ONE

"I NEED A FAVOR, FI," Josh said. He darted around the kitchen, gathering things so he could get out the door to work.

"Sure, what do you need?" Fiona responded, scooping up the toast the instant it popped out of the toaster. She knifed fresh butter from the tub and spread it onto the golden-brown toast and then put the small plate on the counter for her husband.

"Well, it's not really for me. It's for Trudy. You know Sam's home from school now. Apparently his first semester didn't go so great and Trudy's worried about him. She said he didn't make any new friends up there and seems more withdrawn than he is usually."

"He has friends," Fiona insisted.

"Yeah, but you know how they are."

"They always seemed nice to me. Your aunt is too uptight. You are too, sometimes. Not everyone has to be a jock or the big man on campus to be happy."

"Hey, my lacrosse buddies from college are still some of my best friends."

"I know," she replied with a huff. Fiona was not a huge fan of her husband's friends. Josh was a thoughtful, caring man deep down—especially when it was just the two of them. He became a different man when he got around those guys, ones Fiona wasn't always thrilled with.

"Anyway, this isn't about me. It's about Sam. Trudy wants me to spend some time with Sam this summer, try to bring him out of his shell. I would if I could. You know I love the kid. But I'm going to be flying back and forth to Pittsburgh all summer opening the new office and I don't see how I'll have the time. So..."

"So, you want me to hang out with your cousin for you," Fiona stated. It was typical Josh, passing off the things he didn't want to do on to his wife.

"You don't have to do much, Fi. Just go over there and visit him or have him over here. It could be a help to you, too. With Alex off to camp for the next couple weeks you're going to have a lot of time on your hands, and you know how you get."

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"It's just you don't know how to relax, Fi. If you're not doing something, you're thinking about doing something. That's not a criticism, but you should just use this time to relax. Take Sam to a museum or something. Just get out and enjoy yourself rather than repaint the bathroom and spend all your time working in the backyard."

"But the bathroom needs to be painted," she protested.

Fiona caught his look and conceded he was right. It had been the same ever since she was little. She couldn't sit still for more than a few minutes at a time. Fiona had always been driven and was only more so since she became a mother. She always needed some new project, some goal, another mountain to climb, or she felt she was getting complacent and beat herself up over it. Fiona couldn't remember the last time she just relaxed in the tub with a book or hiked up to the lake to just hang out. Maybe she and Sam needed each other. He needed her to get him out of the house and off his computer, and she needed him to get her to slow down and relax.

"Okay, I'll spend some time with Sam. It's not really an imposition anyway. He's a sweet kid. I like him."

Josh chuckled. "I was more thinking about Trudy."

"I don't need to hang out over there. He can come over here."

Josh's Aunt Trudy drove Fiona insane. She meant well, but Trudy was always on, always talking. If she wasn't going on about all the irons she always had in the fire, she was trying to plan your life. Fiona tolerated Trudy because Josh and his aunt were incredibly close—she was like a second mother to him—but she took Trudy best in small doses. Fiona hated the way Trudy tried to run their lives.

"Thanks, Fi. I really appreciate this. I really would do it myself if I could. I think Sam needs some strong male guidance. He's so..."

“Hey, don’t pick on Sam. He’s so smart and kind. He’s funny. He’s just a little shy and needs more confidence, that’s all.”

“You mean he’s a nerd,” Josh said, snorting.

“Stop it, Josh. We’ll be lucky if Alex grows up to be like Sam.”

“Please don’t say that. I have big plans for our boy that involve getting him out on the lacrosse field, not sitting in a dim basement with a bunch of weirdos.”

Fiona didn’t want to disappoint him, but their son was hardly a jock. Alex was artsy and creative, and he loved the outdoors—just like his mom.

“There you go again judging people. Sam’s friends are fine. They’re very nice to me.”

“That’s because you’re hot. You’re probably the closest they get to a living, breathing girl.”

“That’s enough. I swear, Josh Stirling, sometimes I wonder what I see in you. This side of you isn’t very attractive.” Fiona’s smile quirked to the right, showing she wasn’t entirely serious. Josh always claimed he found her crooked smile adorable—except for when it preceded some cutting remark.

Josh captured her with an arm around the waist and pulled her in tight. Even through his shirt and tie, she could feel how solid her husband’s chest was. No matter how busy he got, Josh always found time to hit the gym. The masculine, citrusy smell of his aftershave delighted her senses and gave flight to naughty thoughts.

“We both know exactly what you see in me, babe. You needed a man. I met some of those geeks and stoners you dated before me. They were just wasting your time until I came along to rescue you.”

“You rescued me?”

“From a life of lameness and bad sex. They didn’t see what you needed, but I did.”

Josh grabbed her butt and gave it a tight squeeze. He sucked on the side of her neck, and she gasped, melting into him.

“Don’t leave a mark, hon,” she breathed, closing her eyes.

“I should. Maybe it’ll inspire Sam if he sees it.”

Fiona hated to admit it, but Josh did know what she needed. He was the complete opposite of every guy she’d been with before him, but she felt something primal deep inside the moment they met. She wouldn’t have expected it, but his cocksure confidence turned her on and challenged her.

Even now, after more than fifteen years together, she still had that same reaction to him. The only issue was that she rarely got to do anything about it. Fiona's mind filled with fantasies of a quickie right there in the kitchen, but Alex was usually right upstairs and could come down any minute, and Josh had to get to work. There always seemed to be a reason they couldn't find time alone together. She hoped they'd be able to use their son's time away at camp to reconnect, but then Josh was put in charge of launching the Pittsburgh office. Fiona wanted to complain about the time it took away from their family, but it was a huge opportunity.

Josh released her, and said, "Shit, I got to get moving. Taylor wants all hands on deck right at nine."

Before he could withdraw completely, Fiona pressed back against him and rubbed the front of his slacks, feeling a satisfying twitch there.

"Try not to work too late tonight, honey. I want to pick this up later," she said.

"How can a guy refuse an offer like that, babe. I promise I'll do what I can."

Josh spun away and snatched the toast from the plate. Fiona hoped he meant it this time. Too often these days Josh promised to do what I can only to disappoint later. She appreciated how hard he worked for all the things they had, but she also needed him present as her husband.

"You'd better. Hey, I'll pop over to see Sam today. I'll see if I can get him interested in something."

"I don't think that should be too hard," Josh answered, giving her a knowing look. "Love you."

Fiona wanted to ask what he meant by that, but Josh was already out the door.

"Love you too," she called out to the closing door.

Time to start the day, she thought.

FIONA HAD ALWAYS LIKED Josh's cousin Sam. She'd taken an instant liking to the sweet, shy kid. He was her kind of guy. As Josh pointed out, several of Fiona's ex-boyfriends could uncharitably be called nerds, and some of her male friends to this day were nerdy. It was because she had a nerdy streak herself. Fiona had always loved reading science fiction and fantasy, she loved video games when she was younger. She'd always had more guy friends than girls. It didn't bother her that most of her guy friends had crushes on her, as long as they were cool about it. She just pretended it wasn't there, unless they were all getting high, which sometimes ended in misguided hook-ups she would conveniently forget when they weren't stoned. Fiona didn't encourage those crushes, but they felt good.

A slender woman with light brown hair, piercing blue eyes, and delicate elfin features, Fiona had always been more of a tomboy than a glamour girl—the girl-next-door type who's more cute than hot, which meant most of the guys at school didn't notice her. The crushes of her male friends gave her the confidence boost every young woman needs, but it wasn't the same as having the popular guys chase after her. Intellectually, Fiona knew she didn't really want those guys, but her vanity felt differently. Fiona stepped up her game in college and got some of that attention she craved, but inside she always felt like the tomboy who was cool to hang out with, but guys didn't date. She still knew how to turn her sexy on and vamp it up when the mood struck, but that was not her everyday comfort zone and she usually kept it loose and causal with her style.

Taking Sam on as a summer project wasn't a bad idea. Josh was right. She was going to have time on her hands with Alex away at camp. There were always craft projects and she had her gardening to do and the house to take care of, but this was the first time she didn't have her son at home to take care of since he'd been born. Fiona was a sobbing mess when they left Alex up at camp on Saturday. Josh practically had to drag her back to the car as Alex bravely waved goodbye and told his mom he would be fine. It had only been a few days and the separation anxiety had been intense. Sam could be just what she needed. It would be good to have someone else to look after and indulge her maternal instincts.

After a quick shower, Fiona pulled back her hair and threw on a light, sleeveless tunic and khaki shorts and headed to Trudy's. She had been concerned that living so close to Josh's aunt would be a problem when they first bought the townhouse, but having family close had been a blessing, especially when she and Josh wanted a date night and needed a babysitter. Aunt Trudy was in the kitchen when Fiona arrived. She insisted Fiona accept a glass of iced tea, even though the younger woman wasn't thirsty.

"How are you coping with Alex being gone?" Trudy asked. She was a vivacious, silver-haired woman in her late 50s. Fiona knew the divorcee was much in demand from the older gentlemen in the community—mostly because Trudy always told her so. Trudy did not get the concept of oversharing.

"It's fine. It's nice to have some time to myself for a change."

"I know what that's like. You'd think I have nothing but time, but it seems that someone always wants something. I swear, sometimes I just want to shut off my phone and hide under the covers with a good book."

Fiona smiled, unable to imagine Trudy hiding from any sort of attention.

"Enjoy it now, though, dear. The time will come when they don't need you anymore and you'll miss it."

"He's only eight, Trudy. I'm in no rush for him to grow up."

Fiona thought Alex was too young to go away to overnight camp, but Josh convinced her he was ready and her son, always independent, had been excited to go.

"But you are feeling at loose ends."

"I guess so. I thought I'd come over and see what Sam was up to today."

"I should have known Josh would push that off on you. That isn't what I wanted. Sam needs a male influence. His father certainly isn't around enough. I know there are a lot of years between Josh and Sam, but I wish my boys were closer. Josh has always been like a son to me, you know."

Fiona was well aware. Josh was closer to his aunt than his own mother in many ways. Josh and his mother were like oil and water, while Trudy had always gotten him.

"I don't think it's just the years, Trudy. I love Josh, and I get to see a sweet side of him most people don't, but he and Sam couldn't be any more different. Josh is a jock. He went out for every team in high school. He still plays golf every chance he gets. He's in two fantasy football leagues. Has Sam ever even watched a football game? I don't blame him—it's so boring, but sports aren't Sam's thing. Josh likes being a bro. That's not Sam."

"I know. Sometimes I swear Sam was switched at birth. I hate that Josh and Sam don't really relate to each other. Josh could try harder, I guess, but I do think Sam could make an effort too."

Fiona felt like she was the only member of the family who really understood Sam. She wished Trudy nurtured her son rather than seeking to change him.

"Sam's really a great kid. You all should just let him find his own path," Fiona said.

"You don't think he's gay, do you?" Trudy asked, quickly adding, "Not that there's anything wrong with that, of course. It's just that he's never had a girlfriend."

"Sam is not gay," Fiona said. At least, she didn't think he was. "Sam's just twenty. He's got plenty of time to find a girl who'll appreciate him."

Trudy sighed. "I just worry about him being lonely."

"Mothers worry, I get it. But Sam is going to be fine."

Fiona was about done with Trudy. She asked if Sam was up in his room.

"Probably still in bed. That boy is never up before noon. Video games all night, sleeping all day. That's my Sam."

"He shouldn't sleep such a beautiful day away. I'll go see if I can get him moving."

Fiona lightly knocked on Sam's bedroom door and spoke his name, but there was no reply. The door was unlocked, so after a third try she let herself in to his dim, cluttered bedroom. Posters for various superheroes and fantasy movies covered the walls. A Boris Vallejo poster hung over the single bed: a fairy blonde with gossamer wings kneeling by the water. The only thing covering her ample breasts were two skimpy golden cups, which matched her small crown. If she were more of a feminist, Fiona would have been bothered by the poster, but she got the fantasy world. Besides, the poster was kind of hot. Fiona was surprised Sam's conservative mother let him keep the poster up, but Trudy was probably happy to see a sign he liked girls.

Sam was sprawled on the bed, with the sheets kicked to the side, dead to the world. Fiona started across the room but stopped short when she saw the huge tent in the front of his boxer shorts. The head of his penis peeked from the fly. She wasn't surprised by his morning—almost afternoon—wood. Every guy got that. It was the size of Sam's member that demanded her attention. Sam was like a little brother to Josh, but he certainly wasn't the little brother. Fiona couldn't help herself. She was impressed. The devilish side of her wished Sam was more exposed, but she guiltily chased that thought away. Fiona could not have such improper, impure thoughts. Sam was Josh's cousin, and he was almost ten years younger than her. Fiona could not think about his penis. She turned away, red-faced, putting her back to the bed.

"Hey! Wake up! It's almost the afternoon!" Fiona shouted, staring at an Aliens poster while trying to forget what she saw.

"Huh, what?" Sam mumbled, groggy.

"Come on, wake up, Sam!"

Fiona heard the shuffling of sheets and decided it was safe to turn around. Sam was on his side on the bed, covers thrown over his body. His cheeks were flushed, and Fiona wondered if he realized she'd seen his dick. He rubbed the sleep out of his eyes as he looked at her. He grabbed his phone off the nightstand and stared at it.

"It's like eleven. That's not the afternoon," Sam protested.

"It's still way too late to be in bed. You're sleeping the day away. Come on, up and at 'em."

"I was up late. I need my sleep." Sam closed his eyes and rolled over to face the wall but turned back to Fiona. "Why are you in my room, anyway?"

"I've got a lot to get done in my garden and your mother volunteered you."

"Help in the garden? What? No one told me anything about that. That's not really my thing."

"You're a smart boy. I know you can figure it out. Besides, mostly I just need a pair of strong hands."

"Really?"

"You can't help me out, Sam? Please?" Fiona did her best pout.

"Fine, I guess so. Let me get a shower."

"Awesome. I knew you'd help."

Neither of them moved for a moment, until Sam said, "Uhm, can I have some privacy?"

"Right. Sorry. I'll be downstairs."

TWO

FIONA CHANGED into shorts when they got back to her house, but she still dripped with sweat while they worked in the garden. Her auburn hair was tucked up into a floppy hat in the hopes it would protect her face from getting any more freckles than she already had. Her long legs and arms were already tan from long hours spent outside so she did not worry about that too much, although she wore sunscreen to protect from lasting damage.

Sam, who rarely saw the sun, was starting to burn by the time they broke for lunch. He inhaled the sandwich Fiona prepared for him and gulped down the Mountain Dew he insisted she stop for on the way over. Fiona insisted he apply sunscreen before they went back outside. He squirted lotion into his hand and then looked at it like it was some alien substance before half-heartedly rubbing it into his arm.

"Sam, you've got to put some effort in it."

"Whatever. I'll be fine."

"You're already turning red. Here, let me help you," she said. It was like she was dealing with Alex.

Fiona came around the kitchen table and squirted a large portion of lotion onto her hands, then told Sam to hold his arms out. Vigorously, she rubbed the lotion into both arms, pushing up under the sleeves of his Incredible Hulk t-shirt. He was skinny, but while rubbing in the lotion, Fiona thought his arms felt firmer than they looked. Fiona could guess why his right arm might be more developed. She almost laughed at the idea but felt guilty for the uncharitable thought. She got the back of his neck and his face and then knelt to get his legs. He wore baggy cargo shorts, so she didn't have much to cover, but he laughed and squirmed when she rubbed his sparsely haired legs.

"Hold still," she chided.

"It tickles," he complained, between giggles.

"If you hold still, I'll be done in a second."

When she pushed her hands up under his shorts, Sam jumped and nearly bumped Fiona in the face with his crotch. An image of his hard prick from that morning popped into her head. She almost toppled backwards and thought, If he's not careful he'll poke my eye with that thing! This time she did laugh at her comically sexual thought.

"Sorry about that," he said, reaching for her hand to pull her to her feet.

"It's okay. I can be pretty ticklish too."

"I'll have to remember that," he smiled.

Fiona realized he had just flirted with her and was happily surprised. It didn't matter that it was slightly inappropriate. At least Sam was opening up to her.

They went back for another hour or so of work in the garden and Fiona quite enjoyed herself. She always loved getting dirty and getting the dark, rich soil under her nails, but it was also great to see Sam getting into it. He really wasn't the sullen boy she'd prematurely woken that morning. He was a bright, jokey kid who just needed someone to give him a chance. She felt bad that his uptight family would probably never appreciate him the way she did. She wished she knew a girl his age because she would happily set him up.

"Having fun yet?" she asked.

Sam was on his hands and knees across from her, pulling weeds. Sweat dripped from his shaggy, dark hair. He kept trying to push up his glasses without smearing them with sweat.

"Oh yeah. This is so much better than being in the AC and playing WoW."

"That's World of Warcraft, right?" Fiona noted his surprised look and told him, "I know what's up. Don't be so surprised."

"Have you ever played?"

"A little bit, a long time ago. It was too much of a time suck, so I couldn't really get into it."

"You should try it again. The game is completely different from when you probably played it. You might like it better now."

Fiona wondered when she might find time to spend hours sitting in front of the computer and leveling up a rogue between taking care of her family, the house, and work. She was a contract project manager, but between projects at the moment. After a couple years of a grueling schedule, she'd decided to take the summer off and look for something new in the fall.

"Maybe," she replied.

"This wasn't your idea, was it?" Sam asked.

"What do you mean?"

"This. Having me help you in the garden. It was my mother's idea, right?"

Fiona froze, trying to muster up a good lie. She decided that wasn't fair and went with the truth. "Your mom did say something, but listen, Sam. I'm happy for the company. Really. With Alex off at camp and Josh working all the time, I can get a little stir crazy."

"You don't have to keep me occupied. Mom doesn't want to admit it, but I'm an adult now. I can decide what to do with my time."

"I know you are, Sam. But it's not good to stay in all the time. You really should try to get out and do things. Even if you don't want to hang out with me, you should go out with your friends."

"I do, sometimes. But most of them went off to school last year and they're pretty busy this summer since they're only home for a few months. It's been a bitch to get the group together for gaming."

"I'm sorry. That sucks."

"It's okay. I get it. People's lives go on, right?"

"It still sucks, Sam. But like I said, I'm glad to hang out with you. It's nice having company," Fiona said.

"Thanks. I like hanging out with you too, Fiona."

They got back to work, and she dug the hand spade into the garden. A Bluetooth speaker played music and they fell into silence as they performed their tasks. She dispatched Sam to fetch another bag of topsoil, which he dropped off to the side. Sam remained standing in front of her and when she glanced up at him, she realized why.

Fiona was down on her hands and knees giving Sam a perfect view down her top. The light tunic hung loosely on her and the neck draped open when she leaned forward, almost inviting a horny young man to try and look. She didn't know what to do, so she didn't react at all, but kept working like she hadn't noticed. Sam got back down in the dirt with her, but Fiona realized that he was sneaking peeks every chance he got. Had he been doing it all day? Fiona was glad she wore a bra—a simple pink cotton number with a fringe of white lace. She didn't always, because her breasts were small and if she was just working alone around the house, she didn't feel she had to bother.

The weight of his gaze down her top drove her to distraction. It was so hard to avoid reacting. Obviously, he liked what he saw, which made Fiona feel an inappropriate pride. She thought her days of being checked out by a twenty-year-old guy were long gone. His attention gave her a warm glow she appreciated more than she should have.

They finished their work and Fiona got to her feet, brushing dirt of her knees. Sorry, she thought. Show's over, Sam. He helped her put away the tools and supplies and she drove him home. They chatted about movies on the way, debating which vision of Alien was better—Ridley Scott's horror version, or James Cameron's action movie take. Both were great movies, but Fiona preferred the original, scarier take. Sam disagreed.

"We should re-watch them so we can make an informed decision," Sam said.

"That would be fun. I'm glad you came over today," she replied, pulling up in front of his house.

"Me, too. I got my exercise for the summer in."

They both laughed.

"I was planning on going for a hike this week. What do you think about coming along?"

"How far?" he asked skeptically.

"I know the outdoors generally isn't your thing, but it's only a couple hours and there's this lake off the trail. I know a little beach where we can just hang out and cool off. Trust me, it'll be fun."

"Hmm, I guess so."

"You can take a break from WoW raids. The game will survive without you."

"Ha ha. When do you want to go?"

"Day after tomorrow, maybe? I'll text you."

"Awesome," he said.

Sam sat there awkwardly, like he was waiting for her to say something else. Fiona didn't know what to say, so she leaned across the seat and gave him a tight hug and a kiss on the cheek.

"See ya later," she said.

"Thanks, Fiona."

"For what?"

"Just for being cool," he said, smiling.

FIONA SHOULD HAVE KNOWN BETTER than to have dinner ready and on the table when Josh was due home. Her husband hadn't been home from work on time in weeks. His recent promotion was demanding more of his time than he'd anticipated. Fiona tried to be good-natured about it, but his being gone so much bothered her. If she didn't implicitly trust him, she might have suspected him of having an affair. She kept their dinner warm and pulled it out when Josh finally arrived.

Josh slipped his arms around her waist and stopped Fiona as she moved around the table. She squirmed when he nibbled on her neck from behind. Fiona was glad she'd showered after her day out in the hot sun.

"You smell nice. Is that a new shampoo?" he asked, snuggling his nose into her light brown hair.

"Nope, the same stuff I've been using for years."

"I like it."

"I'm glad. You can appreciate it more after dinner. I'm starving. I've been waiting to eat."

"Okay, we don't have to rush with Alex away."

They sat down to the tenderloin and veggies with quinoa she'd prepared. Josh only tolerated eating quinoa to humor her, which Fiona appreciated. Josh poured them both some wine.

"So, did you have fun with Sam today? He didn't make you stay inside and play Xbox all day, did he?" Josh asked, cutting his meat.

"No, actually got him outside. He helped me in the garden for a few hours. He wasn't thrilled, but he was a good sport about it."

"It's probably the most time he's spent outside in years. And the most time he's spent with a girl," he chuckled.

"He must have some female friends at school. He's a nice guy."

"I wouldn't be so sure. Trudy's mentioned more than once she thinks he might be gay."

"Your aunt is ridiculous. Sam is not gay. I'm sure of it." Fiona thought of how she caught him peeking down her blouse but chose not to mention it to her husband. Instead, she said, "Have you seen the posters on his bedroom walls? Sam is into girls."

"You're probably right. I don't get that vibe off him. He probably wants a girl. He just has no idea how to get one."

"Give him time. Not every guy is as confident as you are, dear."

"How can he be if he's twenty and he's never dipped his wick? Poor kid is probably all backed up. He needs to get the poison out."

Fiona laughed softly and said, "I'm sure he has ways of relieving pressure."

"Not the same thing as getting laid." Josh laughed too. "I am sure he's still a virgin. That's like an anchor around your neck for a guy's confidence."

"It didn't seem to slow you down. You never had trouble getting girls, so you claim."

"I got that out of the way early, that's why. And I'm not Sam."

"Oh yes, the legendary Missy Houseman. How could I forget?"

Josh began dating his first girlfriend Missy at the start of high school and they lasted into their freshman year of college. Going off to different colleges killed their romance. Josh couldn't take the strain of holding out for a girl who was on the other side of the country, no matter how much he thought he loved her. Fiona had heard the story more than once. Trudy still brought up how great Missy Houseman was for Josh. It was a couple years of dating before Fiona didn't feel like she was competing with her husband's legendary ex.

"Don't get salty with me just because you didn't have a high school love," Josh said.

"I did fine, thank you. I didn't need one great love."

Fiona didn't lack for companionship in high school. She just wasn't into being tied down to one boy back then. A boyfriend wasn't a complication she wanted. She didn't need some jealous guy telling her what to do, especially when she had several friends with benefits willing to come around if she felt lonely. There were a couple of boyfriends mixed in there, but never anything serious.

"Tramp," he kidded.

Josh loved to tease her about being the class slut. Fiona wouldn't go that far, but she'd never considered her maidenhead to be precious. Sex was fun, so why not enjoy it?

"I thought you liked that I know what I'm doing in bed. I could play the virginal saint if you'd prefer it," she teased.

"Okay, you win that argument." He held up his hands in surrender. "Since you're so experienced, maybe you could give Sam some tips on picking up girls like you."

"Girls like me? You mean smart girls, right? Instead of the blonde cheerleader type you used to prefer."

"Yeah, smart girls. Smart girls who'll fuck him."

"You're terrible," Fiona replied, laughing and pouring another glass of wine.

After dinner, Josh retired to the family room to watch sports, like it was any other night and Alex was home. Fiona was disappointed. He was so handsy before dinner that she expected him to jump her bones. If Josh was playing a game, she was not assumed. Their sex life was great, when they had sex. Lately, they were both often too exhausted. Fiona ducked her head into the family room to tell Josh she was headed upstairs to read, hoping he'd take the hint and follow her.

Josh did not wait until his game was over but came up shortly and jumped in the shower. Fiona changed into a short, cotton nightie, trimmed with little eyelets. She arranged herself seductively on the bed, holding a book she was too distracted to read, hoping her husband would notice. She didn't know what had gotten into her, but she really needed Josh to make love to her tonight. Josh wasn't much of a lingerie guy, but she thought he'd notice how the short nightie showed off her legs.

Josh came from the bathroom with just a towel around his waist and still damp from the shower. Although he was deep into his thirties now and didn't have quite as much time to play sports, he was still in great shape. Fiona eyed his wet, glistening chest and wanted him just as much as she had when they first met.

From the outside, they seemed like the ultimate mismatch, Josh the blustery jock and Fiona the earthy tomboy. She was as shocked as anyone when he first showed interest—even more shocked when she realized she was just as interested. At first, she thought being with a cocky jock would be a fun fling, but then she found he was so much more than he appeared to be. Josh was a jock—and cocky—but he was also smart and funny—qualities he shared with his cousin Sam but expressed so differently. Josh's joking had an edge that sometimes bordered on mean and Sam had none of that in him.

Just looking at her husband, Fiona couldn't help but reflect on how different the cousins were—despite their family resemblance. Josh and Sam looked enough alike that they could be brothers yet were so distinct. Josh had black hair in a short razor cut, while Sam's was lighter and shaggy. Josh had the strong family jaw and piercing blue eyes, while Sam had an aquiline nose and darker eyes that always seemed to be harboring a secret. Fiona never met Sam's father, but those features must have come from him. Sam was taller, but skinnier, Josh was maybe a couple inches taller than Fiona's five-foot-six height, but she was taller than her husband in heels on the rare occasions she wore them. Both cousins were handsome, just in their own way.

"I hope you're not too into that book," Josh said, approaching the bed. He sat on the edge beside her.

"I don't know. I'm about to find out what happens to Jon Snow."

"I thought you watched the show."

"It's not the same thing," she replied purposely ignoring him.

"Hmm, maybe I should just go to sleep then."

His hand pushed up under the hem of her nightie. Josh did not plan on going to sleep. Her thighs parted, but Fiona otherwise pretended not to notice his advance. His fingertips grazed her sex, tracing up to brush the narrow landing strip above her lips. She sighed and closed her eyes. Her pretense of reading was failing miserably.

"Josh..." she whimpered. His fingertips pushed between her lips, finding her already slick.

"That must be a great book, because it's got you pretty excited," Josh taunted.

"How do you know it's the book?"

Fiona gripped the book tight enough to rip it in half when his fingers brushed her clit, coaxing it from hiding under its hood.

"Oh? Don't tell me my nerdy cousin has you all hot and bothered."

"Would that be a threat to your manhood?"

"That boy isn't a threat to anyone's manhood. I'm not worried about Sam stealing you from me."

“You never know. He could have some hidden game.”

“That kid has no game, Fi. He wouldn’t know what to do with you if he got his hands on you. He wouldn’t know to touch you like this.”

His fingers curved up inside her, massaging Fiona’s g-spot. His thumb rubbed her clit through its hood. Fiona gasped and her muscles tightened around him, squeezing his fingers inside her.

“He just needs a good teacher,” she said, voice breathy.

“And that should be you? You think you should teach Sam how to handle a woman?”

“Can you think of a better teacher?”

Fiona tried to keep her voice steady as her husband teased her. She didn’t think about the implications of deflowering Sam, but it was fun to tease Josh. She slid her hand under Josh’s towel seeking his root. It was thick and growing more so. He must have liked the teasing on some level. Did he like the premise of his wife as Sam’s sexual tutor?

“Maybe you should, Fi. Someone’s got to take care of the poor kid.”

“You did say his virginity is like an anchor around his neck. I could help him get his confidence.”

“Mmm...Fi...you’re crazy...”

She was pleased he seemed to have trouble speaking. It was time to turn up the heat. Fiona twisted on the bed, pulling his towel open. His cock popped free. Josh stared at her, smirking, when she grasped him, fingers just closing around him. She milked him, coaxing that clear, salty liquid from the tip. Sam’s cock leapt into her mind, unbidden. Fiona was right back in that frozen moment from the morning, when Sam’s prick stared at her from his boxers. The cousins were similar, and since Josh had a nice cock she loved, she couldn’t help thinking, It’s a shame that’s going to waste. It was a terrible, dirty thought. If Fiona was still a practicing Catholic, she’d have to say Hail Marys all day. Instead, she took her husband’s cock in her mouth, like a good Catholic girl.

“Fi...yeah...” Josh groaned.

Josh brushed her silky hair back from her face so he could watch his wife go down on him. Her head rested on his thigh and he leaned onto the bed so he could keep teasing her pussy. Fiona was soaked now, and his fingers found a nice, steady rhythm inside her. Her heat rose and that familiar need built inside her. She let him slip from her mouth long enough to taunt him.

“Should I do it? Should I deflower Sam?”

“Mmm...Fi...whatever you think is best, babe...”

Of course, he said that. Josh could agree to anything with his cock in her mouth.

Fiona took him deep, relaxing so he could slide to the back of her throat. His fingers tightened in her hair and he moaned her name. She could almost swallow his entire cock, something that greatly impressed him their first time together. He'd joked once that her amazing oral skills and incredible flexibility had ruined him for all other women.

“Damn, Fi. You’re like a Hoover tonight. I think you want to despoil Sam,” Josh groaned.

She let herself fantasize about it, seeing herself as a modern Mrs. Robinson, shocking wide-eyed young Sam. She could never cheat on Josh, but what if... It was so out there—it could never happen—but the fantasy made her heart race. Fiona remembered Sam checking her out—looking down her shirt—and she knew she could do it. Sam would fuck her.

The hand on her pussy worked its magic and Fiona moaned into the cock filling her mouth. God, she loved being with a man who knew just how to touch her. It made her husband perfect for her, but then she had a fresh wicked thought: I could train Sam to do exactly what I want. Fiona sucked her husband harder, thinking, Sam would have come three times by now. Josh trembled, losing control. But she didn’t want Josh to come. Not yet. Not in her mouth. She pulled her mouth from him with a slurp.

“Come here, baby,” she purred, urging Josh onto his back on the bed. Fiona straddled him.

“You know we don’t have to rush tonight,” he said, between kisses. “No one’s going to burst in on us.”

Josh kneaded her taut butt while she dragged her dripping slit along his length.

“But I don’t want to wait, baby. I want you right now.”

With a grin, Josh rolled them, flipping Fiona onto her back. He thrust hard inside her the moment he was seated between her thighs. She pulled him onto a kiss and roughed his hair. He felt so good inside her. Perfect. It felt like it had been forever since they’d made love. Fiona needed it more than that. It was cruel of Josh to deny her.

He was not subtle, which was fine with Fiona. That wasn’t what she wanted. She planted her feet on the mattress so she could thrust back at him as he drove his cock down into her. Fiona tried gripping him inside her, but she was so wet, and Josh pounded into her so hard that there was no way to grasp his cock. But just the effort sent all the tingles flowing out through her body.

“Fi...yeah...” Josh moaned, tightening his grip on her little butt.

“Baby...mmm...ahhh...baby...”

Fiona’s orgasm ripped through her, so fast it took her breath away. She went rigid, her toes curling as the climax ruled her, then her body felt rubbery and she was limp beneath him as pleasure addled her brain. Josh kept pistoning on top of her. The delicious friction of his cock extended Fiona’s climax and she howled. Josh power drove his cock into her.

“Yes...yes! Baby! Ohhh...fuck...yes...” she cried.

“Fi...Fi...Fi...”

Josh grunted and pulsed inside her. Fiona felt his seed pumping, filling her. She shuddered, slowly coming down from her peak. Her muscles locked around him, trapping him inside her as she pulled him to her. They clung to each other blissfully.

“That was great, baby,” she sighed, tingling everywhere.

“This is going to be a fun couple of weeks while Alex is at camp.” Josh hugged her tighter.

“You’d better not think we’re done for tonight.”

“Oh?”

“You’re the one who said we’ve got all night,” she said.

Fiona whooped and pushed Josh off her so she could get back on top.

“Just remember, Fi. You asked for it!” Josh taunted, reaching for her breasts.

THREE

FIONA WAS at Sam's bright and early, expecting to drag him out of bed, but the young man was ready to go when she arrived. Or as ready as he could be. She had to explain there would be no Wi-Fi on their hike, so there was no point bringing his laptop. Fiona inspected the other items in his messenger bag and removed whatever wasn't necessary.

The conversation on their way up to the state park was easy. Sam was excited about an upcoming event that would gather his friends together for a day of role playing. Fiona received a condescending tut-tut when she asked if it was the same thing as a Comic Con.

"They're called Comic Cons, but they're barely about comic books anymore. It's movies and gaming and books and other stuff. It's big. Most people come for the TV stars and people who have been in movies, but even that's been ruined. Half the time, the people appearing have nothing to do with genre stuff," Sam explained.

"That must be frustrating...I guess," Fiona offered.

"It's one thing to see someone who did a guest shot on Next Generation in the 90s, but why is some recurring actor from Pretty Little Liars holding a Q&A? It doesn't make any sense."

"I can see that." Fiona got the Star Trek reference, but she had no idea what Pretty Little Liars was. "Well, it'll be good to see your friends, won't it?"

"Yeah. We all dress up for the conventions, so it's extra cool."

"What's your character?"

"I play a brawler. I tank for the group," Sam proudly said.

"That's awesome," she replied. Fiona had no idea what he meant.

Fiona thought Josh might be right. Sam was never going to get laid. She didn't mock Sam the way Josh might, but he did seem kind of hopeless. Maybe he would meet a nice geeky girl at his convention. Girls went to conventions these days. Fiona might have gone to a comic con if they had been such big deals when she was younger. It might even be interesting to go to one now. It would be nice to indulge her own nerdy side, something she couldn't do around her husband. Josh considered her working knowledge of The Lord of the Rings trilogy to be an amusing eccentricity. Fiona didn't know if she would go as far as joining in a role-playing game—she certainly didn't see herself dressing up to play one—but it would be good to be around people who weren't obsessed with fantasy football, like Josh and his friends.

Sam deflated when they arrived at the state park and he realized how far they would be hiking. Fiona jokingly told him to man up and immediately regretted it, realizing it was the type of thing Josh would say. He was rubbing off on her too much.

"The sooner we get moving the sooner we'll be at the trailhead and we can hang out by the lake," she said, trying to project her positivity onto Sam.

Sam shot her a skeptical look but shouldered his bag and picked up the cooler.

Halfway through the hike, Fiona was carrying the cooler, but she didn't mind. It wasn't the struggle for her that it was for Sam. Most of the trail wound through the deep woods and was heavily shaded, but the humid morning still soaked into them. Fiona enjoyed the exertion and didn't mind sweating, but Sam was less enthused. She tried keeping up a conversation as they hiked, but the young man was too often out of breath and they mostly hiked in silence, enjoying the symphony of birdsong, insect clicks and hums, and other melodious sounds of nature. Fiona loved the smell of just being out in the woods. Josh would hike with her, but Alex did not share her enthusiasm for nature, and she didn't get out to the state park nearly enough. That was the reason behind sending Alex off to camp for two weeks. Fiona hoped he'd come home with a new appreciation for nature.

"Be careful, it gets a little treacherous from here on in, but trust me, it's totally worth it," Fiona warned.

They turned off the main trail for the branch leading to the north side of the lake. The main trail led to the far side of the lake and a much larger beach that was typically crowded with sunbathers, swimmers and kayakers. Fiona rarely encountered anyone on the little slice of beach at the end of the narrow game trail they were on now. She liked to think of it as her own private paradise. She was excited to share it with Sam.

The trail was rough going, with plenty of roots and raised rocks to trip over. Sam slipped repeatedly but avoided going down. He was almost whipped with branches a couple times until he figured out, he had to stay alert. Fiona bubbled with enthusiasm, telling him how great he was doing and assuring him they were close. When they emerged onto the narrow strip of dark, pebbly sand, Fiona held out her arms triumphantly, turning to Sam with her crooked smile.

“Here we are!”

He dropped his burdens with obvious relief and removed his baseball cap, which was black and adorned with the image of a red 20-sided die. Wet locks of dark, curly hair flopped into his eyes and he smoothed them back. His cheeks were flushed, but Fiona thought it made him cute. He really was a handsome young man, she thought. He just needed a fashion upgrade, although a smart girl would see past the superhero t-shirts and baggy cargo shorts. Sam deserved a cute girl. He just needed the confidence to realize that himself. I am sure he's still a virgin. That's like an anchor around your neck for a guy's confidence. Josh’s words echoed in her head and she couldn’t help feeling bad for the kid.

The lake was an expanse of calm, achingly blue water. It was lined with tall maples and birches, while a high mountain provided the perfect backdrop. A woman sliced through the water in a kayak in the distance, and a couple of men sat farther out in a fishing boat, waiting for a nibble. Their cove was screened by brush on either side, making them hard to spot unless someone was looking for them. Fiona and Josh had spent many a romantic afternoon in the secluded cove, before Alex, enjoying the woods and each other.

"So now what?" Sam asked, looking around.

"Now we kick back and enjoy ourselves. Come on, I know you like to swim. When you were younger you were always outside at your pool. I'm going to swim and hang out and enjoy the day. The beauty is that there is no plan."

Fiona bent over and fetched two beers from the cooler. She turned to offer Sam one and she caught him looking at her butt in her tight cut-offs. Fiona pretended she didn't notice but smiled inwardly. No, Sam was definitely not gay.

"Really?" Sam sounded surprised by the proffered beer. "I'm not twenty-one."

"I know that, but I won't tell anyone if you don't. Whatever happens here can be our little secret."

The moment the words left her mouth she realized how flirty they sounded and chided herself. Sam did not need the encouragement. Fiona had no idea what had gotten into her.

"Okay," he replied with a huge grin. Sam twisted the cap off using his shirttail and took a long pull from the bottle.

"Here, help me spread this out."

Sam took one end of the big blanket from her pack and they spread it open up by the tree line, where there was a smooth layer of grass above the sand. Fiona took off her floppy hat and tied her short hair back into a knot to keep it out of the way while she applied suntan lotion. She spread it on the back of her neck and then her bare arms and long legs.

Clip-on shades over Sam's glasses hid his eyes, but Fiona knew he was watching her. A sly smile crossed her lips, but she continued to pretend she didn't notice. What's the harm in teasing him a little bit, she thought. Fiona thought of how Josh encouraged her to draw Sam out of his shell. This probably wasn't what her husband had in mind, but it would be fun filling him in on Sam's attention. A spark of jealousy always made things more exciting. That was the excuse she used, anyway. Fiona didn't want to admit how much she enjoyed the ego boost of the younger man checking her out.

Fiona finished applying lotion on her exposed skin and tossed the bottle to Sam. He was so busy pretending he wasn't watching her that the bottle bounced off his chest.

"Make sure you cover yourself well. That skin isn't used to the sun," she said.

"You're not going to do it for me?" Sam sounded disappointed.

"You're a big boy, you can take care of yourself."

Everything sounded like a double entendre now. Fiona giggled as she took a book from her pack. The pack became her pillow with some fluffing, and she stretched out on the blanket to read.

"I read that series. It's great," Sam commented, noting the paperback in her hand.

"It's much better than I expected, though it's a little testosterone filled. I wish Mustang was a bigger part of it, like in the first book."

"She plays a bigger part in the third one, Morning Star. Do you miss the romance?"

"Haha. Romance is nice, but I like Mustang because she's a kick-ass woman, not because she and Darrow are in love."

"Cool," Sam replied, nodding in appreciation. "She kinda reminds me of you."

"Really?"

"Yeah, you're cool and pretty and stuff." His cheeks turned red again, and it wasn't the heat this time. Sam quickly added, "And you could probably kick my ass, like Mustang."

"Aww, that's so sweet. You're right, by the way. I could kick your ass, so watch your step."

They both laughed.

Sam took out a sketch pad and some pencils and started sketching. Fiona settled into her book. She lost herself in the world of an interplanetary revolution and let the sun bake into her skin. It felt good. This was exactly what she needed. She wished Josh was there. Fiona asked him to take some time off while Alex was away, but Josh said the timing couldn't be worse. "Besides," he'd said, "you have Sam to keep you company." Sam was good company, but not the kind of company her husband would have been up at the lake. She recalled the time he had her wailing so loudly the people on the other side of the lake had to have heard her.

The heat finally got to her and Fiona laid her book aside and drained her second beer. She stood and stretched. Sam was so engrossed in his work that he didn't seem to notice she'd moved.

"Come on, Sam. It's time to test the water."

"I don't know."

“We didn’t hike all the way up here just to sit. It might be a little cold at first, but I promise you’ll love it when you get used to it.”

“I don’t know,” he repeated.

“Suit yourself. You’re missing out.”

Fiona peeled off her snug tank top, revealing a tie-dyed bikini top underneath. She could see the strain in Sam’s neck as he fought the urge to look. Fiona’s smile quirked right and she turned to the side, giving him the chance to look at her body without being caught. He was still visible in the corner of her eye, and sure enough, his head popped up and he drank her in, colored pencil frozen in his hand.

Being around Sam was great for her self-esteem. Fiona worked hard to stay in shape and was proud she still had the body to pull off wearing a two-piece bathing suit after having Alex, but she’d always been unsure when it came to wearing bikinis because she didn’t have much to fill out the top. Josh always said her boobs were perfect for her slim, athletic frame, but Fiona still wished she had more up top. She considered herself a feminist—and hated the message it would send—but more than once she thought a boob job was the one cosmetic procedure she’d welcome. But Sam’s hungry eyes made all those old insecurities melt away. He poured over her figure like she was a model. Not bad for a mom in her mid-30s, she thought. Fiona unsnapped her shorts and shimmied out of them, but an extra wiggle into her hips for Sam. I’m a shameless hussy, she thought.

Fiona waded into the lake and hissed at the cold water. Even in the heat of summer, the blue lake water remained cool. It was a shock after baking in the sun. She was glad her back was to Sam, because if he saw her face, she’d never get him in the water. She waded in up to her mid-thighs and turned to face Sam.

“You know, I could always just drag you into the water with me,” she said, back at him with her hands on her hips.

“I don’t think so.”

Sam seemed to be staring hard at her chest, thinking his shades hid where his eyes focused. Fiona realized the cold water had hardened her nipples into fine little points in her bikini top. Let him stare, she thought. No one else ever does.

“Don’t make me do something you’ll regret. We’ve already established I can kick your ass.”

Fiona slowly walked back toward Sam.

Sam laughed. "I'd like to see you try, Fiona."

Fiona considered he had a good reason for not wanting to stand up. His sketch pad covered his lap, and if she had to guess, it was probably concealing the excitement in his lap. Fiona couldn't help herself. She had a sudden, overpowering urge to see the effect she had on the young man.

"You asked for it," she warned.

Fiona laughed as she rushed him. Sam fell back, his sketch pad going to the side. She was deceptively strong for her size, pulling hard as she wrapped her arms around his chest. But Sam kept moving backwards, pulling her off balance, and she tumbled forward landing awkwardly on top of him. They laughed as they wrestled in a tangle of gangly limbs. She stayed on top and pulled at his t-shirt, while he tickled her sides. He found her sweet spot and Fiona shrieked and tried to push his hands away, but it was fruitless, and she melted into a giggling, wriggling mess.

"Please, mercy! I surrender!" Fiona panted.

Sam kept her trapped, writhing on top of him, while she tried to twist away from him. It was tough to find the strength when she was breathless from laughing. Fiona tried to center herself and find her self-control. As her sense returned to her, she felt the big lump of Sam's hard cock throbbing against her stomach. Fiona froze, unsure how to respond. Should she be happy or ashamed that she had her husband's cousin so hard? The longer he throbbed against her, the more uncomfortable she became.

Fiona twisted away and finally freed herself. She rolled onto her back and discovered her bikini top had been pulled to the side during their tickle fight. Fiona tucked her breasts back into her top without acknowledgment and hopped to her feet.

"You're a little devil," she said, thinking, Well, maybe not so little.

"And you are very ticklish. I wish I'd known sooner," he said with a broad smile. He turned to the side to hide the lump in his trunks.

"What would you have done with that knowledge?"

"I don't know," he replied honestly. Sam sighed and said, "I guess I'll go swimming."

"So, all it takes is a tickle session to get what I want? Now that's something I'll have to remember."

Fiona ran back into the lake to give him some privacy and adjust himself. Sam tossed off his t-shirt and followed her into the water, gasping when he felt the temperature.

“You didn’t tell me it’s freezing!” he cried.

“It’s not that bad. Don’t be a baby. Come out here. It’s better when you’re farther into the water.”

She appraised Sam as he moved toward her. Fiona never really saw him without a shirt on. He looked good. Sam’s skin was pale, of course, but she expected him to be flabby, and he wasn’t. He was just a thin young man. Not bad at all. Fiona decided that Sam was just the kind of guy she might have gone for when she was younger.

Fiona pushed deeper into the lake and ducked under, wetting her hair. The water just lapped at her breasts. She beckoned Sam deeper to join her. Sam left his glasses on the blanket and waded into the water.

Sam was a strong swimmer for not being athletic and caught up to her with a couple of long strokes. He stood over Fiona in the water and she thought about just how tall he was. Sam had to be over six feet tall. She wasn’t used to a man towering over her like that. It was nice. Neither spoke, and Fiona felt a weird tension and realized she was tingling all over. She didn’t expect Sam to germinate those feelings in her. She had to break the tension.

“Don’t think you’re going to tickle me again,” she teased, splashing him and diving away.

Sam dove after her, catching Fiona with his long reach. They twisted in the water and she sucked in a deep breath before going under again. Her feet didn’t touch the soft bottom of the lake at this depth, but Sam was tall enough to stand and hold her above the water. He clutched her against him. His thick hard-on ground into her butt. Fiona tried not to wiggle against it, but she was laughing too hard to hold still. She knew how to escape him.

"Don't tickle me, please," she begged.

Sam loosened his hold and she took full advantage. Fiona turned in his grasp and attacked with her own tickling fingers. He scrambled to fend her off, seemingly immune to her efforts. It left Fiona open to attack and he took full advantage. Fingers played at her sides like she was a keyboard. Fiona writhed in his arms, helpless as she tried to stay above water. She had to hold onto him to stay above water, leaving her at his mercy. Fiona felt like she was a teenager again, playing in the water with her friends. She did what she would have done back then to escape. Acting on instinct, she yanked at his boardshorts.

Sam tried to keep her trapped and keep his boardshorts on, but it was impossible and down they went. Fiona froze when she felt Sam's very hard cock brush against her stomach. She had no idea what else to do. Sam kept wiggling against her, causing his hot shaft to bob and rub against her toned tummy. It was shameful, but her first thought was, Damn, he feels big! Instinct told her to grab it, but Fiona fought that off. Sam froze too, realizing what was happening. Fiona took advantage and twisted away to escape the awkward moment.

Fiona turned to swim away with his boardshorts, and Sam got his revenge. He grabbed for her, fingers catching the tie at the back of her neck. The knot came free and her bikini top pulled away from her chest. She grabbed for the floating strings and Sam pulled the second knot free at her back. Fiona shrieked and scrambled, but his hands were faster than hers. Sam swam away from her with his boardshorts in one hand, while the other held her bikini top aloft as a prize.

"Get back here!" she called.

Fiona had to admire him. Sam was far nimbler in the water than she expected. It was nice to see him come out of his shell, but she didn't think this was what Trudy had in mind when she asked for help with her son.

Sam splashed out of the water panting, catching his breath as he bent to put on his boardshorts. His pale, skinny ass was pointed right at her, and she laughed. Fiona stayed crouched in the water to keep her breasts obscured. The water lapped at her shoulders.

"Okay, very funny. Now toss me my top," she said.

Sam fetched his glasses and turned back to her. She knew he was trying to see through the water. He held the bikini top out to her.

"It's right here. Come and get it," he taunted.

"Okay, Sam. That's enough"

He shook the scrap of fabric toward her.

"That's not funny."

"It actually is kinda funny. Admit it, Fiona."

It was funny, but she couldn't admit that to him. They were well into inappropriate territory, even if Sam didn't realize it. He was a smart kid. Didn't he realize it? Sam had to know what he was doing. He was pushing to see how far she'd take it. They were in a danger zone, and it made Fiona's heart pound. She couldn't remember the last time her naughty side came out. That side of her seemed lost with work and mothering and taking care of the house. Back in the day, Fiona was exactly the kind of girl who'd have risen to Sam's challenge. She did not back down.

Fiona glanced around to confirm no one was near them. She could let old Fiona out to play. There was no real danger. Sam was a sweet kid. He'd never take things too far. She just had to see how far he was willing to push this, and he'd crumble.

"Fine. I'll come and get it," she said.

Fiona swam back to the shallow water and then stood and proudly strode toward Sam. She expected him to turn away, or at least throw the top to her, but he stood his ground. He didn't even hide that he was staring at her breasts. They were right there, on display, in the warm afternoon sun. Fiona stopped a couple feet away from him. Sam had to obviously look down to see her breasts now, but that didn't stop him.

It was strange for the normally modest woman to display herself for the young man, but she kept her chin up and pushed her chest out. Fiona had been on a nude beach once before, when she and Josh visited Hawaii for their honeymoon, but this was quite a different situation. That had been naughty and exciting, but the rush had been nothing like this. It felt like her heart was going to burst out of her chest. This felt dangerous, and that turned her on. Fiona held her breath without realizing it.

Sam did not hand Fiona her top but kept gaping at her. It was clear he'd never seen a topless woman in the flesh before—not like this. If he had gotten a girl's top off, it was probably groping in the dark. Fiona checked his boardshorts. His cock looked ready to rip free of the wet fabric. Her heart pounded harder. With a shock, she realized the tingle she felt all over was centered between her legs.

Fiona felt unbelievably sexy posing topless in front of Sam. He looked like he wanted to grab her, and part of Fiona wished he would. Here was the thing: Fiona had always had a powerful libido. She'd never needed much to turn her on, and once she was aroused, it didn't take much to get her to act on it. Those urges led to a lot of those hook-ups in her younger days that Josh liked to tease her about. Of course, he loved that she was ready for fun at the drop of a hat. But the flip side was that it could lead Fiona to be reckless, acting without thinking. She'd only been in that position a handful of times while married to Josh, and she'd always been a good girl. She felt a powerful draw to Sam and fought to stay the good girl—mostly. She could still have fun with him. Fiona kept her expression placid. She couldn't let Sam see her internal struggle. She had to keep this light.

"Can I have my top back, please?" she calmly asked, lips curling into a smile.

"I...uhhh..."

Sam held out the top like a somnambulist and she snatched it away, then leaned up to kiss him on the cheek.

"Thanks."

Fiona didn't rush to put her top back in place. She tossed it onto the blanket, keeping her back to Sam as she dried off with a towel. She felt him watching her every move. It was wicked to torture him like this, but it served him right. I bet he can't believe I'm parading around like this, she thought. Fiona took her time drying off, turning this way and that, putting on a good show for Josh's cousin. Her nipples throbbed with stiffness, and she told herself it was rubbing them with the towel—not because she liked showing off for Sam. She paused when reaching for her top. Instead, she turned back to Sam.

"Are you going to stand by the water all day?" she asked, casual-as-can-be.

The angel on her shoulder screamed, What are you doing? The devil reasoned, He's been trying so hard for a peek. Let the kid get a good gander. Fiona was glad her husband was not the jealous type. She figured he'd get a good kick out of this when she told him later.

"Are you going to stand by the water all day?" she asked.

"Uh...uhmm...aren't you going to put your top back on?"

"It's a warm day and no one's around. I don't need to, unless you want me to, Sam."

His mouth worked, but no sound came out. It was mean to torture him like this, but maybe he'd learn a lesson about snatching girls' tops.

"Uhhh...nonono...I'm good," he finally answered.

Sam impressed her again. Fiona fully expected him to fold by now, which left her wondering how far to push this. When did it turn from just good fun to something else—something truly dangerous? Sam would never make a move on her, would he? Fiona just imagined the young man beating off to her all night. She liked the image and decided to push it further. She could never do this with another man, but Sam was safe. This could be one of those weird, crazy memories he fondly looked back on when they were both older and wrinkled.

Sam sat on the farthest edge of the blanket, like he was afraid she'd burn him if he got too close. He stole glances at her every other second. He was past blushing and just looked perplexed. He couldn't figure out what was going on. Even if Sam was experienced with girls, this would be crazy for him. Fiona noted all his stolen glances and made it even harder for him.

"The sun's hot today. I need to make sure I'm protected," she said, reaching for the suntan lotion. Fiona did an excellent job playing it cool. She thought she deserved an Oscar.

Fiona squirted lotion into her hand and began applying it. She started with her arms and then her stomach. She leaned forward to do her legs, working it in from her thighs to her toes. Her chest had tan lines from her bikini, leaving her breasts a glowing white in contrast to her ordinarily pale, but still tanned skin. Freckles dusted where the sun had touched her, but her pert breasts were blemish free, capped by pale pink nipples that puffed out from excitement. Fiona pretended rubbing the lotion into her breasts was routine but caressing her own breasts with slippery fingers was arousing. She bit her bottom lip when she brushed her nipples and couldn't resist the temptation to spend extra time there, turning the tingle between her legs to a deep throb. Sam's gaze burned into her, making that throbbing need worse. She desperately wished Josh was there. Fiona would push him down and mount him in a heartbeat. Devilishly, she thought Sam could even watch. She didn't care at that point. By the time she finished with her chest, Fiona was squeezing her thighs together against the lusty sensations lurking between them.

"Could you get my back?" she asked innocently. Fiona felt anything but innocent. I really am evil, she thought.

Sam's mouth just hung open as he took the bottle and she turned her back to him. Her hair fell just past her shoulders, and Fiona pulled it up, twisting it with a scrunchie from her bag. She felt Sam's trembling hands on her back, and she would have given a sack full of pennies for his thoughts. His fingers barely grazed her, like he was afraid to touch her. That wouldn't do.

"You've got to rub it in, Sam."

"Sorry," he replied.

Sam's touch became firm and his warm hands felt nice on her back. His hands were large and warm, and his gentle touch was wonderful. She closed her eyes and enjoyed it, trying to recall the last time Josh had given her a back rub. She couldn't, and backrubs were one of her favorite things. If her husband didn't want to take care of her, she just might have to recruit Sam for the job. Fiona thought Sam would be okay with that. He worked his way down the middle of her back. Fiona giggled when he touched her ticklish sides, making her breasts bounce. Could he see it over her shoulder?

"Careful, you know how ticklish I am," she warned.

"I'll do my best, Fiona. Don't want to torture you."

Even though I'm torturing you? she thought.

Sam slowed as he worked the lotion into her sides. She was so slippery that his hands easily slid forward, touching her flat tummy. He pulled back when he moved higher, but his fingertips moved forward, an inch at a time. He couldn't easily reach her small breasts without making some effort, but he seemed determined to see how far she would allow him to go. Fiona was torn. This was far over the red line. It was one thing to let Sam touch her back, but she could hardly let the young man grope her, could she? She was a married woman, and Sam was her husband's cousin. There were so many things wrong with what was happening. Fiona knew she had to stop him, but she didn't want to. Wild Fiona wanted to come out and play. The devil on her shoulder said, Come on, just a little harmless fun. What's a touch? It's not like you're going to fuck him!

Fiona remembered her husband's words when they made love the other night.

"Should I do it? Should I deflower Sam?" she'd asked.

"Mmm...Fi...whatever you think is best, babe," was Josh's reply

Fiona was blowing him at the time, so that surely influenced his opinion, but it made her think that maybe Josh would be okay with this. It wasn't like she was going to keep it from him.

Rather than keeping her arms close to her sides, Fiona moved them so Sam's hands could slide over her sides. It tickled, but she didn't feel like laughing. Her heart was in her throat and she felt dizzy. He brushed the sides of her breasts. His touch was so gentle she hardly felt it, but it was enough to make her need to bite back a moan. His hands came further around, softly massaging. Fiona closed her eyes again and took a deep breath. In that moment, her sanity returned. Her eyes popped open and she leaned forward, slipping from Sam's hands.

"I'm good. Thanks," she said breathlessly.

"Awesome. Uhm...could you take care of me?"

His voice was hardly more than a whisper and when she turned around and saw the tortured expression on his face, she felt guilty. Fiona thought it would be cool to give the young man a thrill, but she didn't really think it through. Sam was probably hard enough to cut a diamond, and she knew what it was like for guys left in that state. She had no idea of what to do. She wasn't about to take care of him in the way he needed. Should she send him into the woods to jerk off?

Fiona continued the pretense that everything was normal. "Sure," she answered.

Sam sat there, like his brain was on overload. Fiona knelt in front of him and applied lotion to his bare chest. She didn't touch him to arouse him, but she knew the effect her touch would have. That didn't matter now. He was already turning a little red from the sun.

Fiona took care of his chest and then his arms, looking everywhere but at his lap. She really hoped he wouldn't just spontaneously combust and come in his boardshorts. Fiona tried to ban any erotic thoughts from her mind as she touched Sam, but that was easier said than done, especially given the way he looked at her. They had chemistry. Fiona couldn't deny it. But she had to control it. You do this all the time, she thought. She always covered Josh in lotion, but this hardly felt like the same thing. Fiona slathered his chest and arms, and by the time she reached his waistband, he was almost panting. His boardshorts looked ready to rip open, and she did her best to ignore the cause.

She sat back on her haunches and worked on his legs, hands trembling as they moved higher. Sam leaned back on his elbows, eyes fixed on her jiggling breasts. His mouth hung open and she swore he was moaning. Fiona leaned forward to get above his eyes and it felt like his cock was staring her in the face. The way it stretched his boardshorts made it seem so much larger than it looked that morning in his bedroom. Fiona cursed herself for wondering what it would look like freed. That was not going to happen! She stared at his groin so long that neither of them could ignore it.

"Sorry, Fiona. I...uh...ahh..." Sam stammered, scrambling back from her.

“I’m not your aunt, Josh. I’m what, your cousin-in-law or something.”

“That doesn’t make it better. Fiona...”

“Really, Josh. It’s okay. It’s my fault. I don’t know what I was doing. We got a little crazy there and it was fun, and I let it go way further than I should have.”

“I’m not a kid, Fiona. I know what’s up. I’m not naïve.”

“I didn’t say you are. Sorry, really. I don’t know what I was thinking.”

“What are you thinking, Fiona? Are you just teasing me?” Sam sounded wounded.

She noted he wasn’t wounded enough for his cock to go down. Of course, she was still sitting there topless. Fiona should put her top back on, but she didn’t. She didn’t move.

“No, Sam. Maybe. I don’t know. Really, I wasn’t trying to hurt you. I guess I was teasing you, but it wasn’t to tease you or hurt you. I guess I thought we were both having fun.”

Sam allowed a grin. “It’s fun, alright.”

Fiona crawled closer to him, but Sam tried to back away. She grabbed his arms.

“Sam, stop trying to escape.”

“I don’t know what’s going on, Fiona.”

“Like I said, I thought it was just a bit of fun, but I didn’t think it through, you know? I had a couple beers, and the sun is hot. It was nice to see you open up and have fun.” She paused, unsure about confessing more, but she knew she owed it to him. “And I guess I liked the attention. I know you’ve been checking me out, and I liked it. I’m sorry, Sam. I know that’s not an excuse to push it...”

Sam stopped trying to move away from her. He took the clip-ons off his glasses, his dark eyes locking into her pale green ones. “Don’t feel bad. I really do like it, Fiona. It’s just, I like it a little too much, I guess. God, this is embarrassing.”

“Don’t be embarrassed, Sam. You have nothing to be embarrassed about. Guys get hard. And guys check out girls, even nice guys. You haven’t done anything wrong. I, on the other hand...”

“You don’t hear me complaining.”

“That doesn’t mean it’s okay. I mean, I’m a grown woman, Sam. I shouldn’t be so susceptible to the attention of a younger man like you. I really don’t know what’s gotten into me.”

“Doesn’t everyone like attention? I’d like some attention.”

“You’re a good-looking guy, Sam.”

“You don’t have to say that, Fiona.”

“I know. I’m not just saying it. You’re really cute.”

“If you say any girl would be lucky...”

“They would.”

“They aren’t exactly lining up, Fiona.”

“That’s their loss. Sorry, I know that’s a cliché, too. Listen, I like your attention, obviously. Other girls would too.”

“Thanks.”

“I really am sorry for teasing you. It was stupid and reckless. It’s just been too long since anyone, but Josh looked at me like that.”

“I don’t know why that is. You’re so pretty, Fiona. You’re sexy. Uh, sorry...”

Fiona squeezed his arms. “Stop apologizing.”

“Only if you do.”

“Okay. We’ll both stop apologizing.”

They both sat there, unsure what to say if they weren’t apologizing to each other. Fiona had no idea what came next. She felt like she’d been caught with her hand in the cookie jar. Sam may have had a crush on her, but he had to think she was terrible. It was terrible to tease him like that. She saw it now that she had a moment to think. If you were a decent woman, you’d at least jerk him off, she thought.

“I guess I should put my top on,” she said.

“Don’t rush on my account.”

“Very funny. Do you really want me to sit here topless all afternoon?”

“I don’t want you to get burned, but I kinda like the view.”

“You know this is inappropriate, right?” she said, unable to suppress her smile.

“I won’t tell if you won’t.”

“What about...” she asked, nodding toward his hard-on.

“Yeah, uh...”

“Are you going to be able to walk back down the trail?”

“I’ll figure it out,” he said.

“If you need to go into the woods and...”

“Fiona, no! I’m not...”

“Don’t even try to sit there and tell me you don’t jerk off, Sam. All guys jerk off. Even Josh still does it, even though he thinks I don’t know.”

“Really? But he’s got you.”

“Marriage doesn’t mean sex on demand, kiddo. It’s not like that.”

It really isn’t, she thought. Too many things got in the way. She and Josh had a great time the other night, but he didn’t follow through on his promises to stoke their flame while Alex was at camp. Josh had been at work late every night since then.

“Sorry, I just don’t think I’d be doing that if I had you, Fiona. Unless, you don’t want to.”

“Trust me, it’s not that,” she said quickly. The moment she saw Sam’s eyes go wide she wondered why she admitted that to him. Sam was just so easy to talk to. She added, “It’s not that. People just get busy. It’s no one’s fault.”

“I could never be that busy,” he said, firmly.

“Well, thanks.”

They fell into silence again. Okay, she thought. I guess I’m going to sit here topless and let Sam stare at me. It should have felt weird, but it didn’t. It was coming back around to feeling good, now that they’d talked about it. If Sam was okay with it, why shouldn’t she enjoy his attention?

“I’m going to grab another beer. Do you want one?” she asked.

“Sure.”

Fiona leaned over to get the bottles and Sam stared at her ass. Now that it was out in the open, she felt free to wiggle it for him. She handed him the beer and he gave her a puppy dog smile.

“You know, I’ve had a crush on you forever,” he confessed.

“I didn’t before, but I guess I figured it out.”

They sat side by side on the blanket, Fiona topless.

“This is so cool. Like, never in my wildest dreams did I think this would happen.”

“Slow your roll, kiddo. This is all look, no touch, right?”

“Of course.”

“We shouldn’t be doing this,” she insisted.

“But we both like it, so why not?”

Fiona smiled. “Yeah, why not?” They toasted their bottles.

“You know, you were right, Fiona. This really is an awesome hike.”

“Oh, shut up,” she said, rolling her eyes.

But she had to agree. It was an awesome hike.

FOUR

FIONA GRABBED Josh the moment he came through the door. She didn't care how late it was. Most of the house was dark when he returned from work and he went straight through to the kitchen and dropped his laptop bag by the table. He was shuffling through the mail when Fiona joined him in the kitchen. She pressed her body to his and kissed him deeply.

"I need you, baby. Now," she breathed.

"Fi, what's..."

"Now. You need to fuck me, baby."

Josh didn't need to be told again. He dropped the mail and pulled the loose tie holding her short, satin robe closed. She was nude underneath. Fiona kissed him while fumbling with his belt. Josh lifted her onto the edge of the kitchen table and her robe flowed back off her shoulders. She unbuttoned his khakis and sat back, leaning back on her elbows. His eyes devoured her nudity and it made her heart race. It wasn't quite the look Sam had given her earlier, but it still made her tingle. Fiona traced a foot over the bulge in Josh's boxer-briefs and felt his cock jump.

"I don't know what's gotten into you, Fi. And I really don't care."

Fiona gasped when he touched her pussy, fingers tracing over her lips before dipping inside. He smeared her wetness all over her mound.

"Goddam, you're wet, babe. What the hell?"

"Less talking," she ordered.

Josh kicked out of his khakis and underwear, pressing forward. He grabbed Fiona by her haunches and pressed forward, impaling her. Fiona locked her legs around him and pulled her husband hard into her.

"Yeah...baby..."

The table rocked beneath them, skidding loudly on the tiled floor. Josh moved with the table and kept fucking, taking Fiona with strong, staccato thrusts. Her head hung back and her breathy moans filled the kitchen, echoing with Josh's grunts. The table banged against the wall, knocking a decorative copper mold free from its perch. Fiona cursed when it bounced off her head, then laughed. Josh paused, but that was not what she wanted.

"Don't stop, baby. Come on, don't stop!" she cried.

"Fi...uhn...shit..."

"Yeah...yeah...yeah..."

Josh pulled her closer to the edge and shifted his hands under her ass, tilting her pussy up at him. The new angle was so delicious Fiona giggled with wanton delight and gripped the table. Every thrust teased her g-spot, rocking her with pleasure that was almost too intense. It rippled out through her, signaling the deep thrill building inside her.

Her mind was a jumble. Fiona tried to focus on her husband, but Sam kept flashing into her mind. She was there, showing off for him, wrestling with him on that little beach. And she thought about his cock. Fiona couldn't help herself. She remembered it rubbing against her belly as they wrestled in the water. She recalled how big it felt and how much she wanted to touch it. It was all so very wrong, but it was there in her horny brain. Fiona wasn't above fantasizing, but she was flooded with guilt that she was thinking about Josh's cousin while he was fucking her. But the guilt didn't slow her down. The forbidden thoughts just made her hotter. Fiona wailed as she climaxed, her body tensing and twitching as the orgasm took control.

"Ohhh...fuck..." she cried. "FUCK!"

"Fi...damn...shit..."

Josh didn't miss a beat and kept fucking her even as she came. One orgasm rolled into another and she howled, every inch of her burning with pleasure. Fiona hadn't come so hard in ages. She was lost in a fog of bliss when Josh finally came, barely aware of his cum pulsing inside her. He stayed between her legs, shaking, while her muscles worked, milking every last drop from him. Fiona was like a ragdoll when he released her, bonelessly laying on the kitchen table. Josh leaned over and planted a deep kiss on her lips. The kiss grew heated and she felt life twitch through his cock inside her.

"Damn, Fi. Did you watch Legends of the Fall tonight?" he asked, so close she felt his breath on her cheek. He knew how much she loved young, longhaired Brad Pitt in that movie.

Fiona did love young Brad Pitt, but he never got her going like this. No, it wasn't Brad Pitt. It was his polar opposite; young, nerdy Sam. She didn't know if Josh would even believe her confession.

"No, it's not that, baby," she said.

Josh straightened up and stepped away. Fiona missed his cock when it slipped from her.

"I guess you missed me a lot then." He fetched two bottles of water from the fridge and handed her one of them.

"I always miss you, honey. But I do have a confession to make."

"A confession?" Josh looked interested. "Should I sit down?"

"It's not the bad kind of confession, at least I don't think it is."

"Now you've really got me curious. Didn't you go on a hike with Sam today?"

Fiona sat up and hopped off the table, retrieving her robe. She belted it around her and sat in one of the kitchen chairs, sipping her water. She'd told herself all day that Josh wouldn't have a problem with anything that happened, but now that it came time to confess her sins, she was nervous. Sure, Josh wasn't the jealous type, but would he really be okay with her parading around topless in front of Sam?

"I did. And I was a bad girl," she started, trying to keep it light.

Josh grinned. "You've got me hooked, Fi. Keep going."

"I didn't say anything before, because I didn't want to embarrass Sam, but I caught him checking me out when we were working in the garden the other day. He kept trying to look down my shirt."

"Of course, he was. One, you're hot; two, you're the closest he's getting to a real woman, who's not his mother; and three, he's had a crush on you for years."

"Stop it, Josh."

"Really? You had no idea? Come on, Fi. You're more aware than that."

"I guess I knew in the back of my mind, but I never thought about it. He was a kid."

"Quit stalling, Fi. Tell me how you were bad."

Josh didn't seem upset that Sam was looking down her shirt. He even seemed excited. Maybe this was going to go well, she thought.

"Okay, so I caught him checking me out again today, and I thought about what you were saying the other night, so I guess I started teasing him a little bit. I don't know what got into me. It seemed harmless, and he could enjoy a thrill."

"Sounds promising. What did you do, Fi?"

"You're not jealous at all?"

"Of Sam? No, I am not, nor will I ever be jealous of Sam. Forget the fact he's my cousin. I know that nerd is not going to steal you away."

So far, so good, Fiona thought, although she was annoyed that Josh was so dismissive of Sam. He was right. No one was stealing her away, but Sam had his appeal—not the least of which was the piece of meat hidden in his boardshorts. Stop thinking about that! she chided herself.

"It wasn't any big deal. I just pretended I didn't notice when he looked at my butt, or when I stripped down to my bikini. But then I got him into the water, and we were goofing around, wrestling, and—uh—it got a little out of hand. Somehow, my bikini top came off in the water."

"Somehow?" Josh asked, with raised eyebrows.

"Sam pulled it off. After I stole his boardshorts."

Josh barked out a laugh. "You stole his trunks? And he stole your top? Sounds like it served you right."

"Nice. Don't forget I'm your wife. You should be defending my honor."

"You're perfectly capable of doing that for yourself, babe. Besides, you gave up your honor when you stole his trunks. So, that's how you were bad? You and Sam played a game of slap and tickle in the water?"

"Yeah, that's pretty much it. It's just, I didn't get my top back on right away."

"Sam kept it?"

Fiona wondered how to phrase the next part. She didn't want Josh angry with Sam, but at the same time she was annoyed that her husband wasn't even the teeniest bit jealous another man saw her topless—even if it was his nerdy cousin.

"He practically made me beg for it. I had to come out of the water and stand right in front of him."

"Good for Sam. I didn't think the guy had it in him. I hope he got a good eyeful."

"He did. It was a while before I got my top back on."

"Nice. The poor bastard probably creamed his trunks. He did get his trunks back, right?"

"Oh? Afraid I saw his dick?" Fiona hoped she hit a sensitive spot.

Josh laughed again. “No. You can look at his dick all you want. Sam’s not going to give you what you need, babe.”

“I don’t know, honey. What if he’s got just what a bored, lonely housewife is looking for?”

Josh grabbed Fiona and pulled her onto his lap. He’d pulled up his boxer-briefs, but he felt he was stiffening again. Did her little escapade turn Josh on as much as it did her?

“You’re a bored, lonely housewife?” Josh asked, arms around her waist.

“You have been working a lot...”

“And Sam is going to scratch your itch?”

Fiona shrugged.

“Well, I guess he’s welcome to try, but I know what an animal you can be, Fi. You’ll tear that poor kid apart.”

“It could be fun trying.”

Josh eyed his wife suspiciously. “That’s why you’re so horny, isn’t it? That’s why you jumped me the second I came through the door. Your day showing off for poor Sam has you all hot and bothered.”

“It turned me on—a little bit. I guess,” she confessed, surprised the admission made her blush. “The attention was nice. Is that terrible?”

“If spending time with my nerdy cousin gets you this horny, you should hang out with him every day, Fi.”

“You like being his crush. He’s probably beating off to your tits right now, and you love it, you dirty vixen.”

Fiona liked the idea of anyone jerking off to her breasts. She wiggled her butt on his lap and felt his cock twitch. “It feels like you like it too, hon.”

“What do you mean?” Josh sounded defensive.

“It feels to me that you like Sam checking me out too.” She kept moving her butt in his lap and Josh grew harder.

“I don’t know. I mean, I like that you’re so sexy and I like it when other guys notice. I like knowing other men want you, sure. Even Sam. And I like that you got kind of crazy like that. It’s not too crazy—it’s Sam—but it’s still hot that you flashed your tits to someone.”

It was best not to tell Josh it was more than a flash, she decided. Fiona was not ready to tell him the whole truth—that she spent a good part of the afternoon topless or that she felt Sam's hard cock against her—but he knew enough, so she didn't feel like she kept anything serious from him.

"You miss me being crazy like that?" she asked, kissing his neck.

"Yeah," he replied, sighing as he pushed a hand inside her robe. Her breast was warm to his touch and she shivered when he toyed with her nipple. Her nipples were so incredibly sensitive, even more so after she'd had them pierced years ago. She'd had to give up the little silver barbells when she became pregnant, but she often thought of getting her nipples pierced again.

"You know, you never got to see me really crazy. I was calmed down a lot by the time I got to college and met you."

"But you've told me stories. You have great stories, Fi."

Fiona turned on his lap, swinging a long leg over to straddle him. His boxer-briefs were easy enough to pull aside. She sank down on his shaft with a satisfying squish. Josh already came in her once, which meant she was extra slippery around him. She didn't move, except to work her muscles around him inside her. The tingling from her pussy shot up her spine.

"It feels like you're okay if I keep teasing Sam, then."

"If it gets you like this, yeah, go for it, Fi. Shake that thing for him."

Fiona squeezed him hard and Josh gasped. "I almost feel like you're pimping me out to your cousin."

"The poor kid needs the thrill. Maybe it'll encourage him to go after girls more."

"What if he went after me?" she asked, remembering Sam's hard cock rubbing her. She began moving on Josh.

"Really? Sam's not making a move on you, babe. You'll have to seduce him."

Josh held her hips, helped Fiona rock on him. Her robe slipped from her shoulders, draping from her arms, which held onto his shoulders. The chair creaked under them.

"You think I should seduce him?"

"I didn't say that."

"How crazy should I get with Sam? He's seen my tits. Should he see more?"

"Christ, Fi. I don't know. Mmm, damn, babe."

Fiona rocked harder.

“Should I let him touch me. Show him how to do it?” Where is this coming from? She thought.

“If...if you want...babe...”

“Should I kiss him?” she gasped. Her pussy squelched as it pulled him into her.

“Uh...babe...he’ll die...”

“You said...you said he needs confidence...”

Her nails dug into his shoulders. Fiona rocked on the balls of her feet as she rode her husband and thought about seducing his cousin. It was so terrible, but so wonderful.

“Babe...Fi...uhnn...”

“Should I kiss him like this?”

Fiona kissed him hard, tongue snaking into his mouth. Josh’s grip on her hips turned painful, but Fiona rode him faster. It was like the other night, fantasizing about Sam was supercharging their lovemaking.

“Fi...god...ohh...” he moaned, tearing his mouth from hers.

“Josh...Josh...Josh! Yeah! Fuck!” she cried.

The chair rocked beneath them like it was going to collapse into a heap of kindling any second. Fiona hugged him tight as she came, almost knocking the chair backwards. Josh exploded inside her, Fiona’s orgasm triggering his. He hugged her crushingly tight. Their breaths were ragged, and their hearts pounded together. It didn’t matter that some weird fantasy about seducing Sam caused this, because she felt so close to her husband.

“I love you so much,” she murmured.

“I love you, Fi. You know I do.” He chuckled. “I guess we destroyed this chair.”

“I’ll wood glue it. It was worth it.” She kissed him.

They fell silent, until Josh asked, “You aren’t serious, are you?”

Fear stabbed at her stomach. Did she go too far?

“What do you mean? That really did happen at the lake.”

“Yeah, I believe that. It’s awesome. I mean it, Fi. I meant that other stuff about Sam, kissing him? Letting him touch you?”

Fiona pulled back so she could look at her husband. “I don’t think so. I didn’t really think about it. I just said those things in the moment. They just popped into my head.”

“Does that mean you want to?”

“I don’t know. You said maybe I should be his teacher. Did you mean that?” she asked. The moment had gotten weird.

“We were just talking, like hypothetically. I wasn’t thinking either. It felt like we were just goofing around.”

“We were,” Fiona agreed.

“But if you’re having fun teasing him...”

“Oh? That’s okay?”

“Is it really fair to him? I don’t want to tease him just to make myself feel good. That’s not nice.”

Josh was quiet. Fiona felt like they were circling around something that neither of them wanted to voice or admit. She wasn’t going to be the one to push it.

“I really am okay if you help him build some confidence,” he finally said.

“What are you saying, Josh?”

“Listen, Sam’s a good kid. He really does need someone to help him get over that hump with girls. Encourage him. If you’re teasing him, maybe he’ll come out of his shell and you can give him some pointers.”

“Pointers?” she asked.

“I don’t know. Whatever, Fi. Do what feels right.”

Fiona dismounted and his cock slipped from her. She kept her thighs tight to keep her mess from leaking on the floor as she pulled her robe back in place.

“I feel like you’re telling me to do something, but you’re trying not to. Do you want me to seduce your cousin?”

“I didn’t say anything about seducing him, Fi. He likes you. You turn him on. Have fun with it. It’s doing something for you, it’s got to be doing something for him. And if maybe you let him accidentally touch you or something, where’s the harm in that?”

It was a lot of words for Josh to say he was okay with Sam groping her. Was she okay with it? She’d just had two great orgasms, but the thought of Sam touching her made Fiona’s heart race. She stared at Josh. She was not going to let him get away with plausible deniability.

“You’re saying to fool around with Sam. You want me to teach him about girls?”

Josh stared at her. He didn't like being put on the spot. "I'm saying I trust you, and whatever happens...happens. It's okay with me."

"And if he kisses me?"

That broke the tension because Josh laughed. "If Sam kisses you, I'll invite him over for a beer and pat him on the back. The kid doesn't have the balls. But if he does, good for him. You could teach him a thing or two. You are the best, babe."

"Got it. I should teach Sam how to kiss. I should teach him about how to handle a woman."

"I didn't quite say that, Fi."

"Right. I'll just let whatever happens...happen."

"Are you mad, Fi?"

Fiona smiled, but it didn't reach her eyes. "No. This is going to be fun." She bent over and kissed him. "I need to run up and shower again. There's a plate for you in the fridge."

Fiona left him in the kitchen, trying to figure out what she was feeling. She wasn't mad—not really. But she was annoyed that Josh was so cavalier about Sam having his way with her. She wanted her husband to be at least a little jealous—even if it was Sam. Fiona had a few male friends from the old days she'd meet for lunch from time to time, and she'd always liked that Josh wasn't a covetous caveman, but now it bothered her. It was petty, but she thought she should teach her husband a lesson. But that wasn't all she felt. No, Fiona was excited by the fantasy of being Sam's teacher. What the hell is wrong with me? I'm losing it. But she couldn't help it. Fiona smiled as she ran up to the shower and thought about the possibilities.

FIVE

FIONA TEXTED Sam the next day and asked if he wanted to hang out. She even said he could pick the activity since she'd chosen the last couple times. He didn't immediately reply and Fiona worried that it had all gotten too weird for him when they hung out at the lake. It was understandable if Sam was freaked out. He didn't seem so when she dropped him off at home. If anything, he was all smiles, giving Fiona a tight hug and telling her how awesome their day had been. Fiona told him she had fun too, leaving him with a kiss on the cheek.

Sam replied a couple hours later with an enthusiastic, that's great! Fiona wasn't sure if she should be relieved or worried. Relieved, because she genuinely liked Sam and she didn't want her relationship with him ruined; worried because she knew she was playing with fire.

It was one thing to throw out those insane fantasies when she and Josh were making love, but quite another to contemplate them by the cold light of day. She and Josh didn't discuss it further, which left Fiona to act on how they left things the night before. Fiona was exhausted by her long day in the sun and slept in that morning—a rarity for the early riser—and Josh was out the door before she rolled out of bed.

Sam suggested they play a board game. Of course, he wants to stay indoors, she thought. He may have had the right idea. The day was supposed to be a scorcher, up into the 90s. Fiona texted back, telling him to come over when he was ready.

Fiona was not normally a day drinker, but she was working on a glass of wine when Sam came to the door. The nervous, butterflies-in-her-stomach feeling was a new one to her. As she didn't date that much in her younger days, Fiona didn't have much experience with waiting for the cute boy to come and pick her up. It was so much better to hang out with a group and just see what developed. She told herself that's what was going on with Sam, but it just didn't feel that way. The sense of anticipation felt like champagne bubbles floating through her body.

Rather than rush to the door, Fiona watched Sam through their video doorbell. He shifted nervously from foot to foot and held a couple of large board game boxes. She'd never seen his hair look so clean and combed, and he wore a button-up shirt with some kind of design on it, rather than one of his ever-present comic book t-shirts. He looked cute. Fiona found him attractive in a way her husband would never understand. Thinking of Josh didn't help her nerves.

Is he really okay with this? Josh told me to go for it, but does he mean it? Josh was supremely confident—and completely dismissive of Sam—but Fiona still didn't get how her husband could be okay with her hooking up with another man. She was tempted to test Josh by behaving herself today, but telling him something happened, just to test his reaction. That way, if he lost it, she could tell him it was all a hoax. Fiona was so busy worrying about what Josh wanted that she didn't really think about what she wanted. Maybe that was on purpose.

Fiona just went with the thrill she felt from Sam's attention, which was so unlike her. She was the kind of woman who had a plan for everything—with another plan if that plan failed. Fiona didn't just feel something and go with it—not anymore. And as she watched Sam through the video doorbell, she finally had a moment of rationality. This is nuts. It's not okay just because Josh is okay with it. What am I thinking? Fiona was panicked because—for the first time—she considered that something might actually happen between her and Sam. That made her feel all light and tingly and excited, but that didn't mean she should do it. While she argued in her head, Sam stood waiting. There was no time to figure it all out.

Sam waited long enough. Fiona pulled out of her head and fetched him at the door.

"Come on in. Sorry it took me so long. I didn't hear the bell," she said, stepping aside to let the young man enter.

Sam's reaction on seeing her washed away Fiona's indecision. She basked in his attention.

He was so busy drinking her in that it took him a moment to move. Fiona managed to suppress her smile until he had passed her and couldn't see it. Her sundress had the desired effect. It was an olive-green number dotted with tiny flowers that buttoned up the front and just about hit mid-thigh. Fiona hadn't worn it in ages, and the last time she did, she wore tights and a tank top under it. She was a big fan of layering. But there was no tank top or tights for Sam's visit. The blue straps of her lacy bralette were twisted with the dress's spaghetti straps. She was sure Sam noticed. Fiona walked ahead of him to the back of the house so he could watch her. She may have felt conflicted, but she didn't act like it.

Fiona thought they could play on the broad coffee table back in the sunroom they used as a family room. It had been converted to a full-fledged part of the house years ago, with heat and air conditioning run to it. There was a big, slouchy leather couch on one side of the table, with a matching loveseat to the right. Fiona chased one of their cats off the table so Sam could place his stuff.

"Thanks for inviting me over," Sam said.

"I'm not tearing you away from anything important? No online raids today?"

"I can raid later. It's better to get out of my room, right?"

"I think I'm rubbing off on you, good."

"Mom was happy I'm out of the house."

"I bet she was. Can I get you anything?"

"How about a Coke?"

"Sorry, we don't really drink soda. I've got iced tea, water, beer, wine."

"Uh, iced tea will be fine."

It was only two in the afternoon, but Fiona poured herself a second glass of wine. Now that Sam was in the house her nerves were off the charts. The butterflies were so bad she wanted to hop up and down. Whatever happens...happens, Josh said. Should anything happen? she questioned. Fiona had no answers. All she knew was that Sam was there and the energy between them was as strong as ever.

"What do we have to play?" she asked, returning to the family room and handing Sam his glass. He thoughtfully placed a coaster under it.

"I brought a couple choices, but I'd really like to play this one game called Dungeon Crawl. It's like a stripped-down version of role-playing games. All you really have to do is move and roll. If you beat the monster, you get treasure.”

“And if I don’t?” she asked.

“Stuff happens. It’s really easy, Fiona. I promise.”

“I’m up for it. Let’s do this.”

Sam went about setting up the game, while Fiona sat on the loveseat to his right, glancing over the rules. The game was straightforward. It wasn’t like she had to roll up a character. She just had to pick an archetype. Playing a wizard would be fun, but she decided to be a thief because it looked easier and the idea of being a thief was cool.

“You can move up to six spaces,” he explained, placing stacks of small cards beside the board. They were grouped by level and divided between monsters and treasure. “Are you ready?”

“I think I’ve got it. Who goes first?”

“You can go.”

Fiona moved, but didn’t reach a cell on her first turn. Sam went next, moving away from the central chamber in a different direction. He played a wizard and could go deeper into the dungeon. His little figure stood outside a cell. Sam drew a monster from the pile but paused before looking at it.

“I have an idea. What do you say if we make this interesting?”

“What do you have in mind?” She eyed him suspiciously.

“Don’t worry, it’s not strip role-playing,” Sam replied, cheeks reddening even as he said it.

“Is that a thing?”

“I don’t know. It’s mostly guys who play, so why would you do it?”

“Good point,” she agreed, laughing. “What’s your proposal?”

“I was thinking that if you fight a monster and lose, you can either take the damage or answer a question.”

“What kind of question?” she asked.

“Anything the other person wants.”

“Like Truth or Dare, without the dares?”

“We can do dares if you like,” Sam suggested.

“That’s okay, Sam. I’m a little old for Truth or Dare.”

“What do you think?”

Sam was eager and while Fiona was happy to see him coming out of his shell and engaging her more, she wasn’t stupid. His effort to build on what had happened the day before was transparent. What does he think this will lead to? she wondered. Everyone seemed to want something to happen, so why did Fiona have so much resistance? Maybe because I'm a married woman and Sam is my husband's cousin, she thought, answering the unspoken question. Fiona snatched up her wine and drank deep. Just relax and have fun, she told herself.

"Okay. Let's do it," she answered.

"Awesome. I'm going to shoot a fireball into the cell."

"Don't you have to go in there to fight?" she asked.

"Wizards get to attack from the safety of outside the cell, but I don't get to see the monster before I choose my spell, which means it might not work."

"But you don't get attacked if you miss?"

"Right."

"Sounds like I should have played a wizard," Fiona said.

"I'm going to shoot a fireball in there."

Sam turned over a monster card with a troll on it and rolled two eight-sided dice, handily defeating the monster. "Too easy," he gloated, taking a treasure card.

Fiona entered a cell on her next turn and defeated a wight. 250 gold pieces went into her treasure bag.

"Very nice," Sam said.

They went half a dozen rounds moving into different cells and collecting treasure. Sam did not disappoint, glancing over every time she leaned forward to move her figure or roll the dice. The sundress fell open to give the young man a nice, teasing view of her bralette. He watched when she sat back too. The short dress hit high on her thigh when she leaned back into the loveseat, flashing miles of long leg for him. Fiona tried some spying of her own, peeking to see the effect she had on Sam, but his shorts were baggy enough to hide any evidence. His eager eyes had effect enough on her. Fiona didn't need to see his hard-on tenting out his shorts to feel that familiar tingle between her legs. She chided herself for being so excited by the kid's crush, but she couldn't help it.

Sam lost combat twice, but since he wasn't in the cells with the monsters, he didn't take damage—or have to answer questions. Fiona used her special ability to move through secret doors on a low roll and delved deeper into the dungeon, moving into more dangerous territory. She ran into her first trouble when she encountered a wererat.

“Ooo, that’s a tough one,” Sam said, as he overturned the card.

“I can hit a fourteen,” she confidently replied.

Sam handed Fiona the dice and she blew on them before rattling and tossing them onto the board. She fell short. Far short. The two eight-sided dice yielded a measly three.

“Dammit,” Fiona cursed.

“That’s rough. What are you gonna do?”

If Fiona took the damage, Sam would roll dice for the monster and anything could happen, from him missing to her character being killed. She was competitive, but that wasn’t the only reason Fiona did not want the damage. Sam’s addition to the game sounded fun. She was curious how far he’d push his questions.

“I don’t want to risk losing my treasure and getting hurt. You can ask your question.”

Excitement radiated from Sam. He paused, working up his nerve. Sam wanted to be risqué with her, but it didn’t come naturally. Fiona was sympathetic, realizing the young man had probably never been in such a position with a girl before. He sipped his iced tea to buy time before finally asking his question.

“When did you lose your virginity?” he asked, quickly adding, “You don’t have to answer, if you don’t want to.”

“No, it’s okay. A deal’s a deal,” she replied, smiling. That was a softball question to her. “I was sixteen. You don’t think that’s too young, do you?”

“Oh no, not at all. That’s about normal, right?” The words came out in a jumble.

“I don’t know. What’s normal? Everyone moves at their own pace.”

“Yeah, yeah. How did it…” Sam paused, thinking that might cross a line.

“It was in my friend Dave’s basement. We were getting high and watching a movie. His parents were upstairs. We’d hooked up before but lost our nerve. I don’t think he knew what a crush I had on him. If he’d pressed it, I’d probably have given it up before, but he was a nice guy.”

“Yeah, you should never pressure a girl into doing it,” Sam agreed.

“Nice to know you’re a gentleman, Sam. Anyway, things got hot and that time I didn’t tell him to stop. It wasn’t great because neither of us knew what the hell we were doing. You know what that is, right?”

“Oh yeah. Your first time always sucks,” he agreed, a little too quickly.

Fiona felt guilty about her last comment, remembering he was probably a virgin and plowed through, so it didn't get awkward.

"At least he remembered to pull out!" she said.

"Yeah, you need to do that," Sam replied without much conviction.

"It gets much better after that first time," she assured him. The room filled with awkward silence and Fiona said, "Your turn."

Combat continued and Sam lost his fight but remained safe because he battled from a distance. Fiona won a fight with a kobold but had no such luck with a skeleton she encountered, due to another unlucky low roll.

"Lay a question on me," Fiona said.

"Are you sure? The monster could miss you."

She felt bad his confidence wavered. She liked confident Sam. He was cute. Fiona leaned toward him, giving a nice view down her dress, hoping it would perk him up.

"Yep. I want the question. Go for it, Sam."

Sam's gaze was drawn down her dress like a moth to a flame. He licked his lips and asked, "Uhm, how many guys have you, uhm, been with?"

Fiona sat back and Sam looked at her face again. It was amusing to her that they were both pretending that he wasn't doing what he was doing—looking down her dress. A smile played on her lips.

"Now that is kind of a personal question, Sam. Would you ask a girl you were dating that?"

"I, uhm, maybe? I don't know. Should I?" he stammered.

"A lot of girls would be pretty offended by that. Some people think the past should be left there."

"Yeah, I guess that's a good way to go." Sam was contemplative. "Did you and Josh talk about that stuff?"

"We have," she replied, thinking of how her husband really enjoyed hearing about some of her sluttier young exploits. He always teased her about them afterwards, but Josh relished hearing tales of Fiona doing something wild.

"That's cool."

"I'm not really the shy, retiring type. I also think secrets are bad. What about you, Sam? Have you ever asked a girl about her sexual past before?"

His cheeks flushed and his eyes darted around the room, like he was searching for his answer.

"No, I don't think so. It's never really come up. I mean, it could..."

Fiona reached out and put her hand on his arm. "It's okay, Sam. I didn't mean to put you on the spot. If you're not comfortable talking about this stuff, we don't have to."

"It's cool, Fiona. Really. I like it. It's just...I don't have a ton of experience when it comes to..."

"I get it. Listen, you're kind of shy. There's nothing wrong with that."

Sam laughed. "It hurts the dating life. Girls like the confident guys."

"Not every girl is looking for that. A lot of those guys are obnoxious."

Sam shot her a look that made her feel defensive.

"I know Josh likes to get under your skin and tease you, but he really does care about you. You don't have a brother, but that's how brothers can be. My brothers were that way, and I'm a girl. They didn't cut me any slack. And listen, most of the guys I was with before Josh were nothing like him."

"Let me guess, you dated a lot of role-playing nerds?" Sam was skeptical.

"Well no, but the guys I hung out with were not popular jocks. And I knew some really cute guys who were shy like you. I'll take a sweet guy over some overconfident jerk any day."

"All the girls say that, but that's not who they go home with."

"You'd be surprised, Sam. I've hooked up with guys you'd never guess, if you're judging me by Josh. You need to keep an open mind. If you decide no girls are going to want you, it'll become a self-fulfilling prophecy."

"Sorry, Fiona. I know you're cool. You're not..."

His sentence trailed off, but Fiona didn't need Sam to finish it. You're not like the other girls. She was proud a kid like Sam liked her. Even if he got his hands on some busty bimbo, a guy like Sam would never be happy with her.

"You never did answer, Fiona," Sam said.

"I guess I didn't. Do you really want to know?"

"Only if you want to say it."

"Questions like that can be a trap for girls, because guys love to judge us. If the number's too low, guys think you're a prude. If it's too high, you're a slut and all they want to do is screw you."

"I'd never judge you, Fiona."

"I know. You're a good guy, Sam. I don't mind telling you. Counting Josh, I've been with eight guys. I don't think that's too many, do you?"

"No," he answered.

Sam was being a gentleman, but she could see him doing the math in his head. Fiona was thirty-six, so eight different guys didn't sound bad averaged out. But she'd been with Josh for more than fifteen years, so the other seven guys were spread over six years. Did Sam think an average of one a year was too many? If so, he had the grace not to show it.

How would he feel if he knew the truth? she wondered. It wasn't like those guys were exactly even spread over that span. There was that particularly fun summer Fiona spent in Europe when she was nineteen. Plus, Sam had only asked about guys...

"It's not like I was screwing every guy I met, but I also didn't act like what I had was precious either. If it felt right, I just sort of rolled with things. That's a good way to go through life, I think. Don't you, Sam?"

"Oh, yeah. For sure. I feel the same way. If it feels good, do it. Right?"

"Exactly. Listen, Sam. I get how you feel. It's not like guys were tripping over themselves to go out with me. Especially when I was in high school."

"That's crazy, Fiona. You're beautiful."

"Thanks, Sam." She smiled warmly. Fiona knew how he felt, but hearing it made her glow. "It's not true, but you're sweet to say it. I work with what I've got, but guys weren't looking at me like I was Jenny McCarthy when I was younger."

His blank look let her know he had no idea who that was. God, it made her feel old.

"She was in Playboy and on MTV. Okay, those are both things you probably don't know about. Anyway, Jenny McCarthy was a bombshell and I was not."

"So, like Margot Robbie or Scarlett Johansson?"

"Sure, like them. I guess you like actresses in comic book movies."

"Yeah, but they aren't the sexiest. Natalie Portman from the Thor movies is really hot, and you remind me of her."

Fiona laughed. "Thanks. You're actually not the first person to tell me that. Telling me I look like Natalie Portman was one of Josh's lines when we first met. That's funny."

"He's right. And she's hot, too."

Fiona's pale cheeks were scarlet. It was one thing to have Sam checking her out, but quite another to have him come right out and say she was sexy. Knowing a twenty-year-old guy like Sam still thought she was hot was just the boost she needed as she moved into her late 30s. Guys his age saw her as somebody's mom, the nice lady who lived in the neighborhood. They didn't give her those kinds of looks anymore—not that those were ever plentiful for her. But Sam looked at her that way, and knowing he wanted her like that gave Fiona a buzzy sensation that she felt to her core.

"You really don't have to say that. I don't need my ego propped up yet. But try me in a couple years and I'll probably be begging for it," she said.

"I really mean it, Fiona. You're hot. It's crazy if you don't know that."

"Where were you when no one noticed me back in the day? I'm serious, I was never the girl guys fell over themselves over. Sure, some guy friends had crushes on me, but that was after they got to know me. I was the cool girl guys hung out with, but not the one they chased after. Sometimes I think those guys only made their move because I was there, and it was convenient."

"I wish I'd been there back in the day."

The moment hung between them. After their intimate confessions, the territory ahead was fraught with danger. Fiona knew the prudent path was to get back to their game, but she couldn't help herself. The girl who wanted boys' attention was in control.

"Yeah? What would you have done? Would you have made your move?" she asked.

It didn't seem possible, but Sam turned redder than before. His mouth moved, but no words came out. His answer eluded him.

"It's okay, Sam. I wouldn't ask if I didn't want to know. You don't need to be shy around me. You've seen me topless, right?"

A smile quirked the corner of his mouth as Sam realized that there really was something going on there and she wasn't just toying with him. It was barely perceptible, but a change came over him. Sam sat just a bit straighter on the couch.

"That's true. It was pretty awesome, Fiona."

"I liked it too. It was very freeing."

They fell silent again, thinking of things they were too frightened to speak aloud. Fiona knew that whatever happened next was going to change things—probably forever. It wouldn't just change things between her and Sam, but between Fiona and her husband as well. Josh gave her the go ahead—whatever happens...happens—but it still felt like such a massive step to take. Fiona took her marital vows seriously. She wasn't foolish enough to think that meant she'd never be tempted. A little temptation could even be good for a marriage, she thought. Keep the fires burning hot, keep you reminded you're still a woman. But she was sure she'd always resist that temptation—until now. Doing anything with Sam—even kissing him—was so wrong, no matter what Josh said. Crossing that line was insane. So, why did Fiona want to do it so badly?

"Have you ever done it?" she asked. "I mean, make the first move on a girl."

Sam looked offended. "Of course, I have. A couple times." He looked down. "Just a couple times, and it didn't go so great. That's pretty lame, huh?"

Fiona scooted closer and was on the edge of the loveseat. It pushed her dress high on her thighs and she didn't fix it. Sam's gaze focused there, as if he could will her dress to move just those couple inches higher.

"I don't think that's lame at all. I get that it's hard for guys, especially younger guys. Look at it this way, I already know if I'm going to kiss you or not on a date, but the guy needs to guess, and if he guesses wrong, he faces rejection. It's tough. I've always felt bad about that."

"People don't really date anymore, Fiona," he said. Sam looked apologetic for pointing out she was old. "We just sort of hang and get to know each other, and I guess things just happen. I'm just not too good at making things happen."

Whatever happens...happens.

"That's sort of what I did too, back in the day. I didn't date much either. But that's not my point. I'm just saying I get how much pressure is on a guy when he's with a girl he really likes. Unless she does something super-obvious, he's just got to wing it."

"If you were into a guy, did you do something to let him know?"

"Sometimes, if I was drunk or high enough. I wasn't super-brave either. Girls have pressure, too. We could be out with a guy we really want to kiss us, and then he doesn't, and we're crushed."

"I bet that didn't happen to you, Fiona."

Fiona smiled her crooked smile, thinking of the unrequited crushes of her past. "It happens to all of us, Sam. The difference between boys and girls—men and women—is that sometimes women can cushion the blow. Sometimes we'll let you kiss us because you're nice—even if we're not that into you—or because it's less awkward than turning away from a kiss."

“That’s not really fair. That kind of leads us on.”

“Good point,” she acknowledged.

“Did you do that a lot? Let guys kiss you?” Sam looked oddly eager.

“That makes me sound like a slut.” Fiona laughed.

“Sorry.”

“I’m not offended. You shouldn’t apologize so much. I’m not saying you should be an overconfident jerk—I like the way you are—but have a little more confidence.”

“Okay. So, did you?”

“I may have...once or twice.” Her crooked smile was back. It was always prominent when she was feeling naughty.

“I wish more girls were like you.”

“Ha ha. You’ve got to take me off this pedestal. I’m no angel. Just ask Josh.”

“I don’t want you to be an angel,” Sam replied.

He looked down, still unsure of himself. Fiona thought the see-sawing between forward and reticent was endearing. The very fact that Sam was feeling it through and trying to find his way was what made him so appealing. It was tough to admit, but she wanted to be his Mrs. Robinson. It made her feel sexy and vibrant.

“No? What do you want me to be, Sam?”

Sam looked up at her and Fiona’s clear blue eyes went wide seeing all of the pent-up desire in him. He wanted her. He wanted her so much that she thought he just might have the nerve to lean over and kiss her, but Sam was still Sam. He was not going to just kiss his cousin’s wife. Sam was probably afraid Josh would thump him if he followed through on his crush.

“I think you’re perfect like you are.”

“Sam...”

They were right there on the edge. Fiona’s heart pounded. Sam wanted her in a way she hadn’t felt wanted in years. She clenched her fists, realizing her hands were shaking. This was the moment, but Fiona had no idea what she should do.

“How far did you go?” he asked.

“What?” she asked, blinking away thoughts of climbing into Sam’s lap and wrapping her arms around him, pulling him to her...

“How nice were you, when a guy kissed you? Was it just a kiss?”

“You want to know all my secrets, don’t you?”

“Just the fun ones. You said it doesn’t offend you.”

“It doesn’t. I like it. This is fun.”

Sam smiled, waiting for her answer. Fiona looked to his lap and was frustrated that his baggy cargo shorts didn’t reveal his secrets. Her eyes flicked back up and Fiona saw she was caught looking. She was past blushing, so she smiled in acknowledgment.

“Again, I wasn’t a slut or anything, but if a guy was cute—even if I wasn’t that into him—it could be fun to fool around. I didn’t want to lead anyone on, but sometimes your hormones get the better of you. You know what I mean?” she answered.

“Yeah, I totally get it, Fiona.”

They stared at each other. Sam held his hands in his lap. Yeah, he was hiding a boner. He was so tense he was stiffer than a statue. Fiona was so far out on the edge of the loveseat she was about to tumble to the floor. She licked her lips. She was on fire. Fiona couldn’t take it anymore.

“You want to kiss me, don’t you, Sam?”

Tension drained from the young man, replaced by something else. Hope?

“Fiona...”

Sam screwed up his courage and said, “Yeah, Fiona. I’ve wanted to kiss you forever, but...”

Sam didn’t finish the thought. There were a lot of possible *but*s, however the obvious one was Josh. Whatever happens...happens. How did she explain her husband’s laissez faire toward her body? Fiona didn’t understand it, so how could she expect an earnest young man like Sam to get it?

Fiona felt like she was moving through a haze as she moved to sit next to Sam on the couch. She reached out with trembling hands, cradled his face, and kissed him. His eyes were wide as hers fluttered closed. Sam’s lips were still for a moment before giving her some play. It was the sweet, tentative kiss of a young man without a lot of experience. It was a gentle, nice kiss. Sam’s lips were warm and soft, his cheeks scratchy from a few days’ stubble. Fiona was pulled back to the first tender kisses of her youth, when she and the boys were finding their way—before the bursts of teenage hormones turned those kisses into frenzied attacks that were raced through in a rush to slip hands under clothing and fumble for bra clasps and buttons.

The kiss was short but left them both heated. The heat of Sam's lips lingered on Fiona's and she wanted to kiss him again. She leaned her forehead against his and wished she knew what was happening in there. Whatever it was, Fiona knew it wasn't going to stop with a kiss.

SIX

“SORRY if that wasn’t good. I haven’t done a lot of that,” he murmured.

“I liked it, Sam. It was sweet. I liked it enough to want to kiss you again.”

“I do need more practice.”

Fiona caressed his cheek. “I guess it’s a good thing I’m here then.”

Sam kissed her this time and she didn’t leave it at an innocent, teenage-style kiss. Fiona moved closer, turning more toward him, and kissed Sam hard. Her tongue teased at his lips and he took the hint. Sam did need more practice—he was a bit sloppy—but it didn’t slow her down. His confidence grew and when he touched her sides Fiona jumped. Sam tried to pull back then, but she kept him in the kiss. His light stroking fingers on her ribs tickled, but even that didn’t slow Fiona down. Her heart hammered in her chest and she was damp between her legs, and she did not want to let him go.

Fiona panted when their second kiss broke. Her lips tingled and she wondered when was the last time she and Josh just made out? She’d forgotten how exciting it could be to sit on a couch and make out with a boy. Of course, in her experience it rarely stopped at just kissing. Fiona had always gotten too excited too quickly, as the lucky guys of her youth found out. It wasn’t like she couldn’t control herself at all—Fiona didn’t sleep with everyone—she just really loved fooling around.

“You taste good.”

“That’s my French Vanilla lip balm, but thanks.”

“You’re so hot, Fiona,” Sam said.

“That’s sweet, hon, but you don’t have to keep telling me that stuff.”

Sam kissed her again, cutting off her words. Fiona gasped and let him take the lead. He leaned toward her, pushing Fiona back, but he didn't get on top of her. His hands slid from her sides to her ass—what he could grab of it while she was sitting. Her fingers raked through his unruly hair and returned his sloppy kiss with fervid passion. The room was suddenly hot, but Fiona heard the hushed sound of the central air. His hands didn't stay on her butt. They traveled up and down her body, each time creeping closer to her breasts. Fiona knew what he wanted. Sam just didn't have the nerve to go there.

"You can touch me," she breathed, planting little kisses on his lips. Fiona kissed along his jawline and then kissed his neck. "I like to be touched."

"Are you sure?" Sam sounded like he couldn't believe his good fortune.

"Do I seem unsure, Sam?" She nibbled on his neck and Sam trembled.

"God, Fiona..."

Sam groped her boobs with clumsy hands. Her heart raced from the excitement of the moment, but the young man needed guidance. Fiona slid away on the couch and regarded Sam. The young man was alight with a fiery passion and looked like he could explode at any second. Her own hands shook as she slowly unbuttoned her bodice, revealing herself to him. Sam had seen her breasts yesterday, but it still felt momentous to reveal herself to him like this. It was another deliberate step down a dangerous road. She'd acted on instinct the day before.

"Wow," he responded when she pulled her dress open. A pale blue lace bralette shrouded her breasts, but it was sheer enough that it only just concealed her dark, hardened nipples.

Fiona took his hands and placed them on her breasts—her hands over his. His big hands covered her breasts. Sam was frozen, unsure what to do.

"Don't just grab them and attack, hon. I'm not an Xbox controller. Girls are soft and delicate, and you need to treat them that way, unless they ask you not to." Fiona smiled. "Different girls like different things, but I'm really sensitive, so I like to be teased. I like it when a guy is gentle with me. Just sort of massage them."

Sam didn't move until she guided his hands. He massaged her so lightly she barely felt it.

"Not that gentle, hon. You can really touch me. I won't break. Don't worry, you'll know when you've found the sweet spot," she encouraged.

His palms grazing her nipple through the soft lace felt divine. Fiona hissed as ripples of pleasure pulsed outward from her nipples. He cupped her small breasts and his thumbs teased her nipples through the lace. Sam was a quick learner. She moaned softly and nudged her breasts into his hands.

“Mmm, just like that, Sam. That’s so good,” she moaned.

“Your tits are perfect, Fiona.”

No guy had ever told her that, and Fiona glowed. She closed her eyes and bit her lip, riding the sweet sensations Sam’s massaging hands brought her. Her pussy began to throb, and she shifted on the couch, pressing her thighs together. The spaghetti straps fell from her shoulders and Fiona’s dress folded down to her waist. Fiona felt so exposed, but decided she liked being exposed to Sam. He made her feel worshipped. She reached back and opened the clasps to free her bralette, which she shrugged off.

Fiona grabbed Sam and kissed him hard. She acted on pure desire. Her brain had stopped functioning normally as lust clouded her reasoning. Fiona no longer worried if this was a good idea. She was aroused and she wanted to do something about it. If Josh wanted her to let whatever happens... happen he was going to get his wish.

Sam’s kissing became better as his confidence grew, but his hands on her breasts distracted Fiona from that. His excitement overtook him, and his touch became firmer. Sam pinched her nipples and Fiona moaned into their kiss, which only made Sam pinch her harder.

“Careful, hon. Remember, not too hard,” she gasped.

“Okay, sorry. It’s just...”

“I know, hon. It’s all good. Mmm, that’s what I like. Yeah, Sam...”

Fiona guided his lips to her neck and Sam eagerly kissed her neck. She moved her hair aside and Sam kissed his way up. His lips were too wet, and she squirmed when they tickled, but he would learn. He found that sweet spot at the base of her jaw and Fiona swooned. Between that and his teasing her breasts, she was rapidly losing control.

“Whoa, Sam. Ease up, or you’re going to leave a mark. You can’t leave a mark, hon,” she warned, moaning out the words as Sam sucked on her neck.

“Oh shit, right.”

Sam peeled back from her, like he’d suddenly realized he was doing something wrong and had snapped to his senses. Fiona took his hand and squeezed it. His hand shook as badly as hers.

"It's okay, Sam. Really."

"Fiona...don't get me wrong...this is awesome...but what about..."

"He..." she started.

Fiona's words failed her. What do I tell him? It doesn't make sense, she thought. She had no idea how to explain this to Sam when she didn't understand it herself. Fiona naïvely went with the flow, pretending their situation wasn't complicated, but Sam was too good a guy for that. He wanted her. He looked like he'd burst at any second, but stealing his cousin's wife didn't sit right with him. Sam just needed that pause for his better angels to kick in. Fiona felt terrible because she felt no better angels. She wanted to throw Sam down on the couch and tear his clothes off. It was wrong—it felt wrong no matter what Josh said—but that wasn't slowing her down. That wasn't good enough. She owed Sam the truth. Fiona had to explain things to him. If for no other reason, than just because she didn't want good Sam to think she was some kind of cheating slut. I'm not am I? she questioned.

"Sam, he knows," she finally said.

He just stared at her, confused.

"Josh knows," she repeated. "I don't keep secrets from him. He knows about yesterday."

"That I saw...that you..."

"Yeah, I told him about it last night when he got home."

After I made him screw me silly, she thought. Was she ready to confess that part to him? She was embarrassed to admit how much she liked his attention. Fiona realized what Sam thought of her mattered a great deal. The young man looked panicked now. His color drained and his eyes were wide.

"It's okay, Sam. He's not mad. Josh doesn't mind," she reassured him.

"I don't understand. What do you mean?"

"I told Josh about what happened on our hike. I told him how I ended up topless by the lake, and he was okay with it. He actually thought it was funny."

"How? Why? I mean, why isn't he..."

This was where it got tricky. Fiona couldn't tell Sam the reason Josh gave her for his laidback attitude about this. Josh doesn't see you as a threat. Josh thinks you're a harmless nerd. He's so unthreatened he'd let me fuck you. No, Sam did not need to hear any of that. It would crush him. But what other explanation could she give Sam?

“Josh isn’t the jealous type. Not at all.”

“But still, Fiona. I wouldn’t be okay with that.”

“I know it sounds weird, but he’s not mad at all. Trust me. Josh thinks I deserved it for teasing you.”

“Maybe you did,” he allowed, flashing a tiny smile.

Fiona returned that smile, feeling tension leaking away. “Maybe I did. I guess I wasn’t behaving myself.”

“This is different, though. You’re not just flashing me. There’s no way Josh will be okay with this.”

“He knows you’re here today. We talked about it. Josh knows something might happen.”

Sam looked truly shocked now and moved away from Fiona. He still couldn’t keep his gaze from her. Fiona turned self-conscious about sitting there topless and crossed her arms over her chest.

“Why would he let you...let us...”

“I’m a grown woman, Sam. My husband doesn’t let me do anything,” she insisted, annoyed at the implication she belonged to Josh. But Sam had a point. Fiona would not be doing this without Josh’s permission.

“I know that, Fiona. That’s not what I meant.”

“Sorry, I know. I’m feeling a little defensive. Josh knows something could happen and he’s okay with it. You’re going to have to trust me on that, unless you want to ask him yourself.”

“I...no.”

“I can’t really explain it to you because I don’t really understand it, but he’s okay with it. I told him about you checking me out there other day and that I kind of liked it.”

“Really?”

“Yes, really. Don’t get a big head. It just feels good. Josh likes other guys checking me out. It makes him proud. And he thinks it’s harmless because you’re his cousin. He teased me about liking it, and I teased him back, which led into this weird conversation about what if it goes further.”

Sam didn’t speak. He just sat there bewildered. Fiona moved closer to him, taking his hands, acutely aware it exposed her breasts again. She couldn’t believe she was telling him all of this. Fiona was fully exposed, and not because of her breasts.

“Please don’t take this the wrong way, hon, but I think Josh is okay with something happening because it’s you. He thinks...” Fiona couldn’t finish it because she couldn’t think of a nice way to put it.

“He thinks I’m harmless. He thinks I’m a nerd.”

“Sam...”

“I get it. He was probably like let the nerd have some fun.”

Fiona looked down. She didn’t like the bitter tone in Sam’s voice. She wouldn’t lie to him and deny it, but she hated confirming it. Sam pulled his hands from hers, but she grabbed them again, holding on tighter.

“He didn’t say that,” she began, thinking, Not exactly. “Josh thought it might build your confidence if something happened.”

“Like a pity fuck?”

“No! I wouldn’t do that, Sam!”

Sam jumped up and walked toward the door. Fiona followed. She pulled the spaghetti straps over her shoulders to keep the dress from sliding off her body but didn’t bother to fix the buttons. The room that was so hot before was frosty now—and it wasn’t just the central air. Fiona touched his shoulder with her free hand and Sam remained still. She spoke to his back.

“Say something, Sam.”

“What do you think, Fiona? You’ve talked about Josh. What about you? What are you doing here?”

“I like you, Sam.”

“What does that mean?”

“It means I like you. I’ve loved spending time with you.”

“Is it an ego thing?”

“No, not at all. I know you like me. I like you, too. This isn’t a one-way thing.”

“But you’re married, Fiona.”

“I know. This is so confusing. But being married doesn’t mean I’m dead. I can still be attracted to other men.”

Sam turned looking down at her. His face was hard. Fiona wanted to hold him and kiss him. She wanted to show him this wasn’t what he thought. She wasn’t screwing with him. Sam didn’t seem receptive to any of that.

“What are you doing with me, Fiona? I need to know.”

“I love Josh. He’s my husband. I’m happy—mostly. I’m not leaving him. But I like you, too. I don’t really know what that means because I didn't expect it. I don't have a plan. I just know I like spending time with you, and you're handsome, and this isn't about a pity fuck. I kissed you because I wanted to. But I wouldn't have done it if Josh wasn't good with it. I've never cheated on him."

Storm clouds blew over his face. Sam looked like he couldn't decide if he should stay or go. Fiona didn't blame him. She didn't know what she wanted either. She was angry with Josh for being so laid back about it and letting this happen. That was unfair, but Fiona didn't feel like being fair.

"What happens now?" Sam asked.

"I don't know."

The words were hardly out of her mouth when Sam pounced. He grabbed Fiona and kissed her. It was so sudden, and he was so strong, that she went weak in his grasp, overcome by his dominance. She recovered and tried pushing at him, but Sam was relentless. He was not releasing her. Sam moved her backward—half-dragging—toward the couch. He laid her back on it, and by then Fiona didn't want to escape. She was impressed. Sam showed he wasn't some harmless nerd after all.

Sam pressed down on her and Fiona's dress rode up her thighs. His hardness was evident through his shorts. Her arms went around him, drawing Sam to her. His hands frantically roamed her body, but it was seemingly without purpose. He groped her breasts one moment, kneaded her butt the next. Sam was all instinct—no finesse. The sheer aggression of it turned Fiona on—even if the technique didn't. She always liked being taken like this.

"Oh, Sam..." she gasped when he went for her neck.

Sam was not gentle, and Fiona did not admonish him to be this time. Let him leave a mark. He fumbled under the dress and found her damp panties. He grabbed for her pussy, his fingers attacking her sex.

"Hon, not so rough," she warned.

Sam was a man possessed. He didn't listen. His fingers slipped all over her panties. The poking on her thigh hurt. Fiona pulled his face from her neck and nailed him with her blue eyes.

"Sam, hon, slow down. You don't have to prove anything to me. I like you how you are."

"I...I'm sorry, Fiona."

Fiona tried holding onto him, but Sam peeled off her and sat back on the couch. She followed, kneeling beside him, sinking into the buttery leather.

He looked away from her and resisted her attempts to turn his head back. She repeated his name until Sam let her turn his head. Fiona had never seen so many emotions on one face.

"I'm sorry, Sam. I did this. I guess I knew it wasn't a good idea and I messed around with you because I liked how it felt, but I really should have thought all this through. I let myself get carried away, and I shouldn't have. You're so sweet, Sam. You deserve better than this."

"Fiona..."

"I mean it. I'm sorry if I hurt you with any of this."

"I'm not hurt. I don't know what I'm feeling."

"If you want to go..."

Sam looked up at her. Kneeling on the couch beside him, she was finally taller than Sam.

"I don't know everything I'm feeling, but I know I don't want to go."

"No?"

Her dress was bunched around her waist like a belt, leaving her body exposed to him. Sam's hands slid up her hips and over her sides. He touched her breasts and Fiona whimpered. She was still incredibly aroused—despite her whipsawing emotions. His soft hands on her breasts were marvelous, and when he strummed her nipples Fiona couldn't bite back her moan. Sam was a quick learner. He'd figured out how to make her melt by teasing her breasts.

"Sam...honey..."

Fiona cradled his head and guided his mouth to her chest. Sam tentatively kissed her nipples, sending chills down her spine. She urged her breasts toward him. Sam sucked and she cried out, fingers tightening in his hair. His gentle sucking was like a spike of desire mainlining straight to her pussy. Her clit pulsed, begging for attention. Sam felt her trembling and sucked harder. She guided him between both her breasts, always licking, sucking and kissing. The young man was a natural. Her nipples throbbed. Her body throbbed. Fiona groped for his arm until she pulled his hand up and then guided his hand between her thighs.

"Like this, hon. Touch me like this," she moaned.

Sam was eager to learn and took guidance well. His fingers pressed her lips and her sex squished as she guided his fingers upward, applying pressure where she so desperately needed it. Fiona gyrated her hips, working her pussy against his fingers. All Sam really had to do was keep his fingers rigid and stay still. She was willing to do the work. Fiona panted, her heat rising. She buried her face in his hair as her cries grew louder, filling the family room. Her silky panties were pushed up between her lips. Sam's fingers massaged slippery flesh and the fabric bit into her clit. The pressure was fantastic. Fiona shook. She released his hand as she needed to cling to him to remain upright. Sam didn't need her guidance now. His fingers worked her pussy like he was born for it. Her shaking became violent. Her short nails dug into his arm.

"Oh...ohhh...fuck!" she cried.

The orgasm seized her, and Fiona was stiff against Sam, almost crushing his head in her embrace. She shook and moaned and gasped and finally pushed away when it was all too much, flopping onto her back on the couch as she tried to compose herself.

"Oh...my...god! Oh...fuck..." She often showed a filthy mouth when she came.

Fiona curled into herself, squeezing her body tight as the aftershocks of her climax rocked her. She didn't know how long that lasted, but she came back to herself and languidly stretched out on the couch, placing her feet in Sam's lap. He stared at her in awe. Her smile quirked sideways.

"Thank you," she said sweetly.

SAM BEAMED AT FIONA. He was the kid who just robbed the candy store. Sam knew he made her come, and that was enough to make the young man feel like a lottery winner. Fiona lazily traced her foot over his lap and felt the hard lump there.

"Thank you, Fiona. That was the most awesome thing that has ever happened to me," he exclaimed.

She laughed. "You don't have to pour it on, Sam. I'm already feeling amazing."

"I'm not. That was incredible. Really. You're so hot, Fiona."

His eyes swept up and down her body, consuming her. A huge wet spot graced the front of her panties—her dress was around her waist. Sam caressed her smooth, bare legs, hand gradually creeping higher. Fiona peeled her dress open, exposing her breasts to his hungry eyes. The lump in his shorts jumped under the arch of her foot.

“I had my fun, but you still need yours.” Her tone was low and lusty.

“You don’t have to...”

“I can’t leave you like this, Sam. It’s not fair.”

Her foot became more aggressive in his lap and Sam groaned. Fiona used both feet to massage his cock through his shorts. The way he shook made her fear he came in his underwear, but she didn’t feel the wetness.

“If you want... I mean, I’m not going to stop you,” he stammered.

Fiona was up and took the moment she stood to let her dress drop to the floor. The soaked panties were uncomfortable, and she lost those too. Sam stared in awe. Had he ever seen a completely nude woman in front of him? Fiona wanted to ask, but knew it was impolite. She gave Sam a moment to stare and then straddled his lap. Fiona grinded on him, knowing it would leave a wet spot on his shorts. She didn’t think he’d mind.

“I really do like you, Sam. I need you to believe that.”

She ran her fingers through his hair and gave him a long, pulse-racing kiss. Sam held her back, but his hands slid to her butt. He gave it a good squeeze now, pulling Fiona into him. She ground harder on his lap in response and moaned into this kiss. Don’t lose it yet, or you’re going to miss out, she thought.

“I do, Fiona. I do. I’m sorry about what I said before.”

“You had every right to be angry. I want to make that up to you, hon. Will you let me?”

“Uh, yeah.”

They kissed again. His hands slid all over her body. Fiona wanted to guide him but didn’t want him to feel bad about his inexperience. He didn’t need to grab her ass so hard it felt like he was going to pull it apart. It had been a long time, but she recalled how young men could be rough in their excitement.

Fiona went to her knees in front of him on the floor. She reached for his shorts, but Sam was quicker, pushing them down to his ankles with his underwear. His cock sprang forward, dripping with excitement. It was Fiona’s turn to be shocked.

The glimpse she got of Sam’s prick that morning in his bedroom didn’t do him justice. The stiff column stood out proudly from a nest of curly dark hair that didn’t conceal the two heavy spheres that hung beneath it. Sam was thick—thicker than she'd guessed—and Fiona squeezed her thighs together as she thought how he would feel inside her. She did not consider herself a size queen at all, but she knew from experience just how well a nice, thick cock could hit the spot. Fiona had no complaints about Josh, but Sam was just bigger. The shaft before her jumped with the young man's pulse, and the head dripped.

Fiona looked up at Sam and saw the excited anticipation in his eyes. He almost looked like he was in a trance as he watched her face, inches away from his cock. She knew what he expected, and the idea of going down on him was appealing. Fiona was proud of the way she made guys lose their minds back in the day. But a fresh flight of butterflies took flight in her tummy, and the enormity of what she was about to do hit her. Can I do this? she wondered. Fiona wanted to suck Sam—she really wanted to make him feel good—but deep down she knew it wasn't right. It was a hell of a time for her morals to kick in—kneeling naked before her husband's cousin.

"I'll be right back," she said, hopping to her feet and fleeing the family room. She heard Sam groan behind her.

Fiona paced the kitchen, just beyond the family room. It was weird pacing the kitchen in the nude. Fiona was not the type to walk the house naked. She was a mother! But it was a testament to what was happening that it was the least weird thing about the afternoon. I can't leave him like this, but I know I shouldn't blow him. It wasn't just morals. Fiona lost her nerve when it came to testing Josh's whatever happens...happens marching orders. She was sure Josh would lose it if she told him she blew his cousin. Fiona knew what to do. She dug in the cabinets, pulled a slender, dark green bottle, and returned to the family room.

"Relax," she ordered, joining Sam on the couch, sitting back on her heels.

"Oookay." Sam looked confused but seeing Fiona naked kept him from questioning anything. Whatever happened, it was going to be good for him.

"Have you ever had a hand job?"

"Yeah, of course."

"I promise I'll be better."

Fiona poured a small measure of extra virgin olive oil into her palm and rubbed it between her hands. This was not what she had in mind when she bought the premium oil but figured it would do the trick. She wrapped a slick hand around Sam's shaft, and she moaned.

“Ohh, Fiona...”

“I haven’t even started yet, hon.”

She leaned forward and tenderly kissed him as she started stroking. The olive oil made her fist glide up and down his shaft and Fiona tightened her grip. She was left-handed and watched her gold wedding band flash in the light as her hand moved, like a beacon to her infidelity. Fiona knew intellectually she wasn’t cheating, but she couldn’t help how she felt. Her other hand weighed his heavy balls and caressed them.

“Oh shit...oh shit...oh shit...Fiona...”

“Does it feel good?”

“Yeah...” Sam barely managed to get the word out.

“You have a really nice dick, Sam. It’s fun to play with.”

“You can touch me, hon.”

Sam touched her breasts, but he was too distracted to employ any of his newfound skills. He didn’t even look over. Sam just stared at her hand working his cock. Fiona didn’t mind. This was all for him. She stroked him faster and faster, her hand making a funny squishy sound.

“Fiona...oh shit...oh shit...Ohhh...”

Fiona should have anticipated how quickly Sam would come, but she was unprepared when he blasted away. Sam came fast and hard, shooting into the air. Fiona was in perfect position for his jizz to splatter onto her breasts. Two, three shots hit her. Another shot with less velocity came down on her hand. He kept coming, and the remainder of his detonation oozed over her stroking hand, like lava flowing from a volcano. Sam had an impressive volume. He left a huge mess in his wake. Fiona kept stroking until she’d milked every last drop and Sam was left trembling and gasping like a fish left on dry land.

“I hope that felt good, hon,” she said, kissing him.

“Fiona...that was...”

“You’re welcome, hon. You earned it.”

Fiona couldn’t stop smiling. She loved the effect she had on the young man. He influenced her too. She climaxed just minutes before he did but jerking him off made Fiona horny again. It didn’t escape her notice that he hadn’t gone fully soft after coming. Fiona remembered the resiliency of men his age. She could get him fully hard and have her way with him. It was tempting. Fiona wanted him. Oh, did she want him.

The temptation was so great that she acted without thinking. Fiona leaned forward and kissed his cock, giving the head a quick suck. The nutty, almost bitter taste of olive oil was a strange combination with the salty taste of Sam's jizz. It wasn't entirely unpleasant. Sam gasped and stiffened. His cock throbbed in her mouth. It was a brief tease. Fiona came to her senses and pulled back.

"Just a little kiss, hon. Just a taste," she said, flashing an embarrassed smile. Fiona really did not want to be a tease. Okay, maybe a little, but she didn't want to torture him.

"Uh, okay."

Awkward silence followed as they sat there, both a mess. Fiona felt Sam's come drying on her chest, but she didn't want to insult him by jumping right up and leaving. The spicy, earthy scent of olive oil and jizz was not pleasant. She needed them to clean up.

"I'll be right back, hon. Okay?"

"Yeah. Anything you want, Fiona."

Fiona fled to an upstairs bathroom and used a warm, wet washcloth to clean the evidence of her dirty act. She stared at herself in the mirror. Fiona looked like the same woman, but she didn't feel like it. Alone, away from Sam, the implications of what she'd done descended. Fiona felt terrible—partly because she didn't feel terrible enough. She liked fooling around with Sam—no matter how wrong it was. Josh's implicit permission didn't make her feel any better. This was about her own moral code, and Fiona took her wedding vows seriously. She'd vowed to forsake all others. Jerking off her husband's cousin was not forsaking anything. It was wrong on every level. It was dangerous. What were family gatherings going to be like now?

Pull yourself together, she chided herself. Fiona was not going to go back downstairs and lay her guilt on Sam. He was innocent in all this—mostly. She didn't want to ruin this for him. Fiona would plaster on a smile and take care of Sam and deal with her shit later.

Sam looked like he hadn't moved an inch when she returned with a fresh washcloth. Fiona had changed into a t-shirt and shorts upstairs, since she left her dress in the family room. The baggy outfit was the furthest thing from the dress she'd worn when greeting Sam at the door. He still watched her body as she moved into the room. He couldn't help himself.

"You doing okay?" she asked.

"Yeah. Awesome. Are you okay?"

“I’m great,” Fiona lied. “You should clean up.”

She handed Sam the washcloth. Fiona considered doing it herself, but that would not cool things down.

“Thanks. Sorry, uh, for the mess. I should have warned you or something.”

“It’s okay, hon. You’re not the first guy who lost it all over me.” She rubbed his shoulders.

“Really? Are you, uh, into that?”

“I wouldn’t say that,” she replied, although it did feel sexy and dirty to have Sam blast his load all over her breasts. She couldn’t deny that—to herself, anyway. “But it happens. I should have had a tissue or something. The ending is kind of inevitable, isn’t it?”

“Yeah,” he agreed. They both laughed.

Fiona watched Sam stroke his cock and balls. It was impossible to ignore. The itch between her legs grew stronger. Fiona had never felt anything like this before. The mixture of guilt and lust made her head spin. How could she want something that was so objectively wrong? Fiona had always considered herself a good person. And she’d always had a strong libido, but she’d never felt it was out of control like this. Sam was testing all her assumptions about herself. Fiona didn’t like it.

Sam was growing hard again by the time he was clean, and he looked helplessly at Fiona. Don’t tempt me, she thought. It would be so easy to climb onto his lap, pull her baggy shorts aside, and lower down on that beautiful cock. No! she told herself.

“You’d better put that thing away before we get into more trouble.”

“That’s okay with me,” Sam insisted.

“Come on, hon. Put it away.”

Sam looked disappointed but did as she asked. More awkward silence followed, until Sam said, “We should talk about this, right?”

“I suppose so, hon. Maybe not today.” Fiona was not in the headspace to talk it out with Sam. “But it’s all good. Really, Sam.”

Sam smiled and said, “I guess the game is over.”

Fiona burst out laughing. Sam was so good at lightening her mood. “That’s right. We were playing a game. Yeah, I think it’s reached its climax.”

“Very nice,” he complimented.

“Thank you.”

“I guess I’ll pack it up, then.”

Fiona watched Sam pack up his game, twisting the hem of her t-shirt in her fingers and fighting to keep her conflicting feelings at bay. Sam was just so damned cute it was hard to be angry about her attraction to him, but Fiona was a married woman. Everything about this was inappropriate. Sam worked away, oblivious to her internal turmoil.

“I should get going then?” he asked. Sam obviously wanted her to tell him to stay. She wanted to tell him to but couldn’t.

“Unless you want to stay for dinner.”

“Uh, no. Not tonight. Is Josh going to be home soon?”

“Not too long,” she lied.

“I’d better get out of here then.”

Fiona showed Sam to the door. She leaned up to hug him and Sam held her in a tight, lingering embrace. Fiona closed her eyes and laid her head on his chest. It was so nice to be in Sam’s arms. It felt right—even if it was wrong.

“Be good. We’ll talk later,” she said, shooing him out there.

Sam gazed back at her as she closed the door behind him. Be good. That would be excellent advice for her to follow as well.

SEVEN

JOSH WORKED ANOTHER LATE NIGHT, leaving plenty of time for Fiona to sit and stew over her afternoon with Sam. Stewing involved doing laundry and drinking wine, neither of which provided adequate distraction to calm her turmoil. She briefly lost herself in the routine of folding laundry—Fiona enjoyed the organizational aspect of it—but it didn't keep her mind off her troubles for long. Meditation—one of her usual respites—proved impossible. The wine didn't help her mood, but Fiona kept drinking it anyway because at least it kept her fuzzy around the edges. She didn't bother making dinner, knowing full well that Josh wouldn't be home in time to eat it.

Fooling around with Sam challenged everything Fiona thought about herself, and she didn't know how to feel about that. In her mind, Fiona was a smart, organized, principled woman. She did not give in to flights of fancy. She had the discipline to resist temptation—which usually came in the form of resisting dessert or having too many glasses of wine. Fiona put her family and her marriage first. If she didn't, she'd have a high-pressure job making great money. Fiona made good money when she worked, but she'd chosen a profession that allowed time to be there for her family. Josh could work all the hours, and Fiona was there to keep the home fires burning. But she felt like that had all gone out the window since she began spending time with Sam.

Sam brought out feelings Fiona hadn't had in years. He made her feel girlish and wanted—the way she used to feel when a boy first showed interest in her. That first blush of excitement and the anticipation of a boy making his move was such a high. Sam wouldn't make a move on her, but she felt it all the same. Being around Sam was such a throwback that it made Fiona want to lay down all her obligations and just have fun. It wasn't all Sam, of course. With Josh working so much and Alex away at camp for the first time, she was at loose ends. Sam had come along at the perfect time. Fiona didn't like to think of herself as vulnerable, but Sam's attention caught her at a vulnerable moment. In that moment, his crush and sneaky peaks were particularly potent. Fiona should have been able to shrug off his feelings for her, but they had an unexpected power over her. That was what bothered her the most.

It bothered Fiona that she wanted Sam's attention so much. A schoolboy crush should not have any effect a thirty-something wife and mother—other than being an annoyance. The proper reaction was to smile politely and put Sam off—not jerk him off in the family room. Fiona should not have that undeniable throb between her legs when she thought about how Sam wanted her—or when she thought about that big club between his legs. But she did, and worse, thinking about it felt so good that it was hard to feel guilty about it. Fiona felt more guilty about her lack of guilt than she did about how she'd behaved.

What was it about her that made Sam's attentions so intoxicating? Was she having an early mid-life crisis? Everything was complicated all the more by her husband's permission to let something happen. Maybe she would have been less distressed if that's how it went down. But Fiona knew she didn't just let whatever happens...happen. Fiona made something happen. She was so bad!

Fiona was quite tipsy when Josh finally came through the door. She'd stopped drinking an hour or so before, because she didn't want to be a sloppy drunk, but she still had enough alcohol in her system to keep her from thinking clearly. She was ordinarily a chatty love drunk, but tonight she was morose. She was looking for someone else to blame for the guilt, and her husband was an appealing target. Josh called out for her, but Fiona didn't answer. She waited for Josh to find her sitting in the family room, an unread book sitting in her lap. She still wore the baggy t-shirt and shorts she'd donned after playing with Sam.

"Hey, didn't you hear me?" he asked.

"Yeah, sorry. How was your day?"

"Fine. Long. I can't wait until things get back to normal. Have you been drinking?"

Fiona smiled, but it wasn't mirthful.

"Just a little," she admitted.

"Sorry I'm so late. Every time I tried getting out the door, the phone rang with something else. Is there dinner?"

"I didn't bother. I knew you wouldn't be home for it."

"Fi, what's up?"

"Sam came over today." Her tone was neutral.

"And? Why are you acting weird?"

"I did what you said. You said to just let things happen."

"What do you mean, Fi?"

"Last night, when you came home, remember what we were talking about?"

"Yeah, I think so. You jumped on my dick the second I came home, so it's all kind of a jumble. What happened, Fi?"

"Things...things happened."

"Dammit, Fi. I just worked a very long day. I'm not in the mood for cryptic. Tell me or don't tell me. I feel like I did something wrong, but I have no idea what that could be since I wasn't here."

Fiona thought he had some nerve getting angry with her. Josh was the one that opened the door throwing their vows out the window.

"You told me that I should be Sam's teacher, remember? You thought it was cool if I was his Mrs. Robinson. I took your advice to heart."

Josh's eyes narrowed and he crossed his arms over his chest. He stayed standing near the doorway. "What happened today, Fi? Did you fuck Sam?"

"No!" she exploded, tossing her book away. "I can't believe you'd ask me that. I can't believe you think I'd fuck another man!"

"Well, Sam's not really a man..."

"Stop that! Sam's a good guy. He's twenty now. He is a man. He behaves like a man."

"Okay, calm down. Yes, he is technically a man. You didn't fuck him. What did you do?"

"I...we... We were playing a game, kind of a truth or dare thing, and we were talking, and it got weird and next thing I knew..."

"Did Sam make a move on you?" Josh's voice rose and he was either angry or shocked.

"No, he's too nice for that. He wouldn't just do that." Fiona was silent for a moment before blurting out, "I kissed him!"

Josh looked relieved. “Okay, you kissed him. Is that such a big deal? I mean, it’s a kiss. And it’s Sam. I’m guessing this wasn’t a familial kiss on the cheek, right?”

“No, it was a kiss, Josh. A real kiss.”

“If he’s my cousin, does that make him your cousin, too? How does that work? Is that, like cousins-once-removed, or are you cousins-in-law? Either way, I guess you’re kissing cousins. Does that make us hillbillies?”

“I’m glad you find this so funny, your wife fooling around with another man,” she replied, hopping off the couch.

“I don’t get it. Do you want me to be mad? What is going on, Fi?”

Josh moved closer, blocking her from fleeing the room.

“I don’t know what I want,” she lied. Fiona knew what she wanted. She just didn’t want to want it.

“It sounds like you made out with Sam and you want me to be mad about it. It’s not like I want you running around town fooling around with other guys, but I just can’t get that worked up about you kissing Sam.”

“Why are you okay with me kissing anyone?”

Josh sighed, unable to mask his exasperation. “Okay, I’m pissed, Fi. Does that make you feel better? You’re a slut for kissing Sam. I want a divorce.”

“You said you didn’t fuck him.”

Josh looked concerned now. It pleased Fiona, even though it shouldn’t have. She was just happy to get a reaction from her husband—a normal reaction.

“Do you think kissing and fucking are the only two things a woman can do with a man? I remember you being more imaginative than that when we met.”

“You didn’t fuck him. Did you blow him?”

“Would that bother you?” she countered, stepping close to him. Fiona liked seeing the red in his cheeks.

“Yeah, I guess. I don’t know. Did you?”

Almost, she thought. She wanted to. Fiona wanted to suck Sam’s cock and see his eyes roll back in his head. It was low hanging fruit—making the young man crazy—but she wanted to do it. If she was going to feel so odd and conflicted anyway, why not?

“No,” she answered. “I gave him a hand job...after he got me off.”

Josh was dumbfounded. He gaped at his wife like she'd just told him she was abducted by aliens and now carried an alien baby. She finally had a reaction out of him! It wasn't quite the jealous outrage she expected a normal husband would have, but it was a start.

"You need to tell me what happened, Fi. Everything."

"You didn't think Sam had it in him, did you? You didn't think he could make your wife come."

"Quit fucking around, Fi. Why are you smiling?"

Fiona was smiling but hadn't realized it. Her mind was chaos. The swirl of anger and guilt and pride was too confusing to track. All the wine didn't help. Underneath it all, Fiona realized she was horny as hell. It had been there all day—ever since she played with Sam—but she'd batted it away, leaving it to buzz in the background like an annoying gnat. Fiona hoped it would go away if she ignored it. But it hadn't and seeing Josh's passions inflamed brought it to the forefront. Her arousal clouded her judgement just as much as the wine and she had a terrible idea. It was time to find out exactly how Josh felt about all of this.

"Because I'm thinking about how you were last night, so confident it was no big deal if I messed around with Sam, and now you seem to feel differently. I want to know which one it is. I want to know what you really think about Sam and me. And the best way is to show you."

Fiona didn't wait for a response but reached for his belt. Josh sputtered and complained but didn't stop her. He wasn't rock hard when she pushed his pants down, but she felt a lump tightening in his boxers. Josh liked something about this.

"Sit," she ordered.

Josh didn't move. Fiona turned him and pushed. He dropped onto the couch. She stood over him.

"Fi, what the hell?"

"Do you want to know or not?"

"Yeah. I'm your husband. It's my right to know." He didn't look as confident as he sounded.

"Now you're possessive." Her smile quirked to the right. The morose mood left her, and Fiona was filled with a new fire. Engaging her husband was just what she needed. "If you want to know, I'll show you."

Fiona bent and recovered the bottle of olive oil from where she'd left it when she was done with Sam. She didn't leave it there in anticipation of this. It just worked out that way. Fiona knelt on the couch beside Josh, just as she had Sam.

“Take off your boxers. Come on, Josh. You need to play along.”

“I’m not sure I do, but okay.” He wiggled out of his underwear.

Josh warily watched Fiona as she knelt beside him on the couch, just as she had done with Sam earlier.

“I got naked for him again,” she said, stripping off the t-shirt and shorts. She was nude beneath, as she had been all day.

“You really seem to like that. I had no idea you were such an exhibitionist, Fi. I need to take you to a nude beach.”

“Maybe I just like stripping for Sam,” she replied, knowing she didn’t have the nerve to expose her body to a bunch of strangers on a nude beach.

“That’s working out well for him. The kid must be beating off like a maniac.”

“He didn’t have to today.” Fiona smirked.

Josh and Sam were so different, yet Fiona couldn’t help her strong déjà vu as she poured olive oil into her hand and reached for her husband’s cock.

“You jerked him off with olive oil?” Josh asked, incredulous.

“I used what was at hand,” she replied, winking.

“Should have made a salad afterward.”

“Haha. Now hush. Sam didn’t talk much while I was doing this.”

Fiona didn’t need to admonish her husband because the moment she began stroking his cock he stopped speaking. Her grip fit nicely around this cock, thinner than Sam’s. She was well pleased with Josh’s prick, Sam was larger, girthier. The men felt so different in her hand. It was impossible to avoid the obvious comparison—who would feel better inside her? If Sam’s wonderful cock drove her wild, was that a betrayal of her husband? It was all academic. Fiona was never screwing Sam.

“Fuck, Fi. I forgot how good you are at that,” Josh moaned.

“Did I jerk you off? I thought I was past that by the time we met.”

“You did, a couple times—before I got your pants off.”

“It must have been a phase. I guess I didn’t want you thinking I was too easy.”

“Why would I ever think that? Hey!”

Josh jumped when she squeezed his plump balls. She didn’t need him joking about her sluttiness—not right now. Fiona worked her hand up and down his cock with precision, massaging his balls with her other hand like a pro. Josh groomed himself down there—unlike Sam—making the task more pleasant. Fiona thought she'd have to get Sam to do that, before she caught herself. Would there be a next time with Sam?

“Oh fuck...yeah, Fi...fuck...”

Fiona leaned close to Josh, like she did with Sam, but didn't kiss him. Instead, she whispered, “I kept telling him how much I loved his dick. I really liked playing with it, hon. It's nice and big and thick...”

Josh did not stare at her pumping fist—as Sam did—but rather watched her face. He was trying to read her, and it made Fiona uncomfortable. She didn't want her husband to know what was going on in her head—that she was thinking of Sam as she jerked him off. It was Sam's thick cock that filled her mind as she played with Josh. Did he see it in her face? Did she give herself away?

“Fuck...fuck...Fi...you've...got...to...stop...”

“I'm not stopping—not until you're done. I'm going to finish you, just like I finished Sam.”

“Fi...goddam...”

“It's okay, let it go, hon. Let it go and come for me. Sam came so much. It was everywhere, hon. God, he really came everywhere.”

“Fi...”

“He came all over my tits, Josh. It was dripping off my tits...”

“Fuuuck...”

Josh shuddered and came. He shot into the air, but it didn't reach her chest. Fiona had to lean in and get close. Josh didn't have Sam's velocity, but then he wasn't as backed up—or as young. Josh gave her a couple good spurts and the rest trickled over her pumping fist. He laid back on the couch and stared at the dark ceiling.

Fiona kept stroking his cock, remembering how Sam never really went soft—not fully. Sam was hard again before he left, and he could have fucked Fiona if she allowed it. She wanted Josh hard again. She needed him hard again. Fiona burned with desire. Her pussy dripped and every inch of her ached with need. Josh and Sam kept blurring in her mind and if Josh made love to her now, Fiona wasn't sure who'd be doing it in her mind. It filled her with shame, but she couldn't help herself. She needed someone inside her after Sam, and she needed it more desperately now. Josh gave a couple twitches as she stroked him, but he wasn't coming to life the way Sam had.

“I think you got it all, Fi,” Josh joked, putting his hand over hers to stop her motion.

“Maybe I’m not done with you yet.”

“No?”

“I haven’t gotten what I need yet.”

“I can help you with that, babe.”

Josh pulled her down and kissed her aggressively, thrusting his tongue into her mouth. Fiona tried keeping up, but Josh was swift, taking her with an urgency that had been missing from their lovemaking. He took her hard last night, but that was after she attacked him. Fiona tried reaching for his cock again, but Josh batted her hand away, rising to push her onto her back. She twisted awkwardly, but Fiona was flexible, and she help Josh put her on her back without dislocating her knee. Josh knelt on the floor and used her butt to pull her to him, burying his face in her lap.

“Mmm...yesss...” she hissed, grabbing her own breasts with both hands and strumming her nipples.

The tongue burrowing into her slit distracted Fiona from her disappointment. Josh knew what he was doing, and it felt incredible, but it wasn’t what she really needed. She wanted to feel a nice, hard cock thrusting into her. Josh pounding between her legs would be perfect. Fiona was sure she could get him hard again if he gave her the chance, but Josh got what he needed. She would have to be satisfied with oral. Not that it was bad. Fiona would never turn down oral sex.

“Yeah...ohhh...yeah...Josh...”

Josh slurped as she flooded his mouth. She was slippery, but his thumbs gained enough purchase to spread her open so he could really dig in with his tongue. It stabbed at her like a rapier, stabbing all the spots that made Fiona moan and wail. Her disappointment didn’t stop Fiona from climbing the slope toward a powerful climax. Fiona hooked her knees over his shoulders and used the position for leverage, lifting her pussy to Josh’s mouth, thrusting at him like she was trying to fuck his tongue. Her orgasm came swiftly, and Fiona wailed, grabbing the couch with both hands to keep from sliding off it as she thrashed under her husband’s eager tongue.

“Ohhh...fuck...” she languidly moaned, stretching as she rode the wave of her climax to its tingling, glowing conclusion. She kneed Josh away from her lap when the orgasm left her too sensitive down there. “Mmm, that’s good, honey. Stop, please.”

Josh sat back and wiped his glazed mouth on the back of his hand. He grinned like a man who knew he just made his wife come—hard. “Damn, woman. You really came. You’re on fire, Fi.”

“What can I say? I guess I’m just feeling inspired.”

“By Sam?”

Fiona stuck her tongue out at him. “I keep telling you, you’re underestimating him.”

“Like I said before, if he’s getting you this fired up, I can’t complain.”

“So, you’re okay with me making out with Sam and jerking him off?”

Josh moved back onto the couch and grabbed her by the hips, pulling her close. Fiona’s legs wrapped around him and she took his hand.

“It’s weird, yeah, but I guess I’m not that bothered. It’s fun to come home and find you like this and hear your stories. I like the change in you.”

The glow of her climax faded, and her cloud returned. She was happy the intimacy had returned to her marriage, but she still wanted her husband to be jealous that she was with another man—no matter who it was. How far would she have to go to get the reaction she wanted?

“What change?” she asked.

“You’ve got this new confidence. You’ve got a sexy swagger. Every guy wants to see that in his wife. It’s hard to be pissed about that, Fi. I feel like everyone is getting something out of this. I love the new you. You’re obviously having fun. And I think we know what Sam’s getting out of it. The kid is probably getting the best part of the deal out of all of us.”

“I do not have a sexy swagger,” she replied.

“Whatever it is, I like it. So, go for it, Fi.”

“You’re not afraid things will get out of hand?”

“I don’t know how many different ways to say it, Fi. I’m cool with this. It’s good for the kid. It’s good for us. Sam is not a threat to our marriage. It doesn’t sound like Sam has a problem with it. You’re the only one bothered by it. If you don’t want to be his teacher, then don’t do it. But it sounds like you do. I think your problem with it is that you don’t really have a problem with it.”

“Maybe you’re right. I don’t know. I’m exhausted. I’m going to bed.”

“I love you, Fi.”

“Love you too.”

Fiona grabbed her clothes and went up to their bedroom. She didn’t want to admit it, but Josh hit the nail on the head. The thing that bothered her the most was how much she wanted all this when she knew it was wrong. She focused on her husband and his lack of jealousy because it was easier than analyzing what she felt. Fiona thought she had life all figured out. She knew the rules and what was expected of her. This thing with Sam threw a huge wrench into the middle of all that. But it wasn't that Fiona was a compulsive rule follower. She was happy to color outside the lines when the situation called for it. It was even healthy to break some rules every once in a while. Messing around with Sam was not just coloring outside of the lines. It was erasing them all together. And unlike her husband, she understood how dangerous that could be.

EIGHT

FIONA IGNORED Sam's texts and calls for a couple days while she grappled with what to do about their situation. She felt the pull to see him when his texts popped up on her phone, but she stayed strong and was proud of herself. Fiona used the time to figure out what she should do.

Chores and tending to her garden filled her time. She faithfully checked social media for pictures from Camp Lenape. They were good about posting photos of the children's activities, and she saw quite a few of Alex. It was a relief to see him smiling when playing in the lake or running on the soccer field. Seeing the photos reminded Fiona that she was a mother first and that she couldn't do anything to jeopardize her family.

Fiona got up early and ran every morning, keeping a promise to herself to exercise more consistently. She hoped to run a 5k and even work her way up to a marathon someday. Running was good for clearing her head, which gave her the space to think about her situation with Sam without her hormones unduly influencing her. Logic was easy to come by when Fiona was focused on the pounding of her heart and putting one foot in front of the other. She knew the smart thing to do was let Sam down easy. Tell him it was all good fun, but it was wrong, and they had to stop. He wouldn't take it well, but she had to hope things wouldn't be weird when the family got together. And then came the reminder of how Sam made her feel.

A young guy in an electric blue Subaru WRX slowed down as he passed her, gave Fiona a good long look, and shouted to her. Fiona was a sweaty mess and couldn't believe anyone would look at her like that, but it was clear the man wasn't looking at her face. The music pulsing in her headphones kept her from hearing exactly what he said, but Fiona heard something about her ass and knew it was complimentary. She should have been furious about being catcalled and shouted a hearty fuck you! back at her admirer, but Fiona felt a shiver of excitement. That excitement brought her right back to the surges she felt when she was with Sam and he couldn't keep his eyes off her body. He couldn't keep his hands off her either—once she allowed him to touch her. Fiona didn't want to keep her hands to herself either and that was the root of the problem. It would be easy to put Sam off if she wasn't so tempted by him. Who would have thought a lanky nerd would be my downfall? she thought.

Josh had left her to his own devices. Work consumed him and once Fiona told him she had no plans to see Sam his thought went right back to it. They did make love, but they did not tease each other with Sam, and some of the fire of their last few encounters was missing. Something about her fooling around with Sam excited Josh just as much as it did her—even if he wouldn't admit it. Fiona felt her husband was feigning indifference. Even if he wasn't jealous, Josh felt something about their situation. He just wasn't being honest. Fiona took that as a personal challenge. She would provoke a reaction from Josh. It was immature and beneath her, but it was easier for Fiona to use that excuse than to just admit she wanted to see Sam again.

IT WAS easy to reconnect with Sam. He would have driven right over to her house if Fiona asked. Fiona suggested they go out and do something. She was still undecided on what she wanted to happen next and figured it would be safer to be in public with Sam. After some back and forth, they made plans to have lunch and see the latest superhero movie.

Fiona tore through her wardrobe and came to the sad realization that she rarely dressed up to go out anymore. She still had cute outfits, but they were mom cute. That was appropriate—she was a mom—but what happened to the days when Fiona would dress up to just be cute cute, or even sexy? Josh appreciated it when she made the effort, but there were too few occasions to make that effort anymore. When was the last time Josh took her out for the evening? Perhaps he didn't appreciate the effort if he didn't give her occasions to make it. Fiona had no doubt Sam would appreciate her making an effort to look good for him, and she was excited to do it. Now she just had to find something cute to wear, and he'd already seen her slouchy sundress.

The answer was a jersey tank maxi dress with wavy green and black horizontal stripes. It was a casual number that didn't show a lot of skin but had a nice scoop neck and slit on the side that came up high on the hip. It hugged her figure nicely, so it fit the bill of being both cute and sexy—at least within Fiona's definition of sexy. She had just the right chunky necklace and cute earrings to go with it. It took a moment to recognize that tingly anticipation she used to feel when preparing for a date. You're being silly, she told herself. This is not a date. Married women do not date.

Fiona took a picture in the mirror and texted it to her husband, with the comment: Going to the movies with Sam. What do you think? She didn't wait for an answer but gathered her things to get out the door. Josh's reply stopped Fiona in her tracks.

[Josh] dare u to lose the bra

She stared at her phone in disbelief. Who is he messing with? Me or Sam? The bra she'd chosen was padded and gave her a nice silhouette. She knew she looked good. It would be obvious if she went braless in the clingy dress. Her small breasts were perky enough to go braless, and she sometimes did in baggy outfits that disguised it. She would still look good, but in a much different way. Fiona shot back a text to her husband.

[Fiona] why?

Fiona didn't wait for an answer but dropped her purse right there in the entry hall and pulled the long dress over her head. Her bra was unhooked and neatly folded to be left on the little table where Josh dropped his keys in a dish when he came in the door and collected his mail every night. She looked down at her trim body, bare but for a black thong—worn to avoid panty lines—and her wedge-heeled sandals. She was in great shape. Her tiny mom belly was hardly noticeable. Her phone pinged with Josh's reply while she shimmied back into the dress.

[Josh] because it will be fun

[Josh] everyone!

A second photo was sent to Josh. He replied with a thumbs up emoji.

[Fiona] be careful what you wish for

“I DON’T KNOW what you’ve been doing with Sam. But I’ve never seen him so happy. It’s like I have a new kid,” Trudy said. They waited for Sam to come down from his room.

“Nothing special. He just needed someone to pay attention to him and encourage him,” Fiona replied, avoiding meeting Trudy’s eyes.

“Well, just keep doing whatever you’re doing. If he keeps this confidence when he goes back to school, I think he’ll have a much better year.”

Fiona thought, Should I just run right up there and jerk him off now? Imagine the confidence he’d have if I blew him! Instead, she said, “I think you’re giving me too much credit. Sam’s a great guy. He’s just finding his way.”

“Thank you anyway, for helping him along.” Trudy squeezed her arm.

It helped that Fiona wasn’t a fan of Josh’s Aunt Trudy. If she didn’t find the woman so overbearing, Fiona might have felt more guilty about seducing her son. Seduction was exactly what was happening between them, Fiona decided. She didn’t set out to do that, but there was no doubt that was what she had done. Fiona liked Sam’s attention and in turn seduced him. Fiona should have felt remorse toward Trudy for what she’d done—the same way she felt remorse regarding her husband—but Fiona almost felt none. The cruel part of her—which almost never reared its head—thought Trudy deserved to have an older woman come along and seduce her son. If Trudy had paid more attention to him—or understood Sam better—none of this probably would have happened.

Fiona smiled thinly and wondered if Trudy noticed she wasn’t wearing a bra. How could she not? Fiona’s nipples were popping in the chilly, air-conditioned house. They were plain, even though the dark jersey material of the dress. Trudy didn’t comment on her breasts. She’d only told Fiona what a great dress it was when she greeted her at the door.

Sam appeared from upstairs and he immediately noticed Fiona’s bra was missing. He stared at her chest for so long that Fiona crossed her arms over her chest before the young man's mother noticed where his eyes were locked.

"Hey, Fiona. You look amazing," Sam cheerfully announced.

"Thanks," she replied, color rising to her cheeks. "You look nice, too."

Sam wore a blue polo and cargo shorts.

"You do look nice. I'm glad you're finally putting some effort into how you dress," Trudy commented.

"I think Sam always looks good. He just has his own style. There's nothing wrong with that," Fiona said. Trudy sounded just like Josh, and Fiona didn't like it.

"See, Mom. You just don't get it," Sam said. Fiona was proud. It was rare for Sam to stand up to his mother.

"Not all girls are as tolerant as Fiona, dear. If you want a girlfriend, you need to up your game," Trudy insisted. "Tell him, Fiona."

"I think you're great and you just need to find a woman who will accept you as you are," Fiona said.

Trudy huffed with exasperation. She'd never really gotten Fiona either. Fiona always had the sense that her husband's aunt thought he could have done better. "You kids have fun. Are you meeting up with Josh later?"

"He was playing golf this morning and then he had to run into the office," Fiona replied.

"On a Saturday? That's terrible," Trudy scolded.

"I know. I was hoping we'd be able to do something while Alex is away."

"At least you have Sam for company. Make sure you're a gentleman, young man."

"Yes, Mom," he warily replied. He didn't like his mother treating him like a kid in front of Fiona.

Fiona was glad to leave Trudy behind when they got out of there. Sam was too.

"Sorry about all that. You know how she is," he said as they walked to the minivan.

"It's okay. It's not your fault. Your mother can be..." Fiona left it dangling, not wanting to directly insult Sam's mother.

"A bitch?" Sam replied, laughing.

Fiona laughed too. "I wouldn't put it that way. Let's just say that when Josh first brought me to meet the family your mother was harder on me than his mother was. It took me a moment to figure which one was Josh's real mother."

"I think I remember that. It was at one of those family picnics we used to do."

"It was. Those were fun. Someone needs to take up the mantle and bring those back," Fiona replied.

Josh's grandmother had been the driving force behind the big summer events, but they'd faded away in the last several years, after the woman had passed. Fiona missed her dearly. She was Fiona's favorite family member—after Sam, of course.

"You were the coolest girl Josh ever brought home. I couldn't believe it," Sam marveled.

"Oh really? You didn't love Missy Houseman? I thought everyone in your family loved her."

Sam flashed a conspiratorial grin across the hood of the minivan before climbing in and said, "She was pretty. She had big boobs. But she was kind of a bitch. She was only fake nice. Josh did way better with you."

Fiona glowed. They buckled up and while she pulled away from the curb, Sam went on about her.

"I could tell right away you were cool. And I loved that you didn't care what my family thought. Like I said, Missy was always so fake."

"Why did you think I didn't care? I wanted to make a good impression on you all. I was crazy in love."

"You know how my family can be, y'know, a little uptight. I knew you weren't too worried about their opinion when you wore that bikini at the lake."

"It was what I brought! I honestly didn't think about it. I was in my 20s. That's just what I wore to swim. I can't believe you remember that all these years ago."

"That bikini was pretty memorable." Sam grinned.

Sam didn't seem to feel any need to hide his lust for her given their new relationship. Fiona couldn't believe he remembered her bikini so clearly back then. She didn't think he was old enough then to take notice of girls in that way.

Fiona recalled that she did wear rather skimpy bikinis back in the day. She didn't see the problem with that. She was young and she had the body for it. Besides, it wasn't like her small boobs were going to tumble out of the top. Fiona still wore two-pieces most of the time—like the one she wore to the lake. She still had the body for it, even if her tummy wasn't exactly tight as a drum like it was before she had Alex. She also recalled the looks she got from some of Josh's family—especially Aunt Trudy. One would have thought she was swimming topless. Fiona did want the family to like her, but she wasn't going to be shamed when she did nothing wrong.

"It's nice to know I made an impression, I guess," she said.

"You always do, Fiona."

THEY STOPPED at a burger chain in the mall before the movie. Fiona couldn't help but wonder what kind of couple they presented when out in public. Did anyone think she was some cougar out with her boytoy? The possibility made her smile, but she knew that was unlikely. Sam was hardly boytoy material—to most people. Fiona knew all a cougar had to do was see what was in his pants and it would change her mind. They mostly likely presented as an aunt taking her favorite nephew out to lunch. Fiona preferred to think they could look like a couple, even if it was a scandalous one. I'm not that much older than Sam, she thought. Certainly not old enough to be his mother. There's 16 years between us. Definitely an aunt. Could even be an older sister if he was an oops baby.

Sam certainly didn't look at her like she was an aunt—or a cousin-in-law. He stole glances at her braless tits every chance he got. They had a nice little bounce when Fiona walked, and it captivated his attention. It gave her that familiar tingle down below and Fiona fought the urge to play to Sam and tease him. Fiona knew something might happen today, but she wanted to let nature take its course. She didn't want to make something happen this time.

Fiona was good and ordered a cobb salad. Sam chowed down on a chili cheeseburger. She did order a beer, after asking if Sam minded. He didn't.

"It's only a few more months until you can drink—legally, I mean. Are you excited?" she asked.

"I don't know. I'm not really much of a drinker. Maybe if I went to more parties at school, but that's not really my thing." He sipped from his cola.

“I know it takes work sometimes, but it’s worth it, putting yourself out there. You meet new people. You broaden your horizons. You meet a girl, maybe.”

Sam smiled and blushed while staring down into his drink.

“What?” Fiona asked.

“I’m not really looking to meet a girl right now.”

“Why not? You’re a 20-year-old guy. You must want a girl.”

Sam looked at her, his implication clear. He already had a girl. Fiona didn’t know what to say. They’d had fun, and if she was honest, they probably weren’t done, but Fiona wasn’t his girl. She never could be his girl. Fiona was a married woman. She belonged to Josh. She thought Sam understood that.

“You need a girl of your own, honey.” She reached across the table and took his hand. “If you think this...”

“I know what’s up, Fiona,” he interrupted. He grazed his thumb over the back of her hand. It was a sweet, tender gesture. “I know it’s not real.”

Fiona’s lips set in a line. That wasn’t true. It was very real for her. It just was what it was.

“It’s real, Sam. Don’t think this is something like a one-night stand. It’s not. I have real feelings for you. I like you. A lot. Don’t ever think this doesn’t matter.”

“But you love Josh. I know.”

“I do. And I love you. I always have. It’s just different. God, how can I explain this? Honestly, I don’t even know how well I understand it.”

“You don’t have to explain anything to me, Fiona. I’m happy to go along for the ride. This is the most awesome thing that’s ever happened to me.”

“You don’t have to keep saying that, honey. Stay sweet, but don’t be overeager, either. Girls will use that against you.”

“Okay.”

“I guess it’s kind of like this. When I was younger, like your age and in high school, I had a lot of guy friends and we all hung out in a group. I know that’s what people do now. I guess I was ahead of my time. Anyway, I didn’t really date guys—per se. I had guy friends, and we hung out and partied, and sometimes—if we were in the mood and it felt good—we’d hook up. Do you know what I mean?”

“Yeah, I think so. I mean, nothing like that’s ever happened to me, but I get what you mean.”

“We all liked each other, but it wasn’t anything serious. It was just having some fun. I guess—to me—this is like that. We care about each other and we’re having fun. But you’re not my boyfriend.”

Sam laughed. “And you’re not my girlfriend. I get it, Fiona, really. Remember, I’m a smart guy.”

“You’re smarter than I am, Sam.”

“I don’t know about that. You’re pretty smart. That’s why I like you so much.”

“Coming from you, that’s a high compliment!”

Fiona held up her beer and they toasted.

The waitress brought their food and Fiona ordered a second beer, having finished the first during their stressful conversation. She dug into her salad, but Sam’s fries proved irresistible and she stole several from his plate. He didn’t mind. Fiona suspected Sam would let her have anything she wanted.

Once the heavy stuff was out of the way, they had an easy rapport. Sam filled Fiona in on the latest role-playing games and talked about his prep for the convention he was attending next weekend.

“Let me make sure I’ve got this straight. You go to this convention and then you play your games and people watch? Like they’re spectators at a sporting event?”

“Yeah, some people do that. It’s exciting to watch a good dungeon master lead a party through an adventure. And it’s not just a bunch of us nerds sitting around a table rolling dice. We’re all dressed as our characters. We role-play the entire time. You get penalized if you don’t. Sometimes we even jump and act out the battle. Not that we do any of that stuff. And I don’t know if people will be watching us.”

“Really?” Fiona tried to picture it and failed.

“Yeah. I think you’d really like it.”

“Maybe I would.”

“You should come to one of these.”

“I don’t know if I can get away for a whole weekend for something like that.”

“You should come to this one. Alex is away. It’s the perfect time.”

“I’d have to check with Josh.”

“Isn’t he always working? Why would he care?”

Fiona had to concede it was a good point. “We’ll see. Okay?”

“You really should come, Fiona.”

Sam’s excitement was palatable. He loved the idea of taking Fiona away to his world, where he could stand tall. She understood. All guys wanted to show off for their girls, and this would be the perfect way for Sam. A day at a role-playing convention could be fun. It would be worth going for the people watching alone.

“Would I have to dress up?” she asked.

“Only if you want to, but I’d encourage it.”

“You just want to get me in some sexy little cosplay outfit.” Fiona had seen pictures online. She knew how some of the women dressed for these things.

“Would that be so bad? You’d look hot, Fiona.”

“I can’t see wandering around a convention half-naked.”

“You seem pretty comfortable that way,” Sam smiled.

“You’re a cheeky little thing!” Fiona swatted at his arm, but Sam sat back, out of reach.

“Think about it, at least. Okay?”

“I promise to think about it.” Fiona checked the time on her phone.

“We’d better get a move on, or we’re going to miss the movie.”

NINE

THE SUPERHERO MOVIE had been out for a couple weeks, so the theater was not terribly crowded. It was one of those theaters with stadium seating and big, comfy recliners. Fiona let Sam pick their seat and was surprised when he guided her toward the upper tier. They settled in the center of a row. There were several rows up behind them, but no one sat in them. The theater was chilly, and her nipples were hard points that seemed to hypnotize Sam. Neither of them had commented on her lack of a bra so far, but he was staring so hard now that she couldn't ignore it any longer.

"Want to snap a picture?" she asked, as she settled into her seat.

"Can I?" Sam excitedly replied.

Fiona gave him a look, her crooked smile sliding to the right.

"Do you really think I'm going to let you walk around with a picture of my boobs in your phone?"

"You can trust me, Fiona."

"I don't even trust Josh with that."

"Okay," Sam glumly replied.

It was the truth. Josh asked Fiona to text him sexy pictures all the time, and she refused. Her typical response was that if he wanted to see her naked, he had to come home and see her in the flesh. It wasn't that she didn't trust her husband, but he was also a typical guy, and Fiona didn't want him to be tested with the temptation of having pictures of her to show to one of his friends. Fiona knew all his friends pretty well and would be mortified if she thought Josh may have shared a naked photo of her. It was better to keep that private. But she was more tempted by Sam than she'd ever been with her husband. Sam was not a typical guy, for starters. Fiona believed she could trust Sam with a photo of her. It was exciting to imagine Sam looking at her photo and jerking off. But someone else could get hold of Sam's phone and she would be exposed.

Fiona was prepared for the chilly theater and threw the sweater she'd brought around her shoulders—much to Sam's disappointment. He probably needed the break to calm down anyway, she thought. She pressed the button to recline her seat, popped on her 3-D glasses, and was ready to go.

They commented on the trailers, sharing which movies they'd like to see. Josh wasn't much of a movie goer and Fiona didn't see as many movies as she'd like in the theater. Sam would make a great movie buddy, she thought. It didn't seem as if her husband would mind. It was a shame Sam would be returning to college in the fall.

Sam held the tub of popcorn in his lap and Fiona moved closer, rather than continually stretching to reach it. She suspected he kept it in that position to make her brush against him to retrieve her snacks. Fiona didn't mind. The theater darkened further, and her mind turned to the movie.

The superhero movie was big, loud, and a lot of fun. Fiona didn't care that much of it didn't make sense. She knew not to think too much about the plot. It held together if she just went with it. Sam laughed along at the funny parts and she was glad he was enjoying himself. Fiona bet he really enjoyed the female lead—a tall, willowy blonde. She didn't look too much like her comic book counterpart, but Sam surely let that slide. The actress looked fantastic in tight latex, and the costume pushed her up enough to give her cleavage approaching the comics version. Fiona shook her head at the lingering shots of the heroine's butt. That was for the boys in the audience, not her. That was okay since the male heroes provided plenty of eye candy for her. Fiona thought that she and Josh should go the superhero route when they dressed up for his friend's next Halloween party.

The sweater wasn't quite enough against the blasting air conditioning in the half-empty theater. There weren't enough bodies to absorb it. Fiona tried to tough it out by hugging herself but decided that was silly when she had a nice, big guy next to her. She flipped up the armrest between her and Sam and scooted over, tucking into his side, while curling her legs beneath her.

"You don't mind, do you?" she asked.

Sam responded by slipping his arm around her, and Fiona snuggled tighter. She smiled. It was a smooth move for an inexperienced guy. It looked like Josh was right. All it took was a little attention to build Sam's confidence. Fiona was glad she could be of service.

Snuggling into Sam ignited the expected feelings and Fiona went with them. Her afternoon with Sam had been giving her a date vibe from the time she picked him up and Fiona was done denying it. She placed a hand on his chest and caressed him. It was so different from snuggling against her husband. Josh may not be the jock he was when they met in college, but he was still in good shape. When she touched him, she felt the strength there—a comforting, strong feeling. Sam didn't feel weak. It wasn't that. He was just slender—almost wiry. If she reached around, she could easily close her arms around Sam. Snuggling against a different man—after so many years with her husband—was more exciting than Fiona wanted to admit. It added to the feeling of being on a date.

Fiona's mind went back to those thrilling days of being with a new man—of getting to know his body and figuring out how they fit together. She'd already begun learning Sam's body. It had been fun and exciting, and she knew she shouldn't, but Fiona wanted more. The little bit she'd experienced Sam so far made her crave him. When she was alone—and fighting her feelings—Fiona could deny it, but with Sam—feeling his body pressed against hers—she couldn't fight it. She was young and single again, and she wanted to hook up with her date. The sweet tingling spread throughout her body and butterflies took flight with anticipation. Back in the day, if the boy didn't make a move Fiona would do it for him. She wondered how much confidence Sam had gained. Was he ready to make his move?

Sam caressed her arm and shoulder. His hand gradually crept forward and lower, but he stopped short of groping her breast. Fiona could only imagine the impulses warring inside the young man. He wanted to be forward and touch her, but that battled his lack of confidence with women. She knew the confusing situation with her being married to his cousin didn't help. Sam's stalled attempt to make a move was enough to get her heart racing and Fiona decided to give him the encouragement he needed.

Fiona took a quick glance around to make sure no one could see them, and nudged her hand under the popcorn bucket, resting it on Sam's crotch. His body stiffened, but he relaxed as she began massaging. Most of him relaxed. Sam was already hard when she touched him, but his cock twitched and grew as she rubbed. The touching stimulated her as much as it did him. Fiona squirmed in her seat and squeezed her thighs together as the desire building down there drove her to distraction.

Sam finally made his move and palmed her breast. Fiona lost track of the movie but didn't care. His hand pushed under her sweater and his fingers played across her nipple, making it throb through her dress. His teasing light touch proved Sam was a faster learner. Fiona suspected he went online and searched out seduction tips. It didn't matter. Sam's touch sent pulsing pleasure directly to her pussy. He massaged her breast without ever losing focus where she needed it, rubbing and lightly pinching her nipple. The fabric separating his fingers from her flesh made it all the more maddening.

"Ohh...Sam..." she moaned, pressing her face into his chest. She hoped she wasn't creating unrealistic expectations for the young man. Not every woman had such impossibly sensitive nipples. The right kind of touch—and Sam had it—turned her into a puddle.

Fiona aggressively went for his cock through his shorts, rubbing it down his thigh and gripping it through the khaki material. He grunted and jerked in his seat. She should have worried she'd make him come in his shorts, but Fiona was getting very heated, very quickly. She pulled at the snap, opening his shorts.

"Kiss me, Sam," she whispered, stretching up toward his lips.

Sam's kiss was rough. He was too excited and inexperienced to focus, but that inexperience made her blood boil. It reminded Fiona she was his Mrs. Robinson, and she still had much to teach him. She took control of the kiss, thrusting and parrying at his tongue until he caught up. His touch became coarse with his excitement, and Fiona whimpered into their kiss as he pinched too hard. Her nipple pulsed. Fiona playfully bit his lip and Sam got the message, easing up on her poor, tortured nipple.

An explosion on screen jolted them out of the moment. Fiona pulled back, panting and grinned up at Sam in the light of the movie screen. The young man looked completely different. Instead of the unsteady, unsure young man she knew, Sam looked like a wolf eyeing up his next meal. Fiona wanted him to consume her. A wild fantasy popped into her brain. She could hike up her dress and straddle Sam right there, riding his cock in the movie theater. No one would see them, and the movie was loud enough to cover them. They could probably get away with it. Fiona yearned to ride

Sam and feel that thick cock inside her. It wouldn't be her first time. She vividly remembered riding a cute boy in her younger days, back when theater seats were narrow things with painful wood and metal armrests. Her knees and thighs were left bruised and sore for days, but Fiona did it—and came hard. She did not get away with it that time. Some strange guy watched from the far end of the row and Fiona was sure he jerked off. It was dirty, but that somehow turned her on even more—a fact that was difficult to admit. But she was not going to do it now. If she crossed that line—and it was a huge if—it was not going to be in a movie theater.

Fiona tossed their popcorn on the floor and whipped the sweater from her shoulders, laying it across their laps. She guided Sam's hand to the high slit in her dress and shoved her hand back into his shorts. Sam sat up in his seat and shifted to give her more room to move in his shorts. He was so distracted by her actions that his hand just rested where she'd placed it on her thigh. It was okay. She was having fun anyway. Fiona quivered when her grip closed around his thick shaft and imagined it stretching her. She used the copious fluid leaking from the tip to lubricate her hand. Fiona stroked his meat and Sam shook violently, stuttering her name.

"Keep control, honey," she warned, easing up on the young man. "You can't walk out of here with a giant stain on the front of your shorts."

Sam chuckled weakly. "You'd better take it easy then, Fiona."

"But I don't want to. Pull your shorts down, honey."

"Right here?"

"If you really want me to stop..." Fiona sucked on his neck to drive home her point.

Sam scrambled to push his shorts and underwear down. Her sweater slipped from his lap and Sam grabbed for it, but she pushed his hand away. Fiona wanted to see his cock. She twisted in her seat to use both hands and got a firm grip on him.

"Fiona...what if...someone...sees..." he stammered.

"Everyone's watching the movie, honey. If an usher comes up here, you can cover up real fast."

"God Fiona, you're crazy."

She smiled. "But you like it, don't you?"

"Yeah...yeah, I do..."

Fiona couldn't believe herself. She was acting just like a high school slut—and she hadn't even been this much of a slut back then. Yes, she'd had sex in that theater—and gave head once or twice—but it was always the boys pushing her back then. Fiona just went with it. She loved surrendering to a guy who took charge. Being Mrs. Robinson to Sam was a new experience, and it was fantastic.

It was crazy to think that she hadn't given a hand job in well over a decade and now she was giving her third in less than a week. She caressed his cock and balls more than just jerked him off. Her hand lightly gripped him and moved over the smooth skin of his cock, the supply of meager precum lubricating him being stretched to the limit. Sam was particularly rigid when she spent time caressing and teasing his head. His hairy balls were weighty in her hand. He shifted uncomfortably in his seat when she paid extra attention there—no doubt unfamiliar with the sensation. She made a mental note to convince Sam to do some grooming down there.

Sam reached for her. His hands covered her breasts and he focused all his attention on her nipples. Fiona faltered in her hand job as the jolts of pleasure overwhelmed her. She pushed her breasts into his hands and panted as Sam's fingers strummed her nipples like a violin. Fiona panted hard and buried her face in Sam's shoulder to muffle her moans.

"Sam...honey...you're driving me crazy..."

"I want you, Fiona. I want..."

"I know, honey. I know. I want it too, Sam."

"Fiona, let's..."

She stopped him with a kiss. Fiona didn't want to hear what she knew he'd say next. Sam wasn't crass enough to say he wanted to fuck her. She was sure Sam wanted to make love to her. That's the kind of guy he was. She loved him for it. She loved the sweet kid he was. If they did have sex, it wouldn't be just fucking. Fiona didn't love Sam the way she did her husband, but she did care for the young man—she even loved him in a way. She wanted that. God help her, Fiona wanted it. But it was just so wrong. Fiona knew she shouldn't go there, no matter how much she wanted to. The problem was Fiona didn't have the willpower to resist if things kept going this way. Josh must know that. Her husband knew her so well. Why would he let her play with fire like this? It was like Josh wanted his wife to fuck another man.

"No...honey...I can't..." she moaned, between kisses.

Fiona felt terrible for disappointing Sam, which she knew was silly. Wasn't she giving him the best hand job he'd ever had? She began jacking his cock harder, her arm bouncing as she worked the young man's cock. He was so thick that her grip only just closed around him. The more she concentrated on his cock, the more her pussy throbbed. She did want to fuck him. She just wasn't ready to take that step. But that didn't mean Sam had to settle for a hand job.

"Shit...Fiona...oh shit..."

Sam's face was a mask of ecstasy. She knew she had him. Sam was completely in thrall to her. It was a heady feeling—having that much power—and it made Fiona reckless. She didn't think, but simply acted. Fiona jackknifed forward and took Sam in her mouth. God, he felt even bigger between her lips. Fiona sucked him hungrily. She sucked like her life depended on it. She sucked him wantonly and slurped as she bobbed up and down on his thick shaft. He tasted clean and masculine, like he'd just showered before she picked him up that afternoon.

"Oh shit...oh shit...ohhh shit...Fiona..."

Sam's words tapered off to a strangled cry and he detonated in her mouth. Fiona was a practiced cocksucker and took him all the way to the back of her throat. Her throat worked as she swallowed, but it had been a long time since she caught a load the size of Sam's. She coughed as his dense load overwhelmed her. Jizz bubbled from her lips and ran down his shaft. Fiona snorted and tried to gather herself, embarrassed that she handled his ejaculation like such an amateur. She got back on track and licked and kissed his shaft up and down the entire length, capturing all of the cum that escaped.

"Shit..." Sam groaned, trembling. It was a good thing the movie was thunderously loud, or everyone would be turned their way.

"That was fun," she said, sitting back and licking her lips. "But, you know, girls like it when you take care of yourself down there. You should make it easy on them and do a little grooming."

Sam stared at her like she was an impossible hallucination, slowly nodding. For a moment, she thought something was wrong, but then Sam grabbed Fiona and kissed her hard. He kissed her deeply, and Sam had to taste himself but didn't seem to care. He earned a lot of brownie points for that. Fiona poured her soul into kissing him back and stroked his wet cock. All she could think about was getting him hard again so she could straddle him. Stop that! she chided herself. Get a grip. Fiona had a grip—on Sam—and that was part of the problem. Fiona kept kissing Sam and fought to corral her emotions.

FIONA DID REEL IT IN, finally releasing his cock and snuggling against him. Sam kept trying to touch her, but she pushed his hand away. If she didn't, she would surely be screwing him. She tried to focus on the movie, but nothing stopped the parade of filthy thoughts strutting through her head. She was relieved when the film ended and they could be out in public, where she had to control herself. Fiona was weak in the knees when she stood and clung to Sam for the support, he was more than happy to provide. Clinging to Sam's tall, slender frame didn't help quench her fire.

They arrived at the minivan in the parking garage attached to the mall and rather than go to the driver's side, Fiona pulled open the side door. She jumped in first, pulling Sam behind her. He looked confused, until she pulled his lips to hers. Moving in the tight confines between the seats was awkward. Fiona fell back, laying across the second row of seats, while Sam knelt in the narrow space between the seats. It was a snug fit, but the slender young man made it work. He leaned over Fiona, kissing her, while his hands roamed her body.

"Pull the door closed," she panted, pushing him back.

Sam almost took one of his feet off, but he did it.

"Fiona...what..."

She answered by taking his hand and sliding it into the slit of her dress. His eyes widened when he felt the drenched material of her silky panties. He rubbed her pussy just as she showed him the other day in her den and Fiona closed her eyes, gasping and spreading her legs as far as the dress would allow. He touched her breast too, and her eyes fluttered open. Sam hovered over her, watching her reactions as he touched her. He was studying, learning how she liked to be touched. He brushed over her clit and Fiona jumped, crying out. Sam smiled. He didn't ask permission but pushed her dress up toward her waist. Fiona lifted her butt to allow him.

"Sam, honey. We can't..."

"I know."

Disappointment was evident in his face. Fiona felt guilty. Should she blow him again before they left? It could be fun. There were so many things she could do for Sam, besides sex. She patted his crotch and felt he was hard again. Her resolve wavered. Sam pulled at her panties and she let him slip them off.

“Sam...”

“I know,” he replied, peeved.

Sam pushed her dress higher and kissed her flat tummy. Fiona was self-conscious about the signs of motherhood there. She was luckier than most, but there were still tiny ripples and softer skin. Sam did not notice. He kissed her tummy with a passion that took her breath away. It was tender and intimate—something a lover would do, not a quick, one-night stand kind of thing. Her belly quivered. Sam sucked on her flesh. She moaned his name. He sucked harder. Fiona whimpered. He was teasing her. Sam knew what she wanted but took his time. Fiona was impressed.

“Honey...honey...ohhh...yes...”

Fiona gasped and bit her lip when Sam’s lips descended on her pussy. He brushed by first, and she more felt his hot breath than his touch. Her whimpering was pleading. Fiona didn’t like being teased. She liked getting what she wanted. She lifted herself at him. Sam was too eager to extend the tease and he kissed her there, smooching her smooth, swollen mound. His fingers traced over her landing strip like he was fascinated by it. Fiona felt like his test subject. She didn’t mind. It was sexy to be Sam’s first for so many things. His tongue wiggled against her lips.

“Honey...press harder...use your fingers...open me, Sam,” she moaned. “Yes, honey. Like that. Yeah...just like that...Sam...”

Sam followed instructions well. His tongue pressed inside her. Fiona was so wet the minivan filled with the soft, wet sounds of Sam licking her. His gentle exploring felt good, but the lack of focus was frustrating. Fiona needed to climax. She would show him the way.

“Kiss me...yes...yes, honey...mmm...yeah...suck...like that...yeah...mmm...”

Sam’s big hands rested on her hips and his thumbs massaged her as he spread her open. He sucked and licked her down there, and Fiona cried out when he hit the right spots. She kicked out of a sandal and placed her leg over his shoulder. Her heel massaged his back, while her leg pulled him tighter to her. Sam's slurping grew louder. His tongue darted at her clit—finally—and she cried his name.

“Yeah...there. There! Yes! Right there, honey! Ohhh...yes...there! Sam! Yeah...yeah...ohhh Sam...”

Fiona grabbed his shaggy hair with both hands and pulled his face into her pussy, holding him there. She moved her hips, guiding him to the perfect spot. It felt like she was fucking his face. Her wailing was deafening inside the minivan. Sam sucked on her clit and she exploded. The orgasm ran through her body like an electric current and Fiona went rigid, holding Sam there while his sucking lips prolonged her climax. Her thighs were locked around Sam's head and she didn't even know if he could breathe. She didn't care. The orgasm was her world, and it was a perfect world. She didn't want to suffocate Sam, but there were worse ways to go, she evilly thought.

“Oh...my...god!” she cried, finally releasing Sam and shoving him away.

She shivered as multiple aftershocks rocked her body. Fiona squeezed her thighs together and rolled on her side, giggling the way she often did after a particularly satisfying orgasm. It wasn't that Sam was a master of oral sex—not yet—but his enthusiastic licking combined with the naughty feeling of being his Mrs. Robinson was a heady combo. Fiona was in heaven.

Sam looked stunned. He sat back on his heels, his face glazed by Fiona's juices. Fiona could only imagine how surreal this all must be for him. This sort of thing didn't happen in real life. Guys like Sam didn't get to hook up with their longtime crushes. Fiona wouldn't have believed it if it wasn't happening to her.

Fiona sat up and pulled the dress down to cover her modesty. She took Sam's hands and pulled him over to sit beside her. They gazed into each other's eyes and the emotion that passed between them was intense. Fiona's heart pounded so hard it hurt. Part of her—the part she left open to the young man—was falling for him. She didn't think such a thing was possible. Could she have feelings for more than one man? Fiona didn't love Josh any less. Sam wasn't taking her husband's place in Fiona's heart. It was like her heart had grown to make room for Sam. What she felt for Sam wasn't like her feelings for Josh, but it was real, and it was powerful. It was scary and thrilling. Fiona didn't know what to do, so she kissed him. She tasted herself on his lips, and the naughty reminder of their recent sin made her body throb. Fiona just climaxed, but she still wanted more. She wanted him inside her. That's not happening! she argued with herself. But she couldn't resist the temptation to rub his crotch. Sam was just as ready as she was.

“That was great, honey. You're a quick learner,” she cooed.

“Think how much better I'll get with more practice,” he replied. Sam brushed her hair back and kissed her again. She loved seeing his timidity falling away.

“You think I should let you practice more?”

Sam smiled. “I think you want me to practice more.”

“Maybe. But for now, I don't think it's fair to leave you like this.”

“How can you help me, Fiona?”

“Take out your dick if you want to find out.”

“Oh shit, Fiona...” Sam moaned as she bent forward and took him in her mouth once again.

TEN

THE NIGHT JOSH came home after her movie date with Sam was intense. Fiona didn't dread telling her husband what she'd done anymore. Josh wasn't going to be shocked or angry. Fiona had to come to terms with that. Josh was going to be excited. She knew from his reaction when she texted Josh to tell him she had a confession to make. He tried to cajole it out of her right then, but she insisted he had to hear it in person. It was the first night he had been home on time in months.

Josh was ready to go the moment he came through the door, but Fiona tortured him, making him sit and eat dinner and endure small talk. She was still in the dress she'd worn with Sam. His eyes were alight, and he fidgeted the entire time, trying to hide his excitement. Every time Josh tried to get details of her afternoon, she changed the subject. It wasn't until after he cleaned up dinner that Fiona led her husband into the den and sat him on the couch. Fiona wasn't purposely trying to recreate her last confession. The couch was just the closest thing to the movie theater recliners they had.

Fiona re-enacted her afternoon with Sam as best she could, but Josh was impatient, and he would not be denied. It was like being in the movies with Sam. Josh's hands were all over her while she played with his cock, but Josh was far more aggressive than his inexperienced cousin. Josh played with his wife's pussy until she was panting and couldn't wait any longer. She hiked up the long tank dress and tried to mount him. Josh wasn't having it. He turned her on her knees on the couch, her arms resting on the back. Her slick pussy was ready for him and Josh impaled her with one rough thrust.

“Yeah...yeah...Josh...ohhh...”

“Damn...Fi...you’re so fucking wet...”

“Yeah...yeah...baby...yeah...”

Fiona cried louder and louder. This was what she needed. An afternoon of high school-level foreplay and an evening of teasing her husband had Fiona desperate for sex. Josh held her hips roughly and drilled her, and she begged for more. Josh was not gentle. He took her with a fire she hadn’t seen in ages—not enough that night she jumped him in the kitchen.

“Playing with Sam got you all riled up,” Josh grunted.

“Yeah...”

“You like playing with his cock?”

“Yeah...yeah...it’s so nice, baby...he’s big...”

“You like a big dick, Fi?”

“Yeah...”

“You want a big dick?”

“Yeah...yeah...I need it, baby...please.”

“You need this big dick, don’t you, Fi?”

“Yeah...I need it...baby...I need it...ohhh...”

“Sammy got you going, but this is what you need, Fi.”

“Yeah...please...baby...”

Josh drove his cock harder into her as he spat his words at her. Fiona realized that her husband did see his nerdy cousin as competition. Josh claimed he didn’t, but his dirty talk told a different story. He said he was okay with her going out to play with Sam, but now he felt the need to reclaim her. Josh was planting his flag to remind Fiona who her man was. This was as close as he’d come to being possessive—and she’d take it.

“I need you! I need you, baby! I need that big dick. Please fuck me!” Fiona cooed.

“That’s right, Fi. You’ll always come home for this.”

Fiona hung her head and thrust back at him. She was so close. The long dress swung wildly beneath her and the loud slapping of their bodies crashing together filled the room.

“Yes! Yes! Give it to me, baby! Fuck me!” she cried, her orgasm reaching its crest.

Josh roared as she howled and shook, her orgasm reaching its crest. She was energized, like she’d grabbed an electrical main. Fiona was so absorbed by her climax that she hardly noticed Josh slamming into her and staying there, his own orgasm pulsing deep inside her. She dug her nails into the couch so hard she almost snapped off her nails. Fiona kept bucking back against her husband, but his cock quickly depleted once he came. He slipped out of her, and once he did, Fiona slumped to the couch, drained of energy as well. Josh sat and Fiona crawled into his lap.

“You do know I’m yours, don’t you?” she asked, wrapping her arms around him.

“Of course.”

“If any of this gives you any doubt...”

“Come on, Fi. Don’t start. I told you how I feel.”

“I know. Just making sure. I love you.”

“And I love you. Nothing’s going to change that.”

They left it there that night. Josh made it clear he didn’t want to discuss it further and left her in the den when he went to take a shower. Fiona chose to let it go and wrap herself in the afterglow of her orgasm. She just wanted to feel good, rather than question it all.

The next morning, she told Josh about the convention Sam had invited her to attend. He didn’t believe her at first, but when he realized Fiona was serious about going, he didn’t take long to suggest she do it.

“If you want to. Why not?” Josh said.

“Because I’m afraid of what’s going to happen when I see him again. How far we’re going to go.”

“You don’t know what’s going to happen, Fi. I still don’t think the kid has the balls to go all the way.”

You have no idea, she thought.

“You like all that nerdy shit. I know you do, Fi. Why not take the time to do something like that while you can?”

“But...” Fiona started. She tried to find the words. “But what if we do go further? What if...”

“Fi, I trust you. I trust you’ll do what you think is right.”

“I don’t know about that. My track record on that isn’t so great so far.”

Josh sighed, and it annoyed her. Who was he to get annoyed with her over this? He was the one who wouldn’t fully open up about this. She was about to say as much when his next words stopped her cold.

“Fi, if you want to fuck him, go ahead and do it.”

Fiona just stared at him.

“I mean it. I want you to do what you want. I’ve said I’m okay with all this, and I am. I’m not telling you to do it but do what you want to do.”

“You’re telling me I should fuck Sam?”

“I’m saying you can do it. I love what all this is doing for you, Fi. It’s like you’re a new woman, and I dig it. You’re not leaving me for Sam, so do what you want while Alex is away. Whatever happens, we’ll be fine.”

His confidence ignored her. Josh tried to pitch that it was all about Sam being a nerd, but Fiona couldn’t help feeling that it was about his own cockiness too—and that he was underestimating her. Josh couldn’t see a world where she could live without him. Fiona couldn’t either, but she didn’t want to be taken for granted. She wanted to tell her husband about how big Sam’s cock was and how hard he made her come. It was petty, but she wanted Josh to be unsure—to worry just a little bit. But she wasn’t cruel, and she wouldn’t do that. Fiona would take him up on his offer. If Josh wanted her to play with fire, she would do it. She just hoped no one got burned.

“Okay, I’ll go. I’m going to have to come up with some kind of a costume, like those cosplay girls.”

Josh smiled. “I’m liking this more and more. The sexier the better.”

Fiona pushed the negative from her mind. She focused on her husband. It was time to show him she was all in. “It’s okay with you if I parade around this convention in some skimpy little outfit. You don’t mind if they’re all staring at your wife?”

“I will have to inspect this costume. Just to make sure it’s appropriate. Like you said, you are my wife.”

“I imagine we have very different definitions of appropriate,” she said, straddling him.

“How so?” He palmed her breasts and Fiona moaned.

“Is it appropriate for your wife to be giving blow jobs in movie theaters?”

Josh’s eyes twinkled. “Only when I say it is.”

“Hmm. I wonder what other appropriate behavior I’ll get up to at this convention.”

“I can’t wait to find out.”

“Why don’t you show me what’s appropriate behavior?”

“My pleasure,” he replied, pulling her top over her head.

By the time they were done that morning, Josh needed another shower and was a couple of hours late for work.

FIONA FINGERED HER WEDDING RING—BEAUTIFUL Celtic knotwork worked in gold—staring at it spinning around as she wondered, Am I really going to do this? Josh tried to put it in we terms. We'll be fine, he kept saying. But it wasn't we. Fiona would be the one doing something. Fiona would be the one breaking her vows if she went through with it. She chuckled ruefully. Haven't I already broken my vows? Didn't blowing Sam break those vows already? If she thought of it that way, why not have sex with Sam? The barn door was open, and the horse was long gone.

She hadn't committed to crossing that final line. Fiona told Sam she would be attending the geek convention with him, nothing more. She really did think it would be fun. But she wasn't kidding herself. When she saw Sam again, there was a good chance they were going to have sex. Sam would never push it, of course. Fiona wanted it, and she knew she wouldn't resist her urges.

Josh came into the kitchen, dressed for golf and she looked up. He asked, "Are you headed out soon? I need to hit the road to make our tee time."

"Yeah. I need to get on the road. It's a bit of a drive."

"You look hot. Can I get a peek?"

Josh could see her hair was teased up and her make-up was dramatic, with dark lipstick. She wore a knee-length overcoat, despite the warm day, which only revealed over-the-knee, blood-red boots and a slice of fishnet stockings above them. It was enough to get his attention.

"Nope," she replied, thinking her efforts were for Sam, not her husband.

"That's just mean."

"Sorry, but this is for my date."

"Haha. Very funny." He noted her tension. "Aren't you excited?" Josh leaned on the back of a chair, regarding his wife across the kitchen table.

"Yeah, of course. I'm not going to lie to you. It's exciting. I mean, I can't stop thinking about it, and if I just focus on doing it, it's thrilling. I get so many butterflies I feel like I'm going to float away. But then I think about what it means—what it could mean for us, and I’m convinced I’ve lost my mind to even consider this.”

“I don’t know how many different ways I can tell you, Fi. I am totally cool with this. I am not worried. I am not jealous. Okay, it’s weird. I can’t deny that. But like you said, Sam’s a good kid. Right? He’s not going to tell anyone. It’s our little shared secret.”

“You don’t think the next family holiday is going to be weird?” she asked.

“Only if we let it be. I’ll pull Sam aside if you want me to. I’ll tell him I’m cool with it.”

“I already told him. I think facing you right now would just scare him off.” Fiona allowed a smile. “Besides, I think we’re so far down the road that he’s ready to keep going whether you’re okay with it or not.”

“That’s not cool, but I’ve got to admit, I’m glad to see the kid actually has some balls if he’d cheat with you.” Josh paused to consider it.

“You like that, don’t you?” she accused.

“What do you mean?”

“You’re thinking about me being a cheating wife and it turns you on.”

Josh looked conflicted, making Fiona wonder at the root of the conflict. It wasn’t another man screwing her. That didn’t seem to bother him at all. She still couldn’t believe how nonchalant he was about all this. She would never understand it, nor would she ever really be okay with it. In his own way, Josh was breaking their vows too. I, Josh, take thee, Fiona, to have and to hold...to love and to cherish, till death do us part... His cavalier attitude about passing her around—okay, that wasn’t fair—didn’t make Fiona feel particularly cherished.

“Don’t get me wrong. I’d never want you to actually cheat. I’d kick the guy’s ass and I’d be gone in a heartbeat. But when I think about you being naughty—if I think about you being so consumed by lust that you just can’t help yourself—yeah, it’s hot. What can I say? I think most guys get turned on by that.” Josh shrugged.

“Most guys are not turned on by their wives cheating. Most guys don’t want them fucking other men.”

“I don’t want you fucking other men either, Fi. Don’t make this something it’s not. This isn’t other men, for one thing. It’s nerdy Sam. And it’s not something I want. I’m not pushing you to do it. But I’m okay with it. I don’t know why you can’t see the difference.”

Because it makes no sense! she shouted in her head. Technically, Josh did not push her to do anything with Sam. That was true. However, he liked it. She believed Josh wanted it to happen. He just wouldn't admit it. Her husband was not telling the whole truth about his feelings on this and Fiona had given up trying to force him.

An awkward silence stretched between them, until Josh asked, "Sure you won't show me your outfit?"

It broke then tension and Fiona's smile slid sideways. She stood up but kept her light overcoat belted tight.

"I'll think about sending you a picture."

Fiona grabbed her keys, kissed her husband on the cheek, and walked out the door.

ELEVEN

SAM WAS THRILLED when she told him she wanted to go to the convention. He was attending with four friends from his gaming group and she strongly suspected he wanted to show her off to them. That was okay with Fiona. She was learning to embrace her exhibitionist side. It was fun when Sam checked her out, so she should enjoy his friends doing it too. The more, the merrier, she thought.

Agreeing to go to the convention was the easy part. Figuring her costume out was harder than she expected. Fiona turned to the Pinterest and Instagram, looking at scores of photos of cosplay girls. Her first takeaway was that many of the girls wore as little as possible while trying to look like whatever character they were dressing up to be. Well, I don't have those boobs, she thought, looking at a photo of a woman dressed as Lara Croft. She thought she could still pull it off with the right bra, but she wanted something more fantasy inspired. Sam and his friends were dressing as their characters and Fiona wanted to match.

Josh was no help. He went right for the old Princess Leia in the metal bikini. Fiona would dress like that for him if he asked, but she was not walking around a convention hall like that. Besides, it wasn't really fantasy—even if it was closer to the kinds of posters on Sam bedroom walls. After a couple hours of internet research, she finally had a plan.

Fiona was warm in the overcoat on the hot Saturday afternoon, but she didn't want the neighbors—hers or Sam's—seeing her in her costume. Aunt Trudy took in her hair and makeup, her boots, and wanted to see her costume, but Fiona steadfastly refused to show herself. Aunt Trudy surely would not approve.

“I can’t believe you’re doing this. It’s above and beyond, dear. I owe you a really nice bottle of wine,” Trudy commented.

“I think it’s going to be a good time,” Fiona insisted.

“You don’t have to pretend with me.”

Fiona held her tongue. She just wanted to get out of the house with Sam without getting into it with the young man’s mother. “I’d better go up and see what’s keeping him,” she said.

Trudy waved her on and Fiona was relieved to be away from the woman. As a mother, she just couldn’t avoid an underlying sense of guilt when she was around Trudy. There was no way Trudy would be as understanding as her nephew was. Trudy was happy Fiona was building Sam’s confidence, but she could never approve of Fiona’s methods.

“Oh, hi there,” Sam said, opening his bedroom door after she lightly knocked.

“Wow,” Fiona said, beholding Sam in all his glory. She suppressed a giggle, not wanting to offend the young man.

Sam was decked out in a puffy green pirate shirt, black breeches and knee-high moccasin boots. He walked back into his room and hefted a giant foam warhammer. The weapon looked realistic.

“Pretty awesome, right?” he proudly said.

“Yeah, it’s impressive. That’s awesome, Sam.”

“Let me see yours.”

Fiona grasped the belt holding her overcoat closed. She looked back over her shoulder to make sure they were alone and considered it, but then shook her head. “I want to wait until we get there.”

“Come on, I really want to see. The picture you sent me was cool.”

Fiona broke down and texted Sam a photo after endless badgering. It was an artsy photo, though, a leg in fishnet stockings and part of her skirt. Just a tease to fuel his imagination. Even if Sam did share the photo, it would be harmless.

Fiona loosened the belt and began opening her coat. His eyes went wide, but she stopped and pulled the belt tight. “Sorry, you have to wait.”

Sam hefted his warhammer high and joked, “I could just club you and drag you back to my cave.”

Fiona pressed her body to his and rubbed Sam through his breeches. She was pleased to find him hard. In a low, breathy whisper, she said, “I promise it’ll be worth the wait, baby.”

Sam kissed her and it took her breath away. He held Fiona, crushing her into him and pressed his tongue into her mouth. She melted into the kiss without thinking and clung to him. His technique was still sloppy, but the confidence behind the kiss took her breath away. Fiona was proud of the young man. The kiss gave her all the tingles, but then she remembered they were in his bedroom and the door was open, and Aunt Trudy could walk in on them any minute. Fiona pushed him away and tried to catch her breath while she smiled.

"That was reckless," she panted.

"Sorry, I just couldn't resist. Can't blame me."

"I didn't say I didn't like it. We just can't do it with your mother right downstairs."

Fiona felt a wave of nostalgia. It was something that would have come out of her mouth when she was a teenager—except Fiona didn't worry about those things back then. Just the opposite, in fact. She liked the danger.

"We should get going. Are you ready?" she asked.

"I was born ready," he replied, smiling.

"ALRIGHT, it's time for it to come off," Sam urged.

"I bet you say that to all the girls," she kidded, pleased to see she could still make him blush.

She'd stubbornly kept the overcoat for the walk from the parking garage to the convention hall, where they now stood in the entry queue, waiting for Sam's friends.

"I do, but they never listen," Sam said.

"Good, that makes me your first," she said, winking.

The sexual tension between them on the drive up was thick enough to cut with a knife, but neither of them directly addressed what was between them or what might happen later. It consumed them both, but neither had the words for it.

Fiona unbelted the overcoat and shrugged it off, carefully watching Sam's reaction. She was pleased. Her black denim vest had four big, brass snaps in the front. The leather lacing up both sides gave it a warrior princess look, she hoped. A black push-up bra beneath it gave Fiona the cleavage she'd always wanted—although she couldn't help feeling like she needed more up there. The vest was paired with a very short, black leather miniskirt, which also had lacing up the front. When she moved, a swath of her flat tummy was exposed between the garments. Both items had been in her closet since her college days, but she'd never paired them together before. Fishnet stockings and over-the-knee, blood-red leather boots with a stacked heel completed the look. She carried one of Alex's toy swords. Fiona posed and tried for sexy, but she felt silly as she thrust her sword toward Sam.

Sam was a statue in front of her, staring like she was a goddess. The affirmation made Fiona glow.

"Wow, you look awesome. You're totally hot," Sam enthused.

"Thanks," she mumbled. It was her turn to blush. Fiona had the tingles everywhere. It was embarrassing how much of an effect his attention had on her. "Do I look authentic?"

Sam considered it for a moment and replied, "You're hot enough that it doesn't matter."

"Hey!" Fiona knew it was true. She looked closer to a biker chick than a warrior princess, but Sam thought she was hot, and that was ultimately more important. "You're great for the ego."

"I mean it, Fiona. Wow!" Sam whipped his phone out of his bag and snapped off a photo before she could stop him.

"Hey! Come on!"

"I have to capture this."

"But, Sam."

"Everyone can see you anyway. What's the secret?"

Sam had a point. She was standing in a crowd of hundreds, and she was showing a lot less skin than some of the women around—not that all of them should have been so exposed. Fiona chided herself for body shaming. She knew she acquitted herself well, but these were all strangers. No one she knew was seeing her warrior princess look. Fiona could only imagine what her friends would say.

"I dunno. I just feel funny, I guess," she admitted.

"You have nothing to feel funny about. You're smokin', Fiona. Let me take a real picture." He showed her his snap and saw it was blurred from her movement.

Fiona realized she was going to have to be confident if she was going to pull this off. "Fine. But you need to keep it to yourself."

She posed and plastered her familiar, cocky smile on her face, projecting a confidence she was still working up to. Fiona leaned into it to really emphasize her artificial cleavage. After Sam took a couple pictures for himself, Fiona handed him her phone so he could snap a few for her. She would send one of them to her husband.

Two of Sam's friends arrived just then and they both looked at Fiona like she was a mirage. These guys are acting like I'm Scarlett Johansson! she thought. I'm going to have to hang around these conventions more often! Sam's friends didn't recognize her—they'd only met in passing before—and he took advantage, introducing her as his friend Fiona.

The first two guys were about Sam's age and made him look like a stud. One was heavyset, wore a brown monk's robe and carried a long staff. The other was just as skinny as Sam, but shorter than Fiona and looked to be wearing a green Robin Hood Halloween costume, down to the fake booties worn over his sneakers. Despite her affinity for the nerdy boys, even she had to admit they looked silly. She kept her opinion to herself and smiled and said hello.

Two more guys arrived before they reached the head of the line and they were even more curious. The first appeared to be in his forties, and was dressed as a wizard, complete with a long white wig and beard. The other was probably about Fiona's age, wore a wedding ring and was dressed as a warrior, carrying a big, fake sword. He looked like he might be handsome without the geeky garb. He introduced himself as Gary and set to flirting with Fiona right away. Sam slid a possessive arm around her waist as they finally passed through the gate.

The convention space was huge and packed with every manner of display booth. The vendors were not limited to role-playing merchandise. Many were vendors selling everything from comic books to role-playing dice to action figures. Large displays promoted the major comic book companies and genre movies that were coming out over the next few months. One booth, for a low-budget sword-and-sorcerer movie featured two sword-wielding babes dressed far sluttier than Fiona, and she thought, Now that's what a warrior girl looks like! Their little metal bikini tops barely contained the girl's breasts and their bottoms were as skinny as they could get away with in public. The men waiting in line for pictures with them ranged in age from teenagers to seniors. The warrior girls plastered on smiles as each customer tried for a quick grope while having their pictures taken. You couldn't pay me enough, Fiona thought. She wanted to liberate the girls.

The warrior girls promoting the movie weren't alone. It seemed that every promotional booth had at least one attractive, scantily clad woman to entice the mostly male crowd passing by. It wasn't unique to this convention. Fiona knew it was across industries and persisted into the #MeToo era. Fiona was heartened by the number of female attendees at the event. The crowd was mostly male, but not all male. She knew female fandom had grown in recent years and was glad to see it in action.

Fiona was constantly distracted by some new costume in the crowd and held onto Sam's hand lest she lose him. It was easy to tell who'd put time and effort into their cosplay and who just half-assed it or bought something off the shelf. For every Iron Man or full-on barbarian warrior, there was a Batman whose utility belt strained to contain his belly, or a too-scrawny Thor. Fiona admired them all, because the people attending the event all held their heads high. No one appeared too self-conscious about having the geek on full display. They were in their element. She snapped pictures of some of the more elaborate costumes. One in particular, a Wonder Woman in full latex costume, was specifically for her husband. Fiona wanted him to feel like he was missing something.

The group spent time mingling in the crowd and checking out the booths and merchandise tables. Sam wasn't scheduled to start playing for a couple hours. He kept asking if she was enjoying herself and she assured him she was. The booths were full of old toys and t-shirts and such that sparked deep nostalgia. Fiona was excited to snap up some old fantasy paperbacks that she'd first enjoyed as a teenager.

They separated from Sam's friends several times and wandered on their own. Fiona's hand in Sam's felt like the most natural thing in the world. It really felt like they were a couple. Fiona looked younger than her years—everyone said so—and she liked to think she and Sam looked like they belonged together, like any other geeky couple walking through the convention.

Sam found plenty of opportunities to casually touch her and she enjoyed it more than she should have. Her sexy warrior girl costume had more of his attention than usual. Fiona took full advantage by finding excuses to bend over merchandise tables and give Sam some nice views. He wasn't the only one who noticed. Many of the nerdy men passing around her stared at Fiona like she'd just stepped out of their fantasies. She hoped they were jealous of Sam. Fiona played to them too, and found the convention was much more stimulating than she ever would have expected.

Sam checked the time on his phone. "I need to meet up with the guys. We have a battle with another guild in ten minutes. It's going to be at least an hour or two. I don't know if you just want to walk around, or sit in on one of the panels," Sam said.

"I want to come with you. I am your date, right?"

Sam beamed.

"They do allow spectators, don't they? I can be your lucky charm."

Fiona thought of men playing craps who had their women blow on their dice. The same principle should work on 20-sided dice, shouldn't it?

"Yeah, there's sometimes a small crowd, if it's a new game or a well-known player. But games like ours don't usually have people watching. We just go off into a room and role-play a dungeon battle. The winning side gets limited edition gaming material."

"Let's go. You can be my hero and fight for my hand," she said, offering her actual hand.

"How could I refuse such a gift?" Sam grinned. He took her hand and kissed it.

They met up with the others and while Sam went to the registration table to sign in, Gary took the opportunity to take his shot at Fiona. He sidled up to her and put his hand on the small of her back, just above her butt. Smooth, she thought, shifting away from him, but he just moved with her.

"So how do you know Sammy?" Gary asked. She'd never heard him called Sammy, and the tone was condescending.

"Our families are very close. We've become friends." The lie rolled easily off her tongue.

"Really? What do you guys do together?" His hand slid down to her butt and she promptly removed it, shooting him a venomous look.

"We do what people do. We spent the day at a lake the other day."

"Yeah? How was that? Sammy's not really the outdoors type."

This guy is Sam's friend? she thought with disgust.

“It was great. Beautiful, sunny day, nice and secluded. Sam wanted to make sure I didn’t get burned in my little bikini, so he made sure I was covered in lotion. He’s got great hands.”

Fiona took a moment to enjoy Gary’s shock before asking, “How long have you been married, Gary?”

"Uhh, like six years."

Gary did not question if Fiona was married, but her knotwork ring didn’t look like a traditional wedding band. She wanted something different when she married, and Josh didn’t have strong feelings about it. Josh had a larger, matching ring and joked he liked that it didn’t look like a real wedding band.

The awkward encounter was cut short by Sam's return. He sensed the tension between Fiona and Gary, but it left her mind when she pulled him close and kissed his cheek.

“We need to head in and get set up,” Sam said, chest puffed out.

The room was a space created by movable, temporary walls. Two large, gray folding tables in the middle were lined with cheap plastic chairs. This was where the combat would take place.

Fiona was impressed by the large, 3-D dungeon model in the middle of the table. A lot of detail had been painted onto it and then a grid painted over that. Columns rose up from the dungeon floor and there were even tiny furnishings—a table, chairs and a bookcase—as well as several chests and other tiny items.

The other guild was already there setting up. Their costumes were more elaborate than those of Sam and his friends, and Fiona thought that if they awarded style points Sam was in trouble. A chubby, teenage boy looked like he was wearing real chainmail with his conical helmet. Everyone pulled out their character sheets and their dice. Sam carried his dice in a little brown leather pouch that was tied to his belt, while Gary produced a large, lacquered wooden box from his bag. Fiona knew they played with strange types of dice, but seeing them all lined up in Gary’s box, with all their colors and patterns, made her feel like she was looking at jewels. Some were pyramids, some looked like little soccer balls and others had more sides than she could count from where she stood.

Fiona tried to stay out of the way, but there wasn’t much extra room in the space. She had to shift every time someone needed to get up and move. The way the boys on the other side of the table looked at her made her feel like a gazelle on the plains. Their wonderment was plain. They didn't understand why such an attractive woman was in the room, watching them do things they usually did in dimly lit basements full of guys. Fiona basked in their attention and finding excuses to lean forward or bend down felt like second nature after all the time she'd spent teasing Sam. She was disappointed that Sam didn't seem to notice her like the other guys. He was locked in on the game.

A man, who would be running the game, stood at the head of the table and asked if everyone was ready to begin. Fiona came forward and planted a lingering kiss on Sam's lips, after wishing him luck. Gary was sour, but the other guys stared at him like he was a god. Sam sat back in his chair with an expression that said, That's right, take it all in. It was a counter to the way her husband made her feel lately—undervalued by his willingness to share her. Fiona was sure Sam would keep her to himself and hoard her like treasure if he had the choice.

It was tough to follow the game. There seemed to be rules upon rules upon rules that the guys just instinctively knew. No one paused to explain things to Fiona. Arguments broke out over one arcane rule or another and were settled by the man running the game. They moved little figures representing their characters around the dungeon. When they were in position, they announced attacks and rolled dice. They were all quite serious and their excitement rubbed off on Fiona, who rooted for Sam's guild every time they made an attack. One by one, figures were taken out of the dungeon until Sam's little man was left to face two of the other guild alone.

"C'mon Sam, you can take 'em! The ranger's nearly dead anyway," Sam's monk friend encouraged.

"Yeah, drop 'em," Gary said.

"I'll give it a shot, but I've only got one more daily left," Sam replied.

Fiona placed her hands on Sam's shoulders and massaged him, like he was a fighter about to go into the ring. Like a good fighter, he stayed focused on the bout in front of him. She leaned down and gave his earlobe a little tug with her teeth and whispered.

"If you win this battle, I'll do anything you want later."

Sam stiffened in his chair and his hand froze with the dice in it. Fiona was tempted to reach into his lap and feel if he'd stiffened everywhere. He threw himself into the game with renewed vigor. Sam made short work of his one opponent, quickly striking him down and gloating over his easy victory. Fiona was turned on by his power and bravado. Her pulse raced and she couldn't believe how exciting it was to watch Sam defeat his enemies. She stayed in place, massaging his arms and shoulders, knowing she inspired him.

The final battle took longer, and from what Fiona could tell, it was very close. Someone commented that Sam was "beyond bloodied" and he was out of "healing surges," whatever that meant. He hung on, and with a mighty swing of his mace, Sam was the last man standing. He shot out of his chair, pumping his fists into the air. He turned and pulled Fiona into his arms. She was caught up in the moment and gave Sam a hot, passionate kiss right there in front of everyone in the room. The room fell silent while everyone gaped at them. The kiss finally broke and it took a moment for everyone to act like it hadn't happened.

The boys collected their prizes—some little figurines they were very excited about—and cleaned up their gear. The other guys heartily congratulated Sam and Fiona suspected that it was as much about having her on his arm as about the game they'd just played. She was proud of Sam and thrilled for herself. These guys made her feel like a queen. They all filed out into the main convention space and discussed what to do next. Dinner was mentioned, and there was a panel the others wanted to attend.

"They're going to show the new trailer," the monk excitedly said.

Fiona took a moment to check her phone. Josh had texted her several eggplants in response to the picture she'd send. She imagined him sharing the photo with the other guys on the golf course that morning and it didn't bother her as much as she thought it would. She actually kind of liked it. She hoped the guys lusted after her the way the guys at the convention did. Fiona wondered if it was too late to discover her inner exhibitionist. She texted her husband.

[Fiona] r u still at the office

[Josh] yeah. The IT contractor is killing me. Might grab a bite afterward. Having fun?

[Fiona] it's great. Sam won his battle

[Josh] big man. He won the battle when he got you into that outfit. Or if he got you out of it

Fiona held her breath. Her hands trembled on her phone. She couldn't believe she was about to send this text. But she was. Fiona knew what she wanted, and her husband told her to go for it.

[Fiona] can u stay out late? Maybe go over to joe's?

She had to wait an agonizing five minutes for his response. Fiona hoped Josh would tell her not to do it, to drop Sam off and come home to him. She wanted Josh to come to his senses because one of them needed to. That wasn't what Josh did.

[Josh] sure. Should I wait for you to tell me to come home?

[Fiona] I don't know

[Josh] let me know. Have fun

Fiona looked up from her phone and saw the group was waiting on her. She put the phone away and plastered on a smile to hide her nerves.

"Why don't we get something to eat and go from there?" Fiona suggested.

"Sounds good to me," Sam said. It sounded like he would have agreed to anything she suggested.

TWELVE

THE GROUP ENDED up at a nearby chain restaurant with a short wait for a table. They were seated and Fiona ended up sandwiched between Gary and Sam on one side of the booth. Fiona knew it was going to be trouble right away because Gary couldn't keep his hands to himself. She was proud she inspired him to be so frisky, but Gary was creepy, and she didn't need him coming on to her. He was married, for starters. Even if she had been available, that would have killed any chance he had right there. Fiona also hated that he was so brazen in front of Sam, who was supposed to be Gary's friend. Fortunately, Sam was oblivious. She didn't want him to be brought down by his friend's disrespect. Fiona would handle this herself.

Gary kept resting his hand on her thigh, like it was no big deal, and Fiona kept removing it. The hand on her thigh felt good, but she wished it was Sam's, not Gary's. She glared at Gary over the rim of the beer she sipped, but he was undeterred. Her salad came, and while she picked at it, Fiona allowed Gary's hand to remain on her thigh, perversely curious how far he'd try to take it. She would stop him before he got any traction, but she didn't need to lift a finger. Gary flirted with the edge of her tight skirt, but he didn't have the nerve to attempt more. Gary was weak. Fiona smirked thinking what a paper tiger he was. Let him have his cheap thrill, she thought. I hope he goes home with an aching hard-on and his wife ignores him.

Sam rode high on his victory and having Fiona on his arm and never noticed his friend's behavior. Fiona leaned closer to Sam in response to Gary's behavior and even placed his hand on her other thigh, which finally made Gary pull back. Fiona would have welcomed Sam pushing his hand higher, but he was too inexperienced to take the hint. Instead, she landed her hand in Sam's lap. He jumped and stammered his words while his cock twitched under her massaging hand.

The group made their way back to the convention hall and discussed which evening panels they might check out together. Fiona pulled Sam to the side.

"I don't want to ruin your good time, but I was thinking we could get out of here. These boots are killing me," she said, hoping Sam would see through her pretext. It had the added benefit of being true. The high-heeled boots were killing her.

"Sure, that's not a problem. I'm sure you want to get home," he replied dejectedly. Clearly, he didn't want the day to end.

"I do, but I want you to come home with me. Josh is going to be out late."

Fiona stared at Sam meaningfully until he finally got her drift.

"Oh, yeah. That would be great." He lit up.

"Good. Let's get out of here." Fiona softly kissed him.

They rejoined his friends and Fiona smiled at their obvious jealousy. They couldn't believe Sam was getting her. She hoped it gave them some confidence too. If Sam could do better, so could they—except for Gary. While Sam said his goodbyes, Fiona moved close enough to Gary to whisper without being overheard.

"You know why we're leaving, right?" she asked.

Gary snorted in response. It was the same dismissive attitude her husband had toward Sam, and she hated it. The difference was, she could say anything she wanted to Gary.

"Sam is going to fuck me into a stupor."

"Yeah, right," he replied.

Fiona held out her hands, approximating Sam's length. "His cock is incredible. You have no idea. I bet you're not even in his league." She smiled and moved away before he could reply. Fiona led Sam away by the hand.

Back in her minivan, he said, "So, uh, back to your place?"

She leaned across the console and kissed Sam. It was slow and sensual and there was a lot of tongue and sucking, and even some moaning. He reached for her and his hands roamed. He couldn't feel much through the heavy vest and opened the first snap. Fiona placed a hand over his, stopping Sam.

“Wait ‘til we get home, honey.”

“And then?” he asked

“I did promise you could do anything to me if you won, didn’t I?”

“Anything?”

“Within reason,” she replied, smiling. “But don’t worry, I’m a very reasonable girl.”

FIONA WAS ALMOST TOO DISTRACTED to drive and nearly ran a couple lights on the way home. Her mind filled with all the things she and Sam would do, followed by doubts and self-recrimination. She wanted it—god did she want it—but she knew she shouldn’t have it. It was the same argument she’d been having with herself since she first thought of fooling around with Sam, and it always ended at the same place, with Fiona giving into her base desires and reveling in the decadent lust Sam brought out in her. But she would never convince herself what she was doing was right.

Her doubts only became stronger when they arrived at her house. Can I really go through with this? she questioned, over and over. She stalled by asking Sam if he wanted a drink. He didn’t, but Fiona poured herself a large glass of wine, which she drained in record time. She poured herself another. Sam stood in the kitchen with her, watching. He looked like he wanted to tear her clothes off, but Sam wasn’t that guy. Fiona would have to make this happen. The energy in the kitchen was somehow both electric and awkward. They both wanted it and they were both too scared to make a move. Fiona leaned back against the counter, hoping Sam would come over and kiss her. Sam stood by the table, waiting for Fiona to come to him.

Desire and caution warred inside Fiona. The warm buzz of the wine kicked in and one side took the lead. She smiled and led Sam up to her bedroom—the one she shared with her husband.

Fiona turned on the light above the bed and its attached ceiling fan began to lazily spin. They stood beside the bed and Sam placed his hands on her hips. Hers rested on his chest. She looked up at Sam and tried to quiet the rising panic inside her. Don’t think. Just go with it, she thought.

They shared a tender kiss that raised her excitement but exacerbated her doubts. The kiss was soft and romantic and drove home that this wouldn't just be about sex. She and Sam shared real feelings. Those feelings made it feel much more wrong, but made her ache for Sam.

"Fiona," he whispered.

"What do you want, honey? I promised you whatever you want. Should I strip?"

Sam smiled, easing the tension. "The costume is pretty sexy."

"I can keep it on if you like. What do you like, Sam?" Her fingers traced patterns on his chest.

"I like everything. Everything you do is awesome, Fiona."

"You're going to have to help me a little here, honey. Girls like it when a guy takes charge—unless you want me to seduce you..."

Sam was thoughtful then took a step back. He grabbed her vest and pulled hard. The snaps popped open, exposing her black bra. Fiona laughed as tension drained from her.

"Okay, then. Go for it, Sam. Take what you want, honey," she cooed.

He grabbed her breasts but didn't feel much through her padded push-up bra. It had to go. Sam fiddled with the front clasp until it popped free and then cupped her warm, soft mounds. Fiona sighed and pushed against his hands. He pinched her nipples and she shivered, moaning his name.

"What do you want, Sam? Do you want me to be a good girl or a slut tonight? I'll be whatever you want, honey."

His lips moved, but no words would come out. Sam didn't have the tools for this, but Fiona was pushing him. He needed to make this his.

"Oh god, Fiona," he groaned. "I...uh...suck my dick."

Her smile quirked to the side. Fiona was pleased. "Yes, sir."

Fiona slithered to her knees and pulled his breeches and underwear to his ankles. Sam's shirt hung low, but he tossed that aside. His cock stood up and out proudly, announcing itself to her. He'd taken her suggestion and done some grooming down there. Fiona was pleased. She grabbed him with both hands and pumped sticky precum from the tip, which she eagerly lapped up after locking her lips around his head.

"Oh god...Fiona...god..."

It wasn't the first time she ever sucked his cock, but she'd never done it so openly or brazenly. This wasn't a dark movie theater or the back of her minivan. Fiona knelt in her bedroom, lights on, her eyes blazing up at him.

Her cheeks hollowed as she sucked and bobbed, taking him deeper and deeper. He touched the back of her throat and she still stroked more of him beyond her lips. She loved that Sam was big, but not too big. It just plain hurt when a guy was too big. Sam would feel just right inside her—like a Goldilocks dick.

Fiona sucked him and watched all the crazed emotions crossing his face as he incoherently babbled and gasped like a hooked fish. Sam swayed on his feet like he was going to keel over, but he was rooted to his spot by her skillful sucking. Fiona felt that power over him again and it surged through her. Maybe Sam shouldn't take charge, she thought. I am Mrs. Robinson, after all.

“God...god...I love it when you do that...”

Sam held the top of her head as Fiona sucked on his balls, darting her tongue down toward his taint. He had to adjust his stance so she could really get in there. She felt so dirty digging deep like this and it made her pussy throb. Fiona was Sam's first and she wanted to be his best. There would surely be other women in the coming years, and she wanted Sam to compare them all to her. She slurped around his balls and stroked his spit slick shaft. Sam began to violently shake.

“Fi...Fi...Fiona...” he warned.

Fiona lifted her face from under his testicles and stared at Sam, resting his tip on her lips as she fixed him with her pale eyes. “You're going to come for me, aren't you?”

“Y...yeah...”

“Do you want to come in my mouth? Come on, honey, give it to me,” she cooed. Fiona would have felt silly talking to Sam like that if she wasn't so turned on.

“God...Fi...”

She popped his cock back into her mouth just in the nick of time, pushing the head to the back of her throat again so she could swallow his load right down. She pumped his shaft and swallowed as quickly as she could, trying not to choke on the viscous emission. Fiona would never be used to how much Sam came. Satisfied his balls were drained, she slowly dragged her lips back up his shaft and reluctantly let it slip away.

Fiona held out her hands and Sam took them, pulling her to her feet. “Get rid of that costume, honey,” she ordered.

Sam shed his clothes and laid back on the bed as instructed. Fiona felt a pang of guilt seeing him on her bed, waiting for her. It was the bed she shared with her husband. It felt wrong to be doing this here, but it was too late to go to the guest room. Josh would be home later, and she would be sharing it with him. He said he was okay with all this, but how would he feel climbing into a bed his wife had just shared with someone else? Fiona realized it was likely she'd be fucking two different men in the same day. It wouldn't be a first for her, but that was so many years ago. She truly was a different woman then. A shiver ran down her spine as she wondered if that reckless old Fiona would go back into retirement after this. What if her crazy side stayed awakened?

Fiona threw off her vest and bra and hiked up her skirt to shimmy out of her panties. She crawled onto the bed and straddled Sam's legs. Sam was already twitching back to life as he watched her move and she stroked him. She loved the young man's quick recovery time. She'd miss it when all this was over.

"Do you feel how excited I am?" she asked, rubbing her wet, swollen pussy on his thigh.

"Yeah," he moaned.

"Do you think it will feel good to be inside me?"

"Oh god, Fiona."

Sam reached up and caressed her breasts, thumbing her nipples. She moaned and closed her eyes, content to sit back and let him touch her while she rubbed against his thigh. He grew harder and harder in her hands. They could do it now, she thought, but she wasn't ready yet.

"Mmm, that feels so good, honey. I love your hands. Some lucky girl is going to benefit oh so much from those hands. Mmm..."

"You're so beautiful, Fiona. So sexy. There are no other girls to me."

Her eyes flutter open. "There will be Sam. You know this isn't forever."

"I know," he reluctantly agreed.

"I'll be jealous, honey," she admitted. "I'll be jealous because I know how lucky she'll be."

Fiona bent down and they kissed. They kissed like lovers who knew their time was short and they had to fit a lifetime of emotion into their brief time together. His kissing skills were markedly improved from when they started. Practice makes perfect, she thought. Sam was learning what she liked. Her heart felt like it was going to burst as she kissed Sam. He squeezed her butt, but for the moment it wasn't about sex. It was about the potent feelings the young man stirred inside her. They shared a devouring kiss that left her breathless.

Fiona panted as she slid high on his body, straddling his face. Sam was inexperienced, but he instinctively knew what to do. He grabbed her butt and pulled her pussy to his face.

“Kiss me, honey. Yes...yes...there...like that...mmm...like that...”

Sam dug his fingers into her butt and went for it. His tongue pushed between her lips and she sucked and kissed at her sweet, juicy puss. She slowly rocked her hips and grabbed the top of the headboard. Sam found her clit and Fiona cried out. The tip of her tongue pressed the tiny nub and described a crazy pattern that made her see stars. I didn't teach him that! she thought as she cried out his name.

“Yeah...yeah...Sam...ohhh...w-w-where did you learn that...mmm...”

Fiona rocked harder on his face. Sam couldn't answer because his tongue was very busy. He was like a man on a mission. Fiona wondered where he'd been all her life. Josh knew her body, but Sam knew tricks that her husband hadn't thought of in all their years of marriage. Thank god for the internet! Sam might need to give Josh a few lessons! she thought. Sam massaged her lips with his thumbs as his mouth did its magnificent work. Her body jolted as pure bliss rocked through her.

“Yeah...yeah...oh god...Sam...oh god...ohhh...ohhh...SAM!”

Fiona slapped the wall and rode his face hard as she climaxed with violent intensity. Sam's tongue was magical, and she thought she may not be able to give him up. She wailed and rocked and flooded him with her tangy excitement, which Sam lapped at like it was delicious nectar. She'd barely wound down from one orgasm when his rapacious mouth brought her up to another one. Fiona wailed again and arched her back, locked onto the headboard with a white-knuckled grip.

“Oh god...oh god...no more...I...I can't...” Fiona panted, climbing off his face.

On her back, Fiona stared at the spinning ceiling fan and twitched from the aftershocks that made her feel as if she'd been struck by lightning. She smiled and even laughed, that old come laugh she had when she climaxed particularly hard.

Sam rolled onto his side and watched her, caressing her body. He didn't seem so inexperienced anymore. He stared down at her and Fiona saw a serious lover, not a kid who needed her to make him into a man.

"Fiona," he said, his eyes asking the question.

"Yes, please," she answered, nodding slightly.

Fiona opened her arms and her legs to him. Sam was awkward as he got into position, but then, he'd never been in the saddle before. He bobbed against her thighs, rock hard. God was he hard. His cock really was like a work of art. Fiona took it in her hand and guided it to her.

"Come on, honey. Do it. I want you," she whispered.

"Fiona..."

"That's it. That's it, honey. Do it...do it...just like...ahhh..."

His cock slid home and she closed her eyes as her slick sheath gripped him inside her. Yes! her mind cried. Yes! Oh god YES! She wrapped her boot-clad legs around Sam and drew him inside her. Fiona stretched around him, but it didn't hurt. It felt divine, like he was made for her. He started to move, but she locked her thighs tighter around him.

"Hold on, honey. Let me feel it. Let me enjoy it."

"Oh god, Fiona."

"I know, honey. I know."

Their bodies were locked together, and Sam throbbed inside her. Fiona throbbed around him. They were one, and Fiona wanted to keep him there, trapped inside her forever. She kissed Sam. They kissed and Fiona fluttered her muscles around him. Sam moaned into the kiss and trembled.

"Does that feel good, honey?" she asked.

"God, Fiona. Ohh...f-f-f..."

"Say it, honey. You can say it," she breathed.

"Fuck...fuck...FUCK!" Sam cried.

"Yes! Yes, honey. Fuck me. I want you to fuck me," she cooed.

Fiona slackened her hips and Sam moved. He was herky-jerky at first, like he paused with every little spark of excitement in his shaft caused by her gripping pussy. It was haphazard and she needed to calm him down.

"Nice and smooth, honey. Nice and smooth. Just in and out. In and out. Mmm, like that. That's nice. Nice and smooth like that."

Sam found a fluid motion, but after a few thrusts he went crazy, humping his cock into her like a dog in heat.

"Mmm, that's good, honey, but slow it down. Enjoy it. You don't have to rush," she moaned, stroking his hair.

Sam was a good student. He took her direction and adapted. He hit his stride and found a nice, steady rhythm. His thick, strong cock felt incredible inside her. He hit all the right spots. Every smooth thrust lit a new spark that threatened to consume her with wildfire. She clung to his back and used her thighs around him to keep Sam in rhythm. It was perfect. She forgot how extraordinary a strong, hard young cock could feel. She spurred him faster, lifting her hips from the mattress to meet his thrusts.

“Yeah...honey...yeah...god yeah...ohhh...”

“Fi-Fiona...fuck...fuck...ohhh fuck...”

“Yeah, Sam. Fuck me. Fuck me, Sam. Take me. Fuck me. Fuck me hard. Do it. Do it, Sam!”

“Fi...Fiona...Fiona...fuck...”

“Yeah...yeah, honey...yeah...oh god yeah...”

The bed rocked under them. The headboard slapped the wall and sweat dripped from Sam’s brow onto Fiona’s heated skin. He held himself over her as his hips churned, driving that delicious cock inside her. Their eyes locked and Fiona was flooded with emotion. Sam was amazing. He was a beautiful young man, and she wanted him. She wanted him forever. She didn’t want to let him go, and it hurt her heart to know she had to. But not now. She could cling to him and keep him as long as she could. Fiona cried out his name and her back arched off the bed. She came around his cock and dug her nails into his back. Fiona came and came and in the moment the world was only them. She wasn’t a married woman. She was Sam’s. This sweet, inexperienced young man had managed to own her with his cock.

“Fi...Fi...fuck...fuck...I’m...gonna...”

Sam hammered his cock into her, completely out of control. Fiona locked around him, urging him to come, even as her own orgasm subsided. She would come again if he stayed hard, but she wanted Sam to come. She wanted to feel him explode inside her.

“Yeah, honey...yeah...do it...come...come for me...yeah...”

“Fuck...Fiona...”

He froze and his cock twitched inside her. He blasted deep. He filled her, even though he just came in her mouth minutes earlier his load was large. His cock twitched and throbbed and filled Fiona with his essence. She stayed locked around him, determined to have all of him.

Sam stared at her with wide eyes and Fiona feared he was about to say those three forbidden words.

THIRTEEN

FIONA KISSED Sam before he could speak. She pulled his lips down to hers and held him there to share a long, languid kiss while their sweaty bodies stuck together. He continued to twitch inside her and Sam felt pleasing inside her—even at half-mast. Sam ground down into her, but he didn't immediately bounce back. His cock only seemed magical. Even a 20-year-old needed time to bounce back after coming twice. Fiona kept him entwined with her until she thought his confused moment had passed. Sam stayed on top after their kiss, unsure what to do. Fiona rolled him off and then snuggled into his side. His arm went around her, hand resting on her butt.

“Well?” she asked.

“Uhh...”

Fiona laughed. “Was it everything you thought it would be?” Sam still didn't speak. “It's okay,” she said. “I figured out you're a virgin.”

Sam stayed silent and she knew he was trying to decide if he should deny it. Fiona understood his pride, but hoped he told the truth. She'd respect him more.

“I kind of like that you are. It's hot for me,” she continued.

“It is?”

“Never thought I'd take someone's virginity again. It's sexy. I'm honored.”

“It. Was. Awesome. Ohmygod, Fiona. I never...I mean I knew...but I never...”

Fiona smiled and squeezed him, kissing his chest. “Don't get used to it, honey. Not all girls are as amazing as I am.”

“I believe that. You’re...”

“Especially not girls your age. I’ve picked up a couple tricks over the years. Hate to ruin you with your first experience.”

“I’ll let you know when I have someone to compare you to.”

“Careful, you don’t want to make a girl too jealous, do you?” Fiona realized she shouldn’t say stuff like that and apologized. She had no right to be jealous—even though she was when she thought of Sam moving on with another girl. Fiona had no claims on Sam, just as he could make no claim on her.

“Don’t apologize. I like that you’re jealous.”

“But that’s not how this should work.”

Sam gave her a playful swat on the rear. Fiona jumped and giggled. She was proud of him for that. “Hey!” she exclaimed.

“I’m jealous too,” he said. Fiona was about to protest, but he quickly added, “Don’t lecture me again, Fiona. I get it. I’m a smart kid. You’re married to Josh, you’re happy, blah, blah, blah. I know. I’m jealous in a good way, if you know what I mean. It’s just that I wish I could have you whenever I want, like he can.” Sam possessively squeezed her butt.

Fiona wiggled against him. His cock twitched against his thigh, and she resisted the urge to grasp it and urge it back to life. Sam’s feelings made her want the young man even more. Josh could have her anytime he wanted—in theory, but how often didn’t he take advantage of it? Work had consumed her husband and the last couple years of their love life had withered as a result. If it hadn’t, she wouldn’t have been such an easy mark, Fiona knew. If things were as hot with her husband as they had been at the beginning—before Alex, before work consumed Josh—she would not have been so craving the attention Sam gave her. At least, that’s what she told herself. Fiona didn’t want to think about the alternative—that she just wanted Sam and she was too weak to resist giving in to her desires.

“I know what you mean, Sam. I really, really like you, honey. This isn’t just some casual fling—I mean it is—but I don’t just jump into bed with anyone. I never thought anything like this would happen to me. I didn’t think it could. I’m married. I haven’t been with another man since Josh. But you’re special, Sam, and I don’t know, I guess everything just fell into place.”

“I get it, Fiona. You don’t have to explain yourself to me. I’m grateful. I really am,” Sam replied.

“I know. I know I’m just babbling. It’s just, I don’t want you to think I’m some kind of slut who cheats on her husband. I never would have done this if Josh didn’t tell me to.”

“You said that. But wait a minute. He told you to do this?”

Fiona noted the tone in Sam’s voice and twisted to look up at him. “He didn’t tell me to. Not exactly. He just said to do what I want, and he’s cool with it. He won’t come out and say it, but I know he likes it.”

“What do you mean? I don’t get that.”

“I don’t really either, not really. Josh says he likes thinking about me like this, sexy and giving in. I can see it, sort of,” she said.

“But with me? Yeah, you’re sexy. No one is sexier than you, Fiona. But I still don’t get it. I don’t think I can understand it.”

“I don’t fully understand it either and I’m trying not to think about it too hard. If it works for him, and it works for everyone involved, that’s all that matters, I suppose. As long as it stays our little secret.”

“My lips are sealed. I don’t want anyone freaking out about this.”

“Good.”

They fell silent and Fiona enjoyed the silence. She was contented snuggled into Sam’s side and feeling his warmth as she listened to him breathe. He stroked her side and her butt, and when it didn’t tickle, it felt nice. It felt right. But then Fiona’s eyes fell on her wedding band, on the hand resting on Sam’s chest—not her husband’s chest—and she was reminded that it wasn’t right at all. It was wrong. She was sharing her husband’s bed with another man. Fiona didn’t want Sam thinking of her as a slut because she couldn’t help thinking of herself as one. Guilt flip-flopped her stomach and Fiona closed her eyes and focused on deep breathing, pushing the negative out of her mind and focusing on the now.

“You know, you never said how it was for you,” Sam said.

“Oh, honey,” she replied, rolling and sliding on top of him. “It was so, so good.”

“Really?”

“Yes, honey. Couldn’t you tell by the sounds I was making or the way my body moved? You can’t always tell when a girl comes—we’re not all like this—but I thought it was fairly obvious when you made me come, honey.”

“Yeah, I guess so. Just wanted to make sure,” Sam replied, grinning.

“If you need more evidence, I’m more than happy to oblige,” Fiona offered, rubbing her body against his, like a cat in heat. His cock, pinned between their thighs, twitched more forcefully than before.

“Can never have too much data.”

“Good point. You are a budding scientist, after all.”

Sam’s hands slid down her body, caressing Fiona’s heated skin. He kneaded her tight butt and she rubbed against him, leaving a slick mess on Sam beneath her. They casually made out while they enjoyed the feel of each other’s bodies. Fiona loved the way his hands explored her body, teasing while he got to know what she liked. Her pulse raced as she thought of how Sam was learning the ways of pleasuring a woman with her body.

“Tell me what you want, honey. What do you want to do to me?” Fiona asked in a breathy whisper, nibbling on his ear.

“I want you, Fiona,” he moaned in response.

“You have me, honey. What do you want to do to me? I promised you anything.”

Sam didn’t answer, but his cock pulsed between them. The young man was hard again, and Fiona was ready to take advantage of that.

“Do you want me from behind, honey? I want you to fuck me from behind,” she whimpered, grinding his pinned cock.

Sam groaned.

Fiona rolled off him and turned onto her hands and knees on the bed, waving her butt back at Sam. She resisted the urge to look back over her shoulder because she wanted to be surprised when he took her. Fiona had fun being the teacher, but she still loved just being taken. She impatiently waited, gasping when his hands glided over her hips. She slightly arched, raising her butt higher in the air for him. Sam fumbled about, his prick knocking against her ass and then between her thighs. He finally slotted it home and Fiona couldn’t wait any longer. She thrust back, impaling herself on her younger lover. His fingers tightened on her hips when she enveloped him inside her and he gave a deep, throaty moan when Fiona squeezed him inside her, milking him with her muscles while she sinuously moved her body in front of him.

“Mmm, honey, you’re so deep like this. You feel so good. I love it, honey!” she moaned.

“Oh god, Fiona...”

“Come on, honey. Take me. I want it, honey. Take me!”

Sam squirmed behind her, and for a moment she feared he might not be able to get the rhythm of taking her from behind. But it seemed he was just enjoying the feeling of being in her pussy. He can't be enjoying it more than me, she thought. Sam's cock was delectable in this position. His shaft spread her wide and when he moved it lit up every nerve inside her. Sam pulled back and slowly pushed back into her. His head nudged along her g-spot and Fiona cried out, urging him to take her.

"Yeah...yeah...like that. Harder, honey. Fuck me harder!"

Fiona tried to be patient and let him find his way, but her body had other ideas and she pushed her hips back to him, drawing Sam inside her and trying to set the pace. She needn't have worried. Sam's excitement climbed and once it took over, his control slipped away. He began hammering away and the bed rocked beneath them. This was what Fiona needed. This was what she craved—Sam's big cock pounding her pussy behind and opening her wide.

"Yeah...yeah...yeah...yeah...ohgodyeah...Sam!" she cried.

"Oh fuck...Fiona...oh fuck...oh fuck..."

The climax came on Fiona so hard and so fast it took her breath away. She went rigid for a long moment where she thought she might pass out, and then she was limp, sagging down to the bed while Sam held her ass up and kept slamming away. Aftershocks rocked her body and Fiona started building to her next orgasm. She loved being multi-orgasmic—especially with a guy who could trigger it. She would have thought Sam would come after she did, but the young man had already climaxed twice, and he was going to last this time. Fiona looked back over her shoulder and Sam's countenance was frantic. His cheeks were red and sweat dripped from his forehead. It's probably the hardest workout he's ever had, she thought.

A strange feeling crept along her spine and Fiona snapped her eyes to the doorway, where she swore, she caught a flash of motion. Fear seized her heart as she feared Josh had come home to her and Sam having sex. But no one was there, and Fiona convinced herself it was just the cat. She pressed her face into the mattress and enjoyed the ride. It was easy to do.

Fiona let Sam turn her over and he was on top of her again. He slipped right into her well-used pussy and resumed their coupling. Fiona closed her legs around Sam and urged him deeper inside her. He'd lost the frenetic motion he used when he took her from behind and now took long, deep strokes into her pussy. Fiona jacked her hips up off the bed to meet his thrusts. She was on fire for him. It didn't matter that he was inexperienced. Sam was a quick study and a tender, attentive lover. Experience would come later, but attention to one's lover is a skill most men never learn, she knew.

“Fiona, oh god...”

“Yeah, honey...yeah, honey...that's it...oh yeah...like that...like that...”

Sam gazed down at her while he rocked his cock into her and the raw emotion in his eyes pierced her to the core. This didn't feel at all like the casual hook-ups of her youth. Sam wasn't that kind of guy, and Fiona realized she wasn't that girl anymore either—at least not with Sam. The passion they shared sent chills down her spine and heightened their sex. Another orgasm blossomed inside her and her pussy rippled around his shaft. Sam's eyes went wide, and they climaxed together, Sam's seed shooting deep inside her as Fiona was in the full grip of her pleasure. She'd welcome lovemaking like this with her husband. Sharing it with Sam scared her.

Fiona pulled Sam down to her and hugged him tightly, keeping him trapped inside her. She may have been scared, but she didn't want to let him go.

FOURTEEN

THEY SNUGGLED TOGETHER for a time afterward, chatting and laughing softly like any lovers might. It was easy to forget how weird their situation was when Fiona was with Sam. But it was getting very late and Josh would not stay out all night. Fiona had to kick her lover out of bed before her husband came home. Sam reluctantly showered and dressed, while Fiona threw on a long t-shirt, which only just covered her butt. She offered to drive him home, but Sam called for an Uber. They shared a sweet kiss by the door and a promise to talk tomorrow.

Fiona sighed and wondered where her husband was. She wrapped herself in the afterglow of her time with Sam and pushed down the doubts creeping into her mind. She could face reality in the morning. For now, she could just enjoy herself and find out where her husband was. Fiona walked toward the kitchen to fetch her phone and text Josh.

“Seems like you had fun,” Josh said.

Fiona screamed and jumped, backing into the wall as she clutched her chest. Josh came out of the shadows from the dark den. Her heart pounded and her mouth moved, but no words came from her lips. She finally composed herself enough to say, “You scared the shit out of me.”

“Sorry, Fi. I didn’t want to interrupt before.”

“How long have you been home?”

“Long enough.”

Fiona tried to read him, but his face gave away nothing. Josh stood opposite her in the hallway with his arms crossed, staring. What was he looking for? Did Josh see her differently now that she’d slept with another man? Her heart kept hammering in her chest as fear crept in. the afterglow from Sam was gone. Fiona didn't want to think it, but she couldn't help feeling she might have ruined her marriage.

"What does that mean? Say something, Josh."

"Sounded like you were having fun."

His neutrality pissed her off. Fiona replied, "You didn't think I'd enjoy it?"

Emotion rippled across his face, too fast for Fiona to read.

"I guess I didn't really think about it."

"Really? You told me to go do this without thinking about what it would be like? Not even for a second?"

Josh started to speak and stopped. It annoyed her more. Fiona didn't want him choosing his words carefully. She wanted his honest thoughts. He did answer, but she knew it was a dodge.

"Not like that. Not in any detail. Whatever I expected, it wasn't that."

"How so?"

"Do we need to have this conversation in the hallway?" he asked.

Fiona's light eyes blazed. She embraced the annoyance because it meant she didn't have to process what she'd done.

"I'm going back upstairs. You're welcome to follow."

Josh did follow and she knew he watched her ass peeking out from the hem of the t-shirt as she walked. Even when they were in conflict, her husband was checking her out. Fiona sat on the bed, tucking her legs under her. Josh kept his distance, leaning against a dresser with his arms crossed. She felt like she was being analyzed and she hated it.

"Whatever you have to say, say it, Josh."

"Why are you being so hostile, Fi? What did I do?"

"I did what you wanted me to do and now I feel like you're judging me."

"Whoa, whoa, whoa, stop the clock. First of all, I'm not judging you. And second, I didn't tell you to do anything. I told you to do what you wanted and obviously you did—for a while."

"That's not judging?"

"I'm messing with you, Fi. What? We can't have fun with this?"

"It's just, I'm all over the place about this and I feel like you're putting it all on me. We're married, this isn't just about me. Besides, I know you care about this more than you're saying. I just know it."

"I don't want this to be a big drama, Fi. Why can't we let it just be what it is?"

"Because for me, sleeping with someone else means something. It's a big thing. And it wasn't just someone else, was it? It was Sam, your cousin. That makes it—I don't know—just wronger."

"Wronger?" Josh commented, a smile creeping onto his lips.

"Shut up. This isn't the time to correct my grammar." Fiona allowed a smile too. She was usually the one correcting her husband's grammar, and it had become a joke between them over the years.

"I want to throw something out there, Fi. I think part of you likes that it is wronger. Guys pay attention to you all the time, right?"

"Stop it, Josh. I'm not some vamp that turns heads everywhere I go."

"But guys notice you. Don't deny it, because I see it."

Fiona allowed that with a subtle nod.

"You like it, just as much as I do. Well, maybe I like it a little more," Josh conceded. "But the point is, guys notice you, hot guys, but you've never been tempted to strip for them—or screw them."

"Tempted is a strong word," she said, her smile growing. No, she'd never been tempted to run off with anyone before, but there were a few men over the years who popped up in her mind again after exchanging glances across a grocery aisle or at the mall. Fiona thought that happened to all women. It just wasn't something one usually discussed with their husband.

Josh was doing it, god bless him. He was pulling her out of her mood. This was why she loved him so much, and why Sam was not a real threat to her marriage, even if she did have feelings for the young man. Josh knew her better than anyone and loved her even more for it.

"Okay, okay. You get my point, though. I think the real reason this all happened with Sam is exactly because you think it's wrong in some way. I think you're drawn to the forbidden fruit."

"But that's crazy," she protested, deep down knowing that had to be part of it.

"I'm not saying you're into inc—"

"Don't go there..."

"I'm just saying that the forbidden fruit is tempting. It is for most people, I think."

"Does it tempt you?"

"Your sister is pretty hot."

Fiona knew he was only mostly kidding, but they were both laughing now and that was a good thing. Josh succeeded in draining the tension from the moment, but Fiona still felt what she felt—good and bad.

“Maybe you have a little point, but I think Sam is safe for me too. Not for the same reasons you think so, but I trust Sam. I know he’s not going to ruin things. But that still doesn’t mean I don’t feel weird about it. I feel weird about being married and sleeping with someone else. I feel weird that I even want to do it. I feel wrong that I have these urges.”

“But you do, and if it doesn’t bother me, I don’t see why it bothers you,” Josh said.

“Because it’s about me, and what I’ve always seen as right and wrong. I’m your wife. I shouldn’t be sleeping with other people. I shouldn’t want it, like really want it the way I do.”

“I can’t help you with that, Fi. I wish I could.”

“You could help me understand why you’re so okay with it.”

“I already told you. I don’t really know how else to say it. I’m not lying to you about anything. I’m telling you what I feel.”

“You’re not jealous? At all?”

“Not really. No. Why is that a bad thing? Most women hate it when their men are jealous oafs.”

“You’re half right. We don’t want you to be cavemen, but we like it when you’re a little jealous—enough to make us feel precious.”

“You are precious to me, Fi. If I thought there was any risk to this...”

That bothered her and Fiona couldn’t put her finger on why. Why can’t he see the risk? She wanted to believe it was only because Sam wasn’t a threat, but her mind kept coming back to the idea that Josh didn’t think she could live without him. That made Fiona feel taken for granted and she didn’t like it.

“You’re going to run off with my nerdy cousin?” He almost snorted out laughter.

“It’s not impossible. Sam is a great guy and...” Fiona’s sentence tapered off. She almost told her husband and he’s a great lover. His cock is awesome. She didn’t. Fiona didn’t want to hurt Josh. “It doesn’t have to be about Sam. What if I decide I like it and I don’t want to stop?”

“What do you mean?”

“What if now that we’ve opened things up, I want to keep them open? What if I realize I’m not a one-man kind of girl anymore?”

“Really? Do you feel that way?” Josh sounded concerned for the first time.

“You heard me upstairs.”

“I saw you. For a second.”

Fiona’s mouth dropped open and she wanted to address it, but this wasn’t the moment for that.

“I liked it. I like the way it makes me feel. I like being desired.”

“I want you, Fi.”

“It’s not the same, not after all these years. There’s something to someone else wanting me. It lets me know I’ve still got it.”

“Oh, you’ve got it, Fi.” Josh paused. “Are you telling me you want to sleep with other men?”

Fiona was tempted to let him dangle on the hook. It was the first time she felt like she was getting a real, serious response from him and she wanted the moment to linger. She didn’t see them having an open marriage after this. The suggestion was insane, but Fiona had changed. She noticed men’s attention more now and she liked it—a lot. Fiona knew it wouldn’t lead to anything, but she realized it probably wasn’t healthy for her marriage. All of that aside, she wanted to press Josh.

“What if I told you I do?”

“I...”

Josh looked bewildered. Fiona saw that the possibility of such a thing never occurred to him until this moment. She could see the wheels turning in his head. Curiously, he didn’t reply that’s crazy. Did that mean he was really entertaining the possibility?

“I...” he continued. “I mean, is that what you want, Fi? Are you serious?”

Fiona sighed. She couldn’t leave him in the hook. “No, but you didn’t just dismiss the idea.”

“Hey, I don’t want that.”

“Are you sure? Why did you hesitate?”

“I...I didn’t. I just didn’t know if you meant it.”

“And you didn’t want to answer, in case I was serious.”

Fiona crawled to the foot of the bed and knelt there, beckoning her husband closer. Josh hesitantly crept toward her. When he was close enough, she held onto his golf shirt and fixed him with her eyes.

“You like this. I want you to admit it.”

“I told you that this morning, Fi. I like seeing your sexy vixen come out.”

“It’s more than that. You came home and I was in bed with Sam and you didn’t just walk out. You stayed and listened. You even came and looked. Funny, I thought I saw you for a second.”

“Yeah. And?”

“How did it make you feel?”

Josh squirmed. He didn’t like being pinned down like this. He never liked uncomfortable conversations. Fiona wasn’t going to let him escape this one. She needed the truth.

“You can tell me,” she pressed. “You know I won’t judge you, just like you didn’t judge me about this. I love you, Josh.”

“Fi…”

Fiona knew how to spur him. It wasn’t fair, but she wasn’t above using her feminine wiles. Wasn’t that what got her into this in the first place? She slid her hand over the front of his patterned golf pants and fitted her fingers around the outline of his shaft. He twitched in her grasp.

“I know you like it, Josh. You just don’t want to tell me how much. But I need to know, babe. I really do,” she cooed.

“I…Fi…I don’t know…”

“It turned you on. I know it did. That’s why you had to come up and look.”

She opened his belt and unbuttoned his pants, nudging them down enough to pull his cock out. It twitched and grew as she stroked it. Josh had a desperate look in his eyes. His mouth hung open and his breathing was labored, but he didn’t speak. Fiona released his prick long enough to pull off her t-shirt and toss it away.

“Look at me, babe. Look at my body and imagine his hands all over it.”

Fiona took Josh’s hand and put it on her, smoothing his fingers over a red mark Sam left just under her nipple. The touch heated her, and she guided him to rub her breast.

“Imagine him playing with my tits, babe. It was so hot, babe. I can’t lie. I wanted it.”

“Fi...”

“But you don’t have to imagine, do you? You saw because you couldn’t stay away. Tell me what you saw, babe.” She pumped his cock and a sticky strand of fluid dripped from the end. Josh groaned. “What did you see, Josh?”

“You...you were...” He closed his eyes.

“Look at me, Josh. Tell me,” she demanded.

Josh stared at her. She’d never seen him look so uncertain. His body moved with the rhythm of her hand pumping his cock and he was still groping her, but his mind was somewhere else.

“He was fucking you from behind. You were moaning, like you were begging him for it,” he croaked.

“I was. It felt so good, babe. I...he...he made me come so hard.”

“Oh fuck, Fi.”

Fiona thought he might just explode in her hand, but Josh took ahold of himself and reclaimed his manhood. He roughly grabbed his wife and turned her around, a firm hand between her shoulder blades to push her down to the bed, while he kept her ass in the air. Josh sank into her with one, violent thrust. Fiona cried out—not just from shock, but desire. Her pussy was still slick from a combination of her arousal and Sam’s multiple loads. They hadn’t all run out of her. Oh god, she thought. He can feel Sam’s cum inside me! It’s so wrong! It’s so dirty! Ohmygod!

Josh didn’t try to be gentle, but hammered away at his wife’s pussy, taking her with so much more force than Sam mustered earlier.

“Yeah...yeah...fuck me, babe...fuck me like he did...”

“Dammit...dammit, Fi...god...”

“You loved it! You loved watching him fuck me!”

“Dammit! Dammit! Yes! Goddam it yes! Fuck, Fi!”

Fiona was struck by a thunderbolt. She loved it too! She loved knowing her slutty behavior turned her husband on. She loved knowing he got hard watching her. Fiona thought about Josh standing in the doorway—watching Sam screw her—and a climax exploded out of nowhere. She howled and clutched the sheets so hard she almost snapped off her short fingernails. Josh’s fingers dug into her slim waist so hard it stung, but that made Fiona come harder. He grunted her name a final time and buried himself inside her. He pulsed and added his cum to Sam’s in her drenched pussy. Fiona gasped when her husband came and turned to jelly. She flopped onto the bed when he released her. She was too drained to move and only realized Josh moved when she heard the bathroom door close and the water running.

Fiona peeled off the bed and crawled to the nightstand, draining the remainder of a bottle of water she left there then flopped back onto the bed. I really did it. I fucked two men in the same day. I'm a married woman, and I fucked two men in the same day. What the hell is wrong with me? Strangely, Fiona didn't feel guilty at all. She was smiling. She couldn't wipe the smile off her face. What she and Josh just shared seemed to change everything. Her elation was short lived. Josh emerged from the bathroom and she saw he was troubled.

"Josh?"

He sat beside her on the bed and caressed her hip with a tender hand. He did not look excited and relieved—as she felt.

"Fiona, listen. I don't want you to get the wrong idea."

"What's that?"

"I'm not one of those weirdos who get off on seeing their wives fuck other men. I don't want to see another guy's dick."

Isn't that what just happened? she thought. Josh hadn't fucked her so hard in ages. He was clearly into what he'd seen.

"I know, hon. I didn't think you did."

"I'm not a cuckold. That's not my thing."

"I believe you, Josh."

"I think what's going on is cool, but I'm not a cuckold."

Fiona reached for her husband and pull him in close. "It's okay. I believe you. I don't want you to get upset. I'm sorry if I did anything to hurt you."

"You didn't, Fi. I just don't want you to think I'm something I'm not."

"I got it. You are not a cuckold. I believe you. I do, Josh."

"Good."

Josh went to his dresser and got a clean pair of boxers to wear to bed.

"I need a shower—badly. Keep my spot in bed warm," Fiona said.

She was sore as she stood and realized that all the sex she'd had that evening was catching up with her. A long soak in the tub would do her better, but it was late, and she was exhausted. She'd just pass out in the tub.

"Fi," Josh said, catching her in the doorway. She turned back to him. "Are you going to see Sam again?"

"Well, yeah. He is your cousin."

“You know what I mean.”

Fiona felt silly for not getting it immediately. “I honestly hadn’t thought about it. I don’t know, given how you’re feeling...”

“Do it, Fi. Sorry I got a little weird there. Seriously, you have a little more time before Alex gets back. Enjoy yourself. I mean it.”

“Really?” Fiona felt like she was going to get whiplash.

“It’s good for you. I told you, I like the effect it’s having on you. Have your fun.”

Fiona didn’t reply because she didn’t know what to say. Josh was all over the place. She flashed a smile and went to take a shower. She’d figure it all out tomorrow.

FIFTEEN

FIONA SLEPT in until well after 10 the following morning, something she never did. The night had been filled with crazy, sexy dreams and she was disappointed to find she was alone in bed when she reached out for Josh. It would have been fun to make slow, luxurious love in the morning and stay in bed. Fiona moved, found she was still sore from the night before, and decided it was a blessing Josh wasn't there to indulge her urges. She needed to give it a rest.

The television was on in the den, but Fiona moved into the kitchen first, padding around on bare feet. She'd only thrown on a tank top and a pair of running shorts when she crawled out of bed. Josh left coffee in the pot, but Fiona gulped down water, fighting off a powerful thirst. The drink made her feel slightly more human again and she went to see what Josh was watching in the den.

"Oh, I didn't know you had company," she said, stopping short when she saw Josh was not alone on the couch. Fiona wished she had a head's up. At least I ran a brush through my hair, she thought.

"Don't you remember? Brian's here to help me move that armoire from your parents down to the basement. You've been complaining about it sitting in the garage all summer."

"Right, yeah. Completely slipped my mind," she said.

"You've been pretty busy with other stuff lately. It's okay," Josh replied.

Fiona narrowed her eyes and stared at her husband. Very funny, she thought. He seemed to enjoy tweaking her in front of Brian.

"Hey, Fi, looking good," Brian interjected.

Brian's eyes swept up and down Fiona's body, stopping when he noticed she wasn't wearing a bra. He didn't even try to hide it. Josh either didn't notice or didn't care. Fiona couldn't help thinking, Or maybe Josh likes it. Her conversation with Josh was just as confusing the morning after as it had been when they had it. Josh claimed he was fine with her and Sam, but he had been upset. He claimed he didn't want it, but Fiona knew that was false. His hard-on told the truth. Josh was still keeping his true feelings from her. She was sure of it.

"I just fell out of bed, but thanks," Fiona replied.

"You know you don't need to do much, babe," Brian said.

"Thanks, babe," she answered, flashing him a smile and coming closer.

Brian tried to look her in the eyes, but his gaze kept returning to her braless breasts. Just like Sam, she thought. Doesn't matter how old or how nice the boys are. Deep down they're all the same. Josh and Brian went way back to high school and Brian took a shine to Fiona from the moment they first met. Brian was careful not to do it around his wife, but he was always flirty with Fiona. Sometimes it seemed to ignore Josh and other times—especially when Josh was drunk—he laughed about it and even encouraged it. Fiona had to consider if there was more to Josh's feelings than she'd ever suspected. Maybe it was time to test her husband.

"I don't know what Josh is doing down here with me if he had you waiting up in bed. I know I wouldn't be," Brian said.

"Maybe he should have sent you up then."

"I would have, but I figured you were all worn out after last night," Josh commented.

"I'm pretty resilient. I think I could handle it," Fiona replied, wondering if Brian sensed the weird undercurrent in the room.

"If you want to head back up there now, I'm game," Brian offered.

Fiona crossed to the couch, bent forward, and squeezed his chin, planting a kiss on his cheek. "I would, babe, but I don't think Denise would approve."

"Yeah, pal, not all wives are so open-minded," Josh added.

Brian looked like he was genuinely disappointed, as if he thought it was a real possibility, which made Fiona smile. He was charming. Brian wasn't quite her type, but if she'd met him at college before she met Josh he might have been a fun, quick tumble. She studied her husband—while trying not to be obvious—and didn't see that the exchange had any effect on him. Josh had an excellent poker face.

The exchange may not have influenced Josh, but it perked up Fiona in a way that Brian's flirting had never affected her before. She had a warmth that pulsed out from between her thighs to heat her flesh and perk up her nipples—as if they weren't already obvious enough. It was like her fun with Sam had opened her mind to new possibilities. She'd only been teasing when she'd brought it up to Josh the other night, but now it seemed it might be true. Flirting with Brian felt naughty in a way it never had before—and she liked the feeling.

"You should have a talk with Denise," Brian said.

"Very funny," Fiona replied. "Why don't you boys get to it? I'm going to go for a run before it gets too hot. I'll throw some burgers on the grill for you afterward."

Fiona gave her butt an extra wiggle as she left the room.

AUNT TRUDY WAS in the kitchen having her coffee while glued to her phone when Fiona arrived Monday morning. Whatever had Trudy so engrossed on the phone put some color in her cheeks and Fiona wondered if the woman was watching porn. No, not Trudy. But what kind of porn would she watch? Fiona found the thought disturbing and physically shook it off.

"What's going on?" Fiona asked.

"Just catching up on my Tinder."

"Really?"

"Don't sound so surprised. I'm still a woman. You'll never have to worry about such things—not with a man like Josh—but life doesn't end just because you become a divorcee of a certain age. I still need company, Fiona."

"Uh, yeah, of course." Fiona nodded.

"It's not just for kids, y'know."

"I guess. Thank god I'm married. I wouldn't have the first idea how to navigate modern dating and I don't want to have to figure it out."

"Like I said, you'll never have to worry about it with a good man like Josh."

You have no idea, Fiona thought. She still wasn't sure she hadn't damaged her marriage with her extracurricular activities. Fiona didn't know what to think. She'd decided to just go with it for now. Things were different, no matter how much Josh swore they weren't. They spent the evening in bed Sunday after Brian left, despite Fiona's soreness. Brian spent the afternoon flirting with Fiona and she leaned heavily into it—if she was being honest. Fiona even sat in Brian's lap for a time while they all enjoyed beers. His hand never wandered from her bare hip, but part of her wished it had. Fiona was too tipsy at that point to be shocked by her lascivious urges. Josh sat back in another Adirondack and watched—a dopey, drunk smile on his face. The door was barely closed behind Brian when they raced up to their bedroom. He was never mentioned during their vigorous lovemaking, but Fiona's night with Sam was a popular topic. Fiona didn't press Josh on his feelings. She just enjoyed herself.

"Isn't Tinder more of a hook up app than a dating app?" Fiona asked.

"So?" Trudy replied, winking.

Not going to think too much about that, Fiona thought.

"Is Sam still upstairs?" Fiona said, changing the subject.

"Of course. You know him. What are you kids up to today?"

"I'm dragging him out on another hike," Fiona replied. That was the cover story anyway. She really planned to bring him home, make him help around the garden and then spend the day in bed.

"You might actually get that kid to like nature, given enough time."

"That's my hope."

"Thank you so much for everything you're doing for him. Really, Fiona. You've been so good to him."

"Honestly, Trudy, I feel like I'm the one getting all the benefits. My time with Sam has been incredible." Fiona felt heat rise to her cheeks.

"That's great. I hope you can squeeze him in when Alex comes home."

"We'll see. I'm going to go up and get him moving, if you don't mind."

"Of course, Fiona. Do what you need to with him. I know he's in good hands."

Fiona hurried out of the kitchen before the wave of guilt knocked her over. She had enough trouble dealing with the complications this all caused with her husband. Fiona was not prepared to deal with betraying Trudy's trust. It didn't matter that Fiona didn't particularly like the woman. It didn't give Fiona license to sleep with her son.

Sam was in bed, dead to the world, just the way Fiona found him that first morning. His big cock was not exposed this time, but she knew it was there under the sheet. That morning, just about a week ago felt like it had happened in another—more innocent—life. She did not stay on the other side of the room this time but sat on the side of his bed. Sam stirred when he felt the mattress shift and smiled at her.

“Sorry, I forgot to set the alarm,” he said.

“I bet you’re beautiful.”

“I’m sure I’m a mess.”

“I don’t think so, Fiona. You’re always beautiful. I’d love to see it for myself.”

Fiona knew an overnight would never be okay. She let it pass. “You already got me in bed. You don’t need to keep pressing it, honey.”

“I’m just being honest.” Sam pulled back the sheet and rolled onto his back. His underwear was strained to the bursting point. “See. I cannot tell a lie. And my friend agrees.”

Fiona couldn’t tear her eyes away from his bulge. Any guilt she felt about sleeping with Trudy’s son went right out of her mind. All she could think about was getting Sam back to her house to have her way with him. She smiled her crooked smile.

“You haven’t given your friend a name, have you?” she asked.

“No. Why? Should I?”

Fiona laughed. “Absolutely not. I’m relieved to know you’re not that goofy.” She leaned in and kissed him. “You’re just the right amount of goofy. That’s why I like you so much.”

Sam’s hand made a brief pit stop at her hip before moving to her butt. It wasn’t as subtle as he intended. Fiona let him get a good squeeze before moving his hand away.

“We need to get out of here. There’ll be plenty of time for that later. Don’t forget to dress like we’re going on another hike. That’s what I told your mom we’re doing.”

Sam only paused for a moment and moved his hand right back. Fiona laughed and decided it was harmless to let him have a moment of fun—not that he needed the stimulation, she thought, looking at his cock twitching in his underwear. It got a lot less harmless when Sam put her hand on his crotch.

“Hey, your mother is right downstairs,” she protested.

“So?” Sam smiled from ear-to-ear.

“So? We can’t do this with her down there.”

“That kind of makes it hotter, doesn’t it?”

Fiona tried to pull her hand away, but he kept it there and pressed it down. Fiona’s fingers curled around his shaft through the fabric. She sighed, feeling her resistance slipping.

“Sam, come on... This is too risky.”

“You never fooled around with a guy while the parents were home?”

Sam regarded her skeptically, daring her to deny it. Fiona couldn’t lie. She looked around his room, with the posters on the walls and the clothes on the floor, the closet door hanging open, and it brought her right back to her youth. Even that familiar musty scent of young man hung in the air. Fiona remembered the many times she’d done this very thing, and yes, it was more exciting when the parents were downstairs. The risk of discovery made her pulse race back then, and it had the same effect now.

“That was different,” she complained, thinking, I was just a kid. I didn’t think about consequences.

“But it was fun, wasn’t it?”

Fiona couldn’t hold back her smile. “This is really stupid, Sam.”

Sam took his hand away and hers remained, massaging his cock. She thought, Are we really doing this? Fiona decided they were, and shivers of excitement ran through her. There was no time to waste. She pulled his underwear down and his cock popped out.

“But it feels so good,” Sam moaned.

Fiona slowly pumped his shaft up and down, while her other hand massaged his balls. Sam closed his eyes and enjoyed the good morning hand job, a look of pure bliss on his face. This is like something right out of his dreams, she knew. Fiona leaned forward and tucked her hair behind her ear before taking him between her lips.

“Shit...Fiona...”

Sam ran his fingers through her hair, but it was a lover’s caress, not an aggressive action. His eyes were open now and he watched her. She watched him back, her lips dragging up and down his meat. The wet sucking sounds seemed so loud. The flat of her tongue stroked the underside of his cock and he throbbed in her mouth. Fiona pressed him to the back of her throat and held him there, sucking hard. She was tempted to try and deep throat him—she knew he'd be impressed—but she didn't think choking would be sexy.

"Fiona..."

Sam pulled at her ivory, scoop-necked t-shirt and she thought, You are not going to undress me, but she raised her arms and allowed him to remove her top. Fiona swore Sam was better every time he touched her, and his fingers teasing her nipples through the soft, lacy material of her filmy bra made Fiona moan into her mouthful of cock. She sucked harder when Sam pinched her nipples and he instinctively thrust upward, pushing back to her throat. Fiona sucked harder and he left his cock embedded at the back of her throat. It was an aggressive move—new for Sam—and it jazzed Fiona. She sucked him until she had to pull back and breathe. She smiled at him.

"That was hot, honey. I like it when you take charge," she said.

"Yeah?"

"Oh yeah," she agreed.

Fiona sucked him again and let Sam take the lead. He thrust up into her mouth, but it wasn't like one of those throat-fuckings in porn videos. He didn't hold her head in a vise or choke her—not much anyway. He thrust up into her mouth and Fiona eagerly sucked him, taking him deeper each time, until she had tears in her eyes. It was just enough aggression without being obnoxious. Fiona loved it. So did Sam. Without warning, he buried at the back of her throat and shot his load. Fiona was unprepared and coughed, sending his cum running from her lips and down his shaft. She tried to recover and swallow him, but it was still a big mess.

"Uh, wow, sorry, Fiona. It was just so... I was unprepared."

"It's okay, honey. Just remember, a girl likes a little warning so she can be prepared."

Fiona gave him a long, slow suck, cleaning his shaft.

"Let me make it up to you," Sam insisted.

"Wait...what...no...Sam..."

Fiona protested, but she still let Sam pull her onto the bed on her back. She laughed as she kicked her legs while he peeled her leggings and panties down, leaving them hanging from one ankle in his rush.

"Sam...we really can't do this...not with your...oh...oh! Mmm, honey..."

Oh god, we cannot do this. I've lost my mind! Have to make him stop!
Ohh...no...yes!

Her thoughts were a jumble and Fiona didn't stop Sam but threw her legs over his shoulders as he buried his face in her pussy. His tongue plunged inside to mine her honey. Fiona bit her lip but couldn't stifle her moans. His tongue circled her clit and she moaned his name. He started sucking there and buried two fingers in her. Fiona turned and buried her face in his pillow, barely muffling her cry.

"Ohgodohgodohgod! Sammy!" she shouted into the pillow, praying it did enough to silence her.

Sam slurped at her pussy and attacked her clit with a precision that left Fiona lightheaded and gasping. She swore the young man had been holding out on her. Where did he learn that? Sam had gone from virgin to cunnilingus master in record time. It wasn't just his skill, of course. She mainlined the danger of getting caught like a drug. It heightened everything Fiona felt. His tongue combined with the fingers working her pussy to make Fiona climax in record time. She pulled his pillow over her face and screamed into it as she came wildly, thrashing on his bed. Fiona wedged her foot against his shoulder and kicked Sam back, because she thought she may pass out if he didn't stop.

"Oh...my...god..." she panted, throwing his pillow away.

Sam stared down at her, gob smacked.

"What?" she said.

"I just love it when you do that."

"When I come?"

"Yeah, it's amazing, Fiona. It's like a force of nature."

"It's all you, honey. You've gotten really good at this."

"I have the best teacher."

"You certainly do. Come here."

Sam lay on Fiona and they shared a long, steamy kiss. She loved tasting herself on him. His cock began throbbing back to life against her thigh.

"Give me my shirt. We need to get out of here before your mother wonders what's up," she said.

"But I don't want to let you out of bed," he complained. "I love this."

"Don't worry, honey. We'll be right back in bed before you know it. Now let me up. The sooner we get dressed, the sooner we'll be naked again."

That got Sam moving.

FIONA WAS RELIEVED Josh had to work late that night. The day she spent in bed with Sam left her sore and tired. Her libido, which was ever-increasing since she'd started with Sam, was finally exhausted. Sam was an intelligent young man, and once he got the hang of sex, he proved to be a quick study. He wasn't the fittest, but he was young and flexible enough to give Fiona a run for her money. She swore they'd done it in just about every conceivable position—including a few she hadn't tried in years. Sam had a seemingly superhuman ability to stay erect, forcing Fiona to beg for breaks when he was ready to keep going. She wryly thought, A hike would have been less exhausting. But it was a good exhausting. Fiona was sated in a deep way she felt down to her bones. She thought of her time with Sam and she couldn't wipe the smile off her face.

The house was dark, except for the television, where Netflix played a fresh episode of a series that Fiona had fallen asleep on over an hour ago. She was curled up on the couch in a comfortable pajama set, with the cat curled at her feet. Josh shooed the cat away and sat at his wife's feet, gently shaking her awake.

"Hey. You should get up and go to bed. You're going to be sore if you sleep on the couch."

Fiona stirred, smiling at the sight of her husband. She took his hand in hers. "I'm afraid it's too late for that."

"Have you been sleeping on the couch for long?"

"It's not that," she replied, her smile turning apologetic. Fiona knew her husband liked hearing about her exploits, and she enjoyed telling him about them, but it still felt strange on some level. It was like she was rubbing it in Josh's face.

"Guess you had fun with Sam today." Josh said it flatly.

"You knew I was probably going to see him."

"I know. I'm glad you had a good time, Fi."

Fiona squinted at him in the pale light from the television. But are you? she thought.

"How were Sam's lessons today? Did you build his confidence?"

“Yeah, that boy is confident now.” She laughed. “And I think he may have taught me a few new tricks today.”

It was Josh’s turn to laugh. “How is that possible?”

“You know these kids. They can find anything on the internet these days. I guess he did some research and found some things he wanted to try.”

“That’s not the same as real experience,” Josh protested.

“No, it’s not. But he got the experience today.”

“Do tell.”

Josh slid his hand up her leg, pushing his fingers up the leg of her shorts. She winced when he touched her, sore from the pounding she took from Sam earlier. She moved her husband’s hand away from her sex.

“Sorry, honey. I think I’m done for the day.”

Fiona saw Josh was not pleased with her. She was flooded with guilt. It felt like everyone made her feel guilty these days. Fiona knew it wasn’t fair to deny her husband sex after she’d spent all afternoon screwing Sam, but she just didn’t have it in her. Asking Josh to understand was probably going too far.

“I guess you got all the dick you need for the day,” Josh said.

“That’s not fair.”

“I’ll tell you what’s not fair...”

Josh stopped speaking and stared at her. She pried up from the couch and reached for him, trying to rub his crotch. Josh moved out of her reach.

“I can still take care of you, honey. My mouth is good,” she said. Actually, her jaw was sore too, but she’d cope.

“I don’t need a pity blow job, Fi.”

“I’m going upstairs. It’s been a long day.”

“Josh, wait.”

He didn’t. Fiona watched him leave the room with a heavy heart. She seriously considered just giving him what he wanted, even if she didn’t enjoy it. Wives had been doing that for thousands of years. Fiona could suck it up. But she didn’t want to. Josh was pouting, and she didn’t find it attractive. She was not going to let him punish her for something he encouraged her to do. Sure, maybe she went too far with Sam today if she didn’t have enough left for her husband, but Fiona didn’t owe Josh sex just because of what she did with Sam. She refused to think she ever owed her husband sex.

Fiona stayed resolute for all of two minutes then she was off the couch, chasing Josh upstairs. She found his clothes thrown on the floor—something else he shared with Sam—and heard the shower start. She didn't stop to pick up his clothes as she ordinarily would, but shed her pajamas and entered the steamy bathroom,

Josh jumped when she yanked the glass door open and stepped inside. His annoyance was clear in the way he stared at her. He didn't even look at her slim, naked body—a temptation he normally couldn't resist. Fiona didn't let him tell her to leave. She dropped to her knees and took him in her mouth, ignoring the water streaming down over her face. Giving head in the shower could be tricky, but she wasn't some rank amateur. She regulated her breathing while sliding her lips up and down her husband's shaft, and she felt him growing in her mouth. It was just as she expected. Josh may have been annoyed, but it was nothing a blow job couldn't fix. In her experience, there were very few problems a blow job didn't fix. Josh moaned her name and smoothed his hand over her hair. Fiona knew she had him.

SIXTEEN

THE BLOW JOB helped in the moment, but Josh remained frosty for the next few days. Even though time was running short, Fiona stayed away from Sam. He understood the situation but was frustrated. One more thing for Fiona to feel guilty about. She added it to the list.

It was tough to admit, but Fiona missed Sam—more than was appropriate for a married woman. He was sensitive, he made her laugh. They had a deep connection, the kind that couples were born from. Fiona had that connection with Josh when they met, but it was so different. Back then, Josh had been the gateway to her future. Now, Sam connected her with a girl she thought she'd left in the past. Fiona missed that girl and she hoped she could keep the connection going, even after her fling with Sam was over. But Sam was dangerous in a way Josh just couldn't appreciate. Sam was a danger precisely because they had that connection. Over time, their fling could develop into a real relationship, and that just wasn't an option for Fiona. She couldn't maintain full relationships with two men. She'd read about throuples and she wondered how those people did it.

Josh was frosty, but she could see he was disappointed when she reported each day that she hadn't seen Sam. Fiona would have killed for a look at what was going on in her husband's head but realized it might frighten her. Josh seemed to be at war with himself. The week waned and Fiona was convinced the door had closed on her fling with Sam. And then Josh kicked it right open.

"Aren't you going to see Sam again? We're picking up Alex this weekend. You're running out of time," Josh said. He was just home from work—on time for a change—and they were having dinner.

“I don’t know. I thought maybe I’d have lunch with him, but that might not be a good idea.”

“Why not?” Josh focused on his pork chop.

“Because things tend to happen when we’re together. I know we’re probably safe in public, but...”

“Isn’t that kind of the point...something happening.”

“Josh, I don’t know. I don’t want you getting upset again. I think it’s best to just let it go. Sam understands.”

“What did you tell him?”

“I just told him we had to cool it. I felt like it was affecting our relationship.”

“I wish you wouldn’t tell him about things between us. That’s our business, Fi.”

“Which is exactly my point. Bringing Sam into our marriage was kinky fun at first, but I feel like it’s causing problems. It’s not worth it, Josh.”

Fiona’s dinner sat untouched in front of her. Her appetite quickly retreated.

“It’s not causing problems, Fi. I wasn’t mad that you fucked Sam. I was mad because you wouldn’t fuck me.”

“I did blow you.”

They both laughed.

“You know I love a shower blow job.”

“You love any blow job!”

“True, but being in the shower is just hotter. Anyway, it bugged me that you spend all day with Sam but pushed me away.”

“I didn’t want to hurt your feelings, but I have my limits. I’m not just a piece of meat.”

“Sam fucked you that good?” Josh sounded piqued.

“Is that a real question? What answer do you want?”

“I don’t know, Fi. I’m just telling you how I felt. I thought that’s what you want.”

“It is, but I don’t know what to do with questions like that. I don’t know what to tell you about Sam. I’m trying to walk the line between including you and not hurting you, but I don’t know what I’m doing.”

It was an oversimplification, but Fiona let it lie. She didn't want a fight any more than Josh did. He was right, this was all supposed to be a fun, harmless fling. Of the three of them, Fiona had been most concerned about Sam's feelings. But sex was rarely as simple as it should be. Human beings have feelings and sex is such an intimate thing.

"I'm not upset, Josh. I just don't want to fuck up our marriage."

"It's not. Listen, see him if you want. If you don't, don't. But don't let me be a reason that you don't do it."

Fiona couldn't help feeling Josh was playing games with her—as she had all along. He kept telling her to take him at his word, so that's what she would do, and she'd bring him along every step of the way.

"Okay, I'll shoot him a text. I hope he's free tomorrow."

Josh chuckled. "I'm sure he'll clear his calendar for you."

"You know," Fiona said, stabbing a green bean with her fork. "You never did tell me if you wanted a real answer."

"To what?"

"How good Sam fucked me. Do you really want to know?"

Josh looked both unsure and excited. His fork paused halfway to his mouth.

"You've kinda told me already, when we were...y'know..."

"But you asked again. It makes me think you're still unsure. I don't want to hold out on you, if you want to know."

Fiona dropped her fork and came around to the other side of the table. She bent over Josh from behind and ran her hands down his chest. She nibbled on his ear and whispered. "Do you really want to know how well Sam fucked me, babe?"

"Yes," Josh stammered, trembling as he spoke.

"You heard me the first time he fucked me, didn't you?"

"Yea...yes..."

"Did it sound like he was fucking me good?"

Fiona pushed her hands lower and rubbed his hard-on through his pants. Josh groaned.

"Yes." It was a deep, low growl.

"Come upstairs with me and I'll tell you all about it."

Fiona turned on her heel and headed for the bedroom, knowing her husband followed. It scared her that she was becoming accustomed to the emotional whiplash she'd experienced since they'd started this. She'd gone from guilt to annoyance to seductive in less than ten minutes. Fiona didn't know what she felt from moment to moment. It didn't stop her. They hadn't been together since that shower blow job. She masturbated every day, but it wasn't the same. Fiona needed to make love to her husband, and she knew he wanted it just as much as she did.

SEVENTEEN

FIONA GREETED Sam at the door in a big comfy robe that fell to her calves. He had a bag over his shoulder, and she wondered if he planned to use their last day together playing games. It was fun, but Fiona had other things on her mind.

“Can I get you something?” she asked, following him through to the den.

Sam dropped his bag and pulled Fiona into his arms. The passion in his kiss took her breath away and she sagged against him. Sam staggered under the unexpected weight, but he found his balance. It was a reminder that Sam wasn't a big, strong guy like her husband—even if he was tall. Sam would always be a skinny nerd, which was fine with Fiona. She stayed in his arms after their kiss ended. She felt right in his arms.

“I'm so happy to see you, honey,” she said, laying her head on his chest.

“I missed you so much, Fiona. I was so psyched when you called. I didn't think we'd be able to get together again.”

Sam held her face and tilted it up to him again for another kiss. He'd come so far in such a short time. It didn't feel like she was with some inexperienced kid. Sam was a man now.

“It's all so complicated. I hope you understand.”

“I know I have to share you. I know you're his wife first. I don't want to cause any problems.”

“You're not, honey. You've been perfect. I'm so glad we were able to get together again. When Alex is back, I have to go back to my old life. Being a mom and taking care of my family comes first.”

“That’s what’s so awesome about you, Fiona. It’s what makes this so special. I know you don’t just sleep around.”

Fiona loved his faith in her. He was right, but Sam only knew what she told him. For all he knew, she and Josh were in an open marriage and Sam was just another man in her stable. Her smile slipped sideways. It was a sexy fantasy, but only for a moment until she thought about all the energy it would take to manage all those relationships. The sex with Sam was incredible, but she didn’t see how she could do this long term.

“You’re so sweet, honey.” They kissed and Fiona squeezed him tight.

Sam pulled at the belt holding her robe closed, but she stopped him.

“Don’t be in such a rush, honey. We have all day. What’s in the bag?”

“Remember when you said we could do anything I wanted?”

“Within reason, yes. I meant that night, but I’m game. I think.”

“You trust me, don’t you?” Sam asked, radiating sincerity.

“Of course.”

“I have some ideas. There are some things I’d like to try, especially if this is going to be our last time together.”

“So, I’m some kind of guinea pig for your dirty fantasies?” Fiona asked. Sam looked concerned until she laughed. “I’m good with that. It sounds like fun.”

“Awesome! Let’s go upstairs.”

“I want all the time I can get with you, Fiona.”

Fiona stepped back, smiled, and dropped her robe. Sam’s jaw followed it to the floor. The black and teal lingerie set was her favorite, but she hadn’t had any excuse to wear it in ages. The black bra was transparent mesh, with teal lace trim and the panties matched and didn’t conceal much. Black stay-up stockings completed the outfit. Fiona stepped into black pumps she’d conveniently left beside the couch. Sam looked woozy as he stared at her. She imagined she could see his shorts tenting out. Sam moved toward her, but she held up a hand.

“Let’s go upstairs, honey. If we get started now, we’ll never make it there.”

She turned and led him upstairs. It was the same move she pulled on her husband the night before, and she knew Sam was staring at her ass—barely covered in see-through panties—just like Josh had.

“Where do you want me?” she asked, posing near the bed.

Sam placed the bag at the foot of the bed and fidgeted with its contents. Now that they were in the bedroom, he was nervous. It made Fiona curious just what he had in mind. Sam was a smart, creative guy with the perverted mind of a horny young man. He could pull anything out of that bag. Fiona was now nervous too—and excited.

“If you really trust me, I’d like to start by blindfolding you,” he said, producing a silk scarf from the bag.

“Okay.” The word was out of her mouth before she really thought about it.

“Really?” Sam sounded as surprised as she was.

“Yeah, sure. I trust you...I guess. You’re not going to do anything too freaky to me, are you?”

“I promise I’ll be good.”

Fiona smiled. “That defeats the purpose of the blindfold, doesn’t it?”

It was strange. Fiona had done many things over the years—things others would think were wild—but she’d never been blindfolded. Josh jokingly suggested it once—long ago—but she was lukewarm to the idea. She was afraid her husband would do something extreme, like snap pictures of her or produce some weird sex toy and wasn’t keen on the idea. She would have done it if he pressed, but he didn’t. She told Sam yes immediately. The implication was she trusted Sam more than her husband, but that was crazy. It couldn’t be true.

Goosebumps made Fiona antsy as Sam moved behind her and placed the scarf over her eyes. He tied it tightly in place and she was plunged into darkness.

“I’m at your mercy now,” she said.

“Not yet,” he replied, amusement in his voice.

Fiona jumped when Sam took her by the shoulders. She nearly stumbled when her legs contacted the bed, but Sam eased her down to the mattress and arranged her lying flat on the bed. Fiona felt like a doll he was posing. Handing over control gave her an unexpected tingle between her thighs.

The bed shifted as Sam leaned away and she tensed as she waited for the next thing. She started when his fingers traveled up the inside of her arm. Silk whispered over her wrist and Sam wrapped a scarf around her wrist before tying it in a secure knot.

“You didn’t ask about tying me up,” she commented, trying to keep the apprehension from her voice.

“Should I stop?”

“I didn’t say that.”

“Should we have some kind of a safe word?” he asked.

“Don’t worry. You’ll know if I want you to let me up.”

Fiona laughed and hoped it didn’t sound as nervous as she felt. She didn’t know why she was allowing Sam to do this. Blindfolded was one thing—risky, but she wouldn’t be helpless. Being tied down, though, meant she would be at Sam’s mercy. She’d known the young man forever, but she didn’t know him like this. It was a huge leap of faith. Her nerves ratcheted up to another level, but Fiona stayed pliant as Sam took her arms and stretched them out, pulling them tight. She couldn’t see, but Fiona knew he was tying her arms to the bedposts.

“Why tie me up?” she asked.

“It’s just something I always thought would be cool. I hoped you’d be okay with it. Have you done this before?”

“No, you’re my first.”

“Awesome! I’m glad I get to do this for you.”

“For me?” Fiona laughed.

“Yeah, it’s for me too, I guess. But I really hope you get into it. If you don’t, I’ll stop.”

“Don’t worry so much, honey. You need to be strong and confident for this to work.”

“Got it.”

Sam tugged at her panties and she lifted her hips from the bed, allowing him to slide them down her stocking-clad legs. He peeled her bra back, exposing her breasts. He couldn’t remove it without untying her. Rookie mistake, she thought. Still, she was left at her mercy—exposed to him

“I guess you really want me at your mercy.”

“Who wouldn’t? You’re perfect, Fiona. I wish you could see what I see right now. You’re so amazing.”

Fiona didn’t have a snappy comeback for that. His admiration warmed her heart. She was going to miss the way Sam made her feel when this was over. Sam made her feel so desired and sexy. She didn’t know if she really wanted to go back to being just a mom and a wife. It was fun being such an object of desire.

The room was still, and Fiona was acutely aware of his breathing. She thought she felt his presence beside her, but that could just be an illusion because she knew he was sitting there. Her heart pounded in her chest and the apprehensive anticipation was so powerful that Fiona focused on regulating her breathing, lest she squirm out of her skin. Her nipples were so hard they ached. If Sam wanted her to beg him to touch her, she probably would.

Sam touched her cheek so lightly she wasn't even sure he'd really done it. She turned her head to the left, but his hand wasn't there. Again, she felt his touch and she moved faster this time, but still could not catch his hand. It was frustrating that she couldn't do much more than turn her head or twist her body. Her legs were free, but that didn't help much. His fingers trailed up the side of her neck and across her cheek before brushing over her lips. She instinctively tried to kiss his fingertips, but he moved on, stroking her other cheek and down the other side of her neck. He touched her throat and then down across her chest, between her breasts. He was so gentle that it bordered on being more relaxing than arousing—except that Fiona was in no position to relax.

“That feels really nice,” she sighed.

The bed shifted and then warm air blew across her nipple, setting it tingling. How close was he? No way to tell. He blew again and she shivered and lifted off the bed, trying to find his pursed lips, to no avail. She was sure she felt him leaning over her just before he blew on her other nipple. It was tantalizing and she yearned for his touch. Fiona pulled against the scarves and tried to sit up, stretching her arms to the limit. She blindly bumped into Sam, who pulled back. With a firm hand, he pushed her back flat on the bed.

“Come on, this isn't fair,” she complained.

“It's not supposed to be. I've been paying a lot of attention to what you like, and I want to show off now. Think of it as a final exam.”

“You don't need to tie me up for that.”

“But I want to try to take it to the next level. I'm trying to earn my A.”

“I don't know. I'm a tough grader, honey.”

“But you're not in charge now, Fiona.”

Fiona heard the smile in his voice. She also heard confidence. She was proud because she knew she brought him here.

“Just relax and let go,” he advised.

“That's not my best skill.”

“I know, and that's what makes this so fun.”

“Don’t get too cocky,” she warned.

Something tickled her nipple and Fiona jumped, pulling hard on the scarves. It took a second to realize he was using a feather, circling around her nipple, and using it very well. She gasped and tried to control herself. She didn’t want Sam to think he had her eating out of the palm of his hand so easily.

“I can be whatever I want to be. I’m in control now,” he said.

Very nice, she thought.

She had never dated anyone who took the time to play like this, and she was starting to think she’d missed out on something. The light touch of the feather was scrumptious, but when he flicked her hard, little nubbins with it, crackling pleasure radiated, and she moaned and stiffened. He intermittently teased both her nipples and she trembled with excitement, trying to anticipate when he would touch her again, but Sam followed no pattern. It seemed like an eternity passed between his touches, but it was probably only moments. She grasped the scarves as she pulled them taut and she turned her body to where she thought the feather might be coming from next, but he always surprised her. Fiona was being played with and she should have been angry, but instead was just horny and impressed by Sam’s creativity.

“Mmm...Sam...honey...” she whimpered.

His fingers trailed down her tummy and just barely grazed her pussy. She lifted her hips off the bed, but he didn’t touch her—not really. He hadn’t even touched her pussy and she was soaked. Fiona wanted him to touch her there so badly, but he ignored her sex. Sam seemed content just to tease her nipples. Sam continued to tease, but the feather was gone, replaced by yet another silk scarf. He drew it tightly across both nipples at the same time. Fiona moaned and thrust her chest off the bed, uttering a pleading moan.

“God, what are you doing to me?” she gasped.

“It all feels so good, but I don’t know how much more teasing I can take, honey.”

“Should I stop?”

“No, please don’t.”

Begging wasn’t like her, but she did it readily. Being a guinea pig wasn’t like her either, but Fiona loved being his experiment. She could never have anticipated this, but she reveled in her helplessness.

When Sam brushed her lips with his fingertips again, she sucked them into her mouth, hoping if she made him want a blow job, he would stop torturing her. Fiona sucked those digits deep into her mouth and knew how it must look. It made her pussy tingle to think about Sam watching her wantonly suck his fingers like that. Fiona knew she must look sluttier than ever to Sam, but her situation called for it. If he kept teasing her like that, she'd be a perfect little slut for him—whatever he wanted as long as he took care of her.

He took his fingers away and immediately put them to use, lightly pinching and pulling her nipples with those slick fingers. She cried out loudly and he covered her mouth with his. While they kissed deeply, he dropped one hand down to her pussy, while still teasing her nipples. Two fingers entered her, and she jacked her hips off the bed to impale herself on them. It only took a matter of seconds for Fiona to reach climax and she practically screamed into their kiss. She came so fast it took her breath away.

“Sam...honey...please...I can't take it. You have to let me go, please.”

“But I'm not done yet,” he sounded disappointed. “Is that what you really want?”

Fiona took a deep breath and whimpered, “No.”

She was his and wondered if Sam's inexperience kept him from realizing it. No, he's a smart boy. He must know, she thought. Fiona feared she might lose her mind if he didn't fuck her soon, but she didn't want him to stop. It was deeply embarrassing, but she had to admit she loved this. She loved being controlled by the young man. But she yearned to please him, too. Fiona wanted to take care of him.

Sam finally leaned over and sucked and licked her nipples, while rubbing her drenched pussy. It was so overwhelming that she twisted and turned on the bed, not sure if she was trying to get away or bring him closer. All she wanted to do was grab his cock and put it inside her, or at least suck on it. Fiona desperately wanted to return the pleasure she was receiving. He easily made her climax again twice.

“Please...please...I need a break.”

Sam left her alone and she instantly wanted him back.

Time was meaningless in the dark and it felt like she had scant time to catch her breath before the bed shifted and something silky brushed her lips.

Fiona realized it was Sam's cock and she eagerly opened her mouth for him. She was happy for the chance to please him and take back a measure of control. But that was silly. This wasn't a normal blow job where Fiona could look into his eyes and tease him with her lips. Fiona couldn't even see his eyes. Her hands were tied so she couldn't stroke his shaft. Sam slid a hand behind her head to support it as he fed her his cock. He groaned as she sucked hard and he slid deeper, bumping the back of her throat. This blow job was so kinky, and it sent thrills down her spine. Sam groaned when she worked her tongue. He pushed deeper and Fiona struggled to relax the back of her throat. She panicked when she feared he might choke her, but Sam withdrew—just enough for her to breathe.

"Oh god...Fi...Fiona...that's so hot. Oh shit...mmm...yes...suck...suck it..."

Sam resumed rubbing her pussy and she tried to squirm away. Fiona couldn't concentrate on sucking him while he did that. But Fiona couldn't escape. She was helpless. She moaned around his shaft and Sam thrust deeper and harder into her mouth. He came without warning, flooding her mouth, with just his head between her pursed lips. Fiona coughed and thick jizz ran from her mouth, but she was skilled and swallowed most of his load. She smiled when he took his cock away, pleased she made him come in record time. Fiona licked her lips and blindly blew him a kiss.

Fiona grew impatient as Sam left her alone. What's he doing? she thought. He'd better not be taking pictures. No, she knew he wouldn't do that. Fiona couldn't say she'd have the same confidence in Josh but knowing her husband so well she wouldn't blame him. She also still wasn't sure she'd allow her husband to do this to her.

"Where are you, honey? What's next?" she asked, moving her head as if she was looking around.

"What do you want next, Fiona?"

Sam had a new tone in his voice—something she'd never heard from him. It wasn't confidence. It was closer to arrogance. Sam enjoyed having her helpless. She imagined him standing over her, his chest puffed out as he regarded his new toy—chest and cock puffed out. I'm his toy, she thought. I'm Sam's willing little sex toy. Fiona loved it, and immediately felt guilty for loving it. She should only be Josh's sex toy. But he told her to do this. How would Josh react when he learned about this? Fiona almost wanted Sam to take a picture just so she could show her husband.

“I want you, honey. I want you inside me. Please, honey, don’t just leave me like this.”

“I have to admit it, I really like seeing you like this.”

“Like what?”

“Tied there, at my mercy. It’s like you’re all mine.” Sam ran his hands down her body, teasing her nipples and brushing her swollen, sensitive mound. Shivers went down her spine. “It’s like I can just do anything.”

“Then do it, Sam. Do what you want,” she moaned, while thinking, It’s not like I resist much anyway. “Do what you want. I know you want to fuck me, don’t you? Don’t you, Sam?”

Sam fell on her and Fiona felt he was naked. His legs slid over her smooth stockings, and his half-erect cock rubbed her thigh. He was hot against her, like controlling her had set him aflame. He nibbled and kissed her neck like he needed to consume her. Fiona knew she should warn him not to leave a mark, but for now she belonged to him and didn’t it feel right. She pulled against the scarves stretching her arms to the sides, desperate to wrap her arms around her lover. It was so frustrating, she wanted to scream. And then Sam, was gone, moving away down her body.

“These stockings are sexy,” he said, kissing her legs through the silky material.

“Mmm, thank you, honey. That feels good.”

Sam removed her heels and she thought he might kiss her feet—admittedly a bit weird—but he massaged them instead, while kissing her calves. It felt divine.

“You can do that all day,” she moaned. It felt like she was being worshipped instead of controlled. She whimpered in disappointment when he finished with her feet and legs.

“Ohh...ohhh...oh god...oh my god...Sam...”

Sam plunged his face between her thighs, his tongue diving into her folds. Her hips jacked off the bed. He grabbed her butt, fingers digging in like he was crushing a juicy, ripe fruit. Fiona was juicy indeed. She was still hyper-sensitive from her last orgasms and when Sam started eating her it sent shockwaves through her quivering body. Fiona pulled hard on the scarves and they dug painfully into her wrists while the bedposts creaked in protest. The pain added to her arousal. Fiona was so consumed by extreme pleasure that she didn’t know if she should give herself to Sam or kick him away.

“Yeah...yeah...yeah...oh god...yeah...Sam...”

Fiona came and Sam slurped away at her pussy, lapping up her sweet nectar. That tongue, those lips, they drove her crazy. Fiona felt like she was losing her mind.

“God...please...please...fuck me! Fuck me, Sam!” she howled.

Sam ignored her, licking her pussy, making her scream. If she’d been free, Fiona would have wrestled him down and rode him hard.

“Please! Fuck me! Please!”

“What was that?” he asked, lifting his face from her pussy.

“Sam...honey...please...do it. I need you, honey.”

“What do you want, Fiona?”

“Fuck me, dammit! Stop teasing me!” she demanded.

The bed shifted again as Sam moved on top of her. He held the backs of her thighs, levering her legs up and spreading them wide. His cock bobbed against her—stiff and ready. Fiona mewled, lifting herself toward him. She pulled against the scarves, longing to grab his prick and stuff it inside her. Sam was taking too long. It was brutal. Fiona whimpered.

“Come on. Please,” she implored.

Sam buried himself in her with one wet sounding thrust.

“Yess!” she hissed. “Yes!”

“Oh god...shit...” Sam groaned, sliding into her sex.

“Yeah...honey...come on...take me...fuck me...”

Fiona tried to throw her body up at him, but it threw off his rhythm and she was forced to hold still so Sam could properly fuck her. Sam was too excited, and his motion was uneven, thrusting in a hard staccato before losing his place and stopping to regroup. It was frustrating to Fiona. He needed to calm down.

“Honey take it easy. It feels good, but you’ve got to slow down, take your time. Give it to me good, honey.”

“Oh god, Fiona.”

“Yeah, honey. Like that. Just like that. Yeah...yeah...oh yeah...”

“Ugh...Fiona...”

“Yeah...yeah...Sam...honey...”

Sam hit his stride. He leaned into her, pinning her legs back. Fiona was thankful she was flexible. He grasped her arms, already tied, pinning them to the bed. It hurt, but she liked it. Fiona rolled her hips to match his motion and there it was. They hit a perfect rhythm. She rapidly climbed that hill to her next orgasm.

“Yeah, honey. Yeah, honey. Yeah...yeah...yeah...ohmygod...”

“Oh god, Fiona. Oh god! Shit! Fuck! Oh shit!”

Fiona didn't remember Sam cursing so much in his normal life, but the young man had a filthy mouth while he was fucking her. She liked taking him to dirty places. And she really liked the way his thick cock stretched her pussy and pounded away inside her. It was amazing being pinned down and restrained. Fiona felt like a maiden being taken. She just wished she wasn't blindfolded, so she could see Sam. She tried to picture him but couldn't. She focused on the sensations in the darkness—his cock sliding into her and throbbing, his weight pressing her down, the scarves biting into her wrists. It was all too much. Her brain short circuited and she began coming again. Fiona cried his name and trembled. Her body wanted to twist and turn, but she was pinned and controlled. That made Fiona come harder and she swore she was dizzy behind her blindfold.

Time seemed to warp in the darkness and Fiona didn't know how much longer Sam lasted, but soon he was jammed inside her—huffing—as he pumped his seed deep in her pussy. Sam collapsed onto her, only moving when Fiona groaned in protest.

Fiona blinked against the light when Sam removed her blindfold. Sam took one long last look at her and finally untied her wrists.

“Oh my god,” he sighed, giddy.

Fiona threw herself into his arms and snuggled tightly into his chest.

“Was it good? I was afraid you'd think it was just weird.”

“Couldn't you tell, honey? God, I don't think I ever felt like that before. Being blind and restrained like that, it was like all I could do was think about the sensations. And it made them so vivid. You definitely figured out what I like. If that was a final exam, you get an A-plus-plus!”

Sam beamed. “Really? You never did anything like that before? I mean, I figured by now you would have tried everything.”

“Do you mean at my age?” Fiona looked at him crossly, and then smiled. “I've had a lot of fun in my time, did some things I guess other people would think are crazy, like this whole thing with you, but being tied up just never happened. It's something I fantasized about. I'm too much of a control freak. I didn't think it was something I would like. I like driving things."

"I've noticed," he laughed. "You are pretty tightly wound. I mean, you're cool, but you never want to be still, even for a second."

"Josh always tells me I need to slow down. The whole reason he told me to hang out with you is because he thought it would be fun and relaxing."

"It's been fun!"

Fiona laughed. "Oh yeah, it's been fun, but I don't think this kind of fun is what Josh had in mind. And we haven't relaxed much."

"This is relaxing," Sam protested, squeezing her.

"It is, and I love it. But we also just had quite the workout."

"I'm just glad I can make you happy, Fiona."

"You do, Sam. You do. Are you happy?"

"I've never been happier."

"I mean generally, honey, not just when we're in bed."

"Sure, I'm happy—mostly—but I have plans for my life. For example, now that I know what I'm missing, I really need to get a girlfriend." They both laughed at that. "But I also enjoy just sitting and reading, or playing my game, or doing whatever. I don't see why you need to be constantly busy to make life worthwhile."

"I just feel that there's so much to do and so much to accomplish that I shouldn't just be watching television. But you're right, I could relax more. It's probably good I spent all this time with you. Without Alex around, I probably would have been doing a thousand projects around the house otherwise. I would never have taken the time to have this much fun."

"So maybe I taught you something," Sam said.

"Maybe you did, but who says we're done. We still have all day. Just take it easy with my nipples, they're getting a little sore."

Fiona rolled on top of Sam and they kissed passionately. Kissing and touching led to Fiona going down on him, and when he was hard again, she mounted him. Fiona loved riding him. Being filled by his large cock was perfect. She took her time and enjoyed him, just keeping him inside her for a bit, then slowly riding up and down. She worked her powerful muscles, milking him, and Sam just stared at her like he'd just discovered the greatest thing ever. Fiona was back in control and it was her turn to tease. She brought him right to the edge, moving faster, then slowing down when he was about to cum, keeping him hard inside her for a very long time. A series of tremors went through her as she had a series of small climaxes. When she felt they were both ready, she rode him hard and he held onto her hips, pumping up off the bed. They both came, and she slumped to his chest with his prick embedded deeply inside her.

AFTER A SHORT NAP, Fiona pulled on a short, silky robe—not the bulky cover-up she met Sam at the door in—and went down to fix them lunch. She was famished after all that erotic exercise. Sam joined her in the kitchen and held her from behind while kissing her neck. It felt so natural, because it was something Josh did all the time. And like Josh would do, Sam untied her robe and slipped it open. They were right in front of the window overlooking the backyard.

“Aren’t you hungry, Sam?” She paused in cutting the sandwich she’d made and closed her eyes as she leaned back against him. His lips and hands did feel good. She parted her legs when he touched her down there, and being the perfect student, he touched her just as she’d taught him.

“Sure, but there’s something else I want more right now.”

“Aren’t you the cocky one now? You think you can just touch me, and I’ll fold? You’ve come a long way from trying to sneak a look down my blouse.” The pressure over her clit felt very good and she moved her butt back against him.

“I still can’t believe you caught me doing that. I thought I was being subtle.”

“First of all, we always know. That’s something you need to know for the future. And second of all, you were hardly subtle.”

“But you didn’t say anything.”

“Because I thought it was harmless. It was fun and...ahh...I..I guess I liked it. Come on, Sam, we can’t do this here. Someone could...ahh...see us...”

“Why would someone be in your backyard?” Instead of relenting, he pressed his rubbing fingers harder.

“But the neighbors...our houses are so close together...mmm...”

Just last week, she thought. Oh, but she wanted to give in. Fiona reached back and felt he was already poking through his shorts. She tried to pull them down, but couldn’t, so he did the job. Standing up on tiptoes, she pulled up her robe and Sam hunkered down and then he slid into her from behind. He felt even bigger from that angle and she gasped with pure pleasure. Fiona gripped the counter and pushed back against him while he held her hips and thrust forward.

“Oh god yeah...yeah...honey...”

“Shit...this is hot...”

Fiona rested her head against the cabinets and the robe slipped from her shoulders, barely hanging on her body. She climaxed swiftly—it felt like it was all she did anymore—and cried out his name. Sam, it seemed, was never going to cum, and she pushed him back and shoved their lunch aside. Fiona hopped up on the counter and pulled him to her. He entered her again and she wrapped her arms and legs around him. They kissed and held each other, and Sam slammed her lithe body over and over.

“That’s it...that’s it...yeah...fuck me honey...fuck me...”

“Fiona...” He cried and came. As he jetted inside her, she climaxed again too and kissed him hard.

They finally had their lunch afterward then retired to the guest bedroom, where they lay naked and talked for hours. When she knew their time was growing short, Fiona pulled Sam to her one last time and they made love. No, she had not fallen in love with the young man, but she did love him. It was more than just sex that final time. Sam was on top, and her legs were wrapped around him, drawing him into her, their eyes locked together. There wasn’t any of the encouraging dirty talk between them, just sighs and moans, and when they climaxed together, they both cried out and knew they had shared something special.

FIONA SAW Sam to the door for what she knew would be the final time—at least like this. She clung to Sam for a long while. He nearly crushed her in his arms, but Fiona didn't mind. She liked being there. The Uber waited for him at the curb, but she just didn't want to let him go.

"I'm going to miss this, honey," she said, face snuggled against his chest.

"We can't still find time? We can't sneak away?" Sam asked.

They could. It wasn't impossible, but Fiona just couldn't. It didn't matter how much she wanted it. It was dangerous. Fiona just didn't believe her marriage could survive her regularly sleeping with someone else.

"Sorry, honey. It's not possible. I have Josh and Alex. I have to focus on my family."

"I understand. It sucks, but I understand."

She looked up at him. "But this has been so special. I really mean it, Sam. I'll always remember this time we had together. I didn't realize it, but I think I needed this."

"You have a place in my heart, Fiona. You know what this meant to me."

"I know, honey."

"I'm so lucky. Fantasies aren't supposed to come true, not like this. How many guys can say such a crazy dream came true?"

"Oh, Sam."

"Fiona, I..."

She put her fingers to his lips. "Don't say it, honey. Please, we can't ever go there."

Fiona kissed him. She watched him go and watched him take a piece of her heart with him.

EIGHTEEN

BY THE TIME Josh got home, Fiona was showered, made up and changed into a little black pleated skirt she knew her husband loved it, and a gauzy, red, see-through top with a black camisole underneath. They needed a night out together, she decided. She wanted them to go out like they used to—have a good dinner, a few drinks, and then a special treat. She was sore from her day with Sam, but she needed to connect with Josh.

“Looks like you have something in mind,” Josh said when he came in. She greeted him with a long, deep kiss.

“I just thought we could go out and enjoy our last night of freedom.”

“You’re not too worn out from your day with Sam?” Josh smirked.

“No, honey. I am all about you tonight.”

Josh looked surprised and pleased. “Give me a few minutes to wash up and get ready and we can get out of here.”

One of their favorite restaurants was a quiet little BYOB bistro, and they stopped for a bottle of wine on the way. Fiona reached across the front seat, leaned on his shoulder and held his free hand as he drove. After an appetizer of oysters, she had penne with vodka sauce and Josh had lobster ravioli. They laughed and chatted just like old times, holding hands across the table. It felt like when they first dated, especially given the way Josh looked at her.

When their cannolis came for dessert, Fiona made a special show of wrapping her lips around the delicious treat then licked the excess filling from her lips. It was about all Josh could take and he asked for the check. She knew he thought they were headed home, but she had other plans and directed him to head north.

"I'm good. I'd like to just go home now," he said, rubbing her leg. The little skirt rode up when she sat, exposing most of her long, trim legs.

"Nope. I thought we should do something we always talk about, but never do."

"Really?" Josh asked, his eyebrows going up. "We're going to do that?"

"No, not that, unless you're really lucky. No, something else."

The something else was a drive-in movie. The last one in the area was about an hour north of the city, and they arrived in time to slip into an open spot and get some popcorn just before the movie started. People waited for hours to get the good spots, but Fiona didn't mind where they parked. She didn't plan on seeing much of the movie. Josh tuned in the sound on the car stereo, they kicked the seats back, and she leaned in under his arm.

Fiona played it cool until they were about halfway into the movie, when she was sure everyone else was focused on the film. She began by kissing Josh's neck and stroking his inner thigh. He pretended not to notice, which only made her come on stronger. She scooted closer and nibbled on his earlobe and unbuttoned the top of his shirt so she could slip her hand into and tickle his chest hair. Josh sighed and held her tightly.

Josh turned and kissed her. "I should have known you didn't just want to watch a movie."

She laughed and reached into his lap. "Aren't drive-in movies all about fooling around? We can just watch the movie if you want to. It looks really good." She slinked back across the seat and then laughed when he grabbed her and pulled her back to him.

"You really are pulling out the stops tonight, aren't you?" Josh said between kisses.

"I just want tonight to be memorable. We don't get enough date nights and we need to reconnect before Alex comes home—especially after everything."

"I don't know what you mean," he replied.

"Yeah, you're right. It's been a pretty boring couple of weeks, I guess."

Fiona jumped when he brushed her nipple through her top. It rose to instant stiffness, but she was still sore from all the attention Sam paid her earlier.

"Did you have a boring day with Sam?"

"Yeah, we just sat around and played boardgames. Nothing exciting."

"I find that a little hard to believe."

“Why’s that?” she asked, innocently batting her eyes, which she followed by grabbing him and rubbing through his pants until his shaft twitched.

Josh unbuttoned her gauzy top and it was thrown into the backseat.

“Because you can’t seem to keep your clothes on around my cousin.”

“Oh? You think I can’t control myself?” Her mind flashed to Sam taking complete control of her and Fiona trembled.

“Let’s find out,” Josh said. He teased her nipple again, but very tenderly, and those familiar, delightful shivers went through her.

“Josh...”

She squeezed his cock harder when Josh's teasing made her moan. She reached over and turned up the movie on the stereo.

“Who won?” he asked.

“What?” It was half-moaned.

“The game you played with Sam. Who won?”

Fiona couldn’t help smiling. “We both did.”

“Sounds like some game. Maybe we'll have to play it sometime.” His hand went under her skirt. His eyes widened when he felt she wasn’t wearing panties. His fingers pressed into her sopping mound and she grinded against his fingers. “Why didn’t you tell me about this sooner?”

“I wanted it to be a surprise. Besides, I didn’t wear panties for most of the day, so why start now?”

“Fuck, Fi...”

“Maybe you and I should try the game Sam and I played.”

“I think I’d like it. You’ll have to tell me all about it. Is that all you did? Play a game?”

Fiona was having a little trouble speaking. His fingers circled her clit and distracted her mightily. Their teasing was lighthearted and fun, and Fiona wanted to keep it that way. She feared saying the wrong thing and angering her husband. While she pondered that, she pulled open his belt and unfastened his pants. I know how to stop him from asking questions, she thought.

“We had lunch. Sam helped me out in the kitchen.”

She reached into his pants and Josh's warm flesh filled her hand.

“I bet he was very helpful today.” Josh chuckled.

“You have no idea.” Fiona smiled and lowered her face to his lap.

Josh lifted so she could pull his pants to his knees and then she half-lay across the front seat as she kissed and licked his cock. He thoughtfully pulled her hair back out of her face as she bobbed up and down on his prick, sucking loudly while she fondled his balls. His moans were music to her ears, and she sucked him even harder, thinking she'd given more blow jobs in the past week than she probably had in the past year. When he began pushing back into her mouth, Fiona kept her hand wrapped around his base to keep him from choking her.

“Christ, Fi, that’s so fucking good. I guess practice does makes perfect.”

Fiona lifted her face from his prick, licking her wet lips. “Are you calling me a slut?”

“Maybe. Do you mind?”

“Not right now.” She took him back in her mouth.

Fiona knew he was thinking about her doing this to Sam as he tried fucking her mouth. She’d gotten good at relaxing her throat, and she let him go deeper. Josh tightened his fingers in her hair, growing aggressive. He pumped hard up into her mouth and Fiona held on for the ride—even as she gagged. She owed Josh this. It felt like she owed her husband whatever he wanted after what she’d been allowed to do. Fiona was ready for Josh to flood her mouth with his seed. He didn’t have Sam’s recovery time—so she probably wouldn’t get fucked—but that was okay. But Josh didn’t come in her mouth. He forcefully pulled her head back by her hair. Fiona gasped.

Josh stared hard at her, eyes burning with furious lust. Fiona levered her seat back and pulled up her skirt.

Fiona touched herself. It was something she did not do in front of Josh. But she did it for Sam earlier—while they lay in bed together—so she did it for her husband too, and it made her heart pound to have Josh watch her like Sam had. It wasn’t just showing off for Josh that drove her. If someone walked by, they’d see her too. Fiona moaned, thinking about being so exposed.

She twisted to place one of her feet in Josh’s lap to massage his cock and balls. Her fingers slipped over her wet, swollen mound and she gasped, just dipping a fingertip into the crevice between her slick red lips. That finger grazed her clit and Fiona’s gasp turned to a long, low moan. She kept her eyes locked on Josh’s, but he kept looking down to where she touched herself. He seemed to like her fancy footwork and shifted so she could work her toes on his shaft. She bit her lip but couldn’t keep her moans in check.

Despite the soreness, she cupped one of her breasts and lightly teased her nipple through the camisole.

"Christ, Fi. It's like I'm seeing you for the first time," Josh whispered. "You're a changed woman."

"And...mmm...is that bad...mmm..." Am I really so different? She felt different but didn't think it was so obvious.

"No, it's fucking incredible, babe. You're amazing."

"Ahhh...Josh..." she cried, bringing herself to a swift climax on the heels of her husband's compliment.

Josh pushed her foot out of his lap and lunged across the seat, sliding between Fiona's legs and pushing his cock inside her. He was buried to the hilt in one powerful shove and it reignited her orgasm, making her cry out once again. He held her head as he kissed her, and she clawed at his back through his shirt, wrapped her legs around him and pulled him into her. It was cramped, and she slammed her knee into the dashboard, but they made it work. The car rocked with his thrusts and she feared there was going to be a knock on the window at any second. It would be so embarrassing to be caught screwing in the car like teenagers, but Fiona didn't care. She didn't want Josh to stop.

"God, Fi, you love being a little vixen, don't you? You loved seducing Sam, didn't you?" Josh grunted.

"Yes, baby...ahh...yeah..."

"Fiona the Seductress...it's so fucking hot!"

"You love it, Josh. You love me seducing Sam. You love me teaching him to fuck," Fiona teased. I'm getting better at this dirty talk thing, she thought.

"Shit...yes...Fi... I can't help it. I can't stop thinking about you doing all those dirty things with him."

"He watched me touch myself...just like you did. Sam watched me play with my pussy and then he came all over my tits. I felt so dirty, Josh."

"Fucking Christ, Fi. Holy shit!"

"You like that?"

"Yeah...yeah..."

Fiona worked her muscles hard—gripping him—bringing him right to the edge and releasing him. It was getting hard to hold back, but she wanted Josh to come with her. Her concerns about upsetting Josh slipped away. He clearly loved this. It was steamy in the car and she had trouble breathing the humid air, but it didn't slow her down for a second.

"God honey...he came so much...all over my chest. He loves coming on my tits."

"You...have...great...tits..." Josh moaned, pounding into her.

"I loved it. I loved it all. Every second with him. I loved it when he fucked me. Fuck me, Josh! Fuck me hard like Sam!"

"Fuck...oh fuck...Fi..."

The cars on either side of them had to know what they were doing now. The whole car rocked with them. She hoped they were enjoying the show instead of calling security, because the only way Fiona was stopping now was if the cops pulled Josh off her.

They climaxed within seconds of each other, Josh first, and then Fiona, squeezing him inside her when she felt his load pulsing into her. She clung to him and they kissed frantically, like they were going to consume each other.

"I love you so fucking much, Fiona. God, I love you," Josh breathed.

"I love you too. I love you with all my heart. You're my life, honey."

"We're gonna be okay, right?" She clung to him.

"Of course, Fi. We're good. We're all good."

"I need to know that, Josh." The tears in her eyes surprised Fiona.

"We're perfect, Fi. You're perfect. This was just a little fling. Think of it as your summer vacation."

Fiona laughed heartily, blinking back her silly tears. "It was one to remember. That's for sure."

"And who knows, he'll be home in a few months. Maybe Thanksgiving break will be ever better."

Fiona slapped his back. "You're insane."

"That's what you said before all this started, babe. Who knows what'll happen?"

"Not that, I assure you," she replied.

But even as she said it, Fiona's mind filled with thoughts of dirty, kinky fun among the fallen leaves. No, I couldn't. It's crazy, she thought, not entirely convincing herself.
