voice comes back, it’s hushed again, barely a whisper. “So big, so big, so...big...”

“I’m all the way in,” I say. “Told you you could do it.”

Her anus tightens around my shaft, pain and pleasure swirling around me. I adjust her beneath me, pulling her left leg against my muscled chest as I let the other relax on the mattress, shifting her into a scissor position. Like that, I begin to take her ass, slowly at first, but then with greater voracity. If she hadn’t spent the last week preparing, this wouldn’t be possible. Since she has, since she’s nice and pliable back there, she takes my cock like a pro, my hips slapping against her butt, her cries growing louder and harsher the harder I fuck her.

“Tell him how you feel, slut.”

Her answer is hurried, released through a valve of pressure and passion. “I love it.” Almost one word. “I love it. Oh, honey, I love it!”

I pull out of her butt, flip her over onto her knees, and ram myself back into her gaping anus. She screams, burying her face in the mattress. Then, thrashing her head to the side, wails, “He’s fucking my arse so hard, baby!”

“Is he hurting you?” Ronald croaks.

“Yes, but I love it. I love feeling him so deep. So—uhhhh fuuuuck!” She comes with a screaming orgasm, just like that.

“Your wife loves it in the butt,” I say, twisting the knife that she’s buried in Ron’s gut. Because I know he loves that agony. He’s there, restrained, fighting to see through the blindfold. I almost feel sorry for him. Then I look down at his wife, her skin glistening, my cock still buried in her backside. “You love it in the butt, don’t you, Elie?”

“Yes,” she sighs, coming down from her climax. She remembers him. Remembers the narrative. “Oh, God, yes. He’s still in me, honey. He’s still so big and thick and deep inside of me.”

“Now are you ready for the main event?”

Elie shudders. “Yes.”

I pull free of her. “Take his blindfold off. He should see this. He should watch how raunchy his wife can get.”

Elie crawls out from under me, pacing around the tall bed to where her husband sits and watches. She frees him of his blindfold, crawling into his lap to kiss him volcanically. His bound hands twitch to hold her.

“Did he really...?”

Elie nods. “He did. And he will again. Just watch.”

I take her into my lap, her back to me, facing her husband. She straddles my cock, her legs splayed, my cock disappearing back between her ass cheeks. The angle is perfect for him, an unobstructed view of his wife being sodomized by another man.

Power channels through me. I feel an electric high that’s dizzying. I can do anything with these two. Right here. Right now. Out in the world, they are a rich and powerful couple. Here in their bedroom, they are mine.

I maul Elie's tits as her husband sits transfixed, unsure of where to look. I bark commands at her. Demand that she tell her husband how good my cock feels. The competitive beast in me wants to one up Ron, wants to be the alpha in this relationship. I make her scream again, ball-deep in her ass, make her tell her husband how much bigger I am than him, how much of a slut she is for me.

Her voice is hoarse as we near the end. "Oh, fuck, baby, I'm so... I'm so..."

"Close?"

"Mmm..."

"Look at him," I order. "Look at your husband."

She does as she's told. Poor guy looks tortured.

"Tell him what you want me to do next."

"I want you to come. I want to feel it." There's that cruelty again. Ronald gasps as she delivers the line. "I want to feel your come in this slut's arse!"

Ronald says nothing, but his eyes are trained not on our union, but on his wife's face. The moment hangs heavy between them. I squeeze her tits, pulling her body down into my lap as I bury the full nine-inches of manhood deep into her and explode inside her butt.

She arches her back and opens her mouth, but no sound emerges. Not right away. I don't even hear her breathing, like she's paralyzed, caught in stasis by the overwhelming sensations rocking through her. And then—

"Oh, fuuuuu!" The swear word rises and rises, growing like a kettle hitting its boiling point. She never finishes it, the word smearing into a scream by the end.

I push Eleanor off of me, where she crumbles into a panting rag doll on her own bed. Ronald has only eyes for her, barely seeing me as I rise and pull on my trousers. "She's all yours," I grin. She is his, I think, in a fucked up way. She always was his, even when she was screaming my name.

I don't dwell. I spank her ass one last time, clap Ronald on the shoulder, and leave.

Coup

Am I a potential PR nightmare? It's Manhattan's fear. This is reckless. I'm a grown man. I know this, and I know that I should break things off. Things are too precarious now. Too many things are up in the air.

"How's damage control?" the blonde PR exec asks the following week. It's funny, because if anyone should be asking that question, it's me. That is, after all, why we hired her.

But not in the morning. Not during our walks.

"Intense."

"Still having fun?"

"Honestly?" I grin like an idiot. "Probably too much fun."

"I don't want to know," Manhattan says with a smile in her voice.

"But actually, I think that you do." I know she's curious. "In fact, it's probably one of the reasons you keep me around."

"Is that so?"

"As distinguishing qualities go, being the bull in a hotwife relationship wouldn't have been my first choice to get you interested, but I can live with it."

"You sure think a lot about yourself. Don't tax all that gray matter, Paul. We're still in the thick of this scandal." We walk for about half a block before she adds, “But also, you’re not wrong.”

That week, we start the process of reaching out to donors. I do what Larry coached. I trust my staff—armed with some talking points from Smith & Kingsley—to manage most of the outreach. They have the personal relationships, so they know how to keep things calm.

At the same time, we begin a sentiment analysis, led by June Wong and Heather Kingsley-Fletcher. To begin the real damage control process, we need to understand how much damage was done.

That’s how I walk into the office late one morning and see Manhattan with Eleanor Heller in our boardroom, chatting. One on one.

They see me through the glass wall of the meeting room. I wave, then immediately worry that it’s too familiar a gesture. I should only know Eleanor vaguely, professionally, if that. Manhattan leans in, whispers something to Eleanor. The women look at me and giggle before turning back to whatever business they were discussing.

I duck into my office and shut the door, my heart racing. The paranoia closes in. Is Eleanor talking about me? Is she telling my PR firm how we’ve been getting together every few days to fuck? Is she sharing some of the photos we’ve taken to torment her husband?

“Get your shit together,” I say beneath my breath. If she is doing all that, so what. Based on that giggle, it’s not going to turn into some kind of sexual harassment nightmare. At worst, Manhattan will truly understand how reckless her client is. I may have to get a new PR agency.

At worst, a little voice whispers, you won’t get to see her anymore.

I don't let that voice take it any further. I pick up the phone and start making my calls.

Manhattan pops her head into my office as we head into the lunch hour. "Hey there."

I have to remember that she doesn't know about my relationship with the Hellers. No one does. "What's up?"

She slips into the room. The panic that I've been holding at bay rises.

"I just learned an interesting thing from Mrs. Heller out there."

This woman doesn't know me. She doesn't know my tells. I'm a still lake on the surface, while the world roils beneath. "Oh yeah? You going to share?" I say it all without a tremble.

Even still, the blonde tilts her head and regards me curiously. She knows something's weird.

I raise my brows, projecting calm. Like it's not me acting strangely, but her.

"She may be the solution to all your problems."

"How's that?"

"Come on. Let's go out to lunch. She can tell you all about it."

So the three of us go out to lunch at a ramen place around the corner. It's loud and bustling and intimate in a way that helps me deal with the fact that I'm having lunch with one woman I'm having an affair with and another who knows about the affair, just not who it's with. If anything, it's absurd enough to keep things light for me.

"I've had my people look into it," Eleanor begins once we've ordered—and the woman across from me is most definitely Eleanor. She sits with poise, her hair up, her attitude commanding. It helps to not think of her splayed out on my bed, legs spread as she writhes on my dick.

I drive that thought out and focus on what she's saying.

"...Dawning was an unfortunate victim in this con. You had no idea."

After all we've been through, she still didn't quite trust me. I shake my head slowly as I stare at her, hoping my smile calls to mind a hungry lion. I'm delighted in the way color springs to the base of her neck, and how she moves on quickly.

"I had to be sure. I have learned over the years that one can never be too cautious when it comes to loads of money."

"It's fair."

"You still have a trust problem, though. Not with me, but with the others. Mrs. Kingsley-Fletcher has spoken to some of the other top donors. She can confirm."

Heather nods. "No one will come right out and say it, but they're treating you like a wounded animal."

"You need to do something to earn that trust back."

"Go on."

"I can make reparations for you. Ronald and I have more assets than Gregory Hamilton ever did, real or imagined. We can keep Dawning afloat as you weather this storm."

I'm speechless. All the games fall away. I forget about the gift, about being the bull, about this woman being a cuckoldress. This is salvation she is offering. This is the answer to everything.

Eleanor takes a deep breath. That was the easy offer. This next one is harder for her to relinquish. "But I have a condition."

She looks at Manhattan, and for a moment, I worry that she knows. That these two have been gossiping. I see the new dynamic as clearly as if it were written on the walls—this changes things. The power balance is shifting.

“I want to be the president of the board of trustees.”

She will, in essence, become my boss. First reaction? I don’t like it. I don’t like the loss of leverage. Second? It makes total sense.

Manhattan steps in, giving a voice to my thoughts. “From an optics perspective, this is a coup. Eleanor Heller couldn’t be more perfect. She’s got an MBA.” I didn’t know that. “She’s got a personal connection to the disease—her mother suffered from it.” Again, not something I was aware of until now. “Between Eleanor and her husband, she’s got enough wealth to start making those reparations. And she’s a woman to boot.”

I look at Eleanor, sitting there with a quiet smile and her hands folded in her lap, then shift back to Manhattan.

She’s got that crooked smile going again. “We can even tell Dawning and the current board that it was your idea. Feel free to take all the credit.”

“Oh, so I get to tell the current leadership that there’s been a change in leadership, huh? How generous.”

Manhattan turns to Eleanor. “See? Told you he’s smarter than he looks.”

“Is that a compliment?”

“His ego, though, is definitely about what you’d expect,” she says, ignoring me. “Maybe this isn’t such a great idea.”

“Oh, pish posh. I know how to manage egos.” I see Elie staring out through Eleanor’s facade—a much more confident Elie than the one of the gala. “I’ve also met this current board. Paul’s nothing compared to them.”

Those eyes, deep brown and bold, seer into me. I want to run my hand up her thigh and pull her in for a kiss. I calm myself instead. “Well, from a PR perspective, it makes sense. But you called it a coup, and that’s how a lot of the board’s going to see it.”

“Gloria Westhouse will support her,” Manhattan says.

I think about Mason Coles, who doesn’t know about my relationship with Eleanor, but who also definitely hit on her at that gala. How would he feel with that same wallflower taking the helm of the board?

“Henry Dawning, too,” Eleanor adds.

“I might be able to talk Mason into it.” Manhattan offers.

It’s only my intrinsic competitive spirit with Mason that causes me to react to her suggestion at all. To say, “Be careful with him.”

“Aw, thanks for the concern. Don’t worry, I know my way around guys like him.” She looks pointedly at me as she says it, clearly grouping the two of us. Which is fair. “So let’s start planning the revolution.”

The lunch hour stretches. I avoid ordering alcohol, although something about Manhattan’s presence makes me want some. It’s not a healthy association, and it’s an easy one to pat down.

“Wow, look at the time. I need to head out,” Manhattan says after our waiter’s come by to refill our glasses of water for the umpteenth time and almost everyone in the ramen joint has left. “Today was an unexpected surprise. I think everything’s going to turn out just fine.”

“That or they fire me.”

The blonde shrugs. “Those things aren’t mutually exclusive.”

“Oh, you’re warming to me. I can tell.”

Manhattan exchanges a meaningful look with Eleanor. “At least he’s funny.”

I can’t help but watch her leave, my eyes following her ass in her snug, black pencil skirt. When I look back at Eleanor, she’s regarding me knowingly.

“What?”

“You like her.” Eleanor’s statement feels like high school, and I never liked that game, even back then.

“Heather? She’s okay.”

“What’s that supposed to mean?”

“It means that I don’t believe you.” Such a posh accent.

Alone at last, I feel the more familiar dynamic return between us. I lean toward her across the table. She does the same. “Are you jealous?”

Eleanor laughs, true and genuine and refreshing. It would hurt if I harbored any feelings for this woman. “I’m not naive. I know I’m not your one-and-only.”

“And you think I’ve got something going on with our public relations consultant?”

“I think a part of you wants that.”

“Meh, she’s too much work.”

Elie laughs. “Gee, thanks.”

“You’re a lot of work in other ways, don’t worry. Also, she’s married, and present company excluded, that usually puts them off limits.”

“Them.” Elie laughs. “You knew I was married and still came after me.”

That is true, but I also knew her husband was watching. Not that she needed to know that.

“Besides, who knows. Maybe she’s like me?”

This is getting too close to the truth. “Doubt that.”

“You’re not the only one with a crush. I see the way she looks at you.”

“Really?”

“See. Told you that you liked her.”

Okay, time to regain control. This whole board of trustees takeover is getting to her head. “Sounds to me like you’re into her, too. You’re not projecting are you?”

“Oh, please...” She reaches for her glass of water. I know a bout of nervousness when I see it. I reach out, placing my hand in hers before she can lift the glass.

“Look at me, Elie.” I have to say it because right now, she really doesn’t want to. When she does, I feel the power of the bull flow through me once again. “Have you ever been with another woman?”

Elie rolls her eyes. “You guys and your fantasies—”

“We’re not talking about my fantasies right now. We’re talking about yours.”

“No, as a matter of fact. I haven’t.” Stubbornness, I’m beginning to suspect, is her defense mechanism. “I am not like that.”

I actually believe that she believes that. Or, more accurately, that she believed it before she met me.

“Just like you aren’t the type who gets off on fucking other men and telling your husband about it?” I lace my fingers through hers. Her wedding rings are warm. “Who wore a toy in her ass to prepare herself for anal sex with me?”

She shakes her head slowly, her smile infectious. I’ve got her, and she knows it.

“Tell me you’re not wet right now, thinking about this afternoon.”

“This afternoon?” It’s a question, but she knows the answer.

“When we leave here and go back to my place.”

“I told Ronald that I would meet him for—”

I don’t even need to say anything to stop her. I gently squeeze her hand and lift my gaze to hers, and the air leaves her lungs in a rush.

“Tell him something better came up. You know you want to.”

Her eyes cloud with that want. Her breathing comes a little sharper. Her cheeks swell, like the harbinger of a cruel smile.

“You are evolving, Mrs. Heller. That woman you think that you’re not like? She’s your past.” I lean in an inch. She mirrors me. “If I told you to text her. Ask if she wants to get a drink later tonight, you would do it.”

Her cheeks turn ruddy, but she no longer denies it.

“If I tell you to seduce her, you would do that, too.”

She looks down and away. Her eyeshadow shimmers in the low light of the restaurant, pale metallic blue. Her lashes are painted dark. This close, I can see all the imperfections of her eyeliner application.

“I’m not... I couldn’t...” She looks back at me. “It’s unprofessional.”

My smile wells up from somewhere deep within me. Somewhere primal. The argument has already shifted away from I don’t want to do that to I shouldn’t. The prospect of sending her off to seduce Manhattan is so insane, so over-the-top, that I almost make her do it.

I don’t, because while Elie and Ron and Manhattan live in a fantasy world of bulls and cuckolds, Paul and Eleanor and Heather do not. In the real world, Eleanor trying to seduce Heather would get awkward in a hurry.

“Elie doll, we haven’t even begun to touch unprofessional.”

Pushing Limits

The hotel bar is particularly crowded this Friday night, buzzing with conversation and the sense of possibility. It's been awhile since I've been here, and as a pair of flight attendants, still in their uniforms, pass by, I wonder why. One looks back at me, a blonde wearing a pillbox hat and a pretty smile. She gives me a once over, whispers something to her friend, and moves on.

My phone rumbles.

[Elie]: Almost there. Parking now.

It's only now, reading the text, that it occurs to me that I haven't gone out hunting at a bar since Elie entered my life. In fact, I haven't actually been with anyone but her since.

Not that I am getting attached. We're just having a good time, and those good times will continue tonight.

I don't text her back. Instead, I move into the bar, sizing the crowd up. This is one of my favorite parts—when the night is laid out before me. When anything is possible.

This is why I can't see myself ever settling down. I'd miss this too much.

I find a spot along the back wall, at a tall table with high stools. I settle in and a server comes by in no time, a pretty brunette who seems to admire me as much as I do her.

“What can I get you?” Even her question feels laced with innuendo.

I’m used to this, but tonight seems even more charged than usual. Like everyone here is just looking for a good time, the world outside be damned.

“Jameson on the rocks to start.” She turns to go before I add, “And a gin and tonic. For a friend.”

A friend. Sounds so innocent. I think about Eleanor Heller, the newest member on the board of trustees of the Dawning Foundation, and the youngest president of it in history. It was an easier sell than I anticipated. Most of the board members just wanted to leave the scandal behind. No one had the appetite, or the resources, to challenge the Hellers. And between my advocating for her and Manhattan’s outsider voice recommending it, she was voted in earlier this afternoon.

When I left her, she was in her element, surrounded by the rich, receiving her congratulations and her condolences with her soft brown hair sweeping across her high, freckle-dusted forehead. They still see her as I did—sweet, innocent, shy.

She appears at the entrance of the bar, wearing a tiny, little dress like a rebuttal against the earlier image. The cream-colored silk is short and tight, as if painted along her curves. Ron picked it out, I know. I still have the text I sent him burning on my phone: I’m going to party with the new president. You get to dress her up for me.

I don’t wave her down. I let her search for me, seeing the worry cross her face when at first she doesn’t find me. We’re far from the city, far from her home. This hotel bar is close to Dulles International, way out in Virginia. It’s a safe playground for what I have planned.

She finds me, relief passing through her. With her clutch purse in her hands, she makes a beeline in my direction, her breasts moving with freedom. She's not wearing a bra. I wonder if she's wearing anything.

Sliding off my stool, I step up to her, giving her a hug and a pair of cheek kisses. I don't normally do that, but it seems right for this occasion. Her dress, I discover, is completely backless, and her skin is warm and smooth to the touch.

"Once upon a time, I would have wondered if you'd show," I say, offering her a seat.

"But now you know better," she says in her sweet, posh British accent. "Even in this ridiculous dress."

She sits carefully, tugging at the hem of her dress, which does almost nothing. I take a seat at her side and run my fingers along her spine.

"The dress is perfect for what I have in mind."

I feel the shiver that runs up her back. "And what do you have in mind?"

She looks around, scanning the bar. We've never come somewhere so public. Every other time, we've met at either my place or hers. This is different, and she knows something's up.

The server comes by, our drinks on a tray. "This for me?" Elie asks, picking up the gin and tonic. She doesn't even wait for a response, but drains half of it in one swallow. I order a second for her before the waitress leaves, and quietly sip my glass of whiskey.

"We are here to explore your boundaries," I say.

I watch her take it in with a soft shudder of a breath. Slowly, she says, "Okay."

"I want you to look around, Elie. Tell me what you see."

She turns, looking out around the bar. “I see people drinking...” I wait for her. Give her space. “Looks like a lot of flight attendants, airline crews... and... I don’t know. Travelers. Visitors... flirting...”

She turns to me. I nod. “Potential?”

“I suppose that’s one way of looking at it,” she muses.

“One of these lucky patrons gets to come home with us.” I watch her reaction carefully, watch as the shock rolls through her. “Or upstairs, in this case. To the room I’ve reserved.”

Her lips part, moist and glossy. She takes a silent and steadying breath.

“And you want to know the best part of this game of ours?” I press. My heart races. I’ve been going over how to reveal this part since I conceived of it. “You’re going to pick her out.”

It takes Elie a moment to process it, but process she does. Her eyes flare. “Her?”

I grin. “Look again at the crowd and tell me, Elie. See anyone you like?”

“I told you, I’m not... not like that.”

Here, unlike in the ramen restaurant, I can get close. I can slide my hand up under her skirt. She sighs as I brush her thighs, stopping short of her sex.

“You sure about that?”

She licks her lips, but doesn’t answer.

“Look again. Look at all the potential out there.”

This time, when she looks out at the crowd, she knows what she's looking at. And it scares her. She looks away after just a couple seconds. "This is ludicrous. I can't do this."

"Okay, what about the blonde there?" I offer. "In the navy blue uniform—"

"And the pillbox hat?" Elie turns back to me, some of her confidence back. "She reminds me of Heather. I think you've got a thing for blondes."

She does, but that's not why I called her out. She was alone is all. Rather than get defensive, though, I go on the offense. "Want to try one and see what they're all about?"

That draws a flush from her. She goes back to her gin and tonic as I linger on the blonde. She has the same California good looks, the same pointed chin and cute, ski slope nose as Manhattan. The same athletic build. I could almost believe it's her, here playing a game, pretending to be an airline flight attendant as her husband watches men hit on her from the wings.

But then she's joined by a gaggle of other flight attendants, dressed in the same uniform, and when she smiles, it's not Manhattan's crooked smile. It's wrong, and the illusion falls away.

"Okay, so no blondes."

Elie looks at me out of the corner of her eye, but says nothing.

This has nothing to do with hair color, though. It's about who the other woman is, or at least the kind of woman Elie thinks she is. I study my Oxford-educated companion, try to get inside her head. She may play coy, may pretend that she's not at all curious. I know differently, though. Something's locked away there, beneath the surface. A girl down for anything if I can just find the right key.

"Her," I say. And I know I'm right even before Elie finds her. "The brunette in the red uniform. Kind of Russian looking."

She's at the bar with two other like-dressed flight attendants, but the brunette clearly stands out—long, dark hair that contrasts with her paper white skin, the thin body of a model squeezed into her tight, red skirt and jacket. As if sensing us, she looks up, casting her dark, kohl-lined eyes about as she laughs at whatever her colleagues are discussing.

She's got a good laugh. The way her nose crinkles and her eyes turn to half moons softens her striking beauty. Turns her from just another face on a glossy magazine to something real.

This is the one. This Russian doll with her perfect, bow-strung lips has already got Elie thinking "what if..." Truth is, walking out of here and into a threesome is a long shot. Don't get me wrong, it would be amazing, but this is more a power game. More about getting Elie to associate me with this wild side of herself.

"She's...pretty," Elie says.

"Go over there. Say hi."

"I can't. She's got friends."

"Acquaintances at best. Watch her body language, how she stands apart as they lean in. See how she keeps looking around? Maybe she's waiting for someone."

"Or maybe she's just bored," Eleanor finishes. "How did you put that together so quickly?"

"This isn't my first time in a bar."

Elie snorts. "Clearly not."

"Go up there. Get into a conversation. And when you do, I want you to look at her red painted lips and imagine how they will feel on your lips." I lean in and kiss her softly. Then trail kisses down her jaw. "And on your neck," I whisper. "Wrapped around your nipples." I run my hand along her leg, from her knee right up to the hem of her dress. "Kissing your pussy."

She stumbles forward as I step back, almost slipping off her stool.

“What should I... I’m not sure what to say.”

I shrug. “Talk about England. Find out where she’s coming from. You’ll figure it out.”

“And then what?”

“Then I’ll take care of the rest.” I give her one last kiss, set my hand on her lower back, where her skin is oh-so-soft, and set her on her way.

I watch her go and wonder how this will play out. She doesn’t approach the trio of red-clad stewardesses with sashaying confidence, but like Eleanor Heller would. She floats over, uses the packed crowd of the bar to push right into the middle of them so she can order a drink.

I’m sorry, I see her mouth to the brunette. So crowded here, you know?

Our mark nods in agreement, smiling, not annoyed at the close quarters. Elie puts in her drink order and turns to ask the flight attendant something—something that apparently surprises her. Before she can compose herself, though, Elie asks the same to the other two. Can I get you anything? Corporate card, is what I think she says. I think.

Those two decline. The brunette, though, takes her up on it. Very well done, Elie.

I leave the table and head for the bathroom. She needs space to work, space for small talk and conversation without me hovering. Elie catches my eye as I head past her. I smile and nod. You’ve got this, I try to project. And then she’s on her own.

I can feel the one glass of Jameson whiskey already. When did I become such a lightweight? Aren’t overworked executives supposed to be heavy drinkers? Splashing water on my face, I appraise myself.

At 35, I know I’ve still got it. My hair is still dark, still thick. I’ve recently cut it short along the sides and long at the top, combing it over like a cresting wave that crashes around my left ear. Felt more appropriate for the acting director of a thing.

The suit I wear—without a tie and the top two buttons undone—is expensive and cut to show off my broad shoulders and thick chest. Things I’m proud of. Things I work hard to maintain. Even the scruff that grows along my square jaw and dimpled chin is designed to project one thing—I’m a successful, single man living a single man’s life, and I come with no strings attached.

Back out in the bar, Elie is still chatting with the Russian stewardess. Her friends are still there, too, but seem to be talking more to themselves now. Elie doesn’t seem shy or embarrassed or out of her element anymore. She’s settled into her role. Time for me to take on mine.

I walk up to her, to the two of them. Elie sees me first, and the eyes of the flight attendant follow. Her makeup is smoky, seductive in the way that Elie’s is sensual. And as she takes me in, I see the interest there. See it in the way the corners of her mouth tug upward. With her large, almond-shaped eyes, she reminds me of a purring cat. Meow.

“Eleanor?” I say.

Elie does her best to play along, although she’s still confused. “Hullo,” she says, uncertain.

“I thought it was you,” I continue. “It’s Paul. We...met in London a couple years ago.”

She gets where I’m going. “I remember,” she says warmly. “How are you doing?”

“Busy as always. I’m here just for the night, then I’m off to Japan for a spell. You?”

“Same. Well, not to somewhere as exciting as Japan. I’ll be off to Boise in the morning.”

I laugh, more at how quick she is to pick up on this game than her response, which is also good. “Boise’s not bad.” I glance at the flight attendant, who looks ready to fade away and give us our space. “I’m sorry to be rude. Who’s your friend?”

“Oh, this is Katya.”

“Hello,” she says. Her accent is, indeed, Russian. Her pitch is higher and sweeter than I imagined, a nice contrast to the vixen she projects. “Nice to meet you.”

“Katya’s just here for the night, too. Tomorrow, she’s on a flight crew headed back to Paris.”

“Let me buy us a round of drinks. To the jetsetters.” I keep my eyes fixed on Katya, and her return gaze doesn’t waver.

“I never turn down a drink from handsome men. I’ll take vodka martini.” Her English is good, though not perfect.

“And you, Eleanor?”

I’ve had a few threesomes, and they’ve all been amazing. One of my favorite parts, however, isn’t the actual act, but the build up. The sexual tension that grows. The anticipation. As the three of us chat and drink and flirt, the trajectory of the night gradually dawns on the three of us, and when Katya realizes it, she doesn’t run. She leans into it.

“So where did you meet?” she asks us.

“Fundraiser,” Elie says smoothly. “In London.”

The lie comes so naturally. I piggyback right along. “I was jet lagged. Ready to turn in for the night.” To Katya, I say, “I’m sure you know exactly what that’s like.”

“Story of my life,” she says with a warm laugh.

“So I was about to turn in when I saw her.” I look at Elie, who’s starting to blush. “She was all the inspiration I needed to find a second wind.”

Elie smiles, looks down as she rings her hands and bites her lip. She picks up the story. “I still remember looking up and seeing Paul approaching.” She shares a conspiratorial look with Katya. “You know what that’s like, too, right?”

Katya smirks. “Oh, yes.”

Elie goes on. “The next thing we know, we’re back up in my room.”

“For water, I believe.” This actually is very close to what really happened. “At first.”

“Mmm, yes, at first.”

It’s hard to believe that was less than two months ago. Feels like we’ve been doing this forever. Even this little game we’re playing now feels like I’m doing it with a long-time partner.

We share a moment that Katya interprets as her time to leave. She says, “Well, I should let you two go to get, ah...reacquainted.” She’s not embarrassed or wistful. This woman knows the score. She’s tuned into the jetset life.

I stare at Elie, I practically will her to act. She meets my look. Reads it. I see the flush in her neck. Katya begins to turn away, and I gesture with my eyes.

For a moment, I wonder if this opportunity will slip away. I figure it will, and start to consider ways of punishing Elie—which could be fun, too.

But at the last second, Eleanor Heller reaches out and captures Katya’s hand in hers. “Why don’t you come up and join us?”

Katya pauses. If the offer shocks her, she doesn't show it. Instead, she looks from Elie to me, then back to Elie, processing it all quietly, and as she does, a smile forms across her face, like the sun rising in the morning. "Well..." She glances at me knowingly, but answers Elie. "Okay."

Katya

We are silent as we ride up the elevator, and when I reach out and brush my fingers along Elie's bare back, she jumps. A little. But when I look at her, she has this weird smile on her face. It's an I can't believe I'm doing this kind of expression, but in a good way. In an electric way.

We arrive at our floor, and it's Katya who steps off first, slipping her hand into Elie's. She glances over her shoulder, at me. "Room number?"

I tell her, and they're off, floating down the hallway, hand-in-hand. I trail them, enjoying the view. Katya is taller than Elie, her heels red to match her uniform, her skirt tight across her small, round butt.

Katya is the kind of woman I fucked before I got into this whole "bull" business. She is no-nonsense, no frills. I know what I get from women like her—a good time, and then after, a genuine goodbye. Elie changed that, and I'm not sure how.

They stop in front of my door as I fish out the keycard and unlock it. Swinging open the door, I motion for them to enter first. Katya passes close as she enters, brushing her body along mine as she pulls a hesitating Elie with her. I follow, shutting the door quietly behind.

"Mind if I get us drink?" Katya asks.

"Please," Elie answers in a rush.

I go to her. Pull her into my arms and kiss her passionately. She yields to me, one hand on my chest, the other curling behind my neck. Like she needs to reassure herself that she still likes men, and that I'm here to remind her of that.

When we part, Katya is there, holding a glass of something fizzy and boozy smelling. "Here, drink this," she tells Elie.

As Elie does, I pull Katya close and kiss her next. I can just about taste her waxy lipstick when she pulls back, smiling, her eyes flickering down to my lips before looking back at me. "Something is going on here."

She doesn't wait for a response. I'm not even sure that it's a question. She pulls me against her, her lips closing over mine, her tongue pushing into my mouth. I go with it, kissing her back, my hands tightening around her narrow waist.

I feel Elie behind me, hugging me close and kissing the back of my neck as I makeout with the brunette. Their perfumes mix and mingle, an intoxicating blend of femininity. I break my kiss with Katya, twisting ever so slightly so that I can turn back and kiss Elie once again.

She's sweet, and kisses sweetly. I turn some more, putting one arm behind her back as I continue to caress Katya's. When our lips part, both women are in front of me, breathing heavily. Their eyes meet. The air crackles with anticipation.

I push their heads together. Elie hesitates. Katya doesn't. Their heads tilt, noses brushing, lips touching, eyes closing. I forget to breathe as I watch the soft femininity of the kiss. Katya becomes the aggressor, deepening the kiss. I'm close enough that I can hear her tongue as it slides into Elie's mouth.

I step back, taking the now-empty cocktail glass from Elie as the two women kiss. Katya wraps her arms around Elie's neck, the Brit resting hers on the other woman's hips.

Katya pulls back, but not far. "You are nervous. This is your first time with another woman?"

Elie nods.

This pleases Katya, her dark-lined eyes flaring. She glances at me, then back to Elie. “Is this for you? Or for him?”

Elie licks her lips, but her attention never leaves Katya. “For me.”

Katya looks at me with a sense of triumph. “You watch first. Then join.”

I’m not used to taking orders from anyone, but this is one I can get behind. I settle into the desk chair of the hotel as Katya leads Elie to the edge of the bed, where she instructs her to sit.

With her back to me, Katya begins to strip, starting with the red blazer of her uniform. I watch Elie’s eyes, watch her reaction. They go wide, her lips parting, as Katya opens her jacket. A moment later, I realize why—the flight attendant wears no blouse beneath, only a red bra of flimsy lace, and her patterned neck scarf.

She unzips her skirt next, but asks Elie to help her out of it. Shimmying her slender hips, the two women reveal, slowly, the matching red garter belt and thong, the garter straps clipped into her nude-colored stockings. This woman came to the bar, ready for sex. Hell, she got on her plane in Paris like this.

Crawling into Elie’s lap, she bends down and kisses her again. Elie doesn’t seem to know where to put her hands at first, sliding them along Katya’s side, tracing her bra, teasing the clasp. I say nothing, but will her to release it. I smile when she does.

Katya breaks the kiss, straightening up as she pulls off her bra. Elie is already there, her lips finding Katya’s nipples. I see her hand squeeze a breast, even though most of the action is obscured by the flight attendant’s pale, sexy back.

“That is good,” Katya sighs. “Just like... ahh...” She runs her fingers through Elie’s hair as Elie explores her first woman. Pushing Elie back, she shifts down again, so they can kiss once again, more urgently, more passionately.

Katya runs her hand down between them. I have the perfect angle to watch her slide her fingers along Elie's thighs, up under Elie's short dress. Her nails are painted red, a deep contrast to Elie's cream colored panties. Elie gasps as the other woman puts pressure against her mound through her thong, as another woman touches her so intimately for the first time.

Katya slides her hand higher, pushing her fingers beneath Elie's thong. Elie breaks the kiss, throwing her head back as she releases a loud, squealing moan. "You like?" the Russian whispers. Elie answers with a moan.

I've been told to watch. That I'll be invited. And watching this beautiful, Sapphic display is fine. For a few minutes. But while I'll admit that I can be a voyeur at times, that's not all I am, and right now, I crave to be part of this action.

I find my moment as Katya kisses down Elie's body, shuddering with excitement. She pulls Elie's thong off, revealing the other woman's clean shaven pussy, glistening and smooth. Katya hums to herself in approval before positioning herself between the other woman's thighs and burying her face in her pussy.

I stand, but neither woman takes note, tossing off my jacket and pulling open my shirt. I'm so hard, so ready for his. It's a struggle to get my pants off, caught on an erection that springs forth, all hard, full nine inches of it.

I crawl onto the bed beside Elie, cock in hand, and she notices me at last. "You having fun?" I ask, slowly stroking myself.

Elie nods, licking her lips as she glances at my erection.

"Don't look at me. Look at her. Look at the other woman as she eats you out."

We both look, watching as Katya flicks her tongue along Elie's clit, her hand a blur as she fingers her. Hearing her name, she looks up at us through her long lashes, her large, brown eyes smiling.

“Should I tell her to stop?” I ask Elie.

“No!” Elie cries.

“Still not sure you’re like this?”

“Oh... mmmmyyy...”

I brush her hair back. Her scalp is sweaty, her hair damp. “I can’t wait to watch you return the favor,” I whisper, kissing her neck, her collar bone. I untie the halter behind her neck so I can access her tits. “I can’t wait to watch you lick her pussy.”

Elie’s fingers brush through my hair, tightening as I swirl my tongue around her nipples. To one side, I can hear Katya eat her out, hear the damp slosh of her fingers plunging in and out of her. To my other, Elie’s breath is growing short as her orgasm builds. I work her tits, sucking her nipples in time with her moans.

“Oh my... oh my...” She’s close. So close. Her moans come faster. Louder. “Oh my God...” She writhes. “Oh my God, I’m coming.”

She says it almost like she can’t believe it herself, like she’s just waking from a dream that she realizes is real. She arches back, her neck exposed, her tits against my mouth as she cries out and comes. It’s soft and beautiful and sensual, and makes me want to take control. Want to dirty it up.

Before Elie can recover from her orgasm, I present my cock to her. She doesn’t hesitate, immediately wrapping her hand around it and swallowing it into her wet mouth. Katya continues to eat her, her dark, shiny hair bouncing, her darker eyes watching. She reaches up with her free hand, grasping Elie’s left breast and squeezing. I push into Elie’s throat, feeling her gag and moan and hum. It’s that sensation coupled with the erotic site of the girl-on-girl action that puts me close to the edge. When Katya crawls up Elie’s body, still resplendent in her red lingerie, that orgasm edges ever closer.

The transition is fluid. I pull out of Elie's mouth and feed my cock into Katya's bow-strung red ones. The sensation is so different, and the difference is addictive. I switch again, then again, a blur of pumps. Elie sucks on my balls as Katya sucks my dick. Katya whispers naughty, dirty things to Elie when she's not sucking me.

"Take that big cock down your throat," she says. Her sweet, Russian voice is such a hot contrast to the rest of her. "Makes you horny, right? You get off on being used, no?"

Elie moans in response, because it's true. It's why I keep going back to her. Why she's so intriguing—proper, smart, refined, she was the type of woman who probably went to etiquette school. And here she is, sharing my cock with another woman.

To me, Katya says, "Come on her face and I'll lick it all off."

I don't need any further prompting. I pull free of Elie, and it's Katya who reaches down and strokes me the last couple pumps. It's Katya who directs the spray of come all over Elie's perfect, lightly freckled face, over her slender neck and the upper slopes of her tits.

I slump back onto my knees as Katya follows through on her promise. She peels Elie out of her crumpled dress and starts lapping my come from her. From Elie's tits on up to her succulent lips, and when Katya is done, Elie is glazed in saliva, panting and ready again. I am too, already hard, ready to fuck.

"Take off your panties," I tell Katya. "But leave on the garter belt." To Elie, though, I have a different order: "Tell me what you think of her."

Katya sits up on her knees, letting us look at her. She's topless, her tits hanging ripe and round, fuller than I thought initially, but well suited to her slender form. Her nipples are small, their light brown color a nice contrast to her bright, white complexion.

"She's sexy," Elie whispers.

Katya runs her hands along her body, and our attention follows them, down, down to where her lacy garter belt sits just above the flare of her hips.

“Did you like kissing her?”

Elie nods.

Katya slides her thumbs into edges of her thong.

“Did you like it when she licked your pussy?”

Elie shivers. Then, barely audible, “Yes.”

Katya pulls her thong down, revealing a neatly cropped landing strip of dark hair that ends just above her compact pussy lips.

“Do you want to lick hers?”

Elie’s breath catches. She’s terrified, but wants this. She just needs a little nudge. Katya rolls onto her back so that she can shimmy out of her panties. She keeps her heels on, tall and red, encapsulating the moment.

“Touch her,” I say to Elie.

Hesitantly, Elie rolls on her side and reaches out, placing a hand on Katya’s flat stomach.

I reach out, placing my fingers on Elie’s stomach, mirroring her touch. Then I slide my hand down. “Lower.”

Elie follows my lead, brushing her fingertips down between Katya’s legs. As I glide mine across her bare mound, Elie’s finds Katya’s landing strip, brushing it with her thumb as her fingers rub along her gash.

“She’s so wet,” Elie says.

Katya tosses her hair as she gasps, as Elie pushes two fingers into her. Again, I do the same to Elie.

Katya shifts, facing Elie. She reaches out and starts playing with Elie's tits before leaning forward and kissing her. Elie's hesitation is gone. She kisses Katya back, deeply, wetly, enthusiastically.

"What would your husband think of you now," I whisper, my fingers drilling in and out of her. "Think he'd believe you were capable of this?"

Elie moans.

"I think you're capable of so much more." With one last rub of her clit, I yank my hand away.

She cries out in protest, breaking the kiss with Katya. "No!"

"Don't worry, you're about to get a lot more." I push her onto her back and look at Katya. "Climb on up."

Katya flicks her long hair over her shoulder as she smiles at me, accepting my invitation. She straddles Elie's head, her pussy suddenly inches from the Brit.

"Look at that pretty pussy," I say. "Looks so soft, so wet."

Elie's near hyperventilating. I reach behind Katya, my fingers finding Elie's pussy again.

"You want to taste it, don't you?"

Elie nods, barely perceptible.

"Say it."

"I...I want to taste it."

"It?"

She glances at me, the shy act falling away for a moment, revealing the quick-witted woman she's blossomed into. Really? that look says. I just grin at her.

Katya lowers her pussy and Elie lifts her head to meet it, her tongue running across Katya's smooth lips. The Russian cries out. Encouraged, Elie grasps the Russian by her buttocks and pulls her onto her face, where she begins swirling and slashing her pussy and clit with her tongue.

My cock is hard and ready. Enough watching. Enough cultivating. Time to get my dick wet.

I move down between Elie's legs. It's a glorious sight—Katya rolling her hips over her face, her big tits bouncing, her soft stomach clenching and releasing. Without fanfare, I set my cock against Elie's cunt and slam home, driving all thick, nine-inches into her.

She screams against Katya's pussy. The brunette doesn't relent, though, doesn't give her space to catch her breath. If anything, she rides Elie's face harder, driving her clit across her nose like she's a human Sybian.

I reach forward, touching Katya's silky back, tracing my fingers along her spine. She glances back at me, smiles. Turning her head, we kiss as we ride Elie, our tongues dancing. I sink my free hand down between her legs, joining Elie's mouth on Katya's clit.

Now it's Katya's turn to gasp and moan. She breaks the kiss. We play with her more. I can't see it, but I feel Elie's tongue lashing her new playmate, getting into it. I match her enthusiasm with both my fingers and my driving cock. I lay waste to Katya's neck with kisses, nibbling up the long column of flesh to nip at her ear.

“Come all over Elie's face. Smother her with your pussy.”

Katya's breath catches. She shoves her shoulders against me and grinds her hips down, desperate to do as told. I grab the short hairs of her pubes and pull. She cries out.

“Do it,” I hiss.

Katya screams, reaching down and grabbing Elie's hair, riding her face through a loud and high-pitched climax.

Flopping onto her back, a sweaty, heaving mess, Katya runs her fingers through her dark hair and sighs contentedly. Through heavy-lidded eyes, her makeup a bit smeared, she watches me as I fuck Elie. I feel like I'm auditioning and step it up, pulling Elie's knees around my torso as I drive into her hard.

I know Elie by now. I've been with her longer than I am with almost everyone else. I know what she likes. I know how to make her scream. I pull out all the stops, roughly sliding my hands down the backs of her thighs to clutch her buttocks. I pull her off the mattress as we fuck.

"Play with those tits," I order. Elie obeys, filling her hands with her breasts. She teases her nipples. "Harder. Hurt yourself." And she obeys that, too, twisting her hard nips and her face crumpled with pained pleasure.

"Ngh, oh, fuck..." she moans.

I pull out of her long enough to fold her legs over to one side, side-saddle style, then drive back into her. The fit is tighter his way, but even better, it lets me stroke her g-spot with each pass. And strike I do, hammering away until she's lost it, until all she can do is scream.

So into the sex am I that I briefly forget about Katya. My arms and hips ache. My core burns. I'm still hard, but there's still so much night left. Normally, this is where I take a break, or order Elie to ride me as I let my muscles recharge. Now, though, before I can take that moment, Katya is beside me, kissing me as she rubs my sweat into my bare chest. She wants some of what I just gave Elie, and my cock flexes at the prospect.

Katya pulls me to her, off of Elie. Stroking my damp cock, she never breaks eye contact, and I see the need there. The desperation. Some inkling in me wonders if this is right, if Elie is okay with this. Lust takes over, though, and the next thing I know, I'm shoving the Russian onto her hands and knees and climbing in behind her.

I love the way her garters stretch away from her legs at this angle. Reminds me of bondage. Or reins. I reach out and take control, grabbing her hips as I ram my cock home.

I find my second wind in the unfamiliar swelter of Katya's pussy. Believe it or not, Katya's the first woman that I've been with since entering this strange relationship with Eleanor. Between work and entertaining the Hellers, I've just not had the time.

But that's not quite it, either. I glance at Elie, suddenly realizing that maybe I shouldn't be doing this at all. That maybe I've crossed some line with her by fucking another woman right in front of her—a woman that I identified and helped pick up.

Any fear that this may be the case evaporates when our eyes meet. She's electrified. I see it in the way her chest rises and falls, in the way her gaze keeps shifting to our slapping hips and Katya's near naked body. She rises up, practically climbing my body so that we can kiss and share this moment. I taste Katya on her, which only drives me wilder.

"Paul, you're so..." She searches for the word, can't find it, and simply finishes with a tasty, "Mm!" as she strokes my chest.

Pulling out of Katya, I flip her onto her back. "Climb on," I order Elie. With one last kiss, she does as she's told, straddling Katya's waist. The two come together, kissing one another as their breasts and bodies compress. Their pussies are presented to me, one on top of the other. I enter Elie first, watching her shudder as I strike her g-spot again. Then, after a few strokes, glide out of her and fuck Katya.

It's fucking amazing, each woman wet and ready, but also so different. Elie is tighter, Katya feels deeper. I fuck them in a blur, once again feeling the burn in my core, my abs on fire. Back and forth, in and out, I fuck and fuck until I don't think I can go anymore. Katya turns at some point, entering a sixty-nine with Elie as I focus the last scraps of energy on the Brit. She buries her face between Katya's thighs as the three of us ride it out. This is it. This cannot sustain.

Katya's mouth on my balls does me in. I've held out too long. I need release, and when I feel her warm, wet lips close around my scrotum, I lose it. Driving my cock deep, I pound my come into Elie as I feel the walls of her pussy ripple and shudder.

She lifts her head away from Katya's snatch to cry out, but the Russian athletically hooks her leg around Elie's head and pulls her back. Smothers her. She's coming, too. I feel, more than hear, her grunts and gasps between my legs.

I slide out, collapsing backward on my elbows, spent in a way I haven't been in ages. The girls continue to fuck each other. This is no longer a show. This isn't for me, but for them. Sixty-nining one another, Katya laps my come from Elie's messy, cream-covered pussy as Elie returns the favor, her head bobbing between Katya's thighs.

I fumble for my phone, aiming it at the Sapphic coupling, careful not to capture Katya's face. She still wears her garter belt and stockings, and her hair has somehow managed to remain smooth and glossy as it ripples around her on the bed. I take some photos, then a short clip. I send it to Ron with a taunting message.

[Me]: Here's what you're missing. Turns out your wife really WILL do anything I want.

I know the cuckold will twist and agonize over that. I know he'll go down the rabbit hole—"What else would she do for Paul?" What a strange fantasy. What an odd way to live, a constant state of anxiety.

Looking at the writhing women before me, though, I can't really complain. For me, this setup is perfect. And like Ron, I wonder.

What else will she do for me?

“That was so incredible,” Elie says. It’s hours later. Katya has left—Elie, too, but only to keep up appearances that we weren’t really together. Once the women parted ways in the elevator, she came right back up to me.

“Told you that women were fun,” I say.

“Well, yes, that, but that’s not exactly what I meant. I was actually talking about watching you and Katya.”

“Yeah?”

She shivers. “It was so intense.”

“You weren’t jealous?”

“Not at all. It was fantastic. Like having some kind of out-of-body experience.” She claws my chest. “You’re such an animal.”

She’s ready to go again, I realize, and as exhausted as I am, I figure I could, too.

“Besides, I’ve gotten used to the idea of sharing you. It’s only a matter of time before you hook up with your office wife.”

Office wife. It’s not the first time someone’s called Manhattan that. I need to watch it before a rumor begins to form.

I laugh, but it’s forced. I hate that it’s forced. “Doubt that’ll ever happen.”

“Oh please, Paul. You don’t have to be like that with me. You two are pretty friendly—”

“Because we’re friends.”

“And I know you’re attracted to her. She’s... she’s hot!”

She’s tickling my cock, trying to revive it. It works, but I tell myself it’s only working because of how this proper woman with her refined accent just called another woman “hot.”

“Sounds like you want her more than me,” I say.

Elie, despite what we just did, actually blushes at this. And that’s what I love so much about her. She just begs to be corrupted.

I finish, “Honestly, that blond haired, blue eyes look...” I shake my head.
“Not really my thing.”

Office Wife

“We pulled it off,” Manhattan says. It’s the Monday morning following the Katya encounter, and we’re waiting for our coffees. This is our routine.

“Bring it in,” I say, holding up my fist.

She bumps it, and then we laugh at the absurdity of the gesture. “I think that Eleanor is going to be amazing for Dawning.”

“You’re just saying that because it makes your job easier.”

“Smart, young woman. Credentialed. Wealthy enough to hold sway with the blue bloods. Sure, she’s a PR agency’s dream come true. But I also think she’ll be great at the job.”

“You don’t think she’ll be... I don’t know...”

“Too soft?”

“Yeah.”

“See, that’s the problem with woman in power. Act like a domineering man, and you’re labeled hormonal or shrill or, at best, a bitch. Act the way men expect and we’re weak, someone to be walked all over. And don’t even get me started on playing up our looks.”

“I think you may already have started. Go on.”

Manhattan rolls her eyes. “You know this story. We play up our looks and we must have slept our way into success. We play down our looks, and we're insecure and, again, weak."

"So you're saying that you don't think Eleanor is weak," I state flatly.

She chuckles. "No, I think there's a very strong woman beneath the surface. She's just learned to hide it well."

"Unlike you."

"Are you calling me a bitch? Or weak?"

"Insecure," I joke.

"How ever did you learn my deepest secret?" She flips her hair.

"Because I ran into you at the Marriott before you were Heather Kingsley-Fletcher."

"How egocentric of you to frame my identity from your own perspective." She collects her coffee. "You're supposed to be charming how?"

"I slept my way to the top."

"That doesn't even make sense as a comeback." She laughs anyway. We hit the streets.

"You know, people are calling us an office couple, right?"

"People?"

"Eleanor mentioned it, um, after lunch last week." Definitely not after we shared a smoking hot Russian flight attendant.

"Interesting." She links her arm into mine, and I feel the rush of being so close to her. "I need to tell Joshua about that. He's jealous of you, you know."

"Am I going to get a rock thrown through my window?"

“Nah. He’s harmless.”

“I feel bad for the guy. If you tease him as much as you do me, he must really love you.”

She doesn’t acknowledge my statement. Not verbally, anyway, but I can tell that she’s pleased with herself judging from her smile.

“So anyway, I wouldn’t worry about this office husband/wife thing. After the board meeting this week, I’ll be putting June in charge of your account. You’ll be in good hands with her.”

Loss, pure and undistilled. I feel it run through my veins. I feel it collect in the pit of my stomach. And it makes no sense. I know it doesn’t, just as I always knew that this moment would come.

“I see how it is. You get the big headline, then pass us off?”

“Oh, Paul. Me thinks you’re upset.” She puts her hand on my arm. “And you think rebuilding your reputation is going to be easy? Trust me, this is a good thing. June is really good at what she does. I only hire the best.”

I focus on the day in front of me. The tasks I need to do. Last week, the Steering Committee voted to recommend Eleanor to lead the Board of Trustees. This week, she takes it, and all eyes will be on how well she does—and indirectly, how well I do. We’ve linked our fates together, the two of us. There’s no room to wallow. No time to shoegaze. Manhattan was always going to leave, one day or another. She’s fun to be around, fun to banter with, but ultimately she’s temporary.

The other big board change is that Mason Coles joins, taking the place that Gregory Hamilton vacated. We go from a board of twelve old, white men, to something slightly better. It is hopefully a sign of a brighter future.

I figure that the board position is how Manhattan got Mason to support Eleanor’s rise. It makes sense more than anything, especially after her whole diatribe against men’s perception of women.

Still, I go there. Whatever. I'm a guy, and when I see the way Manhattan tosses her hair and laughs at something Mason tells her, I think about the two of them doing more than flirting—her white skin against his rich chocolate, his fingers running through her tumbling, golden locks as he draws her in for a—

“You think they're sleeping with one another?” Eleanor asks beside me. We're on break. No one else is around.

I shrug. “Probably not.”

“Because you're not?” she teases.

“Because it wouldn't be professional.”

Eleanor doesn't say anything. At least I don't think so. I watch the blonde say something that Mason grins at, Mason's hand brushing along her upper arm in a way that's borderline appropriate. When I look back at the space Elie stood, she's gone.

That's a blip, though. Most of the day is business and logistics. They talk about new initiatives to adopt and old ones to kill. I need to be in the thick of these discussions. I need to be the guide. If I don't, if I let these decisions pass me by, then I'll be passed by with them.

The day ticks on. Afternoon turns into evening. We finally break for the day and start packing up. I find myself alone with Manhattan as the last members of the board leave.

“How you holding up?” she asks. She looks as tired as I feel. Her guard is down. The question isn't a setup for a glib remark on my stamina. I treat it like it is anyway.

“I was just getting started. It's still early.”

She nods at me, like she should have known better. “Save that energy for tomorrow then. This week's going to be a long one.”

“Let's go grab a drink. To celebrate pulling this thing off.”

She studies me like she's picking through my thoughts, searching for an ulterior motive.

I hold up my hands. "Totally platonic. I swear. We can spend the whole time talking about your husband."

She barks a laugh. "Please no."

"Sports then. I just think we should celebrate. We actually made it through hell. That calls for something alcoholic."

"It's far from over," she says, but she's softening.

"Are you really going to make me beg?"

She seems to like that idea, but keeps the obvious retort to herself. "Fine. You can buy me a drink. Let me just tell my husband I'll be late."

I shouldn't say this next thing, but I do anyway. "Tell him you're going out with a guy. He'll probably like it."

If she was Elie, she would probably giggle and look at me with her paradoxically cute and sinister smile. She'd do it like we were partners in crime. But Manhattan is not Elie.

She smirks. "You seem really into this 'bull' thing." She taps a finger on her lips in thought, brightens, and says, "Should I see if he'll come out and watch us?"

"I'm starting to reconsider my drink offer."

"Oh, I don't think that's actually true."

It isn't, and a half hour later, we're settled into a corner of the bar at Callahan's. When I order for us—a Jameson for me, a Manhattan for her—she just rolls her eyes at our self-assigned cocktails, but spends more time playing with the skewered cherry than actually drinking the drink.

"You know Mason's got a thing for you, right?"

“Sure. You guys aren't exactly subtle.”

“Us guys, huh? You lumping me in with him?”

“Like you don't already.” She chuckles. “You guys probably think it's flattering that a ‘hot’ guy like you is into us, right? Like when I catch you staring at my legs, it's a compliment.”

“You mean it's not? Let me be the first to apologize. Next time you wear a skirt, instead of staring, I'll just say, ‘nice legs’.”

“You could also whistle.”

“Now that would be going too far.”

This is the kind of thing I'm going to miss when she rolls off our account. I don't say that, though. I wonder if Heather feels the same way.

“You know, Mason and I are different.”

“Oh? How's that?”

“You have a chance with him.”

She covers her mouth as she laughs. It's delightful. “And I don't with you, huh?”

“Definitely not. We covered this when we first met. You're just too much work.”

“And as I said to you before, your life's too complicated. You still seeing damage control?”

I wonder what either woman would think of the nickname if they knew the truth.

“I am.”

“Wow, Paul. That's what? A month? That some kind of record for you?”

“For your information, I dated Susie Hannover for two months...”

“And she was your... homecoming date?”

“Prom. Well, she would have been. Instead, she broke my heart a week before.”

“So we have Susie Hannover to blame for...” She made an up and down motion before me. “...the man you are today. How special of her.”

“You say that like it’s a bad thing.”

“I can’t believe that you’re, like, a real person.” She sounds delighted with me. “Or, for that matter, the same guy who just walked out of the Dawning board room.”

“What can I say? I’m multi-layered.”

“You’re something, anyway.”

My phone buzzes. I check it automatically. She already thinks I’m a bit of an asshole, anyway.

[Elie]: What should I wear tomorrow? Option number one:

The photo that follows is Eleanor wearing a minuscule, black g-string that sits scandalously low on her hips, a pair of black thigh-highs, extremely tall pumps, and nothing else. Her arm covers her tits in a faux show of modesty, but this photo sizzles.

The lingerie in her second photo is more vintage—ivory lace making up a wide garter belt and panties, the lacy bra covered in floral embellishments. Even the chunkier heels match the retro feel.

“That her?”

I darken the phone as panic swells through me. “Um...” She’s not actually looking at my phone, just reacting to the sounds of incoming messages. “It is.”

“Should I be worried here?”

“Why?”

“You seem awfully attached to a married woman. And she seems pretty needy.”

“I wouldn’t call her needy, although she did ask me a question.” I’m feeling brazen. Manhattan brings the bold recklessness out in me. I flip the phone back on and tap one of the images. It hides Elie’s name from the frame, and she’s smartly made sure not to show her face in either image. “Which do you think she should wear the next time I see her?”

There’s nothing identifying in the photo. Elie just looks like a hot, busty woman. Even her hair is out of the frame. Still, it takes a particular pair of balls to turn the phone around and show these pictures of our newest board president to the woman who helped get her elected.

I catch the edge of hysteria in Manhattan’s laugh. It’s a nice reminder that she’s not completely unflappable.

“I thought you were the type of man who liked being surprised,” she says, taking my phone from me.

I’ve never been comfortable with other people touching my phone. It sends an uncomfortable and irrational tingle along my spine. The fact that all she would have to do was minimize the image and discover who, exactly, is sending me the photos intensifies that sensation.

The urge to snatch the phone away from her is real. I don’t though because of the bright and bold red flag that would raise.

She swipes between the two images as I try my best to look cool and collected. I swear that a bead of sweat trickles between my shoulder blades.

“I like the second. She pulls off the Fifties housewife look with that and those curves.”

She hands the phone back, and I feel the rush of relief. She sees it, but misinterprets it, asking, “You’re having fun with this, aren’t you?”

“And I owe it all to you, for introducing me to this kink.”

“Between this and saving your charity, you’re racking up quite the debt to me.”

“I know one way I can start repaying you.”

She covers her mouth as she laughs—more of an I can’t believe you said that than anything more demure. “Demure” and “Heather Kingsley-Fletcher” do not go together.

This time, it’s her own phone buzzing with an incoming text. She snorts as she reads it. “You and my husband both, apparently.”

“What’s he saying?”

“Just...” Another text rumbles in. She shakes her head. “He’s ridiculous.”

“He thinks he wants things that he can’t handle.”

“How can you be so sure—“

“I’m sure.” End of conversation. There’s a story there, but now’s not the time to probe.

“Well okay then.” I let her deal with her husband’s texts as I seek another subject. When she sets her phone down, I’ve gone with something banal, but one I’ve been curious about. “So which are you, Kingsley or Fletcher?”

“Both? That’s how marriages work.”

“Okay, so which is your maiden name?”

“You’d like to know if it’s my name on the firm, or my husband’s, don’t you?”

“So quick to go there, aren’t you? Just making small talk.”

“You know, for a man used to putting notches on your bedpost, you’re not really great at this.” Her phone buzzes again. She’s agitated.

“Hey, I’m just curious about the hyphenation. Like, what do you do when you have kids?”

She responds to his text like she’s shouting with her thumbs, then looks up at me. “Not sure kids are an adventure that Joshua and I are going to undertake.”

“Not your thing?”

She shrugs. It’s not an answer. “I’m Kingsley. Joshua is Fletcher. My father started the PR firm, but I’ve been working there for about ten years, and I’ve worked hard to get where I am.”

There’s defiance in her voice, like she’s had this conversation before, like she’s had to defend herself. Again, she looks younger in my eyes, the girl who’s had to fight so hard to earn the respect that she deserves. I say, “From what I’ve seen, you definitely have.”

She smiles to herself. “Thanks.”

Her phone rumbles again. She reads it, then shuts her eyes and shakes her head.

“Can we trade lovers? I’d rather have a hot chick sending me lingerie selfies than this.”

She turns her phone around, giving me a glimpse into her life.

[Joshua]: So who are you getting drinks with? The black guy? Or the Marriott one?

[Joshua]: Or both?

[Heather]: You'd really think that I would do that?

[Joshua]: I mean you can if you wanted to.

[Heather]: You're unbelievable.

[Joshua]: No, baby. That's all you.

"See what I have to deal with?" she asks, taking the phone back.

"I think you should test him. Just to freak him out."

"Do you now? As in, test him by sleeping with you?"

I pull out my phone. "That would be one hell of a test, but no." I swipe into the phone's camera, flip it to selfie mode, and hold it up in front of us.

"Smile."

The first selfie is a perfect microcosm of the two of us—I'm grinning into the picture like a disingenuous jock, and she's studying me like she's trying to figure out who I really am. When I show her, she seems to get it, too, laughing.

"Not exactly the kind of picture that'll get him all riled up," I say.

This time, when I hold the phone out before us, she tilts her head down just enough that she has to glance up at the camera through her lashes. Her smile says, Why hello there.

“There.” I text her both photos of us. “Send that. See what he does.”

Manhattan looks at the photos. “The office couple,” she says with a laugh. “Was this just a ploy to have a picture of me?”

“Nah. You’re wearing way too many clothes.”

“Well, after seeing your other option there, I can’t argue with that.” She withdraws a twenty from her purse and sets it on the bar. “And with that, I’m out of here.”

“Not going to send that photo?”

“No, I don’t think so. But thanks for being so thoughtful.”

I don’t know if she means to let her hand linger on my shoulder as she says it. I like to think that she doesn’t.

“See you tomorrow, Manhattan.”

“You too, Jameson.”

She leaves, her cocktail only half finished, her lipstick on the rim. I pick it up and drain it as I consider what comes next. Pulling out my phone again, I avoid looking at the selfie despite the temptation being very real. Instead, I pull up Ellie’s texts.

[Me]: Go with the first one.

[Elie]: This one?

It's another angle, from the back this time. Her heavy tits peek out around the slim curve of her back, and the wispy bands of the g-string meet in nothing more than a T before sliding down between her ripe buttocks.

[Me]: Your husband has a thing for stockings and g-string panties, doesn't he?

[Elie]: And men with large cocks fucking his wife.

My, how much she has changed.

[Me]: Can't fault the man for having good taste.

Office Hotwife

So the acting director is having sex with the married president of the board of trustees. So what? People have sex all the time. It's human nature. It's what we do. As far as scandals rate, this isn't even close to what Gregory Hamilton did to us. It is hardly a scandal at all.

Tuesday morning, I get up, I do my pull-ups and crunches. I shower, shave, dress in a smart, black suit fitting for the executive position that I temporarily hold. And the whole time, I'm thinking about what Eleanor Heller will wear, knowing all she's got beneath is a g-string and thigh-highs.

She's not there when I arrive. Manhattan approaches me, looking smart and sexy in her gray dress and blazer and armed with her travel cup from Aroma House. "Missed you this morning," she says. "Drink too much last night?"

"Ha. Slept way too much, no thanks to you."

She smiles, but makes sure that I see the way she sweeps her eyes about the room, as if to say, Careful, others are listening. But she does give me something to stir me up. "I didn't, no thanks to you... and Joshua." She reaches out to straighten my lapel, and I smell her subtle perfume beneath the java. "Hence the coffee."

With that, she wanders off, leaving me speechless.

"Tell me you're hitting that." It's Mason, of course. He makes sure that no one else hears, but my ears still burn at the insinuation.

“No, man. I don’t mix business with pleasure, as pleasurable as I’m sure it is.” I can’t help throwing in the last bit. Mason brings that kind of guy out in me.

“You do you, then. Less competition, the better.”

You know she’s married, almost comes out before I realize how ridiculous it sounds. “Good luck with that. She seems like too much work to me.”

“I bet she’s worth it.” His eyes are all over Manhattan as she engages with Henry Dawning. I feel like an overprotective dad, but before I could say something an overprotective dad would say, Mason shifts the conversation. “Hey, so what do you think of the new prez?”

I can’t read into what he’s suggesting. “I think she’s capable. Good pick. Why, you wanted it?”

Mason thumbs his nose and laughs. “Hell no. Way too much responsibility.”

“You think the board will listen to her?”

“These old white boys? Yeah, she’s more than capable of handling them. Am I right, Paul?” Now he’s definitely suggesting something. “How wild is it that the sweet doe from that gala is now the most powerful member of them all. Crazy, right?”

He’s hunting. He wants to know what happened back then, after he left, and I almost give it to him. Such is the hyper-competitive nature we share. Instead, common sense wins out. I go on the offense, to throw him off. “You leave with her that night?” I ask.

He lifts his eyebrows at that. “I thought you did.”

“How awkward would that have been,” I say with a wide smile. “Guess you dodged one there.”

Eleanor Heller arrives at that moment, wearing a snug, pinstripe dress suit and a black blazer buttoned up over top. It encases her full chest, but doesn't completely hide the fact that she's braless beneath. At least to the trained eye.

"You know what?" Mason says. "I'm not trying to dodge anything."

The day begins, grinds on, and eventually ends. It's all business. I almost forget about Elie and how slutty she is beneath her business facade. With her hair tied up in a bun and her rigid, English poise, she doesn't project the kind of woman wearing so very little beneath her suit, or the kind of woman who would text me a photo of it.

But it's more than how she looks or how she presents herself. It's how she acts. How she commands this room of "old white boys." They listen—maybe at first because she's easy on the eyes, but not by the end. Even Henry Dawning starts to defer to her thoughts and ideas.

After the meeting breaks for the day, I find Manhattan and am feeling generous. "You were right. She's good for this charity."

"She's the future," she agrees. Then, "You may be, too, you know."

"Now you're fucking with me."

"Maybe I am." She has only one dimple when she smiles. "See you tomorrow."

She leaves after that, and Eleanor Heller floats over to me. "Hello, Mrs. Heller. Long day."

"Mr. Sharpe." Her lashes look particularly long as she bats them at me. "Long day, but a productive one, don't you think?"

"For sure. I'm looking forward to unwinding a little."

"Me too." She brushes her long bangs from her face.

"First, though, I think we need to debrief, you and I."

"Okay." Pink forms in her cheeks.

“After you get everyone out of here.”

I leave her to it, going to my office without further instruction. A thrill runs through me like electric current, carrying the same dangerous feeling that accompanies every part of this affair.

It only takes ten minutes before I hear the click of her heels down the tiled office floor. This is wild. Here I am, Paul Sharpe, who has been called a man-child too many times to count, in charge of an entire charity. What a world we live in.

The rich smell of leather and wood just sink home when Elie slips into my office and shuts the door behind her. She turns to me, a coy smile twisted cutely across her face.

“Those men don’t know what to make of you.” Like I have her figured out at all.

She unbuttons her black blazer, thrusting her chest out as she shrugs it off. The pinstripe dress is sleeveless, and now that she’s got nothing to hide them, I see her heavy breasts move unfettered.

“I think they were mostly wondering if I was wearing a brassiere or not,” she says.

“Show me what they all wish they saw.”

“Sir, are you asking your board president to flash you?” She’s already reaching behind her and unzipping the dress.

“No. I’m telling you.”

Her smile is so mischievous, so conspiratorial, that I wonder if maybe this woman was here all along. That the shy woman I’d met at the gala was the facade. She pushes the dress from her shoulders. “You know I could have you fired for this.”

“Am I asking you to do anything that you don’t want to do?”

“You haven’t yet.”

Shimmying her body, she peels the dress from her chest, which bounce into view. She cups them, squeezing them together into a line of plush, deep cleavage.

Pushing back in my chair, I say, “Then come closer.”

She approaches, sashaying, possessed with confidence that fuels my own. Her eyes lock onto mine, full of need, of desire.

“I want to thank you personally for joining the board, Mrs. Heller.” I unbuckle my belt and zip open my trousers. “It’s been thrilling, watching you work.”

“Same to you, Mr. Sharpe.” She slides into the space in front of me, leaning against my desk. “You know how much I like strong men.”

I reach out and touch her bare stomach, watching her abs tighten. I brush them down to where her dress hangs from her hips. I can already see the slim black arches of her g-string.

“The way you control all those rich, powerful men in there,” she lilts. “They listen to you. They need you. They would be lost without your leadership.”

“And you?”

“I need you, too.”

“Show me.”

Her hands cover mine and together we push her dress past her hips. I press my hand against her pussy, feeling the dampness collected in her panties.

I roll my chair closer, opening her legs as I grab her by the back of the neck with my free hand and pull her in for a deep, hard kiss. I catch her gasp in the kiss when I slide my fingers under the g-string and touch her clit.

She breaks the kiss, moaning in the hushed quiet of the office. “I need this so badly.”

“Need what?”

Reaching between us, she looks me right in the eye. “Your cock.”

Her hand covers my shaft, tracing the bulge through my stretched boxer briefs. I swear her pupils dilate. Her breath tightens.

I put my hands on her shoulders. Command and control course through me. I am the Master here, and Elie will do anything for me. My imagination explodes with possibility, because with this once-sweet woman, I want to push her to her limits.

I don’t even need to order her. She knows her place. Knows what I want. She sinks to her knees between my legs, pulls my cock free, and slathers it with her spit.

“That’s it, Elie, suck that cock. Show me how much you love it.”

Here is this woman taking my shaft all the way to the root, staring up at me with the same sharp brown eyes that stared down Henry Dawning as she suggested—for the first time in its long history—that the foundation should change its name. She has to open her mouth wide to take all of me, as she takes me into her throat.

“Been dreaming about deep throating me all day?”

She slurps off of me, her hand taking over where her lips just were. “You know I have. Ronald even got me a large dildo so I could practice.”

“Of course he did.” I grab my phone off the desk and train it on Elie. “Show him that practice makes perfect.”

She comes even more alive under the camera, now that she knows this is a performance. With her hand still pumping along my shaft, she says, “Look what I found, honey.”

And then she dives back onto my cock.

I watch her through the phone, watch the way her husband will hours from now. It's clear and intimate, picking up the way her freckled cheeks cave around me and her eyes stare up. The way her nostrils flare the first time I re-enter her throat. The exhilaration she takes in sucking another man's dick. My dick.

"She's so good at that, Ron. She's so good because she's into it. I bet she gets off, feeling me in her throat."

Elie's moan rumbles through me, sending tremors across my balls.

"You like it, Elie? Your husband's listening."

She sucks hard, slowly pulling up off me. Her lips leave the tip of my cock with a pop. She's smiling. "I love this great...big...cock." Each word is emphasized, deliberate. Each word delivered right into the camera.

I am a plaything, a toy just as much as the dildo her husband gave her. I don't mind. How could I, with a woman like Elie at my beck and call.

"And you'll do anything for this cock, won't you?"

"With pleasure." She shifts higher, cupping her tits and pressing them around my cock. Saliva-slick, I glide through her cleavage, warm and soft. The raunchy sight is almost as good as the sensation.

"Tell me your filthiest fantasy, Elie. What do you want?"

She looks at the camera, uncertain now—not because she doesn't know her fantasy, but because she's afraid to share it. To say it out loud. Her hesitation fuels my lust for her.

"Tell me, Elie. Look here. At me." I lower the phone just enough that she must choose to look at either the lens or into my eyes. Even here, she hesitates. "You're my slut, Elie. My whore. And I want to know what I'm buying. So tell me your deepest, darkest, filthiest fantasy—"

“To be fucked.” The confession emerges like it’s shoved. Like it’s still unwilling to come.

I know there’s more. I suspect what it is, but can’t believe it, even after all I’ve done to this woman. “And?”

“And not just...not just with one man.” She dips her head, swirling her tongue along the crown of my cock. She whispers, “And not just two men.”

This is a line that even I haven’t crossed. But looking down at Eleanor Heller, with her tits massaging my dick at her soft, brown eyes rimmed with naughtiness, I want to go there.

“What do you want, Elie. Say it.”

“I want a...a...” Her face lit bright red. She glances down at the phone, recording this wild confession, and balks.

“Say it,” I snap, and her attention is back on me.

“I want a gang-bang. I want to be fucked until I can’t take it anymore. I want to pass out screaming.”

I grab her head and shove her down onto my cock. I’m so close. My balls so tight. Her words paint a wild, pornographic picture in my head that I can’t shake—Eleanor at the center of a wall of men, a cock in her pussy, her ass, her mouth and hands. Her face lined with running mascara and smeared lipstick.

“Maybe, if you’re a good little slut, we’ll see what we can do,” I say. And shut off the camera.

It’s then that I hear it—the front door shutting. I’m still in Elie’s fantasy, still see the woman between my legs as she gets painted with come, that it takes me a precious moment to realize that someone else is here.

“Hello?”

And to realize that that someone is Manhattan, coming back.

“Paul, you still here?”

Her heels approach. Panic seizes me. I look down at Elie, the hand in her hair tightening into a fist. I intend to pull her off me.

“Paul?” she’s just outside my office door.

My adrenaline spikes. My balls tighten. The confession and my fear collide. I explode in Elie’s mouth as the knob of my office begins to turn.

Somehow, in that clarity that sometimes comes with orgasm, I’m able to survey the room, looking for evidence of what we’re doing. Only Elie’s blazer sits on a chair beside the door. Everything else is hidden behind my desk, including Eleanor Heller, who’s currently swallowing my come.

I put my finger to my lips for Elie, and scoot closer to my desk, hiding her beneath it.

The door opens. In steps Manhattan, breezy and as beautiful as ever. I stare at her, forcing a smile, willing her not to realize that my pants are open and I have our newest board president between my legs.

She pauses before answering. I think. Maybe I just imagine it. “You’re still here.”

“Had some things I needed to wrap up.”

Again, that pause, a fraction of a hesitation before she speaks. “You know you shouldn’t work too hard. Don’t want you to burn out. I’m going to need you.”

Elie licks my balls, forcing me to grind down on my teeth or make an unseemly sound.

“Why are you here, Heather?” The bluntness of my question and the fact that I use her real name while we’re alone throws her off. I see it in the way her brows knit. The way she tilts her head, just so. So I quickly add, “You’re not here to make things awkward for me, are you?”

She snorts. “Remember that stuff I said about you surprising me? Forget all that. I was wrong. If you should know, I wanted to tell you that you’re now one of the plenary session’s speakers at GPC.”

GPC, or the Global Philanthropy Conference, being the biggest charity and philanthropy conference of the year. To be suddenly thrust into a speaking role there is a huge windfall.

“Wow, that’s fantastic. You did that?”

She blows on the back of her pink, lacquered nails. “You should know by now that you hired the best.”

“Says you.”

“Says my actions.” She smirks. Glances at the desk, then back up at me. She knows. “Don’t work too hard, Paul.”

And with that, she leaves, shutting the door quietly behind her.

Fuck. I sweep my hand through my hair as I sink back into the chair, groaning. Fuck, fuck, fuck!

Before I can even begin to think about the consequences of this, Elie wraps her lips around my cock again. My once-again rock hard cock. She doesn’t linger, though, giving it only a couple bobs before crawling up into my lap.

“That,” she says, wrapping her hands around my neck, “was quite exciting.”

Pushing her thong to the side, she sinks down onto my erection, her pussy wet and ready for me.

“Elie...” I warn. We can’t do this. We shouldn’t. We need to get out of here. I’m not even sure Manhattan’s left the office completely.

Elie scrambles all of that. “So you’re fucking her, too?”

She doesn’t sound upset or jealous, but I know women enough to understand the minefield I’ve just entered. And it’s not been long enough for me to forget the anger she showed when the Hamilton scandal just broke.

“No.”

“You can tell me, you know. I’m not as innocent as you may think.”

It actually makes me laugh. I stand, lifting her with me, and set her on the edge of my desk. My cock slips out. I grab her g-string and pull, tearing it off her and flinging it to the side.

“Don’t worry. You’re far from innocent.” I run my dick along her smooth mound, teasing her clit with its swollen ridge. “No, I’m not fucking her. Right now, I’m fucking you.”

I realign myself and ram home. The desk shudders. She groans.

I press my forehead to hers, holding her by the back of the neck. The way she looks back at me is like a drug—there’s need, there’s desire, there’s unchecked hunger. It’s what I want. It’s what I keep coming back for.

One day, all this will catch up with me. I should stop. This should be the end of it.

Instead, I grin. I rut. And I don’t think about anything but this sweet, blissful, dangerous moment.

Outside, the night is cool, but not cold. It carries that electricity that I usually associated with alcohol and bars. My skin is still damp beneath my clothes, sticky and already anticipating a long, hot shower.

The smell of cigarette smoke drifts on the gentle breeze. I wish I didn’t give it up years ago. I sure could use it now.

“You’ll never believe who I saw leaving this building about twenty minutes ago.” Her voice comes from behind me, beside the doors to the building where she must have waited.

“Who’s that?” I ask without looking back.

Manhattan steps up beside me, dropping the cigarette on the sidewalk and grinding it out beneath the ball of her foot. “Why, Mrs. Eleanor Heller. Who knew she was here late, too?”

I look at her. “You did, right?”

“I had a hunch.”

“Are you going to tell me to stop?”

She laughs, and it grates on me despite how musical and clear it is. “I’m not your mother.”

“No, you’re my office wife.”

“So that makes Eleanor your what? Your office hotwife? What the fuck are you doing, Paul?”

“The president of the fucking board is ‘damage control’? I thought you were thick, but this is... it’s crazy.”

She looks like she’s about to take out another cigarette.

“I told you, it’s under control.”

She stares at me, her face a mask. I feel myself being dissected and don’t like it. “Don’t do that,” I say.

“Do what?”

“Judge.”

She smiles, and holds her hand up to hail a cab. “Who am I to judge, right? But I am seriously considering dropping you as a client.”

“Don’t do that. I’m good for your brand.”

“No. Ha. No, you’re really, really toxic to it.” She sighs. “At least tell me it’s consensual.”

“Of course. What kind of man do you think I am?”

She shakes her head. “A fucking crazy one. And if and when it does come out, I’m going to swear up and down that I know nothing.”

“That mean my secret’s safe?”

“It’s not even remotely safe.” She sniffs. “But I’m not going to say a thing. To anyone.” She brushes her fingers through her hair. “And after Global Philanthropy Con, you’re going to need to find a new PR agency.”

“Staying long enough to get the headline, I see?”

A taxi pulls up. She shrugs. “I have an exit plan. Do you?”

She steps into the taxi and shuts the door. She doesn’t even bother waving.

Mistakes

“Is there any other business we should discuss?” Eleanor Heller asks the room—the room that she now commands.

It’s Friday, and her transformation over the week is like watching a flower bloom under a time-lapse lens. Or maybe that’s a bit too dramatic. She’s still the sweet, soft-spoken woman she was at the gala—certainly not a younger version of the gruff and matronly Gloria Westhouse. The politeness and poise are still there, as unshakable as her accent. But she’s not a doormat, either. She’s what this charity needs—steady, subtle resilience.

She turns to me. “Paul, would you like to add anything before we adjourn?”

This is significant. When Larry promoted me to acting director in the wake of the scandal, I wasn’t sure anyone would take the promotion seriously. I wasn’t sure if I’d take it seriously. Now, looking around at the ladies and gentlemen who make up the board of trustees—all giants in their industries—I feel respect.

From everyone, that is, but Heather Kingsley-Fletcher, who sits in a chair on the outskirts of the room, watching me the way an animal trainer does a wild dog. I feel regret for a second before pushing that away.

“I just want to say thank you for all of your hard work. We all believe in the mission of this foundation, but it’s one thing to be there when things are easy. It’s another to stick by when the world gets tough. We’re not out of the woods yet, but with your help—with all of your help—we will be.”

“Thank you, Paul,” Eleanor says.

“Thanks, Paul,” Henry Dawning reiterates. At last, he feels comfortable enough to leave. To let the Dawning staff take over and do what we do best. He calls for the meeting to adjourn, and with sweet relief, we all agree.

We move as a group to the Starlight Lounge around the corner, a chic cocktail bar that’s definitely too cool for us, but happily seats us upstairs and takes our money. Manhattan joins us, which surprises me. She’s off the clock now, and things feel prickly enough between us that I figure she’d just as soon go home to her own life.

But she’s there, probably the only one of us who looks at home amidst the chrome and glass interior design of the lounge. Even her slim and sleeveless slate gray dress fits, shimmering as she turns, the quicksilver shine of a fish always catching the corner of my eye. I do my best to ignore her.

I find myself alone with Eleanor and Henry Dawning, who buys us each another drink, even though we haven’t finished our first. Putting a hand around my shoulder, he hugs me close. I can smell the liquor on his breath. “Two of the best and the brightest, right here,” he says. “You two are the future.”

Eleanor and I share a secret smile. She almost laughs. Dawning doesn’t notice. He’s already drunk.

“You two may just save our asses after all.” He slaps my shoulder hard. “Damn, son. You’re like a boulder under that shirt.”

He laughs to himself like he’s made a joke before wandering off, into another group of donors.

“I think he fancies you,” Eleanor says around her glass of wine.

Eleanor laughs. “You like it.”

“I like keeping my job.”

“Hmm... I think I’m in control of that destiny now, yeah?”

“I suppose you are, Madam President. And what do I need to do to not get fired?”

“Oh, Mr. Sharpe, you’ve gone above and beyond.” She doesn’t reach out. She doesn’t adjust my tie or do anything openly flirtatious. But the way she smiles at me, tipping her head just so, her eyes luminous, feels like she’s stroking me.

I sense her stare like a feature up the back of my neck. I glance up, finding her watching me across the room—watching us. Manhattan is there, that stare echoing her words from earlier in the week. What the fuck are you doing, Paul?!

That should have been a reminder that it is time to stop this dangerous game. Tonight, Manhattan knows. Tomorrow, a board member could find out. The day after, the press. The right thing to do—the responsible one—would be to break things off, and break things off yesterday.

“Have you done as I’ve asked?” I say.

Eleanor takes a shallow breath, and the ruddiness in her cheeks climbs a little higher. “All day long.”

I can picture the glossy, black butt plug nestled between her cheeks. I glance at Manhattan. Responsibility be damned. I’d just saved this fucking company. “Good girl. Now go and mingle. Later, I plan on showing you just how much more beyond we can go.”

We separate, although I feel the possibility of her on me, promising fun, promising risk and danger, like a drug habit that I can’t kick. Elie floats among the elite, above it all, pristine—and all I want to do is dirty her up.

I go to the bar and order something stiff.

“Look at you, my man. The head dog.” It’s Mason, here to thank me. As much as I see him as a rival, I like him. In a room where everyone else sees me as the director, Mason sees me as he always has, a player. It’s refreshing. It’s also dangerous. “So tell me, she as good a piece of ass as she looks?”

Panic wraps it’s electric fingers around my heart and squeezes. It’s all I can do to keep my cool. To scratch the side of my cheek and laugh it off while sounding sane.

I trace his eyes, and then I really do laugh. He’s not looking at Eleanor, but at Manhattan.

“Dude, there’s no fucking way. Too much work there.”

“I bet she’s worth it.”

I chuckle. It’s not even that forced. “Good luck with that, then. Let me know how that goes.”

I dodged a bullet, and now we’re on borrowed time.

His eyes linger over my shoulder, where I imagine Manhattan stands. Something squirms inside of me before I drown it with a pull of whiskey.

Mason focuses back on me. “Hey, look, don’t let this shit go to your head, but I really do think you’ve got this. These old white guys, they need to move the Foundation into the twenty-first century, and they weren’t gonna do it themselves.”

Mason’s the kind of guy who always looks like he’s fucking with you. It’s hard to cut through the sarcasm. But he’s being real here, and I know that’s hard for him. “Appreciate it, man. Thanks.”

We share a bro-handshake. “Now, wish me luck. I’ll let you know if she’s a natural blonde.”

I watch him walk up to Manhattan, then deliberately not watch what comes next. She’s a big girl, and more than that, I have no right to feel possessive over her.

The happy hour celebration bleeds on. Small plates of food are ordered. We fill up on guacamole and calamari and booze. The Starlight Lounge starts to transform around 9 o'clock, as most of the happy hour crowd leaves and the Friday night pre-partiers begin taking over.

Ronald Heller joins us at some point, showing up and falling into easy conversation with the Dawning board members that remain. I always forget that he's a part of this world as much as she is—that if anything, it was Ronald rubbing elbows and making the circuit back when Eleanor was just a wallflower.

Seeing him out of the context of the bedroom is...weird. He's a different man in public. His smile is more self-assured. He laughs more. He fits in here in a way that I do not—that I don't want.

Kiss their ass now. You can always wash out your mouth later, Larry always said. I miss that man.

“Paaaul,” Ronald greets, drawing my name out like we're meeting on the golf course. Like we're good friends. “It's good to see you.”

He's smug because we're where we are, and I can see his nervousness shift behind his eyes like he's wearing a mask. All I can think is, Your wife is wearing a butt plug right now because I told her to, even as I accept his handshake and smile my jovial smile.

“Glad you could make it out, Ron.” I can't help but use his shortened name, even here. Something about the way his hair is slicked back makes me want to diminish him. I must have had more to drink than I thought. “Bet you'll be happy to get your wife back after this week. I know how much you like that.”

Yes, I've definitely had too much to drink. I resolve to switch to water as Ron's face colors some more. He doesn't say anything on it other than, “It's been quite a week.”

A guy moves in behind the DJ booth. He looks out over the crowd, wearing sunglasses and large headphones and a ironic curl to his mouth. I wonder what he thinks about all of us, still in our suits, although as I look around, I realize that our group's been overtaken by the evening crowd.

Gloria Westhouse comes over, her husband, who's about twenty years her junior, trailing behind her, just as the DJ began his first song. "Well, that's my cue to get the hell out of here." To me, she says, "Don't fuck this up or I'm coming for your balls."

I bark a laugh, and I'm drunk enough to say, "You don't want to castrate a bull, ma'am." But not so drunk as to glance at Ron.

"Don't test me," Gloria says, but she's smiling through her gruffness. "You wouldn't be the first." She grabs her trophy husband by the tie. "Come on, Edmund. Time to let these youngsters do whatever the fuck they do these days. SnapTalk or whatever."

Edmund Westhouse looks at us apologetically before being led away.

I wonder if that's Ron's future. When I look at him, he seems to be pondering the same thing. He gives me a nervous smile. "I'm going to go look for Eleanor..."

"I'll see you later tonight, Ron."

He clears his throat, nods, and disappears into the crowd. I finish my own drink and am tempted to order another. I shouldn't, so I walk away from the bar, off to explore the rest of the lounge.

It's a bigger place than it looks from the outside, narrow, yet deep. The first two floors are open, with chairs and tables that are slowly being moved to the edges of the room to create a dance space. It's unused right now, but I can see that changing within the hour as the DJ really gets into his set.

There's a third story, I discover, up a spiral staircase that's got to have some kind of liability around it. It does give the space a more intimate, secretive feel, though. Up here, the walls are lined with booths, each with a privacy curtain. No bar up here, but there's table service.

A young server wearing a short black skirt and a friendly smile walks up to me. "Can I help you?"

She has big eyes behind her dark-rimmed hipster glasses that give me some very dirty thoughts. I file them away for now. "Just checking the place out. Can anyone sit up here?"

"Anyone can, although you have to order by the bottle."

Which will be overpriced.

"And it's private?"

That friendly smile takes on a dash of mischief. "Of course, sir."

The front of the room features a bank of wide windows, looking out over the busy streets of DC. I'm drawn to the windows.

"Can I get you a booth?" she asks, following tentatively behind.

"Maybe later."

She breaks off from me, leaving me to my thoughts. Outside, I can see all the way down Connecticut Avenue. The traffic's thick, the streets lined with headlights slowly crawling their way into the city this Friday night. I don't quite see them. I see myself in the reflection instead.

I need to stop this thing with Eleanor. Manhattan is right, it's too much. Too crazy. Too stupid. We live in a world that doesn't tolerate these kinds of workplace scandals, and Eleanor certainly isn't the only hotwife out there for me to play with.

In the reflection of the window, I see Manhattan's form coalesce out of the shadows, sleek, crisp curves and long, golden hair. It's so perfect that I figure it's all in my head until she's right there behind me, speaking.

“There you are.”

“Here I am.”

“Surprised that you and the woman of the hour haven’t snuck off yet.”

I turn, meeting her eyes. “I was holding out hope that you’d join us.”

I expect her to roll her eyes or chide me. Instead, she appears to stop and think about it. “It has been a long time since I’ve been with another woman...”

Her response catches me off guard, just as she intended. I’m slower to recover than I’d like, and when I do, I grasp for the first clumsy thing. “So what happened to Mason? Thought he had a shot tonight.”

“Oh, we negotiated and he settled on a BJ in the men’s stall.”

This time I am more prepared. “Huh. Always thought Mason was a classier guy than that.”

Manhattan laughs, and I love it. I want to sink into this moment. I want to hear that forever. I say, “I think I’m drunk.”

“Too many Jamesons, Jameson?”

Even the nickname feels like a warm stroke across my shoulder blades.

“Can I get you another Manhattan, Manhattan?”

“Oh, I’ve definitely had too many of those.”

She’s right beside me, staring out into the street. Or pretending to, anyway. Our eyes meet in the reflection.

“Hey, I’m sorry about this whole...thing,” I say it without realizing that I want to apologize, but when I do, it feels right. As right as this moment.

“A tiger can’t change his stripes, right?”

“We talking about you? Or me?”

She considers it, and I force myself to see Heather, not Manhattan. Not this woman I’ve constructed around her. I see vulnerability in her. Maybe it was always there, well hidden until I knew to look for it.

All around us, the subtle strains of the DJ’s mix swirl, sampled undertones that mix and spin, like dancing in warm rain. It creeps up on us. All of it. Too much of it.

“You are a dangerous man.” She whispers, but her voice is clear to me, echoing through me.

We’re close. We breathe the same air. We share the same space. The headlights outside, the music around us, but it all blurs away, becoming background to this moment. Everything but her fades.

Heather looks up at me, her eyelashes thick, her gaze anything but bashful. That look invites. She looks at my mouth, my lips, and I see hers, moist, pink, parted just so.

I can’t look into her face and pretend I don’t want her. I’m too drunk to be bothered by that kind of self-denial. But I’m not so drunk that I don’t see it—the line. Here it is, and if we do this, if we cross it, it will be hard to play it off. We do this, and—

Heather’s patience runs out. She sighs, grabs me by the back of my neck, and pulls me down to her. Our lips meet and for one, split second, I panic and nearly pull back.

But then her tongue pushes past my lips and her mouth parts to mine, and the world goes nuclear. I lose myself in that kiss—all the doubts I’ve been having, all that jealousy and envy and fear are wiped away in the passion we share. I want this. I want this forever.

Heather pulls back, and the world rushes in. A car honks outside, followed by some angry shouting. The music shifts to something more upbeat and dancy. Heather stares at me with the same shell-shocked look on her face that I feel, then looks out the window, out in the street like it's suddenly the most interesting thing in the world.

I can still feel her lips on mine. I can still taste her, smell her, want her. But the moment is gone. I run my hand down her waist and out her hip. She draws a sharp breath, like she's just waking up, and turns back to me. She says something, but I can't hear. The music is suddenly too loud. "What?"

She shakes her head and tries again, leaning in. I want to kiss her again, or suggest we get out of here. I feel the rush of it.

"I need to go," she says instead. Worse, she looks apologetic in saying it. Like, Sorry you read into that, but you did. "Say goodbye to Eleanor for me?"

But of course this is how it had to end. This is how it would always end, and I'm an idiot for thinking otherwise. I nod. "Will do." I hope that she hears the casualness in my voice.

"Have fun tonight," she shouts in my ear. "Elie's on fire."

I stand there for the longest time—long after the sound of her heels get swallowed up in the music. I stare down into the street without seeing a damn thing. I don't even see the pretty hostess come approach until her reflection waves at me.

"Sir, did you want to put an order of something in?" The question is her polite way of saying, Free time's up, order now or leave.

"Sure. Bring me a bottle of Jameson."

"Oh...kay." She can't tell if I'm serious or not. I don't help her out.

Three stories below, Manhattan emerges from the club, her dress shimmering in the street light and the electric glow that baths the city. The sidewalk is crowded, already rowdy, already swaying and alive, smoking cigarettes, checking phones, hanging off one another as they stumble to the next venue.

Manhattan's a shining angel, wreathed in gold and silver, walking with purpose. I trace her destination—her cab, her ride, her Uber. There, leaning against a glossy black BMW, I see him. Joshua. Heather's husband.

Even from where I stand, I can see how amused he looks—arms crossed, arrogant smile. When she's close, he holds out a hand, index finger up, and wags it back and forth at her. Naughty, naughty.

Manhattan takes his finger and kisses it.

I step back, away from the window like it's betrayed me. I look away, start to walk away, too, before I stop and turn. I can just see them, just the tops of their heads. They're close, intimate. He whispers something to her and she turns, looking back at the club—back up in my direction.

I saw you, he whispers. Or maybe that's the booze and the kiss and the too-much-of-everything that I'm feeling. But Joshua looks up, too, and I retreat one final step and completely out of their view.

Their casual intimacy is so natural, an effortless affection that comes with years of marriage. She knew he was here. She knew when she came up to me, when she kissed me in front of the window like it was a fucking stage.

It's enough to kill that stupid, romantic notion that I was flirting with. This is the way it was always going to end, anyway.

Turning on my heel, I head back for the spiral stairs, for Elie and Ron and a more familiar form of insanity.

“Forget about the Jameson,” I tell the hostess and hand her a twenty. “For your inconvenience.”

Control

The lounge's transformation is now complete. The second story is now a dance floor. Anyone not dancing is either at the bar or pushed up against the walls. Ron is one of the guys pushed up against the wall, nursing a drink as he looks into the crowd of dancers. New venue, same game.

Elie's dancing with a new guy with Asian features. He's younger than her, fit and tall and gym-hewn. I cut through the crowd, my jaw set and my chest puffed forward, looking for a fight. I carry a shadow on my shoulders.

Eleanor seems surprised to see me. "What—" she begins.

I cut her off. "Who's your friend?"

The Asian man turns to me. "What's it to you?" he asks with a swagger.

"I'm her husband." I don't know why I say it. It just comes out, shoved by the night's stormy emotion. "How do you like my wife's ass?"

The swagger is gone. He goes pale, snatching his hand away from Eleanor's lower hip. He takes in my broad shoulders and the thickness of my neck in one quick sweep. "Oh, shit, man, I'm sorry. I didn't—"

"Asked you a question." I stare him down. "Did you like my wife's ass?"

Elie, beside him, looks quietly amused.

"It's not... I wasn't... I didn't—"

Elie insinuates herself into the conversation, pressing up against her dance friend as he tries to edge away. “Judging by the way he was grabbing it, I’d say he liked it.”

“You can help me out, then,” I say. “I’ve been wondering something all night.”

“Yes?” He looks as meek as a bunny rabbit.

“Is she wearing panties?”

He bolts, not bothering to say a thing. Eleanor breaks out into laughter, and it helps diffuse my charged state.

“I think he wet himself,” she laughs. “Poor guy.”

“Hope he was good foreplay,” I say. “Because I’m past that.”

“I’ll tell Ron to get the car,” she says as Elie steps close and places a hand on my chest. She looks up at me, the lids of her eyes heavy with lust.

“I can’t wait that long,” I say.

I glance toward the back. Towards the bathrooms. She’s sees me looking and smiles. Yes, she says with that look. Hell yes.

“Come on.” With my hand firmly on the small of her back, I lead her towards the back of the club, where the kitchens and bathrooms are.

She’s still wearing the same dress she wore for the board meeting—a sleeveless, black wrap-dress that looked professional when she wore it with a blazer, and looks sexier now that the blazer is gone.

I can see her shape move beneath the thin material, all soft curves and womanly contours, and find that I really am wondering if she’s wearing panties beneath or not.

The hall to the bathroom is narrow, the music more subdued back here, a row of individual bathrooms marked with a “WC” to keep with the loungey theme. No one is waiting outside, and we find the third one unoccupied.

It's like the owners designed these bathrooms for hooking up. They are clean, the lighting low and intimate. Dark, slate tiles cross the floor and halfway up the walls, and the sink is a large, porcelain basin that sits atop a light wood table.

Elie doesn't even turn around. As soon as she sees me looking at her in the mirror over the sink, she unties her dress and lets it fall open. Beneath, she wears a black, satin bra...and nothing else.

"Very naughty," I say, staring at her bare gash, already wet. I lock the door behind me and step forward. "That your husband's idea?"

My belt clinks as I unbuckle it. Her attention drifts there, between my legs, and I fish out my cock. Smiling, she bends over the sink, bracing her hands on the ceramic basin.

"No," she says. "Not his idea."

The glossy knob of her butt plug teases me. Later, I tell myself as I run my thumb across the top. She groans, our eyes locking in the reflection as I place my cock against her pussy. With a sharp thrust, I slide into her very wet opening.

"Uh, fuck me!"

I push the plug deeper into her, watching her eyelids sag. "Did he discover this?"

"No."

"Do you wish that he had?"

"No," she says again, but this time, my question draws a spark, a shudder.

"You like being a slut, don't you?"

"Mmm... you like... fucking sluts."

I wonder how hard it would have been for that guy to talk her into a bathroom. Would it have happened if I had dragged Manhattan into a curtained booth...

But no, that was never going to happen, and the push-and-pull of the memory sends red and black flaring through me all over again. I twist the butt plug inside of her. Her breath catches. "Just remember whose slut you are."

"Yours."

But not just mine. Ultimately, she's Ron's slut. All this is for him, just as everything Manhattan does if for Joshua. I'm a game to be played along another couple's journey. But fuck it. Enough of the self-wallowing. There's plenty of upside to being a game.

"I bet you thought about dragging that last guy into here, didn't you?" I don't relent, pressing on the sex toy until her whole back bows before me. My cock drives right against her g-spot, and I know she can't take much more.

But she also needs to answer me.

"Tell me, Elie. Did you want to fuck him in a bathroom stall?"

"Yes," she cries in a rush. "I... Uh! I wanted to... fuck... himmm."

I pump her hard, my balls slapping against her smooth mound. I fuck her the way I imagine the stranger would, hard and swift and free from the entanglements that come with knowing someone. I used to do that all the time. Used to fuck women and not look back. Not think of them again.

Now, though, as I jam Elie against the bathroom sink, pressing her clit against the rim of the basin as I reach up and grab her hair, it's that entanglement that triggers me. It's the thought of that Asian man defiling her, of him pulling her hair as he comes inside of her, that finally gets me off.

I stifle the roar I want to release. We're in public. There may be a line outside that door. It doesn't stop me from cranking down on her hair as I explode inside her. Elie does the screaming.

In the aftermath, the world is still mute, it's hard to find my breath. I do. I push back and meet her eyes in the mirror. Her bangs cling to her high forehead, sweaty and tangled. "So that's what reclaiming is like, huh?"

She smiles at me. "You did tell him that you were my husband."

The real reclaiming would happen later, I know, in the early hours when I've gone and she's finally alone with her husband. That is not for me.

Unless I make it.

"We're going to try something a little different tonight," I say.

Elie, to her credit, is always game. "Go on."

"We're going to leave now, and Ron is going to reclaim you." I tap on her squat sex toy, still lodged between her plump cheeks. "Only tonight, I'm going to be right there with you." I press harder, prompted a hiss of pleasure from her. "Right here."

Her grin is positively evil. She knows what this will do to her husband, and loves it. For the first time, I wonder what I've awoken.

Reclaimed

While the Heller residence isn't the sprawling mansion that the others are in their affluent neighborhood, they do have a carriage house that they've renovated for guests. Elie leads me back there, her heels clicking along the lit, flagstone path as insects buzz in the hazy, summer night. Ron drifts behind us like a cross between a bodyguard and a stray dog.

I catch a glimpse of their property, wooded and expansive, before she stops before the guest home. The wealth on display is subtle, but this couple is also one of the few donors keeping us afloat.

"Ron and I just renovated the old carriage house," she explains as we stop before a two story house through the back. Uplighting gives it all a theme park feeling that bolsters the surreal feeling of this whole damn night.

She opens the door, revealing the "carriage" house, with a footprint twice that of my condo in the city. The ground floor is furnished with brown leather couches and tables constructed of reclaimed wood. A small kitchen sits dark off to one side, and an exposed staircase climbs to a second story loft, where the bedroom must be.

Ron enters, softly shutting and locking the door behind him as I pull Elie in for a deep kiss. "Did you build yourself a sex den?" I ask her.

I can practically see her absorb the idea of having a sex den. She looks around, seeing the new potential of what was definitely a space built for guests. "You two are very naughty."

Naughty, naughty. Joshua's wagging finger. Manhattan's playful response. The images burst through me, reminding me of my place here, and how I intend to push those boundaries.

I untie her wrap dress and pull it open, letting him catch a glimpse of her nudity. I release her long enough for her to shrug out of the dress and unclasp the bra. That, too, hits the floor, leaving her naked but for her heels, her back to her husband.

"Tell me, Ron, did you put it in her?" I pull on her cheek, revealing the toy.

His breath catches. His eyes go wide. He didn't even know about it.

"I take that as a no."

Elie says, "Fix our guest some Pappy Van Winkle, dear. Paul's a bourbon guy, and I think today's cause for celebration, yes?"

"Yes, dear."

Ron does as he's told. In normal life, he's a successful man, surrounded by those who look up to him, who follow him. Here, in his own home, he's submissive to me and his wife.

"This was Ron's workshop once," she says. "Wasn't it, dear?"

I look around at the open space. A brass chandelier hangs from the center of the room that stretches two stories up. That chandelier alone probably cost as much as half a year's mortgage on my condo. There is nothing "workshop" left.

Ron hands us a glass of bourbon, looking sheepish.

"To some fun times," Eleanor says, tossing the bourbon back without waiting for us. She drinks it down in one go, tosses it at Ron, and turns for the stairs. "Let me show you the shower upstairs. You're going to love it."

"I'll be right up," I say. "Need to talk to your husband for a second."

She pouts, her lower lip puffy and full, as if designed to pout. The more I get to know her, the more I see the spoiled child beneath her shy and prim facade. For a moment, I wonder if she'll protest, but all I need to do is raise my brows and she remembers herself.

"Yes, sir."

"Don't take the plug out. I'll be there soon."

I almost follow. It's tempting. But I do have some words for Ron, one of which is about the shift I'm seeing.

At the top of the stairs, still in earshot, Elie says, "Alexa, play the sex mix." I can just see her smile in profile before she disappears from view.

The digital assistant echoes back, "Playing the sex mix from Spotify radio," and a resonate, bass-filled song fills the entire space of the guest house.

"It's all wired up," Ron explains. That's not what I'm wondering.

"How many men has she brought back here?"

The question catches him off-guard. He pauses where he stands before the liquor cabinet. "I'm not—"

"She has a sex mix all queued up, and when I told her we were coming back to your place, she didn't flinch."

He reaches for a bottle of bourbon along the top shelf, still in its box. "I'm more of a Scotch guy, but I understand that this is pretty rare stuff," he says. "Limited reserve. There are only a handful of these in the world." He tears the seal and removes the bottle from its tube like it's just another Christmas present beneath an overflowing tree. "The truth is, she made that mix for you."

"But?"

"But nothing. She flirted with the contractor, but mostly just to tease me. Back then, when we were renovating, I still never dreamed she'd do...

she'd be... this confident, you know?"

"Yeah, she's really come out of her shell." I may be the first guy to listen to her "sex mix," but I won't be the only one. Not for much longer.

I take a sip of the bourbon, surprised at how smooth it is. I may be a "bourbon guy," but in the it-gets-you-drunk-faster kind of way rather than the connoisseur one. This tastes as rich and opulent as the price tag. It's a taste of how the other side lives.

"I'm going to break things off with Eleanor."

"What? Why?"

"I think you know."

He nods. He does, and deep down, he knew that this conversation was coming.

"You tell her yet?"

"Not yet. Figure we could have one last hurrah."

"She's not going to be happy."

"She'll understand. Besides, I think she's just about outgrown me."

We're getting to the end of our expensive liquor. Ron says, "Thanks for helping us. Before you came along, my life was defined by doing the exact right thing. The proper thing. Even Eleanor fit that mold."

It's always the quiet ones.

"Okay then." I drain the bourbon. "Let's do some very improper things with your wife."

“That’s it, Ron, eat that pussy. Get it nice and ready for me.”

I pace the upstairs loft, where a California King dominates the space. Tall, carved wood bed posts adorn the corners and pillows and throws of iridescent green satin mark the headboard. In the center of it, buried in that mound of pillows, lies Elie, her legs spread wide, with Ron on his knees and his head buried between her legs. She lifts a leg over his back, moaning in appreciation. Apparently the man is pretty good at what he’s doing. I’m not surprised.

I crawl in beside her, kissing her neck, stroking her nipples. She smells fresh from the shower, her hair still wet. “Is this how he greets you when you come home from my place?”

“Ngh—yes!” Her tongue snakes out, touching her upper limit. “It’s...so...good.”

I grab her tits, bending down to take those fat, hard nipples between my teeth. I bite, giving her pain as her husband grants her pleasure.

“And how about the other men you bring back here.” I feel her stiffen, start to rise up. I spread my fingers out along her upper chest, holding her in place, and stare down at her. “Does Ron prepare you for them, too?”

“No.” She gasps, the word denial-as-confirmation tumbling out.

“Ron, you’re slacking on your duties.” I don’t bother looking at him. I keep my focus on Elie. It’s her reaction that I care about. “Take out the plug.”

I know the moment he obeys. I see it in the way her jaw goes slack and her eyelids flutter. The power I feel over this couple is more intoxicating than the whiskey. I want to flex it in a way that I’ve never done before. “How’s she look, Ron? Gaping?”

“Yes.”

“Think she’s ready for it?”

“So ready,” he says, and I see the agreement in Elie’s face.

But I’m not ready to give them what they want so quickly. “I think she needs a little more prep. After all, Ron. She hasn’t come.”

I smile down at her, watching her lips part and as she fills her lungs. I sit back, finally looking down at Ron, who’s back to licking her pussy.

“I think that she’s wet enough there, Ron.”

He knows what I want him to do. He hesitates, glancing up at Elie to see how to proceed.

“Don’t look at her. Look at her ass, Ron. Look at how wide it is. Think about how much wider I’m about to make it.”

I get off the bed. She has a liquor cabinet up here, and there on the lowest shelf is a bottle of Jameson Irish Whiskey, unopened, more of a mixer to be used with other beverages than to be had straight.

The bottle leads my mind to Manhattan before I can stop it. She’s with her husband right now, probably fucking. Probably getting off on her close call with me. I can practically taste the jealousy that Joshua must feel, must be taking out on his wife. I know that feeling because I’m feeling it, too.

It’s satisfying to tear through the paper seal of the whiskey bottle. I take a swig of it, straight from the bottle, and feel the fire of it spread through my chest. It’s fine. All of this is going to be fine.

On the bed, Ron pushes Elie’s thighs up and spreads her cheeks. She watches him, her chin pinned to her chest, as he dips in and takes his first, tentative lick along the rim of her anus.

Her body ripples with the new and exciting sensation, unfamiliar pleasure rolling like waves along her pale and supple skin. I watch her, savoring her sweet beauty for what could be the last time—the way her lips part, the dusting of freckles across her cheeks and down along her shoulders. The way her dark brows pinch as she deals with the thrill of her husband's face pressed between her cheeks.

“Oh...ohmygod!”

That accent, refined and dirty all at once, as her orgasm rises and rises. She lays a heel on Ron's back, toes pointed like a ballerina's. She slides her hands down to her pussy, pushing two fingers into her as she touches her clit with her other hand. Her fat, diamond ring catches the light as her hands blur.

I did this. I made this couple who they are now—the cuckold and the hotwife. Pride swells through me, as strong and real as I felt earlier, at the close of the Dawning board meeting. Life is good. Full of possibility. My time with this couple may be coming to a close, but there are so many more out there, ready for me to touch and change and awaken.

Elie goes off, loud and violent as a thunderstorm. She rolls her shoulders back and shoves her tits to the ceiling, where a fan turns lazily, round and round and round.

“My turn,” I say. Foreplay is over. Time for the finale.

Ron moves aside as I take his spot between her thighs. I grab her leg, tugging it against my chest. Her whole body shifts closer. I lay my cock across her well-lubricated slit, savoring the delicate smoothness of her mound as it slides along the most sensitive part of my dick.

Ron holds his breath, staring where my cock meets his wife's pussy. For him, this is what it's all about, this is the moment of transgression that he's come for, that will live in his mind for the rest of his life.

I give him the show. Pulling back, I tilt her hips forward as I sink the head of my cock into her.

“She’s nice and wet. You did well, Ron.” I push into her a little more, her silky smooth parts squeezing around me. “Very well.”

“You see, baby?” Elie sighs. “You see how much he stretches me out? He feels so enormous.”

I take my time entering her, letting her feel every vein, every ridge, every throb of beating blood. She overdoes it with the sighing and the moaning, but her husband eats it up.

Ron takes a spot near her head, stroking her damp hair as he watches me fuck her. Feeling his presence, she turns to find his cock inches from her face. Before taking him in, though, she looks to me for permission.

I smile at her submission and nod. “Go ahead, you can suck his cock.”

“Thank you.” There’s no sarcasm or irony. The powerful woman at the head of the boardroom table enjoys this, wants this—needs this. I see it in the way she turns her head and enthusiastically swallows Ron to the root.

We shift into a better position—“On your hands and knees. Like with Katya”—with me behind her and her face buried in Ron’s lap. I reach forward, grabbing her hair like reins, guiding her blow job. The room fills with my slapping thrusts and the cack, cack, cack of her messy fellatio. We race, faster and faster. My fist tightens in her hair. A low moan builds between us. It starts with Elie, leaps to Ron, then me—heat lightning in the clouds.

Ron is lost in his pleasure, riding an edge he’s probably all too used to. This cuck likes it, gets off on sustaining that long and blissful moment before it all tumbles into the dark. The closer, the more dangerous, the more uncomfortable, the better.

Me? I’m the edge. I’m the darkness. And tonight, I’m the man who shoves these two over it.

Ron comes, filling his wife’s mouth with all that pent up energy. I watch him go off, his brow pinched, his face twisted and pained. His eyes, though, they stare at her butt, at my hips as they slap-slap-slap on her heart shaped ass, memorializing the moment. He knows this may be it. He knows that after tonight, I'll just be a memory for these two—their devilish origin story.

Might as well go out with fireworks.

I slide my fingers down Elie's sweat-slicked back, to her ass, to her backdoor that's only just beginning to recover from a full day of her butt plug. I push my thumb home. She gags on Ron's cock and come.

"We're not quite done." I look at Ron, who's looking feverish. His thinning hair is a mess, damp and jutting all over the place. His cheeks and chest are clammy. "You're not done, are you?"

I withdraw, my cock still thick where Ron is small and getting smaller. I know his mind. I know all the comparisons he's making and what that's doing to his fucked up psyche.

"Because I'm not done," I say. "You, Elie?"

"No," she says in that sexy, British way, too many syllables packed into the two letters.

I drag the tip of my cock along the smooth bridge between her pussy and ass. She moans preemptively, knowing what comes next.

"Your wife loves having things shoved in her ass." I stare at Ron, who looks like he's forgotten to breathe. "Don't you, Eleanor."

Elie, with her head resting in her husband's lap, turns to look up at him. "I love it, honey. Does that make me a slut?"

Emotion ripples across his face—lust and jealousy and anger and humiliation tumbling over one another, vying for control. Control, however, is the last thing that he has.

I rub her asshole with my cockhead. She squirms. "You want to watch me sodomize your wife?" I ask Ron.

The man nods woodenly, eyes fixated where my cock flirts with his wife's anus.

“You want to fuck her while I do that?”

He glances at me, licking his lips, surprised. He does. He wants that. Elie does, too. It frightens her, but she's ready, like a woman who's just been told to bungee jump.

I push forward, easing the tip of my cock past her tight sphincter. She seizes, gritting her teeth and moaning in that it-hurts-so-good way. We've done this before. Multiple times. She loves it in the butt and she knows what to do to relax. But this is different. This will be so much more.

Keeping my cock in her ass, I pull her up to me, shifting her until she's on top, her legs spread wide as she faces her husband. I don't even need to imagine how lewd this must look. An enormous mirror hangs over the bed, framing the action. Her big tits hang from her slim body, shiny with perspiration. Her stomach is flat, tight and tense where she holds it all in as she spreads her thighs. It's perfect, granting me an unobstructed view of my shaft lodged ball-deep in her ass, her pretty, shaved slit still engorged, still open from my earlier fucking.

“Tell him what you want, Elie.”

“I want him to fuck me.” Her speech is laden with exertion. “I want to feel the both of you inside of me.”

“Think you can do that, Ron?” The role of bull comes so naturally. The power just channels through me, pumping up my cock until it nearly splits my grunting, English Rose. “Think you can get hard enough to DP this whore?”

Ron may be a sub, he may be a cuck, but he's also a man who doesn't back down from a challenge. He wouldn't be as successful as he was, or married to a woman like Eleanor. My words challenge and arose as surely as a hand on his cock.

Elie fingers her snatch as she stares at her husband, rubbing her digits in slow circles around her clit.

“You have any dildos up here?” I ask her. “Because if he’s not up for it—”

“No.” Ron’s voice cracks a little, like he’s a man still chasing away sleep. He rises onto his knees, his cock once again rising. “No, I am.”

“Attaboy,” I say. In the mirror, I catch Elie’s smile of approval before Ron is there, among us, fisting his cock. “I know you’ve never done this, Ron, but how about you, Elie?”

“So you’ve thought about it.”

“Oh, yes.”

“See there, Ron? See what a naughty fucking wife you married?”

He licks his lips. “I didn’t know that.”

“And I bet she did it long before she ever met me, didn’t you?”

“Yes.”

“You ready to experience it for real?”

Elie lifts her slippery fingers from her pussy and feeds them into Ron’s mouth. He slurps on them obediently, moving forward, closer. I feel his weight on the bed between my legs. Elie stiffens even more, but doesn’t shy away. She pulls him into her, guiding his cock to her pussy, pumping it in her hand and against her clit.

“Do it, Elie,” I hiss in her ear.

I can’t see the penetration, but I can certainly feel it. “Ah!” she barks, shoving her weight against me as her husband enters. “Oh my—” She gasps. All clipped breathing. “Oh my—” I snake my hand up around her neck, squeezing just enough that she can feel it. “Oh my God!”

“That’s it, Ron. Fuck her. Reclaim her.” I hold her hips as Ron gets used to the awkward setup. “You know how naughty she was tonight, don’t you?”

I think of Manhattan when I shouldn’t. She kissed another man tonight—

“She fucked me in the bathroom, right up against the sink.”

I see that coy smile and those blue eyes that say, I see your game...

“And if not me, she would have fucked another guy.”

But it’s not the Asian guy she was dancing with that comes to mind. It’s Mason Coles and his ‘I’ll bet she’s worth it’ comment. It’s Mason Coles and his dark chocolate skin against Heather Kingsley-Fletcher’s golden blond hair and smooth, unblemished skin.

My hips are moving now, too, as I orchestrate this wild fuck. I need to get back on track. Need to focus on Eleanor and Ronald Heller and their dirty, secret life. I guide the tempo, faster, more upbeat, and Ron follows.

“Fuck. Fuck!”

Elie says it, but we’re all feeling the same way. It’s too much. Too intense. Sweet torture that we want more and more and more. Even me. Even the bull.

Elie grabs Ron’s head and gives him a searing kiss. The man is lost in her—not just now, not just in this moment, but forever and always.

These two will be fine. My work here is done. Time to move on to the next couple. The next hotwife ready to come out of her shell. The next closeted cuckold.

Elie breaks the kiss as she comes, driving her hips up to meet her husband's thrusts. I rise with her, grinding her hips against Ron's. He doesn't relent, either, kissing her neck and the back of her jaw, touching her in all the secret places that only a husband knows about.

"Come. Come, Ronny," she whines. In the mirror over the bed, I can see her eyes shut tight and her nails leaving red marks along his back. I can see Ron's pale ass, thrusting, thrusting, thrusting. "I need it. I need your come!"

"Yes. Oh, yes," he grunts.

"Yes!" Her nails draw blood. Ron hisses, slamming forward. Their mouths meet again, sloppy and wet and raw, inches away.

I drop both arms behind me, flexing everything I have to bridge up into them. I lift them both, burying myself to the hilt into her ass. She tears her mouth away from Ron's, throws her head back, and screams.

I push and I push until my arms and abs and thighs burn. I push my way into this moment, into their moment, if only fleetingly.

I'm fine with that. Tonight it's the Hellers. Tomorrow, it will be someone else, another couple looking for something new to spice up their lives. Looking for a bull. Looking for me.

"Oh, my—" Elie cries out.

I shove one last time, silencing her. Squeezing, I stare at Ron and Elie and our three sweaty bodies reflected back at me above the bed in a room designed for sex.

"Come, Paul! Please. Please!"

At last, I obey.

Epilogue

Heather

“Oh, yes. Honey... ah—yes!”

The dresser I’m perched on strikes the wall with each thrust, and I spread my legs wider, pressing a heel into his lower back. I can feel his buttocks clench, again and again. He feels so good. So animalistic. Makes me want to claw his back, so I do.

“Fuck, Heather,” Joshua growls. He grabs my hand and pins it to the wall above my head.

“Yes, keep doing that,” I purr. “Keep fucking Heather.”

Until this moment, the reclamation sex has always been a game. I go out and flirt. Joshua gets jealous. We leave and fuck and laugh it off. Tonight is different. Joshua is more physical than ever, a man possessed. He drives against me with a force that rattles the dresser I sit on.

It’s different for me, too. Tonight, I feel guilt—real, honest, acidic guilt like I haven’t felt in years. Not since the gala and the boathouse and the fireworks. It courses through me like a powerful narcotic, so bad and yet so good.

Joshua’s fingers tighten in mine. He fucks me harder, his face bright and red, his grunts seething out through his clenched teeth.

“You’re thinking about him,” he hisses.

Him. Paul Sharpe. The man I kissed tonight. The man who pushed his tongue into my mouth and made my toes curl in my heels.

“Yes,” I admit, and it’s such a rush. I squeeze my husband’s cock harder, dig my heel into his back deeper. “Yes!”

He swells inside of me, thrusting with renewed vigor, striking deep and hard and swift.

“Such a naughty slut,” he grunts.

The slur sizzles through me. I was once a slut, and I’ve done some very naughty things with a great number of guys. For years, Joshua has been hellbent on making me one again. For years, I’ve resisted. I’m different. I’m not her anymore.

“I can’t wait to see him Monday.” It’s like whipping a horse. His breath catches. “Then we’ll find out just how big a slut I can be.”

I tease. Just as I always tease. But tonight is different. Tonight, I wonder what it would be like to do it. To take Joshua up on his fantasy. To not just kiss another man, but to suck his cock until I gag on his come. To feel a brand new dick thrust deep inside of me.

Joshua dominates me, pinning me hard to the wall, to the dresser, his hips grinding into me hard enough that I feel the edge on the backs of my thighs. I struggle against his embrace and find that I can’t break free, that I really am stuck there with my arms above my head. It’s thrilling.

“That gets you so hard, doesn’t it, baby?”

“Uh!”

“Felt like he had a big cock.”

“Such a cockwhore.”

“Wonder if I’ll be able to get all of it down my throat.”

“Fuck!” He throws his hips into me hard. I’m going to feel this in the morning, but keep squeezing my heels into him more.

“Harder, Josh! Show me what I can’t get from anyone else.”

“That’s right... you slut... that’s... fucking... right!”

I sense it coming a moment before it does. His breath catches. His body tenses. And then the heat is there, washing through me like a tidal wave. I join him, get caught up with the fantasy, with the game, with the image of Paul doing this to me as I close my eyes and take another man’s molten excitement.

Joshua—not Paul—cups my chin, holding my jaw steady as his mouth finds mine, and the kiss comes messy and possessive, his tongue dominant. I can’t help but compare. I can’t help but think of Paul’s lips on mine, how the kiss seemed to go on forever, yet how it ended too soon.

I let it go, because that’s a feeling I can’t hold onto—one I shouldn’t even be having.

“You should do it,” he says.

And there it is, the conversation we always have after he “reclaims” me. He wants more, and I don’t want to give more. I give him my automatic answer. “You know I shouldn’t—”

“You want him.”

My gut tightens as his cock leaves me. At first, I think he’s angry. He gets like that sometimes, when the jealousy and his paranoia overwhelm him. But not this time. This time, it’s like he thinks that he can bend me to his will if he just stares at me long enough.

“Admit it. You’re tempted.”

Maybe it works. Maybe Paul’s recklessness rubbed off on me. I answer him honestly. “Maybe.”

He licks his lips swiftly. “So what’s stopping you?”

I hold up my ring. He takes my hand and kisses the diamond. “That’ll still be there, no matter what.”

“He’s a client.”

“Not for much longer.” He knows that I’m ending things after GPC. He knows all about Paul and Eleanor and the whole mess that asshole’s gotten us into.

“You like assholes.” Joshua grins. “You married me.”

I touch his chest, feeling his heart racing just beneath the surface. Racing because he’s sensing possibility, and I haven’t completely shut it down. I say, “I married you because of your body.”

I do love it. I love the sparse gray hairs and his lean muscles. I love the thickness of his cyclist’s legs. I love the slight widow’s peak, where his thick, salt-and-pepper hair sweeps back—slightly disheveled now from all the sex. But most of all, I love how he stares at me—like he owns me, like he possesses me.

“You really would be okay if I fucked another man?” The question is somewhere between rhetorical and inquisitive. I want to see his reaction. I want to understand his state-of-mind. Joshua is a jealous man—part of the attraction. I sense it now in his overly measured breathing and how he doesn’t blink as he stares down at me.

But he wants it, too. Now more than ever. His cock starts to pump back to life, an impressive feat for a 45-year-old who’s just had an orgasm.

“You know I want you to.”

I reach out, encircling him with my fingers. I like his size—larger than most, but not so big that it hurts. How does Paul compare? Why do I keep wondering that?

“I can’t do it with him,” I say, drifting down to my knees. His protest falters. I know how much he likes this view, my submission. I should hate it, being the worldly woman I am, but I don’t. With Joshua, I don’t need to be the girl I was raised to be. In the privacy of our home, I can indulge in my own submissive fantasies. “Not while he’s a client.”

I stroke him with both hands, cupping his balls—balls that I shaved for him just last night. “That what you want to hear?”

“I want to hear you confess your sins to me. I want to hear how you went home with him. How you fucked him. How you screamed like a slut on his cock.”

Even knowing that this is where the fantasy always leads, the visual scrambles me. I take him into my mouth, tasting our come as I slide his crown along the inside of my cheek. Swirling his glans with my tongue, I pull off with a pop.

The urgency is back. The addict moments away from getting his fix. He wants to shut his eyes and imagine me doing this to Paul. So I give it to him. I suck him all the way in, all the way into the back of my throat. And like Joshua, I think of Paul as I do it. I fantasize that it’s my asshole client I’m blowing. That it’s that cocky braggart lacing his fingers into my damp, blond locks.

“Think about him, Heather. Think of him doing this to you.” He shoves his cock deep into my throat, gagging me. “I know you like him. You want him.”

I do. I want this. I wanted it tonight. Joshua sees it. Senses it. The guilt just as potent an aphrodisiac to him as it is to me. It lights his short fuse. He pulls back just enough to let me breathe before filling my mouth with come.

I take it, choke it back and swallow it like the good little slut he wants me to be.

It was just a kiss, I tell myself as I crawl into bed and the exhaustion and booze of the night finally catch up to me. Just a silly, little kiss. I've done so much more, with so many more. A kiss sounds so quaint, so innocent. No one's in grade school anymore.

But it's not, and I realize that only as I fall into the liminal space between wakefulness and dreams. It's not just a kiss at all. It's the start of things. The end of the beginning. The beginning of something else.

What that is? I'm asleep before I can decide.

Acknowledgments

This one's been in the works for so long, there's no way I can thank all the people that I need to thank, so let me hit the highlights.

First, thanks to Kirsten McCurran, who first came up with the title, "Bull's Eye," and then so graciously allowed me to use it for this series.

Thanks to Ben Boswell and Max Sebastian, as always, for reading older drafts and helping me shape the pacing and narrative of not just the series. Thanks for KT Morrison, who inspired the structure of this series (and is just inspirational in general!). Thanks to Arnica Butler, another amazing author, for making up the fake social networking/dating app "DeBauch", which is featured prominently in this series.

Thanks to my beta readers, as always, in particular Javi, who helped me work through a sticky point in book 4.

Thanks to my wife, not only for giving me the space to write and publish these books, but also for taking me to romantic comedies at a young and impressionable age, which indirectly inspired so much of this series.

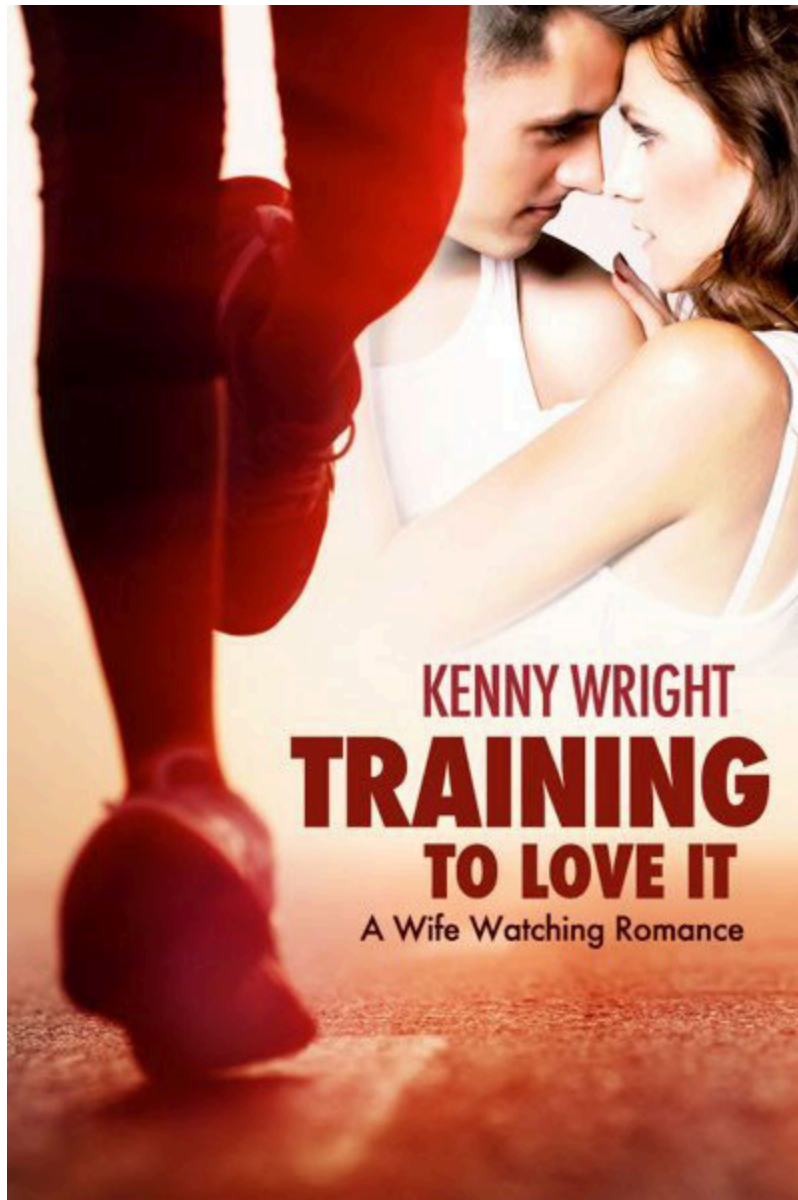

And thanks to you, reader, for not only paid to read, but took the time to read, and if there's one thing I've learned over the years, time can be a much scarcer resource than money.

Cheers!
