Chapter One

“How long does she usually work on weekends?” Baines asked.

“I think her last appointment today is at four. Cori should be home between five-thirty and six. Not too late,” Dylan answered.

“Come on, dude. Are you really okay with what Cori’s doing?”

Dylan sighed, not bothering to mask his annoyance. Paul Baines—everyone just called him Baines—had been picking and prodding at him about Cori’s new job all day. Baines was one of his oldest friends—they’d known each other since meeting in class freshman year of high school—but he could be exhausting. Dylan was used to it after thirty-plus years of friendship, but sometimes Baines just needed to drop the bone he was chewing. Today, that bone was Cori’s new job. No matter how many times Dylan insisted his wife was a legitimate, certified massage therapist, Baines kept acting like she was working in one of those shady massage parlors at the back of a seedy strip mall trading happy endings for tips.

“Yeah, it’s no different than if she was a physical therapist. She helps her clients with injuries and body problems. She might even go back to school and become a physical therapist if she decides she likes it. Cori’s job is not what you’re trying to make it.”

“How many of her clients are guys?” Baines asked, arching an eyebrow.

“I have no idea. You think I should go through her appointments every day and pick and choose who she can treat? Yeah, that would go over really well with Cori.”

“Hey, I know she’s a good girl. I’m just saying, you know how guys are,” Baines said, holding up his hand defensively. He had a beer bottle in his other hand and drained it.

“I know guys can be scumbags. But I trust my wife. Are you suggesting I can’t trust Cori?” Dylan shot his friend a challenging look.

“Of course not, dude. I just said she’s a good girl. I’m just saying she might be put into compromising positions, that’s all.”

“Cori can take care of herself. She’s probably tougher than the both of us.”

“That’s true. You just don’t know what goes on in those dark little rooms in those places. I’m just saying I wouldn’t be comfortable with my wife working there.”

“First of all, I think your familiarity with those places is part of why you don’t have a wife anymore,” Dylan started.

“Ouch, low blow,” Baines replied, laughing.

“Second of all, there’s a big difference between the kind of massage places you go to and places like Magic Stone. It’s a corporate chain, for chrissakes. And anyway, Cori’s not working at a massage place like that. She works for a therapeutic company that sends licensed massage therapists out to their clients. It’s a legit operation, not like that Orchids of Asia spa that Robert Kraft went to.”

“Oh, she’s an outcall girl. Cori’s going to these guys’ houses. Okay then,” Baines said, laughing even harder.

“Fuck you, man,” Dylan said, only half-hiding his annoyance. “I’m getting another beer, You want one?”

“I can have one more, but then I have to go. I’m meeting up with someone tonight.”

“You can tell me all about that. Let’s pick apart your personal life for a change.”

Dylan hopped up from the Adirondack chair and took Baines’ empty bottle and carried it into the house with his own. He appreciated his friend’s help cutting up the big tree limbs that fell into the backyard after the heavy storms that swept through that week, but he didn’t need Baines’ ribbing about Cori’s job. The truth was, Dylan wasn’t quite as okay with it as he let on to his old friend. He just knew better than to get in his wife’s way when her mind was set on something.

Cori had always planned to go back to work. Dylan knew that was the plan. He fully supported her decision to stop working and stay home until the kids were older. First came Grace, followed by Jack three years later. Dylan made good money but relying solely on his income required changes to their lifestyle. Cori had done well working in corporate HR, giving them a comfortable lifestyle when they both worked. The family wasn't broke living on one income, but it meant that they couldn't just take a Disney vacation without saving up the money. Luckily, Cori was an expert couponer and knew how to get the maximum out of their wholesale club membership. Still, Dylan had expected his wife to go back to work sooner, like once both kids were in school. However, their youngest, Jack, had just turned thirteen, and Cori had only begun talking about going back to work in the last year. Dylan was relieved to have her take some of the financial pressure off of him, even if her new career choice puzzled him. He always thought Cori would return to the corporate world, but she had other plans.

Dylan had a lot of the same thoughts as Baines when Cori told him she wanted to become a massage therapist. He thought of massage parlors with their windows all covered up and middle-aged men skulking in and out, their eyes darting around to make sure no one saw them. His wife wasn't a prude by any stretch—she'd always been rather adventurous in bed—but he just couldn't imagine his Cori in a place like that. But when he thought of her giving out hand jobs in some dingy backroom and felt an unexpected tingling in his balls, the image touching some dark, unexplored place deep in his psyche. Cori had always been able to read him like a book, and she knew exactly what that look on his face meant when she told him her plans. She punched him in the arm and told him to get his mind out of the gutter. Dylan got back to thinking rationally and an adult conversation ensued—not that his mind didn't go back to that sordid place from time to time. Cori didn't mind indulging his fantasies and they had some fun with it. She teased him about her day of giving happy endings as often as he teased her.

Cori assured him that she would be working in a professional capacity only and that he had nothing to worry about. Yes, she would have male clients, but she wouldn't take any bullshit. She'd slug any guy who tried to push things. She was right, of course. Dylan decided he could trust her and gave Cori his blessing to pursue her new dream.

Dylan fetched two fresh Dogheads from the fridge and heard Jack shouting and cursing from the room beyond. Dylan was tempted to go in and tell his son to watch the language, but Jack was gaming with his friends on the Xbox and he didn't want to intrude. He had a mouth like a sailor too when he was his son's age. Dylan just never spoke that way in the house.

Grace was out with friends, doing god knew what. He popped off the tops and returned to Baines in the backyard.

“Sorry to yank your chain so hard, dude. I know Cori wouldn’t really take a happy ending job,” Baines said, taking the bottle.

“I appreciate that, but I know you’re just fucking around. That’s who you are. An asshole.”

Both men laughed.

“I don’t deny it. I have no idea why you put up with me.”

“Because I needed help with the trees,” Dylan answered. It had been sweaty work on the unseasonably warm fall day, and he didn’t own a chainsaw. Baines had brought the tools.

“No shit. I think doing all that work by yourself would have killed you. No offense.”

“None taken, I think. I could have done it myself,” Dylan said, without confidence.

He was in average shape for a suburban dad in his late forties, he liked to think. Dylan sported a bit of a paunch and was sometimes winded when running the sidelines while he coached Jack’s soccer games, but dad bods were supposed to be in, right? He should be in better shape, he knew, especially since Cori took such good care of herself. She still ran every morning and watched what she ate. Cori made healthy food for the family too, but when he was out working Dylan just couldn’t resist eating junk. Cori ribbed him for his belly sometimes too, like Baines was, but she did it with love. His wife insisted that she liked him cuddly.

“Dude, you were sweating like a whore in church while we were working. Do you sweat like that when you’re on top of Cori?”

Baines laughed. “Maybe that’s why she’d be tempted at work. Cori gets some hot guy on her table, he’s all nekkid, it’s a lot of temptation.”

“You’re back on that again?”

“Sorry, I guess I just like the idea that Cori might be doing that. She’s cute as hell, and she’s just not the type, so imagining her doing it is extra hot.”

“That’s my wife you’re talking about, buddy,” Dylan warned, smiling. He knew he should be offended, but his friend had a point. He’d had the same thoughts.

“You know I’d say it if she was here.”

“And she’d just laugh at you.”

“Maybe I’ll book her for an appointment and see what happens,” Baines said.

“You do that and tell me how it works out for you. Keep in mind, she’s got incredible grip strength. She’ll pull your balls right off.”

“I should be so lucky.”

Cori was exhausted when she pulled into the driveway. It was almost six and it was turning dark. The shortened days were what she hated most about this time of year. She loved the crisp coolness and the fall colors, but it was tough to take the dark mornings and the early sunsets. The lights were on inside the house, and she wondered what the family was doing in her absence. Cori still wasn’t acclimated to the family’s lives carrying on without her presence. Not that she was always there before, but as a stay-at-home mom she was usually around. Cori would have been making dinner right about then. She suspected Dylan had already ordered pizza.

“Hey guys,” she announced, coming through the door. Cori was disappointed by the lack of a response.

Lights were on in the kitchen when she came in through the backdoor, and the lack of cooking confirmed that Dylan had ordered dinner in, or at least planned to. She deposited her purse on the counter and dropped her work bag onto the floor. Her massage pads and her folding table were left in the minivan; Cori didn’t have the energy to carry them into the house.

The click-clack of game controller buttons led her to Jack in the family room. He started and scowled at the intrusion, grumbling that she didn’t need to turn the light on. Cori spared him the lecture about sitting in a dark room. Jack’s attention returned to his game, and she lamented that it wasn’t so long ago that she would have been greeted with a smile and a hug by her youngest.

Dylan was in the backyard, walking the lawn and tossing twigs and other small debris into a big plastic trashcan he dragged behind him. He looked as exhausted as she felt, and Cori felt obligated to come down from the deck and help. Her shoulders and back were sore, but it was good to move around. Dylan didn't notice her until she was bending over to pick up a long stick.

"I'd know that ass anywhere. That must be my wife. It's great you're home," Dylan said.

"Are you just happy to see me because I'm bent over?" she asked, laughing. She knew he liked her butt in leggings, which she often wore for work. They were comfortable and easy to move in. The official work uniform called for khakis, but Cori only wore them for the stuffier clients.

"Could be."

Dylan moved in behind Cori and took her by the hips. He pressed into her, and she couldn't resist grinding back, despite her exhaustion. She didn't want to start anything she didn't have the energy to finish, but Cori appreciated that her husband was still just as into her ass as he'd been when they met twenty-three years ago. It was only slightly larger than it had been then, but she swore it was just as tight. Cori worked hard to keep it that way. She maintained her fitness as part of her healthy lifestyle, and having a tight butt was a nice side effect. Cori was as vain as any other woman, even if she didn't put effort into glamming herself up every waking moment.

"Don't think you're starting something, mister," she said, feeling the lump in his shorts twitching against her backside. "You get all worked up, you're taking care of it yourself tonight. I'm too tired to help you out."

"Not even a quick handy? You have all that training with your hands now."

Cori turned and straightened, working the kinks out of her back. His arms went around her, and she rested hers on his shoulders. They kissed, more of a familiar peck than the kind of heated smooch that would lead to something else.

"I'd like to think I was pretty good with my hands before school," she replied, reaching down to give him a quick squeeze through his shorts. She really didn't want to start something, but she couldn't help herself.

"That's true. Anyway, you've been using your hands all day. You probably have nothing left for me."

Cori gripped him tighter, massaging his growing shaft. She smiled at her husband's tortured groan. Cori enjoyed teasing him a little too much. She let him go and held up her hand, flexing it. "It has been a long day, but I might have one more happy ending in me if you tip well enough."

“I’ve got your tip right here,” he said with a leer, pressing his crotch to hers.

“Really?” Cori laughed and tousled his thick, graying hair, sending a cloud of sawdust into the air. “That’s where you’re going?”

“Sorry, it’s been a long day and I’ve got a few beers in me. You know how Baines is.”

“Don’t blame your drinking on him.”

“Good point. I thought I’d be done out here long before now, but we took a break, had some beers, and it just didn’t get finished. Seriously, though, you don’t need to help me. You’ve been working all day.”

Cori kissed him again and stepped back, done having her fun. “How is Baines doing?”

“You know him. He had to rush out of here to get ready to meet some Tinder chick. He’s a pretty simple guy.”

“Hard to believe you guys are friends,” Cori said.

“He’s basically a good guy. He just lives a very simple life. He has very simple needs.”

“I know. I like Baines. It’s just you two are so different.”

Dylan shrugged. “What can I say? I like the guy. By the way, he was very interested in your new job. He was talking about scheduling an appointment.”

Cori smirked. “Was he now? I can only imagine what he thinks I do.”

“Uh, he basically compared it to being a call girl.”

“Typical. If Baines books an appointment, he’s going to be very disappointed. I almost wish he would.” Cori wasn’t offended. It was what she expected from her husband’s oldest friend. She did not expect the strange look that came across Dylan’s face. “Would it bother you if I gave Baines a treatment?”

“No, of course not. I know it’s therapeutic,” Dylan replied unconvincingly.

“Right. You can tell me all the inappropriate things Baines said about me being a hooker later. I’m going up to get a shower right now. What’s going on with dinner?”

“Pizza?” Dylan said hopefully.

“Sure,” she replied, giving him one more peck before turning to go inside. Pizza and a beer would hit the spot, she decided.

Dylan lightly stroked his cock in the shower, unsure if he really felt like jerking off. He was bone-tired from his day of yardwork. But he had things on his mind. He had Cori on his mind. Cori told him she was too tired for sex, but after her teasing in the yard he'd still hoped she'd be coaxed into it. It didn't need to be long. He was tired too. But that didn't happen.

Cori had a couple of slices of pizza and a couple of beers while talking to the kids. She still insisted the kids come down and eat dinner with them like a family. The kids still did it, to their credit, even if Jack came with copious grumbling and eye rolls. Grace and her mother were still close, and Dylan suspected his daughter was having trouble adjusting to her mom not being around as much, so she valued that time together. After they ate and cleaned up, Cori was as good as her word, heading up to bed, where she promptly fell asleep with a book in her hand and the nightstand light illuminated. Dylan stayed up and tried to watch Netflix. He was restless. But eventually, he went up and jumped in the shower, where he was now thinking about his wife and stroking his cock.

Baines got into his head Dylan told himself. That wasn't entirely fair, as the thoughts were already in his head. Baines just stirred them up. Dylan became hard as a fantasy formed in his mind while he stroked his cock. Cori was working on some nondescript man, but he was on his back on the massage table, not on his stomach. The room was as unremarkable as the man. It was some generic living room with a picture window letting in plenty of light—the better to see things by. Cori was dressed for work, in the sea-green polo with a logo embroidered on the breast that her company provided and black leggings. Despite her slender frame and small breasts, the polo was still a tight fit—especially across the chest. Dylan thought that was intentional. The massage therapy company was legit, but they still wanted their clients to “like” the girls. Cori's dirty blonde hair was pulled back into a short ponytail. Dylan missed when she'd worn it longer, but she'd kept it to a length that just brushed past her shoulders for years. She just didn't want to fuss with long hair, she said.

Dylan knew this anonymous man had been checking out Cori from the time she'd gotten to his house, ogling her ass when she bent over to unpack her gear. The man wanted her. Cori's company did not allow clients to be nude. Some even kept their shirts on, but in Dylan's head, this man was nude, with a little white towel draped over his genitals. The towel was tented out—very tented. There was no way Cori hadn't noticed it. Dylan imagined she was doing her best to ignore it, as she said she would if something like that happened. But this was fantasy, not reality, and Cori checked it out while she worked on the man's chest, her smile quirking to the side in the mischievous way it often did. Cori moved down to stretch the man's leg up, and when she did the towel slipped away.

The man's cock was big. Huge. Dylan didn't understand why this cock in his weird fantasy was so big, but the thing was a monster. It arched up and flopped onto his stomach, exposing big, hairy balls.

"It looks like you have a problem there," Cori teased in his head.

"You are here to relieve all my tension, aren't you?" the man said, leering.

"I'm not that kind of masseuse."

"Everything can be negotiated, hon."

In real life, Cori would have whacked him for calling her hon, but in this weird fantasy she couldn't take her eyes off the thick cock in front of her, and Cori's smile widened, and her slate-blue eyes sparkled. Her fingers danced along the exposed underside of his root. It twitched and drooled in response. She lightly tickled his balls and he groaned. Cori was teasing him, the way she'd been teasing Dylan in the yard earlier. She would deny it to her grave—unless she had a few drinks in her—but Cori did love to tease. She loved to flirt. She liked attention, but she also was always in control. Dylan imagined his wife out of control. He imagined Cori looking at that thick cock and wanting to play with it.

"Maybe, just this once, I can take care of you. It would be unprofessional of me to leave you with so much tension in your body," Cori said, her voice husky.

"Please," the man replied.

Dylan was fully pumping his cock, lubed by body wash. He pictured his wife getting a bottle of lotion from her bag and pouring it over the cock. The anonymous man was just reduced to a cock now. He was so big that Cori needed both hands to properly stroke him. Her hands worked up and down his meat, twisting as she played with it. Her pale cheeks flushed, and her breathing got heavy as she worked. The man grunted and groaned as her hands moved faster. Cori's tongue just peeked out between her teeth, the way it did sometimes when she was concentrating. She stared intently at her work. Cori focused her left hand on the top portion of the cock, tugging and covering the head to rub it, while her right massaged the guy's heavy balls. There was a sharp cry, and he was coming, spurting thick cream all over Cori's polo, up to her tits, even hitting the bottom of her chin. The fantasy cock had an incredible load and amazing range. Cori moaned as she kept pumping, milking the cock until her shirt was covered.

That sharp cry was Dylan's, as he came at the exact moment as the fantasy cock. He cried out and hunched over, pumping his seed down at the drain. His body shuddered, once, twice, three times. As he pumped his essence out, euphoria swept over him. The hot shower spray needled his back and he panted in the humid air. Drained, Dylan almost slumped to the floor.

The euphoria was short-lived. Dylan was left exhausted and shamed. It felt too weird to masturbate to thoughts of his wife jerking off another man. He'd never entertained such thoughts—not before Cori's new job, and even then, they were just passing thoughts of her jerking someone off, usually after she teased him about it. Dylan never had to run off and take care of himself before. He was guilty of being turned on by thinking of Cori that way.

Dylan quickly finished his shower and slipped into bed beside his wife, hoping he'd forget all about his strange fantasy in the morning.

Chapter Two

Cori had only been with her new company for about three weeks, but she'd already grown to hate their weekly staff meetings. Since the massage therapists all worked remotely at clients' residences, the owner, Janine, thought it was important that they gather once a week to go over whatever she felt they needed to cover. The staff meetings were mostly used to impress upon the therapists that proper procedures needed to be followed and paperwork needed to be completed in a timely manner. Paperwork was a misnomer. All of the scheduling and forms and timesheets were filled in using a company-provided iPad. The iPads came with constant reminders that if the staff broke them the cost would come out of their paychecks.

The therapists gathered in a small, windowless conference room at the office of Elemental Bodywork, LLC. The company headquarters was a small suite of offices in a nondescript office park. Clients never came to the office, so appearances didn't matter. Besides the conference room, there was a reception area, an office for a bookkeeper, a tiny kitchenette, and a third office that was used as a storage room. The masseuses were all subcontractors and thus expected to maintain their own equipment and supplies, but Janine maintained sets of pads and tables she could lend out in a pinch. Janine was a no-bullshit type of boss, but Cori liked her.

Cori found a space in the back corner of the conference room, not at the large, black-lacquered table, but in a spare chair. The room was crowded with eight therapists, Janine, and Maribel, Janine's assistant, who was there to take notes. Unnecessary papers had been passed around the room, a checklist for disinfecting equipment, a script for the therapists to use in upselling clients. Cori disregarded both. She was almost anal about cleanliness, and she refused to engage in the sales aspect of the job Janine insisted they do. It felt icky to Cori. Her clients liked her so far and they'd all booked further appointments. She didn't need to push six-massage packages on them. Cori handed out the cards, and if the clients want to take advantage of specials they could, but she had no intention of hectoring them. If Cori wanted a sales job, she would have taken one.

Janine ran through the weekly lecture with surprising energy for such mundane subjects. She was clearly energized by running her own business. Before Elemental Bodywork had been a multi-therapist business with offices and procedures, it had been Janine on her own, schlepping around a massage table in the back of her Honda and building a client list by word of mouth. Janine still saw clients, but far less than she used to. Cori admired her boss's work ethic and dreamed that one day she could build a business as Janine had. But the business rules made it tough for Cori to strike out on her own. Therapists retained the right to clients they had before working with the company, but any clients steered their way by Elemental Bodywork were off-limits according to a strict noncompete clause Cori had to sign at her hiring. Cori didn't think it was right that she had to sign the document as an independent contractor, but she understood Janine trying to protect her business.

"Finally, ladies," Janine said, raising her voice as she was winding down. The meeting was drawing close to the end and everyone in the room was restless. In deference to the one male therapist, Janine added, "And gentleman."

"She always does that, like she doesn't think Rodrigo should be here," Mayde murmured, leaning back and twisting to direct her comment to Cori. "She should be kissing his ass. His clients love him."

"Did you have a question, Mayde?" Janine called out.

"No, ma'am," Mayde replied, plastering on a smile.

Cori suppressed a giggle. She didn't know any of her coworkers well, but she liked Mayde's energy. The woman had gone out of her way to be friendly at meetings and make Cori feel included, which was not true of everyone.

"Anyway, you all need to make sure that you're checking into the app as soon as you arrive at a client's home. That way, they can't complain later that you were late and ask for a discount. Remember, if I have to give a discount it's coming out of your end for being late, not mine. And you need to get them to sign the consent for treatment and payment form. That's super important."

Cori glanced around the room and wondered who was responsible for this latest lecture. She was great with details and her paperwork was always in order, which meant the reminder wasn't directed at her. It had always bothered her when a boss chose to correct everyone rather than just the employee who screwed up. When she worked in HR a thousand years ago, Cori always advised managers to avoid that mistake, but too many liked to use their power to discipline the entire staff.

"Any questions? Concerns?" Janine asked.

The room was silent. The therapists just wanted to get out of there. Some of them had late afternoon appointments to get to. Janine waited a beat too long before finally telling them, "Okay, then. You can all get out of here. You're all doing great work. Keep it up. Remember you're genuinely helping people."

There was an audible exhalation and release of tension as the therapists began to move and gather their things. Cori was certainly eager to get out of there and get on with her day. She didn't have any appointments scheduled, which meant it was a rare afternoon she could be home for the kids and make dinner. She lifted her bag from the floor and stretched to work out the kinks in her back caused by sitting in an uncomfortable chair for an hour.

"Are you joining us for happy hour?" Mayde asked. "We go out for drinks once a month after these things to bitch."

"I would love to, but I really should get home," Cori said.

"Should doesn't mean you have to, hon. What's waiting for you at home?"

Cori thought about the laundry and other chores awaiting her. She hated leaving things undone. Dylan tried to help, bless his soul, but most household chores weren't in his wheelhouse. His laundry folding was almost worse than leaving the clothes in the laundry basket. It would be nice to grab a drink, but responsibility tugged at her.

"Someone has to make dinner," Cori replied.

"You're married, right?" Mayde asked, glancing at Cori's wedding band, a simple gold ring. She didn't wear her engagement ring while working. "Your husband can make dinner, can't he?"

"He can, but he's been doing it a lot lately. We're still adjusting to me going back to work."

“Then one more night isn’t going to kill him. Come out, Cori. You’ll get to know all the others, get the real scoop on working here. She should come, shouldn’t she Lexi?”

Lexi was a curvy blonde in her early twenties. Cori knew her by name only. “Oh yeah. Come with us, hon. We have a lot of fun,” Lexi said.

“See, you need to come with us,” Mayde hectored.

Responsibility lost the internal battle with fun. “Okay, one beer, and then I’m out of there.”

“Great! We go to El Camino. It’s a fun Tex Mex place nearby. Give me your number and I can text you the address,” Mayde said.

The women exchanged details and Cori was almost out the door when Janine called after her. “Do you have a minute, Corrine?”

“Uh oh. The teacher wants you to stay after class. Were you bad?” Mayde kept her voice low but laughed as she said it.

“I hope I don’t have detention,” Cori whispered to her new friend, adding in a louder voice, “Sure, Janine.”

Cori followed Janine into her office, and when the boss closed the door, she wondered if she was actually in some kind of trouble. She’d done nothing wrong. Janine walked around her desk and gestured for Cori to sit as she sat. The boss’s office was the largest of the suite, which explained why the conference room was so small. The big steel and glass desk was uncluttered, only sporting a tidy in-basket and a laptop. Matching bookcases lined the walls and were tastefully decorated with an Eastern theme. If the outer office was spartan, Janine’s office was an oasis. The glass desktop provided a perfect frame for Janine’s excellent crossed legs.

Janine Kostoff was an attractive woman, fit and beautiful. Like many of the people Cori had met since entering the massage therapy industry, Janine was health and body-conscious, projecting a certain image for her clients. It was as much about promoting a lifestyle as it was about selling individual massages, and Janine Kostoff was a walking billboard for her services. Cori guessed her boss was probably in her early fifties, but she looked ten years younger, with jet black hair and bright, sharp green eyes set in a pretty, unlined face. The raven hair was surely from a bottle and the smooth forehead a result of injections, but that didn’t matter. Janine projected youth and vigor. She handled all of the high-end clients herself and provided nutritional and mindfulness services along with the massage therapy. Her loose, lavender Lily Pulitzer dress did little to hide Janine’s soft curves. The first time Cori met her boss, she thought of her husband. Janine was exactly the kind of woman Dylan was drawn to. Cori was almost the opposite body type—slender, toned, small breasts and hips. She'd always joked that she had no idea why Dylan had chosen her. If Dylan ever cheated, Cori knew it would be with a woman like Janine.

"I wanted to check in and see how things are going, Corrine," Janine began.

"It's been great so far. Everything has gone smoothly. Have there been any issues on your end?" Cori didn't correct the boss on her name. No one called her Corrine, except for her mother.

"No. I have to say, your work has been exceptional. All of the paperwork is in order, I've had feedback from clients that they love you. In fact, I have the work whenever you're ready to increase your workload."

"I can talk to my husband about it, but I'm still getting my footing with the schedule, you know? It's been quite an adjustment for my family."

"Of course. I don't want you to work more than you're comfortable with. It's important to take care of yourself, Corrine." Janine's smile suggested she didn't mean a word of it. "There is one additional client I'd like you to take on, though, if you don't mind. He had been seeing Diana. I don't like to pair him with just anyone. He can be challenging."

"Oh?"

"I'm only asking you because you seem like you can take care of yourself, Corrine. You're tough."

"Thanks, I think."

"I mean that as a compliment. Hayes Caldwell has certain, I want to say, behaviors. He's very wealthy, at the top of his field, and with that comes a sense of entitlement. He's not a bad man. He just wants what he wants, and he's not used to being told no. But if you're firm, he'll respect you and fall in line. I think he actually appreciates someone who'll take a firm line with him."

Cori grew concerned. It sounded like Janine was dancing around something, like she was trying to avoid stepping on a land mine, and Cori didn't appreciate it. Her boss was right about one thing. Cori was a no-bullshit kind of girl. She wanted Janine to get to the point, although it sounded like she didn't want any part of this Hayes Caldwell. "What are you getting at, Janine? What does this Hayes Caldwell expect?"

“You seem worldly, Corrine. You know how men are. You know what a wealthy, successful man expects from a beautiful woman. The more successful and confident the man, the more he expects. Different women have different comfort levels with that.”

“Janine, are you suggesting that I...”

“As I said, you’re a strong woman, Corrine. I know you won’t be bullied. The world is different now than when I started. Back then, there were certain behaviors from men we just expected. It didn’t mean we liked it, but the girls who knew how to handle themselves just took care of it and kept clients in line. Some took advantage to make extra money, others did not. A smart, talented girl knows how to shut a man down. I never had a problem putting a man in his place. But these days, it’s all different. I don’t think some girls are realistic about the situation. Trust me, Corrine, I’d never tolerate anyone coercing one of you girls. But men will try to take advantage. It’s just their nature, and you can’t be the kind that goes scurrying away in horror if a man is less than polite.”

Cori knew some men were like that. Maybe even most men. She’d certainly had some male friends who liked to push boundaries. Her ass had been grabbed in fun more times than she could count. She would respond with an are you serious look, asking, “You just can’t keep your hands to yourself?” She never took it seriously because she knew those guys and knew they had no ill intentions. Besides, if they really got out of hand Cori would dick slap them, and they knew it. Not all men were like that, though. Dylan was not one of those men. One of the reasons she’d fallen in love with her husband was because he was one of the good ones. She’d never seen Dylan treat any woman with disrespect. Cori was glad he was the man raising her daughter.

Cori also understood what women in her field had to combat with male clients. Some massage therapists only treated women because of it. It was covered when she went to school for certification, and Janine went over how to handle male clients during her orientation. In her few short weeks, Cori had already had her share of innuendos and even the occasional wandering hand. No female massage therapist should have to put up with such things, but it didn’t scandalize Cori. She’d always had more male friends than girlfriends. As long as the client could take a hint and stop when she politely put their hand back in place, she had no issue. If the client was persistent or she got a creepy vibe, Cori would just refuse to see them again.

It didn't sound like Hayes Caldwell was just another client who might try to cop a feel while she treated him. It sounded like he expected certain services and that Janine was implying she was good with whatever a massage therapist chose to provide him. It was at odds with the consistent message that Elemental Bodyworks was not a brothel on wheels. Janine kept dancing around the point, forcing Cori to be direct.

"Are you saying Hayes Caldwell expects sex? Was Diana sleeping with him?" Cori asked, fixing her boss with the laser eyes she usually reserved for her misbehaving children.

"No, Diana was not having sex with Hayes, not as far as I know anyway. I don't tolerate that behavior. I told you that when I hired you, Corrine." Janine fell back in her chair like she'd been mortally wounded. Cori thought she was pouring it on a bit thick.

"What does he expect?"

"Hayes will push your boundaries. A suggestion here, an errant touch there. He can be very persuasive and very generous. If he sees you waver, he'll come on that much stronger. I need to send a strong girl to him—one who can keep him in line and keep him happy."

"So, you want to throw me into the lion's den?" Cori didn't hide her annoyance.

"No. As I said, if you put him in his place, he'll respect you."

"But he'll press for more than just a treatment? And you want me to roll with that? Why do you even keep him as a client?"

"I told you. He's very generous. I mean, very generous, Corrine. If you become his regular, you'll find that out."

"Even without jerking him off—or more?"

"Where you choose to draw the line with Mr. Caldwell is between you and him. And as long as you remain discreet, it will remain your private business. By all accounts, you're a talented woman, Corrine. He should be pleased with any treatment you provide him. If you can handle him, you'll be thanking me. It's a privilege to be on his account. Diana appreciated being assigned to him. I used to treat him personally until I became too busy."

"And Diana definitely wasn't fucking him? Sorry to be so blunt, Janine, but we're both adults here."

“I appreciate it, Corrine. It’s one of the reasons I thought of you for Hayes. I can’t say for certain nothing happened. I don’t know what goes on when you girls go to clients’ homes. That’s ultimately between you and the client, but I expect my girls to be honest and follow the rules. If I find out about any other arrangements, you’re gone. I believe I made that very clear when I hired you.”

“You did. Just checking. What I’m hearing about Hayes Caldwell kind of flies in the face of official policy.”

“There’s policy, and there’s reality. You’re smart enough to understand that, aren’t you, Corrine?”

“I do understand. I just want to make sure you’re never going to put me in a compromising position, Janine.”

“Never. I value you girls. Each and every one of you. What do you think about Hayes?”

“Can I have some time to think it over? I’m not afraid I can’t handle him, but I need to decide if I want to bother with him.”

“Of course, but not too long. I can’t stall him for too long. I may even see him myself this week to keep him happy. That should show you he’s manageable. And remember, he’s a great tipper, Corrine. The best we have.”

“I’ll keep that in mind. Thanks for the vote of confidence.”

Chapter Three

“Oh, Diana was definitely fucking him. Trust me, Corrine. Everyone knew it,” Mayde said, laughing.

“No way that girl was tipped like that for just a shiatzu treatment,” Rodrigo confirmed.

“Please, it’s Cori. My friends call me Cori.”

Cori went to meet her coworkers at El Camino after meeting with Janine. She needed a drink after her unsettling meeting with their boss. El Camino was a Tex Mex restaurant designed with the expected southwest Mission-themed architecture. The food was great, and Cori and Dylan had been there with the kids numerous times. The chile rellenos were delicious. The Elemental Bodywork therapists were gathered in the bar area, drinking margaritas and splitting huge plates of quesadillas and everything nachos. It was just before 5:00 and the happy hour crowd was still thin. Mayde and Lexi shared a table with Rodrigo and another therapist named Serenity. Cori chose to stay away from the tequila and ordered a Dos Equis. She didn’t get into the details of her conversation with Janine, but she did ask the others if they knew of Hayes Caldwell.

“Don’t listen to them, Cori. It’s not like Diana came to meetings bragging about how she took care of Mr. Caldwell,” Serenity said. She was in her forties like Cori and projected a very New Age, Stevie Nicks kind of vibe, aided by her flowy, colorful tie-dyed dress.

“Stop it, Serenity. You want to believe see the best in everyone, and that’s cool,” Lexi said, setting her giant margarita down after a generous sip. “And I’m not judging. I can’t cast the first stone. But there’s no way that man kept Diana on for so long if she wasn’t providing full service.”

“Have any of you ever treated him?” Cori asked.

"I saw him once. The money would have been nice, but I did not dig his entitled rich boy vibe. And I avoid the married ones. I told Janine to find someone else," Mayde said.

"I treated him for a little while. He was nice enough to me. Janine is right. His tips are amazing," Serenity said.

"Why did you stop?" Cori asked.

"He requested someone else." Serenity looked sour about it.

"Probably because you weren't putting out. I don't blame you, girl. Men like him who think they can buy anything are gross. I won't put up with it if I don't have to, but rich White men run the world, so sometimes you just have to plaster on a smile and push through," Rodrigo said.

"You don't have to worry about it, hon. You're not his type," Mayde said. "You just might be though, Cori." She gave Cori a good once over, looking the woman up and down. "Yeah, I bet he'll like you."

"It doesn't matter what he likes. I'm a married woman," Cori said, quickly adding, "Not that that matters. I wouldn't be giving happy endings even if I was single. That's not why I got into this."

"It's not why any of us got into it. But y'know..." Lexi said.

Cori stared at Lexi, her mouth hanging open. "Do you..."

"No. I don't go there. I don't need to."

"Our girl Lexi gets them all fired up and leaves them hanging. These boys think it's coming, but then she's out the door and they're left to take care of themselves," Mayde said.

"What do you mean?" Cori asked, taking a pull of her beer. She was learning a lot. Too much. One beer might not do it.

"I'm just very nice to my clients. I never promise them anything. If that gets into their heads, that's on them," Lexi said, with a devilish smile. "I'm not selling anything but a treatment and my company."

"Lexi here is a super flirt. And she doesn't exactly wear the company uniform," Rodrigo said.

"Or if she does, that polo is two sizes too small," Mayde chimed in, toasting her margarita to Rodrigo's.

"Right. And she's so nice and so sweet, and she's all, Have you been working out? Your arms feel amazing! And maybe if a hand wanders to her butt, she doesn't mind. All clients get a nice, big hug," Rodrigo finished.

"And everyone is happy. They get a treatment and feel better. They feel seen. Most of these clients do really need the treatments, they're a mess, but they need the company just as much. It's almost boring to me when they just lay there and take the treatment," Lexi said.

"Because that tip ain't gonna be there," Rodrigo said.

"You should talk. There's a reason why all the rich housewives love Rod," Lexi accused. "Go on, tell Cori your deal."

"Catty much, bitch?" he replied, with a smile that belied his words.

"Rodrigo here gives his clients exactly what they need. When he's done, those women are left smiling ear to ear and needing a nap," Mayde said. "He is always fully booked. They call and ask for him by name, but there's a waiting list."

"You're just jealous," Rodrigo replied.

"Damn right. I wish I didn't have to work so hard. Your massages are crap, and you know it. You just have the magic hands where it counts," Mayde said.

"They really are magic," Serenity added. "Rod's treated me and it was heaven. You should see if he can squeeze you in, Cori."

"You don't need to go volunteering me, woman. No offense, Cori."

Cori laughed. "None taken, and no help needed. I'm good. So, you, uh, finish your clients?"

"I ain't fucking no one. Let's make that clear. It's not my thing, in case you hadn't guessed. But I don't need to be into vag to know how to handle one." He held up a hand and did a complicated maneuver with his fingers. "It's all in the touch, baby."

"For sure," Cori agreed. Everyone laughed, and she appreciated the moment of levity.

Cori didn't like to stereotype, but it was obvious Rodrigo was gay. He was a handsome, dark-skinned Dominican in his thirties, extremely fit and even more handsome. He wasn't feminine, but he just had that way about him that told Cori he didn't play for her team.

"So, who's giving out extras? Is it common here?" Cori asked, trying to sort all the new information in her head. She saw her job in a new light. Dylan owed Baines an apology for thinking her job was just a front for prostitution.

"No, not everyone does it. Lexi doesn't, not really," Mayde said.

"I don't," Lexi insisted. "I'm very nice, but I don't get anyone off. Sometimes, if they're very nice to me I'll stick around while they take care of themselves, but that's it."

“But yeah, some of the girls do things, to varying degrees. I guess it’s up to the individual conscience. Everyone draws their line in their own place,” Mayde said.

“But we are a legit company, right? It’s not a front for an escort service?” Cori asked.

“We’re legitimate,” Serenity answered. “And Janine has fired girls when she found out they were giving extras. Everyone just stays in their own lane. I don’t ask what you’re doing if you don’t ask what I’m doing. But we are helping people, Cori. I guess I can’t speak for everyone, but I’m doing legitimate shiatzu and reiki and deep tissue, if that’s what people want. I’m trained and I take myself seriously.”

“Me too. I know the stereotypes, but I did not become a massage therapist to give hand jobs. I know I can really help people,” Cori insisted.

“Everything I do helps people too,” Mayde said with a wink.

“You too?” Cori didn’t know why she was surprised after everything else she’d learned.

“I provide extra services for a very select clientele. I screen very carefully.”

Rodrigo almost snorted his margarita out. “That means they need to be willing to pay and she needs to be into them. Sister’s not doing just anyone.”

Mayde made a face at him. “I’m not a whore. Yeah, I only do things if I’m into it. If someone wants to give me a gift for that I won’t argue.”

“Wow, I can’t believe all this. I would never have guessed. Elemental Bodywork seems so normal, so boring. When I think about happy endings, I think about those seedy Asian massage parlors that always have their shades drawn. Janine doesn’t seem like a madam. Do you really think she doesn’t know? How can she not know?”

Cori was reeling. She thought about quitting. She knew she had to quit. How could she work at Elemental Bodywork knowing what she knew? Even if she wasn’t involved in anything illicit, wouldn’t she be tainted by association if it ever came out? Cori looked at the other therapists and just couldn’t see any of them doing that. They all seemed so normal. It was like finding out all your neighbors were swingers, and you were the only couple left out. Okay, that would be worse, she thought. Cori didn’t want to be a swinger, but she would be offended if she was left out. She was hot enough for her neighbors to want to fuck her. Cori had caught the husbands looking.

That wasn't the point. The point was she worked with a bunch of prostitutes. Prostitutes might be strong, but Cori didn't know what else to call them.

"I think Janine doesn't know what she chooses not to know," Lexi said. I had to stop in the office once after an appointment and she gave me shit about how I was dressed. She warned me that I better not be giving out favors, but she never followed up."

Janine did tell Cori that she wasn't naïve, she knew things went on. Was it a tacit admission that her girls were turning tricks? Cori had to stop thinking in those terms. She liked these people. They weren't at all what she pictured when she thought about prostitutes. And who was she to judge? Cori wasn't exactly the virginal type back when she was single, holding out to give herself to Prince Charming. She'd never been above hooking up if she thought a boy was cute. Back in high school, she'd probably been with just about every guy in her friend group at some point on those nights when they were drinking around a bonfire in the woods. Would it have been worse if a guy had slipped her a twenty after they went off into the dark for a few minutes?

"Hey, we need another round of margaritas," Mayde called out to the bartender, whipping her hand around in a circular motion. "And add another for this one. You look like you need something stronger, Cori."

Serenity put her hand on Cori's and smiled. "I hope you're not going to quit now. I love your energy. You can do some really good work here, and you don't have to do anything you don't want to. There's no peer pressure here."

"But if you ever want to make the real money, keep in mind the option is out there," Mayde added.

Cori noshed on a piece of the quesadilla. She needed something in her stomach if she was going to drink her coming margarita. And she was going to drink it. Something harder than beer was in order if she was going to process everything she'd learned.

"I'll keep that in mind, but I don't see it happening," Cori insisted.

"That's enough about us. Tell us all about you, hon," Rodrigo said.

Cori laughed. "I am not nearly as interesting as you guys. I promise. I've been a stay-at-home mom for the last sixteen years. Before that, I worked in the corporate world. I couldn't imagine trying to restart that career after so long, and honestly, I couldn't imagine going back to working in an office. I have a friend who's a massage therapist and she loves what she does. We talked a lot, and I think it's a good fit for me."

"How do you feel about getting back out there and working?" Serenity asked.

"It's weird, in a way. I feel like there's not enough time to get everything done now. I like to have things a certain way and I made sure things stayed that way before. But now, I just can't keep up. Sometimes it feels like it was a mistake. I do love getting out of the house and having another purpose, though. I love my family, and I love my life, but now I realize something was missing."

"I get it," Mayde said. "I love my kids, but I do not want to be home taking care of them all the time. If I didn't get out and do something for me, I'd lose my mind. I admire you, Cori. I could not have done what you did for so long."

"Yes, the women who put their families first are the real heroes," Serenity said, nodding.

"I'm staying home when I have kids. I know I don't want to have to work and then come home and take care of everything. My man better be ready to hold up his end," Lexi said. "How is your husband with all this?"

"Dylan's been great. Super supportive. It's been as huge an adjustment for him as for anyone. He's really stepped up. I'm lucky to have him."

"Good for you. Mine was a bum, which is why I kicked him to the curb," Mayde said.

The bartender brought their new drinks and distributed them. Mayde insisted on a toast, and they all hoisted their giant glasses.

"To Cori. May you have a bright future with us, whatever you decide that future is," Mayde announced.

Cori drank deeply from the handheld pool of margarita. The drink was strong, and she winced. She wondered what future she wanted. Could she stay with Elemental Bodywork and stay the person she wanted to be?

Chapter Four

Dylan was more than a little annoyed when Cori came strolling in close to 8:00 pm. He was used to her coming home well into the evening, but she'd said she would be home early that day. She only had two appointments and they were both in the morning. Cori texted to say she was stopping to have a drink with her coworkers after the staff meeting and that she'd be home right afterward. Dylan expected that to take an hour, tops. He expected her at 7:00 at the latest. Cori was supposed to take care of dinner, but Dylan had improvised and thrown some burgers on the grill. Luckily it was a warm fall, and he didn't freeze his ass off out there—not that the forties would have slowed him down. Dylan was one of those guys who'd be standing out there in boots and a parka at his grill in the snow.

"I'm sorry I'm so late. I completely lost track of time," Cori said, putting her bag down on the kitchen table.

Dylan made a show of checking his watch, even though there were clocks on the microwave and oven right in front of him. "I thought you were just stopping for a beer."

Cori gave him that goofy, innocent smile he'd fallen for so long ago. She had one of those little overbites that made women irresistible to him. Between that and her slate-blue eyes and smooth, alabaster skin, Dylan had been a goner the moment they met.

"One beer turned into a couple of margaritas, and then I had to wait long enough that I felt sober enough to drive home. You don't hate me, do you?"

Dylan began thawing when she crossed the kitchen and slipped her arms around him. Her eyes widened to emphasize her innocence, but then that smile turned from goofy to naughty.

“Hate’s a strong word,” he replied, holding her close.

“I bet I can think of a way to make it up to you. Where are the kids?”

“Grace is working, but she’ll be home soon. Jack is up in his room, probably not doing his homework.”

“He’s not going to come down and interrupt us then,” she said, leaning in to nibble at his neck. The move gave Dylan those familiar goosebumps.

“But we don’t know that he won’t. And Grace could be home any minute,” Dylan protested, even though his root was already thickening. He had to fight to think clearly with Cori nibbling his neck. She added to the growing fire inside him by reaching down to rub him through his sweatpants.”

“Then you really should be quick.”

“You know this isn’t a good idea.”

“Maybe that’s the reason I want to do it, babe. You want it too. I can feel it.” she said.

Cori pulled him down and thrust her tongue into his mouth. Dylan was annoyed with her and didn’t want to give in for that reason. Also, it was risky. He didn’t fancy being caught by the kids balls deep in Cori.

This seemed to be her thing lately, starting things up at random times, in random places around the house. Or maybe it had always been her thing. Cori was always ready to go, and she seemed to like the danger of getting caught. There’d been a long hiatus from that when the kids were younger and the chances of getting caught were greater, but now that Jack and Grace were older and into doing their own thing, Dylan and Cori were mostly left to their own devices and she had gone back to her old ways. Dylan wasn’t there. Maybe he’d become a stick in the mud in his middle age, but the thought of his teenagers walking in on them doing it was horrifying. He could only imagine if he’d ever done the same thing with his parents. Besides, they had a bedroom with a nice comfy bed and a door that locked. Dylan liked sex in bed, where he could flop over gasping like a caught fish when he was done.

All of that warred with the fact that Cori was hot and grabbing his dick and kissing his neck, and he did want her. Besides, the last time he’d put her off she’d been pissed. One night recently they’d been watching TV in the family room and Cori had had a few glasses of wine and deposited herself on his lap. She was all over him the way she could be when she was drunk. Both kids were home, and it wasn’t that late. Jack could come down for a snack at any time. Cori began pulling her shirt off and he stopped her. She didn't care if they were caught and tried again. Dylan held his ground and saw her anger bloom. He suggested they move it up to the bedroom, but it was too late. Cori said he'd ruined it. Dylan paid for that. She made him chase her for weeks before she finally gave it up again. He wasn't going to make that mistake again.

Cori slipped away from him and bent over that same kitchen island, resting her elbows on the top and wiggling her ass at him. she wore khaki pants, not leggings, but they still looked like they'd been painted on.

"Are you really going to turn me down...again?" she asked.

Dylan frantically pulled at her khakis, but they didn't budge until Cori unsnapped them and pushed them past her narrow waist. He hauled them down and her skimpy, striped cotton panties came down with them. She did own some sexy lingerie, but she rarely wore it. Dylan had always been more of a get-her-naked-now kind of guy than one to savor fancy underwear. He dropped his sweatpants and pulled her butt back to make it stick out higher. His prick was still hardening, but he was close enough. He smoothed his fingers over her puffy lips, sliding a finger between them and was surprised to find his wife already quite damp. Cori had never been one who required a ton of foreplay. Her sex drive was as high as his—maybe higher—but didn't expect her to be so wet from just a kiss. Something already had her in the mood. Dylan suspiciously wondered if there'd been a hot guy at the bar. His suspicions didn't slow him down. He hunched and slipped inside Cori.

Her breath caught and she exhaled a shivery moan when he sheathed himself in her. Dylan gasped when her muscles rippled around him. Cori had incredible control over her body. She was also the most flexible woman he'd ever known. Sex with his wife had spoiled Dylan for all other women. Even when it was routine—as it could be after so many years of marriage—it was still fantastic. He didn't hold back. He began pounding away, taking her with short, powerful thrusts.

Cori softly moaned yeah yeah yeah and gripped the countertop tightly. Dylan kept a hand on her hip as he leaned over her back and groped her through her polo. She wore a smooth, padded bra underneath and he couldn't feel much of her small breast underneath it, but he groped her anyway and imagined he could. He panted and grunted, working up a quick sweat. Dylan wasn't typically a minute man, but taking Cori so suddenly like that, combined with knowing she came home so horny, had his balls tightening before he knew it. He gritted his teeth and tried to hold back. Cori was close too, he could tell by her moans and the way she pushed back at him. But before either of them could finish, Dylan saw the flash of light through the side window facing the driveway. Headlights. Grace was home.

“Fuck,” he groaned, pulling out of Cori and scrambling to pull his sweatpants up over his slimy erection.

Cori kept moving her hips for a second as if she didn’t realize he’d uncoupled from her. If Dylan knew her, Cori’s eyes were probably squeezed shut, as they always were when she was about to come.

“Grace is home!” he hissed.

“Shit,” she cursed, pulling at her khakis, which were down around her knees.

Grace came through the backdoor just as her mother was snapping her khakis. Luckily, Cori kept her back to the door. Grace glanced suspiciously from one parent to the other, as if she could sense she’d interrupted something, but she was a very polite, well-mannered girl. Jack was their handful. Grace was clever but bookish and responsible. She was much like her mother, without the wild streak.

“Everything okay, you guys?” Grace asked.

“Sure,” Dylan said, sounding winded, which betrayed his lie.

“Yeah, I just got home from work myself. I was going to grab a shower. How was work, honey?” Cori was in phenomenal shape, so besides a flush to her pale cheeks, she appeared normal.

“Same old, same old. Boring. But can I grab a shower first? I smell gross. All I can smell is garlic.”

“That’s a hazard of working in an Italian restaurant, Grace,” Dylan said.

“Sure, go on up,” Cori said.

“Thanks, Mom. You’re the best.”

Grace left them alone and Cori was right back in Dylan’s arms. He could see the frustration on her face. He hated leaving her hanging because he knew how she felt. His balls were aching.

Dylan wanted to say I told you so, but he was still rock hard and didn’t want to be left hanging. They could continue it later in the bedroom.

“She’s right. You are the best,” he said, kissing her.

“We’re totally finishing that later,” she replied.

“Oh, no doubt.”

The evening was winding down and Dylan wondered if they'd get back to what they'd started before Grace came home from work. He was tired, and since Cori was such an early riser, she was usually falling asleep by ten. Dylan went up to the bedroom first, did his nighttime routine, and settled into bed with his phone, going over his fantasy football team. He was asked for a trade he didn't want to complete, but he felt like a dick for saying no. The trade wouldn't make his team worse, but it would make the other guy more competitive, and Dylan didn't need that.

Cori passed through the bedroom and right into the master bath. He heard water running and things knocking around in there. About ten minutes later, she emerged and changed into a loose t-shirt and baggy sleep shorts. The old white t-shirt was soft as a kitten and so threadbare that it was translucent, even in their nightstand lamps' soft, orange light. Dylan saw the dark of her nipples when the t-shirt brushed against them. She settled onto the bed beside him, sitting crossed-legged, while leaning over to retrieve lotion from her nightstand.

"We never really got a chance to talk after I came home. Happy hour was interesting. I learned some fun new things about my coworkers."

"Oh yeah? Are they a weird bunch?"

"Well, people in the massage therapy space tend to be a little different. A lot of us are into Eastern Medicine and New Agey stuff."

"Right. And that's you too, so you can't think that's weird."

"There's actually a very hippyish girl there named Serenity. I love her. I'd say she's the most in line with what I expected. For some of the others, it does seem like it's just a job. Especially the people I was with earlier."

"Is that what was interesting? Are you disappointed they aren't quite what you expected?"

"Definitely not what I expected, but disappointed isn't quite the right word."

Dylan caught her hesitation and looked up from his phone. Cori looked uncertain, which was unusual for his wife. She was one of the most confident women he knew. She was never shy, warm to everyone who deserved it, but not afraid to call out an asshole when they deserved it.

"What is it?" he asked.

Cori considered it a moment longer before speaking, finally saying, “I learned that some of the other therapists at work go the extra mile for tips.”

“What do you mean?”

A beat later, Dylan felt silly for asking. Of course, he knew what she meant. There was only one thing she could mean, but it was just so fantastical to associate his wife with something like that. His brain refused to make the connection. It was like a caveman trying to understand a lightbulb. When the truth did click in, Dylan felt a strange quiver in his stomach, like Cori was confessing that she’d been doing that too.

“You’re saying...” Dylan added.

“Yeah, I’m saying exactly what you think. Believe me, I’m as shocked as you are. I picture all those people sitting around the room and I just can’t see them doing that. Even the people I got to know better at happy hour, like Mayde and Rodrigo. They’re so normal.”

“So, you work for a hooker service?”

“Hooker is a strong word, Dylan. These people aren’t hookers. They’re just, uh, providing services that aren’t on the menu.”

Dylan’s brain reeled. Cori was working at a place that sent people out to fuck clients. That made them hookers or call girls. He was unsure of the proper terminology. His brain made the next logical connection and that quiver in his stomach turned into a full-on tremor. He had a queer flutter in his chest.

“Were they recruiting you? Are you expected to...”

“No, no. It’s nothing like that. Are you okay, babe? You look a little pale. I haven’t done anything. No one’s asked me to do anything,” Cori said, patting his arm. “Not really. Janine did talk to me today about a special client, but she went out of her way to emphasize she wasn’t asking me to do anything illegal. She strongly suggested but didn’t ask. Elemental Bodywork is a legitimate business, not an escort service.”

“Janine wants you to, uh, take care of a client like the other girls?” Dylan asked.

“No, they’re doing it on their own, like a side hustle. It’s a don’t-ask-don’t-tell thing apparently. And it’s not just girls. Rodrigo does it too.”

“Gay guys order that?” Dylan was even more confused. He thought it was easy to get laid if you were gay. Why would they pay for it when they could just go on Grindr?

“Rodrigo is gay, but he takes care of ladies. I bet they feel safe with him touching them because he is gay.”

“He’s gay, but he fucks women for money?”

Cori laughed at his confusion. “Don’t be so heteronormative, Dylan. Rodrigo’s trained with his hands. We all are. And he’s only using his hands. Maybe that’s all anyone’s doing. I don’t know the details. It felt weird to ask for specifics. I hear he’s very good. One of the other girls, Serenity, has apparently tried him.”

“Jesus. What’s going on over there?”

Dylan tried to order it all in his mind. The therapists were pimping themselves out to clients for extra money, but it wasn’t part of the job and they’d be fired if they got caught. Apparently, they told Cori all about it, but they weren’t trying to recruit her. But then why tell her? Would there be pressure? It sounded like Janine was pressuring Cori to take on a special client, even though she wouldn’t say it. Dylan was confused and concerned about Cori’s position.

Dylan didn’t see his wife as the type to give in to peer pressure. He could never imagine Cori giving out hand jobs for cash, but it seemed strange for her to work there if she was the only one not doing it.

“Are you okay? Honestly, I thought you would just laugh it off. I kind of did. But I guess it’s a lot. Please don’t think I’m implying I want to do anything.”

“Would you? Could you? It sounds like it’s the thing there. The company really doesn’t know? It sounds like Janine came right out and admitted she knows what’s going on. She wants you to do it with this guy.”

“They think Janine must know but is looking the other way. I guess that makes sense. She wants to keep her clients happy and coming back, but she’s not a madam. Maybe she thinks deniability keeps her out of jail if someone gets caught.”

“And this client she told you about?”

“Hayes Caldwell. Some rich guy, probably a hedge fund douchebag,” Cori said, laughing. “I don’t know exactly what he wants, or Janine expects because she wouldn’t come out and say it. I’m more focused on what I do know, which is what the others told me.”

“What do you think? How did you react when they told you?”

“You know I don’t easily blush, but I bet I turned fifty shades of red. Once I got past the shock, I thought okay, it’s their business. If that works for them, that's great. I'm pretty open-minded. We both are, right? I'm not going to judge anyone for what they do with their body."

"So, you're not quitting?"

"You think I should quit my job?"

"I mean, with everything going on, do you want to work there?"

"I like the job and I like the people. What they're doing doesn't affect me. I told you, no one's pressuring me to do anything."

"I know, but..."

"But what, Dylan?"

"I don't know, Cori. It just feels weird."

"No one's asking you to do anything. Do you really think I should quit my job because of what other people are doing?"

"What about Janine and this Caldwell guy?"

"Don't you think I can handle myself? Do you think I'd let Janine pressure me into servicing a client?"

Dylan saw the fire in her eyes and knew he'd made a mistake. He didn't know that he was wrong, but Cori clearly did not agree with him. The whole thing made him uneasy, even if he couldn't put his finger on an exact objection. No one expected Cori to do anything. She had no intention to do anything. Cori was strong, but if she stayed would she be tempted? The others looked to be making good money.

"What's the money like?" he asked.

Cori looked confused. "You go from thinking I should quit to asking how the money is? Are you high, Dylan? Seriously, are you high?"

"No, I'm not high. I'm just processing. Like you said, it's a lot."

"Well, I don't know how the money is. I told you, I felt weird about asking specifics, like they would think I was interested in doing it too. I don't think Mayde would be doing it if the money wasn't worth it. And Lexi implied she's making bank. Why? Are you suggesting that if the price is right, I should do it?"

Cori smirked and Dylan felt the tension between them drain away. He was still tense. His chest felt tight and for some reason, he was very tense in his pants. Dylan didn't realize it was happening, but he was hard as a rock. It was so confusing. If he were a dog, his head would be cocked to the side.

"I don't know, Cor. We still have your school to pay off. You don't seem to have a problem with it, so if the price was right maybe it wouldn't be so bad."

“Like I said, I am highly trained. I’m very good with my hands. If it’s just tugging guys off, would it be so bad?”

Cori was broadly smiling, enjoying teasing him. She turned, tucking one leg under her butt as she leaned over and rubbed the front of his boxers. When she found him already hard, she grasped him. “I don’t think you hate this idea as much as you were pretending.”

“It’s, uh, it’s just from earlier,” he protested, knowing it sounded like a weak lie.

“You haven’t been walking around hard all night. I think you have a dirty secret. Do you have a fantasy you haven’t told me about?”

“Cori, ahh...”

Dylan closed his eyes and moaned because he couldn’t look at her with the thoughts running through his head. He hadn’t been harboring a secret fantasy. They weren’t that kind of couple. When one of them had a fantasy, they played with it. The Lynches weren’t an overly kinky couple, but they’d done their fair share of roleplaying over their nineteen years of marriage. Student (Cori) teacher (Dylan) had been a big one early on in their relationship. They liked sex in risky places when they first started dating in college. Dylan played cop once and handcuffed her, but he wasn’t authoritative enough to make it work. But they’d never played out a fantasy where Cori was any kind of sex worker. It had never been in his head. Now it was all Dylan could think about, just like the other day after Baines teased him about it. Cori softly teased his cock, tugging it and caressing the head, and he imagined her doing it to some stranger.

“You’re picturing it, aren’t you, babe? Me going into some client’s house, getting him all worked up with a massage, then telling him to turn over...”

“Cor...that’s...” Dylan licked his dry lips.

Cori released his cock and Dylan was ready to pounce on her, but when he opened his eyes, he found her reaching for her lotion tube. She squeezed a generous portion into her hand and returned it to his cock. She gripped him tighter, but her fist smoothly glided up and down his shaft. Dylan grunted and lifted off the bed, pushing at her hand. He felt helpless.

“Do I just use my oils and go into it, or do I strip first?”

Dylan stared at her, unsure what to say. His brain filled with dirtier and dirtier thoughts—thoughts too dirty to share with his wife. Cori couldn’t know he saw her doing more than using her hands. He managed to croak out, "Take off your top."

Cori threw her t-shirt aside and cupped her breasts. He loved her tits. They were small, but perky, and capped with tight, rouged nipples. They were pointed and swollen. Cori was just as aroused as he was. Dylan tried to reach for her, but she smacked his hand away.

"I don't think the clients get to touch," she said. "They only get to look. Do you like what you see?"

"Yeah," he gasped.

"They aren't too small? My husband says they're perfect, but I don't know." She massaged a breast while she jerked him, moaning when she rolled her own nipple.

"Uhn...they're perfect..."

"I guess I can tell you like them," she said, staring down at his cock.

"Uhn...Cor...Cori..."

"That's it, babe. You can do it for me. Just let go. I want you to let go for me. Come on, babe, let it go..."

Dylan closed his eyes again. In his head, Cori was cooing those words to some anonymous man, paying her to use her hands—and other things. He pictured his pretty wife bending over, sucking this guy into her mouth. Her pretty, plump, pink lips dragged up and down the thick shaft to a soundtrack of wet, sucking sounds. She was great with her hands, but she was even better with her mouth. Her full, soft lips were incredible—like they were made for sucking dick. She'd always insisted she liked doing it and so had a lot of practice. It was her go-to move back in those days she used to hook up with her friends in the woods, she'd told him. Dylan wished he had friends like Cori back in high school. But Cori was still talking, encouraging him to finish, and the words brought his mind back to her standing beside some guy laid out on her massage table in a well-lit living room. His topless wife stood there jerking the guy off, telling him to come, her little tits bouncing as she jerked the guy's cock. And it was a big one. Cori needed both hands to cover it.

"Come for me, babe," she whispered. "Do it, come for me."

Dylan shook and tensed before releasing a strangled cry. She rapidly jerked his shaft with one hand, while rubbing his head with the other. It was an amazing technique and he fleetingly questioned where she learned it. But then the cum was bubbling out of his balls and the intense surge of pleasure wiped out any thoughts. He cried out even louder and his seed fountained into the air, almost hitting Cori in the face before landing back on his thighs. Dylan had another couple of strong blasts before the rest of it oozed out onto her busy fist. She kept working his shaft until his body relaxed and he sighed. Euphoria flooded him, but as it receded Dylan became self-conscious.

“That got weird, didn’t it?” he said, trying to sound light.

Cori leaned over and kissed him. “I don’t think so. It was different, but it was kind of hot. We never went there before.”

Dylan chuckled. “Never thought of it before. You’re putting ideas into my head.”

“Nice to know we still have some new tricks after almost twenty-five years together.”

“Yeah. Go us.”

“You were really into it.”

“I wasn’t that into it. It just felt really good. You’re good with your hands, right? That was some move you had there. Did they teach you that in massage school?”

Cori laughed. “Yeah, hand jobs are an extra credit course. Playing with the head was my thing to get a guy to finish fast. I guess you don’t remember. I haven’t given you a hand job in years.”

“Yeah, right. No reason to, I guess.”

“I’d better get back in practice,” she said. When he didn’t respond, she added, “You know I’m kidding, right?”

“Yeah, I know. But what about you, Cori? I’m done, but you...”

“I don’t think that’s part of the deal. I take care of the client, wash up, and go home. I guess it’ll be on you to handle all that frustration I’ll have. Or I can just deal with it myself.”

“Not a chance!” he said, rolling on top of her.

Dylan kissed her hard and she grabbed his ass, pulling him into her. He wasn’t ready to get hard again so fast, but he wasn’t going to leave her hanging. He tugged down her shorts while he nibbled on her neck. He moved lower, circling her nipples with his tongue. Cori hissed and pushed her tits at him. He kneaded them with both hands and flicked her nipples with his tongue. She cried out and twisted under him, the pleasure almost too intense. Playing with her tits the right way was the surest path into Cori’s pants. It always had been. Dylan sucked and nibbled her tits and had Cori panting and whimpering, reaching for his cock. But he was still only at half-mast, so he slid further down her body.

“Mmm, I like where this is going,” she moaned.

Cori’s mound had a light dusting of downy fuzz. She maintained herself down there but didn’t shave it smooth—except on his birthday. Dylan was down on his belly between her thighs, which he pushed wide apart. Her lips were dewy and inflamed. Cori enjoyed their little fantasy as much as he did. It made him wonder if she would really do it. Dylan couldn’t see it, but maybe... Cori had never been uptight with her body. Maybe if a client was a really hot guy... He pictured it as he dipped his tongue between her lips. He drove his tongue into her and kissed her there, slurping at her copious juices.

“Ohh...oh babe...yeah...”

His thumbs massaged her mound as he spread her open and his tongue flickered everywhere. Dylan imagined she was picturing it, servicing a client. Cori was so aroused she couldn’t help herself and started sucking. The guy, a mountain of a man with a huge cock, fisted her dirty blonde hair and forced Cori down on her. She choked but kept sucking. In their bedroom, she cried out loudly when he focused on her clit. Dylan was sure she was picturing it too, choking on some stud’s huge cock. He plunged two fingers into her pussy and sucked her clit.

“Ahh...babe...shit...ohh...babe...ahh fuck!” Cori cried.

Cori howled and locked her thighs around his head. She flooded and he licked it all up. She squished around his pistoning fingers and kept coming, thrashing under him. Dylan only stopped when she pushed him back, overwhelmed.

Dylan was fully hard by then and didn’t pause to think. He leaped between her legs and shoved himself inside her. Cori groaned and locked her legs around his waist. He pounded down into her, and she came up to meet every thrust. She painfully gripped his back and he frantically tried to kiss her, but he was huffing from the effort of throwing himself into her. Cori rippled around him, massaging his cock in her canal, but he held out because he’d just come in her hand. Dylan didn’t hold out long. He imagined her choking on that cock and the guy coming, flooding her mouth. His load spilled from her lips and then blasted onto her face when she pulled back. Cori kept her mouth open to try and catch it.

And then Dylan was coming again, burying himself inside Cori with a final, forceful thrust. She cried his name and her cunt locked around him and she was coming too. They both moaned and panted and clung to each other. It was the most frenzied sex they'd had in years. He stayed on top of her until she shoved him off. Dylan rolled out his back, a sweaty, gasping mess.

"Wow, that was something. You really got into that," she said, laughing.

"Hey, you were into it too."

Cori reached for his hand and clasped it. "It was crazy fun. It's hot to let your mind go to wild places sometimes. I'll have to thank the guys for putting in our heads."

"Don't you dare!" he said, afraid she just might.

"Yeah, I'll tell them we fucked like rabbits after playing at me being a rub-and-tug artist. Okay, babe. Next, I'll ask how I start doing it for real." She laughed hard.

"Might be worth it for the look on their faces."

"I'll bring it up at the next staff meeting."

They both laughed, but underneath, Dylan was uncomfortable. He'd never had such insane thoughts about his wife. He didn't know what it said about him as a man. Men weren't supposed to get off on their wives with other men. He knew it was a thing in porn, but he'd never watched that kind of porn. His tastes were more pedestrian.

Dylan turned and looked at his wife. She was flushed and smiling. Incandescently beautiful. Her tight body was incredible. She could make a fortune if she chose to give extras at work. Cori really wouldn't, would she? She seemed just as into that fantasy as he was, but Dylan knew he was just projecting thoughts into her head. He had to stop.

"What are you thinking about?" she asked.

"Just how beautiful you are and how lucky I am that you're all mine."

"You are lucky, aren't you?" she said, rolling into his arms and kissing him.

Chapter Five

Working for an out-call massage therapy service meant Cori sometimes had long drives between client appointments. All clients were supposed to be within an hour's radius of her home, but that wasn't a realistic estimate with traffic taken into account. She often listened to podcasts as she drove, but Cori was too mentally restless and instead turned to the New Wave music channel on satellite radio. Her old favorites usually kept Cori distracted, but today as she sat in traffic her mind kept going back to her job. Well, not her job, but the way her coworkers did it.

Cori did consider quitting after the happy hour conversation with her coworkers. She just didn't want to tell Dylan that. The way he'd posed the suggestion made it sound like she'd already done something wrong, or that she was at least guilty by association. Her contrarian nature made Cori reject the suggestion from her husband outright, but he did have a point. If somehow word ever got out about the masseuses of Elemental Bodyworks, Cori would be tainted just by working there, even if her hands were clean. She didn't see how that would happen unless someone chose to alert the police, but it was a possibility. Cori had a sudden, horrifying image of doing a perp walk on the local news with Mayde, Lexi, and Rodrigo, ducking her head to try and avoid being captured on camera. She hoped that at least her mug shot would be attractive. Cori had a nice smile. But that was all silly. No one was going to get caught and Elemental Bodyworks was not going to get raided.

Quitting wasn't a consideration anyway. Cori had taken a loan to pay for school and they couldn't afford the payments without her working.

She'd looked at a lot of places before deciding on Elemental Bodyworks. The chains were out of the question. They didn't pay great to start and they wore their therapists down with too many appointments and not enough rest time in between. Cori would be forced to work more often at the lower pay point, something she wasn't willing to do. There were other independent businesses she could work for, but a lot of them did seem sketchy. Her massage instructor warned all the students—especially the women—about all the businesses that were fronts for prostitution. The best options seemed to be to get into a high-end spa or go independent, but those good spa spots were difficult to get, and Cori didn't have a book of business to start out on her own. She wouldn't feel right pestering her friends to book appointments with her. She'd be just like one of those MLM housewives everyone avoided.

Work considerations weren't the only thing on her mind. Dylan's reaction to the news about her fellow therapists was the biggest surprise of all. Not his judgmental, she should quit reaction. Dylan was not one of those jealous, overly protective husbands—thank god—but that reaction to her working at an out-call massage parlor-type business was normal. She did question how much of it was really fear of her getting in trouble versus some twisted fear that she might do something with a client. No, the real surprise was Dylan's other reaction, the one in his shorts. There was no doubt that the news Cori worked with rub-and-tug artists turned him on. Maybe not in his head, but in his pants Dylan liked the idea Cori was working there.

Cori didn't think much about it at the time. She was pretty turned on too and her focus was on having fun and great sex. Sex was sex to her anyway. She'd never been one to overanalyze those things. If something felt good, do it. Cori thought some fetishes were out there, but she didn't engage in kink-shaming. She didn't think her husband had any strange fetishes, but Dylan's hard-on, followed by how much the impromptu fantasy she spun set him aflame, made Cori think. Dylan seemed turned on by the fantasy of her giving out extras at work, not just the revelation that her coworkers were doing it. Role-playing jerking off a client made her husband lose his mind. He was shaking and could hardly speak. Cori couldn't recall the last time she'd seen him like that, if she'd ever.

Dylan had been into it several years ago when Cori proved she still fit into her old Catholic school uniform—that had been a fun night. He came quickly and several times, but he wasn't trembling and tensed like that. And then last night Dylan pounced on her in a way he hadn't done in ages. Cori loved it when he went down, but Dylan rarely took the time after nineteen years of marriage. Usually, they just agreed they were down for sex and got to it. The whole thing had been really hot, but she felt weird about why. Should it bother her that Dylan came so hard thinking about her jerking off a client? She tried to tell herself it didn't mean anything. It was just the situation, and he came because she was jerking him off and whispering dirty things to him, but the questions lingered. Did the situation plant an idea in his head, or had Dylan always harbored a fantasy about her being with other men?

Cori wasn't naïve. She knew that was a thing. They knew a couple—the husband was one of her oldest friends—who were swingers. She didn't judge, as long as Seth and Andi didn't try to recruit them. She could sort of understand the swinging thing. She got the logic behind it, if a couple felt like they needed to spice things up after years together. It wasn't for her, but she understood it. Cori didn't think she could ever do that. She was far too jealous to see Dylan with someone else. Seth had been open about how much he enjoyed watching Andi when they were with another couple. But that wasn't quite the same as Dylan being turned on by Cori going out and jerking off her clients. She scoured her memory and tried to think of any sign her husband might be into watching her with other men or even thinking about it. Dylan liked it on those rare occasions when she got all dolled up to go out and wore something short and tight, but didn't most guys? That wasn't a sign of a hidden kink. It wasn't weird that he liked other men thinking his wife was hot.

It wasn't really a thing, she decided. Mostly because it couldn't be. It just didn't make sense. Their crazy night was just a one-off, a product of surprise and the taboo of Cori doing something so crazy. It wasn't something anyone wanted to happen. She didn't even analyze how turned on she was while spinning the fantasy for Dylan. She was too focused on him for that. But Cori did wonder how her coworkers' significant others felt about their side work, or if they even knew.

The phone rang and she looked at the display to see that Mayde was calling. It was as if Cori had summoned her with her thoughts. She was so confused by the call—she forgot they'd exchanged numbers at the meeting—that Cori had to jam on the brakes to avoid rear-ending the giant SUV in front of her at the light. The close encounter left her heart pounding and she pulled off onto the shoulder until she calmed down. Cori tapped the answer button on her steering wheel.

“Hey Mayde,” Cori answered.

“Just wanted to check in with you, girl. Wanted to make sure you didn’t call Janine and quit as soon as you walked out of El Camino last night,” Mayde said, sounding chipper as usual.

“Of course not. Why would I do that?”

“You had a whole deer-in-the-headlights thing going. We obviously freaked you out.”

Cori hated thinking she came off as prudish or judging. That wasn’t her at all. She’d never been the person morally tsk-tsking in the corner. “I wasn’t freaked out. That’s not me.”

“Really? It’s okay, Cori. I get it.”

“I was surprised. Maybe shocked, but I wouldn’t say freaked out.”

“Okay, not freaked out, but are you okay with it all? No offense, but based on what I know about you, it’s all out there for you.”

“That’s for sure. I’m good with it, I think. It’s not like I have to do anything, and I guess what you guys do isn’t any of my business.”

Mayde laughed. “That’s a very safe, careful answer. You don’t have any feelings besides I’m cool with it? I don’t believe that.”

Cori felt like she was being pushed, but she liked Mayde, and maybe pushing was what she needed. She had a lot on her mind, and these weren’t things she was going to talk to her friends about. There were so many questions, but Cori couldn’t think of a diplomatic way to ask them.

“I guess I am intrigued.” Cori could hear the blushing in her voice. She was intrigued. She wanted more information, but she didn’t want to come off like she was interested in participating with her coworkers.

“You have questions. That’s natural. Fire away, I’m between appointments.”

“Are you sure? I don’t wanna pressure you or interrogate you.”

“Just ask your damn questions, girl.” Mayde laughed.

“So, you do it?”

“Yes, Cori, I do it. Not for everyone. Most of my clients are just straight appointments like yours, although I do less of those than I used to because I don’t need the money from them. It works out pretty well. You know this job can be rough on you physically, so being able to take the extra downtime is nice.”

“How good is the money?” Cori couldn’t lie. Working less sounded good—not that she was tempted to jerk off men for money.

“If you get the right client, like Mr. Caldwell, it can be very, very good, girl. I don’t quite have a Mr. Caldwell, but I have some very appreciative clients. Yeah, I love sex, but I wouldn’t be doing it just for the kicks.”

“And you’re good with that? Shit, sorry, that sounded judgmental. I didn’t mean it like that.”

“It’s a natural question. I’m not offended. And yeah, I guess I’m good with it. Like I said, I love sex, and no one is making me do anything. Isn’t the dream doing something you like for money? Don’t you like sex?”

Cori did like sex. She’d always had a high revving sex drive and it had only seemed to rev higher with age. She’d jump Dylan every day if he was up for it. He wasn’t, but that wasn’t a complaint. Their sex life was satisfying, but Dylan just didn’t need it as much as she did. Sometimes he was too tired or distracted when Cori tried to start up with him. It could be frustrating, and she tried not to take it personally. She felt a tickle in her sweet spot thinking about having sex on demand, but she’d never even considered doing it for money. That ran counter to every bit of her Irish Catholic upbringing.

“Yes, I like sex. Sex is great. Who doesn’t like sex?”

“And who doesn’t like money? It just makes sense to me to combine the two.”

“I don’t know if it’s always that simple.”

“But it can be if you want it to be.”

“Are you married? That makes it a lot less simple.”

“I have a man. We have a son. We don’t live together, but it’s a real thing.”

“And he’s good with it?”

“I hid it from him for a while. The first time it happened, I didn’t know how to tell him. And when I finally did, he lost his shit. I mean, he ghosted me for weeks. But he couldn’t disappear forever because we have to parent Isaiah together. When he calmed down, we talked. We got through it. My man is nothing if not practical. When I laid it out for him, and he saw the money, he got it. I was extra nice to him and let his ego heal. Now, he’s into it.”

“Really? Into it how?”

“He’s never told me, and I wouldn’t hurt him and make him confess anything, but a girl can tell. He’s all jazzed up when I tell him about my special appointments. I know he likes it that his woman is hot enough that guys will pay for it. He just needed time to wrap his head around it.”

“I don’t think most men would be so understanding. He’s a keeper.”

“Yeah, maybe. He’s an asshole too, sometimes, but I love him. And I think the word you meant to say was freaky, not understanding. I don’t know, girl, but I think most guys are a lot freakier than they want to admit. They just need to feel safe to express it.”

Cori’s mind went right to Dylan shaking and moaning and coming so hard last night. Was he freakier than she thought and trying to open up? It was hard to see. Nothing about her husband screamed freaky. He didn’t have a pair of leather chaps at the back of his closet or jerk off to hentai—not that she knew about. Dylan had always been a meat and potatoes guy when it came to sex. She certainly didn’t see him excited about having a wife men wanted to pay for sex.

“I don’t think my husband is that freaky or understanding.”

“I get it, Cori. Way more vanilla people out there than freaks. Or way more closet freaks, anyway.”

She didn’t like being considered vanilla, even if it was just by association with her husband. Cori hadn’t done anything too freaky, but she liked to think that she would if the opportunity arose.

“It sounds like you didn’t go into this planning to, uh, give extras. I don’t even know the right way to refer to it.”

“You can call it whatever you want, girl. It doesn’t change what it is. No, that wasn’t the plan. I was like you, just looking for a good paycheck where I didn’t have to sit behind a desk. I worked in a nursing home before, so I knew I got along with people and wasn’t squeamish about touching them. I did my research and being a massage therapist seemed like a good path. I was just like you when I started. Well, maybe not just like you.”

“How did it go from that to what you’re doing now?” Cori asked.

“You know how men are. Most of my early clients were women, and they were all cool, although I didn’t like the way they watched me when I was in their houses like I was going to steal something if they left me alone for a second. Janine started mixing guys in. Most were cool, but you’d get the handsy ones. I did what we all do. And then I had one who just asked me how much?”

“He just asked you?”

“Yeah, like I was a ho on a street corner. I said, excuse me, but he just started negotiating. He thought a hand job was the point of the appointment.”

“Jesus, Mayde. And you did it?”

“No, I’m not a ho.” Mayde laughed. “At least, I wasn’t then. He got up to a hundred and I seriously considered it. I knew I could whack that thing off in a second and get my money. Use a little hand sanitizer and it’s like it never happened. But I was still like you. I didn’t like what that said about me. I told him to fuck off and reported him to Janine. He was banned. But I kept thinking about it, and he wasn’t the last guy to try it. I guess I finally convinced myself it was just another part of the massage. And daycare is expensive, girl. Once I decided jerking guys off didn’t make me some fallen woman, it was an easy leap to go further.”

“I get it. It totally makes sense. I just don’t know if I could.”

“And you don’t have to, girl. You do you. But for me, it’s mostly a win-win. It’s not always great, but most of the time I really do enjoy it. I know for some of the girls it’s just a job, and I wouldn’t do that.”

“And you’re getting a hundred bucks a hand job?”

Cori knew how her question sounded. Her tone suggested she was seriously considering it, but she wasn’t. She could never keep something like that from Dylan and he would never want her doing that—whatever happened between them last night. Cori hastened to remind herself it wasn’t just about her husband. She wasn’t looking to jerk off guys for money either. She didn’t consider Mayde cheap at all, but it would make her feel cheap. Cori Lynch could be called many things, but cheap and seedy weren’t on that list. She thought about the moms in the neighborhood she ran with and what they’d think. Marcy would go right to her sewing machine to stitch up a scarlet letter, while Becky would probably faint while crossing herself. No one would ever let Cori within fifty feet of their husband again. Dylan’s friends would wonder how he stayed married to such a slut. If only they knew... she thought. She was so lost in her head that she barely caught Mayde’s response.

“Eighty to a hundred. And it’s usually pretty quick. Not bad money for a couple minutes’ work. And most of them are quick, girl.”

"I have to admit, that doesn't sound so bad. I think about all the hand jobs I gave out for free back in the day. I could have been making bank."

"Sounds like you want in, Cori." Mayde laughed.

"I wouldn't say that, although a couple extra bucks here and there would be nice."

"And that's just the start. My premium clients pay way more than that."

"Premium clients?"

"Did you really think it was all rub-and-tugs?"

"Maybe? I hadn't thought about it before yesterday. I was just thinking about what's in the movies and on TV."

"That's all bullshit," Mayde said. "It's not like the movies."

"So, what are premium clients?"

"Are you allergic to the word fuck, girl?"

Cori laughed out loud. She was very comfortable with the word fuck. Too comfortable. She used it like punctuation when she was truly angry. "Okay Mayde, you're fucking men for money?"

"There you go, girl. Get real with me! Yeah, there's some fucking. There's some sucking. Those are the premium clients, and those are premium prices. And I have to be into it. I'm not fucking some half-limp sixty-year-old fucker. That's cool for some girls, but for me, the guy's got to have something I like, other than a nice bank account."

"Oh my god. I have to know everything," Cori blurted, crazy thoughts ricocheting through her brain.

"We need to meet for drinks, Cori. I have an appointment to get to. I've been sitting outside this house for almost ten minutes now."

"Which kind of appointment?"

"Meet up with me for drinks, and I'll tell you all about it."

"I have to go too," Cori replied, checking the clock on her dashboard. "But drinks sounds fun. Let's set it up."

Mayde broke the connection and Cori stared out the window at the traffic whizzing by. People went in and out of stores in the strip mall beside her. It was typical of her daily suburban existence. Life went on as usual, even as Mayde confessed details of selling her body. Any of those women Cori saw through the big front window of the nail salon would have been horrified. Cori should have been too. Nothing in her life had prepared her for that conversation. And yet, horror wasn't her reaction. Cori was bizarrely, undeniably intrigued.

Chapter Six

Dylan wasn't a big porn guy. He looked at it sometimes, just like any other married man, but he wasn't a regular. He just didn't feel the need. There were the women he liked to follow on Instagram, but that wasn't porn, so it didn't count. He wasn't proud of it and pretended he barely knew what Instagram was, but it was just harmless fun. A middle-aged married man window shopping is what he always told himself. Dylan didn't need porn because he had a wife who was just about always down to fuck—more often than he was. Sometimes he was embarrassed when Cori wanted it and he just wasn't in the mood, or too tired. A man was never supposed to turn down sex. Cori's extreme disappointment when he did reinforced that belief. The last time Dylan turned her down for sex he'd had to chase her for weeks before he got it again. So, he didn't have the crippling porn addiction some guys his age had. However, Dylan found himself clicking over to one of those porn tube sites on his laptop whenever he got a break that morning.

His office was in a corner of their semi-finished basement. Dylan provided IT support for a large local health system, but it was a work-from-home deal. He had the company-provided PC on the desk in front of him, where he could read trouble tickets and log into the system to try and resolve them, but he kept his personal laptop off to the side. Working in IT, he knew better than to do anything personal on the company setup. They didn't closely monitor workstations, except to make sure people logged in and out on time, but there was automated software monitoring mouse movement and keystrokes to make sure employees were doing something. The IT department could check things if there was a reason. And, of course, naughty content blockers were running on all company workstations. Dylan would never be stupid enough to look at porn or do online gambling on the work computer. But his own laptop was right there.

The searches started innocently enough that morning. Well, innocent by comparison with the videos he watched later. His first search was for happy ending massages. Most of the results were about Asian massage parlors, which seemed to be the vast majority of them. Dylan knew all about how a lot of women in those places were trafficked, which only added to the general sense of sleaziness. Dylan found there were websites that rated those places. He couldn't read many details without registering—which he was not going to do—but he was relieved he didn't find Elemental Bodyworks listed on any of them, although they were mostly concerned with in-call businesses.

The reviews he could read were fascinating. Men—who oddly called themselves hobbyists—discussed the women like they were rating any other products, like they were TVs or cars. Age, body type, enthusiasm—they were all judged. There was also the lingo to decipher. Bolt-ons were apparently breast implants. Cups were coming. A place that allowed two cups let you finish twice. And $ represented a hundred dollars. Dylan felt like a World War II code breaker as he decoded the websites. The men could be either quite brutal in their assessment of the women jerking them off or quite broadminded.

Dylan had to wonder how these men might rate Cori. Some men preferred a curvier woman—hence a preference for bolt-ons—would those men like his wife's slender, athletic body? He couldn't imagine a man not wanting to see Cori naked. They'd have to love her enthusiasm. She was very into sex, and the handjob she'd just given him was top-notch. Her oral skills were even better. Cori would surely earn five-star reviews. He had no doubt. Dylan was hard as steel pondering these truckers and other hobbyists raving about his wife's services.

The reviews also revealed a much wider range of services offered by massage parlors. Dylan had to assume the women of Elemental Bodywork offered the same. He'd always assumed it was just handjobs or blowjobs, but it seemed full service was common too. His gut knotted with new anxiety when he thought about Cori fucking clients—as if her blowing them had been okay. Somehow, he could see her giving out handjobs at the end of her treatments. Cori was just so easygoing about sex in general, and a handjob wasn't such a big deal. Even oral sex might fall into that wheelhouse. She had been pretty free with her mouth back in her hook-up days, she happily confessed. Cori had always been proud of how boys coveted her and equally proud of how she didn't leave them hanging like other girls. It was fantastical, but in Dylan's head those were lines his wife could potentially cross with clients—not realistically, but in his weird new headspace—but there was no way Cori would ever fuck some random man. Not for money. She may have laughingly referred to herself as a slut in the past, but never a whore.

Knowing that Cori could be something of a slut had been thrilling when Dylan first met her. He'd never known a girl quite like her. She was at turns a tomboy, bookishly smart, and utterly unpretentious. Cori was the shy, plain girl-next-door at first glance. But once she turned her attention to you, it was addictive. Beneath that conservative exterior was a charming, sexy, wild party girl. It was like a tiger lurking inside a housecat. When she batted those lush eyelashes and turned that warm smile on a guy, he was lost to her. Dylan was sure the reason his wife had numerous guy friends was that they'd all been caught in the guy zone—respectful enough to behave but hoping that one day they would get a shot. He'd never been jealous of that because he trusted Cori implicitly. He realized now that maybe he'd even liked it a little. Cori had all those guys who wanted her, and she'd chosen him.

Dylan's thoughts were a wild bouillabaisse of Cori's many facets—her slutty, drunken younger behavior contrasted with the adult, responsible-mom version of her. The steadfast loyal wife contrasted with a vision of her plump pink lips wrapped around a client's shaft after he slipped her an extra hundred. The only place he didn't allow his mind to go was Cori fucking anyone else. All of that led Dylan to search happy ending massage videos on a porn site.

The internet had no shortage of masseuse porn videos. Dylan entered his search term, and the list was endless, an infinite crawl of perversion. Many of the videos seemed similar from a quick glance at their thumbnails. The thumbnails were shots of a woman standing beside a massage table with a subject on it. The backgrounds were generic, usually a blank wall, but sometimes dressed up with some lights or maybe one of those rice paper room dividers to give the scene a proper massage parlor feel. Many of the women in the videos were Asian, while the men were not. But once he started clicking through videos, Dylan found they weren't all so similar after all. While some videos got right to the point, with the woman lotioning up to vigorously jerk off the guy on the massage table, others laid out a scene with the masseuse either coyly sneaking up to the act after being overcome with lust by the customer's impressive endowment—almost begging to be allowed to jerk off the client or blow him. In other videos, the masseuse was seduced or cajoled into the act by an aggressive client. He liked the first scenario better.

Dylan sought something specific. A lot of the Asian women came close to fitting the bill, as they were mostly slender with small tits and narrow hips. Their black hair didn't fit the bill, though. Some of them were blonde—badly bleached—but he wasn't looking for blondes. Cori was almost a blonde. Her light, honey-colored hair could be mistaken for blonde in the right light and in the summer, but she was decidedly browner than blonde. And, of course, his wife wasn't Asian. Dylan felt sleazy for trying to find a woman in a porn video who resembled his wife, but that was the itch he needed scratched. He took a couple detours with busty, raven-haired women. Cori was the sexiest woman on the planet in his eyes, of course, but he'd also always had a thing for a curvy woman with big tits and black hair. He'd never just flipped past a picture of Kim Kardashian. Cori was like an anti-Kardashian, but he loved the look of both. Dylan found a video of a Kim Kardashian look alike jerking off a Black guy—of course, it was a Black guy—until she couldn't resist any longer and stuffed as much of his meat in her mouth as she could choke on. The guy had the hugest cock Dylan had ever seen. The Kardashian masseuse ended up bent over the table and railed from behind, and he couldn't take his eyes off the way her tits swayed and bounced while she got hammered. Dylan had his cock out for that but couldn't finish. He did have work to do.

His lucky streak came when he ran across a performer called Jessy Deen. The girl was younger than Cori, but then most porn stars in the MILF category were caricatures with huge fake tits and big asses. Jessy Deen was also blonder than Cori, but she was tall and slender, build just like Dylan's wife. Best of all, she appeared to specialize in massage videos. Jessy Deen claimed to be an amateur, but Dylan knew enough about porn to doubt that. Her videos did look amateurish, though. He didn't see any light stands in the background or other obvious signs of professional filmmaking. He clicked through a few of her videos until he found one that stuck.

All of Jessy Deen's videos were massage-themed and shot in a realistic massage studio—as far as Dylan understood it. It was a small room with low lighting and neutral walls. Shelves behind her massage table held towels and lotion bottles and other massage accessories. Soft, new-agey music played in the background. They were presented as hidden camera videos and the men didn't know they were being recorded, which also convinced Dylan they weren't truly amateur. There had to be laws against posting that kind of thing on the internet. But her videos seemed real because Jessy Deen seemed so real. She even dressed like a normal woman giving a professional massage, much like Cori would dress for work, rather than being in lingerie or a bikini, like a lot of the other women in the online videos.

Dylan forced himself to be patient and watch the massage unfold, rather than fast-forwarding to the good part. Jessy Deen, dressed in a black tank top and beige leggings, leaned into the camera beside the massage table and held her finger to her lips, shushing her online audience. It was a cute gesture. A fit guy came into the room and stripped before laying down on the table. Jessy returned a few minutes later and began a normal, non-erotic massage. The small talk was minimal as she seemed focused on her task. As she worked his legs and thighs, her hands pushed deeper and deeper between his thighs. Dylan was sure Jessy was handling the guy's meat. She had to be rubbing his balls at a minimum. When Jessy's face was out of view, it was too easy to imagine it was Cori in that video, rubbing the guy's balls. Dylan stiffened. She didn't focus on the client's back for long. Jessy asked him to flip over and turned her back to him, which Dylan thought was cutely coy.

The man flipped and he placed a ridiculously tiny towel over his junk. The towel looked particularly small as it tried to cover the man's impressive equipment. It looked more like a washcloth in comparison. The low camera angle revealed the length of the guy's penis as it rested beneath the towel. He was semi-hard. Jessy gave a glance at the lump under the towel and smiled.

The video moved quickly from there. Jessy's pretend massage was laughable, and the tiny towel was knocked aside. She gasped in feigned surprise and went right for it. Her hands were already slick with oil and slipped up and down the thick meat in her hands. Meat was the only way to describe it. The cock was front and center on the camera and was thick and heavy, darker than the rest of its owner, almost like it was its own entity. Dylan had never paid so much attention to another man's cock before and felt weird about it, but he couldn't look away. He stared at the slender fingers wrapped around the growing cock and to him, they were Cori's fingers. The hands slipped up and down the length of the cock, holding it straight up. The guy moaned and breathed heavily, and Dylan realized he was breathing heavily too. He was also as hard as the man on his screen. He took his own cock out and stroked it.

The highlight came for Dylan when the guy started touching Jessy—or Cori to him. It was hot because it was so casual. First, he rubbed her cute little ass through the leggings, and she moved closer to the table. Jessy/Cori liked the touch. He pulled the leggings down past her ass, revealing a black thong, and she let him, still focused on her task. He squeezed her ass and Jessy/Cori moaned. Cori's voice was raspier, more mature than Jessy Deen's, but it was Cori that Dylan heard moan. It was his wife that Dylan fantasized was letting a client touch her. It hadn't occurred to him in his earlier fantasies that the client might touch Cori back, but he loved it.

Dylan had one hand on the edge of the desk and the other stroking his cock as he watched Jessy/Cori do her job. He never glanced up at the face of the girl on his screen. It maintained the illusion. Cori's lips were plumper than Jessy Deen's and had a tiny birthmark beside them. Cori had the sexiest lips. He hoped the girl in the video would use hers. His guts were slashed with a white-hot knife imagining his wife jerking off some guy while he groped her. He thought of Cori wanting that man to touch her, wanting his cock, and he thought he might throw up—but his cock surged. The wild, conflicting feelings were madness.

The client briefly grabbed Jessy/Cori's tits through the tank top before pulling it up to expose her. Of course, she was braless. He clumsily groped her, and Jessy/Cori's moans intensified, but she was in the home stretch with his cock, and he couldn't pull it together to touch her. She'd been sensually handling his meat to that point, but she kicked it into overdrive, holding the base and massaging his balls with one hand while the other rocketed up and down his shaft. The wet sounds of her lubed hand pumping overwhelmed the music in the background. Jessy/Cori would never get the chance to use her lips because the guy erupted. His thick, white cream popped up for a second before flowing down over Jessy/Cori's hand. She went slower then, but gripped him tighter, like she was trying to squeeze out every last drop. The guy groaned and she cooed encouragement, telling him to let it all go.

Dylan let out a loud, strangled moan and painted the underside of his desk. He didn't have the heavy load of the guy in the video, but it still felt like he'd drained his entire essence on his last pump. With a deep sigh, Dylan fell back in his chair.

The euphoria faded and he was disgusted with himself. He couldn't blame Baines for his twisted fantasy this time. He tried to blame his wife. Cori did way more to implant this in his head than Baines had. His friend was just kidding, crossing lines with his jokes like he always did. There was nothing funny about what Cori did last night. She was the one who brought up the idea of her jerking off a client. Dylan had just been looking to get laid. Cori had grabbed his cock and started talking about handling her client. But that wasn't fair. It was already in him. If it hadn't been, her words wouldn't have done anything.

Dylan frightfully thought Cori had seen it in him and that's why she'd brought it up. If she had, Cori must think he was a deviant, but then it had turned her on too. Dylan had been the focus, but Cori was every bit as charged up he was. She was soaked when he went down on her. He wasn't the only one with the crazy fantasy of Cori with another man. They hadn't discussed it, but she was turned on by the idea of giving extras at work too. It made him feel better that he wasn't the only deviant in their marriage, but not much. They should probably talk about it, but Dylan had no idea how to bring such a thing up to his wife. They were on uncharted ground.

His work computer chirped with a fresh trouble ticket and Dylan was saved from obsessing further, but it stayed right there at the back of his mind, ready to force itself forward the moment his guard dropped.

Chapter Seven

They didn't talk about her job after that, as if they'd mutually decided it was too hot of a topic. Dylan asked how her day was when she got home, and Cori replied that it was fine, but not a word was said about the extra services her coworkers offered or the implication that Cori could be offering them too. They also avoid discussing what they'd done in bed the night before. They avoided sex at all for a few days, both fearful it would come up, but they couldn't ditch sex for long.

The old days where Dylan didn't want it as much as Cori were gone. The sexual tension between them was palpable. It was like they were virginal teenagers, each waiting for the other to make a move. Dylan was the one to finally make a move, grabbing Cori as they passed each other in the hallway Saturday evening. Frenzied kissing and groping led to Cori dragging him into the bedroom and slamming the door. If the kids noticed, they didn't come running. Cori was too distracted to lock the door. It was quick and fevered, only their bottoms came off, and Dylan pressed his hand over her mouth when she got too loud. Cori found it difficult to breathe, but the aggression made her ache for her husband. It was over almost as soon as it started, but they both came—hard. She was left a sweaty, quivering, panting mess, and she loved it.

Hot sex didn't mean everything was right between them. All the things left unsaid created tension. Cori knew he was thinking about the possibilities of her job just as much as she was. Sexual tension hadn't been the only kind of tension between them. Dylan had always been reticent to discuss the things picking at him and Cori was the one to force the issue, but this time she avoided it. She had so many reasons for avoiding the discussion that she couldn't keep them all straight in her head.

Cori tried blaming most of it on Dylan because that was easier. She was still unsure how she felt about the way he had lost his mind imagining her jerking off a client. Cori wasn't upset, and she didn't judge him for it—not much—but she wondered if it had deeper meaning. Was it a fantasy created by circumstance that could be easily dismissed, or did it run deeper? Dylan could have thought about her with other men before and she had no idea about it. A bigger question lingered. Was it something Dylan actually wanted her to do? It was insane to contemplate, but Cori had to. She did some brief research on the internet, and it really was a thing—guys who liked their women to sleep with other men. Some men liked to watch, others just got off hearing about it. Cori didn't understand it at all but tried to keep an open mind. Whatever the reason, Dylan was looking at her differently. She could feel it. Cori just didn't know if it was because he was picturing her jerking off her clients and he loved it or because he wondered if she was really doing it and it was killing him.

Placing the blame on Dylan helped Cori avoid the thoughts constantly running through her head. They were always there, like the news crawl at the bottom of the screen on CNN. She'd met up with Mayde and Rodrigo for drinks and it did anything but settle her thoughts about her job. Hearing their stories and about how much money they earned made a big impression on Cori. She insisted to herself that she'd never do it, that it was an impossibility, but how long she could stick to that if it was constantly in her head?

Rodrigo's stories were entertaining but didn't touch Cori the way Mayde's did. He talked about the doctor's wife who hadn't screwed her husband in eight years because she just wasn't interested in sex anymore but screamed and squirted when Rodrigo made her come. He said he thought she'd shatter the windows. There was the CFO who tipped him better when he got her off faster. Time was money, she insisted. Rodrigo came to her office and didn't even have to set up his table most of the time. Sometimes he knelt in front of her chair while she hiked up her skirt and stayed on a conference call, keeping quiet through her orgasm while her toes curled in her $900 pumps. And there were the women who wanted more than Rodrigo's hands, even though he had no interest in that from them. Those clients didn't last. They weren't worth the hassle.

Mayde's stories touched Cori deep in an uncomfortable place. Cori found herself relating to her new friend—jealous even—and didn't like it.

Mayde talked about a client she used to see who was in town on a six-month contract and had an expensive rented condo with incredible views of the city. He claimed he needed treatments because of an old rotator cuff injury, but at the end of his third weekly appointment, he made clear he expected extra services if Mayde was going to continue treating him. Mayde said she appreciated his bluntness, and his confidence was sexy. He didn't want to offend her if she didn't offer those services, but he had to know. His confidence wasn't the only sexy thing about him. The client was still built like the wide receiver he'd been in college and Mayde told the table she would have happily fucked him for free—not that she told him that. Their sessions lasted hours and sometimes Mayde had to make herself leave. Their hottest encounters were out on his deck, overlooking the city, with the noise of the traffic and hustle-bustle below floating up to them. Knowing that people in nearby buildings could see them only made it hotter. Mayde loved that she wasn't hiding what she was doing. She asked Cori if she could relate.

Cori related all too well. Being caught screwing wasn't something that ever bothered her. Just the opposite. The risk of being caught, of being overheard or seen, was like a shot of sexual adrenaline to Cori and always had been. When she went off in the woods with a boy on those nights when they drank around the bonfire, everyone knew what they were going off to do. She told herself back then that she didn't care that her friends knew she was going off into the woods to give a blowjob or a hand job, or more if the boy was really cute. But it wasn't that. Cori wasn't indifferent. She liked that her friends knew. When she loudly came, she liked knowing they overheard her. And those few times when one of the guys sneaked through the heavy brush to spy on her, Cori felt the tingle all the way down to her toes when she sensed the eyes on her. A couple of times she locked eyes with a boy named Tom, who loved to watch her. He wanted Cori but never worked up the nerve to say more than hi to her. He watched as a rangy kid called Murph took her up against a tree. Cori came hard that night and smiled while she stared at Tom over Murph's shoulder.

Mayde had other stories, some hot, most of them funny or awkward. It was evident how much she enjoyed her work. Mayde wasn't the hard, bitter working girl of the movies. She insisted it made her feel empowered and that made all sex better, whether it was with a client or with her man. Cori could see it. Mayde had a power over her sexuality that a lot of women never felt.

Cori had always been confident in her sexuality but could see how doing what Mayde did—if she did it right—could take that to the next level. Cori couldn't help thinking about the thrill of touching someone for the first time, or of being touched. She remembered how intoxicating it was to know a man wanted her and getting to decide if he'd get her or not. And then there was the dark, dirty, illicit thrill of selling her body. It was so immoral it couldn't even be contemplated. She and Dylan had role played many fantasies over the years, but they'd never gone there—not until the other night. Selling sex for money wasn't something women like Cori ever contemplated, so she'd never confronted the dark, damp throb the thought caused deep in her darkest places. Cori avoided confronting it now, but it became more difficult every day.

And then there was the money. Rodrigo was shier about his earnings from his special services, but Mayde laid it all out there, and the money was insane. Cori couldn't believe she could earn a hundred bucks for jerking some guy off at the end of a massage—or much, much more if she went further. Her loans could be paid off in no time. They could do all the things to the house or finally take that family vacation to Ireland they'd been talking about for years. Screwing guys for a vacation should have horrified her—it would have horrified her friends—but then sex was just sex for Cori and always had been. It could be more—it was amazing when it was more—but just sex was pretty great too.

Cori suspected Mayde and Rodrigo were trying to recruit her, though she didn't know what they would get out of it. Maybe it was just the thrill of corrupting her. They kept insisting they were only sharing information with her, and Cori went along with that—just like she told them she could never see herself doing it, and they went along with that. Cori hoped she wasn't as transparent as she felt—that her friends couldn't see how much their stories sunk in with her. She prayed they couldn't see the interest they'd ignited.

Her coworkers weren't the only ones keeping the illicit side gig front of Cori's mind. Janine was pressing for a decision about Hayes Caldwell. The answer was an easy no—or it should have been. Cori was not going to sell her body to some rich, entitled jerkoff. But she still hadn't told Janine to forget it. Cori avoided analyzing the why as much as she avoided making the decision. It couldn't be put off forever.

Cori stopped by the Elemental Bodyworks office between appointments. The receptionist was out to lunch, but Janine was at her desk. She looked up from her computer when Cori tapped on the door.

"Corrine, what a nice surprise. Can I help you with something?"

"I hope I'm not interrupting. Do you have a minute?"

Janine stood and gestured to the chair across from her desk. She wore a tight, floral-print wrap dress that featured her feminine curves. Cori noted her hair and makeup were perfect as well. She looked like she was ready for a date, not a day of sitting alone in her office.

"I have an appointment with a client shortly, but I have a few minutes."

Cori sat, holding her purse protectively on her lap, like a barrier. "I wanted to tell you in person, I'm not comfortable taking on Mr. Caldwell as a client at this time. I appreciate the opportunity, but I think I need more experience before I tackle a client with such high expectations."

Janine frowned. Oddly, it made her even more beautiful. Janine Castroff was like one of those women you didn't mind scolding you. "This is disappointing, Corrine. Are you sure you won't reconsider? Hayes likes the new girls. He says it's easier to show them what he likes."

Cori smiled, biting back a quip. I'm sure he does. She was dying to know exactly what Hayes Caldwell liked, but Janine would never tell her, and Cori was not about to find out for herself. Her talks with Mayde and Rodrigo had her curious, but Cori was not about to take that leap.

"Be that as it may, I just don't think it's the right fit for me at this time. I hope you understand, Janine."

"Very well," Janine replied, with a theatrical sigh. "Perhaps I judged you wrong, Corrine. I will have to look at the staff and identify a different girl for Hayes."

"Have you considered Mayde? I've been talking to her. She's good, and she's very enthusiastic."

"Mayde is not his type," Janine coolly replied. "Hayes has very specific tastes, which is why I thought you'd be perfect for him. Be careful with Mayde, Corrine. She's an ambitious one. She could lead you to trouble."

Cori thought that was as close to an admission Janine knew what was going on as she would ever hear from her boss. Did Janine object to Mayde's activities, or just that she did them independently and Janine didn't benefit from them?

"I'll keep that in mind, thank you. And if I change my mind about Mr. Caldwell, I'll let you know."

"I think you'll regret passing up this opportunity, Corrine. If you change your mind, do let me know. Perhaps it won't be too late."

Cori left the office torn. She didn't know if she'd dodged a bullet or missed out on a wild adventure.

Chapter Eight

Dylan couldn't look at his wife without his head filling with dirty thoughts, like helium rushing into a balloon and it made him feel like he would burst. He didn't always picture her jerking off a stranger. Sometimes, he just looked at her ass in tight pants or caught her lush lips pursed, and he sprang to instant hardness. He struggled to keep his hands to himself, still afraid the kids would walk in on them if he grabbed Cori in the kitchen again or pushed her back on the couch.

It was a stark reminder of how things used to be when they first got together. He loved going out with Cori back then. They shared a love of nature and hiked almost every weekend, but Dylan would have been happy to keep Cori naked in his bed all weekend too. If he were being honest, it wasn't just when they first got together. They had a supercharged sex life for years, even after Grace was born. Dylan had always been proud that they weren't one of those couples who let their sex life die when their kids came. But sometime in the last few years, it had just dropped off without Dylan realizing it. It was only now that he couldn't look at Cori without having the filthiest of thoughts that he knew what they'd let slip away. He was happy they'd rediscovered it, even if the reason was unsettling.

They didn't discuss that reason. Dylan knew they were purposely avoiding it, which was fine with him. He didn't know how to tell Cori about his new, forbidden fantasies of her. There was no way to explain how he spent every day she was out on appointments contemplating that she might be crossing the line with her clients. The reality was that most of Cori's clients were women, but in his head, they were all men who wanted to fuck his wife and thought she was available for the right price. Watching Jessy Deen's videos fed that obsession. So, it was a relief that Cori wasn't interested in discussing that weird fantasy they'd shared that night. As always, Cori was content to just fuck, for as long as Dylan could go. One of the best things about his wife was her consistency. He could always depend on Cori to be the same—except she wasn't. Not quite.

Cori's legendary sex drive was next level. She'd never needed a ton of foreplay, but now she told Dylan to just put it in her. It was like she'd been simmering all day and came to a boil the moment Dylan touched her. It was impressive, even for her. He knew what was driving him, but there was no explanation for the change in her. No rational explanation. Dylan's newly-twisted mind was more than happy to fill in the blanks, even if those fantasy reasons were ridiculous. He'd been fantasizing all day that Cori was selling happy endings, so the logical leap was that handling all those cocks all day had her desperately craving one inside her. Dylan wanted to think that he was receiving the fringe benefits of his wife's side work. That wasn't possible, but it sure was fun to pretend it was.

Dylan wanted to ask what Cori was thinking as badly as he wanted to hide what was on his mind. He also wanted to ask her to repeat that happy ending role play they'd shared, but there was no way. He was already paranoid that she could see it in him every time she looked at him. Dylan wasn't going to confirm her fears that her husband had become some sick cuckold. He knew what a cuckold was, and he knew that if Cori went through with crossing those lines that's what he would be. At times, he thought that might not be so bad. Deep down, Dylan knew they couldn't stay at this stalemate, but he wasn't going to be the one to break it. Luckily, Cori could always be counted on to be direct—even if it took her longer than usual this time.

"Are you ready for bed?" Cori asked, standing in the doorway of the family room.

Dylan smiled and reached for the remote. That had become their code. They waited as long as they could for the kids to get settled into bed, but if that took too long, Cori would ask Dylan if he was tired or ready for bed. Blood surged to his manhood, and he groped for the remote on the couch beside him. His Netflix show could wait. He said he'd be right up.

Cori waited for him on the bed in a tight tank top and a thong. He was surprised she wasn't already naked. Her new routine had been to strip naked and lay under the sheet in wait for him. Her tight nipples were darts in the thin, snug fabric of her top. Dylan was so hard he painfully knocked into it as he turned and locked the bedroom door behind him. Cori patted the spot on the bed beside her. She had that I want to talk look, not the I need you inside me now look he'd been hoping for. But she was half-naked, which was promising.

"Remember how I had drinks with Mayde and Rodrigo after work the other day?"

"Yeah. It's good you're getting to know your coworkers better. You should do that more often."

"You really don't mind?"

"No, have fun. I know you've been working hard. I was honestly surprised you weren't too tired."

"I was beat," she admitted. "But you're not worried they're going to be a bad influence? You know what they do, right?"

"Yeah, I know. But I trust you, Cor. You know that."

Dylan sat on the bed beside her and noted Cori's rosy cheeks. He knew she'd had a couple of glasses of wine earlier, but he got now that she was tipsy. The rosy cheeks on her otherwise alabaster complexion were always a dead giveaway, but she also had that jolly lilt to her voice that always came when she was nicely lubricated.

"Good, that makes me happy," she replied, an odd tone underlying the words.

"Unless I shouldn't?" He tried not to sound suspicious.

"You can trust me, Dylan. Of course, you can trust me. I would never do anything behind your back."

"Right. But you look like there's something you need to tell me."

"No, nothing I need to tell you, but I thought you might be curious what else I learned about Mayde and Rodrigo and what they do."

He was curious but didn't want to seem eager. He didn't want Cori to know he was especially curious how she felt about it. "You mean..."

Cori gave a lilting laugh—her giddy, tipsy laugh. It was unusual for her to have that much to drink on a work night. It was like she was trying to work up her nerve, which was unlike Cori. "I mean happy endings, yes. It was kind of weird, like they were dying to tell me all about it. I don't know if I would be bragging if I was doing that."

"How would you be if you were selling happy endings, Cor? I think you should be proud if you were doing it."

"You think so?"

“I mean, your skills are top-notch. I’m sure you could command a nice piece of change.”

“I’ll keep that in mind—if I go into the hand job business.”

“Maybe they thought you were interested.”

“I wondered that, but why would they think that?”

“Maybe you were giving off a vibe.”

“Do I give off a—I don’t know—call girl vibe.”

I wish, Dylan thought. “They don’t know you as well as I do. If you were asking a lot of questions maybe. So, what did they tell you?”

Cori laughed again. “I heard all about Rodrigo’s deal. You’d be jealous. He gets paid for playing with women. Seems like the perfect gig.”

“But he doesn’t fuck them. You said he’s gay, right?”

“Well, yeah, but you wouldn’t want to get paid to get women off?”

“It could be cool, but frustrating if I never got mine. If I was doing that, I’d be ripping your clothes off the second I got home every night. You’d have to be waiting for me in the bedroom.”

“Or what?”

“I’d throw you down right on the dining room table.”

“Promises promises.”

Dylan was tempted to do it one night just to prove her wrong. He felt like she was calling him out for being too timid and he didn’t like it.

“But you could get laid if you wanted to,” she said, explaining how clients chased after Rodrigo for more.

“That I could get into if the women were hot. I might need Viagra if I didn’t get to pick and choose.”

“Like if they were J.Lo? You’re more like Mayde then. She only takes clients she likes, guys she’d probably fuck anyway if she were single.”

“Mayde does this and she’s married?” That had Dylan’s attention. Excitement surged through his prick.

“Not married, but she’s in a serious relationship. They have a kid together. Close enough.”

“And how does he feel about it?”

“She says he likes it. He gets off on it.”

Dylan had to look away. Cori paused like she was waiting for a response, and he didn’t want to give one—not an honest one. Hearing Mayde was in a committed relationship and doing that was a twist. As much as the fantasy of it with Cori turned him on, Dylan didn’t know how a relationship survived that. He might think he wanted Cori to do it when his dick was hard, but rationality returned after he rubbed one out. But Mayde and her man made it work, so it wasn't impossible. Cori still waited for him to say something.

"That arrangement works for them?" he asked.

"Apparently. I didn't probe too deeply. I didn't want to be nosey, but Mayde says he likes knowing she's hot enough that men will pay for it."

"I get that, I guess," he tentatively offered.

"Yeah?"

"You want to know other guys think your woman is hot unless you're some jealous asshole. I like it when I catch guys looking at your ass."

Cori smiled knowingly. "I know you do, babe. I like that you like it. It shows you still appreciate what you've got."

Dylan chuckled. "That's not a problem, Cor."

"Looks like you really appreciate it," she replied, staring at the lump in his boxer briefs.

"That's not a problem, is it?" His gaze swept her body, pausing on her pert tits and their swollen nipples. "I mean, look at you. You can't blame me."

"It's not a problem at all, babe."

Cori laid her hand on him, and Dylan groaned. Her fingers traced the outline of his shaft through the fabric. It wasn't the killer hand job she gave the other night, but it was a start.

"You know, happy endings—like hand jobs—aren't the only thing Mayde does."

"Oh? There's a menu?" His voice was strangled as she tightened her fingers on him.

"If she's into it, I think everything's on the table."

"Yeah?" he asked, trying to control his growing excitement.

"You'd really like Mayde, too. She's just your type—beautiful Hispanic girl, really round ass, huge boobs."

"She must do well."

"She says she does. I bet you'd empty the bank account for her. Maybe I'll get you a session for your birthday."

"That would make you the greatest wife ever," he said.

"In your dreams, babe."

"Mayde could be my hall pass. You have your hall pass."

Cori laughed. “Hall passes are supposed to be impossible, once-in-a-lifetime chances. I could pick up the phone and get you Mayde. I don’t think you have Ryan Reynolds on speed dial.”

“You’re the only woman for me anyway, Cor.”

“That’s because your dick is in my hand.”

They both laughed. It was partly true. Mayde did sound like his type—his other type. But Cori had been the only woman on his mind lately. Dylan was obsessed with his wife.

“Would you go that far?” he asked. “Like Mayde?”

“What do you mean? You ask like it’s a given I’d give hand jobs for money.”

Dylan panicked. He’d said it without thinking. It just came out as Cori playing with his dick blurred fantasy and reality. All the talk of happy endings had his mind in a strange place, a shadowy world of illicit fantasy where anything was possible.

“I didn’t mean that, Cori. I was just...” The words came out in a rush.

She squeezed his cock, almost painfully hard. The wet spot on the front of his underwear spread. His balls were tingling, but it confused him. Ordinarily, Dylan would throw Cori down on her back and rip her thong off, but tonight he kind of wanted her to just keep playing with his dick. He wanted a hand job.

“I’m just teasing you, babe. Chill out. Unless you were saying you think I’d give handys for cash.”

“I wasn’t. Of course, I wasn’t. I mean, uh, on a scale of one to ten, where a hand job’s a one and fucking is a ten, doing hand jobs isn’t that bad, I guess.”

“And blow jobs are a five?” Cori stared at him incredulously and Dylan wasn’t sure if she was still screwing with him or not. Sometimes it was hard to tell with her. But she was still rubbing his cock, so she couldn’t be too angry. It was a slow burn tease, not like she was trying to get him off, but she was toying with him.

“Uhm, I guess? What about butt stuff? If fucking’s a ten...”

Cori did laugh then, and he was off the hook. She was just screwing with him. “We didn’t get into that. I’ll ask her next time.”

Dylan reached for his wife and kissed her. Her tongue flicked at his in that teasing way that drove him crazy and bit his bottom lip. He was done with playing around, but Cori pushed him back and tugged on his underwear. He wiggled out of them as she half-turned so she was facing him. It made it easier for her to reach for his cock.

“Keep your hands to yourself. If I’m going to do this, I need to practice. I don’t want anyone demanding their money back.”

Dylan groaned as she held him again, more aggressively tugging his cock now. “No one’s asking for their money back, Cor. And aren’t they allowed to touch back sometimes?” He thought of Jessy Deen’s videos and how hot it was when the men touched her. The thought of some guy casually touching Cori like that—like he owned her—made his brain burn.

“I guess they can, but that’s extra.”

“Oh, they’d pay, Cor. I’ll pay.” He slid a hand over her ass, so firm from running, and she didn’t stop him. He loved her in a thong.

“You haven’t even asked how the money is, if it’s worth it. Unless that doesn’t matter and it’s about something else.”

Worry slithered through his gut. Cori was probing too close to the truth. They were right there, but he still wasn’t ready to confess the truth. “How is it? The money?”

“I can make at least a C-note doing just this. Pretty good, right?”

“Yeah, it’s really good, Cori,” he moaned.

“I meant the money, perv,” she teased.

“Let’s see how fast I can get this done. I need to maximize my profits.”

Cori twisted back and grabbed the lotion bottle from her nightstand. She always left it there, which made it awfully convenient it was there when she needed it. The pump squirted a big gob into her palm, which she rubbed between her hands, lubricating her palms. Her fingers wrapped around him again and it was magical. Dylan didn’t think she’d have to worry about him holding out for too long.

Dylan’s body was rocked by a shiver of ecstasy when she kicked it into gear. Both hands caressed his shaft, the top one curving over his head and toying with it. He gasped and his entire body jerked. Cori played with his balls when she went low but focused her efforts on his cock. His hips moved, matching her motions like he was trying to fuck her hands. It was a little embarrassing, the kind of lame move a boy might have pulled on her back in the day, but Dylan wasn’t in full control of his body.

He slipped his hand from her ass around her toned belly and upward. Her tits jiggled from the pumping motion and his hand glided over them.

Fingertips glanced over her nipples and Cori shivered and purred. She let him touch her, but he saw all her focus was on his cock. She stared at it while her hands worked their magic, speeding up their twisting, pumping motion. Dylan loved watching her, but he closed his eyes and the scene changed. They weren't in their bedroom, but Cori was in a dim living room, kneeling on the massage table between some guy's legs. He'd seen Jessy Deen do it in a video and the position was hot as hell. The huge cock in her hands was pointed right up at Cori like it had a missile lock. Cori pumped it faster and cooed her in encouragement.

"Mmm, let go. You're close, I can feel it. Let go for me. That's it, that's it..." The words were from a Jessy Deen video, but he heard them in his wife's voice.

"Yeah...yeah...Cor...right there..." Dylan moaned, responding to the words in his head.

Cori hadn't actually spoken while jerking him off, but replied, "Come for me, babe. Do it! I want to see it, babe. Mmm, yeah..."

That was all it took. Dylan didn't know if he came in two seconds or if it took twenty minutes. It seemed like Cori had been playing with his cock forever, but it could never be long enough. His balls tightened, and with a strangled cry they emptied, his essence rocketing up through his shaft and erupting out the top. They'd been having so much sex—and he was still jerking off while watching videos and thinking about Cori during the day—that he didn't have a volcanic eruption in him, but he had a couple of good spurts that flowed down over her fists.

Dylan was sure he saw a light in her eyes when she watched him come like it turned her on. Cori worked him harder then like she wanted even more out of him. Dylan wished he had more to give. He knew she liked getting a guy off—she'd mentioned it made her feel powerful and gave a sense of satisfaction, but it hadn't occurred to him that Cori would be turned on by giving him a hand job. A wicked thought: maybe they were secretly on the same page. What if Cori was also fantasizing about jerking off a client? It would have bothered another man, but Dylan would be thrilled by it. Just the possibility made his spent cock twitch.

"Oh, damn Cori... You earned your money that time," he huffed. "That was..."

"Damned good? I know. I know I'm good," she said, laughing.

"And so humble."

“You can’t be humble when you’re this good.”

Dylan couldn’t argue with that. “Although, I feel like there should have been more for a hundred bucks.”

“It’s not my fault if you’re a quick one. If all my clients were as quick as that, I’d be earning close to five hundred dollars an hour for that. Hell, I could quit giving real massages altogether. If I just went somewhere and lined ‘em up I could make bank.”

“Very funny,” he said.

Cori was grinning, pleased with herself. Her face was wild and animated. She breathed heavily like she was as turned on as him. Dylan thought all her clients would be as quick as him because she was so sexy and so good with her hands, but the twisted thoughts in his head were almost as responsible for his quick finish as Cori’s skill. The way she talked it was like she was already doing it. Dylan shivered in excitement and dread at the thought of it.

“Not so excited by the idea now that you’ve gotten off?” she asked, shooting him a look.

“I didn’t say that,” he snapped back, not realizing it was an admission.

“So, you are excited by it?”

Dylan felt the trap snapping shut. “Yeah, I am. You give incredible hand jobs.”

Her eyes narrowed. “You know that’s not what I meant, babe.”

“I...uh...”

“It turns you on, doesn’t it, this fantasy of me giving happy endings?”

Dylan squirmed. He hadn’t admitted anything yet and didn’t want to now, but he also didn’t want to lie to his wife. Cori could detect bullshit from a mile away, for one thing. She knew him too well. But he just didn’t want to lie to her. They’d always been as truthful as possible with each other, even when it was uncomfortable. Dylan knew he owed her the truth.

“I mean, just in the realm of pure fantasy...” he hedged. “We’re not talking about real life, right?”

“No, Dylan, I am not giving my clients handys,” she replied with exasperation. But her eyes twinkled when she added, “Not yet anyway.”

An evil thrill surged through him and Dylan almost groaned. She was surely fucking with him, but Cori was so good at it, he always had room to doubt. He answered, “I guess, yeah, it’s kinda hot when you do this, when we pretend you’re doing it for money.”

“Babe, it’s okay. I’m cool with it,” she said, placing her slippery hand on his arm. His load was still shiny on the backs of her fingers.

“But it’s fantasy, you know. I’m not saying it’s something I’m really into. I don’t want you to—you know...”

“Dylan take a deep breath. You’re acting like I caught you cheating or something. It’s okay if this gets you off. It’s hot.”

“You think so?”

“I don’t know. Maybe. I think it’s hot that we can still learn things about each other after twenty-four years together.”

“I don’t know how much of a thing it is, Cor. I never even thought about anything like this before the other night. I’m not one of those cuckold guys.”

“Of course not. You know Seth likes watching Andi when they’re with other couples. I don’t think it’s weird at all. Like I said, I think it’s hot.”

Dylan almost argued with her, but that would be counterproductive. Seth watching Andi fucking a guy while he was also fucking someone wasn’t the same as the things in Dylan’s head. He’d never quite understood how Seth was okay with that, even if he was getting laid too. Dylan understood it at least a little bit now, although he wished he didn’t. At least Cori was taking it better than he suspected she would. That was unfair. The judgment was all in his head. Cori wasn’t the judgmental type when it came to sex.

“Thanks for that. I’m not saying I want you to do it,” he said.

Cori laughed. “You already told me that. I know you’re not asking me to go out and give happy endings, babe.”

Dylan felt like he was babbling. He needed the attention off him. “Is it just hot because of me, or do you like it too?”

Cori had been enjoying his discomfort, but now her cheer faltered. “What do you mean?”

“I mean, the other night—now—it seems like this fantasy turns you on as much as it does me.”

“I don’t think that’s possible.” She smiled, but it didn’t reach her eyes.

“I’m not saying I understand why, but I’m not imagining things, Cor. I know this turns you on, at least a little bit.”

Cori scrunched up her nose. “Why would it turn me on? I’m the one giving it out, not getting it.”

Dylan shrugged. “Could be that old fantasy of being a bad girl. Isn’t that why every girl likes to dress all slutty on Halloween? Isn’t that why you all liked Samantha on Sex and the City?”

“I didn’t watch Sex and the City, you know that, and how often do I slut it up on Halloween?”

“You don’t get the chance much, but there was the one year you were a Playboy bunny. That was hot.”

“I was hot, wasn’t I? Although, I stuffed the hell out of that top. I think I still have the platinum blonde wig somewhere. But I only did that because I lost a bet, remember?”

Dylan remembered. Cori had been a bundle of nerves and drank like a sailor that night. She hated putting it all out there like that. But once she was drunk and at the party, she had a killer time. It was incredible watching her at the party. Cori was luminescent. She commanded the attention of all the guys around her. Dylan remembered how much he loved watching her like that, seeing those men all over her. They’d fucked like rabbits that night, a quick, sloppy screw, even though they’d been so drunk they could hardly stand.

“But you loved it, Cor. Don’t even try to tell me you didn’t.”

Her smile was back. “I guess I did, didn’t I? That’s not the same thing as taking money for sexual favors, though.”

“In the ballpark, though. I think part of you wants to be bad.”

“I admit to nothing.”

Dylan wiggled his fingers between her thighs. Her thong was soaked. “Just as I suspected,” he said, smiling triumphantly. She moaned when he pressed.

“That’s just because I like getting you off, babe.”

“Right.”

“Anyway, what do you plan to do about it?”

Dylan’s cock was twitching, but he wasn’t bouncing right back. He wasn’t twenty anymore. He couldn’t just pop back up after Cori made him come so hard. He worked his fingers inside her thong.

Cori shook her head. “Oh, I’m going to need more than that. Come here, babe.”

She fell onto her back, pulling Dylan with her—not that he needed any urging. Cori pressed his face between her legs, and he was more than happy to follow her lead.

Chapter Nine

Cori had a secret and she felt terrible about it. She didn't tell Dylan what she was doing because she knew what he'd think. She could hardly blame him if he did. He'd be drawing the logical conclusion. She would tell him what she did—when it was done. Somehow, Cori thought Dylan would be okay with it. Despite what he'd said, she suspected he was way more into this happy ending thing than he was letting on. Besides, it wasn't like she was doing anything. Cori was just there to watch.

The address for Mayde's client was punched into her GPS and Cori was about ten minutes away. When Cori texted Mayde with the news she'd turned down Janine's offer, she didn't think it would lead to this. But closing that door with Janine only made her more curious about what was behind this one, and it felt safer to explore those questions with her new friend Mayde than with her icy boss Janine. The last thing Cori thought would happen was that Mayde would invite her along on an appointment—a special appointment. Mayde insisted it would be easier to show her what it was like, rather than keep answering a barrage of questions.

Cori insisted she couldn't do that. It would be too weird, she claimed, but Mayde wouldn't hear it. She said she had the perfect client in mind, and she promised Cori wouldn't have to do anything. Mayde laughed and said this client couldn't afford two girls at once anyway.

The house was in a newer development of McMansions, hulking single homes on small plots of land with winding streets named after tree species, which was ironic as all the front yards were dotted with scrawny saplings. That was one of the things she hated about new developments. Cori loved the big, mature trees on their property and the shade they provided. Cleaning up leaves sucked, but she'd take it over these barren yards.

Besides, the kids were old enough to do that yard work now anyway. The GPS informed her that she'd arrived, and Cori confirmed the address on the curbside mailbox. She parked behind a silver BMW SUV, not realizing it was Mayde's ride. Her friend hopped out of the sleek SUV. It was a nice vehicle for a mobile massage therapist, suggesting the kind of money Mayde was making.

"Is that company-approved work attire?" Cori asked, climbing out of her boring, decade-old minivan.

Mayde wore a black zip-up hoodie and beige leggings that would have made her look bottomless from a distance. Her black, chunky-heeled booties were not comfortable footwear for a clinical massage therapy appointment. Cori would not want to be on her feet in those all day.

Mayde laughed and shrugged. "It's appropriate for this job."

"Are you sure this is going to be okay? Isn't it going to be weird if I'm just sitting there while you're..."

"Take a deep breath, girl. It'll be fun to have an audience. You can tell me if there's anything I need to work on."

"Like I'm qualified," Cori said.

"Roger is pretty chill. I already told him I had a new girl learning the ropes with me. He didn't say it, he pretends to be very respectful, but I think he likes the idea they'll be someone watching."

Cori made a face. "But he doesn't expect me to..."

"I told you, no. I made that part very clear. I mean, you could, I guess, but I'm not sharing my tip with you."

"You don't need to worry," Cori replied, laughing. "Let me help you with your stuff."

A drawback of being an outcall massage therapist was all the gear that had to be lugged around. The folding massage table weighed almost fifty pounds alone. Mayde had a couple of smaller bags to carry her supplies—linens, lotions, disinfectant, headrest—but Cori kept it all in one giant bag with many compartments that she threw over her shoulder. She liked to get it all in and out in one trip. Carrying the gear was a workout in itself. Cori took the two bags, while Mayde hefted the table, which looked like a giant briefcase when folded up.

Roger answered the door and Cori was surprised. She only had a vague image in her head of what a man ordering happy endings looked like, but it wasn't Roger. He looked like any other successful businessman in his midfifties; tall, with razor-cut, thinning gray hair, slender, but with the paunch of middle-age. Mayde had said she only performed extras for clients she was into, but Cori didn't see how Roger could possibly be her type. He wasn't much Cori's type. She found him handsome enough and she didn't mind the dad bod—she liked Dylan's—but Roger wasn't a guy Cori would be excited to put her hands on. She couldn't imagine a girl like Mayde felt that way. Cori took special note of his wedding ring. He was dressed for his session in a t-shirt and running shorts, the kind of loose, comfortable clothing they recommended for any legitimate massage.

They were shown to a Florida room in the back of the house, which was a lovely setting for a massage. Mayde clearly knew the way. Blinds were half-drawn on the wide windows that comprised the three exterior walls to provide privacy while still admitting some midday light. Plenty of bright sunlight also poured through the curved windows forming the ceiling. Roger excused himself while they set up.

The room was long and narrow, and Mayde was careful as she began unfolding the massage table. Cori unzipped a bag and handed Mayde a headrest to attach to the end of the erected table.

“Could you grab a sheet from the other bag?” Mayde asked.

Cori handed over the sheet and kept her voice low as she said, “He seems so normal.”

“Most of these guys are normal, Cori. As normal as anyone else. A guy like Roger, he just wants a little excitement. He's been married forever. I don't know if he and his wife still love each other, but I don't get the impression they like each other very much. She's a lawyer, and I think he likes that she works ten hours a day.”

“Do you feel weird that he's married?”

“If it doesn't bother him, it doesn't bother me. I'm just providing a service. It's not like he's going to run away with me.”

Mayde unzipped and shed her hoodie. Okay, that was not Elemental Bodyworks approved work attire. The white, ribbed, knit Henley top was a size too small and her considerable cleavage spilled from the unbuttoned neckline. The top was sheer enough that her lacy black bra was plainly visible through it. Dylan would love her in that outfit, Cori thought. Mayde had an incredible body and Cori couldn't help staring. Mayde caught her and smiled.

“I like to dress how the client likes. Roger's a titty man.”

“He should be very happy then,” Cori replied.

Roger returned when the table was laid out. Mayde said, “This is Cori, the girl I was telling you about. She just started with us, and she needs to learn all the ins and outs of the job. You know, the stuff that’s not in the employee manual.”

His leer said Roger knew exactly what Mayde meant. His eyes swept over Cori as if she were on offer too and he was deciding if he wanted to purchase her. Unlike Mayde, she was dressed like a professional massage therapist, although she wore the snug khakis that always got Dylan staring at her ass. Cori oddly hoped Roger liked her ass too, although if he was a boob man he was going to be disappointed with her. She felt her body was almost boyish compared to Mayde’s. But Roger smiled. He seemed to like what he saw. Cori hoped he didn’t get any ideas.

“It’s nice to meet you, Cori. What do you think of the job so far?”

“I’m enjoying it so far. It’s more than I expected, but I like helping people.”

“You should follow Mayde’s lead then. She’s very helpful. If you can learn all her tricks, you’ll go far.”

“We all do our thing, Roger. Cori’s just figuring out what hers will be,” Mayde said, placing a bottle of massage oil on a nearby table.

My thing can’t be this, can it? Cori wondered.

“Still learn all you can from this one. She’s a pro,” Roger said, rubbing Mayde’s arm.

“Get on the table, you old horndog,” Mayde said, with a laugh. She told Cori, “Have a seat,” indicating a padded rattan chair in the corner with a wide, mushroom-shaped back. Cori curled into it, tucking her legs up beneath her.

Roger shed his t-shirt and laid face down on the massage table. Mayde synced her phone to a small speaker from her bag, but instead of putting on the Eastern-influenced music most therapists used, she chose slow jam R&B. Oil came next and Mayde rubbed it between her palms to warm it up before starting on Roger’s shoulders. It was the common starting point for any massage.

Cori liked to examine a patient’s body first to get the lay of the land before she started bodywork. She also generally didn’t use oil or lotions. Her specialty was shiatzu, which was based on traditional Chinese medicine and focused on overall health and specific pressures at meridians. It was a completely different discipline than the deep tissue, or Swedish massage, which most people associated with massage therapists. Cori also incorporated a lot of stretching into her work, which she found beneficial for her clients. Her focus on Eastern medicine was serious, which flew in the face of being a happy ending artist. Could she still take her other work seriously if she finished a treatment with her hand wrapped around a client's shaft until his jizz sprayed?

Mayde did appear to take her bodywork seriously. Her bodywork was solid if a bit rushed. She also made small talk with Roger, which wasn't Cori's normal practice. She'd talk to a chatty client, but she preferred to focus on her work. Mayde had an easy rapport with Roger like they were old friends. He asked about her son and her life. Cori didn't think she could be so open about her life, especially not with that kind of client. But Roger mostly talked about himself and his business. It quickly became apparent that the massage session was as much about having someone to unburden himself to as having a massage treatment. He talked about his cold wife and ungrateful oldest son. Roger complained that the kids treated him more like an ATM than a father, but he seemed like a man who liked to use his money to maintain control. It was fascinating being a fly on the wall in the session. Roger seemed to have forgotten Cori was there. Mayde glanced over occasionally and made faces belying the sympathy she expressed to Roger's back. She rolled her eyes when Roger complained his wife never wanted to be touched.

Roger turned over as instructed after about a half-hour. His eyes were glued to Mayde's chest, and they bounced with her tits as they jiggled from her hand motions. She started on his chest before unnecessarily leaning across his body to reach his left arm, mashing her tits against him. Cori just smiled at the move. She was always conscious of her body around a client. Some contact was unavoidable, but it was important she didn't make it appear something was on offer that wasn't. Cori would never press her boobs against a client like Mayde did, although it would take much more effort for Cori to make it happen with her small ones. Mayde was even more obvious when she worked on his head. She stood at the top of the table and smothered him with her massive orbs. Roger's hands twitched like he was barely resisting the urge to grab Mayde. She wiggled and brushed her tits all over his face while she worked on his neck. Cori had to stifle a laugh watching the maneuver. She didn't know if she had such a thing in her.

Mayde moved to the other side of the table and began working on his feet, again leaning so far over the massage table it looked like she was trying to climb onto it. Cori was sure her tits were going to tumble out of her top. She only saw the back of Roger's head but knew where all his attention was fixed. The deep sighs that had been escaping Roger throughout the massage turned to moans as Mayde worked on his feet. Cori's gaze trailed up from where her friend worked, and she was unsurprised to see his shirt tented up. She'd encountered erections during some of her own sessions, but it was different knowing that the point of this session was to get the client off.

Cori stared at Roger's bulge and her mind went to provocative places. As she tried to ignore a regular client's unintended erection, she didn't really think about them. Seeing Roger's was different. She began thinking about his cock way more than she should have. A wicked part of her couldn't wait for Mayde to reveal it so she could see what he had. Cori became aware of that old tickle of anticipation at the bottom of her stomach. She was getting aroused, which didn't make any sense.

Roger's legs relaxed and fell wider apart as Mayde worked her way up them. The massage was no longer relaxing. He visibly tensed as she moved higher, his legs taut. She wasn't massaging anymore, but teasing, tickling her manicured nails up his hairy legs, making him shiver. Cori wondered why Mayde would keep her nails that way with the work they did, but now it made sense. Cori could never have her nails like that and give a decent treatment. Mayde's nails tickled under Roger's shorts, and he groaned.

"Should I stop?" she teased.

"Don't you dare," he said.

"Yes, sir," she replied with mock seriousness. Cori loved their flirtatious exchange. It was the opposite of the mindset she'd been taught, and it would be a challenge to try and do it—not that Cori would be doing any of this in her appointments.

"I'm not sure my treatment is working, Roger. You look tenser than ever," Mayde said, a smile in her voice.

"You know how to relax me. You know just what to do," he replied.

"You're right, I do."

Their banter seemed almost scripted, leaving Cori to wonder how many times they'd done this little dance. Mayde said Roger had been a client for almost two years but didn't start hinting around for extras until he'd been seeing her for about six months. It was common for clients to sneak up on the conversation.

Mayde rubbed him through his shorts and Cori was more frustrated by the tease than the client. She wanted Mayde to get on with it. Cori was annoyed by her own impatience. She didn't understand her reaction to being a voyeur in Mayde's session at all. Roger wasn't even particularly her type, so it was odd that she wanted to see his dick so badly.

Roger lifted his butt from the table and Mayde rolled his shorts down to his thighs. He was prepared—there was no underwear. His prick sprang straight up, slapping into his stomach, like a catapult being released. Cori leaned forward in her chair to get a better look, for once wishing she had the glasses she hated wearing and usually left in her nightstand drawer. As if she read Cori's mind, Mayde lifted it, holding it aloft for inspection. Roger was very average in the pants. It was not an unattractive cock, although he could have used some grooming. Even Dylan, who wasn't often on-trend, groomed himself down there, but then Cori had told him that he'd better take care of himself if he expected her to do the same. It was an empty threat, but he didn't need to know that.

The shaft in Mayde's hand was darker than the rest of its owner, tapering up to a narrower, circumcised head that was a pleasing pinkish color. It darkened and grew as Mayde stroked him. Her tugging stretched his meat, but as he thickened it became solid in her grip. She gave it a nice, hard tug and Roger grunted. Mayde's smile suggested she was enjoying herself, playing with Roger. Cori had always enjoyed playing with a guy too, but she'd have to ask Mayde what she specifically got from playing with someone like Roger.

"There, is that better?" Mayde asked.

"It's getting there," he moaned. "But I'm gonna need the special treatment today."

Mayde's eyebrows shot up, but she kept smiling. "Really? We did that last time, too. It's starting to become a thing. That wasn't the original deal."

"What can I say, Mayde? You're too good. You make me want it too much. It's all I've been thinking about all week."

"That's sweet, Roger."

“Don’t worry, Mayde. It’ll be very worth it. Trust me.”

“Oh, I trust you, hon.”

Cori was lost. They were talking about more than a handy. She got that, but she had no frame of reference for what Roger wanted. Was Mayde going to fuck him? Would Mayde do that with Cori watching? Cori’s heart raced and she felt trapped. She didn’t go in there to watch Mayde fuck someone, and she didn’t know how to handle it. Should she excuse herself?

Mayde went right on as if Cori wasn’t sitting there. She used both hands on Roger, stroking his shaft. His hands got busy, yet Mayde went right on with her work. He slid a hand over her hip and up her side, cupping a heavy tit from below. She scooted closer to improve his reach and he squeezed. Mayde squealed and giggled, and Cori knew a girl putting on an act when she saw it. Mayde may have liked Roger touching her, but not as much as she let on. She turned her body, keeping his dick in her right hand, giving him full access to her chest. Roger mashed her massive rounds with both hands, but he couldn’t contain them. They spilled out of his grasp, but he did his damndest to corral the errant tits. Mayde shimmied, shaking them for him. Her nipples popped through her bra and top, like thick buttons he had to press. Roger gave the tips a hard tweak and Mayde moaned loudly. Now that sounded real, Cori thought.

“Mmm, not too rough, hon. You don’t want to hurt me,” Mayde chided.

“Sorry, it’s hard not to get carried away. They’re magnificent.”

“And they’re real. They’re all mine,” she replied, laughing.

Roger was endlessly entertained with Mayde’s twins. Cori couldn’t remember the last time Dylan spent that much time on hers, but then she wasn’t packing what Mayde had. Cori was jealous. She wasn’t looking to be groped by a virtual stranger, but it would be fun to have someone pay that kind of attention to her. Maybe that was what Mayde got out of it. It was like Roger was worshipping her. Cori noted that he didn’t try to take her top off or push his hands under it. Roger understood the rules. He was paying, and he was the man, but Mayde was fully in control. Cori was jealous. Not just jealous. That tickle in the pit of her stomach had moved lower and tightened her core. Watching Roger grope Mayde was hot. Cori wanted someone’s hands on her.

“Our time is running short, Roger. You going to do that all day?” Mayde said.

“No, Mayde. Please, work your magic,” he replied, obediently moving his hands to his sides.

“I thought you’d never ask.” Mayde showed her teeth when she smiled.

Mayde pulled her long, raven hair back into a high ponytail and secured it with a scrunchie from her wrist. She licked her ruby lips and dipped down, smoothing them over Roger’s flared head. His head dipped back, and he moaned from deep in his chest. His face was a mask of ecstasy. Dylan always praised her oral skills, but Cori had never seen a man look as enraptured as Roger. His mouth hung open and his bottom lip quivered as he gasped. Mayde took him deeper, and he gripped the sides of the table. Her cheeks hollowed as she drew back up his shaft. She’d already swallowed about half of him.

Cori shifted in the big rattan chair, uncomfortable with how aroused she was. She tensed her thighs, squeezing her sex, without even thinking about it and little pulses of pleasure moved through her body. It was like being at a live sex show. Cori loved watching Mayde do her thing, but she didn’t understand why. She watched Mayde sensuously bob on Roger’s meat, making soft, wet sucking sounds, now that she had his shaft soaked with her saliva. Cori fixated on every detail. Mayde took him deep, nearly devoured the whole thing, and her nose flared before she sucked extra hard, keeping him in her mouth.

“Ahh...oh god...” Roger gurgled, struggling to speak. His mouth moved like a fish out of water gasping for air.

Mayde came up for air, smacking her wet lips and grinning at Roger, a string of saliva connecting her to his cock. Her fingers were tightly locked around the base of his shaft, and she jerked it as she spoke. “Mmm, baby, you like that, don’t you? I can tell. You gonna come for me, baby?”

“Uhn, fuck ya. Jesus!” Roger moaned.

“We’re in the home stretch, baby. Give me what you have.”

Mayde licked the underside of his shaft, dragging the tip of her tongue up and down it before flattening it against his twitching prick.

“Uhn...you want it...” he moaned.

“I do, baby. Let me do this for you. Abby doesn’t want it...”

“No...only you, Mayde...”

“That’s right, baby. Only I can do this for you.”

Cori almost laughed and ruined it when Mayde winked at her. Cori saw she was giving the performance of a lifetime, but Roger couldn’t see through it—not when Mayde was pulling on his dick. Especially not when she took him back in her mouth. Cori didn't think she had Mayde's chops. She didn't think she could sell it like that, but it would be exciting to try. Cori was jealous of how Mayde had Roger eating out of the palm of her hand. He was convinced she was dying for it. Cori felt that when she played with her husband's cock but knew the charge would be incredible if she did it to another man. It was shocking to realize, but she wanted to work her magic on another man. After nineteen years of marriage—twenty-four together—she wanted to prove her powers were still potent. She wanted to make a man lose it the way Mayde did.

Cori wasn't touching herself—not actively—but her fist was in her lap, squeezed between her thighs, adding pressure when she flexed them. It was a trick Cori used to use ages ago, sitting bored in the back of a lecture hall in college, thinking it would be fun to get herself off with the other students around her. The challenge to remain quiet was exciting. She worked her muscles now and the syntribution mashing her fist into her mound rocked waves of pleasure through Cori. She stared at Mayde and was shocked to find her friend looking at her as much as she looked at the client. Forbidden thrills spiked through Cori when they made eye contact. She had to relax her thighs because she was not going to make herself come with Mayde watching her.

Roger cried out, sounded like he was drowning, and went rigid, spiking his cock up into Mayde's mouth. She pulled off just in time to point him at his stomach, rapidly jerking it while spurt after spurt of his stuff painted his stomach. Cori was impressed he had so much in him. It looked like he'd been saving it up for Mayde, who cooed encouragement and told him to get it all out for her. Mayde pumped him until he was limp in her hand.

"That was so good, baby. You did so good. So strong," Mayde cooed like she was encouraging a pet. Roger ate it up and was glowing. She looked up over him and asked Cori, "Could you go wet one of my washcloths?"

"Yeah, sure," Cori replied, happy to get out of the room for a minute and catch her breath.

Cori stumbled out of the chair, weak-kneed like a newborn foal. Her heart pounded and she felt lightheaded. A deep, centering breath calmed her, and she grabbed a washcloth and fled the room. In the bathroom, Cori was deeply embarrassed by her flushed, ruddy cheeks. No way Mayde missed that. She stared at herself in the mirror and psyched herself up to go back into the other room. You can do this, she told herself. Cori tossed her short, braided ponytail back over her shoulder and went.

Mayde and Roger were laughing and having small talk like she hadn't just blown him for money. Mayde didn't take the washcloth from Cori but asked if she could clean him up while she got her stuff together. Cori both froze solid and felt a hot flash. She didn't know both were possible at once. She didn't want to do it at all but saw it was a test and she never backed down from a challenge. Cori wouldn't let Mayde think she was the bored, dabbling housewife.

"Sure," Cori replied, narrowing her eyes at her friend, who looked pleased as punch.

Cori knew touching Roger's penis was wrong. Confessing later to Dylan that she watched Mayde blow the man would be one thing. She banked on him being more excited than angry. Maybe shocked. Hopefully shocked. But he was going to freak when she told her husband she touched Roger too if only to clean him up afterward. Cori tried to keep it as clinical as possible. She held Roger's spent meat, thankful Mayde had done such an expert job. He was completely flaccid.

Roger watched her handle him, wipe his cock clean before wiping his jizz from his stomach. The question was in his eyes; You like that too, don't you? The answer should have been no, but Cori was charged by handling his cock—even soft. She was careful not to get his stuff on her fingers as she cleaned, but the chance she might made her heart pound. She hadn't touched another man's come in almost a quarter-century. She was tempted to slip and do it, but she was good. She'd questioned Mayde's motivation before, her insistence she only did it with guys she liked. Cori hadn't seen that in Roger, but now she did. Just holding his warm, spent cock she got a charge. He wasn't extraordinary, but Roger was handsome enough, and it would be thrilling to make him come. Cori couldn't blow him, but she would be happy jerking him off for a hundred bucks. She was almost reluctant to let his cock go.

"Let's get the rest of this cleaned up and get out of here, shall we?" Mayde said, catching Cori's hesitation.

"Yes, right. Of course," Cori hurriedly replied, dropping the dick.

The rest of the appointment was weirdly mundane. It was surreal watching Roger complete the paperwork on the company tablet and confirm his next appointment. It was impossible how normal Mayde and Roger were with each other. It ended like any appointment Cori had ever done. They hugged at the end, and Cori had even started doing that with a couple of the clients she was becoming attached to, except her clients didn't slip Cori an envelope with the hug. She was dying to know how much was in it, but that would have to wait. As the Gambler said, you never count your money when you're sitting at the table.

Chapter Ten

Baines was sitting in the family room with Dylan when she got home, and Cori tried to hide her exasperation by plastering on a smile. It wasn't unusual to find her husband's best friend at their house on a Friday night during hockey season, but she had a lot on her mind and did not feel like verbally volleying with Baines. They would be fine left to their own devices with beers and the game, but Cori couldn't just turn and leave the room without exchanging pleasantries.

"There she is," Baines said, looking away from the flatscreen mounted on the wall.

"Why aren't I surprised to find you here drinking my beer?" Cori replied with a smile she didn't feel.

"Hey, I ordered pizza for everyone. I even got veggies for you, Cor. Grab a beer and join us."

"I don't know. It's been a long day. Are the kids around, babe?"

"Nope, they're out for the night. I can go grab you a beer if you want," Dylan answered.

"I think a soak in the tub with a glass of wine is what I need."

"That sounds fun too. Do you need someone to wash your back?" Baines eagerly offered.

"You know I'm sitting right here, right?" Dylan said.

Cori laughed and relaxed, despite the rock of guilt sitting in her stomach. I touched another man's dick. How do I tell Dylan that? Baines being there was a positive. She could put off her confession.

"Don't worry, you know he's not my type. Besides, he wouldn't know what to do with me if he got me. Classic dog chasing a car situation."

“I know you’re only saying that to make him feel better. I get it, Cor. Have to maintain the domestic tranquility,” Baines said.

Flirty banter had always been her thing with Baines, from the day Dylan introduced them. Back then, Cori worried Baines might really be trying to get into her pants, which would make him a shitty friend, but learned that was just his way. If he were trying to bed her, he probably wouldn’t do it right in front of Dylan. But Baines did it every time he saw her, and she often caught him checking her out, leading Cori to wonder if there was some serious intent behind it after all. She always said he wasn’t her type, but he was handsome, with his shaved head and that scraggly beard that gave him a certain ruggedness.

Working as a roofer kept him in great shape. How many times over the years had the three of them been drinking late into the night? What if one of those nights Baines took his shot and made a pass at her? Cori would never cheat on Dylan, of course, but how long would she kiss him back before shoving him away if she was drunk? She’d never thought she’d fool around with Baines—or any other man—but then she never thought she’d have another man’s dick in her hand, and just a couple hours ago she’d done exactly that. Tagging along on Mayde’s appointment had all kinds of weird things running through her mind, and Cori forced them away.

“You got me. Nothing gets me hotter than a guy with salsa on the front of his Flyers jersey.” Cori laughed.

Baines looked down and cursed when he saw the blob of salsa on the front of his jersey. He looked for something to dab it with but didn’t have a napkin, because he was a man. Cori laughed at that too.

“How was work, Cor?” Dylan asked.

“You know, same old same old. I had six clients today, which is a lot. I’m totally drained.”

“I’m sure draining all those guys is draining. Do your hands cramp?” Baines said, ignoring the salsa on his jersey, deciding it could wait until later.

Both Cori and Dylan tensed, though for slightly different reasons. There was no way for Dylan to know what she’d seen and done that afternoon. Cori giving out hand jobs was just too much on his mind, but she actually had a guilty secret.

Cori could have answered that she did see a guy drained earlier and that she’d cleaned him up afterward, but that was not a confession to make in front of company. Instead, she made an exasperated sigh and said, “Is this what it’s going to be like from now on, you accusing me of giving out happy endings?”

“Hey, I’ve got no problem if you’re doing it, Cor. That’s actually pretty hot. I’m just saying, if you’re doing it, I want to book an appointment. That’s all.” Baines grinned wickedly. He knew he’d touched a nerve, and he loved it.

“I’m very good, but if you’re looking for anything more than a shiatzu treatment, you’ll be sorely disappointed, Baines. Sorry, I’m not the slut you wish I was.”

An odd look crossed Baines’ face as if he was picturing Cori jerking him off, and it nearly made her do the same. Baines’s teasing just didn’t feel the same after the last few weeks. Cori had trouble brushing it off like she used to. Luckily, Dylan was there to back her up.

“Why don’t you run upstairs and take that bath, Cor. I’ll bring you up some pizza when it gets here,” Dylan said.

“Sounds like a plan. You boys enjoy yourselves,” she replied, happy to extricate herself from the room.

“Could you let up on her please?” Dylan said, throwing a pillow at Baines when Cori left the room. “She’s been working really hard. She doesn’t need your bullshit when she comes home.” He could tell she was exhausted by her day, but something else weighed on her. Dylan knew his wife well enough to see when something was off with her. He wouldn’t be able to ask her about it while Baines was there.

“Hey, it’s part of my charm. Besides, you know Cori loves it. She was laughing, wasn’t she?”

Cori did seem to enjoy his friend’s jabs and flirting. It would have bothered him if he didn’t trust them both so much. Cori loved him. He loved her completely. Her cheating was not a thing that ever entered his mind. But is it cheating if it’s for money and I know? Is it cheating if I like it? Dylan had such an insane, dark thought that it knocked the wind out of him. Baines could be the perfect test subject for Cori’s happy ending service. Dylan trusted his friend almost as much as he trusted his wife. It would make sense if it were ever going to happen—which it wasn't. Dylan literally shook his head to clear the thought, like a cartoon character.

"Hey, dude, you okay?" Baines asked.

"Yeah, sorry. I thought about you being a client of Cori's. I think I need my brain scraped out now," Dylan sort of lied.

"You know, my back is usually killing me by the end of the week. It probably would be a good thing, but not if it would be weird."

"She's not jerking you off, man."

"I was serious, dude. I could use the help." Baines sounded serious but then had to add, "But once she had me on the table, she might not be able to help herself. I mean, you couldn't blame her, right?"

"Yeah, after twenty years of knowing you, she's just going to lose control. Seriously, why are you so fixated on Cori giving happy endings?"

"Do I really think your wife is jerking guys off for a twenty spot? Of course not, dude. She just doesn't seem like the type. Nothing about Cori screams hooker. But she did choose to be a massage girl. It's like she's asking to be ribbed for it. And seriously, she does love it, dude. You know Cori loves the attention, right? She always has."

Dylan knew that about his wife, and it was part of what made her sexy. She was the kind of woman who effortlessly commanded attention but was grounded enough that it didn't go to her head. It was as much about her brains, wit, and warmth as her tight body, sensual smile, and the warm rasp of her voice. Cori had only grown sexier with age and experience. At forty-three her body was tighter than ever. Of course, men would pay her for sex. Of course, Baines thought of her jerking him off. It would be strange if he didn't. But Dylan's mind stuck on one thing.

"You don't think Cori could get more than twenty bucks? Seriously, man?"

Baines laughed, almost spewing beer all over the room. "So that's your real objection? It's not the idea that your wife could be giving out hand jobs, but that she would be doing it on the cheap? It's okay if Cori's a whore, as long as she's not a cheap whore. You crack me up, dude. You need another beer."

"You know what I mean. Not saying I want Cori to be one of those massage girls. I'm just saying if she was, she could get way more than twenty bucks for a handy. Come on, she's hotter than that."

"Yeah, she is," Baines agreed.

“I think the floor’s like eighty. Cori’s getting a hundy, minimum.”

“Sounds like someone’s been doing their homework. Something you’re not telling me? Have you guys been researching the market?”

“No, that’s nuts, man. Cori doing that...”

Dylan tried to tamp down the panic in his voice. It felt like Baines saw right through him. The two men were close, close as brothers, but he was not about to share all those perverted thoughts about his wife he’d been having. It might help to get it off his chest, but he couldn’t expect Baines to understand. Would any man?

“Okay, don’t get all offended, dude. Not saying Cori’s a whore. But yeah, if she was, she could get way more than twenty bucks, especially if she went beyond giving out hand jobs. I know a lot of guys go for the stereotype, big fake tits, tons of makeup, and high hair, but a girl-next-door type like Cori could clean up. She’s like every guy’s dirty fantasy of the neighbor’s wife. Hypothetically speaking, of course. I know that’s not Cori. She’d sock me in the jaw before she’d jerk me off.”

Dylan shifted uncomfortably on the couch, holding his beer in his lap to hide the stirring he felt there. Baines was hitting too close to home. He pushed Dylan’s buttons like he had been reading his browser history. Dylan reminded himself Baines wasn’t psychic.

“Yeah, yeah. I get it. It’s cool, man. We’re just talking. You know I don’t get offended.”

“That’s why I love you so much, dude. I know uptight dudes who’d throw me out of their house for talking about their wives like that, but you’ve always been cool. Not a lot of guys are so laid back about the kind of attention their piece of ass wife can get.”

Baines was pushing his buttons now, but Dylan was too freaked out to rise to the bait. Instead, he found the compliment in it. After all, Baines was saying that Cori was hot, and Dylan loved that men appreciated his Cori. He knew he was the luckiest man on earth. Cori had that special something that drew men and could have had her pick of the litter, but she chose Dylan. The thought kept him centered through the dizzying ups and downs of the past few weeks.

“I know I’m lucky enough that she loves me. I don’t have anything to worry about in that department.”

“Good for you, dude. I’m going to grab another beer. Want one?”

“Sure.”

Cori reclined in the tub, the hot water soaking the tension from her body. The aromatic oil she'd added to the steaming water smelled of rose petals and took Cori to her happy place. When they'd rehabbed the master bath ten years ago, insisting on the big soaking tub had been the smartest thing she'd ever done. A tub with jets was out of their price range, but this big tub was still heaven. They'd done the work themselves to keep costs down—with a huge hand from Baines—and Cori hated it, but when she slipped into her tub for a soak it was all worth it. A glass of red sat on the side of the tub, half-drained, but ignored for the moment.

Appearances can be deceiving, and while Cori looked serene, with her eyes closed and her soaked braid resting on her submerged shoulder, her mind was a bubbling cauldron of taboo thoughts. She'd started by replaying the afternoon in her head, curious how she ended up with a stranger's dick in her hand. Cori examined it like she hadn't been there and been a participant. She recalled her conversation with Mayde afterward. They'd gotten into Mayde's posh BMW so they weren't out on the street in front of Roger's neighbors.

"What was that?" Cori demanded. "I was just supposed to be there and see how it works."

"You were supposed to be a trainee. Learning how to clean a client afterward is part of the job." Mayde seemed to be enjoying her outrage way too much. "Come on, Cori. Was it really that bad? Roger wasn't even hard. You've held a limp dick before, right? Or do they all get hard the second you touch them?"

Cori smiled, despite her turmoil. "I get insulted if they don't."

"I'm sure Roger would have gotten hard for you if he hadn't just shot his load. A guy his age needs a lot of turnaround time."

"Haha. Seriously though, what the fuck Mayde?"

"Okay, maybe I wanted to see what you'd do. I don't have you figured out yet."

"Was this whole thing a test? Was that your plan all along?"

"No, I really just thought of it in the moment. I was watching you in that chair and I could tell you weren't just an observer, like studying me. You were into it."

"I was not into it," Cori lied.

“Right. That’s not why your cheeks were redder than a lobster right out of the pot. It’s cool, girl. Watching people fuck is hot. We weren’t fucking, sure, but watching is still hot. I’m hot, and I’m good at it.”

“You are good at it,” Cori grudgingly admitted. “He was eating out of the palm of your hand.”

“That’s how you’ve got to work it, Cori. You’ve always got to have control of the situation, even if it’s a client who likes the power thing. Some of them like the power trip of paying you for it, like to act like you’re their whore. You can sell that, but you’re still in control.”

“Do you have a lot of that?”

“Nah, not my thing. I’ve played it a couple times, but those clients don’t last long with me.

A warm shiver ran through Cori thinking about being used like a whore. She was so used to being in charge in every situation that the thought of it offered a new kind of excitement. But Cori didn’t see seeking that from a client, no matter how much they paid—unless they were really hot. Not a Roger type.

“I have a question about your thing. You said you only do it with clients you like. Roger is your type?”

Mayde smiled tightly. “I like Roger.”

“That’s not what I asked. The mid-fifties accountant type doesn’t seem like the kind of man who’d rock your world, Mayde.”

“I’m not fucking him, am I? They’re not all guys I’d be with if they weren’t paying, that’s true. But Roger is a nice guy. He always treats me with respect, keeps himself clean. He’s not unattractive. I don’t feel like it’s a chore. I don’t know about you, girl, but just getting a guy off like that is hot, even if the guy himself isn’t Jason Momoa. You know what I mean, right?”

“I do,” Cori admitted. Watching Mayde at work, putting herself in that position, she got excited thinking about it, but that wasn’t quite how her friend described the deal. Cori got it. It was still a business transaction and Mayde was doing it for the money, as Cori would be—if she ever did it. She wasn’t going to call her friend out on it.

“What do you think? You haven’t said,” Mayde asked.

“This is going to sound weird, but bear with me. It seemed a lot more normal than I expected. Seamless. It all went so smoothly. I don’t know what I expected like you’d be doing a regular treatment and then a hard right turn. I know normal isn't the right word, obviously. I don't know what I'm trying to say. I guess I had an idea of it in my head, and it wasn't nearly so seedy."

"It's just a transaction. It's also that smooth because Roger is a regular. The first-time negotiation with a client is more of an awkward dance. A lot of them don't know how to come out and ask for it. Or they're too blunt and gross. Discussing money can be weird, like how much for what, but if you're firm and confident it's not bad. I have a feeling you'll be fine with that part."

"Funny. Never said I'd do it."

"But you could see yourself doing it, couldn't you? I saw it in your eyes while you were watching me. You pictured yourself there with Roger. You could totally see yourself doing it. You'd even like doing it, I could see it. And trust me, it's a lot easier if you're into it."

The interior of the SUV shrank, and Cori felt trapped. She would have squirmed out of the seat and through the window if it meant escape. Mayde was asking deeply personal questions and Cori barely knew her. They'd drank together a couple of times and spoken a bit outside of that. They were hardly besties. Cori should have been able to smoothly lie, but she had to talk to someone about this, someone who understood. Someone who wasn't her husband. Mayde was not sitting there with a hard-on as Dylan would be. It was okay to confess the truth to Mayde—one of the few people she knew who wouldn't judge her. Or part of the truth anyway.

"Okay, I could do it. I'm not saying I would, or that I want to, but I could do it."

"That's all? You could do it, but you won't say you would it."

"Give me a break, Mayde. This isn't easy."

Mayde smiled and squeezed Cori's arm in solidarity. "It wasn't easy for me to make that decision either. No one grows up thinking they're going to do sex for money, even if they really like sex. I don't think it should be too easy. It's a big decision, and society's taught us there's a dividing line there: there's those kind of girls who do that and then all the normal girls. It's bullshit, Cori. There's just women who make choices about how they're going to use their bodies."

"And they shouldn't be judged for it. You decide what you're going to do with your body," Cori agreed.

“Exactly. If you meet a guy and decide to go back to his place because he’s hot, that’s only between you and him. If he gives you a couple hundred bucks afterward, that’s only your business too. You’re no less a good person than the girl waiting at home for Prince Charming with her legs welded closed.

“We’re not hookers, Cori. We don’t have a pimp, no one’s making us do anything. I like fucking and I’m going at it. If someone wants to pay me for it, and I want to fuck them, that’s great. Why shouldn’t I use my skills?”

“Right on, sister.”

“I hate all those crusaders who think every woman who does this is being trafficked or some sad failure. There is a lot of that shit out there and the people doing it should be thrown down a hole, but there are plenty of women who choose sex work as a positive choice.”

Cori laughed. “You’re preaching to the choir. I don’t judge it.”

At least, she didn’t now. She’d always been open-minded, but she had thought of sex workers a certain way. Not that they were harlots, but Cori did other them. That wasn’t something she would ever do. Now that she was friends with Mayde and Rodrigo and the others, she saw how unfair that had been.

“But you didn’t get it, and now you do,” Mayde challenged.

“You’re right. I didn’t, but I do now.”

“And you could do it, girl. You would do it.”

Cori smiled and allowed, “Maybe. But it’s not that simple for me. I have a husband. It isn’t just my choice.”

“It kind of is, but I get what you’re saying. Can’t expect a man to overlook it. Most men wouldn’t.”

“You said yours did.”

“I was lucky enough to get myself a freak. You got a freak at home?”

“I just might. The jury’s still out. I told Dylan about this side of it, and it’s been interesting, to say the least. I don’t know what he’d say if I came home and told him I wanted to really do it.”

Mayde laughed heartily. “You White people in the suburbs act all uptight and proper, but y’all freaks just like everyone else. I think it’s great, girl. You should test that man. See what he thinks.”

“I don’t know. We’ll see.”

“Just make sure whatever decision you make, Cori, it’s yours and it’s for you. Don’t do what someone else wants.”

“Trust me, I’ve never had a problem asserting myself.” Cori laughed as hard as Mayde.

Cori left feeling much better about her own thoughts, but no less guilty about going to that appointment without telling Dylan first. Her guilt over touching Roger was real and she had to tell her husband the truth. But as she lay in the bathtub and recalled Roger’s cock in her hand, it wasn’t guilt she felt. Cori imagined Roger was hard for her, and she was making him harder. Eyes closed, enveloped by the warm, fragrant bathwater, Cori thought about stroking Roger’s meat, making him moan, and her heart raced. Fingers dipped between her thighs, smoothing over the manicured, sparse, silky light hair of her mound, and slid into her crevice. Her button was awake and throbbed when she touched it. Cori chewed her bottom lip and sank deeper into the water.

Roger watched her jerking him, one hand greasing his pole while the other handled his sac. He stared at her helplessly, like she held his life in her hands. His body was tense with desire—as tense as his cock. No, he wasn’t quite her type, but Cori was soaked fantasizing about handling his cock. She rubbed her button in tighter circles, her other hand strumming at a nipple, an electric line connecting the two and energizing her building peak. Cori thought of Roger grabbing her tits as he had Mayde’s. She always focused on what she’d do to a client when she thought of this but seeing Mayde made her see that she wanted to be touched too. Letting Roger handle her like that would be thrilling. Cori wanted his hands on her while she worked his meat.

The fantasy was potent, and Cori was already charged from watching the session earlier. She bit her lip harder, but the breathy moans still filled the echoey bathroom, bouncing off the condensation-slicked tiles. Cori tried to channel the girl who could make herself come silently in a lecture hall. Water almost sloshed out of the tub as she wriggled, her being frenzied before it seized and she climaxed with a startled cry like she’d been stabbed. A tiny death. Cori groaned and smiled as she enjoyed the aftershocks. And then it was shattered.

“Uh, pizza’s here. Do you want some?” Dylan asked from the doorway.

Chapter Eleven

Dylan had paused outside the bathroom when he heard the soft breathy sounds coming from his wife and the gentle, rhythmic splashing of the water. He didn't know for a fact that Cori masturbated in the bathtub, but he'd always suspected it. She often came out of the tub with her creamy pale cheeks rosier than just warm water would have accounted for.

The door to the bedroom had been closed and unlocked, but the en suite bathroom door had been left open. Cori wasn't usually so reckless, but probably assumed he'd be downstairs with Baines the whole time. His cock sprang to full attention when he heard the sounds, and it stilled the words in his throat. Instead of asking if his wife wanted a slice of mushroom and black olive pizza, Dylan stood at the door as he listened to the sounds floating from the humid bathroom. It was Cori touching herself and the rising volume of her moans informed him she was close to finishing. He couldn't remain lurking in the doorway and leaned through to find exactly what he expected. Dylan almost dropped a hand to touch himself as he watched his wife doing it.

The tub was to his left, with a vanity to his right and the toilet beyond it. A linen closet was between him and the tub and Dylan had to step farther into the bathroom to see her. The en suite bathroom in their forty-year-old house was long and narrow, and they'd bumped out the one wall into the bedroom to create space for the wider soaking tub Cori had insisted on having. Dylan had been annoyed by that as it made the project much more expensive. If they hadn't had Baines to lead them through the project and do much of the hard work, it would have been out of their financial reach. But seeing Cori in there now, rubbing one out, made it all worthwhile. Well, that and the sex they'd had in the bathroom a handful of times over the years.

His heart raced watching his wife laid out before him, her knees and head up out of the murky water. Her tits were non-existent on her back, but her chest still rose to expose her pale, strawberry pink nipples when she took a deep, gasping breath. The hand between her thighs didn't rub frenzied, but focused on her clit, rubbing it deliberately. Dylan filed that away in his brain as to how she liked it. This wasn't the first time he'd seen his wife masturbate, but it was the first time he'd spied on her doing it—doing it just for herself. The other times he'd watched her were because he'd asked for it and she'd been performing. That never lasted long anyway. Dylan couldn't keep his hands off her.

Her pink lips parted, and she licked them, gasping, before chewing on her lower lip to stifle a louder moan. His cock surged in his sweatpants and Dylan held onto the wall as he was dizzyed by the sudden rush of blood from his head. Cori was a ravishing, stunning sight—the most beautiful thing he'd ever seen. Secretly watching her touch herself was wildly erotic. Those videos he'd been watching online paled when compared to his wife getting off in the flesh.

Dylan noticed something off about his wife when she'd come home, and it played into the taboo fantasies that bloomed in his brain as he watched Cori. What was she thinking about as she rubbed her clit? She'd had treatment appointments into the afternoon and Dylan pictured her crossing the line with a client, grabbing his cock jacking it until his jizz geysered into the air. Even if Cori didn't jerk off a client—the more likely scenario—he still imagined that she was tempted, and that temptation matched the fantasies they'd been sharing had Cori so horny that she'd run up to the tub to rub one out.

Cori slipped deeper into the water and teased a nipple. Her moans became deeper, and it looked like she rubbed her clit harder. Her tight, firm abs clenched as she worked her core. Dylan had never wanted a window into his wife's mind more. He would have given anything to know exactly what was in her brain as she was about to come.

An insane thought burst into his brain: what if it had been Baines who came up to ask Cori if she wanted a slice? What if it was his best friend standing there, spying on Cori masturbating? A hot knife of ecstasy stabbed his gut and twisted. Baines wouldn't just watch. He'd go into that bathroom and take over. In this dark fantasy, Cori would let him. He saw Baines moving her hand and pushing his fingers inside her, Cori crying out and reaching for his cock, which was somehow exposed for her. Picturing his best friend and his wife made Dylan physically ill, but he nearly came in his pants without touching himself. But he didn't get too far down that road because Cori's sharp gasp signaled her climax, demanding his full attention on the sexy reality before him.

Tension leaked from her body and Dylan was suddenly conscious that he was a Peeping Tom about to be discovered. He adjusted himself in his sweatpants and forced a jovial tone, asking, "Uh, pizza's here. Do you want some?"

Cori jumped, sloshing water onto the tiled floor and soaking the bathmat.

"Jeez, Dylan. You scared the hell out of me!"

"Sorry, I would have said something sooner, but I didn't want to break your focus."

"How long were you standing there?" She seemed amused not angry that he'd been watching.

"I'm not sure. Time stood still. It was quite a show."

"Perv. I didn't know you liked to watch so much."

"Really?" Dylan asked, chuckling. "Besides, who's the perv? I'm not the one upstairs getting off while there's company in the house."

Cori rolled her eyes. "Does Baines really count as company? I swear he practically lives here when he's between girlfriends."

"Maybe not, but you didn't lock the door. Would you have wanted him wandering in here?" Dylan felt the knife twist in his guts again just suggesting it.

"Might be worth it just to see the look on his face. It might finally shut him up."

"Don't think so, Cor. I bet he'd have lots to say if he saw what I just did."

"Haha. Very funny. Call him up here and let's find out."

"You love pushing it. One of these days I'm going to surprise you and not back down," he replied.

Dylan thought of what Baines had said downstairs. You know Cori loves the attention, right? She always has. Deep down, he knew Baines was right. Cori was the most social person he knew. She didn't seek attention and would swear it didn't matter to her, but she loved it. She was always in the thick of it when they went out. Cori had always been the girl in the middle of the dance floor dancing with abandon. She did it because she was feeling it, but she loved the resulting eyes on her.

"Oh, babe. You're not down. Not at all," Cori said, pointedly staring at his pointer. He'd repositioned it, but his bulge was still obvious. It didn't help that she was still very naked in front of him.

"Can't blame me. Just you naked makes me hard, but seeing that..."

Cori twisted and came up out of the water, kneeling in the tub. "Since that's my fault, I guess I'd better help you with it then. Come here."

Water soaked the front of his sweatpants when she grabbed him by the waistband and pulled him closer. She solved that problem by yanking them down to his ankles with his underwear. His cock sprang up, strong and needy. Cori grasped and stroked him, and Dylan wondered if his was the first dick in her hand today. More blood pulsed to his prick, and he groaned. She looked up at him, smiled, and took him in her mouth.

Dylan went all wobbly and weak in the knees when his wife smoothly slid those full, ruby lips down his shaft, taking him right to the back of her throat. Cori had never been one to mess around with a blowjob. She could tease when she was in the mood, and her technique was amazing, but mostly Cori locked her lips around a cock and power sucked it. She did fantastic things with her tongue on the underside while she sucked, and her hand work was on point, but she was all about just popping it into her mouth and taking control. It made Cori a natural if she did decide to offer extra services with her massage therapy treatments. Cori squeezed and worked his base with her hand, but made the magic happen with that talented mouth, bringing her husband close to coming very quickly.

"Are you ever coming back down? Do I need to send up a search party?" Baines called from beyond the room.

It sounded like Baines was at the bottom of the steps, but he could decide to come upstairs. Dylan remembered he'd left the bedroom door open. There was nothing to stop his friend from walking in on them. Dylan panicked and began to pull back, but Cori kept a tight grip on him and sucked ever harder.

"Shit, Cor, the bedroom door's open."

Cori came off him with a loud lip smack. Her lips glistened with saliva and all he wanted was to get his prick back between them, but Baines... She kept her hold on him. "I guess I'd better be quick then," she replied. She took his head between her lips and sucked, slathering it with her tongue. It was so intense Dylan thought he might faint as he came.

"He could walk in," he whined. Dylan had never been so torn.

"Don't worry, I'll be done it a minute. I need practice getting it done quickly anyway. Time is money, right?" Cori rubbed his head against her lips between her words.

"Aw, fuck, Cor."

The words were a strangled moan because she swallowed him again, redoubling her efforts, sucking like she was trying to drain the life out of him through his cock. Cori bobbed hard and fast. Dylan's toes curled in his socks and his balls tightened. He was almost there.

"Everything okay?" Baines called. He sounded closer, but not in the bedroom.

"Yeah, be right there," Dylan shouted, voice up two octaves.

Dylan looked down at his wife and thought about her time is money comment and it was a stranger's cock in her mouth. Cori was sucking cock for money, and that was all he needed. An intense buzz exploded out from his balls as his essence pumped up through his shaft and into her hungry, sucking mouth. It hit the back of her throat and she coughed but kept sucking. Dylan instinctively held the back of her head and kept his cock in her mouth as his balls drained. Cori coughed again and pushed him back as cum bubbled from her lips. She pulled back as the last of his load oozed from his tip.

"Hey, don't choke me," she complained, wiping her lips on the back of her hand. She sounded genuinely annoyed.

"Uh, sorry, got carried away. That was wild. I wasn't expecting it," he gasped staggering back to lean against the vanity.

Cori softened and smiled. "Choking is extra."

Dylan chuckled. "You're crazy."

"That's why you love me."

"One of the reasons."

Baines noticed right away that Dylan's sweatpants were different. The pair Cori soaked were gray. His new pair were black.

"You okay, dude? You look kind of winded. What happened upstairs?"

"Yeah, I'm good. What are you talking about?" Dylan replied, bluffing his way through.

Baines laughed. "Don't let me get in the way. It's cool that you're still sneaking away for a quickie after like twenty years of marriage. I would still be doing it too if I had a wife like Cori."

"Did I hear my name?" Cori asked, walking into the kitchen. She'd come down just behind Dylan and heard the exchange. She thought it was funny that Baines saw through them, but saw Dylan was flustered. It was cute.

"He was, uh..."

"I was telling Dylan I thought you were upstairs fucking," Baines proudly announced.

"And you didn't come up? I'm disappointed," Cori said, laughing.

"Is that an invitation? If I'd known you guys were into that, I would have run upstairs," Baines said.

"We are not into that," Dylan interjected.

"Yeah, I wasn't thinking threesome. I thought maybe you'd sit in the corner and jerk off while Dylan took care of me. He doesn't need your help for that," Cori said.

Baines slapped Dylan on the back. He had a slice of pepperoni pizza in the other. "I wasn't saying my boy couldn't get the job done. Just saying if two's company, three's more fun."

"I don't think that's the saying," Cori replied, reaching around Baines to snag a slice of black olive and onions from one of the boxes on the kitchen island.

"You have your sayings. I have mine," Baines answered, shrugging.

Cori fetched a plate for herself and laid her pizza on it before grabbing two more. Neither of the boys had gotten plates for themselves. At least Dylan had a paper towel under his slice. Baines just ate over the pizza box. She caught Baines tracking the jiggling points of her nipples as she moved, and her baggy t-shirt brushed against them. When she threw on the t-shirt and leggings after the bath, she'd skipped a bra. She'd taken her wet hair out of the braid too, brushing it out. Most guys would be more careful about checking out their buddy's wife, but that was Baines. If Dylan noticed, he didn't seem to care.

"So, you're not denying you were fucking up there while you left me waiting down here?" Baines asked after washing down a mouthful of pizza with beer.

"We were not having sex," Cori flatly declared.

"His pants are changed. Your hair is different. I don't believe you."

"Who cares what you believe, man?" Dylan said.

Cori was sorely tempted to just tell him, I was up there blowing my husband. Jealous? She would have, but Dylan would have lost it. Hard to believe he was the same man who was practically encouraging her to jerk off her clients for extra cash. She took a bite of her pizza and made a sour face. Black olive and onion pizza didn't go well with mouthwash. She dropped the pizza to her plate.

"No need to be hostile, dude," Baines said.

Cori planted both hands on the island and leaned toward Baines. The V-neck of her worn t-shirt may have hung low enough to give him a peek. His eyes flickered like he was trying to get away with it. "We did not have sex. We're not that quick," she said, thinking Dylan's been fast lately. She knew the reason, of course, and wondered how he'd handle her confession. It was still a push on whether he'd be angry or aroused. She hoped the blowjob she'd given him would ease the blow. Cori looked Baines in the eye and finally caught him peeking. Dylan had gone to the fridge for a fresh beer, so she let him look, adding, "Not saying anything else. You'll have to use your imagination."

"Hey, are we getting back to the game?" Dylan asked. When he turned back, Cori had straightened up and turned to get a glass of water.

"Yeah, sure," Baines answered. He asked Cori, "You joining us?"

"Why not? I could use some chill time," she replied.

Chapter Twelve

Dylan could see Cori was antsy throughout the game. Baines sat next to him on the couch, leaving her to curl up in the chair to the side. She checked her phone and bounced and looked like she couldn't wait for the game to be over. He knew she didn't care about hockey, but it was strange to see his wife so distracted. The only thing that brought her back into the moment was when Baines bantered with her. Wisecracks and flirting kept Cori present. Dylan would have asked her what was on her mind, but he suspected it was something she didn't want to discuss with Baines there, or she would have just brought it up herself.

Cori's distraction led to his own. Normally, Dylan would have let it slide until they had a chance to talk about it, but he was so turned around these days that he couldn't help guessing what was on her mind. He went right to her job and down all kinds of dark paths about Cori doing something to a client. It was nutty paranoia in the best and worst ways. Dylan would be hurt if Cori did something without discussing it with him first, but then it was incredibly sexy to think that she was so tempted she just lost control and did it. He knew his Cori would never actually do that, but if she did... Dylan's problem was that he wasn't ready to admit he wanted her to do anything. If he couldn't be fully honest with himself, how could he be honest with Cori? He used to be confused by how the thought of Cori jerking off a client made him nauseous and hard at the same time. Dylan just accepted it now. He had no choice. The bizarre feelings had only grown stronger as his fantasies moved on from Cori just jerking off a client. He'd just thought about her sweet lips wrapped around another man while she was blowing him. Dylan wondered if he needed professional help.

The game ended with a Flyers blowout and Baines tried to linger as usual. The kids had both come home earlier and gone right up to their rooms, ignoring the drinking adults. Dylan tried to hustle him toward the door and became annoyed with Cori when she asked if he was sober enough to drive. The couch was always available she reminded him, while Dylan was ready to toss him out the door. It wasn't the compassionate response, but he was a little drunk himself, and he wanted his wife alone. Baines flashed that charming grin and insisted he was fine, straightening his spine as he gave Cori a crushing hug and made his way out the door. Dylan shook his head and laughed. It was the only response. Baines held onto Cori way too long because he wanted her braless tits pressed against them. He'd been checking out her points all night, getting less subtle about it the more he drank. Dylan didn't mind if Cori didn't, and she clearly didn't. She likes the attention, Baines had reminded him. What Baines didn't know was that Dylan liked her getting the attention too.

Dylan would have left clean-up for the morning. He was exhausted and knew Cori was too, but she couldn't just leave it. He followed her into the family room where she collected empty beer bottles. He gathered the plates, choosing a moment with his back to her to ask, "What's up?"

Cori sighed. "I'm exhausted. Today was incredibly long."

"Yeah, me too. I'm shocked you were up so late with us. You're never up this late on a school night."

"I wasn't that tired, I guess."

"Or there's something on your mind."

"Am I that obvious?"

"You are this time," he answered, patting himself on the back. Dylan was aware he wasn't the most perceptive husband.

"Hold on. Let me get rid of this stuff." Cori sounded like she was stalling.

Dylan took the plates to the kitchen and rinsed them before placing them in the dishwasher, while Cori dropped the clanking bottles into the recycling. He thought she went back to the family room to shut out the lights, but when he followed to see what delayed her, he found Cori sitting on the couch, wringing her hands, and chewing her bottom lip. She looked up at him and visibly squared her shoulders.

"I need to tell you something."

Icy fingers of dread crept into his chest. Those were some of the most daunting words in the English language, right up there with we need to talk. “I guess I should sit down,” he replied.

Cori waited for him to sit beside her on the couch before continuing. “You know the stuff we’ve been talking about? The stuff with my work?”

“How could I forget?” he replied, smiling even though he didn’t feel it. He was anything but light in that moment.

Those icy fingers turned into a deep freeze and Dylan couldn’t breathe. He’d wondered how he’d react if Cori actually did something. Dylan was sure he was about to find out. Why was he getting hard?

“I’ve been thinking about it on my own. I’m not saying I want to do it. That’s not what I need to tell you. But I am curious, and I’ve been talking to Mayde about it more, and she wanted me to come with her on an appointment. I told her no, but she was insistent. Mayde can be very convincing.”

“You went,” he said simply. Dylan felt suspended in the air, waiting for his tether to snap and drop him into the abyss. “On that kind of appointment?”

“Yes. She was very insistent.”

“She kidnapped you,” he deadpanned.

“I wanted to go,” she admitted. “I don’t know why, but I’m curious.”

Dylan knew why she was curious, but it wasn’t the time to press that.

“I just went to see what it’s like. I was only there to watch,” she continued.

“Okay,” he carefully said. Dylan sensed a gigantic but, but he had to let Cori tell it. His cock rose with his dread. “And? Tell me all about it.”

“It was weirdly normal, most of it. The guy was normal. Just a typical business type guy.”

“Who pays for hand jobs...”

“Usually,” she replied, avoiding his eyes.

Dylan’s suspicion spiked. She couldn’t be this nervous if all she did was watch.

“Anyway, it was mostly normal. Mayde was dressed differently than she would for a regular client. Her tits were out. This guy, Roger, likes that she said.”

“Her tits are out, she’s giving him a massage...”

“Right. She turns him over. The guy is hard. Like, fully hard. I can see it from where I’m sitting across the room. His shorts are all pushed out. But Mayde ignored it, like I would if that happened, until she didn’t.”

“Which you wouldn’t do? Stop ignoring it, I mean,” he said. He couldn’t help himself.

“Of course not,” she replied, a touch defensively.

“So, she jerked him off?” Dylan needed her to get to it. He was dying inside, and his balls were aching like he hadn’t come in her mouth just a couple hours earlier.

“Mayde started out playing with it, but Roger wanted more. Most of the time she jerks him off, but sometimes she does more and that’s what he wanted. Mayde didn’t miss a beat. She just started going down on him.”

Dylan sat back on the couch and exhaled, trying to order it all in his mind and picture the scene. This Mayde girl had a guy on the table and started blowing him. He pictured it just like one of the Jessy Deen videos, except his wife was sitting in the corner watching it all go down. His cock twitched in his sweatpants. Dylan couldn’t believe it. It just didn’t seem like the Cori he knew. She didn’t even watch porn, as far as he knew, but she sat back and watched a live blowjob?

“Just like that? She just blew him, with you there?”

“Yeah, pretty much. I don’t know what to say. It just happened. I knew something was going to happen, but not that. It wasn’t anything like I expected—none of it.”

“What was it like?” he asked, trying to read her. Cori was never one to hide her feelings, but she was being atypically opaque.

“I don’t know, babe. It was strange. I felt like I shouldn’t be there like I should give them privacy, but the point was for me to be there. Mayde wanted me there, and Roger didn’t seem to mind. I bet he liked it.”

“Yeah, he did,” Dylan interjected, perhaps too enthusiastically.

Cori smiled. “Yeah, he probably did. I felt frozen like I didn’t know what to do. I’ve never seen anything like that—not out in the open like that. Y’know, I saw people fooling around in the woods, maybe a surreptitious blowjob in a dark rec room when we were partying as teenagers. And you know how Andi and Seth’s parties can get after midnight, but that’s not like someone just giving a blowjob right in front of you in the middle of the afternoon.”

“And doing it for money.”

“That too.”

Dylan knew she was holding back, and it was driving him insane. He understood how she felt when she had to pull things out of him. It was like she was torturing him on purpose, but she wasn't. He could see this wasn't easy for her.

“How did you feel, Cor?”

Her cheeks flushed. “Once I got past that awkward feeling, it was hot. Mayde's good at what she does. She had that guy in the palm of her hand. I know it was for money, but it was still sex, and it was hot to watch a sexy woman go down on a guy.”

“Was he hot?” Dylan asked, breathlessly picturing some fit, hung guy like the ones she serviced in his fantasies.

Cori shrugged. “He was fine. He wasn't gross, and that was enough. It wasn't really about him, specifically. Here was this girl I know doing this sexual thing in front of me, and she liked me watching. She made that clear. Mayde looked at me while she did it.”

“You liked that?”

“Yeah, I liked it. It's been ages, but you know I like a hot girl.”

“I remember. Well, you've told me anyway. You've never let me see.”

“Maybe, if you're very good,” she teased.

“What did you do while you watched? Did you, uh, touch yourself?”

“Not really,” Cori replied, going deeper crimson. “Like, I was squeezing my thighs, but I wasn't going to do that, not with them there. Not with Mayde watching me.”

“That's a shame. It would have been incredible. You must have been boiling over.”

Cori looked at him, eyes challenging. “You would have been okay with that? If I touched myself in front of them?”

“Yeah,” he answered, breathless.

“I need to be sure.”

Dylan groaned when she pushed a hand inside his sweatpants. He was hard and throbbing for her. God, he wanted Cori to give him a hand job. Or another blowjob. Now that he knew what was on her mind when she did it earlier, he wanted a repeat. No question she was thinking about Mayde servicing that client when she was touching herself and then when she blew him. She pulled on his sweatpants impatiently and he thought he'd hit paydirt. Dylan helped her shove them down and he closed his eyes, ready to feel her mouth on him, but it didn't come. He looked at her and Cori was shimmying out of her leggings. She straddled him, holding his dick up. Her damp heat enveloped him, and he turned to jelly. Her molten core pulled him in, and Dylan moaned. He wanted it so badly he almost forgot they were in the family room and the kids were right upstairs.

"Cor...the kids...they're upstairs..." he moaned, knowing he was insane for complaining.

"Swear to god, babe, if you try to stop me now..."

Her slate-blue eyes—normally so cool—blazed at him, and Dylan knew if he stopped her now he would pay for it for weeks. They were on such a roll, he couldn't risk it. Instead, he put his hands on her narrow hips, enjoying the feeling of her body as she moved on him, teasing him inside her.

"Okay, but we have to be quiet," he insisted.

"I'll scream if I want to. Don't you want to make me scream, babe?"

"Yeah, but..."

Dylan cut off when she tightened her core, squeezing him inside her. An advantage of having such a fit wife was that she could do incredible things with her body. Her hips only betrayed slight movement, but she worked her pussy like a pro, milking his cock. He was thankful for that blowjob earlier, or he would have blown his load inside her in two seconds. He wanted to pull her shirt off and feel her whole body, but it was better to leave it on in case they had to scramble for cover. Dylan ran his hands up under it and cupped her tits. She moaned and fluttered around him when he strummed her nipples.

"How turned on did you get watching them?" he breathed.

"Very," Cori moaned.

"Were you wet?" He started jacking up into her.

"Very...soaked, babe. I wanted to touch myself so bad..."

"You were jealous, weren't you?"

"Ahh, yeah..."

Cori started rocking on him, providing sweet, sweet friction. He pinched her nipples and she yelped.

"You wanted to do more than watch..."

Hesitation, then, "Yes..."

"Switch places with Mayde..."

“Yeah... I was jealous...” Cori moved faster on him, sliding up and down his shaft.

“You wanted to suck him...”

“Yeah...ahh...it was hot...”

“You would have done it, Cori. You watched it and you want to do it too...”

“Yeah...god...yeah...”

Cori pounded onto him, and Dylan pumped his hips up to meet her, spiking up into her grasping sheath. His hands moved to her ass and clutched it, reveling in the feeling of her tight muscles working as she rode him.

“Should have done it...” he moaned.

“You want me to...”

“Yes...fuck yes...”

“Want me to jerk off a client...”

“Cori...yes...”

“Suck his dick...”

“Oh fuck...Cori...yes...yes!”

Her eyes drilled into him as hard as he drilled into her pussy. Cori asked, “You want me to fuck them?”

“Uhhh...uhnn...Cor...fuck...”

Dylan had never seen it in a Jessie Deen video, but it was so easy to picture. Cori climbing onto the massage table, grabbing a cock she made hard with her mouth, and sitting on it. Riding it like she rode him on the couch. Riding so hard the massage table screeched across the floor. This stranger playing with her tits, unable to believe how lucky he was that a piece of ass like Cori would fuck him, willing to pay anything for it...

“Cor...” Dylan cried, fingers digging into her ass.

“Ahh...babe...ahh...yeah...”

Cori locked around him and buried her face in his shoulder, muffling her cries. Her entire body tightened on him like she was trying to burrow into him. Dylan wrapped his arms around her and pulled her against him. They were one as they came together, both their heads filled with dirty, forbidden thoughts. Dylan was still panting as Cori came back to normal. It was typical. Her stamina was incredible.

“I love you, babe,” she cooed into his shoulder.

“Love you too. You’re incredible, Cor.”

“You’re not angry I went with Mayde to watch?”

“No, it’s cool. I wish you’d told me first, but you’re a big girl. You can make your own decisions.”

It was the truth. Dylan felt like he should have felt weird about it, but he didn’t. He just didn’t think rationally on the subject. He didn’t even understand why Cori had been so worried to tell him.

“There’s one more thing I need to tell you, babe.”

Dylan tensed, right back on that fraying tether, suspended above that dark abyss. He didn’t have the whole story yet. Of course, Cori didn’t just sit back and watch. That wasn’t his wife. Since when had she ever been content to just sit back and watch? She was always the one to jump right in. What had she done? Did Cori hold this Roger’s cock while Mayde sucked it? Did Cori take over?

“I touched him,” she whispered, like the words were too forbidden to say aloud.

He knew it! Cori jerked the guy off! She saw Mayde handling that hard cock and she couldn’t help herself. She wanted to play too. The tether snapped and Dylan was falling. His heart was in his throat, his stomach pinned up in his rib cage. And while he was utterly spent, his cock still twitched inside Cori.

“I didn’t jerk him off,” she hurriedly added. “It wasn’t sexual...”

You grabbed his dick? How isn’t that sexual? His brain screamed. Outwardly, he tried to stay calm. But his wife grabbed another guy’s dick! Cori jerked off some stranger! Did Mayde split the money with her? Was Cori an actual whore now? Dylan couldn’t voice any of that. He was speechless.

“Mayde did her thing. She did what she did, and when she was done and it was time to clean up, she told me to clean him up. And I did it.”

Cori had never sounded so timid. His confident wife sounded like she wanted to disappear. She clung to him tighter than before.

“What did you do?” he asked, keeping his voice even. “How did you...”

“I had a washcloth, and I cleaned his area—his dick. I wiped all around it, I cleaned up his, uh... I held him. I had to touch it.”

“With the washcloth?”

“Yes... No. Not just the washcloth. I held it up while I was wiping up his...”

“His jizz. You touched his jizz, Cor.”

“I tried hard not to. Jeez, babe, I know I fucked up.”

Cori pulled back from him, but Dylan couldn't look at her until she forced him. She looked like the Cori he'd always known, his wife of nineteen years, but something was different. He saw something different in her. Cori had touched another man's dick and she wasn't the same. That was probably irrational, but it was how Dylan felt. Cori held another man's dick that day. His cock twitched again inside her. He couldn't get hard again, not after coming a couple of times in so many hours, but his cock desperately wanted to. His cock betrayed him. Cori had to feel it. She had to feel that this news aroused him, even as his face was shocked. He was still falling.

“Say something, babe.”

“I... I don't know what to say, Cor. I mean, you touched another man's dick.”

“I didn't jerk him off, or do anything else...”

“But you touched it. You didn't have to. It wasn't your client. You must have wanted to.”

Cori looked away. He knew she was trying to dodge the truth. “I wouldn't say that. If Mayde hadn't asked...”

“You touched it because you wanted to. I'm not saying you wanted to fuck him, Cori. But you were horny from seeing what you did, and you wanted to touch his dick. You wanted to be part of it.”

“I guess I did,” she finally admitted. “What you're saying is true. I wasn't thinking straight. It was so far out of my experience. I felt like I was in a dream, like none of it was real, so if I did something...”

Dylan felt the same way. He didn't know if he was in a nightmare or a dream, but it did not feel like real life. His wife was not touching other men's cocks in real life, she wasn't cleaning them. She wasn't thinking about doing more. Dylan wasn't thinking about Cori doing more in real life. But she'd really done it, and a very real part of him liked it. And he had to face that. They both had to face what they were feeling.

“Do you hate me?” she asked.

“Of course not, Cori. I love you. I'll always love you.”

“Do you think I cheated?”

“I don't know. I don't think so. You said it wasn't sexual. I mean, it was sexual, but he wasn't hard at that point, right?”

“Oh, no. Mayde took good care of him. Couldn’t have done anything with it if I’d wanted to, and I’m not saying I wanted to.”

“But you kind of did. We need to be honest with each other, Cori.”

“Part of me did, yeah. But I’d never hurt you like that. I would never cheat on you, go behind your back...”

“Part of me likes it too,” he confessed.

Cori smiled. It was a weirdly sweet smile, considering their discussion, but no weirder than the fact they were having that discussion with her straddling him, his spent cock still nestled just inside her. “I know, I can feel it. If you want to...”

“I want to, but I don’t think I can. Probably not a good idea right now, anyway. We need to figure this out.”

Her eyes narrowed. “What’s there to figure out?”

“Cori, honey, we’re dancing all around it. It’s okay if we talk about it. We love each other. We’ve been together twenty-four years. We should be able to talk about anything.”

“That’s usually my line, babe.”

“That’s right, which makes this weirder.”

“What are you trying to say, Dylan?”

He took a deep breath. Dylan couldn’t believe the words that were about to come out of his mouth, but he felt he had to say them. This had been running around in his head for weeks now and if he didn’t confront it, it would ruin him. If they truly loved each other, they shouldn’t have to hide from it.

“Cori, you’re obviously interested in this. You didn’t go with Mayde today out of idle curiosity.”

“Babe, I don’t think I ever could...”

“You took a step in that direction today. A baby step, but a step. And I don’t want you to say what you think I need to hear. Say what’s in your head, what’s in your heart. I’ll go first. When I think about you doing it, doing stuff to clients, it drives me crazy. I feel like it turns my brain inside out, but it’s like mainlining coke straight into my dick. I don’t think anything has ever hit me like this, Cori.”

“You want me to do it?” she asked.

“I’ll never say that. It can’t be about me.”

“You’re my husband. It’s as much about you as it is about me. We’re a team.”

“I know, but you can’t do something like this because I want you to, Cori. If you do it, and this is still hypothetical, but if you want to do it, I’m with you. It’ll be like my darkest fantasies come true. You’ll be the ultimate sex goddess, so hot men pay you for it.”

Cori laughed. It was good to hear her laugh. “Now you’re being ridiculous, Dylan.”

“I mean every word, Cori.”

“And you think you could handle it, if I did it?”

“I think so. I’ve run it down in my head enough times.”

“You’re obsessed!” She slapped him in the chest.

“A little. So are you.”

“Maybe a little. I am not agreeing to anything. I still don’t know if it’s something I can do, no matter how curious I am. I tell myself it’s just jacking a guy off, who cares? But it does mean something more, doesn’t it? I’m a married woman. It’s touching another man.”

“But not cheating. Not if I’m on board.”

“Not cheating, but not normal, babe. And I need to be sure I’m okay with it—with what it makes me.”

“It makes you a sex goddess. I told you.”

“Really, stop it. You just sound insane now, and I don’t know if I can trust anything else you say.” They both laughed. “Hypothetically, what would the limits be?”

“You mean what’s on the menu?”

“That’s one way to put it.”

Dylan considered it. It hadn’t occurred to him that Cori would possibly screw another man. Oddly, that thought never entered his head until they’d just been having sex. But he’d imagined her doing just about everything else. Cori doing everything else made his blood boil, but did he really want his wife blowing other guys, no matter how hard it made him? Dylan knew the right answer, but then there was the answer his dick shouted.

“I think maybe you start slow, and we see how it goes. I want you to feel free to do what you want.”

“If, babe. If I do it, I start slow. That’s a good plan. I appreciate you offering me that freedom, but I don’t want to do anything you’re uncomfortable with.”

Dylan laughed. “I don’t know that I’m comfortable with any of it, not in a normal way, but that’s not stopping me. I’m trusting I’ll figure it out.”

“And if you can’t?”

“We stop, and it was just a crazy experiment.”

“Except I’m the lab rat. I need to think about this. I’m not making a decision like this with post-orgasm brain. I’m still flooded with endorphins.”

“We could use the money. We could fill that vacation fund fast...”

Dylan knew he’d crossed the line to encouraging, but he couldn’t help himself. He was growing to like that queer, queasy feeling the subject provoked.

“Slow down there, babe. Don’t start spending my hand job money yet. Maybe none of my clients would even be interested.”

“I don’t believe that, Cor.”

She looked thoughtful. “I can think of one, maybe two who are possibilities, but jeez, how do I even bring something like that up?”

“I’m sure Mayde can help you with that.”

“She’d be happy to. There’s still the other client that Janine’s been pressing me to take. She’s hinted that he expects more than just treatments, but she won’t come right out and say what he’s after, which is kind of scary.”

“You said she’s all about keeping up the pretense that she doesn’t know what goes on behind closed doors.”

“Right, but if he expects more than I want to give...”

“Cori, you’re the strongest, toughest woman I know. I have no doubt that you can handle this guy, whoever he is. And you’ll be carrying mace if you do this.”

“I already carry it, babe. I’m not stupid.”

“If you want this client...”

“Janine says he’s very generous.”

“Even better!”

“You’re way too excited about pimping me out, babe.”

“What can I say? You’ve got to strike while the iron’s hot. And no one’s hotter than you.”

“You’re so damned cheesy. On that note, I’m going to go clean up.”

Cori peeled away from him and grabbed her leggings. She didn’t bother to put them on when she scampered out of the room. Dylan couldn’t believe she was going to run through the house bottomless, but that was Cori. He could see that some of that free spirit she’d had when they met was returning. He loved seeing it, but he was scared. Dylan knew they'd unleashed something tonight, but he had no idea where it would take them, or how he'd handle it all. He still felt like he was falling and was scared to death of what hitting the bottom would feel like.

About the Author

I'm the stereotypical wife and mom with a dirty little secret: I have lots of fantasies about what all my friends and neighbors are up to behind closed doors, and I turn those sexy fantasies into the stories I love to share with the world. I could be the sweet mom you see in the stands at the soccer game or the pretty woman at the supermarket you wonder about as she's squeezing the melons.

Most of my stories are about married women looking to bust out and explore their wild side, often with the encouragement of their husbands--and sometimes without it. If you like daring stories about women of a certain age embracing their sexuality, I'm the girl for you.
