A WOMAN IN A BAR

When I looked back over my shoulder at the woman who Douglas had been captivated by for the past five minutes, I noticed her left ankle first. It was bobbing and twisting in the air. A flirtatious ankle. Her shapely foot was encased in an expensive gray suede. Sultry cuts in the suede offered windows on her fresh, young skin and the delicious curve of her foot, but only a peek. The heel was long, just a tiny-bit higher than practical, ending in a spike that narrowed to an enticing point. The shoe was professional enough for an executive job. But sexy enough to belong, just as easily, to a high-class hooker.

The suede shoe ended at her ankle, and I started moving my eyes up her calf. A shapely leg, long and athletic. It was all I could really see of her, besides a sliver of her back and the pleasant bubble of her ass on the bar stool.

She had passed our booth from the back entrance. The smell of her had made me lift my eyes from the lengthy article Doug wanted me to look at. (The article impugned the whole county court system, and therefore me, in a money-grabbing crackdown on illegal immigrant DUIs.) By the time I looked up, I saw only a glimpse of shapely legs and a pricey skirt ending the view just above the knee. Again, the clothing was just past the point of absolute propriety. She had an efficient gait, but with a little swing to it, conveying confidence. When she had passed and I looked at Douglas, I could see from the expression on his face that the confidence was merited. He raised his eyebrows and let out a puff of air. "Jesus," he said. "What I wouldn't do to get my hands on that..."

I had decided I had to suffer through the article for another five minutes before it would not be ape-like to turn around and check her out. I tried to look as though I was looking for a waiter.

I turned back to Douglas and expelled a puff of air much the same way he had. I hadn't seen much, but I liked what I saw.

"Why don't women dress like that at our bar?" We had strayed from our usual watering hole, Riker's, precisely because women did not look like this, though neither of us had admitted it to the other.

Douglas laughed. “Because those women are lawyers. They'll either eat your face to sit on the supreme court, or they're unshaven bleeding liberals saving gangsters and terrorists from DUIs.”

I folded up the newspaper and smiled for him. He was most likely talking about Catherine Gates, who probably would eat anyone's face to sit on the Supreme Court, which we should all pray never happened. Doug's wife, curiously, was an “unshaven bleeding liberal.”

It was hard to get a finger on the pulse of Doug's real political views.

“It isn't like John Grisham novels,” he mused, truly working himself into a state of self-pity over the real-life ugliness of female attorneys.

“How bad do you think this is?” I asked him, waving the newspaper around and trying to get back to the potentially career-ruining journalism in my hand.

But Douglas was staring at the woman. Really, deeply, staring.

I turned around again. Now she had rotated on her bar stool, and was tossing her hair. She had a lovely, auburn mane that reminded me of Jordan's hair from long ago. Her ass was turned toward us. Shapely, firm, not spreading at all beneath her weight on the stool, hard from some kind of constant exercise. She had a narrow waist. Every now and again, the momentum of her animated hands turned the stool outward, and we could see the contour of her very full breasts, pressing out on the expensive-looking worsted gray dress.

She had taken up conversation with an absolutely thrilled fat gentleman next to her.

“Hooker,” Douglas said.

I turned back to him.

“What?”

“Ten to one, she's a hooker.”

I rolled my eyes. Douglas saw hookers everywhere, probably because he sincerely hoped they were everywhere and eventually one would proposition him.

“Look how fast she started talking to that guy.”

“She's an attractive woman, Doug. Men talk to attractive women at bars.”

“Yeah but, this guy, he is like a...a gnome, for fuck's sake. He's even uglier than me.”

Our waitress, a twenty-something girl with a plain, Slavic face and an accent that made her seem perpetually bored, appeared in front of us. Rather than saying anything, she swept her eyes over the two of us, following Doug's eyes to the woman at the bar.

She gave a small harrumph, and took out her booklet.

"Another drink?" she asked. Her impenetrable face registered nothing.

Doug, who never missed a chance to be an asshole, reached up and touched her elbow. "Anna, Anna, right?"

Anna, whose name was stitched on her shirt, like everyone else who worked at this bar, looked down at him without changing her expression. She moved her elbow inward and out of his grasp in an almost unnoticeable, and clearly well-practiced movement.

"You think that woman is a hooker?" Doug asked her, moving his head in the direction of the auburn beauty.

Anna tossed her bangs from her eyes as she snapped her head in the woman's direction.

"Redhairs?" she said. She turned back to us. "She's maybe hooker. Hooker is prostitute, right?" Her voice bore no sign of interest.

Doug smiled. "Exactly."

Anna shrugged, the kind of Eastern shrug that had to be Russian, because there were no other people on earth who could give less of a fuck. "Maybe. You are finished, yes?"

Anna didn't wait for the answer. She took our glasses and slid away to the bar to get our tab.

"Why is she talking to this fat bastard, if she isn't a hooker?" Douglas said.

I pinched the bridge of my nose. My mind was returning to the article, and how much of it I knew to be true. I had no idea how Doug could keep his mind on anything else.

"She's like, really laughing at him," he continued.

I started to shake my head.

And that's when I heard it.

The lilting, sweet clatter that is – unmistakably – the somewhat embarrassing, but very endearing, cackle of none other than one Jordan Isabella Goodall.

My wife.

A cold fist clamped down on my heart, and my breath caught in my chest. My limbs turned to stone.

The images I had just seen slammed against the walls of my mind. The auburn hair, the pretty ankle, the nice ass.

Impossible.

The expensive shoes, the expensive suit.

The hand inside my chest relaxed.

And then there it was again.

Chirp-chirp-cackle-chirp.

Anna the waitress set a slip of paper on our table and looked off to the side, with her hand in her pockets.

I was still frozen. Douglas frowned at me, and I watched him fish out his wallet with great, exaggerated moves. My mind was a million miles away, trying to sift through the voices in the bar and single out the voice of the auburn-haired woman.

The one who looked so much like my wife.

But most importantly, sounded exactly like her.

“You okay buddy?” Douglas said. “Bad oysters? You look pale. Fuck. You can't trust this place. You gonna puke?”

I was silent.

My heart was taking over my body and my thoughts. Thunk, thunk, thunk. Rapid, heavy. Blood was filling my ears, drowning out the sounds around me.

Douglas was peering at me.

My attorney brain, a little shocked, sputtered to life.

You have to talk to yourself sometimes. When something terrible happens right there in the courtroom. Right there in front of the jury, and you can't act like everyone else would, and say “Fuck!” and kick a trash can. This situation was trash-can kicking fucked, so I let my inner voice speak to me.

Get it under control, Paddy.

Analyze.

Analyze.

FACT:

There is a woman at the bar who looks like Jordan. This woman appears to be flirting with a man.

FACT:

You do not know this woman is Jordan.

FACT:

If it is Jordan, you do not want Douglas to know she is here.

Cheating on you.

My heart plummeted at the thought.

God, with a fat man.

FACT:

You do not know that if the woman is Jordan, she is cheating on you.

FACT:

The last thing you need is scandal, either way.

Act.

In a courtroom, when things go horribly awry, the best bet is to find a way out. Throw out something crazy, flummox the judge, get a recess.

You can think about your problem later.

The key is to get out.

The immediate problem, then, was not the woman at the bar, but how to get out of this bar without Doug seeing the woman at the bar.

In the event the woman was Jordan.

Stop.

Whether it is Jordan or not is not your problem right now.

Act.

Use your opponent's assumptions against him.

Doug thinks you're sick.

That was it.

That was the ticket.

Act.

My heart slowed. The actor in me, the courtroom actor, took over my body.

I pounded on my chest. "I think...I think I need to get back to the office," I said. "I feel...not so good."

We had to pass the woman at the bar to get out the front door. I going to keep Douglas from looking back at her, and seeing that it was Jordan. Or wasn't Jordan. But either way.

Anna the waitress was still waiting for her money, hands in the pockets of her apron. Her face revealed not a trace of sympathy or interest for my illness.

Douglas paid her, with two fifties, and she took them without asking if we needed change, securing a twenty-five dollar tip for herself.

“Let's go,” I said. I stood up. I wanted Douglas in front of me, but it was going to take some doing.

I started to squeeze through the packed bar and the booths that jutted into the walkway behind them, and then I stopped abruptly. I squeezed back past Doug and leaned into our booth, pretending to have forgotten something. This put Doug ahead of me as we started forward again.

Keep your goal in mind, don't get distracted by your curiosity.

Was it Jordan?

Get out.

Think later.

Later you can think on why your wife is dressed like a high-class hooker in a downtown bar when she should be at home.

We walked past the woman. Jordan. Whatever.

Act.

I looked down and behind me as I passed her, and I pushed Doug forward at the same time. I glimpsed her knees, one crossed over the other, the small hips on the leather seat, the large, very shapely tits, hanging in the expensive fabric like a rounded shelf. My eyes got as far as the hair at her shoulders, when I felt the great momentum of Douglas' large body turning on me.

He wanted to see her face. Who wouldn't?

Act.

I lurched forward, pressing him toward the door. “Oh god,” I said. “I'm going to be sick,” I said. I faked a little gurgle in the back of my throat. “Go!”

Douglas, it could be counted on, was terrified of vomit, ever since a guy had barfed on him back when he first started working at the DAs and spent the whole day bargaining D&Ds and DUIs in the basement of the courthouse. It had been a fiasco. The puke, full of blood, got in his eyes. He had to get tested for HIV.

So, as I had known he would, he moved of his own volition and didn't look back.

He even kicked the front door open. I could feel him gathering speed, trying to get as far away from me as possible. The Mile, where we were, was a firetrap hovel with only one door in front and no windows onto the street. I could get out of here without Doug seeing my wife.

If she was my wife.

And think on this another time.

But at the last moment, I threw caution to the wind, and let curiosity get the better of me.

Because how could I not?

I turned to face the closing door.

I caught only a second of the image, before the door swung closed.

The pretty woman, her face turned to the bar as she spoke, her hand on her jaw. Glittering, beautiful, sexy as hell.

But was it Jordan?

I checked off the things that looked exactly like Jordan:

Long, auburn hair.

Nose, dainty.

Beautifully wrought features, small except for the pouty lower lip.

Large breasts, as improbable as they were on her thin frame.

Was it Jordan?

There was room for error.

There were things that were Not-Jordan:

Bright make-up.

Long, straight hair. Not in a bun.

A fragrance, decidedly un-her.

And finally, time and place: wrong, wrong, wrong.

I stared at the closed door, and I remembered to clutch my stomach for Doug's benefit.

I pretended to retch.

This was not happening.

"Okay. No, the fresh air has me feeling better," I said.

Douglas was frowning at the door. "Let's get out of here," he said. His voice had ceased to be disappointed by the end of his sentence. Doug's life, after all, consisted of disappointment after disappointment.

We walked back to the office. I was glad to have the lie of feeling sick to cover up my need to be inside my own thoughts.

The woman in the bar certainly looked like Jordan. And Jordan, with her huge tits, her small frame, and her very particular shade of red hair, was not an easy woman to look like. How many women looked like her? Almost none.

I looked at Douglas.

He would have said something, if it had occurred to him that the woman was Jordan. Douglas was blatherer. He was embarrassingly indiscreet.

So:

I thought this woman looked like Jordan. But Doug, who had the view of her all that time, and had not hidden the fact that he was staring, had not said: “Hey, that looks like your wife.”

I almost stepped in front of a light rail train. Doug pressed his big hand against my chest. “Jesus,” he said. “Paddy, man. You look sick as fuck.”

I shook my head.

Yet...Doug had only ever met Jordan a few times. Usually she had her hair in a bun. Usually she had no makeup on.

But...Jordan didn't have anything in her wardrobe that expensive. There was that.

(Unless she was keeping it from me. There was that.)

It was a wash.

A wash of circumstantial shit.

I shook my head and tisked aloud.

But why would she go, if she were having an affair, to a bar so close to my office, where her chances of getting caught were so much higher?

I rubbed my forehead with the back of my thumb.

It couldn't be her.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL

When we got to the office, I went to the private bathroom two floors down, where some kind of accounting was done, and called her on my cell.

As the phone rang I stared upward at the pipes that ran like arteries through the whole building, and carried conversations with them. Stupid.

Oh well. She would answer, I would talk, Doug would ask me why I wanted to talk to my wife while I was puking, and that would be that.

This whole thing was silly. Jordan would answer, and I feel like an ass.

The phone purred in my ear, over and over. Click.

Hi -

and for a nanosecond my heart leaped with relief -

- you've reached Jordan Goodall with Arest Greene. I'm unavailable to take your call, please leave me a message with your callback number and the best time to reach you.

"Okay," I said to myself. I pressed "End."

Her voice sounded strange on her message. I realized I hadn't heard it for a long time. The message. I almost never called her. She always answered when I did.

Did her voice sound the tiniest bit sultry?

I wiped my forehead. I was sweating.

This was just the heat, the infernal radiator heat that never ceased in this building.

I summoned the image of the woman in the bar. I knew it was too late to be recalling information: whatever I had really seen was being corrupted by my own paranoia. Now she had her hair in a bun, now she turned to face me and she was Jordan, now she was flipping me off.

The logical quagmire I had stepped into hit me suddenly in the face: by assuming it was Jordan in the bar, I had decided to call her on her cell.

But she wasn't the woman in the bar, so she was home.

I almost laughed out loud.

I called the house.

"If you are a telemarketer, I'm letting you know, it's 9:01 EST and I will be filing a complaint with the FCC."

Olivia. Her voice was made of whorehouse velvet and satin, crimson red and entirely inappropriate for a nineteen-year-old, especially one I had known since age nine.

“Liv,” I said. “It's me.”

A silence.

“Is Jordan there, please?”

Another silence. I felt like I could hear my watch, a gift from Jordan for my birthday, ticking away for hours.

Why the pause?

Finally Olivia's breath rattled through the phone.

“I'm trying to get people to call me 'Olivia.' Or 'Olive,' if you must do something to my name. Liv is just so...Liv Tyler.” she said.

Her voice sounded disinterested, as always.

Olivia and Jordan were full sisters, but they couldn't be more unlike. Jordan was sunny and likeable, responsible and smart, and Olivia was...well, a crazy fucking bitch. Physically, only their enormous tits were similar. Olivia was tall, had big, Amazonian hips, had huge features and dark eyes in pale skin, and did indeed look a great deal like Liv Tyler. No one, upon hearing her called “Liv,” failed to point this out.

“I don't mind Liv Tyler,” she continued, when I didn't answer. She yawned. “It's just, so...”

“Have you been smoking?” I snapped. For a second my problems with Jordan were overshadowed by my irritation with Olivia.

Liv Tyler Deux was the bane of my existence. The last thing I needed on my climb up the ladder was a deadbeat sister-in-law smoking pot in my garage and probably growing it somewhere on my premises.

“Smoking what, Patrick?” Olivia yawned again. Very deliberately, very falsely. She wanted me to know that she was faking. Olivia loved getting under my skin, or anyone's skin, and then acting as though she had no idea what was going on.

“Put Jordan on, would you?” I said, recovering from my flurry of rage and using my Most Patient Voice. With Olivia, like with a toddler or a dog, it never paid to get flustered.

“Jordan...is...not here, I'm afraid.”

The cool feeling I was having before Olivia drove me half-insane with her Cheshire Cat routine started to return. It was spreading out, into my limbs. My skin prickled.

“Where is she?”

“Uh...I don't know. I think...the gym or something like that.”

My temples burned with frustration and I could feel my blood vessels hardening with the pressure. “Did she say where she was going?”

“Probably. But you know I'm not very good at listening.”

Olivia was oh-so-amused with herself.

“Okay. How long has she been gone?”

Olivia's voice cracked back into perfect sobriety like a whip. “I don't know, Patrick. I forgot to set the timer when she left.”

“Could-you-estimate?” I sang.

I could almost see her, holding her fingernails in front of her with amusement, or twitching her tail like a psycho cat. A low hum came from the phone. I knew she was pressing her lips together, a smirk on her mouth. “Mmmmmmmmm....”

And then, perkily:

“Nope.”

I hung up, secretly pleased that it would irritate her that I had done it first.

I stared at the wall. Someone funny had penciled some balls onto a phallus-shaped stain.

Where in the fuck is my wife?

I had half a mind a mind to ditch Doug, and my cases, and return to the bar. Just to verify that it wasn't her.

And that's what you would be doing, isn't it, Patrick?

Because your wife does not own designer suits. She doesn't wear hooker boots. She doesn't flirt with fat men at an expensive bar.

Your wife wears yoga pants and buns, and goes to the gym.

You're imagining things. You haven't had sex forever, you work too much, you never see your wife, her fucking sister is driving you crazy, and you're imagining things.

I put my phone in my pocket.

I had no idea what to do. The amount of work that was piling up upstairs was absurd. I should go, finish my motions, review my notes for tomorrow's dep, think out some solution for the weak and risky Styles domestic violence case, and then go home. To find everything the way it should be: my wife in her bed, Olivia stoned and watching a screen saver while listening to bluegrass-techno or whatever she was into, kids glowing blue beneath their covers, texting eternally into the night.

I walked back upstairs.

“I have to take some of this shit home,” I said. “I feel awful.”

Doug shrugged. He had fished out a sandwich, in spite of having just eaten, and made himself some coffee. “Hope you feel better, man.”

Doug was not a man of ambition, he just hated going home. He liked being a fat, slobby prosecutor, and he liked staying away from his wife, and he liked making sure good police work saw its day in court. He just wanted to eat meat sandwiches (his wife was a vegan) in peace and put people in jail.

I locked my computer down and slipped it into my briefcase.

“Okay.”

“Okay.”

I felt like someone else, someone else entirely, as I fast-walked down the street.

My life was all about looking calm and collected at every moment, and as I headed back to The Mile, I looked more like junkie. My pulse was racing, and my eyes were watering, and I had the undignified walk of the unhinged.

Believe me, I talked to myself all the way there, trying to get myself under control.

I threw open the door to The Mile, and a gust of wind caught my trench coat and my hair. A few patrons turned toward me, and their faces registered mild disgust before they turned back to what they were doing. The beefy bartender folded his arms, ready for trouble if I was going to cause it. I'm sure I looked insane as I scanned the bar.

The man was gone, and so was the woman.

I let the door close.

My jealousy seized me again, and I threw it open, stepping into the restaurant. I sought out Anna, who was busily circulating through her section. I pushed my way through the bar, and grabbed her arm. “Anna,” I said. “Anna. I need you to look at something.”

Her eyes narrowed slightly in irritation, but most of her face remained unchanged.

I held up my phone, showing her a picture of Jordan. “Was this the woman, you know the woman we were talking about earlier, the prostitute, or...Doug asked you if she was? You saw her, right? Was this her?”

Anna looked at the phone, and then lifted her eyes. She looked sleepy. “Maybe her. A lot more makeup. Maybe.” She shrugged. Her face was made of stone. “You are police?”

I shook my head.

What she said next did not seem contingent on how I answered her question. “I am busy.”

She departed.

I turned, all ready to ask like a crazy person at the bar and ask everyone sitting there if they had seen Jordan. The big bartender caught my eye and shook his head.

It was time for me to go, his face said.

So I left.

I drove home much the same way I walked to The Mile. Too fast, not thinking well. I saw my eyes in the mirror and I looked crazy. At a stoplight I patted my hair down.

We had moved, recently, to the suburbs. It had been a depressing moment in both of our lives. It was the place we had always said we didn't want to end up: gated community, cookie-cutter houses, affluent white people everywhere with labradoodles. In truth, the city was either unaffordable or horrible, with nothing in-between. The schools were better, having a pool was nice. The grocery store was clean and had no homeless people in front of it. No one wanted to admit it, but we liked it here. We were suburban people.

Middle age.

The move had required us to get two cars, another thing we hadn't wanted to do.

And Jordan's car, the other car, was not in the garage. I watched the door open to emptiness and my heart began to flutter wildly again.

Olivia was standing, suspiciously and theatrically, in the kitchen. Leaning over the island counter top, flipping through a magazine. She looked up, and when she saw it was me, I saw a mixture of panic and disappointment flicker over her face.

Did I see that? Is that what I saw?

She was in a baby-pink nightshirt that came just below her ass, and white bobby-socks. Her long, brown hair was loose and carelessly pretty. She recovered from her moment of shock or let-down, and went back to her magazine. "Hello, Patrick."

"Still not home," I mused. "That's a very long time at the gym."

Olivia gave the magazine a turn. I noticed that she did not have a copy of Cosmo, but instead a long-form magazine that she wouldn't ordinarily be caught dead reading. I set my briefcase down.

Now.

Now it was starting to get very suspicious.

Olivia is in on it. Of course she is, the horrible little bitch.

I snatched the magazine away from her and flipped the cover toward myself. "The New Republic." I arched my eyebrows at her, and she snatched the magazine back. "Very political Olivia," I sneered.

What the hell was I doing?

"You," she told me, "are very rude. Does Jordan ever tell you that?"

"Where is Jordan, Liv?"

I had gone into interrogation mode.

But the sound of the garage door made Olivia stand up, give me a very condescending look, and wave her finger at the ceiling. "Why, that must be her now, Patrick," she sang snottily.

She turned away from me and started to reach into a cupboard. I tried not to look as the nightie rose up, revealing a plump portion of her lovely behind.

The door opened and Jordan came through the door.

I looked at the clock.

It was now 10:21.

My eyes returned to my wife. She had several heavy bags in her hands. One duffel, another a wheely-cart she used for work. Her hair was in a bun. She had no makeup on. She was wearing black yoga pants and a gray sweatshirt. She struggled through the door and dropped the bags.

"Oh hey," she said. "I thought you had a bunch of work to do."

I looked at her face. She seemed genuinely surprised to see me. She did not seem shocked, however. She was not acting strangely. She was acting like a woman who had just gone to the gym, and returned home to find her workaholic husband here instead of still at work.

She smiled, and looked from me to Olivia, almost incredulously.
“Whhhhhhaaaaaat are you guys doing?” she asked.

I felt relief, dumping into my system like anesthesia.

Obviously, this all added up to...nothing.

Obviously, I was a crazy person.

“I decided to work at home,” I said cheerfully. “I never see you guys, so...”

Jordan approached me, and gave me a kiss on the mouth. “Oh, so sweet. If I had known, I would have-”

“He just got here,” Olivia said, dryly.

And then, juts as quickly as my suspicions had disappeared, they were rekindled.

Not like a suspicion. No, very suddenly, they were on fire again.

Why was that? I couldn't even put my finger on it.

I looked to Olivia, and saw the very last moment of a look. Her eyebrows were up, her face had jerked forward slightly, her lips were pressed together.

She was telling Jordan something with that expression.

It was that look that people with a secret give each other.

A warning? A prompt? What was it?

My eyes went to Jordan next, this time with more scrutiny.

She was wearing gym clothes, yes. Her hair was in a bun, yes.

But her hair was smooth. There was no fringe of frizzy, escaped hairs that she would normally have.

She had no makeup on, true.

But there was a gray smudge beneath her left eye.

Circumstantial.

But convincing.

Jordan was the woman from the bar. I could feel it.

“Well,” she said, pushing nonexistent stray hairs from her face. “I'm going to take a shower.”

And then she walked past me. Another look to Olivia, who shrugged.

I stood there, and Olivia sauntered to the living room, her middle finger extended as she walked out of the kitchen. Mostly a joke we “shared.” It was a few seconds before it hit me.

Linen, and jasmine. A clean, floral, expensive scent. Some kind of spice in it.

New.

The same smell that had lifted my eyes in the bar.

Faint, as though it had been washed away, but still there.

I took my computer to my office, shaking.

My wife was the woman at the bar.

I stared into the oblivion of the screen.

SMOOTH

It wasn't long before Jordan opened the door to the office, which was unusual. She usually left me alone to work, and called out a goodnight from behind the door.

She was wrapped up in a fluffy white bathrobe, and my suspicious mind immediately went to dissecting everything about her. Where was the robe from? Was it a hotel robe? It looked like one. She smelled different now. Was she covering up her previous scent?

She put her hands on my shoulders and leaned over to kiss me on the cheek.

She surprised me by brushing her lips over my ear. Her robe hung open and I caught a glimpse of her breasts. A tawny nipple teased me with the phantom feel of it in my mouth, all of her creamy skin against my face.

She picked up my files – carefully, closing them and setting them in order on a safe shelf – and then leaned against the empty space she had created on my desk. She loosened the tie of her robe, and it burst open. Her full breasts were the first thing to emerge, and catch my attention. The robe opened until I could see only the full mound of her flesh, just before it peaked in a pool of toasted aureola and her button-like nipple. Her flat stomach was next, and I noted with a mixture of pleasure and trepidation that her abs were cut through by a line of muscle. She had been working out, and it was paying off.

But working out for whom?

My eyes went lower, to where I expected to see her fairly unruly snatch, a deeper, browner mahogany, nearly black.

A chill went through me instead.

She was entirely smooth.

“What the?” The words were out of my mouth before I could stop them. The cold fear and the numbing jealousy and a hot lust spiked through me and made my hand move, almost like a reflex, to touch her smooth snatch. The feeling of her bare lips sent a shiver through me. When I moved down, I found moisture at the edges of her bare folds.

Many things were going through my mind now. A blizzard of images and thoughts: The shimmering auburn hair at the bar this evening. The possibility that Jordan was cheating on me, and the avalanche of consequences. A vision, for some reason, of Olivia's ass and her bobby-socks. My career. An image of a cock, filling my wife's pussy.

Everything burned so much I couldn't tell if it was erotic or a nightmare.

Jordan's bare snatch.

She scooted up and onto the desk. "Do you like it?" she said.

Her voice seemed merely casual. Normal. Like she was really asking this question.

But bare? Completely smooth? My hand made another pass at her and I felt an electric snap in my cock. This was...too much.

"This new girl at my wax place talked me into it. At first it was awful. But I got used to it and I like it. I've been waiting to show you."

"Wax place?" Since when did my wife have a "wax place?"

My mind went reeling through our last sexual encounters, trying to picture her bush.

But usually, they were brief, tired affairs. In the morning, rolling over and having standard missionary sex.

There was no way of knowing if this was new or old, this "wax place."

As I was thinking all of this, Jordan ran her fingers down the lapels of the robe, and pulled it open. At the same time she parted her thighs, and gave me the full view of her smooth pussy. As she spread her legs, the lips of her snatch opened up, and they radiated a puff of warm, honeyed moisture. I looked at her pink folds, which she used one hand to expose.

I forgot immediately about my suspicions when she placed her feet up on either side of my chair and used her well-sculpted thighs to pull my chair toward her. Her hand slid over the crown of my head and pulled me gently in, closer to her smooth cunt.

Never mind that Jordan never did this kind of thing.

Never mind everything I had just suspected.

I grasped her thighs with my hands to hold them further apart, and allow me to steer her pussy toward my mouth. I ran my tongue along her outer lips, and then I dipped into the tangy sweetness of her soaked inner labia. I looked up at her, to see her mouth hang open, and her eyes close to half-mast. Fluttering. I sought out her clit. It was hardened, and easy to find the smooth nub of it where her nerves were coiled. I ran my tongue over it and felt her legs shake in my hands.

I began to work on her, moving slowly at first, enjoying the feel of her winding up from head to toe. Her juices began to well up and coat my chin, and her bare lips. They smeared into her thighs as she twisted in my arms. I enjoyed the guttural moan that came from her throat, the squealing that rose from her chest. And then, a sudden freeze, as her orgasm seized her. I sucked up her clit in that moment, and I could feel how it unleashed a panic inside of her. Her fingers clawed at my head, and pulled my hair hard. She snapped her thighs together, enclosing me in her gushing thighs.

I squirmed out of her grip and looked up at her. Her mouth was open and she was panting.

I undid my pants, and pulled my cock out.

I jerked her by the knees from the table and onto the chair. I found her cunt with the tip of my cock and I reached behind her to cup her ass and push her down, onto my shaft. The robe slid from her shoulders and her big, beautiful tits bounced free, in enormous, heavy arcs, as she slid down to the base of my cock.

Her pussy was so wet that I cut into like a knife in butter, and as soon as her ass touched my thighs and the weight of her pressed against my balls, I could feel her cum practically pouring over my scrotum, dripping down my balls and between my legs.

She squeezed me from the inside, and began to bounce up and down on my cock. She wiggled to get her feet on the floor, and her cunt ground against me as she did. She started to move up and down again, but I stopped her by bunching her hair in my fist and moving her sideways. She picked up on my desire quickly, and she ground her body back and forth against me. She was crushing my balls and bending my cock, but it felt incredible. I released her and she began to bounce again, quickly now, her own desires rekindled. Her great, heaving breasts slapped against her own frame, and I watched, fascinated, as a trickle of sweat carved a path down one of them, growing as it plunged between them. When I could feel my orgasm ready to burst, I pressed her against me, and let my face get absorbed in the taut flesh of her breasts.

She wasn't done, and she continued to grind against me until her pussy also seemed to burst, and I felt her hot cum, and mine, raining down my cock, and balls, puddling beneath me on the chair.

She rested on my lap, and pushed her damp hair out of her face.

She kissed me, and smiled. "Wow. I guess you like it."

I blinked.

Liked what?

Almost instantly, the weight of this evening's thoughts slammed down on my elation. I was still feeling warm, fucked-out, but the emptiness of mind that sex afforded me filled in like a broken vacuum.

Her bare snatch.

Her "trip to the gym."

Her jasmine-linen perfume.

The fact that she had been sitting at the bar with a fat, old man.

The fact that all evidence pointed to my wife having an affair.

She climbed off of me, reading no change in my mood. (More evidence, I decided, that she was distracted. Thinking of someone else).

"That was fun," she said. She kissed me again. "Glad you came home. I have to get to bed, though."

Truth be told, I had occasionally imagined this moment. The moment when the preponderance of evidence became so overpowering that I would know, for certain, that my wife was having an affair. I had imagined it, and I had played out what I would do, in my mind, time and time again.

Jordan was beautiful. Far more beautiful than a man like me would ordinarily get his hands on. But I had knocked her up when she was still a little gangly, still an ugly duckling. Eventually, she would come into her own, realize that she was a swan, and move off to the kind of man she deserved.

Believe me, I thought about it.

It depended, I had decided long ago, on where I was in my career. If I were a judge, or if I were on the path to political candidacy, then I would cover it up. Forgive her. Avoid a scandal.

If I were, as I was then, a deputy DA, now was the time to break with her. Get a divorce. Set her free.

The kids were old enough. They would survive.

A divorce was nothing, among lawyers.

I closed my eyes.

All those ideas were just bluster. Me telling myself a lie.

The truth was, there was no way I was going to dump Jordan.

Or have a real talk with her about all of this and run the risk of her lying to me.

Or worse yet, turning to me with a callous smile, and telling me the truth.

I was going to investigate. And then, I was going to try and defend her.

And if I couldn't defend her?

You're a fucking prosecutor, Doug's voice said, in my mind.

Right now, I was too afraid of the truth to look it in the eye.

So what did Patrick Goodall do when it was clear his wife was having an affair?

I kissed her goodnight. I smiled. And I told her I would be right there.

Then, I called Doug's brother.

TALK WITH YOUR WIFE

Everything that Doug was, his oldest brother was not.

Ricky was affable, warm, and rail-thin. He spoke with a soft and calm voice, and gave the aura of a real guru or a hostage negotiator. He had an impeccably trimmed beard and his hands, even the most unobservant male could not help noticing, appeared to be manicured.

He had, the legend went, eaten enormous quantity of protein shakes to get on the Force, worked his way up to detective, and then been put undercover for his heroine-thin and boyish appearance. He was now retired to the realm of private investigations.

He had raven-black hair and steady, green eyes. He rubbed his beard while I told him my story, none of which made him flinch at all. He made a few notes on his notepad.

I told him I was certain I had seen my wife at the bar. I told him the whole story, leaving nothing out.

When I finished talking, he looked at me for a moment without blinking. He pressed his fingertips into his lips.

His face seemed to shrug.

"I can take your case, of course, Patrick. But I am going to give you the advice I give all of my clients in situations like this, which arise very frequently." His eyes drifted upward for a moment, and he seemed to get lost before he began again: "Very frequently. And that is to go home, and have a talk with your wife. If you do that, you won't have to pay me anything, and you will be, in all likelihood, arrive in exactly the same place. Just a little earlier." He looked at me with his unflinching gaze.

I stared back. He sounded like some kind of monk.

He took up a pen, and his demeanor changed suddenly. "Of course, this is the business I'm in and so I won't give you too much time to mull that over. Here is the estimate for my services..."

He scribbled on a paper. Then he looked up suddenly.

"You say she works for a PI?"

"Arest Greene."

Ricky's eyes quivered slightly. He seemed to be restraining an eye roll. "Yes."

He started writing more. He tore the paper off and handed it to me. The figure meant nothing to me. Too low to be total, too high to be...

"This is per..?" I prompted.

"Per day."

Jesus.

Ricky had the tips of his fingers back together again, and his calm smile on. "Go home, and try to have that talk with your wife."

The problem with being an attorney, and more importantly, an attorney with his sights set on being a judge, is that there is no "going home and talking to your wife." There is a slew of meetings and courtroom appearances, piles of files and motions. There is Doug, your companion in misery. There is Catherine Gates, the DA, swooping in like a hawk to rain shit all over your parades. There are perps and cops and dingy rooms at the county jail. A lot of hours with a Blackberry in your hand on a wooden bench in a marble hall, waiting for the slow-motion circus of justice to eek its way through the great colon of the courthouse like the big, fat log of shit that it is.

But there is no going home to talk to your wife, not really.

So my mind was taken off Jordan, in a manner of speaking. I couldn't afford to turn myself over to the thoughts about last night. Images, certainly. I spent the whole day with images of her red hair, first straightened and flowing, then tied up in a smooth bun. Images of her ankles in her expensive shoes (when did she buy those shoes?), and then images of her shaved pussy, just before my face.

I didn't have time to indulge in the fantasies that were unraveling from those images. The possibilities, the inconsistencies. I had too much shit to do.

But on the drive home I was finally left with my thoughts. Free to go wherever I wanted with them.

Go home and talk with your wife.

Ricky's advice was solid, and there was one thing I'd learned after seven years in the DAs office: just take advice from the people who know. Homicide cops know the husband did it, and PIs know the story is going to end in marriage counseling and/or divorce. Happy to take your money, but

I'll tell you honestly: skip to the end and save it for the divorce attorney you already seem to need.

The idea of getting divorced from Jordan, though, just really didn't flicker in my mind as a real possibility. I loved Jordan too much. Even if she was cheating on me.

My heart felt like a cold stone every time I had that thought.

I knew, also, even as I walked out of Ricky's office, even: I wasn't going to talk to Jordan about this. Not yet.

There were the inconsistencies in the story, all of which pointed to reasonable doubt that Jordan was in fact the woman in the bar-

I think you'd know your own wife, Paddy.

But would I? How much time did I spend with "my own wife?" Just me and my wife? Almost none. How much time did I spend looking at her, anymore? I had no idea how long her hair was. I had no idea when she shaved her bush. I had no idea she had been working out so hard at the gym that her ass and thighs had gotten incredibly firm.

So would I recognize my own wife in a bar?

Which argument is this supporting?

Good question.

There was also the matter of her clothes. Jordan didn't buy expensive, ultra-expensive clothes like that. She was a paralegal. She worked for a PI who worked for ambulance chasers. He probably smoked in the office. She wore jeans to work. She hated spending money on clothes because she wanted to spend it all on the kids' extra activities. To make sure, improbably, that they didn't end up throwing half their lives away like we had.

Like she had. You went ahead with yours.

I pushed this thought out of my mind with practiced ease.

A darker one came in to fill the void.

If she had been cheating, wouldn't she have tasted different? She took a shower, sure. But part of my eagerness last night had been investigative, and she seemed...well, fresh as a daisy.

There are condoms.

A knife twisted in my stomach again. Oddly, though, my cock was rock hard thinking about our spontaneous sex the night before, the taste of her cunt in my mouth.

Imagining Jordan with another man.

That fat man?

That was the other thing. Jordan was hot. Really, really hot. Something I'd sort of forgotten and was now seeing again. That guy had been...well, a disaster. And I was no underwear model, but I had a certain amount of charm, as the ladies say. No one would kick me out of bed. That guy would never make it through most women's front door.

Unless there's something else she wants.

This was a stumper. Money?

She did want to send the kids to France or something for a semester.

But we had that money all saved up.

Here my mind took a detour from reality, completely. What if Jordan was actually a nymphomaniac? What is...she was, like Olivia, prone to mischief for mischief's sake? What if she just enjoyed going out and whoring herself around, not because she needed or wanted the money but just because it was fun to her?

She certainly looked the part, in that get-up, of high-class hooker.

You still don't know it was her, Paddy.

I couldn't tell if my inner voice was working for me or against me.

My mind started wandering, away from my imminent problems, to the sexier side of this problem. I had to admit, those escorts had a certain appeal to them. Classy, dressy, string-less, and professional. I would never take one out, but I could see why other men did...

And so, as opposed to thinking about how to talk to my wife about an issue that concerned our marriage, I instead spent the drive home fantasizing about her being an escort. An escort who had secret, insatiable nymphomaniac tendencies. An escort who was an escort because she was into some kind of terribly lewd and filthy sex act that she didn't want to share with me.

What could it be? Bondage? Sex toys? Spanking?

Images filled my mind, and I drove past my exit. Well past my exit. My balls were starting to ache by the time I turned around and made it home.

DOUBT

I was partially relieved, when I pulled into the driveway, to see my headlights roll over the dark silver of Jordan's vehicle.

But my heart was thumping with excitement, still, and I also felt uneasy.

Was I disappointed, somehow, that she was home? That with every passing moment it seemed like the woman at the bar had been a figment of my imagination?

It was a relief, I told myself. It was a relief that most things pointed at my wife not having an affair. Most things pointed to her not being a high-class hooker, or a nymphomaniac, or any of the things I had just spent the better part of half an hour playing over and over in my mind. Savoring the sweet pain of the idea. Making my fantasies as vivid and detailed as possible.

I opened the garage door.

It seemed odd, actually, now that I thought about it, that Jordan's car was in the driveway, and not the garage.

I needed to stop. What was I doing? Why was I trying to make my wife guilty of something?

It wasn't like I wanted my wife to be cheating on me.

I resolved to stop making myself crazy.

I resolved to do this, and I was thinking about how I was not going to do this.

But we can tell ourselves all kinds of things, and still do something that doesn't align with our best intentions. We can, for example, say to ourselves: stop suspecting your wife, and trying to catch her in compromising situations.

When can say that, and then immediately afterward, park the car outside and enter the garage from the side door. So that no one hears the garage door open.

The entrance to the house from the garage passes, like almost every expensive suburban home, through a laundry room and into the kitchen.

And this is what I saw.

Or this is what I thought I saw, though I can't be sure, because the scene seemed to transform so rapidly after I entered the room that I couldn't trust my own judgment.

Jordan had a cup of coffee to her lips. She had a hand up, waving it toward Olivia, who I could not see. She was slurping the drink, and talking at the same time.

Hurried.

"Here," I thought she said, though it's hard to be sure. "Give me that. I have to go."

Olivia's arm appeared and handed a phone to Jordan. I saw Jordan drop it into her purse.

It would only be later, replaying this scene in my mind, that I would see the color of that phone, take note of the fact that it was white and not black.

But a witness's memory is never to be trusted 100%. Everyone sees what they want to see, what they think someone else wants them to see. The phone was probably black, I would tell myself later, when I wanted her to not be guilty.

Jordan was dressed in a suit. A very nice suit, a very expensive suit. It was cream-colored, and tailored to cling to her shapely figure. Her shirt was black, a satin-like material, and deeply, deeply cut in the center of her breasts. A pendant drew my eyes right to the soft, mirrored curves between her two full tits.

I have to go, her voice repeated in my head, over and over.

I stepped into the room. There really was no way to stand there and lurk, which was an impulse I had. "Go where?" I said,

I watched Jordan. I watched Jordan the way I watched a witness on the stand. The way I had watched videos of confessions and interrogations with investigators. The eyes have it. Then the mouth.

Jordan looked surprised. Real surprise contorted her mouth.

Her eyes, though, stayed dull. Not a big enough surprise to dilate her pupils. The phone dropped into her purse.

"Honey!" she exclaimed. "Jesus. You scared me. I didn't hear the garage."

Was it strange that she looked to Olivia then? Wildly, almost accusatorially? With a look that seemed to say, Olivia, you little shit, why didn't you hear the garage door?

"Did you?" Jordan said to Olivia.

The garage door was notoriously loud.

"The battery is out on my opener," I said calmly, surprising even myself with the intelligence of the lie. I set it up, she started to feel at ease.

Get them comfortable, guard down, and then whack them again. I let only half a second pass before I started in. "Where are you going so late?"

I turned on a light. The kitchen was mysteriously dark.

"Going?" Jordan said.

Her face was the picture of confusion. It seemed so legitimate.

You did hear her, don't lose your nerve now. She did say "give me that. I have to go."

Did she, Paddy? Is that what she said? Was it possible I had heard her wrong?

"I thought you were saying you were going somewhere," I said. I was less convinced now that I said it aloud.

I watched Jordan's face and she looked confused. "What?"

She's buying time. It's not like she doesn't know this stuff. It's not like she never listens to you, it's not like she doesn't work in a PI's office. Cover up your lie, buy yourself time being utterly confused. Most people have their counter-explanation all ready. Too soon. It's a dead giveaway. You have to act confused, mishear the other person, clarify the question several times. Tell yourself another story while you do. Then, the other person looks as confused as you do, and pretty soon it's all just a big misunderstanding...

"When I came in," I said. "Weren't you saying you were going somewhere?"

Two things, here. Jordan, if she was lying, was a very good liar. She had already started taking off her suit jacket and hanging it on the chair. Pretending to still be sorting out what I was saying to her.

But Olivia. Olivia was stiff. Olivia was looking back and forth from Jordan to me.

It was Olivia, standing there looking like she herself was being accused of something, that would keep my suspicion stoked. Because Jordan furrowed her brow. She took her phone from her purse (black, this one, there could be no doubt) and plugged it in to the charger.

"I just got home," she said. As if I had asked the most ridiculous question in the world. She took her purse, and disappeared down the hallway.

I set my briefcase down and turned to Olivia. She had her thumb up against her front teeth, and flicked it out. "I made coffee," she said. And then she walked away.

Jordan was gone a little too long. I had plenty of time to go through several cycles of paranoia, have several conversations with myself in which I told myself I was acting like a crazy person, and then convince myself that I was not.

What did I want to prove anyway?

Why didn't I just talk to my wife?

I started to walk down the hallway, in the direction Jordan had gone.

What was I hoping? To catch her on the phone, telling a lover she couldn't meet him tonight?

She appeared in front of me, and jumped. "Jesus!" she said.

I had my mouth open to ask her where she had gone, but she extended her hand, with something in it. Something she wanted to give me. "Here."

I held my hand out, and felt the weight of two batteries drop into it.

I looked down at the batteries without comprehending.

When I looked back up at Jordan, her eyes were narrowed. Now she was the one with suspicions.

"For the opener?" she prompted.

She pushed past me, and I thought I saw her shake her head.

"I made coffee," she said. "I have a lot of work to do. You?"

My heart started to thump against my chest again.

It was something like that, some little detail, that always gave everything away, if two people try to tell a lie together. Who made the coffee?

No one forgets whether they made the coffee or not; no one tries to claim credit for making someone else's pot of coffee.

So one of them was lying. And the question was, why? Why tell a lie like that, unless you were already lying about something else?

I stared down the darkened hallway to the study. "Yeah," I said, miles away, in answer to her question.

There was no answer from the kitchen.

And so, I headed to the study.

In the study, I opened my computer and waited for it to decrypt itself. At some point it must have asked me for my password.

I stared at it, unable to recall, by any stretch of my imagination, the thirty characters, assigned at random and painstakingly memorized by me, required to decrypt my laptop. It was the requirement, if one wanted to bring work home from the DAs. Only I knew the password. If I forgot it, IT had informed me many times, I was fucked.

In that moment, with my head filling with scenario after scenario, I was sure I was fucked. In more ways than one.

Jordan. She did say, "I have to go."

She was putting things into her purse, not the other way around.

Right?

My wife is having an affair.

But what the fuck was she doing?

She could have told me she had to go back to work.

That she was on her way to an emergency meeting.

Any lie. She could have told any lie, and I couldn't have called her out on them. She worked for a PI.

So why, when I caught her leaving, did she decide to stay home, instead?

The cursor blinked at me.

It was all so absurd, suddenly.

I laughed at myself.

I was making myself crazy. I was making bad decisions. I was allowing myself to see evidence where there was none. All because of one thing I had witnessed. And I could not be sure of it anymore. Was Jordan the woman in the bar? Did I talk to her? Did I confront her? No.

And why not?

Probably because I knew it wasn't her, and I wanted it to be her.

The perfume, Paddy?

The perfume. The perfume was a problem.

Except...was I really an expert in perfumes?

I began to grill myself. I had always wanted to be a defense lawyer, really. Standing around and sowing doubts. "Isn't it true, Mr. Goodall, that you smelled a perfume. And that you were already suspicious of your wife, and that you allowed yourself to believe that the perfume you smelled on her was the same as the perfume you smelled in the bar?"

Objection. Leading.

“Are you a smoker, Mr. Goodall? But you were in the past. Has smoking affected your sense of smell at all? It does for most people.”

Objection.

What about the makeup?

What about the shaved pussy?

You're seeing what you want to see, Paddy.

The question before you is not one of whether or not there is evidence to make you doubt the accused's innocence. Remember that. The question before you is whether or not there is reasonable doubt about the accused's guilt.

Was it reasonable to doubt that my wife was the woman in the bar?
That my wife was having an affair?

Doug's voice, like a voice-over, crackled in my head:

It's not your job to doubt, Paddy. You are the fucking prosecutor.

This is not a courtroom.

This is my life.

I heard the bathwater running next to me.

I looked at my screen.

Honestly. Really. I had no idea what the goddam password was. Not the first character, not the last. My head had been flooded and now everything was flotsam.

I slapped the screen closed.

And then, not knowing what I was as I entered the room – prosecutor or defender; loving or jealous husband – I went into the master bedroom.

Jordan gave no indication that she saw me. She was already in the tub, and the water, clouded over by a few bubbles, had not reached her breasts. They were there, spectacularly on display, a swirl of milky white soap curling up at their full base, the color of cum -

Jesus fucking Christ, Paddy.

It smelled, to be honest, like the same perfume I had believed so fervently had been the perfume at the bar, and then again when I saw her at home.

I looked at the container.

Lemon-mint.

So much for having a good nose.

I sat on the edge of the tub.

I was feeling almost sick, a strange kind of sick. The kind of sick I got when I finally got the balls up to ask Jordan to marry me. The kind of sick I felt when she told me she was pregnant fifteen years ago. The kind of sick I felt the first time I stood up in court.

Excited-sick. Doomed-sick. Adrenaline-sick. All of it combined together.

I willed myself to not shake, including my voice.

I put a hand on her foot. Incredibly, almost as though my body was no longer communicating with my mind, I felt my hand stroke her leg, down her calf, and toward her inner thigh. I felt my cock get hard.

What the fuck was I doing?

I was here to ask her about her clothes. Make her flinch. Make her feel guilty, or confess. That she was having an affair, that she was unsatisfied with our marriage.

Wasn't I?

Or was I just here to enjoy the sound of her lying to me?

Or was I here to get my cock inside of her, like that would somehow give me insight to the real truth?

Jordan smiled. Just barely.

She had cucumbers on her eyes.

"If that's you, Frank, you had better scram. My husband came home early tonight."

I went numb in my limbs. My cock went hard as stone.

First of all, Jordan never joked like this. She didn't make jokes about sex or infidelity.

Second...she didn't know what I was thinking? Did she?

She couldn't. I hadn't shared it with her.

I moved my hand down her inner thigh, close to her outer lips. I stroked her skin with my forefinger. I faked an accent, but not a very good one, a kind of Pan-European sludge:

"But-ah your husband, he's a-work in the office."

Jordan snorted. "Frank. Is that you? You sound like an Italian meat delivery man with a concussion."

I smiled, because it was funny. But it made me uneasy.

Not Jordan's kind of joke.

Or was it?

Maybe it was. Maybe it had just been so long since I'd been around her. Maybe her sense of humor had changed, and I hadn't noticed. Maybe Jordan was actually...funny. Like this.

“Frank is a big, hung...Asian... man from Jersey,” she purred. “He's like Jet Li.”

Just as I was starting to get sucked into some kind of serious, albeit strange, fantasy, she added:

“With a lisp. Like this: “But your husband, he is wolking in the offithe!”

She peeled off her cucumbers and laughed. Then she looked at me. My fingers were frozen, right where they had been when she started cracking wise. I was totally unsure of what to do.

To be honest, she almost seemed like a different person than my wife.

She looked down at my hand, submerged in the water (I had at least rolled my sleeve up, but the shirt was still soaked). “You going anywhere with that?” she said, looking down at my arm and smiling.

Then, she grabbed my wrist, and guided my hand, almost forcefully, to her pussy.

My fingers scraped over the ultra-smooth outer lips, and again they sent a jolt through me, as much of pleasure as painful suspicion. But my fingers were too entranced by the feel of them, by going further, into the hot inner lips, into the slippery juices that were inside.

“You have to be quick,” she whispered. “My husband's in the next room.”

Was this a joke? Why was she playing this game?

I didn't care, really.

My hand didn't care. I slid a finger into her pussy, and I felt it ripple with my touch. Craving. She rocked a little, getting her body against my hand so that it was where she wanted it. Her eyes closed partially, and she growled a little.

I began to move my fingers inside of her. They slipped easily in her hot, silken flesh. I found her clit with my thumb, and bent myself awkwardly to pinch her between my two fingers. Her reaction was breathtaking: I must have hit something much more right than usual. She sucked in her breath, and her eyes flew open. “Oh god!” she breathed.

Her face started to flush. Her excitement was consuming me. I stroked her clit with more force, and she squirmed but arched her body up to me. She wanted more.

She was staring at me. I watched her eyes, pupils growing, as I clasped her clit between my pointer finger on the inside, and my thumb outside. I felt the hard nexus of nerves beneath my fingers, darting from side to side beneath the pressure of my fingers. Her mouth opened, and she gasped again. Her hand gripped mine, but not to stop me, no: to steady herself.

And then, just as I could feel her cunt closing around my fingers more tightly, welling up with her slick juices, I felt my ass slide out from under me.

I was going down. I pulled my hand from inside of her, hoping to steady myself, but it was too late.

The water closed around me, and instead of shocking me, it felt sexual. It was hot, it soaked my shirt, and it felt like two lips closing around me.

Jordan was not so pleased. "Oh, fuck!" she said. She had been so close. Her smooth legs lifted my head out of the water, and we slid around in the tub until I was submerged at the waist, my feet hanging out on the side, my torso against the deep, opposite wall.

I started to laugh, but Jordan was unamused. She wriggled out from under me, and her hands went to work immediately to free my cock from my pants. I thought about suggesting that we get out: but the clothes were already ruined, and her face was set to an expression I hadn't seen in a long time.

Well, since the last time we had sex.

Yesterday.

Hunger.

She pulled my cock out, and her smile told me she liked how she found it. She climbed on top of me, and matched the tip of my cock to her wet pussy. A rubbery squeak at the entrance, where water and bubbles had washed away her smooth moisture, and then she was coating me with her heat and slippery flesh.

She came quickly, grinding her hips a few times and then tightening all around me. I felt a burst of hot liquid inside of her, and then the writhing of her flesh around mine.

Her breasts, large and shiny, a few bubbles sliding down their amazing curves, were in front of me. I placed a hand around her left breast, squeezing it – but it was firm and gave very little. Her nipple flickered upward, right to my mouth. I made a sweep around her aureola, and then found the small pebble of her nipple with my lips. She turned rock-hard in my mouth, under my tongue, and I swirled my tongue around her. I was rewarded by a light gasp, and a crushing pulse in her cunt.

I turned my attention to her other breast. I licked her aureola with the flat of my tongue, and blew over the marble of her nipple, making it turn to stone in the cool air. Another wave of pleasure rippled through her and my cock was squeezed in her cunt.

She was hungry again, and she had started to rock back and forth on my lap.

But suddenly, she moved her feet, and placed them on either side of me. She rose from the water, and stepped out of the tub. I was still reeling from the disappointment of her sudden departure, sitting there in the tub in my clothes, when I realized that she was going for the bed.

She was still shiny and soapy with water from the tub. She climbed onto the bed, on her hands and knees, and looked behind her. I was wringing myself from my clothes, and the comical sight of it made her smile, but only for a second. I watched as she moved her fingers between her legs, to her glistening cunt, and began to move her pointer finger, with its long, manicured red nail, along the hardened nub of her clit and down, to the gushing hole of her slit.

I wriggled of my clothes – the suit had clung to me like Saran Wrap, and my cock was robbing my body of most of its blood and finesse. Jordan's sliding fingers and bare pussy were not helping. Her wet, pink folds were all I could see or concentrate on. Finally, free of my pants, not bothering with my shirt, I stumbled to the bed and grasped her hips. My cock was so hard and ready, and her slit so wet, that I entered her easily, and sunk back into her hot flesh.

The view from above her was incredible. It had been a long time since we had sex like this, doggy style. Her ass was round and firm, forming a heart shaped pillow for my hips to slam against as I pounded into my wife. I watched my cock moving in and out of her hole, wetter and stickier with each thrust.

Jordan leaned forward, and let her chest fall to the bed.

Then I felt it: her hand, reaching up through her legs, and grasping my balls. She squeezed, and I shuddered. She grasped my balls and they pulled to a near-painful stretch when I moved my hips backward. The sensation was exquisite. I could feel myself getting closer and closer to the edge. But I wanted her to come again, and feel her pussy explode into a hot, sticky mess all over my cock. She squeezed again. I was lost.

“I’m going to come,” I breathed, and she squeezed my balls again. Then she pulled them with the flat of her palm, and mashed them against her clit. She rubbed my balls against her clit, making it impossible for me to move back or forth, and I closed my eyes with the sudden torture of it. I was so close, and I wanted desperately to move, but her grip on my balls was so firm, and she was rubbing them so furiously against her clit, that all I could do was feel my orgasm surge up from inside of me, out of my control.

She released my balls just as the first wave exploded inside of me, and she smashed her ass back against my hips, forcing my cock deep inside of her. She wiggled, more side-to-side than back and forth, and her pussy clenched around me. The motion was unusual but hot as hell; the stimulation was so different from the norm it was almost painful. I shuddered, and when I came I yelled loudly. I had to lean forward and support myself on her back as she ground against me until she, too, let out a gasp, and came.

We collapsed on the bed, and there was silence for a moment.

But just as quickly as sex had taken over my thoughts, they returned. All of the dark, looming doubts.

“Wow,” I said, wishing I wouldn’t speak. “You sure learned a lot from Frank.”

What was I doing? I knew I wasn’t playing some silly game, like she must have been. Pretending to have a lover, a private joke for the evening, discarded the next day for being silly and pointless.

No. “Frank” was real to me.

Or I was trying to make Frank real.

Jordan might have said a hundred things here. She might have laughed, or denied it, or played along. She turned to me, though, and told me I was getting the sheets soaked.

She stood up, her back to me, her ass looking glorious, my cum dripping between her legs. Then she walked across the room and got back in the tub.

“That was fun,” she commented, putting the cucumbers back on her eyes, and sliding deep into the water of the tub. She turned the hot water on with her toe.

I sat up and peeled the wet shirt off my torso. I couldn't really read her mood. She seemed like a completely different person. Everything that had just transpired – while extremely hot, and extremely fun – was so unlike Jordan that if I were more of a sci-fi fan or conspiracy theorist, I'd have believed aliens had snatched her body.

“Hey honey?” she said, as I exited the room, pulling a shirt over my head.

“Uh-huh?”

She lifted a cucumber and winked at me. “Tell Frank he can-ah come back, any-ah time, eh?”

The cucumber dropped, and her face went back to neutral. Revealing nothing.

What the fuck?

I stayed up late. I got nothing done for work. My mind went in endless circles, none of which led me to the remotest clue what my password was.

My mind was being eaten by obsession.

Was my wife cheating on me?

Or was I losing it completely?

The jury was out on that one. Way the fuck out to lunch, with no answer.

Now this new thing, this way that Jordan was fucking.

It was hot. It was really fucking hot. It was refreshing, it was fucking inspirational.

But was it too hot? Wasn't it just a little too energetic, a little too unusual? A little too new?

And then all this joking. All this happy, carefree Jordan. Wasn't that unusual? Where did it come from?

My vision was getting blurry, staring at the screen.

I was staying up because I wanted Jordan to fall asleep. I wanted to go and dig through her immense side of the closet. Find her purse. Break into her phone.

This is when I started thinking about the scene I had walked in on this evening. Replaying it in my mind, looking for damning clues, looking for signs of my own deranged paranoia, making myself crazy because I didn't know which story I wanted to be true.

And I saw it in my mind. The white phone.

Her phone was black, wasn't it?

Another dark thought slithered through me: Did Jordan have two phones?

I shook my head.

Had I even seen a white phone?

Every witness is a shit witness. Every fucking witness is completely full of shit.

Doug's voice again, rattling away in my head. I didn't even think Doug had said that to me, ever.

It was true, though. You couldn't trust yourself, or what you thought you saw.

People saw what they wanted to see.

Every now and then I would turn this observation back on myself.

Ask the painful question:

Is this what I wanted to see?

I was too much of a coward to answer.

Around 1am, I went to the kitchen. My eyes scanned the room for Jordan's purse, and found it, sitting on a set of drawers.

Olivia, annoyingly, came trudging in almost immediately. She had a bowl of cereal in her hand and ate a spoonful of it while glaring at me.

"Want some Cap'N Crunch?" she said, with hostility.

Did her eyes go to the purse? Did Olivia know why I was here? My pulse started racing again.

"Don't you ever sleep?" I sneered.

She took a box of that atrocious cereal out of the cupboard, and looked at me while she poured more into her bowl. "You know, Paddy, you really look like shit. You should get some rest or something." She waved her spoon at me. "I look so fucking good the world would implode if I got any more beauty sleep, so..."

Her eyes held mine just a moment too long. And then she left.

But she plopped onto the couch in the living room, close to the kitchen, where she would see me in her peripheral vision if I made a move for the purse. Her nightie slid down her thigh.

Fine. No purse.

I got a glass of water, to pretend I had a reason to be there, and then I went back to the bedroom.

Jordan was sleeping. Or appeared to be.

I got into bed, and lay down with my eyes open. Listening to her breathing.

It was slow, steady. She was really asleep. Wasn't she?

Jesus, Paddy. Do you think you're a spy now? Spying on your own fucking wife?

I sat up slowly. I moved to the closet.

At first, I fumbled with the clothing without the light on.

You know that it's your closet, Paddy. You can be in your own closet, if you want to. You fucking idiot.

I closed the door and turned on the light, hoping it wouldn't wake Jordan.

I scanned Jordan's clothes.

I knew what I was looking for: the damning piece of evidence. The gray dress. The suede shoes.

Or anything sexy like that.

Or new clothes.

Okay, Paddy, now you're stretching it.

The gray dress would damn.

Sexy clothes would suggest.

New clothes, you fucking idiot, would mean your wife, like every other woman on earth, went shopping.

I pawed through the plastic dry-cleaning bags. All of these clothes looked new. Why did I never see any of this stuff?

You're never home, Paddy.

A red suit, a plaid skirt...a little short, Jordan...a black cocktail dress, with a very low neckline....

I looked over her shoes.

A lot of heels. Sexy shoes, but none of them like the gray shoes.

The cocktail dress is from Maron's wedding.

I closed my eyes. These were all very normal things to have in her closet. She worked in an office. She dressed like a professional. I was never home so I only saw her yoga pants. It was almost 2am, and I was very tired, even though I had done no work and would have to get up and get in by six-thirty.

Go to bed, Paddy.

You look like shit, Paddy. You look like you could use a rest.

PARANOIA

I had to abandon my paranoia for a few days. I was late for court. I was unprepared for a witness, though I smoothed it over pretty well. A judge I wanted to impress was annoyed by a piss-poor brief and granted a terrible motion from the defense out of what seemed like fatherly-tough-love.

I was coming undone.

I spent my time in the car trying to avoid thoughts about Jordan and what she was up to. Or what it would mean for our marriage if she was having an affair.

Or the fact that something buried deep down inside of me was attracted to the idea. Kept coming back to flutter around it.

I tried to think about things like how we got here.

It was all because of me. I was gone all the time, I didn't pay enough attention to my wife.

And when I did, it was to be paranoid and crazy.

As soon as I got caught up, I was going to take Jordan somewhere. The Caribbean maybe. Just for the weekend, of course, and maybe a day, because I couldn't be gone any longer than that, with so many things hanging over my head...

I sighed.

Then I pictured a warm beach, Jordan in her bikini. Time with her, and her alone, away from all of this. It would straighten my head out.

But not now. I thought with disappointment.

And that's what always happened. We could never do it "now."

I imagined myself going home and having a conversation with Jordan about our life. About our sex life, and whether she was satisfied. About how things had panned out, after all this time. It was so easy to be straightforward in my job. With Doug, with cops, with perps, with myself in the car, with Jordan, in my mind. But I knew when she was standing in front of me, the words would fail me.

When I got home that night, everything was in place the way it “should” have been: Olivia was watching trashy TV, like a permanent art installation on my couch. The kids were doing “homework” in the glow of their laptops, and Jordan was in bed with a book.

The normalcy of it all was in such stark contrast to my paranoid thoughts, that it jarred my mind.

Maybe I really was just going crazy.

Having a midlife crisis.

“Do you think I'm having a midlife crisis?” I said to Jordan. She hadn't noticed me in the doorway, staring at her, for five minutes.

She lowered her book. “Oh, hello to you, too. Thank God. I can finally stop reading this crappy book and go to bed. There's some spaghetti in the fridge.” She smiled, and shook her head to warn me off it as she said, “Olivia made it.”

Was this how it happened? Was this how marriages fell apart? Piece by piece, because every time you needed to confront something, it was the wrong moment?

It seemed insane, with the clock in the hallway ticking and Jordan folding her book up and the house so clean and quietly suburban, to ask Jordan if she was happy with our marriage, if she was having an affair, if she regretted anything in our lives. It seemed insane to repeat my question. I was relieved she had ignored it.

I knew needed to right the ship, so to speak. Even at that point, I realized it.

But like so many people do, I thought I could find a better moment for it.

So I kissed Jordan on the forehead, and went to my office to send off final emails for the day, convinced for that particular evening that I was the one who was acting crazy.

RED-HANDED

A few weeks may have gone by. Normal dinners stashed away in the fridge, normal fights with Olivia, normal, normal, normal. It was easier with each passing day to ignore the things I had seen, forget the things I had suspected, and to act like nothing had ever happened out of the ordinary. I knew it had, of course, but it was easier to sweep under the rug.

Then.

I went home early one day. Early for me is usually 6:30-7:00. But I remember finding my afternoon, miraculously, cleared of everything. Judge Lee, sick again, rescheduling a slew of hearings. I remember telling Doug I had a dentist appointment. I remember being appalled by the traffic at that hour. I remember feeling guilty because I should have stayed at work and cleared up things that I had put on the back burner for far too long.

That day, I told myself I wasn't expecting to get home and find anything suspicious. I really wasn't. I was actually just excited to get home, maybe talk Jordan into skipping the gym. Take her out to dinner. Leave Olivia, specifically, behind.

But my thoughts, for the first time in a long time, returned to my suspicions from weeks before. It occurred to me that whatever it was happening with Jordan, I had a big part in it. Why wouldn't Jordan seek the attention of other men? Available men? Men who had time to talk to her, appreciate her good looks, not take her for granted?

I was going to take advantage of my free afternoon to spend some time with my wife, figure out what was going on with her. Maybe we could make it a regular thing.

This is what I was telling myself as I drove home.

There is a possibility, of course, that deep down inside I wasn't thinking about taking Jordan out to dinner, or spending time with her.

Maybe I was planning something else all along.

Hoping to catch Jordan at whatever it was I believed she had been up to the other night, when I had come home and found her car in the driveway. The night of the strange phone, the change of plans, the secret looks between her and Olivia.

I didn't, after all, call Jordan to tell her I was on my way.

I drove home, in a state of conflicting feelings, wanting to right the apparently tilting ship of my marriage, wanting to catch my wife unbuttoning her blouse on our marital bed while another man watched her lustfully, wanting all of the things that had made me suspicious to have been a mirage. It was hard to explain even to myself.

From down the street, I could see that Jordan's car was, yet again, parked in the driveway. I narrowed my eyes and my pulse raced.

It might help to know why I was so suspicious of this. Jordan is pretty anal-retentive about putting things away. When I met her, she was a slob. She had a baby, and she turned into a total tidiness freak. So Jordan, the Jordan I had come to know, would not just leave her car in the driveway.

Then, my heart skipped a beat and very soon after, felt as if it actually stopped, when the door to the car opened and a figure emerged from the car.

I was close now, maybe three hundred yards away. I took my foot off the gas and the car sort of coasted down the slight hill while I gripped the steering wheel, totally transfixed. My mouth was open. I was on auto-pilot. Or auto-non-pilot.

The figure was not Jordan. It was a man.

I drove past the house and around the corner and then into a side-street before the cul-de-sac. Not caring what it might look like, I left my car parked in front of an empty house. I walked to my own house, my mind spilling over with dark thought after dark thought.

A man. A man. A man had stepped out of Jordan's car.

Black hoody. Medium build. Dark jeans. The movements of a young man. Careless, aggressive, masculine.

I stopped at the corner that intersected with our street and stared at the house.

Think of alternative explanations.

It wasn't Max. He didn't have a license.

Fear seared through me. Black hoody, young guy: car thief? Robber?

I walked across the street.

Later, I would think about this, and think how stupid it was. My own paranoia, my own desire to find the man who had come to my house in bed with my wife, overwrote all common sense. The explanation that he was a robber made more sense than the story I was telling myself, as I opened the gate to my own backyard, in the deepening darkness. As I crept beneath the windows of my own house, like a burglar. The story I worked up where the guy was Jordan's lover, one of many, and he had run out to the store in her car for...

For what?

Condoms? Lube? Ice Cream? Did she like to slather herself in chocolate and let him lick it off her creamy skin? I could feel my cock twitching with every ridiculous thought I was having, of Jordan rubbing baby oil all over her body until she was shiny like a goddess, and the two of them could roll in the sheets like damp, sweating animals...

My thighs burned as I crouched under the kitchen window and slowly raised my head to see into the kitchen.

Empty.

And where the fuck were my kids? Shouldn't they be home from school? How the fuck did they even get home? Where did they go? What the fuck was happening in my own goddam house?

I was getting angry, more with myself than anyone else.

I had a sudden urge to be a man. To stand up, not caring who saw me, and storm into the kitchen through the back door.

A sliding door. Unlocked.

Jesus Christ these people were living in la-la land. Time for more lectures on crime.

I stood in the kitchen. The house was almost silent.

At that moment, my heart slammed against my chest like a block of ice. Maybe this fucking guy was a burglar. I didn't have a gun, I was going to get killed. Or at least hit over the head. All the burglaries-turned-robberies and second-degree-murder cases I'd ever handled flew around in my mind (in truth, maybe three) and I went numb with fear.

And then, I heard it.

The lilting cackle. The Jordan laugh.

And beneath it, the low rumble of a male voice.

Another laugh.

Then a clatter, and a thump.

My crazed, fever-dream of Jordan cheating on me was becoming real right before my eyes. The thought seized me and almost made me double over. So it was real. Everything I had imagined, all the time never really believing it, was real.

Another thump.

The sound was coming from upstairs...

The laugh again. Followed by a little shriek.

I moved deeper into the kitchen. Toward the living room. Toward the stairs that led up to the single room and bathroom on the second floor, where Olivia stayed.

The laughter had ceased, and so had the talking.

In a daze, wanting to both go forward and back, I stepped on the first step, and then the next. creeping like a burglar in my own home, wanting desperately to see what was upstairs, painting images of what I would find, and also wanting for nothing I was experiencing to be real.

Did I want to go upstairs and see my wife being fucked by another man?

Another step. I was on the third and fourth step now. The sounds coming from behind the upstairs door, slightly ajar, were of heavy breathing, kissing, skin slapping against skin in fervent, passionate lust.

There was really no turning back. How could I get this close to whatever was behind that door and not look at it?

The stairway seemed to get longer with every passing moment. The house was new and so there was no squeaking to worry about, but every sound made as I stepped on each step seemed amplified, as though it were being broadcast through a blow horn.

And who cared? This was my house. This was my wife. Part of me wanted to stomp up the stairs, throw the door open, and prosecute the fuck out of everyone in the room.

Something else inside of me, though, wanted to sneak up on them. To find them. To remain hidden, and see whatever I was going to see. This force was driving me now. Quietly up the stairs.

With a hard, aching cock.

I was on the fifth step from the top when I paused and crouched on the stairs. There was a door at the top of the stairs, to create a living space apart from the main section of the house. Perfect for Olivia. I hadn't been up there in years.

The door was slightly ajar, and the pair was on Olivia's bed.

The light of a lamp, evidently knocked over in a passionate tussle onto the bed, cast the merged shadows of the two bodies against the wall.

I went completely cold. Here it was. Evidence. The smoking gun.

The shadow of Jordan's body was sitting upright, moving like a woman on a horse. Her mane of hair and her big tits rocked with her own movements.

The movement of fucking.

Another man.

In my house.

My blood ran so cold it felt hot, or so hot it felt cold.

The bitch.

At the same time, what was I doing here? With a fucking huge erection? Watching?

I saw the pale skin of my wife's elbow at the edge of the door.

I stepped up closer to the door.

Jordan was, thankfully, facing the wall opposite the door. I squinted into the room: the two had evidently disturbed a pair of lamps, and one of them was shining almost directly into my face.

I could only see her pale skin; it seemed to fill the room and the universe. Her hair was loose and drifting across her smooth back. Her ample butt faced me, displayed in all of its glory, heart-shaped and bubbled. Her legs were spread and the hairy calves of her lover were between them. Her hair shimmied across the skin of her back and she moaned.

Then she put one hand up to her hair, and pushed it up in the cliched porno-move of wild abandon. Her body rose, and between her legs, where I had a good view, I saw the dull pink of her lover's cock. It was thick, veined, and as she rose it seemed to go on and on, until she reached a kneel, and could go no further. I stared. Nine full inches of cock stretched between her pussy and the man beneath her, and his cock was still sheathed in her slit.

I watched as she reached down with her hand and bent the big cock to remove the last few inches from inside of her. As she did, she leaned forward and I had an excellent view of the red gash of her pussy.

Evidence.

Jordan's pussy was, in point of fact, full of another man's cock.

She teased her lover by rubbing his cock all over her cunt, between her thick inner and outer lips, along the ridge of her clit.

My own cock seemed to absorb the torture as though she were doing it to me. I could imagine the agony of feeling the hot folds of her pussy, being so close to the inside of her. And here she was letting another man have her.

Her lover didn't put up with her teasing for long. He grasped her hips and pulled her body down, impaling her again on all eleven inches of his thick cock. I watched him slam into her, and heard the hard splatter as her ripe cunt smashed against his pelvis.

As though she were a rubber doll, he began to lift her hips and smash them down against him.

"Turn around, baby, I want to look at that ass," the guy growled.

I ducked when I saw her begin to turn and face the door.

There was no way I would be caught, staring as my wife fucked some other man...a boy, practically. Watching her, crazed and maniacal.

I moved down a few steps.

I knew I should go. If I wasn't going to confront her, then I should go away.

Stop torturing myself.

"Let me have some of that ass," the man's voice said. "Come on."

My cock felt like it would burst.

I was suddenly filled with white-hot rage. Why in the hell would Jordan let some guy talk to her like that? Why would she bring him here, to our fucking house?

I felt part of my body tearing away from my place on the stairs, kicking the door open, tossing that little shit out the door.

But the other part of me was anchored to where I was. The words "Let me have some of that ass," burning into my mind, throbbing in my cock.

I felt myself creeping up the stairs.

"Is that what you want?"

God, her voice was sexy. It seemed to reach out and stroke my cock.

I moved up another step.

Did I want to see this?

I squinted into the light.

Jordan was on top of him, reverse cowgirl, her long hair hanging down and tickling his legs as she looked between her own legs.

She slid her body up and forward, and between the long hanging strands of her hair I could see her man grasping his big cock with one hand.

I watched, as all the long, thick inches of it slowly emerged from Jordan's pussy, sticky and wet with her excitement -

I squinted.

I stared at Jordan's pussy, and for a moment I was too confused to understand what I was seeing.

I blinked.

While I whirled in confusion, he guided his cock behind her. He moved the tip of it around in a circle, which I couldn't see but knew to be the puckered rim of her hole.

I stared at her cunt, still mystified by what was confusing me. And then she lifted her head.

Answering all of my questions.:

Olivia.

I was too stunned to look away. Relief and disappointment flooded through me.

And also: sheepishness.

Of course this was Olivia. It was Olivia's hair, Olivia's body. Olivia's room. I had wanted it to be Jordan so much that I allowed myself to ignore evidence that it wasn't. I had twisted the images in my mind until I saw what I wanted.

I wanted it to be Jordan.

It hit me hard, the realization. It was too obvious to deny.

I felt myself giving in, turning myself over to my fantasy in that moment. As though there were no other option except to accept it.

I let my mind play tricks on me.

I told myself I was still watching Jordan.

She began to move backward, and she squeezed her eyes closed and opened her mouth as she did. "Oh, god!" she said, but she didn't slow her descent.

I watched as his cock began to disappear again. Her wet gash was forward, and there was only one place that thick cock could be disappearing to – but still, it amazed me that she just slid right down, all the way, his whole cock filling up her ass.

She did it slowly, and then rested on his hips. Her eyes were still closed.

"Oh yeah, that's it. Fuck you feel good," he said. "That's it."

She ground against him, sort of in a circle, and she gave a soft moan. Her eyes were still closed, and a small tear tickled out of her left eye. She was evidently in some pain.

I heard the slap before I saw it. Then again. Her lover was slapping her ass with his free hand. Hard. She gasped, but her mouth was turned up in a small smile.

“You want an ass full of cum?” he growled.

“Oh, yeah,” Olivia murmured.

It was Olivia's voice, but I closed my eyes and pictured Jordan's mouth saying the words.

“Say it.”

I opened my eyes.

She rolled a little on his hips. “I want an ass full of cum,” she howled.

He slapped her ass again, and I imagined the ripple of Jordan's ass, and the crimson stain of his hand darkening on Jordan's skin.

My own cock was spewing precum.

“Ride it then, you little slut.”

Oh yeah. Ride that cock.

She bit her lower lip, and mewled, but she obeyed. She began to pump her stuffed asshole up and down the length of his shaft.

He slapped her again, and she picked up speed.

“That's it, keep going, pump that cock for cum you little slut. You want an ass full of cum or not?”

She began to pump harder, and I watched, my mouth dry. My mind hard at work superimposing the details of Jordan's body over Olivia's.

“Oh fuck,” she cried. “Oh, it hurts.”

He slapped her on the ass again. “Tell me you want an ass full of cum.”

“Oh, fuck. I want you to fill my ass up with cum!”

Jesus Christ.

She pumped, but he lost patience after a moment and grabbed her by her tight thighs, and slammed into her. He manhandled her, jamming his cock up inside of her with a thrust of his hips, and pulling her down hard to maximize the depth. Her eyes and mouth flew open in what seemed like shock, and she stayed like that, silently screaming, as he pummeled his cum into her.

When he released her hips, she caught her breath but did not slide off his cock. Instead, she put her feet on the bed, spreading her legs wider but still sitting on top of him with his cock in her ass. She leaned back a little, and I could now see his huge cock inside of her asshole, still hard, her hole stretched to a reddened rim to accommodate him. Her gash was swollen and soaked, and she slid her fingers into to the fleshy mess. She stroked her clit, and it didn't take much before she gasped and yelped as she came herself. Her asshole twitched around his cock, and a dribble of cum escaped and dripped onto his balls.

He slapped her ass again, this time more playfully, and Olivia let out a sigh and flopped onto the bed on her stomach. I caught a glimpse of her gaping asshole and her reddened ass cheeks. Her feet kicked up in the air, and though I wanted to stay and see if I would get another glimpse of her battered ass, or even her huge tits, self-preservation kicked in. I needed to get out of sight.

I heard the flick of a lighter. "Dude, no way," I heard Olivia's voice. "My fucking brother-in-law will kill me."

I paused on the second-to last step to the bottom.

"He's never home," the male voice said, uninterested.

I heard a light slap, and a clatter. "Just do it, you fuck," Olivia muttered.

Her giggle.

I moved away from the stairs and jogged foolishly down the hallway to the master bedroom, where I hid behind the open door and tried to catch my breath. My cock was raging, and my head was spinning.

I exhaled sharply, and when I looked up I could see myself in the mirror of my bathroom.

And I remember looking at my erection, my wild eyes, my crazed posture, and thinking:

What the fuck, Paddy? What the fuck are you doing?

Because in my mind, I was doing my absolute best to recapture the moments before I realized that it was Olivia, not Jordan, fucking that guy in the bedroom upstairs. I was imagining the sight of a big, thick cock stretching out Jordan. Jordan, talking like a dirty whore.

I was submerging the very fact I should have been relieved about, in favor of a lie I should have repelled: my wife, fucking another man like a whore.

I stayed where I was, pressed up against the door, for much longer than I needed to. Olivia and her man came down the stairs not much more than ten minutes later, after the upstairs shower ran for a bit. They exchanged unintelligible teen-talk in marble-mouthed voices, and then they left through the front door.

While I waited, I replayed the sight of Olivia's boyfriend's thick, veined cock moving in and out of her tight ass. Except it wasn't Olivia who was riding him, and it wasn't Olivia's big breasts flapping against her chest, and it wasn't Olivia's voice moaning over and over, "fill my ass full of cum." In my mind, when the woman I had seen on the bed lifted her head finally, it was Jordan. Jordan mewling as another man filled her ass full of his cum.

My cock was screaming-in-pain hard, and it wasn't going away. There was precum staining my suit pants. I couldn't remember being this worked up in a long, long time.

But I waited ten minutes, almost savoring the excuse to torture myself by fantasizing about Jordan and another man, and then I dashed into the shower. I ripped my clothes off and left them in a heap. I pressed my hand against the shower wall and closed my fingers around my cock. It only took a few seconds to cum, with the sound of Jordan's voice saying "I want an ass full of cum" in my head, and the images of Olivia-Jordan's sore, distended asshole stretching wider and wider for her boyfriend's cock.

I looked down at the shower floor after I came, stunned as much by how I had acted as by what I was thinking. How much I liked thinking about what I was thinking. A few minutes passed before I noticed the water running over the back of my neck was cold.

I slammed the faucet to off and walked out of the shower, dripping water everywhere.

I found a pair of suit pants similar in color to the one I was wearing. I stuffed the others into a dry-cleaning bag.

Then, feeling still a little bit like a burglar in my own home, I slipped out the garage side door and cagily darted to my car.

I was losing it.

I felt guilty about watching Olivia with her boyfriend.

I felt extremely guilty for being turned on by it.

But I felt...a feeling I couldn't describe, a feeling I didn't know how to name, about the fact that my mind kept returning to the same fantasy over and over again. A fantasy in which I pushed the door open, and the face that I saw when she lifted her head to scream as a big cock went in her ass was not Olivia's at all. What did it mean that I kept replaying that scene, and enjoying it? If I enjoyed it more if it was Jordan, and not Olivia?

EVIDENCE

A week later, I was parked down the street and around the corner with the lights off and my computer on, the car idling and the whole scene set up to look like I had pulled over to urgently do some business.

Yes. I sound crazy. I sounded crazy. I was acting crazy.

The pieces didn't fit. None of the pieces fit. The car switching, the bar, the clothes, the phone, the looks between Olivia and Jordan, the hot sex, the perfume...none of it fit.

At least that's what I told myself, to give myself a reason to be here. Stalking my house and my wife.

A cocktail of erotic jealousy was churning inside of me, and it was trumping all reason.

I was parked so that I could only see a sliver of our house: the front door, a part of the driveway. This car was not going to hide itself, or blend, but I figured that no one would look over here, and even if they did, the car looked like everyone else's car. Silver. Bulbous. New. Probably not very affordable.

What was it I was expecting to see? Hoping to see?

At work, thanks to this hobby, cases were falling apart, I was passing things off to Doug. I cited marital problems, problems with my teenage sons. Doug seemed happy to help, happy to have an excuse to stay at work all night.

I then made up the work at four in the morning. I had worked all weekend to make up for this nonsense.

I was burning the candle at both ends, and even though it had only been less than a week, I was starting to feel it. I was getting fucking old, I realized miserably. Even though I was on a high, delighting in the excitement and the danger and the...who knows what?...of spying on my wife, I was still getting sleepy.

Also, I had turned up nothing. Jordan had come home. She had stayed home. I had sat in the car, polluting the environment, making people suspicious, for nothing.

It was the fourth day of my “surveillance,” and I was starting to realize I was a fucking idiot.

My phone buzzed.

Home.

God, she probably sees me out here. She probably thinks I'm having a mental breakdown.

I stared at the phone.

Probably best just to answer. I had rehearsed what I was going to say.

I stopped myself. Only answer what you're asked. Volunteer nothing.

I swept my finger over the phone.

“Hey, honey,” I said.

I realized, then, that anyone could be calling me from home. I half-expected to hear Olivia's dry voice, telling me what a freak I was and how she was going to blackmail me, so that Jordan never found out I was hiding down the street spying on my own house.

“Hey...I'm just calling to see if you're coming home early..or, I guess...what time do you think you'll be home? I was assuming you'd be late....and I got a hankering so I...actually Olivia it pointed out, I was making french onion soup, so you might want it hot, right? If you're coming home for dinner or anytime near it”

A million alarm bells went off in my head.

Fake. Fake, fake, and fake. She would never make french onion soup on a Thursday.

Would she?

She wouldn't make it at all.

Olivia would never remember my favorite soup.

“I...french onion soup? Really?” I said. I was almost zealous. I was catching her, I knew, in some illicit “thing,” something that was making her tell me this crazy story. Something was funny.

At the same time, my heart sank and my insides twisted.

What kind of “funny?” Odd-funny, or pain-funny? Lies and affairs and divorce-

Paddy, listen to yourself, Really. French onion soup? Means your wife is having an affair?

“Paddy? You there?”

“I...it's, my phone cut out. Did you say french onion soup?”

“I did. I just..you know, if you're going to be late, I'll just go to the gym now and make it when you get home. The kids already ate three loaves of bread and a jar of peanut butter. Olivia can wait. Or...like, if you won't be home at all...we'll just eat it ourselves.”

“He won't be home,” I heard Olivia's voice drone on near the mouthpiece. “He's working late, I told you already.”

Everything was literally normal here.

But my mind was on a trail, and I was going to be led down it no matter what. It could be a ploy of some kind.

“I'll be...” What should I say? An hour? A little late? Very late? What could I tell her that would prompt her to maybe go out with her lover?

I lied. “Sorry. Really late. Like eleven. Don't even worry about me.”

A pause.

“Oh, too bad. I figured I'd try.”

What was in her voice? Resignation? Disappointment? Excitement?

“Told ya,” Olivia said in the background.

How did we end the call? I barely remember. I was clearly being a fucking idiot. Olivia's responses seemed too natural, and I was just a sad little man trying to catch his loyal wife in an affair because I had seen a woman who looked like her in a bar and spun out of control fantasizing about her.

What was I going to do until eleven? I couldn't even work. My ass was cold and uncomfortable.

I could be home, eating french onion soup and getting some of the work I needed to do done, in a comfortable chair with a beer next to me.

Fuck, I was so stupid.

But I didn't move.

Ten minutes went by, with me thinking about how stupid I was. Headlights appeared in the gray asphalt of the street, and I looked down at my computer to give the appearance of being a busy businessman and not a stalker. I was parked around the bend from the direction all traffic entered the neighborhood. Another reason I knew no one would see my car: there was no way out his way; it dead-ended at a cul-de-sac about a quarter of a mile behind me.

But the lights did not swing around the corner and into my face, as I had expected. I looked up.

My heart skipped a beat. The beams of the headlights were shining against the garage door.

I strained to see the vehicle, but from where I was, I couldn't.

My heart started racing.

Jesus, Paddy, it's probably just some dipshit guy for Olivia.

But my heart wouldn't quiet, not with reason.

A friend of the kids'?

And then, the front door opened.

After so many days of seeing nothing, I was so shocked by this development I almost didn't trust my eyes. I rubbed them.

Out of the pool of light in the doorway stepped Jordan.

My heart sank for a moment. With disappointment. She was wearing a dumpy jacket, and carrying a duffel bag.

But then the details of the image began to reach me. Like shards of glass, each one sharp and painful, each one cutting into my eyes, into my heart. Each one deliciously damning, painfully undeniable. The puzzle shifted, my heart flopped, my chest began to hurt so much that I wasn't sure I wasn't having a heart attack.

And my cock, my crazy fucking cock, began to throb wildly in my pants.

Dumpy jacket, yes. Duffel bag, yes. Tennis shoes, even.

But as the jacket swung around her frame, I saw it.

Not sweats. Not yoga pants. Not biker shorts or any of the things she should be wearing.

No. Swimming underneath the dumpy jacket was:

The gray dress.

Jordan's figure stopped and she swung open a car door. I put the car into drive. She was getting into a car. On the driver's side.

I edged forward after her figure disappeared. My lights were still off.

I turned the corner, and saw the red lights breaking at a speed bump about three hundred yards down the street. Around them, the bright yellow paint, and the endlessly repetitious digits, of Metro Taxi.

My mind went numb. Now what? Now what the fuck was this?

I followed the taxi.

Following a car while trying to fit impossible pieces of a puzzle together is no easy task.

I followed without thinking. I followed too closely. I watched Jordan's head in the back of the cab. Her hair was down, she was moving around. Bending over, holding something up to her face.

Getting ready. Getting ready for what?

Why was my wife in a cab? Where was her car?

I'll just go to the gym.

I drove without thinking.

I drove without reasoning.

I felt so many things at once.

For one, I was vindicated. Wasn't I? She had lied to me. She had been the woman at the bar. Everything I had been doing had not been crazy, after all...but real.

This was all real.

I felt the sadness that comes with losing. Losing a game, losing a case.

And then, I was also excited.

Yes, there was that. I was fucking excited. I was drooling on my steering wheel, thrilled to have caught her, thrilled that all of this was happening. I was excited about what I was going to see.

My fucking cock was getting hard. Driving my car, behind my wife, in a taxi.

The cab turned on Martin Luther King. Headed into town.

Jordan relaxed against the back of the seat, finished with whatever she had been doing.

I stared at the back of her head and almost rear-ended the cab at a red light.

And then, going through the intersection, the cabbie made a left turn. It was so sudden, so close to oncoming traffic, that I had no choice but to go straight. I turned and watched the cab disappear down Vispera, into a sea of traffic.

"Fuck!" I screamed. I pounded the steering wheel.

It was futile, but I turned around, nearly hitting a bicyclist, and pulled into Vispera. I drove for a mile or so, a little recklessly, in ways that could never be explained if I hit someone. I looked into every cab, but I knew I would never find her.

I pulled over, and put the car in park in a parallel parking space. Stared at the traffic of the Vispera, disappearing into the city.

She could be anywhere.

LIE, LIE, LIE

You might think, now is the point in the story when Paddy is going to confront his wife.

But Paddy, at this point in the story, is a crazy person.

So I did neither of these things.

I went home.

I staked out my house again.

I waited.

At ten-thirty, headlights swung into the driveway. I peered into the darkness at the vehicle. The sliver of it that I could see was not yellow, like a cab. It was red, like a regular vehicle.

A door closed.

Jordan passed in front of the headlights.

A duffel bag in one hand.

Yoga pants. Blue workout pullover. Trainers.

Ponytail.

Lie. Lie, lie.

She raised her hand to the lights, and smiled. “Bye. See you tomorrow.”

You couldn't hear that from here, Paddy. You couldn't possibly.

My vision was going red. My heart was kicking at the inside of my chest.

Jordan hopped into the house. The lights swung away, the back end of a car rolled into my field of vision.

Silver.

Lexus?

And then it was gone.

I entered the house in a trance-like state. Maybe fifteen minutes later.

Olivia was upstairs, her music blaring. Jordan was in the master bedroom, taking a shower.

The kids were in their rooms. Max smiled at me and asked me to check out something on his computer. I watched it without seeing it, my mind just replaying and replaying everything I had seen. On auto-pilot, I shot the shit with him, and it was as though I was viewing my son through a lens, or a fog.

He was such a great kid.

All of this was great.

And I had lost it all.

It wasn't fake, like the day I found Olivia fucking a guy upstairs.

This was real.

I said goodnight.

I went into the bedroom. I sat on the bed so that I could see Jordan through the shower doors.

She was turning in the shower. Her stunning body pirouetted like a dancer in a jewelry box, soap sliding down her firm curves in shiny waves. Her eyes were closed.

When she opened the door, she yelped. "Jesus! Paddy. How long have you been there?"

She grabbed a towel and bent over to wrap her long hair in it. "You really scared the shit out of me. You crazy voyeur."

Her voice, so convincingly joking, cut through me like a knife. She was such a calm, excellent liar. Of course she had no way of knowing I had followed her, or that I knew her shower was not to get the sweat of the gym off of her. But you would think a woman who was sneaking around like Jordan was would have a guilty conscience.

Even if it wasn't what it seemed. Even if it was something else, some reasonable secret (what would that be?)...she was still a liar.

A good, deliberate liar. Duplicitous. Not who I had imagined I was living with.

I didn't know if this thought turned me on, or it was her breasts, bouncing when she lifted her head.

"When'd you get home?" I asked.

"I was just about to ask you that." She wrapped a towel around herself and turned to the mirror, pressing down on her eye to look at some nearly invisible flaw. "We must have just missed each other. I got here like ten minutes ago."

She looked at me in the mirror, and for a moment I saw it: she had a little flicker of fear cross her face.

"I'm glad you're here, though," she said suddenly, rubbing something over her lips in an enticing way.

Playing the sex card.

"Oh yeah?"

I wasn't going to have it.

Jordan let her towel fall down, in a heap on the carpet. Her slightly bubbled ass was still glistening with drops of water. She leaned toward the mirror, examining her face, and her breasts swung beneath her. Her ass turned upward and her bare cunt peeked out from between her legs. "I need some advice about something."

"What's that," I said dryly. I was still in a daze. Still turning over all of the things I had seen and perplexed by my reaction, which was not what I expected. I was actually feeling...turned on.

Probably just the fact that Jordan was stroking her chest now, from her neck to the valley between her tits.

She was so deliberately changing the subject. So deliberately covering up her tracks. Distracting me.

Was she at all worried that I had seen her get out of another man's car?

That I knew she had left in a cab?

"This girl at work," Jordan said, breaking my reverie, "a contractor, she does all the sexy stuff...she also has an adult...video store. Or like, toys, that kind of thing. And she's always telling me about all this stuff." Jordan's eyes were on mine, and she was propped up against the counter now, no longer making any effort whatsoever to pretend she was looking at nonexistent blemishes on her perfect face. She knew exactly what she was doing, and that her cunt was peeking out from between her legs, wet and pink. She knew how great her ass looked, and she was moving her hand everywhere near her tits.

And as much as I wanted to tear my eyes away from all of this, and ask her what the hell was going on, where she had been, why she was lying to me, what she was doing in the back of a cab putting on makeup, why she was dressed up like a hooker at a bar downtown...I couldn't do it. She was hypnotizing me.

It was all hypnotizing me.

"And she keeps wanting to pawn all this stuff off on me."

I felt my pulse begin to race. Images of dildos began to fill my head.

So that was it, Jordan was actually just a dirty slut.

Where was she going with this?

“And so finally, I was just like, okay...I'm not into toys, not really...well, maybe I am and just don't know it. But I took some...you know. Bondage stuff from her.”

I shuddered.

Keep it the fuck together, Paddy.

Jordan turned around, and leaned against the counter. Her body really did look magnificent, after all her workouts.

Workouts, Paddy, she doesn't seem to be going to.

“So you wanted some advice,” I coughed. My eyes were on the crescent of her pelvis, the slit between her legs. The word bondage.

What in the fuck was going on.

She brought her hand to her lips, and bit into her thumb. It was, in a word, the most cliched, “seductive” gesture she could do. But that didn't stop it from sending another wave of painful lust through my already hard cock.

“Should I try them?”

She grinned.

I heard myself, almost unable to believe I was being such a pussy and giving into this whole seduction act. “I think it would be a shame to waste them,” I said.

She grinned more. Deviously. She pulled her hair from the towel and fluffed it. Wet, her hair turned nearly black. Her mischievous eyes made her look a lot like...Olivia.

And I know why that thought only added to the severe ache in my crotch.

“Should I try it with you?” she asked, the end of her sentence pregnant.

I realized I wanted her to say, or another lover?

I was already imagining her with her mystery driver, her hands bound behind her, her mouth on his cock, when she continued:

“Or with Frank?”

She was grinning. She was being playful now. “Frank,” the made-up lover. She was trying to divert me from the reality of her treachery.

My head was spinning.

I did have proof, didn't I, that she was cheating?

Did I?

She was moving toward me now, swinging her hips a little. Sucking me in. When she stood in front of me, my hands instinctively went behind her, to cup her ass. I pulled her close to me, and inhaled the scent of her stomach. I rubbed my lips over her navel. "I like this soap," I said.

She slapped me on the head. She laughed. "Oh my god!" she exclaimed. "Your wife tells you she wants you to tie her up, and you tell her you like her soap?!"

She turned, and disappeared into the closet. "Here," she said. "I was trying to run this whole seduction scene with you, but you've ruined it. So. You want to try these out, or what?"

She was swinging a pair of fuzzy handcuffs in the air.

Her face was relaxed. Smiling. She was either actually untroubled, because she was not up to anything, or she was the most psychopathic person on earth, and I didn't know her at all.

My chest felt like snakes were writhing inside of it. "For you or for me?" I managed to say.

She brought the cuffs to her lips. "Hmmm..." she said. "I actually hadn't thought about that. It's an interesting idea."

"What is?"

"Tying you up."

"Is Frank into that?" I said. I meant to sound lighthearted, like this was all part of the game. Instead, my voice sounded accusatory.

"Wouldn't you like to know."

Was she still teasing? Still smiling? Was this still a joke? It seemed to have taken on a serious edge somehow.

I don't know what happened. It was like all of the things I had seen and thought about reached some kind of critical mass, sort of the way they had when I was sneaking into the kitchen. I stood up and grabbed the handcuffs and her wrists, twirled her around and tossed her on the bed, all in one rough, fluid motion. She gave a yelp of delight, and her eyes narrowed to their most sexually challenging.

Our bed, naturally, had no place to attach handcuffs, which was too bad. It would have been fun to handcuff her to the bed.

No matter. I straddled Jordan, pinning her to the bed while I tore at the button of my shirt and ripped my undershirt away from my torso.

I flipped her over, and pulled her arms behind her to trap them in the cuffs. I was being rough with her but I was in a fever. I didn't care, and I could feel from the lack of resistance in her arms that it wasn't bothering her.

I grabbed some of the many useless, decorative pillows piled on the bed, and crammed them underneath her hips, until her ass was tilted up toward me. Her chest was pressed to the bed, and her small wrists crossed at the small of her back. It wasn't the first time we had ever played at this kind of game, but it had been a very long time, and it seemed so much more raw now.

I unfastened my belt and my pants, and dropped them to release my cock. I pushed her legs apart with my knees, one at a time, and gave her a firm squeeze on her buttocks to let her know she should stay put.

"Have you been very bad, Jordan, with Frank?" The words were coming out of my mouth in a strange tone, like I was joking, but also not.

I wasn't really looking for a response, and Jordan sensed that. She lifted her hips a little and I slid my finger along her slit. Her silky juices were flowing, clinging to her inner thighs. I could smell her scent; it was strong now. I brushed my fingertips over her clit and she squirmed. I squeezed her ass with my other hand to warn her to keep still.

I slid a finger inside of her, and I was pleased to find her incredibly wet.

Since she seemed to be up for this role-play, and I was intoxicated by it, I went for it.

"Is Frank a big guy? Does he have a big cock?" I pushed a second finger inside of her, and she was so slippery with her excitement that it slid in with no resistance. I tried a third, and I could feel her cunt stretch a little.

Jordan gasped. "Bigger than that," she said.

I added a fourth finger, and pushed deep inside of her as she gasped into the sheets. Her pussy was wet and hot around my whole hand now, and the sight of my hand embedded between her legs, with her ass propped up on the pillows and her hands restrained at the small of her back, drove me even wilder. She whimpered a little as I moved my hand back and forth, but she lifted her ass toward me, wanting more.

"Like that?"

She murmured something, and I could tell by the beads of sweat that were forming on her forehead, and then throb of her pussy around my hand, she very close to coming. I pushed deep inside of her and she moaned. I found her clit with my thumb and stroked it as I fucked her with the rest of my hand, clawing outward at the base of her clit.

“Oh god,” she said, her face pressed into the bed.

I felt her whole body stiffen just before her pussy flooded with her cum. She yelled into the sheets and tried to twist away from me, but I continued to stroke her well past the point of her climax. I knew it was almost too much for her to take, but she was in no position to get away or stop me, and the rush was exhilarating.

I withdrew my hand and watched her bare snatch pulse from gaping to merely distended. I swept some of her cum up to her ass, and rubbed her asshole. She responded by making a high-pitched sound of pleasure.

We didn't normally go here, and I wavered for a moment, wondering if I should move towards my new fantasy, and play with her ass. I was still deciding, my hand on my cock, my finger making a trip from her sopping cunt to her ass, when she shocked me by arching her back and sliding her own fingers down to her buttocks.

She placed her handcuffed hands on her buttocks, as far as she could given that they were bound, and pulled her ass cheeks apart. Her skin stretched out and her puckered hole was exposed, glistening with her cum, and the message was clear.

I mean, I guess it was. Did she want me to go all the way? We had never done that.

I moved my thumb over her asshole now. It was flattened out to a larger ring by her tugging on her buttocks. She gasped in pleasure.

I pressed my thumb against her hole. When she responded by lifting her hips toward me, I pushed harder. She lifted her head, and her nails dug into the flesh of her ass. “Oh,” she said, as the tip of my thumb passed through her tight sphincter.

And then, as though she did it all the time, I felt her asshole relax, and my thumb seemed to almost get sucked in, sliding easily right up to the knuckle.

“All the way,” she breathed, just as I wondering how far to go. “Then fuck me.”

I was almost shaking from the forces building up inside of me. I pushed my thumb in and delighted in the slight gasp of pain she gave me. Her ass clenched around me and she moaned. The flesh in her ass was surprisingly smooth, and hotter than her cunt. I could see why men liked anal so much. I had never gone there, but now her hot flesh on my thumb was making my cock cry out to be inside of her.

But this was already so far outside our normal boundaries, so I twisted my hand instead, placing my fingertips on her lower back, and guided my cock to her pussy.

I could feel the thickness of my member against the backside of my thumb as I entered her, through the flesh between her cunt and ass. I pushed down with my thumb, and was pleased at how she spasmed round me and gasped. "Oh fuck," she said. I did it again, squeezing her flesh between my cock and my thumb, and a wave of clenching muscle rolled through her again.

I began to fuck her, leaving my thumb deep inside of her ass. I moved it up and down, pressing against her tight flesh, and she squealed as I did. Her pussy was so wet there was almost no friction as I moved in and out of her, but I was going quickly over the edge.

I wanted to wait until she came again, and so I clenched my jaw and looked away from the incredibly lewd sight of her ass, the handcuffs, my embedded thumb, and my cock beneath it all. I felt her body heating up again, her muscles coiling around my fingers and my cock, her torso going stiff.

"Oh fuck," she said, and it was a whisper now. Her whole body went stiff as concrete, and her orgasm sort of slammed through her. Her ass clamped around my thumb, and her pussy seemed to suck my cock deeper inside of her. A flush spread over her cheeks, and for a second the strength of orgasm scared me. She seemed to stop breathing, almost like she was having a stroke.

She expelled a ragged puff of air, and her eyes began to water. Her muscles began to ripple wildly, and I began to go over the edge myself. My seed exploded deep inside of her, and I yanked my hand from her ass to grasp her hips. It was the strongest orgasm I ever had.

"Holy shit," I finally managed to say.

She was still clawing her fingers into the flesh of her buttocks, and panting with her face turned to the side. Her eyes were watering a little, her cheeks bright pink. It was beautiful.

But as my orgasm began to fade away in waves, the strangeness of it all began to pulse into reality. Jordan never had sex like this. She didn't do things like this. This wasn't her at all.

Not that I didn't like it. Give me a break. But with all of my other suspicions, it was hard not to feel uneasy about it, for dark clouds of doubt to come in fast like a summer storm. I frowned.

And then she did the strangest thing of all. She worked her handcuffed arms down her thighs, tucking her legs up to her chest with a facility that almost seemed – no, did, most definitely, seem – practiced. She rolled around as I stared at her, and tucked her feet through her arms, bringing her cuffed hands to the front of her body. Now she was on her back, and looking up at me with a grin.

But a very strange grin. The kind of grin I never saw on her face. “Phew!” she said. “That was hot.”

She held the handcuffs out to me.

I stared at her.

“Can you?” she prompted, pointing at the simple release mechanism on the side of them.

I released the cuffs, and she took them off like she did it all the time.

“You're certainly a pro with those,” I said. I attempted a joking tone but my voice was flat.

Jordan kissed me on the cheek, and if she noticed my demeanor she gave no indication of it.

“I have to take another shower,” she said. She scooted off the edge of the bed, holding her hands as if they were still cuffed. She stood up and started to walk to the bathroom, but she turned around halfway across the room.

“Care to join me?”

God, I was so conflicted. How could I say no to an offer like that? I felt fucked-out, but she was gloriously flushed and wet, and the sensation of her hot flesh around my cock and hand was coming back to life in my memory, tapping at my cock already.

On the other hand, it felt like an animal was trapped in my chest, clawing around, trying to get out. What the hell was going on here? Why couldn't I just enjoy it? Was my wife having an affair or not? Did it matter? Was I turned on by it? I needed some time to think.

I smiled. “In a minute.” I pointed at myself with a vague gesture, meant to indicate I was too tired to stand. Jordan smiled back, and she slipped into the shower.

My insides were tearing to shreds. I collapsed on my back and stared at the ceiling, trying to get my head around what was happening and how I felt about it.

I got up and walked to the sink, throwing cold water on my face to straighten my mind out. My eyes, of course, went to the vision of Jordan's naked body behind the shower door. She was streaked with soapy water, and the humidity on the door blurred her in places, but mostly it was an unobstructed view to her sculpted body.

She had her head under the water, rinsing her hair again. "Join me," she said, her voice light and carefree.

I opened the door and stepped into the water – always, with Jordan, a few degrees hotter than I was comfortable with. But she immediately turned, slippery and silk-smooth, and pressed her ass against me. Her hand was reaching up for her facecloth. She leaned her head back against my chest. "Hmmm," she growled. "Someone's ready to go again."

I helped her find her facecloth, because her face was slick with soap. She smiled as I wiped the water from her face, and she gave me a wicked grin as I passed the cloth over her eyes. "That's something to try, too," she said.

I moved my hands down her body. My own body was responding to her in the only way it could: by wanting her again. But my mind was deeply troubled.

"You're getting awfully experimental," I said.

Jordan leaned against me with more force. She edged her ass up a little, moving her snatch closer and closer to my cock. She smiled, and tipped her head back even further to look at me in surprise. "You don't like it?" she teased, and her hand went behind her back and slid down, so the back of her wrist passed over my cock, teasing me. My dick spasmed involuntarily, and my hands, moving with what seemed like their own force, squeezed her breasts. I watched my hands work her nipples between my fingers, and cup her full flesh, as she writhed in pleasure.

"Why is it you're so experimental?" I said, and I felt like my mouth was as out-of-control as my hands and cock, but running off with the fantasy of my mind. "Is it because you've been getting some more experience?"

Jordan tipped her head forward and smiled, and she sort of shrugged. She twisted her hair away from her back, over one shoulder, and found the facecloth again. "I don't know. Don't you feel like we should...you know....spice it up a little? I sort of want to try new things."

I knew she could feel my cock throbbing against her lower back, but I wondered if she knew why. If she could guess that the hardness of my cock came not from thinking about "new things" such as ass play or anal, but another man playing with her ass, or dipping inside of it...

I moved my hand down between her round buttocks, along her crack and to her asshole. To my surprise, she accommodated me by moving her feet apart slightly, and she flinched with immense pleasure when I made a circle around her ass with my fingertip. "Something new, like this?" I asked.

She smiled and turned her face toward me a little. "Maybe," she said. "I'm sort...warming up to it. I liked it."

I slid my finger to her pussy, and I was pleased to find her wet again. I dragged her juices toward her ass, and made another circle before slowly inserting my forefinger. Another flinch rippled through her body, and her ass squeezed tightly around my finger.

Now my cock was dripping precum again, and my head was spinning. I had dumped my fantasies of Jordan with another man for the one that was now presenting itself to me: the possibility that she might really let me try this on her.

Her ass relaxed, and my finger slid in easily, surrounded again my her hot flesh. Jordan leaned forward, passing under the shower, and pressing her hands against the wall. Her ass tilted upward, and I looked at my finger inside of her.

She didn't mean?

Her hand went up to the showerhead, and she pulled it out of the holder (comically splashing me in the face as she did.) I didn't know what my next move was, only that I was tempted to see how far she wanted to go with this. I was aching to feel around my cock what I could feel around my finger: tight, hot flesh.

The steady splash of the showerhead turned to a pulsing hum, and I felt the pulsing stream cross over my balls before Jordan guided it to her target: her own clit. She threw her head back as the water hit her sweet spot, and her ass began to spasm around my finger.

I began to move my finger, fucking her in the ass with my forefinger, as she twisted and groaned with the extreme pleasure of her shower-head masturbation. "Fuck," she panted. "Oh god."

I touched her anus with my middle finger, and then I began to slide it in, alongside my forefinger.

"Oh!" Jordan moaned, and her body twitched. She dropped her head again. "Oh god."

But she didn't ask me to stop, so I pushed forward, and though she writhed around my fingers she continued to allow me in deeper.

I felt her body tensing around me, and her feet slid on the floor against mine. I held her torso with my other hand as she grew stiff throughout her whole body and her orgasm racked through her, so she wouldn't fall.

Her body seemed to turn from hot rock to liquid around my fingers and in my hands as she shuddered and screamed through her intense orgasm. The showerhead fell from her hands and she shrieked and tossed her head back. She clawed at the walls, and around my fingers her ass pulsed.

I wasn't able to stand any more. I slid my fingers from her ass, and spun her around and toward the bench at the back of the shower. I pressed her torso down so she could hold herself up, and then I guided my cock to her red slit.

My intention was to get my cock slicked up in her pussy, and try to push inside of her ass. But after I sank into her flesh and felt her still-throbbing, ultra-wet, superheated flesh clenching around me, I knew I wouldn't make it.

I slammed against her ass, enjoying the wet slap and the way her hands slid across the wet tiles with the force of my thrusts, until she had to press against the vertical wall, her cheek turned to the side, as I drilled my seed inside of her as violently and as deep as I had ever fucked my wife.

We panted against the wall for full minutes. Jordan's pussy was still welling with her own cum, and mine, and twitching with the force of her own orgasm.

I finally slid my arm beneath her torso to help her to standing. My cock slid from inside of her, and she leaned against me, pressing her back against my chest. "Holy. Shit," she breathed.

She turned and sat on the bench, knocking shampoo bottles out of the way. She giggled. "My thighs are burning."

Mine were, too. As the intoxication of my orgasm faded, I could feel all the strain my muscles had been under. I squeezed next to her and we leaned against the tile wall. Jordan reached out for the showerhead with her feet, and pulled to where she could grab it.

“Fuck that's hot,” I said.

Jordan held the showerhead against her chest and flicked it occasionally toward me. She was exhausted. I was exhausted. It felt good, like another time, long ago, when we used to fuck ourselves silly as teenagers.

“The sex or the water,” she said, smiling with her eyes closed.

“Both,” I said.

I wanted to say more. But I was tired. The moment was nice, and I didn't want to ruin it.

But my paranoia was not long at bay.

Jordan fell asleep, snuggled up next to me, and it was only minutes before the warm, numb, fucked-out sense of well-being turned to pins and needles and all of the things that had happened that evening came crashing into my mind.

My heart felt like a knife had been plunged into it as I came back to this one, incontrovertible fact:

Jordan was the woman at the bar, the woman I had seen and not truly, truly believed to be her until I saw her this evening in the gray dress.

And if Jordan was the woman at the bar in the gray dress, then everything leading to this point – my suspicions – fell into a new class. A very probable class.

Jordan was lying.

Jordan was having an affair.

My stomach went ice-cold.

But it was peculiar, the kind of icy fingers that were working their way around my insides. They felt awful, but they also felt delicious.

I was up all night, my cock ready to go again, thinking about the evidence against my wife. All of it pointing to her being a lying, cheating whore. And then to the new, spectacular ways she was fucking me. And then to my fantasies.

Where Jordan was even more filthy, even more experimental, even more of a whore. With the men she was, it seemed, picking up at bars.

“Are you satisfied with our sex life?” I said, as she rolled over to her other side, facing away from me. She was still half-asleep, and she waved her hand up dismissively. She grinned, but she didn't open her eyes. The question wasn't fair, she was saying. Not when she was only trying to roll over.

“Turn out the light,” she mumbled.

I did. And I sat in the dark, spinning my fantasies until I was nearly insane.

Spinning them until in the morning, I was planning to call in, claiming to be incredibly ill, and spend the day spying on Jordan.

This was incredibly, outrageously, ludicrously insane, I realized in the shower. I was a fucking district attorney, planning to fake illness, to spy on my wife. I was coming undone. I was going to lose my fucking job.

I went to work, determined not to let this...whatever it was...take over my life. I turned on talk radio and tried to listen, to get Jordan out of my mind. The taste of her, the lies she was telling, the way her body had rippled, like hot silk, all around my fingers when she came. The sound she would make when another man filled her ass with his big, thick cock...

But long before I reached the city, I found myself exiting the interstate.

Holland Drive to Santa Fe. Santa Fe to Orlando.

Parallel parking between a van and a bike.

And then my hand was on the dirty knob of the door to Wilburton Investigations. And within half an hour, I was talking to Ricky across his broad, oak desk.

NO FURTHER QUESTIONS

Ricky didn't ask any questions. If I had talked to my wife, what she had said, why I was back...nothing. He took my very large deposit, in the form of a money order, in the event Jordan ever went through my bank account.

"I have more information," I said. I told him the whole story, and once I started I couldn't stop. It felt good to be spilling my soul out to someone, even if it was a PI and I knew he ultimately didn't care about my feelings. A consummate professional, he listened, made notes, and judged nothing with his expression or his words. When I was done, he stroked his beard. He looked at his notes.

"The place to start then," he said, "would be to follow her from work, I suppose?"

He wasn't really asking, but I nodded.

Ricky ordered some papers, and smiled at me. "I'll be in touch in a week, regardless. Sooner, if I have something else. Try to put things out of your mind, get caught up on your work." He looked down at his folder. "You want pictures, I assume?"

I nodded again, and he checked a small box on a pre-printed sheet of paper. The letters at the top swarmed at me, and then formed the title:

Surveillance Order for Spouse/Partner.

I looked at Ricky, who had an impenetrable expression that I supposed was the best thing to have in a job like this. I wondered, if behind his inscrutable poker face, he knew that I was the kind of man who wasn't entirely sure why I was here. The kind of man who was hiring a private detective to catch his wife, but who didn't know whether to hope he turned up nothing, or jerk off in the shower thinking about what he might find.

And hopefully, as twisted as it sounded, get a picture of.

Is that what I wanted?

I had no idea.

CONVICTION

As it seemed to go on this roller-coaster ride with Jordan, things went back, very much, to “normal” again for several days. Having relieved myself of the surveillance of my wife, but feeling guilty and conflicted about it, I threw myself into catching up on work that had really gone to hell. The end of the term was approaching and I was, actually, going to be fired if I didn't get my act together.

Jordan was asleep most nights when I arrived home, her face a picture of angelic innocence, her brow untroubled, her respiration slow and steady.

How could she be the duplicitous woman I suspected her of being? I thought. Again, in spite of the evidence, I began to doubt my conviction.

But Thursday I came home to find Olivia watching TV on the couch alone. She greeted me with a jerk of her head and mumbled that Jordan was at the gym.

I saw her, though, from the kitchen, as she found her phone next to her on the couch and, without setting her bowl of cereal down, typed a message on it.

It was 9:30.

I went to the study and forced myself to read through my assistant's briefs. I had been saddled with an intern who seemed to only have been admitted to law school to begin with because of some family connection, and who only got the coveted internship for the same reason. She was awful, and somehow converted boiler-plate motions to utter gibberish when asked to modify minor details. Ultimately, my paranoid delusions about my wife and Cassie Davis' incompetence, were going to combine and destroy my career.

I heard the garage door at 10:37. I rose and moved to the doorway. In the kitchen I heard whispered exchanges between Jordan and Olivia.

I moved back to my desk and put my hands behind my head.

What was it, I wondered, that Jordan needed to seek outside of our marriage? Why like this, with evening dates, with fat men, going to bars? Was that it? She wanted to go out to dinner or get some drinks?

Or was it something else? Something physical? Some twisted sexual game she wanted to play and couldn't tell me about?

I wondered, briefly, if she was one of those rape fantasy women.

But why wouldn't she just tell me?

And no, it didn't add up.

"Hey."

Jordan's voice was breathy. She was standing in the doorway; I could see her reflection in the window. I swiveled in my chair and looked at her.

She was dressed in her gym clothes, all right.

"Oh...kay," she said. "Hello to you, too."

I blinked.

"Your hair always looks so...un-mussed after the gym," I ventured.

Jordan squinted. She reached up to her head, and patted it. "What the heck are you talking about?" she said.

God, she was good.

Shaved pussy, working out more, fancy clothes...you should have known about this affair ages ago.

She stepped forward, apparently not truly interested in what the heck I was talking about. Apparently unaffected by my strange mood. I still had my hands clasped at the back of my head.

She came to the chair, and pushed my spread legs closed with her knees so that she could plop herself onto my lap.

I inhaled her scent.

She did smell like sweat. And sandalwood. Not fresh, like a shower.

"I'm glad you're here," she said. She put her arms on my shoulders. Her breasts pressed against my chest. "I have just been stretching in all these weird positions, and this class was really long, really boring, and all I could do the whole time was think about sex."

Sex with who, Jordan?

She was grinning.

Was she telling me this class was so long to cover up for how late she was getting home? Was this another night she had left in a cab and changed her clothes before she got home?

If it was, she was shameless. She had no remorse as she squirmed on top of me, biting her lower lip, her eyes glowing with mischief.

My cock, of course, was not responding with the same reservation as I was. Instead, it was getting hard beneath Jordan's soft weight, and she was rubbing herself against it, bringing me to a boil.

"Jordan,"

“Shhh,” she said. “Just give me five minutes of your time, and then I’ll be done with you.”

I was paralyzed by her words, and by her fingers, which she was using to unbuckle my pants. She did it without looking, like it was something she did all the time. Maybe from practice? And certainly not on me.

This woman, who was digging into my pants, and then squeezing my cock, was not my wife. This was not the woman I had married. Whether it was my fault or not that she had transformed into something else, someone else, while I wasn't looking was...well...a question for another...

Jordan had my cock out, and she was stroking it now. Her face had a devious grin.

I still didn't move, or know what to do. I just stared at her.

She slid down to the floor, and without any warning or teasing, took me inside of her mouth. She swallowed my cock whole, all the way to the base. She hollowed her cheeks to suck on me – hard – and I looked up at the ceiling, breathing out. Fuck. She was practically sucking the cum from my balls, through my cock, like a straw.

I grasped her hair, and the movement of her head, bobbing on my cock, stirred my arousal even more.

I was nearing the point of no return, when she suddenly stopped, and stood up.

She pulled her yoga pants and underwear down in one swift movement. Still suspicious, though powerless to do anything about it, I sniffed the air. She smelled like...yoga.

Or did she?

She gave me no time to think about it. She climbed onto my lap, and slipped her sopping wet pussy onto my cock.

Her body was warm, soft, exquisite, and she rocked against me until we both came, in just minutes.

Then she slid off of me, and kissed me. She made nothing of my stunned face.

So sure. This woman was not my wife. Not the woman I'd married. She was probably having an affair.

I was convinced, I reminded myself, that she was having an affair.

Did it matter? Was it even true?

I was dizzy. I was confused. I was having the best sex of our marriage.

Conviction, the non-legal kind, the kind that lives in the heart, is a funny, funny thing.

PHOTOS

Ricky called me, as promised, a week later.

“You'll want to stop by,” he told me.

“Any way you can come to me?” I said. “Meet for coffee?” Ricky's office was halfway across town.

There was lengthy pause. “It's a policy of mine to have people meet me here,” he said.

I closed my eyes. My heart was plummeting, because I knew what that meant. Meet him there, to avoid a public scene. To be able to assess if I should be locked in his office for a while. Searched for weapons. Referred to a lawyer friend.

At the same time, I felt a raw, intoxicating excitement. My pulse was racing and it was not out of anger or even fear: I was excited. I was already imagining pictures, and what would be in them. Black and whites, tucked in an envelope, Jordan's pretty face obscured by the back of a man's head. Jordan laughing and holding hands. Jordan through a window with her hands twisted behind her back, taking off her bra. The back of Jordan's head, her long auburn mane unmistakable, right at the midsection of a businessman, his head turned up to the ceiling as her mouth closed around his cock...

“Paddy?”

“Yeah. Okay. Yeah, I'll come...I'll be by in the afternoon.”

“I'm here at three to three-thirty or after six. Surveillance.”

“Okay. Three then.” My voice was robotic, my mind detached and floating in a sea of filthy images in black and white. My cock was pressing painfully against my pants and I could do nothing about it...my door was open and anyone could look over and see me adjust it.

Jordan's tits, pal white with black nipples, bouncing over the fit torso of a prone man, her hands on his abs, her mouth open and smiling, her pussy filled up with his cock.

I have no idea how the conversation ended. The phone began to scream in my ear and startled me from my reverie.

I wasn't so much stunned that Jordan was having an affair, and had been caught.

I had known that, hadn't I?

I was something else.

I was like a kid at Christmas, unable to wait.

I wanted to see the pictures.

So this is where I really lost it.

I sat in my car in the parking lot of Ricky's building, staring at the pictures he had given me. He had asked me to stay for about twenty minutes, presumably sizing up how ballistic I was going to go. I had kept my cool, told him I just wanted confirmation of what I already knew. I would be in touch if I needed more. Bill me.

Then I walked, rubber-legged, to the parking lot and collapsed in the car.

So it was all true. She was having an affair.

And from the evidence, including what I had seen in The Mile, she was having more than one affair.

Many affairs.

Struttin' her stuff, all over town.

I looked at the man in the pictures.

This man was dark-haired. In great shape, from what I could see by the way he pressed out his tailor-made suit. Was that fucking Armani? Rich, good-looking.

Jordan was leaning close to him in one photo, smiling, her ear close to his mouth.

What secret was he telling her? Some dirty, delicate thing he would do to her, as soon as they disappeared?

Jordan's dress in this picture was an incredibly sexy black dress, cut very low to show off her tits. They hung, beautifully, in full view in one of the pictures. Her hand was on the man's forearm.

No wedding ring.

The pain that clawed inside of me was a new kind. It was so much more real. Now everything was so much worse.

Now it was all very, very real.

She was really doing this. My wife.

And with more than one man.

I sifted through the pictures again and again.

I thought of Ricky's face as I left the office. "Now don't do anything stupid," he had warned me.

I tossed the pictures in the passenger seat.

A THICKER PLOT

I was going to lose my job. That much was easy to see, and in spite of the mad rage that had taken over my body and mind, there was still a little bit of me thinking about my career.

Doug could no longer cover for me, and his interest in doing so was waning. He knew I wasn't sick. He knew I had personal problems. But he was getting tired. He never said anything, but his face said it all. Sort your shit, it said.

It's the face he had given me when I hung up the phone with Ricky. The face he had given me when I had sat, like a zombie, in court, leaving him to wing it on a plea in a case that wasn't even his.

It was the face he had given me when I left to meet Ricky.

The face he had given me when I told him I was cutting out early because I felt sick.

Sort your shit, or you're gonna get fired.

But I didn't give a shit about any of this as I got into my car and drove out of the parking structure.

Did I know where I was going? Did I know what I had planned? I have no idea what I was thinking at that moment.

I still had no idea what I really felt about what I now knew to be true: Jordan was having an affair.

Was I happy, happy to be proven right and not crazy? Was I sad for our marriage? Was I excited because it turned me on? Was I angry because my life was going up in smoke?

I had no idea.

I've heard people talk about blind rage. Blanking out, Doing things, like smashing someone's head in, and not realizing it.

Needless to say, as a prosecutor in a strongly Republican county, I am compelled by a variety of pressures to not believe that sort of thing. I never really did, personally.

But when I turned off the engine of my car, in front of Jordan's office, with no recollection whatsoever of having driven there, I could see how it could happen.

I had no idea what thinking had led me here. Was I going to burst into her office? I'd probably get shot. Arest Greene did some of the most underhanded PI work in the city and he probably hedged his bets with a sawed-off shotgun under his desk.

Was I going to stop her from going out on another "date?"

Or was I, as I strongly suspected, here with the hopes of seeing something that, in the darkest corners of my mind, I really wanted to see?

Jordan exited the building, hours later, one long sexy leg at a time.

My pulse, slow and reptilian, fluttered to life.

She was not dressed for work. She had on a very sexy, very expensive-looking red dress. It was tight at the bodice, and then mushroomed out in a very short, very runway-style little dress. The effect made her look improbably young. Her hair, for added effect, was bunched up in a very youthful style, tendrils curling around her face.

She twirled a little purse.

What the fuck?

And then Arest came out after her. He extended his hand, and gave her a jean jacket.

A jean jacket.

I watched my wife laugh, and put it on. Now she looked about fifteen.

They stood in front of the building, talking. Arest brought out a pack of cigarettes and offered it in her direction. She shook her head. They spoke for a while, with Jordan twirling her purse.

Then she reached forward and took the cigarette out of Arest's mouth, brought it to her own lips, and took a drag.

Casually. Like they did it all the time.

They laughed.

I mopped the sweat from my eyes. It was dripping from my forehead, gathering underneath my eyelids. I realized I had the heater on, and the temperature in the car had risen to tropical heat while I sat there, staring into the wet streets. I slammed the heater off.

For a moment the whole scene seemed utterly surreal.

This woman, with her mahogany hair, her huge tits, her pretty legs, and the face of my wife, couldn't be my wife. This woman looked like my wife, but she acted nothing like my wife.

But this was Jordan's office. This was Jordan's boss. That was Jordan's car, there, and this was Jordan's hair, Jordan's body...

Jordan exchanged something with Arest – was it him? Was she fucking him, too? - and then they parted.

I stared while Jordan headed to a silver Lexus. The same one from the night before? It was him, then. Him, and this good-looking schmuck, and that fat man. Jesus fucking Christ, Jordan.

Was my wife actually a huge slut?

I looked at Arest, who had crossed the street and was climbing into... Jordan's car?

The brake lights glowed. I looked at the license plate. Jordan's car.

My chest felt cold, and I was perplexed. Race as I might through all the possibilities, I couldn't find an explanation for this. What the hell were they doing? The only thing that loomed as an explanation was the fact that it appeared, from all the evidence, that Jordan was in fact having not one, but many affairs.

Jordan's car was on one side of the narrow street, and what I assumed was Arest's car was on the other. They pulled into the one-way street and began to drive, Arest ahead and Jordan behind.

I followed. I followed without caring if either one of them might look back.

“What the fuck?” I whispered.

First of all, why the fuck was my wife loaning her car to Arest? Why were they going to different places? Why was this all happening at five in the evening?

I followed Jordan, very nearly getting clipped by a Mac truck on my way through the intersection. I wasn't going to lose her again.

She didn't go far. Almost immediately, she slowed.

I drove past her and looked in the mirror. I half-hoped she would look up and see me, and realize she was caught. I almost felt the horror snake through her, the same cold, awful feeling I had when I saw her at the bar.

Instead, she was looking at a valet, who had run out to open the door for her.

I almost ran into a car in front of me. I slammed on the brakes and made a hard right. I veered into a $30 all-day parking lot, and threw two twenties at the attendant and drove off without my change. Then I practically ran around the corner and was running to the front doors of the hotel the valet had appeared in front of. My heart was pounding. I didn't want to lose her.

But what was I going to do?

I smoothed my clothing. I pushed through the revolving doors, trying to breathe slowly and lower my pulse. I was excited as though I were about to get a present, and I couldn't understand myself. A wave of nausea came over me and then a wave of titillation. God, what the fuck was I doing?

The hotel was the Brown, I realized, as I stepped inside. The all-marble columns of the lobby rose up to a domes glass ceiling, and oriental rugs lay beneath smug leather couches. The hotel was famous for its historic value, and the high profile of its clientele. Also, as we all knew down at the courthouse, it was famous for its discretion.

Jordan, however, was nowhere to be found. My eyes swept over the check-in counter, and an attractive blonde smiled at me beneath its carved walnut alcove.

I strode across the lobby, not quite sure what I was going to say. My hands fidgeted in my pockets and closed around...what? What did I have in here? Only my own wallet. Fuck.

I was at the desk. The blonde was talking to me, smiling, asking how she could help me.

Tell me where my fucking wife is.

I slipped my money out of the money clip the kids had purchased for me for Christmas. In a way – a strange way – it might pass for a barrette.

I waved it loosely in the air. “Hi...a woman just came in here, a red-haired woman, very pretty, red dress...she dropped this. Could I leave it with you, perhaps if she's a guest you can send it to her room?”

The girl looked perplexed. She was shaking her head. She was still smiling.

“She just came in, red hair?”

A porter touched me on the shoulder, and gestured toward the dark entryway of what had to be the bar.

“Thank you,” I said.

I stuffed the clip in my pocket.

Now what?

As I crossed the lobby, I remember talking to myself. It seemed to be a long way. A long journey. I had time to think about a lot of things, somehow. All of my thoughts were condensed into little packets, because I had already done so much thinking and re-thinking up to this point.

And now, I decided, it was time to stop thinking, and to act.

I cross-examined myself.

Did I love Jordan?

I did. I loved Jordan and I didn't want to lose her.

Did I enjoy the idea of Jordan with other men, as a sexual fantasy?

I did.

And did I want this sexual fantasy more than I wanted a good marriage?

Ah. Every man's ultimate question.

Because no, of course not. Of course not.

But there's a way, isn't there, to have one's cake and eat it too? We all believe that.

I told myself to shut up.

I argued with myself.

And then, just inches from the heavy walnut door, and the brass handle that would open it, I decided: I was going to open the door, find my wife, and take her home. I was going to forgive her, I was going to take the blame, I was going to work on my marriage instead of my career. I was going to talk to Jordan, ask her what I wasn't satisfying, listen to her answer, find a way to work through whatever this was, together. But most importantly, I was going to talk to her. No more lies.

I threw open the door with brave conviction.

And my heart sank, right through my feet.

No Jordan. My eyes swept the room again and again, the hostess looked at me, alarmed. No Jordan. No Jordan. She wasn't missable, not in that dress.

She just...wasn't there.

“Sir?”

I waved at a booth in the back of the bar, numb from head to toe, anesthetized in my mind. The hostess followed me, still on guard. I must have looked mad as a hatter.

I sat down, perplexed.

I needed a drink.

A high window allowed me to see the tops of heads as they passed outside. Jesus, what the fuck was I doing here? I was going to get fired, my wife was having some sort of mysterious affair, and I was going to get drunk and run up a huge cab bill home, and back, not to mention my parking fee.

But then.

The red of the dress caught my eye. It was unmistakable. Unmistakably the woman who was posing as my wife. Like an idiot from a cartoon spy movie, I held up the big menu the waitress had given me in front of my face, and peered out from behind it.

Jordan walked with certainty, and as she did she sent a ripple through the room. The bar was a small and trendy place for after-work cocktails, and it was beginning to fill up. Men and women alike turned heads as she strode, utterly confident, up to the bar, where she climbed into a bar stool next to a man in a suit.

This guy, he had already checked her out. Now he returned studiously to his drink. Jordan placed a hand on her neck and twirled a loose lock of hair while she leaned over the bar and spoke to the bartender, presumably to give her order. As she did, the short skirt lifted and I – along with most of the bar – was treated to a nice view of almost all of her thigh, nearly up to where her underwear would be. If she was even wearing any. Who knew about this woman?

And what the fuck was she doing here? She didn't know this man, they hadn't spoken? If she was waiting for Arest she was being a bit of a twat...she had chosen a seat from three that were unoccupied, planting her self next to this man, not in the middle, and not next to the couple on her right side who were deeply engrossed in each other's faces.

And where was Arest? Why was he in her car? What the fuck was my wife doing?

Fuck, she was hot. This getup she was wearing had really subtracted years from her appearance. I watched as the bartender carded her.

The man to her left watched the whole thing out of the corner of his eye. He was there alone. Whiskey on the rocks. He was waiting for the right moment, I knew it.

The bartender brought Jordan a martini. He had only just set it down when she dove into her purse for something, and pulling it – the white phone – from her purse, she knocked the martini over.

But I have to tell you, it was the most fake-looking “spill” I had ever seen.

I heard her laugh, the unmistakable laugh, from across the room. She covered her mouth, and she reached for napkins across the bar, revealing her long thigh again.

And now, the man had an opening. He helped her with the napkins. She covered her mouth in vapid embarrassment. The bartender mopped it up. The man offered to buy her a drink, I could see. She shook her head, and made gestures like she was just too embarrassed.

I let the menu fall onto the table.

But his was all an act. Jordan was acting, and it was ridiculous. She was a giggly, energetic, silly young girl. What the hell was she doing?

I stared, open-mouthed. I really didn't care who saw me. The bar was starting to fill up. The waitress took my menu and sauntered away. I ordered another drink. I stared at my wife, who had turned her feet toward the good-looking man at the bar, and was leaning just a little closer to him now.

So this was it. My wife was...what? An escort? A nympho? A prostitute?

Was Arest her pimp?

I knew I should go over there, like a man, and grab my wife by the arm. I knew I should drag her out of here, and take her home. Fight with her along the way, find out what the fuck she was doing.

But underneath the table, I had a whole different problem. Inside my boxers my cock was well and alive, hard as a rock. I felt like throwing my wife over the bar and spanking her, and the idea of doing that didn't help get rid of my massive hard-on.

Because it was hot, okay? It was fucking hot sitting there watching my wife flirt like a twenty-year old with this guy in a business suit, in a bar. She was closer to him now, telling him something excitedly. Her fingers were on her neck, making a little swoop over the line of her dress. She was begging him to look at her tits, and he was indulging her.

But they were still just flirting. It could all be stopped.

I watched her ankle make the same little circles I had seen before, at The Mile.

I watched, horrified, as she rested her hand on the man's forearm. She leaned close to him and whispered something in his ear. I watched his face turn to a filthy, sludgy smile at whatever she said.

She reached for her purse.

There it was. The white phone. She tapped on it, and smiled at him.

Taking his picture?

She showed something on the screen to him. Then she shrugged, and placed her hands in her lap, clutching her purse.

Well, her body seemed to be saying, to my ever-deepening confusion, I have to be going.

Then she dropped the phone back into her purse.

The man reached out, and he placed his hand on hers.

I watched Jordan shake her head. Not very convincingly. I watched as she played this game with the man, the very one we all know so well from our twenties. A dance of Jordan trying to leave, batting her eyelashes, teasing the poor man. Of him, making silly excuses about why she should stay, plying her with dinner.

She finally managed to escape. She gave him a kiss on the cheek. She checked her phone again, and shook her head.

I watched her as she bounced away, toward the door. She turned and held her fingers in the shape of a phone, to her ear, a gesture that, had the man cared at all about anything but her juicy cunt, would have told the real story of her age. "Call me," she mouthed.

Very clearly.

Call. Me. Hands in the shape of a phone.

I stared.

And she was gone.

CU LATER

I was stunned for a few minutes.

Every time I thought I had reached the pinnacle of guilt, when I would know, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Jordan was cheating on me and what she was up to, I reached another strange event like this.

I mean: Jordan was cheating on me. She was nuzzling and cuddling men -

Men. Plural.

- and I had photographic and real-life proof of that.

But something still wasn't adding up.

It's not adding up because you don't want it to add up.

But was that true? Deep down inside I could feel the now-familiar sensation of a pleasantly burning jealousy. One I liked. One that twisted inside of me like new, unfamiliar sex.

I was crossing the room before I knew what I was doing.

I sat next to the guy. I had no idea what my plan was until the words were out of my mouth.

"Whew," I said, with sort of a low whistle beneath it. I looked in the direction Jordan had gone. "That was a hot little number."

The guy responded immediately. He turned toward me, and his face was lit up with salacious hunger, the smugness of a coyote, and male pride. "That fucking girl," he said. "Tits out to here." He held his hands out a full foot in front of his chest as though Jordan's breasts were basketball-sized.

"I saw," I said. The guy was already shaking his head.

"Did you see the ass on that? She could break rocks on it."

He took a swig of his drink.

The guy was such a sleaze, but I couldn't help myself. There was a strange desire brewing inside of me, wanting to draw out more about my wife. More sleazy, lewd descriptions of her ass.

I shook my head as well, mimicking his "blown-away" face. "Legs, too."

"Jesus, fuck," he said. "I could see almost all the way to her snatch from here. She's fucking ready to go." He leaned closer to me, and cast a look back at the bartender. "Just between you and me, she's only twenty. Still in college." He made a face and began to speak louder again. "Those girls will do the craziest shit. The younger they are, the better. Been watching porn their whole life.”

Jordan, for the record, was thirty-four.

What the fuck was she doing, dressing up like a college-aged hussy and telling men she was twenty?

And that could not have been what she told that guy at The Mile. She had looked her age then. Hot as hell, but no one would have mistaken her for twenty.

Things were making even less sense now, and my head was whirling again.

It was time for the question. I looked back at the door, and then at my empty glass. “You hit that yet?” I said. My mouth was dry.

Did I really want the answer?

“Man,” he said. “That girl just came in and poured a martini on me. Then I am telling you, she laid it on thick, gave me her number, she wants me to call her tonight.”

My eyes fell on his wedding ring. We exchanged a look, a knowing look. “You gonna do it?”

He twisted the ring, maybe to show me he knew what I was talking about. Chuckling grotesquely, he shrugged. “There's a reason these things come off, right?” He leaned on the bar, looking at where Jordan had disappeared as though she were still there. “Fuck man. It's hard. That girl is fucking hot as balls. I bet she sucks cock like a whore.”

I imagined Jordan's mouth around this guy's cock, on her knees in that skimpy red party dress, while he called her a whore, and my cock almost exploded right there under the bar. He was the kind of guy who would grab her by the back of the head, and push her up and down the length of his cock while she gagged on his meat.

And my wife, apparently, was the kind of gal who would let him.

My waitress, glowering, appeared next to me. “You leavin' that table?” she snarled.

“Sorry,” I said. “Yeah.”

She said something in a guttural language to the bartender, and her face told me it was full of slurs, as she tossed my tab onto the bar.

The bartender glowered at me. “Another one?”

I shook my head. “Better get going.” I clapped the grotesque man next to me on the back. “Good luck with that.”

As if by divine intervention, his phone began to hop around on the bar top. The bartender slapped my tab on the table and advised me to give the waitress a good tip. I started to fish through my wallet for enough cash.

The guy elbowed me. "Speaking of," he said, practically licking his lips. "Check this."

He turned his phone to me and I was faced with an image of what appeared to be Jordan's breasts, tucked into a red lace bra, overflowing with their bounty. Beneath the photo, the text: CU later.

I grimaced involuntarily, but the man was too delighted with his image of Jordan's breasts to notice. I left too much money on the bar, and walked out without saying goodbye. I was dazed.

TRUTH

I barely remember driving home. I was too drunk to drive, I knew that, but I did it anyway.

My world seemed to be falling apart, and now especially, I could make no sense of it.

Was my wife some kind of nympho? A prostitute? And escort? Did she have some kind of mental illness that made her go out and pretend to be someone else? And what was with Arest? The cars, the intrigue, the clothes-changing and phones?

When I arrived home, Jordan was sitting in bed, under white sheets, looking angelic. Her hair was in a bun, her face was cleaned of makeup.

But now this sight, instead of comforting me, filled me with rage. It was all lies, daggers in my heart.

Jordan looked up from her book. "You're home late," she said. Sweetly, as if she were merely a wife home from work, waiting up for her husband. "This book is such shit." She tossed it on the nightstand. "I needed to talk to you about something. Is it a good time?"

She said this to me. What on earth could she be wanting to talk about with me?

So casual.

She had taken a bottle of nail polish from the nightstand and pulled her feet out on the covers to paint her toenails.

How could this possibly be my wife?

And how could this possibly be the same woman - "girl" - I had seen at the hotel this evening?

She was duplicitous in every imaginable way.

My insides felt like someone was wringing them like laundry.

I plunged.

"I saw you!" I blurted. I was shaking. I felt deranged. As soon as I said it, my insides began to turn to liquid.

I wasn't sure what reaction I wanted, or what reaction I would get.

I knew I looked like a madman.

The brush for the polish hovered over her toe, frozen by my words. She pressed her lips together, and placed it into the container.

There was still a part of me that had hoped I was, somehow, completely wrong. That Jordan would be confused, and demand to know what I was talking about. But it was being crushed by every passing nanosecond.

She looked up, and I hoped against hope for confusion. Wetness in her eyes. Anything to indicate this was all a mistake.

Instead her eyes went dark with instant recognition, and at the same time my heart tore open. A horrible pain, that was mysteriously delicious, turned and turned inside of me.

She shook her head. "Oh god."

But her tone, rather than being remorseful or afraid, had a tone of exasperation to it. "I knew this was going to happen." Her eyes met mine, and she was almost amused. "It was at The Mile, wasn't it? God, I knew I would run into you there."

It was impossible to account for the number of feelings running amok in my torso at that moment. This was the last reaction I had expected.

Jordan had assumed her eye-rolling, haughty attitude. The one she got when she was proven right about something.

Which made no sense in this situation. No sense whatsoever.

She was caught.

There is a small set of reactions people have when they are caught, and I was well-versed in all of them in in my line of work. I saw nothing of the sort on Jordan's face: no false tears, no anger, no relief, no cocktail of fear.

Were we not talking about the same thing? Was that it?

"I saw you," I repeated. "I saw you with another man."

She sighed. The sound clawed at my chest.

"Look. I have my reasons for not telling you about this, so hear me out." She looked into the wall, as though her explanation would be there.

And this is what she told me as I stood there, racked with pain:

"One of the things Arest Greene does, as I'm sure you know, is...uh....domestic investigations. You know, spouse-spying, that kind of shit."

I knew. I was shaking with rage and my head was about to explode, but I knew. Every word Jordan said was adding rage and confusion to an overflowing pot.

“So, there's also another thing he does. And I mean, it is really....underhanded. I think it's underhanded. A little bit. But it's....okay maybe I should start with this other issue.” She waved her hands over the air, like she was erasing the conversation.

God. Jordan was one of the least linear story-tellers in my life and it drove me fucking crazy.

I must have sighed because she suddenly looked annoyed. “Do you want to hear this, or not?” she snapped.

“I do. I'm sorry.” My voice sounded like it came from another planet.

What in the actual fuck was going on?

She narrowed her eyes, confused by me and annoyed, and then continued.

“So, I needed...wanted...some money. And Arest was doing this thing, where he was sending out girls to...you know...‘entice’ married men into having an affair.”

Puzzles solve themselves this way. This particular piece landed in place, and in my mind everything else began immediately to find a place in the picture. I didn't quite get it yet, but I could feel it all pulling together now...

“Honey trapping.” I stated. “Really?”

I had heard of this but I didn't think it actually existed to the extent that someone was making money off of it regularly.

Jordan nodded.

Now a cold fear was spreading through my abdomen, as all of the piece began to form the big picture.

I really, really hoped this wasn't going where I thought it was.

At the same time, I really, really hoped this was going where I thought it was.

“The thing is, everyone rich has a prenup now. So, like...this is big business. Wives wanting to get out of gold-digger marriages with some of the money, I don't know. Rich people. Can't talk to each other.”

I knew.

Even as the cold fear spread through me, and choked off my voice, the hot fingers of lust were grabbing hold of my cock, and bringing it to life.

“So...” Jordan cleared her throat. “Yeah, it all happened by accident. He had these girls he hired. I mean, ‘girls.’ They were obviously over eighteen. Most of them were like twenty-five. And they were supposed to, you know...find the subject and flirt and take things to the point of agreement to have sex, and then skedaddle and write the whole thing up in a report for the wife. 'Your husband took my room key, he went to the room...'”

Here my stomach twisted and my cock went hard as a rock.

Jordan sighed. “And Arest was, like...he started with one girl, but she didn't always work out. Flaky. And then he started getting all these referrals, because he also referred everyone to a divorce lawyer and vice versa, a real racket, right? And he had to hire more girls, and the problem was, some of them, you know...they weren't too bright.”

This story, I knew now, was going exactly where I thought it was. Even along Jordan's convoluted route.

“So one day,” Jordan sighed, and I could feel that she was nervous but also excited. It vibrated in her breath. “This girl Lydia, she didn't show up, and he had this client who was like, really lighting a fire under his ass. Super-connected, really demanding, and he needed to get it done. I mean, and here's the thing: this is my bonus, too, you know? And she was like, able to refer us, we were sure, to all these other women, she would, and she could, and...her husband was hard to catch, and it just, had to get done.” She was getting flustered, not really finishing her sentences. She was terrible about telling stories this way, but I was still getting it, every word of it, and the whole picture was sharpening into horrifying, sexy focus.

I pressed my fingertips to my lips.

So Arest is in his office, wondering what to do, I thought. I could see the scene now. He's been looking at Jordan all this time. Jordan in her jeans. Jordan in her loose, high-necked shirts that can never really hide her big, bouncing breasts. He wonders what's under there, what that rack is concealing. A flat stomach or a round belly? He's been watching Jordan, with her hair clipped up in a french twist, dark red and promising. Jordan with almost no makeup but those porcelain-doll features. Jordan with her firm ass, her tight thighs.

Yes, Arest thinks to himself: Jordan would of course, if we shoved her into a hot little dress, be the perfect honey trap for rich old men.

“So...Arest was like, 'you have to do it,' and he offered me like $1K for the job-”

“One thousand dollars,” I repeated.

“Yes.” Jordan was impatient. “Because he knew I didn't want to do it, and he was in a bind. There was no way I could say no to that.”

I threw my hands up in the air. “No way? 'No.' There. You say, 'Arest, I'm married, and my husband works for the DA, and this is right along the fuzzy gray line of prostitution, entrapment -”

Jordan surprised me by interrupting. Not only that, she was confident as hell when she did. Not tentative, not unsure. “I am not a police officer, so take that 'entrapment' bullshit and shove it up your ass -”

“Extortion -”

“No one was being extorted, unless the wife did it, but you know as well as I do that this isn't our problem.”

I did not like how she was saying “our.”

I did not like how much thought she had put into this.

I did not like that she was making perfectly valid points.

I did not like – or did I? - that she was absolutely confident as she made them.

“And as far as 'prostitution' goes, there is absolutely no exchange of money for sex, and...like I just told you! There's no sex.”

Rather than deal with the cocktail of feelings that was clanging around in my chest and my groin, I went for the least important issues to me. The details of the argument that didn't matter. I spat:

“You know as well as I do,” I said. “That this is not about what you are doing, but..but, but...how it looks!”

She folded her arms over her chest. “Then don't advertise it, darling. Look, if you start climbing this political ladder you're always so obsessed with, I'll happily give it up. In the meantime, it's easy money. *And...*I'm good at it. Okay? I'm really, really good at it.”

This little tirade was pregnant with too many accusations and too many low blows to say anything back to. If you start climbing your political ladder (low blow). I'm finally good at something (after giving up half my life to raise our kids).

And there was also the “new Jordan.” A Jordan who wasn't backing down from an argument, as she usually did.

It was disturbing, but it was also ratcheting up a painful ache in my cock. She was sexy as hell, and she was a transformed woman, and I had missed the transformation.

My mouth hung open.

There was also this: half of my mind was spinning off to places that were unrelated to the nitty-gritty of this conversation. Half my mind was imagining Jordan, squeezing into a black dress. Imagining the look on Arest's face when she emerged from the bathroom (or had she? Maybe she had just changed there in the office, with Arest turned around, as she laughed and told him not to peek.)

Anyway. Arest's face when he finally saw that his secretary/paralegal was, as he had hoped and prayed, hiding a small waist beneath her shirts, and that her two enormous breasts were firm and youthful, and had a sweet curve of flawless ivory skin that pointed them slightly outward. As opposed to having a crevice walled by jiggling fat, Jordan's bountiful breasts came together in a low, sloping valley of firm flesh.

"Are you going to say anything?" Jordan snapped.

I sat down in a chair and put my fingers on my forehead.

It was meant to make Jordan take pity on me, which she usually did. But this time, she re-folded her arms.

Then she cocked her head, as something suddenly occurred to her.

"I was at The Mile weeks ago," she said. "Weeks ago. Months. So what are you...."

She was putting it all together now.

I closed my eyes.

This was all too much.

When I looked up at her, I was surprised to see that her mouth was open, mocking an expression of shock, and she was smiling.

"You," she wagged her finger at me. "You're feeling like a bit of a fucking hypocrite right now, I guess. Who did you hire?"

God. She had it all figured out. A pang of guilt spiked through me: Jordan was smart, and it was on Jordan that the ax had fallen when she had gotten pregnant, fifteen years ago, with Max. And it was on Jordan that all the sacrifices were heaped. She had a quick mind, though. She would have gone better places.

"I...Ricky," I said miserably. I decided not to let her in on the sordid details of my own "investigations" before that. How would I even explain them?

She whooped. She held up her hand. "Please. No more. Don't tell me any more."

I wasn't really sure what kind of mood Jordan was in. I also had no idea what I was feeling.

She sat down on the bed.

We were silent for along time. I was still fuming, for some reason. I mean, I had every right to be angry.

Didn't I?

Wasn't I relieved she wasn't having an affair? Didn't this make everything make sense? My mind was careening around, fitting this final explanation to all the pieces of the puzzle: it worked.

"I didn't mean to have this conversation this way," Jordan finally said, quietly. She turned to me. Her eyes were wet. "I really didn't. I...things just got away from me."

I was silent.

"I was making so much money, and I knew if I told you about it, you'd tell me to stop. I kept telling myself that...you know, I had sort of stumbled into it, and I could stumble out of it, or tell you about it eventually...and then we'd just laugh about it, and it'd be over."

She looked at me. I had no idea what to say still. What she was saying made sense; it rang true.

Something was stopping me from confronting her about what I had just seen. Or even telling her I had seen it.

The other problem, the other thing that was stopping me from talking was that I knew I was turned on by the idea. I knew she wanted me to be indignant, tell her to stop, get mad...and I had played that part so far. In truth, though, it was ringing kind of hollow, even for me.

The truth was burbling up from inside of me.

The truth: that she was almost handing me the very best piece of news she could. This is actually what I wanted, with none of the ugliness of her cheating on me.

Right?

As always, Jordan was unable to deal with my silence and kept talking. She sighed. "And then, I realized, I was really good at it."

A shiver went through me. I bet.

"And I...then I started to kind of resent that you would tell me to stop. It just didn't seem fair to me." She started nodding as she said this, and I could see that this was the first time she had articulated the truth to herself, and she was agreeing with it wildly. She was getting caught up in her confession.

“That's the truth,” she said. She was dumping the words out now, feeling better with each one. “You were always working late. I felt like..I deserved something that I could make money at, and be good at, and then...the lies just got too easy to tell.”

She looked down at her hands.

“And I like it,” she said.

It occurred to me that things could go many, many different ways here.

The door was open for me to win points for being a very good and understanding husband. I could say I disapproved, and let her have her fun, her money-making, and the “fair” choice would be to let her have these things.

The door was also open for me to admit to being a bad husband. Watching her, listening to her, I realized that she had transformed into a more confident woman, into a sexier version of her old self, and I hadn't noticed. This was my chance to tell her things were going to change. And to actually change them. Because looking at Jordan, even as confused as I was, I knew that I deeply loved her.

And then, moving around deep inside of me, was a darker love. I loved that she was doing this. Half of me was disappointed that the sneaking around was over. That the voyeurism was ending.

A part of me wanted to admit to all of that. To tell her how hot it had been when I thought she was actually having an affair. To tell her that my cock had been hard and our sex life had gotten wild because it turned me on so much to see her flirting with another man.

That it had been hot to think about her having sex with another man.

Then there was the careerist in me. Obviously, this all had to stop. Obviously. I could never have this come out, if there was anything political in my future. Even just a judgeship. This would be...

It's not illegal.

But like so many things, it was all about appearances. This house, our cars, the marble in the courthouse: all appearances. And “honey trapping wife working for PI by posing as a slut and/or prostitute” did not go with the Martha Stewart wreath on the door, or the Lexus, or that fucking black robe I so coveted.

Strangely, as soon as I got around to thinking about my career, and how off the path Jordan's new job was, what Jordan was doing became even hotter. It was as though it was suddenly injected with sexual heroine. I saw her crossing and uncrossing her legs; I saw myself watching her from across the room; I saw it all. And every part of it got shiny and wet like a big pussy.

Jordan was looking at me.

The ache in my cock was now throbbing like a freight train, dull and low, unstoppable.

I thought about saying a few things. Jordan, I have to confess. It's hot, I like it. Jordan, I have to tell you I was following you and jerking off in the car. Jordan, I want you to be happy, so go ahead and do your job, do it well, and I'll support you.

Jordan, I think about your mouth on another man's cock all the time.

But I didn't say any of this shit. No, by then it had all piled up. Everything I'd seen, every thought I'd ever had, and then this frosting of it all just being so very dangerously wrong. Such a gamble.

I had been, until that point in my life, a very sensible man. Career, family, dog, suburban house, Lexus. All in spite of knocking up my high school sweetheart. It was all going my way in life, because I played it safe. I was moving toward her, crawling over her body on the bed, straddling her.

Kiss her on the lips, tell her you're sorry, but this has to stop.

Do it.

Do it.

Instead, I felt my hand moving up to her jaw, and grabbing it firmly. I was looking into her eyes.

Her eyes flashed back at me.

She was turned on.

"So was it you I saw tonight, at The Brown? Pretending to be...how old?"

Her eyes flashed with surprise, but only for a moment. The surprise was then replaced by knowing, teasing, mischief. "Twenty," she said, with a grin. "I was Charlotte."

"Charlotte," I repeated. I rubbed my thumb over her lip. "You looked fucking hot, Charlotte. I almost didn't recognize you."

She smiled. "That's the point."

"And did you sext your sleazy 'mark,' Charlotte? Tell the truth."

A look of what appeared to be genuine confusion crossed Jordan's face, and she was distracted from the sexier interaction we were having as she scanned her brain for the memory.

Finding it, she laughed. "I'm surprised at you," she said. She slid her nightie up and over her arms, forcing me to release her face as she did. She fell back onto the bed, folded over with her knees at either side of her, like a yoga pose. "You don't recognize your own wife's tits?"

I cocked my head.

She let a finger flutter over lips as she winked at me. "Stock photo," she said. "I swear guys will fall for anything. Arest takes care of that crap, anyway, not me. My job is done."

I looked at my wife, her devious smile, her lithe body contorted sexily.

"And you're never tempted?"

Her eyes flashed again. "To do what?"

"Be a very bad girl."

I was already unbuckling my pants, and Jordan was watching me, a finger in her mouth, a grin on her face.

She suddenly had an idea, and sat up, folding over and turning to face me on all fours. I had taken my cock out, and it was aching to the point of being sore.

I grasped her by the head, much the way I imagined the guy at the bar would have, and pushed her mouth down to my cock. She did not seem to find this unexpected, and her mouth opened for me, taking me all the way into her throat. "Would you let that guy at the bar fuck your mouth like this? Make you gag?" I said.

Jordan responded by bobbing her head up and down on my cock, letting me push her head down to the base of my dick. Her throat emitted a sticky, gagging sound, and she seemed to exaggerate it. Her mouth seemed extra wet, and she let me push her onto me and hold her there, filling her mouth in a lewd, animal way.

I pulled her head up and pulled her to her knees. I pulled her hair back and turned her face up at the ceiling. Her face was wet with saliva, and I relished the messy sight of her. With my other hand I ran my fingers over her tits, and when I reached her nipples I squeezed them until she winced. But her mouth was smiling. "Or would you let him go even further?" I asked her.

She only gave me a smile as an answer, and I pushed her back against the sheets again. I reached down and pulled her at her knees, untangling her legs as I did. I jerked her toward me, and twisted her body. As though she were a rubber doll, I moved her legs up and over, until she was on her stomach. She rose up to be on all fours, and I grabbed her hair again.

She pushed her ass backward and slid her pussy onto my cock herself. She was soaked, and I cut into her with ease. I was so hotted up that I would have happily fucked my seed into her right then and there, but she herself pumped my cock a few times and then slid off. My cock was so stiff it was suspended in the air, and she only had to move her body to line up the dull pink ring of her ass with the tip of my dick.

I didn't bother to ask her if she was sure. I was an actor now, and I let a drop of spit fall from my mouth and onto the crack of her ass. Its having missed only made me hotter, as the spit dribbled along her crack and she pushed back against the tip of my cock.

She was the one who pushed against me. I felt the tip of my cock enter her, and she bucked like an animal, before throwing her head back and arching her back. Her ass seemed to spread open for me, and my cock began to sink inside of her. She squealed, and I felt her clench around me, but I didn't stop. She was too hot, too silky-smooth, too tight around my cock. I let go of her hair and grabbed her hips. I was halfway inside of her and she was panting, sweat pouring down her back. The sounds she was making were impossible to tell apart as pain or pleasure. But she continued to push against me, sending me deeper inside of her.

Finally, I pulled on her hips and buried my cock inside of her.

She screamed, and I let her writhe on all fours like that. I enjoyed the inside of her like I had never enjoyed anything before.

And then, feeling bolder than ever, I said:

“Tell me you want an ass full of cum.”

She whispered it, and her voice was strained. “I want an ass full of cum.”

I moved slowly, feeling her pleased agony as I did. I fucked her few times, letting her moan and scream as I did. Sweat covered her entire body now like the sheen on a well-run horse.

I leaned over her back, and pushed her hair away and off to the side. She struggled against me, even without me moving, evidently in some pain even if I was just inside of her, filling her. The sensation was exquisite.

“Tell me, bad little Charlotte, how you want an ass full of another man's cum.”

She moaned in response, and I moved my cock slowly inside of her.

“Tell me, or I'll keep my cock inside of you all night. You wouldn't want that would you?”

My own boldness was surprising even me, but it was also so hot I wouldn't have been able to stop myself even if I had had second thoughts.

Jordan panted, and she shook her head slightly.

“Tell me then.”

“I want some other man to fuck me full of cum,” she breathed. “I want you to show me how he would do it.”

“That's it. Say it again.”

“I want another man to fuck his cum into my ass.”

“Hard. Like a little whore.”

I began to fuck her then, as I have never fucked her before. I slammed my cock as deep inside of her as I could, until I felt myself tipping over the edge. I filled her up, and then I bent over her, against her back, my shirt soaked through with sweat. “Make yourself come,” I said, guiding her hand between her legs.

I kept my hand over the back of hers as she nimbly worked her fingers between her dripping folds, and used her forefinger to very quickly bring herself to a gushing, pulsing orgasm. Her ass tightened around my cock, as she came, and she screamed until she was spitting on the pillow.

The sensation was almost too intense for me, and my abdomen convulsed from pelvis to chest.

I leaned back on my heels, panting.

Jordan collapsed on her stomach, and then rolled over.

I lay down next to her. We panted like that for a few minutes.

She put her hand up to her forehead.

“Okay...” she said. “What the hell was that?”

Her tone was half-humorous, but partially serious. It was true: we obviously needed to talk. And there was more to talk about than just her new job.

I closed my eyes.

“Fuck, Jordan.” I said. I turned to her. Our faces were very close to each other. There was an electricity between us, one that I hadn't felt for a long time. My cock, incredibly, had not gone to immediate, tired hibernation. My mind, incredibly, had not gone immediately to my cases, to the mounting work, to the office beckoning me with all of its problems. I was still on Jordan, still with Jordan.

I was watching my wife's lips. Her eyes, moving over my face. Almost like she was touching me: over my temples, down the side of my face, along my jawline. How long had it been since either of us had spent any time looking at each other?

"You're so beautiful," I said.

Jordan bit her lip and basked, very obviously, in the glow of my compliment. How long had it been since I'd said anything like that? Her legs, tangled up in mine, brushed up and down my thighs. I could feel myself getting hard again.

I put my hand on her cheek.

"This is so wrong," I whispered.

Her body responded, rippling as though I had pet her unexpectedly.

What did I mean by that, exactly?

That's what Jordan should have said.

But she didn't.

Which meant that Jordan knew exactly what I meant. It meant that Jordan, too, wanted to keep flirting with strange men; and Jordan, too, liked that it threatened my career and tested the boundaries of decency and our marriage. Jordan pressed her pelvis, and then her soaked pussy, against my leg.

Her hand moved down my torso, and she found my cock. She kept going to my balls, which were slick with her juices. Her lips were close to mine. Her fingers made lazy circles over my balls and my cock bounced with each complete circle.

She grasped my scrotum, and squeezed. Not hard, just lightly, but it sent an almost painful, racking pleasure through me.

"I'm not going to give up my job," she whispered.

Whatever I might have wanted to say in response to that, in the name of my career, my cock was telling her the real story. It seemed to slam to attention, and pressed out against her hand, throbbing. She smiled. "So why don't you come and watch sometime?"

FIRST TIME

I was already installed in the dark recesses of The Yacht Club, a tiny upscale bar next to an expensive fish place, by the time Jordan's "mark" arrived. The Yacht Club was, predictably, crowded with the men who knew about it and could afford to drink there; and the young, flirtatious women who were pretty enough to get a drink purchased for them there.

The wealthy, then, and the beautiful.

Looking around the room, I saw that Jordan has some tough competition. Leggy, young girls with shiny hair and daringly low tops were flashing their teeth and their skin in nearly every booth in the place. A few had tried their wares on me, in fact, but I shooed them away. I was aware that I probably looked like a serial killer, glowering in the corner of a bar full of beautiful women, but I didn't care. My mind was on one thing, and one thing only.

At eight pm, the lights of the bar turned red, to look, I suppose, like the inside of a ship. The effect was arousing; the bar took on the look of a bordello.

For Jordan, telling me what she was doing had come with greater liberty: no more lying, no more trying to scuttle home and juggle her lies and the kids and me. For me, things were much more difficult now, because seeing Jordan had become the only thing on my mind. The fact that it was so potentially damaging to my career and my lifestyle had the unexpected effect of making it much more desirable. In the red light, staring at Jordan's man, among all the glittering, sexy girls of the Yacht Club, waiting to see if my wife could reel in her fish, I was so turned on I could barely breathe.

I don't know when Jordan actually arrived. She played it cool as a cucumber.

She had violated the rules of conduct in her own business by texting me a picture of her mark, so I knew who he was. He was there with a trio of men, all of them dressed in expensive suits and sporting the tensile facial muscles of high-powered finance executives. They were flirting, alternately, with some very beautiful women at the bar, and busily typing on their phones. Jordan's mark had struck up a conversation with a dark-haired beauty who looked like she needed to be carded, and I was wondering if I would be denied my chance to watch Jordan in action.

Jordan.

Hi.

I looked up, and around the bar. When I found her, she had a straw between her lips, hovering over a half-fished martini. She was smirking at me. A playful smirk.

I sucked in my breath. All the other women in the bar, as stunning as they were, suddenly looked tawdry compared to Jordan. I couldn't see her entire dress, but the top was spectacular. It was expensive, and classy, and dipped low and wide between her breasts in a scoop of loose fabric that moved every time she did. It was almost impossible not to stare at her chest, hoping the fabric would shift too far this way or that way, and show more of her skin. Her hair was down, straight as an arrow, and smooth as silk. She had dark make-up on her eyes – nothing drastic, but it set the light color of her eyes off, so much that they almost rivaled her breasts for attention.

Almost.

Judging by the wandering eyes of every man who walked behind her, the rest of her outfit was not bad, either. I was dying to see what she had on, but she wasn't moving. She bit into an olive, and raised a hand to order another drink.

The girl talking to her mark, however beautiful, wouldn't stand a chance against Jordan, I could see that now. Fuck. My wife was the hottest woman in this bar. And even hotter than that, she knew it.

And she was about to use it. But not for me.

I looked down at my phone and typed.

Looks like you have some competition.

I watched as Jordan read her text, and smiled with her teeth on her olive. She looked up, not at me, and bit into it with a sexy smile.

I have this, she seemed to say.

If she was keeping an eye on her mark, she gave no indication of it. The bartender approached her with another martini, and then jerked his head to the opposite end of the bar, where I saw another man lift his glass slightly. Jordan smiled, lifted her glass, and held up her finger.

I watched as my wife, who looked, at the moment, nothing like my wife, beckoned this other guy from across the bar with one finger.

What the hell was she doing?

I was starting to sweat. My waitress blocked my view, taking orders from the table next to me. Annoyed, she turned to me. "You want to maybe sit at the bar?" she shouted over the music.

I shook my head, and she rolled her eyes. I was taking up way too much space.

"I'm waiting on someone," I said, by way of explanation. Then I willed her to move out of my way.

By the time she cleared, the man who had ordered Jordan a drink was standing next to her. She had turned to him, and was giving her sexy man a toss of her hair. She was smiling, twisting another olive around in her drink.

And then, I saw it.

She lifted her eyes, and looked right at the man she was there to seduce. Smiling, talking to the guy who had purchased her drink. But her eyes burning right through the air, and right at her mark. The blue of her eyes was like ice under her coal-covered eyelids. There was no woman in that bar who was sexier, at that moment in particular. And her look communicated all of that.

My cock throbbed.

I watched Jordan with her other guy. This was still incredibly sexy, even though I knew it wasn't the right man. Just an appetizer. She ran her finger over the rim of the glass and brought her thumb to her mouth to suck it. The guy was eating it up, but she looked up at her mark, letting him know it was actually for him.

I watched her mark lose interest in his black-haired beauty. He got on his phone. He turned more and more in the direction of Jordan.

The bartender leaned over to Jordan, and she leaned toward him on her elbow. A smile, cruel and confident, as though she had known all along what he would say, turned up one corner of her mouth. Her eyes lifted up and she looked right at her mark.

I saw her say, "sure," and then the bartender, looked back and forth from her to the guy she was so intimately flirting with, before shrugging and producing another martini.

Now Jordan raised her glass at the mark, and smiled.

The guy she was talking to looked behind him. I had a pang of sympathy for him, as he was slowly edged out of the picture, but wanted to maintain his dignity. Jordan, playing the cruel bitch, turned back to him and kept talking, as though nothing had happened. As though she hadn't accepted a drink from another man.

This lasted another awkward moment, before the guy made for the bathroom. I privately praised the poise with which he extracted himself from the conversation.

Jordan smiled, at no one in particular, gave her hair a light flip, and turned back to face the center of the bar area, martini in hand. Self-assured smirk on her face.

I watched, stunned. Jordan seemed like a completely different person, even, than the last time I had watched her. She knew she had everything under control, and she was playing the part she needed to to get her man. What was astounding, and I made a mental note to tell her this later, is that she was so fucking good at it. A real pro.

She finished placed her phone on the bar.

You ready? Her message to me read.

I typed, almost too shaky with excitement to do it.

For what?

She took a sip of her martini and smiled.

She caught the bartender, by leaning over the bar, and I watched as she handed him the glass, along with a folded bill. She stroked his finger flirtatiously as she slipped it to him, and said something that made him laugh. She winked at him, and pushed herself away from the bar.

When she rounded the end of the bar, I saw her complete outfit, and perhaps her mark did for the first time, too.

Holy fuck.

Her shimmering, loose shirt ended snugly on her hips, and a very miniscule black skirt hung a few inches below that. Her legs, long and sculpted, dangled from under the skirt and ended in boots that came up to her knee. She looked fucking incredible.

She was walking fast, though. She gave her hair a toss, and zipped up her purse. She made no sign of stopping as she approached the place where her mark was standing, gawking, like the men he had come with, as she walked by.

I felt disappointment snake through me, as she passed him, thinking maybe she was going to lose this one, but marveling at how ultra-confident her face was as she did it. She looked over at me, and winked.

And then, her mark quickly spun a full 180 degrees, and grabbed her hand, just barely reaching her in time. He pulled her back toward him, and Jordan shot me one final look, rolling her eyes a little, before her face transformed into a look of sexy surprise.

Her mark blocked out his gawking buddies, and turned toward Jordan, who neatly wedged herself against the bar. She propped her foot up on the footrest, and it exposed the length of her thigh. She gave him a challenging, defiant shake of the head.

I could see it was exactly what he wanted. He grinned. His eyes went up and down her body. I felt every inch of his lewd gaze like fingers closing around my heart. He was clearly undressing my wife, and my wife was, well...savoring it.

Instead of making Jordan uncomfortable, like the Jordan I knew would have been, this man's aggressive, mental stripping of her clothing only seemed to pique her interest. I watched, in a mixture of lust and near-horror, as Jordan's own eyes took a long, racy walk over his body as well. She leaned her arm on the bar and rested her head against her hand. I watched her eyes, and the subtle way she changed her expression to be both unconvinced and inviting.

It was a totally different tack than the one she had used at The Brown, and I was impressed by (what I hope were) her acting skills. She had his number, this guy.

Then I felt another jolt: her left hand was exposed now, and on her ring finger was our wedding ring.

I wondered if she had forgotten to take it off. I actually worried for the operation a little, but I quickly discarded that thought: the way this guy was looking at Jordan, he wouldn't have noticed a three-hundred pound man hanging off her ring finger.

The bartender, amused now, set a drink down in front of Jordan. She had ordered, oddly enough, a shot of some kind. I watched her tap her glass to his, and down the clear liquid (no colorful, flavored shot). I was surprised to see her knock it back so smoothly. She set it down on the bar and said something to the bartender, who seemed to start pouring more beneath the counter.

I was starting to worry about Jordan's judgment. She was a small woman and the drinks I'd counted would normally have put her under the table.

She lifted up her phone at that moment, however, and held a long, sexy finger up to her prey as she ran her eyes over the screen.

The bartender set the shots on the table.

Jordan leaned forward, picking up the hot-shot's tie in both of her hands to pull his smirking face closer to hers. Her forehead was very nearly touching his, and she was looking down at his crotch while her fingers worked on his tie. I realized that from that angle, he could see down her shirt – and probably a great deal, too, maybe even her nipples. Jordan's mouth was moving, and I could tell by the way he caught his breath, she was saying something very, very explicit. I think I actually saw his cock twitch in his pants.

It took her a long time, whatever it was, and then she opened her purse. She took out a small envelope, just the right size for a room key. With the key, and the implications, clearly on display, she picked up her shot and slammed it. She wiped a trace of the liquid from the corner of her mouth with a long finger, ran her eyes up and down her man one last time, said something, and then set the glass and the key on the bar.

In one quick movement, she spun around and was gone.

I stared at her mark, who was staring after her. He was also stunned. One of his buddies shook him on the shoulder, and he reached out for the room key, slid it into his pocket, and turned around.

"Fuck," I saw him say.

My own cock was so hard I was reluctant to get out of the booth and push through the crowd, but I wanted to go find Jordan. I was high on the danger of what had just transpired: danger to my career, maybe my marriage, maybe Jordan's physical safety...all of it. An electricity was buzzing inside of me, a high I hadn't ever felt before.

I stumbled through the crowd, rudely pushing a few people out of the way. The Yacht Club's back exit dumped into an adjacent hotel, but when I pushed the door open the marble lobby was cold and nearly silent. I spun around, looking for evidence of Jordan. I looked out to the street, but there was no cab, no Jordan, no anything. This bar was in the financial district and not the haunt of club-going twenty-somethings (except for the serious gold-diggers inside). Where the fuck was she?

I pushed myself into the revolving doors. My phone buzzed in my pocket, humming along the length of my hard cock. I snatched it and read.

I'm downstairs. Come find me.

Jordan.

But not Jordan.

I don't know why I knew, because it had been years since I had been at The Yacht Club, for precisely the same reason all of these people were at The Yacht Club, but there was a long hallway at the bottom of the stairs with elegant, private bathrooms. I went full-circle in the slow-moving revolving door and nearly ran down the stairs, tucked away near the entrance to the club from the hotel.

A couple was ahead of me, kissing and groping on the stairway. Perhaps the popularity of The Yacht Club stemmed from the fact that there were so many elegant bathrooms at the bottom of this stairway, where people could, and did, get coked up or fuck in private.

I stared at the long hallway, not knowing where to look for Jordan.

She emerged from one of the doorways, leaning against the door, and smiled at me. Her smile was unlike any smile I had seen on her face before. Sexually charged, a little filthy, definitely mischievous. Her eyes dropped to my pants and she smiled a little more.

I stepped into the bathroom, weak at the knees almost.

"That. Was..." I said. I shook my head. "Fucking incredible."

It was, I would realize later, a little disconcerting to me that Jordan, instead of being sheepish, was on her own high. "That was a pretty sexy one," she said. She got close to me. "I don't normally have to be so...forward."

I caught my breath and she ran her fingers down my chest, similarly to how she had done with him.

"What did you say to him?" I breathed. I was desperate to know what she had said, in her low nasal voice, that had wound him up so much.

"You want me to tell you, word for word?"

I nodded.

Her hand moved down to my cock, and she massaged me through the fabric of my pants. "I said," she began, and she squeezed my cock, "I have to go back and take care of an emergency, but one hour from now, I'm going to be all alone in my room, with my cunt all wet and ready to get someone's cock nice and wet. For my ass."

My mouth hung open.

My wife. Saying this to another man. And what's more, that it had an air of realism about it, now that Jordan had become so...experimental...in bed.

She smiled. "I got the idea from you," she said.

But Jordan didn't give me much time to think about what to say. "I'm so glad you're here, though, because talking all that filthy trash to such a...good-looking guy...got me pretty hotted up."

"Oh yeah," I breathed. "And what would you do if I weren't here?"

She moved toward the sink, and edged herself up onto the marble counter. Her expression was unusual; challenging, sexy, confident as hell. She gave her hair a toss, and then she opened her legs. The short skirt rode up along the length of her thigh, and the shadows moved with it, further and further up the smooth inside of her thighs, until I could see her snatch. She had no underwear on, in that tiny little skirt. I replayed, on high-speed, everything I had just seen, with the knowledge now that she had been panty-less the whole time, and I almost keeled over from the pain in my cock.

"Fuck, Jordan," I said. I wasn't sure what I meant to say next, or what I meant by that. Was it too far? Was it too risque?

Or was it just the hottest thing I had ever seen or imagined in my whole life?

Or all of that?

Jordan moved her fingers over her thigh, and played with the skin on the inside of her leg. She teased herself in little circles, getting ever-closer to the very wet pink slit of her cunt, which was all I could really see. I was almost too dizzy to stand up.

"I guess it's better that you're here," she said, sliding her finger, finally, along the center stripe of pink in her pussy. She brought her finger up to her mouth, and closed her lips around it, sucking it off with a pop. "Or I don't know what I would do."

Jesus Christ. It was the most lewd thing I had ever seen with my own two eyes, somehow. Certainly the most. I don't know...cheap, porno-like thing I could think of Jordan ever doing, even in these past few months.

I unfastened my belt, and started to drop my pants.

As I did, Jordan slid from the counter, and turned around. She tossed her hair over her head. "Don't think this is an invitation to...you know," she laughed, momentarily more like her old self. She narrowed her eyes quickly though, looking at me through the mirror. "I just want to feel your cock pushing up against my ass,” she said. She was referring to the fact that my cock bent, very dramatically, upward when I was hard.

I looked down at her bare ass, and her dripping slit. No need to ask me twice. I freed my cock and found her hole. I sank into her flesh, and she bucked up against my hips. She squeezed my cock, and she slapped her ass backward against me, pushing up in her tall, tall boots, so that she could match my own force as we slammed into each other.

She slowed, however, and looked at me in the mirror. “Don't come inside of me,” she said, stroking my cock slowly with her superheated pussy. “I want to lick my cum off your cock, and then suck your cum out into my mouth.”

I didn't say anything, but squinted my eyes closed instead. “Fuck,” I whispered. She was moving slowly, but even that was too much for me. There was no way I was going to make it. I felt her pussy clenching around me, and I tried to push down the wave of orgasm that was rolling in and over me: it was like the first part of a tsunami, sucking out, ready to come in fast.

“Jordan,” I gasped.

She ground her hips against me and opened her mouth, emitting a mewl. I felt her pussy water up, and I fought the urge to spill my seed.

Sending how close I was, she slid off my cock, and turned around. I was so hard, so ready to go, that it was almost painful. It hit me like a belly-flop. She watched my cock without touching it, amused. “Just a little longer,” she coaxed. She slid down to her knees, and looked at my cock without touching me. She wanted me to back away from the cliff. It was awful, it was torture, it was fucking incredible.

She reached up and grasped my cock after a pause, right at the base. I felt myself twitch violently in her hand, and she pulled me closer to her, turning her head slightly to the side.

With the flat of her tongue, she licked my cock from where her fingers were closed around the base, along the length of my shaft, in a circle around my glans, and back down the opposite side of my cock to the base again. I closed my eyes. I felt her tongue snake over my balls – not licking so much as tickling, and then her tongue was wet and flat against the bottom of my cock. She ran it up to the tip, and lapped at the precum that was practically pouring from my dick.

She rubbed the head of my cock against her lips, giggling a little, and obviously at how worked up I was. I looked over at the mirror, and the sight of her holding my cock and opening her mouth was almost too much to bear. I watched her in the mirror until my cock disappeared entirely into her mouth, and then I looked down at her as she hollowed her cheeks to, as she had promised, “suck my cum out of my cock.”

I came violently, my orgasm slamming inside of me. I could feel my cum spurting inside of her mouth, but I had no time to warn her.

She stunned me then. Rather than pulling her mouth away and jerking me off, which would normally have been what Jordan would do, she fell down to her heels, and positioned her face right below me.

She leaned her head all the way back, so that her face was almost horizontal. And then, she opened her mouth, and used her hand to stroke the last spurts of cum right into her open mouth. Stray streaks clung to her cheek, and one slid down to her exposed neck, but most of my cum landed neatly in her open mouth. I could see it, gathered at the back of her throat.

I stared, until the last of my gut-wrenching orgasm wrested free of me and pooled in the back of my wife's throat.

Then she tipped her head forward, and swallowed. She ran her finger up her neck, gathering a last little streak of cum, and sucked it from her finger.

I was still staring, totally spent and totally shocked.

Jordan smiled. She popped up, scooting her skirt down to the middle of her thigh (barely). She turned to the sink, and reached out to snatch a paper towel with an ease that almost seemed practiced. She wiped cum from her face, dropped the paper towel in the wastebasket, and then pulled her lipstick from her purse.

Her eyes dropped to my still-exposed, and still-hard cock, and she smiled. She pressed her lips together. “I was going to ask if that was a bit too far,” she said. “But I guess not.”

I zipped up my pants.

Was “what” a bit too far? I wondered.

We left the hotel separately, at Jordan's insistence. If she ran into her mark, she explained, she could still salvage things if she was alone. I told her where the car was parked and gave her the keys, thinking it was better that she didn't stand around on the street in that get-up with no panties on.

Only after she had already gone did I realize she was probably over the limit and that was a bad idea.

My head was spinning as I waited for her.

It was the hottest sex I had ever had. I was pretty sure of that. Jordan's sluttiness, her raw dirtiness, was almost too fucking good to be true.

The fact that it was a hotel bathroom, that it was after she had just reeled in a hot guy with no underwear on, in a roomful of hot women, and with such professional ease, also had me on a high unlike any other.

It was all so dirty, so dangerous, so hot.

Lurking around, though, was some other bad feeling. Jealousy? Maybe. Concern? Maybe.

My car swung around the corner, and Jordan squealed to a stop. I started for the driver's side and she lay her hand on the horn. "Just get in," she said.

I plopped in the seat and looked at her. Her long legs looked incredibly sexy with her skirt bunched up at the very top of them. I could even see a little smear of her juices on the inside of her left leg. I could smell her, her tangy fragrance and her heat. She looked fucking great driving, her muscles flexing as she operated the pedals, her face cool and collected.

Jesus.

We had the windows down. A hot breeze had taken over the city. I felt like I had gone back in time somehow, to younger times. Like we were in high school again, no place to drive, carefree.

But I was still bothered.

"So how does it work, from here?" I said. "You really have a hotel room?"

Jordan smiled and pressed her lips together.

She smiled. "Well, there's no real ground for divorce, unless there's real adultery," she purred, moving her hand across the seats and into my lap. She smiled again when she found my hard cock.

"You know," she said, "I was worried you wouldn't be okay with this?" She turned to me. Her hair was whipping in the wind, and she looked hotter than ever. "But it seems you sort of like it so much..."

She raised her eyebrows.

She knew she had me on the hook.

"How far do you go?" I said.

She smiled. Shrugged.

“How far do you take it, Jordan, for real?”

She looked over at me quickly. “Babe,” she said, and her face had changed. “I’m just teasing you because it seemed like you were into it.”

I faced the front of the car and leaned my head against the headrest until it snapped back. I sighed at the roof of the car.

“That guy’s gonna show up the hotel room and run into his wife,” Jordan said. “And Arrest.”

She looked over at me. “Fully clothed they will be.”

I didn’t respond. I couldn’t tell what I was feeling. Part of me wanted to hear something else entirely, even though that “something else” would be like a hot poker through my chest, to my other sensibilities.

“Look,” she said, and she pulled over the car.

I looked back at her.

“I never take it that far. Never anything more than...like what you saw tonight.”

I could feel my cock coming to life again as I remembered Jordan running her hands all over the man’s chest.

“But it turns you on,” I said.

Jordan looked at me pointedly. She smiled and sat back in her seat. “Maybe. But I can see it turns you on, too.”

I sighed again, and banged my head on the headrest. It was true.

“You ever do more than that?” I found myself saying.

Jordan turned coyly to me. “I need to know why you’re asking.”

I shrugged.

“You want me to do more?” she said.

“Do you?”

Jordan bit her lip. She reached for my cock again, rubbing it through the material. “Sometimes. If he’s a hot guy.”

“Do you ever do more?”

She shook her head.

“You’ve never, say, rubbed up against a guy’s cock. Over his pants. Nothing like that?”

She smiled. Her hand pressed against me harder. We were on a very public street, I realized suddenly, and there were quite a few people passing by. Any of them could, and probably did, see into the seats. See what we were doing.

For some reason, that only made it hotter.

"It's against the rules," Jordan said.

She had her playful voice on again. We were both getting wound up, I could see. I was starting to understand that part of what was turning me on so hard was how illicit this all was. It was all on a knife's edge, and we could tip over any moment.

I looked out at the street. Two girls, linked arm in arm, gave me a salacious smile and giggled. They could see what Jordan was doing. One of them gave me a thumbs-up.

"In fact," Jordan said. "Everything we did tonight is very much against the rules. I could get fired."

I exhaled as Jordan began to unbuckle my pants.

"Jordan, I..."

Her hand was hot against my cock, though. I wasn't about to stop her. I grabbed my suit jacket, and threw it over my crotch. It was still obvious what we were doing, if anyone bothered to look, but I felt better if my cock wasn't out there in the open.

She freed my cock, and looked out the window the other way as she began to stroke my shaft. She began slow, teasing me.

"Would you like it if I took it a little bit further?" she said.

My face was turning bright red, not from embarrassment but a heavy flush. "How far would you take it?" I squeaked.

She squeezed my cock.

She had somehow removed a cigarette from her purse with her one free hand, and she lit it. She turned quickly to me, and when she saw my raised eyebrows, she shrugged. "Cover," she said, by way of explanation of her new smoking habit. She flitted her eyes at the passers-by on the street.

Her hand was now moving over the top of my shaft. My abs were tightening.

"Did you like what I said to that guy in the bar?" she said. "Because I can say it again, next time. And add a little something in." She stroked my cock to emphasize her point: she could take it to the next level.

Jesus. Who is this woman?

"Oh god," was all I could say.

"I've never done that," she said. Her voice was breathy, like she was on the bed being fucked as she spoke to me. "But maybe you want me to?"

I closed my eyes and sputtered an exhale as my orgasm shuddered through me from the simple visual of Jordan placing her hand on another man's cock, over the fabric of his pants. As the haze of lust faded, I realized how public the setting was, how embarrassing it might have been to have a police officer tap on our car. I swept my eyes over the street and was relieved to see that no one had noticed us.

Jordan, cool as a cucumber, removed her hand, slicked the cigarette away, and turned on the blinker. Calmly, she pulled into traffic.

“You owe me one,” she said.

I'VE DONE SOMETHING NAUGHTY

“This fucking shit. Shit, shit, shit, whores and fucking pimps, I swear to fucking God...”

Doug was in an unusual mood, one of ranting.

The accusations of corruption were now in full-blown investigative mode, and a special committee was now digging through our cases and interviewing everyone in the office, from the janitor all the way to Catherine Gates about every DUI since the dawn of time. I wasn't worried about it; I was clean. But I knew some things, and I was busy trying to figure out how I could keep my mouth shut about them and save my ethical soul, and perhaps also maneuver my way into Catherine's job. I was actually pleased to see the black suits marching around our office, carrying boxes. If Catherine was out, someone would have to take her place, and that person, hopefully, would be me.

Doug had been asked to leave his own office, so he was sitting at my assistant's desk, groaning about everything under the sun.

I put my feet up on the desk and put my hands behind my head. I had talked to Doug about it; he claimed to be clean as a whistle. “Relax, buddy. We get free take-out outta this.”

Doug muttered more cuss words but his face did light up a little.

The only downside to the whole business came in the form of a text from Jordan:

Bordello's 891 Canyon Street 8-10ish see you there?

This was really the only thing I cared about doing, all day long. Sure, I shuffled through my day and filed motions and listened to judges hollering from the bench and sat around in the time-freeze of jury deliberations, but all of that was on auto-pilot. My real mind was on whether I would receive a text from Jordan or not. Whether or not I would crank out my work as fast as I could, so I could leave and see Jordan, honey-trapping in her fucking hot dresses.

I typed.

Suits are here. I'm trapped.

Uncharacteristically, I made a frowning face.

There were often nights when I was unable to pull myself away from the office, and I was left to think about Jordan, dressed up and flirting with another man somewhere. These nights came with their own delicious pleasure, however. And usually, they came with a very, very sexy retelling of the evening later on at home.

I sighed, uncrossed my legs, and scooted myself under the desk to hide my growing erection. My cock had come to life thinking about the last time Jordan had told me about her “date,” on her knees with her lips just centimeters from the tip of my cock. I had gotten so worked up that my precum had actually dribbled onto her lips, and she had just kept talking, looking at me calmly with that wry little smile, as her lower lip turned creamy white with my smeared cum on it.

And that was just for starters.

My phone vibrated against my thigh.

We were technically under orders not to use our phones, but no one was really enforcing it. This investigation had been coming like a wide load on the highway for weeks now, and everyone who needed to had plenty of time to get a lawyer, ask IT for a “favor,” or lose files.

I looked. An image.

From Jordan.

The fact that I was supposed to turn my phone off, and hadn't, made it even more tantalizing. I held the phone on my seat, and opened the image. But I had to keep my eyes on the suits, and couldn't look down. Not yet.

“What do you want?” Doug said.

“Huh?”

“To eat.”

“Oh. Uh...whatever.”

Doug didn't wait for me to change my mind, but punched his phone so the receiver popped up into his hand. He swung around theatrically and began to dial.

I looked down at the screen, next to my thigh.

It was a selfie, taken carelessly by Jordan – perhaps on purpose – in the bathroom at Arest Greene. She was wearing a skin-tight black dress with a deep plunge between her breasts. It was, thankfully, fairly long, coming to a few inches above her knee (otherwise she would have looked like a hooker). She was turned to the side, and I noted with appreciation how absolutely fabulous her body was looking. Not a scrap of flab, everything in perfect, tight curves. She looked fucking incredible.

“Done! Tamales. Chili rellenos. Burritos. The works,” Doug announced.

I stared at him. He was grinning broadly at me. Almost expectantly.

My mind was too caught up in Jordan's black dress to know what he wanted me to say.

“Hot,” Doug hissed.

For a second, it felt like he was reading my mind. Then I saw he was chuckling. He meant “spicy,” because he knew I could barely handle Rosario's mildest sauce.

I managed to roll my eyes.

Doug looked at me funny, then.

He's a big fat man, Doug, but when he wants to, he can move fast as lightning. His head was hanging down near his midsection and he had a clear view of my cell in my hand before I had a clue he was moving.

He lifted his bulky torso back up slowly.

“It's not what you're thinking,” I said. “It's got nothing to do with this.”

“Then you better put it away, man.”

I looked at him helplessly.

Doug rose up and held his hands up like croupier leaving a table. He left the room, shaking his head.

My phone buzzed in my hand.

Another image. This one of her “mark.”

The man was young, maybe younger than me. Square jaw, broad shoulders, a fit physique beneath an expensive dress shirt. No tie. He had the intense, alpha-male stare of a day trader and hard partier. The picture had been taken surreptitiously, from maybe where Jordan's waist would be. Evidently she had not moved in on him yet.

Her message read: Hot, huh?

Jesus Christ, Jordan was driving me fucking crazy.

I watched Doug walk by my office in the opposite direction he had gone. He was in full-on mutter mode. He didn't look in at me.

As well he shouldn't. He was right to wash his hands of the whole thing. I mean, there was nothing going here but wildly embarrassing sexy talk with my wife. I could turn over the phone if I was caught and get nothing more than a round of dirty rumors circulating the office. But Doug didn't know what I was doing. For all he knew I was texting someone to dump my files or giving them a heads-up.

The fact that Doug was distancing himself from me now reassured me, however, that he was also clean as a whistle in all this business.

I looked at the picture of Jordan's target for the evening. He was, in fact, quite attractive.

Hot, I wrote, and then couldn't think of what else to say.

Take it further, I wanted to write.

Touch his cock.

Let him kiss you.

Fuck him and film it.

I just didn't have the balls. I wasn't even sure which one of those things I actually wanted her to do, or if I wanted her to do them at all.

I didn't send the message, not even the benign, "hot."

I looked up. Waving at me from across the sea of cubicles outside the office was Charlie Burns, the notorious former CIA agent in Special Investigations.

It was my turn to be interviewed.

I held my jacket in front of me, and reluctantly turned off my phone. Doug might overlook what I was doing, but Charlie Burns wouldn't. But I have to say that even after all this work, getting to where I was in my career, looking at taking over for Catherine Gates in just months (or maybe sooner, by the looks of things), I was less concerned about blowing it than I ever thought I could be. The only thing on my mind was Jordan.

The interview lasted only half an hour. My mind was so deep inside of my fantasies about Jordan I barely remember sitting there, or answering any questions. The take-away was that I was in the clear and they just needed some details about a few other cases, to burn someone else's house down. I felt sure I was sweating, even under the heatless lights of the ratty "conference room." No one noticed. I found myself saying goodbye and sitting, in a feverish sweat, in my office for the next twenty minutes. I had to play it cool. I wasn't in on anything illicit, but I knew what it would look like if I went scurrying away to the restroom or took out my phone. So I sat.

Twenty minutes is a long time to sit in a functionally bare government office, without a computer or a phone, thinking about what you know your wife is doing at that moment. My thoughts began mildly enough: images of Jordan with the handsome man, her face close to his and her eyes bright with interest as he told her about his job or his yacht or his portfolio (this guy looked like that kind of guy). Jordan's soft cheek getting scratched by the five o'clock shadow on his aristocratic jaw, as she leaned close to him to hear some flirtatious secret. Jordan's pretty lips forming a smile as her fingertip brushed over the bulge in his expensive suit pants and she imagined how big that same cock would be if it were hard, in her hand. If she tugged it and pulled it closer to her mouth...

I broke when I thought of Jordan bending over the bathroom counter, her hands on the mirror, looking at her own wild face as Mr. Good-Looking slowly, slowly inched his fat cock inside of her.

"I have to use the john," I said, to no one in particular, and I strode to the men's room on our floor.

I locked myself behind a bathroom door and jerked out my phone. I waited with an increasingly hard cock and a sweltering impatience as it turned back on.

There were five messages from Jordan.

I stared at the list, wondering if by opening them I was going to cross over some line from here to there, and if everything would be changed after this. My stomach twisted cruelly. I started to feel that cold burn going through me. Three images. Would one of them be of something I didn't want to see? Or that I did want to see?

I opened them one at a time, in chronological order, wanting to drag out my delicious suffering.

I think he might have a big cock.

I stared at the screen. Jordan, Jordan. A wave of ecstasy went through me and crashed against the sharp pain she was causing me. I shivered. Of course this was exactly what I wanted her to do, I had practically begged her to do it...but I couldn't help feel something like a slip, a sensation that I was losing control. I mean, did she have to be so fucking into it?

At the same time, something fluttered around inside of me hoping she would only get lewder.

The next message.

He does.

I imagined all the ways she could get this information, From the very PG (she saw a big bulge when she looked down) to the worst (she stuffed the whole thing in her mouth and sucked his cum down her throat while he balled her hair up in his fist and used her mouth like a rubber doll).

I shuddered again.

I stared at the next message: an image, only waiting to be opened. My stomach felt like ice, my chest was burning...or was it the other way around?

I steadied myself on the stall.

I opened the image.

It took a moment for me to figure out what it was, and perhaps Jordan knew that it would be hard for me to understand. She had captioned the image: This is how hot this guy is.

And then it was clear: I was looking at the damp white fabric of her thong underwear, between her legs. Yes: right where her juicy cunt would open up the material was soaked through to a dark cream color.

I unbuckled my pants and took out my cock. Now I was dizzy, and I wasn't going to make it through the rest of the evening without releasing this energy. I started to stroke myself as I used my left hand to swipe clumsily to the next message.

I've done something naughty.

Another image.

I opened it.

Very very dark. I squinted.

Jordan, thoughtful girl, had captioned it as well. I took off my panties.

The image seemed to clear itself up: yes, there it was. Jordan's bare snatch, between her legs, poorly lit because she was no longer in the bathroom but out at the bar, or the restaurant.

Or was she in a taxi, headed to a hotel?

I was so close to coming. I swiped at the phone as I pumped my cock furiously, and the message appeared but I barely caught the first words before, in my shaking, draining, fevered lust, the phone slipped out of my hand and fell.

Right into the fucking toilet.

What I had managed to read of the message was burned into my mind, though.

I hope you don't mind that -

"Fuck!" I hissed. But I couldn't be bothered to worry about it at that moment. Only what it might have said. I hope you don't mind that I fucked him. I hope you don't mind if I suck his big cock. I hope you don't mind that I let him stroke my clit in the back seat of a taxi.

I hope you don't mind. I've done something naughty. I took off my panties. Look how wet they were, just thinking about this great big cock, on this hot young man...I hope you don't mind I went ahead and let him show me all ten inches of it and then I couldn't help myself...

I had the presence of mind to come into a wad of toilet paper. I almost gave myself a stroke trying not to yell.

“Paddy?” Doug called, as I was standing there panting. “You okay in here? People are asking where you are.”

I stared at the ceiling. “Yeah. Yeah man, I just...fuck, I dropped my fucking phone in the toilet.”

A pause.

“Hate that,” Doug said dryly, and let the door swing shut with no further comment.

I almost wrecked the car driving home. I feel sure of it, but hen, I barely remember driving back home. The only thing in my field of vision were the lewd images I was creating. My imagination became filthier and filthier, and Jordan more and more of cheating, dirty whore, with every passing mile on the interstate. I was shaking when I got home. I had an erection, I was sick, I was buzzing with more energy than I had ever had in my life.

I was relieved that Jordan’s car was in the garage, but just as quickly as I was relieved, I remembered that she played many a game with that car – and I had never asked her about any of it, not wanting to reveal what a stalking, scary husband I had been before I confronted her.

I glanced at Olivia, perched in her usual spot with a bowl of cereal precariously mounted on her knees. She barely looked at me. I stumbled to the bedroom, looking for Jordan.

No Jordan.

“Where's Jordan?” I practically growled at Olivia.

Olivia looked up at me. “I thought you knew,” she said plainly.

“I dropped my phone...she hasn't called you?”

Olivia made a face. “Just to babysit. Why don't you call her or something? Your phone totally broke?”

She looked amused.

I wondered how much Olivia knew, or sensed, about what was going on here. Her face was smug, as though she had insight on the whole thing.

But Olivia was not my problem. My problem was my wife.

What if she had been trying to tell me something, and I hadn't gotten the message? What if she had gone to the hotel with that guy? What if she was under his body right now, taking his big cock inside of her, moaning and screaming on the bed and screeching with every hard thrust? What if he was coming all over her big tits as I stood here in my kitchen, and what if Jordan had been sending me messages?

I'm going to rub his cock between my tits, is that okay?

I'm going to go all the way, text me if it's not cool.

Okay...here I go then.

I stomped back to the study. I paced. There was a way to send Jordan messages from the internet, I knew of that – but no way to receive them back that I knew of.

It hit me like a load of bricks, and if I hadn't been so twisted up inside, I might have found it funny:

One could, after all, call a phone.

I frantically dialed her number. It seemed like eternities that the phone rang and rang. Maybe it was only once. Twice. I have no idea.

“Olivia? Everything okay?” Jordan's voice sounded normal. Cheerful.

“It's me.” I, on the other hand, sounded like a fucking madman.

“Paddy? What are you -”

“I dropped my phone, it's broken, I didn't get all of your messages.”

A pause.

Was it a long pause? A pause of regret? Regret for what she had done, or for what she didn't do?

“Hmmm,” she purred. Her voice was sexy and coy now. “That's too, too bad.”

“What did you do?” I croaked.

There was another pause. “I'm almost home,” she breathed.

And then the phone went dead.

ANOTHER FIRST

“So where did you leave off?”

Jordan was still wearing her black dress. This fucking dress, that cut almost to her sternum and displayed her breasts in all of their magnificent glory. I looked her over, trying to decide if she'd taken that dress off and put it back on. If it was stained, or wet, or crumpled.

She had her hand on her hip, and I could see from her face that she was enjoying herself. It was a new expression for her, one that had been creeping onto her face lately, since this whole thing started.

Or was it before that? Maybe Jordan had been changing all along, and now she was in the final stages of her bloom into a hyper-sexual woman.

Whatever. This made me nervous, I don't mind saying, like I had a wild animal on my hands. But there was no denying that I was winning in another way. My arteries felt so full of new, vigorous blood I could barely stand.

“The panties,” I said. “No. Just...just start from the beginning.”

Another man had approached her in the beginning. I could only imagine. But she had caught the attention of her mark, and he was a competitive guy, a finance guy, the kind of guy who wasn't going to lose out on a hot woman to another man.

“How did you get his attention?”

Jordan touched her dress, along the line that plunged between her breasts. “I have my ways.”

She certainly did. I looked her up and down. It was hard to imagine where Jordan could go that she would not be the most stunning woman there. Sure, there were younger women, maybe even prettier women, but Jordan's silky, cherry hair, and her enormous tits, were too unusual for her not to stand out. I suddenly realized what I had on my hands: an ultra-hot wife, and when she was dressed like this, she was the woman every man wanted to fuck.

He had come over, bought her a drink.

“And when did you notice his big cock?”

Jordan smiled. She gave her hair a toss. “So you liked that message.”

We were still standing about ten feet away from each other. I kept the distance because I wanted to look at her as though I was watching her from a distance. She kept the distance, I knew, because she enjoyed teasing me. She was getting off on this as much as I was. I could tell by the flush on her cheeks.

“Did you touch him?”

“Not at first.”

Jordan's face was smiling as she watched my reaction. She knew exactly how her words would twist inside of me.

“I was attracted to him, right away. A lot of them I'm not so much. But he was...”

“Hot,” she mused. “And...had a really, I don't know. Dominating personality.”

She smiled.

“So I knew you would like to know about that. I excused myself and went to the ladies.' And that's where I took my first picture...” She moved closer to me now, swinging her hips, using her body even at that distance to stroke my cock. Closer still. “I took that photo, and then I decided that I wanted to take it a little further. I figured you would want me to.” She stepped even closer, and now I could smell her skin. She was giving off heat like a radiator, and the scent of her skin and her pussy were faint but there. She reached for my tie, and pulled me to her. We were just a foot away from each other now. “Did you? Did you like that I took it one step further than that?”

I remembered the picture of her bare snatch, dark and unclear though it was. I imagined her in this skin-tight dress, with no panties on, next to the man whose “dominating personality” she was so attracted to.

I could barely breathe. I just shook my head. No, I didn't mind that she took it to the next step.

Jordan just smiled.

“Was that your naughty thing?” I whispered.

“The panties?” Jordan asked. She looked up at the ceiling as though she needed to consider it. Why was she so fucking good at this?

Who cared?

She rested her arms on my shoulders and drew herself closer to me. “Do you want it to be? Do you want the panties to be the only naughty thing I did?” She was whispering this against my neck, and her voice was slicing through me. My cock bounced around as though it were another being entirely.

Jordan moved her hand down, into my pants, and grasped it. “I think you wanted me to do something very naughty? Is that right?”

I hope you don't mind that -

She dropped her other hand and unbuttoned my pants. She slid down my body and took my pants and boxers with her. My cock sprang out, hard as a rock. She smiled.

“What naughty thing do you wish I had done, Paddy?” she asked. “Tell me.”

I looked at her. I didn't care, really, that the tables seemed to be getting turned on me. I sucked in my breath. She was looking up at me, expectantly, awaiting the instruction to show me how she would do something naughty with another man. She trailed her fingers over her dress.

“Did you want me to suck his cock and let him come all over my tits?”

An image flashed through my mind, of the man from the picture groaning as his seed splattered all over the pale skin nestled inside the drastic “v” of Jordan's dress. She took my gasp as an affirmation, and smiled. But instead of moving toward me, as she usually did, to grasp my cock and guide it to her mouth, she slid further to the floor, and turned her head up to me. She opened her mouth into a perfect, inviting “o.” The message was clear: she was inviting me, not to get my cock sucked, but to fuck her mouth.

Is that what she had done with her man at the bar?

I moved forward, and straddled her, so that my cock was above her open mouth and pointed directly down at her. Did I really want to fuck my wife like this?

As though she was reading my mind, she looked at me and gave me her devious flash of the eye. Encouragement. “This is the naughty thing I did,” she said, and her voice was a mixture of taunting and invitation.

I grasped her by the back of the head, my finger slipping in her silky hair, and pulled her up as I dropped down, and I filled her round red mouth my cock. My mind, however, played the image of the day trader, his fancy shirt open and revealing his toned abs, pummeling her mouth like I was. But his cock was far bigger, and he went all the way into her throat, puffing her neck up with bulge of his giant member. His balls crushed against her chin. He slammed into her as she sat there taking it.

It wasn't long before I could feel myself coming. I slid from Jordan's mouth, and she followed my cue brilliantly, rising up a little and pulling aside the edges of her dress to bare her magnificent tits for me as my cum splashed all over her.

I tugged on Jordan's hair, and guided her to the bed. There was no way I was going to leave her unsatisfied. I pushed her onto the bed, and she draped herself over the edge, her ass to me. I pulled her ass cheeks apart and dove into her soaked flesh, finding her clit with my tongue. Her scent was overwhelming: tangy, sweet. She was soaked, and her own arousal dripped down the sides of her thighs.

I found her hard clit with my tongue, and felt her shudder when I pressed against it. I lapped at her and she howled into the sheets and squeezed me into her sopping flesh. I slid my tongue along her slit and up to her ass, partly to be able to breathe, but the way she squirmed and cried into the sheets only served to turn me on again. I could feel my cock getting hard. I remembered the silky feel of her flesh inside her ass. The heat of it. The tightness.

I moved back to her clit, and teased her some more. Then back along her taint, up to the rim of her ass. I had drawn her sweet juices with me and they were slick over her asshole. I darted my tongue inside of her. A light metallic tang surprised my tongue, but when her body seized up in my hands I shuddered in delight. I went in again.

I made another trip from her clit to her ass, and plunged a little deeper inside of her. She tossed her head on the bed and spread her legs further for me. Again, I wiggled the tip of my tongue on her clit until I felt her abdomen harden, felt her getting close, and then I trailed my mouth back to her ass. I loved that she was mine to control this way; her body hardening and then collapsing at my whim.

But my cock was hard now, throbbing against my leg. I rose up on my knees, and was pleased to find that this position was perfect: Jordan's ass was right here for me, glistening with my spit and her own juices.

I drew a fingerful of her excitement up to her ass, and swirled it around her anus. Then I pressed my thumb inside of her. She gasped, but she opened up for me.

“Would you have liked his big fat cock inside of you?” I said. I pushed inside of her pussy anyway, not waiting for the answer.

Jordan lifted her head and squealed. I treated her to a few thrusts, just to make her pant and twist on the sheets, but when I felt her nearing an orgasm I slowed and withdrew, an inch at a time.

“Would you let him fill your ass up?” I said, pressing the tip of my cock against her asshole.

Jordan didn't answer, but she pressed against me, and it was she herself who moved to push my cock inside of her.

I watched as my cock disappeared into her ass. I imagined her hot pink flesh, her most intimate hole, and then my mind imagined seeing this from across the room. Seeing another cock, a bigger cock, disappear inside of her. As I had with Olivia, before I knew it was Olivia.

I reached for her hair and pulled her onto my lap as I sat down on my heels. Her body fell onto my cock, sheathing it completely. She bit into my hand and screamed. Then she began to move her hips up and down.

“That's it,” I growled. “Show me how you would ride his cock.”

My own words sent a jolt through me, and I felt myself building up to another orgasm.

I found her clit with my fingers, and pressed against her. I didn't need to move much: her own bouncing brought her to climax. My other hand was on her mouth, and she bit my fingers again. Her body spasmed, her ass clenched against my cock, and I felt a trickle of her warm cum sliding down to her ass and my balls.

I grabbed her by the neck, to hold her back to me, her body pressed against my chest. I held her by the collar, pushing her and pulling her as she wilted from the high of her own orgasm. Her ass squeezed my cock in waves, and she howled, trying to drop her head forward. But I wasn't done with her yet. Not quite yet.

I rammed my cock deep inside of her, and pressed her down by the shoulder as I came. She yelped, and then relaxed against my back. My cum filled her hole, and she slumped against me.

“Fuck,” Jordan said, finally.

She slid off of me, and crawled up onto the bed.

I panted on my heels for a moment, before following her.

We looked at each other and laughed. I pulled her to me.

“You didn't actually do any of that,” I said. I was half-joking with the seriousness of my tone.

I felt Jordan's face smile against my chest. “Maybe I did.” She kissed me on my chest and watched my uncomfortable look. “No,” she reassured me. “I did the panties...and...”

“And?”

She sat up. She was smiling but a look of concern was on her face as well. “I mean, I did...uh...rub his cock a little.”

My stomach seized. I imagined her fingers tracing the shape of another cock. Even if she had done it over the fabric, it was searing hot. And even after all the activity, my cock started to twitch again.

“Just over his pants,” she added, running her fingers over my cock, which was still sticky and wet with cum.

I didn't know if I was disappointed or relieved. Again.

She relaxed onto her back. “Is that too far?” she asked.

Silence.

“I don't know, Paddy. You've got to tell me what you're thinking about all of this.” She sighed. Her voice was a little exasperated.

I turned on my side to look at her. I ran a finger from her cheek to her shoulder. “Do you like this?” I asked. I waved my hand in the direction of the bedroom, to indicate what we had just done. Meaning the teasing, the line-walking, the other men, the torrid sex.

She bit her lip, her eyes reading mine. This was the old Jordan again: always looking to me for what I would say. I watched her do this and then I saw something about her expression change. Maybe it was resolve, or defiance, or confidence. Maybe all three. But she seemed very different when she said, with some resolve. “I do.”

I had been circling around this very thing all this time: my wife had changed. While I wasn't looking. And I was starting to realize that I was both uncomfortable with it and enthralled.

“I like this,” I said, cautiously.

“It's hot,” Jordan agreed.

“It's fucking hot. And I...I don't know. I know it's a strange thing, to tell you that I want you to...take it all the way. Or further. Or, I don't know.” I was watching her face. She didn't seem shocked. In fact, she seemed excited.

I touched her face. "You seem like a different person," I said. It got me a little choked up, unexpectedly. "I feel like...I wasn't paying enough attention to you."

I could see that my statement had the same effect on Jordan, and I could also see that her dislike of welling up at what she called "cheesy" things had not changed at all. She turned onto her back quickly and wiped her eyes with impatience. Then, as was typical of her, she made a joke to cover up her emotions.

"You haven't even noticed that I've grown a cock!" Then she started fake crying.

I hugged her to me. She didn't want to keep talking about something once she made a joke. It was the signal that the message was received, it was what she wanted, and she didn't need any more discussion.

"It's so fucked up," she said, after a minute, and it was an unexpected statement. The high I was on started to crash inside of me.

"I know it's like...dangerous for your job. Dangerous in general. A bad idea, people say it never works."

I closed my eyes. What was I feeling? She was making true statements but I wanted her to stop. At that moment I realized that I fully wanted this new step in our relationship; I wanted to keep going, I wanted to push the boundaries.

"But I like it," she finished.

I was on such a roller coaster through that sentence I didn't know what to say.

She looked up at me.

"I like it too," I managed to say.

Jordan bit her thumb and looked straight across the room. "Would you want me to do...I don't know. Something more than that?"

I stroked her arm. "I...I mean, I want you to do, whatever...makes you happy. I really mean that," And saying this, I realized it was true. "I've been...I really like what we've been doing." I felt something twist in my chest. "But if you wanted to take it...I don't know, to the next level..."

Jordan was chewing on her thumbnail and it escaped her teeth with a sharp click.

"If I did that," she said. "I might lose my job."

I gave a fake sigh. "Oh, Jordan...not if I lose mine first, because I'm so distracted."

We both laughed.

It felt good, to laugh about that. Because the truth was: of course I cared. I had house payments and car payments and two kids who burned through electronics like they were toilet paper. But I didn't care the way I had cared months ago, like there was nothing else in the world except to rise to the heights of DA and then become a judge. Jordan was back where she should have been all along: the most important thing.

It put me in a certain uneasy state that the “thing” which put Jordan front and center was our new-found sex life, and that what it involved was something that was a little dangerous, a little outside of the “norm.” That it was a thing that, if discovered by anyone, wouldn't play very well for me.

But that was precisely where the bite of it came from, too.

“Look,” I said. “I feel like...” I sighed. Talking about our relationship had never been my strong point. It was probably where it had all derailed for so long.

“I feel like we're closer than ever,” Jordan said, and I squeezed her as a thank-you for finishing my thoughts. “Is that weird?”

Maybe it was.

“Maybe,” I said. “But it's how I feel, too.”

She dropped her hand onto my chest. “Will we still feel like that if we change things up, take it further?”

Her hand was moving down my chest, closer to my cock. It was sending ripples of excitement through me, as though she were squeezing me already.

Take it further.

Would things still be the same? Right now, I knew, I had things almost perfect with Jordan. I was more into her than I was when we were young and I first started dating. But I also knew how it was with sex, with love, with relationships: if you settled into the same thing, it would eventually become dull. How long would it be exciting just to see her flirt with other men?

But if she took it further, would I get what I wanted, or would the jealousy tear us apart?

I knew I should have said all of this. But Jordan was already climbing on top of me, and my hands were already sliding along her ribs to the supple swell of her breasts, where her nipples were swinging closer, closer to my mouth...

So the conversation didn't really get finished at all.

A WINNER

The thing about Jordan's job as a honey-trapper is that she couldn't really choose the men she was out to trap. Right after our conversation, and all the excitement it induced in me and in her, she was assigned a slew of men she had no intention of sleeping with.

It didn't stop her from doing her job with the same incredible professionalism she had always done it with, and it didn't completely destroy the fun of me coming to watch. But if I was there, she would find me and give me the slightest shake of her head.

Some of these disappointments were not really disappointing to me: there was a balding, poorly-dressed banker who laughed much too loudly at anything Jordan said, until she texted me that she couldn't take him seriously because of that laugh. The evening ended up with us having silly sex, interrupted by bouts of uncontrollable sniggering.

A software engineer, from across the room, seemed promising at first. I had, by the time she went on this mission, begun moving closer and closer to where she was. I wanted to hear what she said. I wanted to smell whatever perfume she was wearing. I wanted to watch her touch her mouth, or tuck her hair behind her ears. It was all so much more delectable up-close, near her.

The man had been fairly attractive. Looking at him I saw echoes of my own appearance: sandy hair, pleasant features, trim physique (which by the late thirties was the equivalent of "hot," Jordan had informed me). I had been impressed by the way that Jordan had immersed herself fully in what she called her "moderate-bimbo act," which apparently was the way to go with some guys. She laughed and slapped him playfully on the arm. "Oh my god!" she exclaimed, over and over. And: "That's so way over my head."

It was looking promising to me. She seemed to be having fun, and to tell the truth I felt safe with a choice like this guy: one in which Jordan was acting, and not being herself. It would give all of the pleasure of jealous pain, while avoiding the real, gritty jealousy. But she texted me when he went to the bathroom:

Can you believe this guy? If he talks any more about himself his cock will come out of his own mouth.

I snorted my beer through my nose. Jordan had certainly acquired an edgy humor and a bit of boyish filth to her comments since working this job – not just the honey-trapping, but the PI office. I liked it. No, I adored it. It combined with her elegant new sexiness to have the most intoxicating effect. Especially since, underneath it all, she was still the same sweet Jordan I had married.

So that guy didn't work out.

A dry spell came along, and some of the enthusiasm we had for the idea began to wane. We talked about it less, I obsessed about it less, and we acted it out less in bed.

Then I received the text:

We may have a winner.

It had been almost three months since we had our conversation about Jordan taking things to the next level. It had slowly edged away from the forefront of my mind. But now it was back, and my whole body responded to the text. My pulse raced, and I could feel my heart in my chest, pounding with the sudden excitement. My cock came to life almost instantaneously, pulsing with the ache that months earlier had been my constant companion. My breath became shallow and fast. Icy and boiling blood seemed to pour through my body all at once.

An image. I opened it.

I was in a rarely-used corridor of the courthouse, where the carpet was moldy and the lesser functions of the court were tucked away, waiting on the assuredly quick verdict of a jury in a felony theft case. I was grateful to be alone.

Jordan had snapped a photo of the photo she had been given to work the case. A handsome, rough-looking, guy with slightly Slavic features glowered at the camera. It almost looked like a mugshot. I winced, then I read the caption. Hockey player.

Well, that explained the glower. And the slightly crooked nose.

Something stirred inside of me, as the clichéd thoughts about the masculinity of an athlete bubbled up in my mind. I was already imagining his biceps, actually bulging. His six-pack abs. His enormous thighs, as thick and solid as tree trunks from skating. His big, rough hands, wrapping around Jordan's small waist to lift her up against a wall and spread her thighs open, so he could pound away at her with his superhuman strength...

My cock was rock solid. Blood was pounding in my ears.

Looks good, I tried to type, but it came out: Loops goidf.

Jordan sent a picture of herself in reply, evidently unaffected by my spelling errors. It was her mouth, with her finger in between her teeth.

My stomach turned ice-cold.

Is this actually what I wanted?

Now that I had some time between the idea and what seemed like the actual event, I started to have my doubts. Jordan's response, for some reason, sent a knife through my heart.

And yet...

My body was responding like a five-alarm fire. I couldn't deny that I was back up to the dizzying heights I had felt months before, when we started on this adventure. It was sucking me in like an abandoned drug of choice, threatening to rage as addiction again.

"Paddy?"

Cassie was standing at the end of the corridor, her face doing nothing to hide her annoyance at having had to search for me. I looked down at the bench I was sitting on and saw that my work blackberry had several notifications. I picked it up. It was on vibrate. I must have been so distracted I didn't feel it.

"They're ready," she said, her impatience growing.

I looked at her. I must have seemed blank.

"The jury."

"Okay," I said, and I held up a finger. I started to type on my own phone.

Cassie sighed. "Paddy, they've been there ten minutes already. Sticks is getting pissed off."

Send me the place and time.

Then I hurried back to the courtroom, briefcase in front of my crotch, trying to think of anything at all that would calm my fucking erection before I had to stand up in front of the terrifying Judge Sticks and the jury.

The place was The Honey Hole, a club in the dingy Five Points area that had been in recent decades renovated into nightclubs; first upscale, hipster hangouts, which had slowly degraded into more "urban" clubs.

Many a case of a stabbing had come to my desk outside one of these clubs in recent years. The thought even occurred to me, as I stared at the name of the club, that I might run into someone I had put away.

But self-preservation was not the name of the game for me right now.

I went home anyway, and stared into my closet.

Club.

I had been to a club maybe ten times in my entire life, and when I did go, it was sort of on accident and never much fun for me. Beyond that, what I knew of clubs was gleaned from music videos, TV shows, and my own criminal cases. None of which was helping me with the current problem, which was what to wear.

I was immediately distracted by the thought of what Jordan would wear.

It didn't seem, I suddenly realized, all that difficult to catch a hockey player doing something improper. Weren't those guys always doing something stupid anyway? Right out in the open?

And then, a strange thought, a strange combination of what seemed like proprietary pride, and nervousness: would Jordan be able to hook some VIP-guy like this, at a club, where the competition was notoriously young and fierce?

I remembered Jordan in her black dress, and a shiver went through me.

My wife really was that hot. But she would have to turn up the heat to an all-new level to get the attention of a guy who was used to having girls throw themselves at him.

My cock was hard again, or maybe “still,” would have been a better description, and I was having a hard time thinking.

What the fuck should I wear? I briefly considered consulting Olivia, but she had given me such a look when I came home, and I was still a little sheepish about having enjoyed her display with her boyfriend so much. I nixed the idea.

I settled on jeans and a white shirt. I looked at myself in the mirror.

I wasn't bad-looking. I looked, though, like a man who worked in an office. I looked like the wrong kind of person to be at a club called, almost ironically, The Honey Hole.

I went out to the kitchen. Olivia was watching TV with her standard bowl of cereal on her knee.

“Olivia,” I said from the door. “Liv.”

She took a spoonful of Wheat Chex and crunched on it. Without looking up she said, “You should have stopped at 'Olivia.’”

“I’m sorry,” I said, and this made her jerk her head up at me. She squinted when she saw my jeans, and then turned back to her television program, which was, to my great surprise, a NOVA documentary.

“Olivia, I need to get into a club tonight. The Honey Hole. You know it?”

Olivia turned back to me, and stared at me for a full minute before she snorted loudly. “Not like that, you’re not.”

And then, maybe seeing my desperation, her face softened. “Jesus. The two of you are fucked up. Here.” She stood up, and gave me no indication whatsoever of what to do. I followed her, up to her upstairs suite, which I was unsurprised to find completely trashed.

She fished a pair of pants from under the bed, and handed them to me. They were also jeans, but it was easy to see they were “cooler.”

“Oh god,” I said. “Are these..?”

“You want to get in, or not?” she said, and started to fish something out of a drawer.

The jeans fit, and I squeezed my eyes closed as I pulled them on, hoping they weren’t too dirty, and that Olivia’s boyfriend wore underwear. I decided to put it out of my mind.

She tossed an even more wrinkled white shirt at me. I ignored the faint smell of another guy, and put it on.

She was already in her bathroom, ransacking the cupboard, and she returned with a bottle. She was squeezing a clear liquid into her hand. “Here. Your fucking hair makes you look like Warren Cleaver or whoever he is.”

It took me a moment to get the mangled reference, which I was surprised Olivia could make at all, and in that time she raked her fingernails through my hair and mussed it gently. I tried to push the image of her huge tits and her stretched ass out of my mind as she sent shivers of arousal down my spine with her scalp treatment, but it wasn’t easy.

“There,” she said. She stood back and looked me up and down, and when she got to my crotch, her lips formed a sly smile. “It’s okay,” she said. “I have that effect on everyone.”

She stepped out of my way, and I looked at myself in the big mirror of the bathroom.

I looked pretty good.

“Thanks, Liv,” I said. “Olivia,” I corrected myself quickly.

Even though I looked cooler, it became obvious to me as I drove downtown again that I wasn't going to get into a club. Not as an unaccompanied, middle-aged male. No way. And the last thing I wanted to do was stand in line by myself.

But self-preservation, even of my pride, was far away from my top priority. The thought flitted around and disappeared almost as soon as it came into my head. It was replaced by thoughts about Jordan. What she was wearing, what she would do, how far she would go.

The line, as I had imagined, was not overwhelming but was fairly long. I tucked my fists into a leather jacket Olivia had insisted I wear. It was freezing. I wished I had, instead, worn the trench coat I had almost left the house in, because at least then I would be warm until I was rejected from this club.

I kept my head down, not wanting to look like the fool I felt like, so I was shocked when an arm shot out of the line and grasped my shoulder.

I looked up.

It was Jordan, but it wasn't. She was grinning, and cocked her head to the side. “Come on in with me, baby,” she said.

I stepped over the rope, still staring at her. Behind me, a bunch of people groaned and someone called me a faggot. Great. Jordan waved her finger in the air and yelled, “He's with me!”

“Call me if you need a real man, honey!” was the answer.

Who was this woman I had married?

I looked her up and down.

It was my wife, but it wasn't. Her auburn hair seemed darker. She had straightened it, and it fell like a sheet of satin around her face, framing it in a long, shaggy curtain. Her eyes were encircled by black eyeliner and a smoky haze of gray shadow that gave her sleepy, sexy, come-fuck-me look. Her lips shone with a childish lip gloss, a bright, teenaged pink.

But the dress was the kicker.

“That looks like underwear,” I whispered.

“I know,” she said, jumping a little and hugging herself. “I’m fucking freezing.”

The dress was made of satin, and the unforgiving fabric swept around her every curve, looking for a flaw to exaggerate and finding nothing but smooth, taut skin to hug. Spaghetti straps held it the low-dipping fabric precariously over her breasts. Behind, it dipped savagely to her lower back, and it was short – barely mid-thigh.

It was also bright, bright pink.

My instinct was to cover her up.

To top it off, she was wearing a pair of shoes that made her about six inches taller. They elongated her lean thighs and gave her legs a barbie-doll length.

She was hot.

Too hot.

I was having misgivings of a more extreme nature now. Half of me wanted to call the whole thing off. The other half of me was savoring every single wandering eye that was walking up and down her legs or nestling between her breasts.

She turned to me. “Okay, but once I get you in, I’m ditching you, okay? I gotta hook up with some other girls from work to make it look real,” she whispered. “I’m taking a big risk here,” she smiled and giggled a little as she said this. She was having her own, special brand of fun.

She was clutching a tiny handbag.

She looked twenty.

She nudged me. “You look good. Pretty hip,” she said, in her kooky, middle-aged woman voice. This made me feel a little better, this familiar voice.

The bouncer was waving in our direction. “Hey you! Pretty little red.” He was beckoning her up to the front of the line.

Naturally. That was the kind of girl you wanted in your club.

She jerked her thumb at me. “You gotta take this clown. He’s my cousin from out of town.”

The bouncer glared at me, folded his arms, and rolled his eyes.

Jordan gave a toss of her hair. I watched as she smiled just right, made just the right joke of things for him, and basically just worked him. He nodded, and shrugged. Sometimes you gotta let in the bad with the good.

I wanted to say one last thing to Jordan as we entered, but the club swallowed us up like a beast in red lights and body heat and pounding music. Jordan almost instantly disappeared from my sight, and I felt like someone had thrown my heart off a cliff. I peered into the darkness and caught a very quick snippet of her face, looking back at me.

Her mouth was moving.

I love you.

And then she was gone.

INSIDE THE CLUB

The club was a small-ish place, with a lot of labyrinthine passages to pool rooms and lounge rooms away from the main dance floor, an open space surrounded by a balcony on the second floor, where men were hanging their arms over the edges and ogling the throngs of girls below. Columns of red velour rose up out of the dance floor and on them girls in scant yellow and black striped swatches of fabric and high black boots were dancing like strippers.

I planted myself on the balcony, where I didn't look too different – perhaps a bit older – than the guys who were waggling their beer bottles dangerously over the edge and rating the dancers below. There were even a few solo acts like myself, though I felt certain they weren't there for the same reason.

It didn't take me long to find Jordan. I saw the purpose of her dress choice, and marveled at her innate abilities, it would seem, as a honey-trapper. The bright pink stood out in the sea of black and silver, and I saw as I looked around the club, that nearly ever guy seemed to be looking in her direction.

The pink caught the eye, but Jordan's flawless curves, and her scantily-clad breasts, and her mane of glorious hair kept their eyes there.

She was with two other girls now, and they were putting on quite a show. One was wearing a white leopard-print dress, and it clung to her lithe frame. She was stunning: long black hair, big pouty lips, long legs. But next to Jordan she somehow looked dull. The other girl was a blonde in a baby-blue two piece set, and she was undoubtedly hot. The three of them were drawing attention from every corner. They were leaning up against the bar and I had counted ten men who had come over to chat with them. Their table was littered with drinks I sincerely doubted they had to pay for.

I scanned the room for where Jordan's hockey player might be, and then I alighted on the VIP room: an atrocious red-velour covered room set into the wall and blocked off by a velvet rope.

No one was in it.

Of course. Because they weren't here yet.

Time dragged on. I was afraid to abandon my perch on the balcony, because the club was filling up and it seemed like I had some prime real estate. The bee-clad waitresses who were circulating upstairs ignored most of my requests for drinks. I switched to double vodkas in order to have something while I waited.

Jordan and her cohort seemed to be in a holding pattern as well. I watched as men passed her and took a long, lecherous walk all over her body. I alternated between excitement, boredom, and feeling ill. What the fuck were we doing? What the fuck was I doing at this seedy club at eleven at night, wearing Olivia's boyfriend's jeans, watching my wife, dressed as a hooker, fend off man after man so she could get the one she really wanted?

My heart dropped again.

The one she wanted.

Jordan was so excited about his guy.

Was she going to fall for him? What if she got a taste of a big, athletic man, a rich man who already had his career in order, a guy who could punch other guys out and lift her with one, bulging bicep? What if he turned out to be fun, and nice, and she traded me in?

Then a high would start back up: but what if she didn't? What if she just let him manhandle her, and then came back to me?

An image of Jordan, her head tossed back and her mouth open in ecstasy against a wall, her pussy stretched open by a huge cock, would flit through my head.

And then the boredom: my feet hurt. I was out of drinks.

When the players showed up, the effect rippled through the club. It was visible: the dance floor parted, and the feminine energy changed from sort of dull, vacant dancing, to a slithering, wet, sex-charged vibe. There were five guys, and they went straight to the VIP room. I watched them move. They were not the most enormous guys, but their hard bodies showed through their expensive suits. Also, they just looked fucking cool. Young, athletic, rich, and cool.

I swept my eyes over to Jordan and her girls, who hadn't moved. It was evident that Jordan was the leader of the group, and that the other two took their cues from her. This particular detail gave even more edge to the scene. Watching Jordan, calculating and in control of what amounted to a sexual hunt, drove me wild.

Jordan was leaning sideways against the bar. Her forearm was on the counter, her long legs stretched out at an angle from the bar, almost as though she wanted to lie down. One leg was crossed over the other. She looked comfortable. Just resting. Cool as a cucumber. She was looking over at the VIP lounge, but she wasn't making a move.

The bartender set an order drinks in front of the three, and still Jordan just looked in the direction of the men, who were settling into the seats in that hyper-masculine way that thugs and athletes do: spreading their legs, stretching their arms over the top of the booth, taking up space. Marking territory, like animals.

Finally, Jordan returned to her drink, clinked it together with the other girls,' and said something which made the black-haired girl smile wryly.

They downed their shots.

The dark-haired girl and the blond sprung almost immediately into action, raising their arms and diving into the crowd on the dance floor. Jordan stayed where she was, like a huntress, surveying her options.

I could see that not just her intended target, but some of the guys he was with, were hooked by Jordan as soon as she walked by. I admired her sneaky little tricks: digging into her small handbag on the way past them, feigning an utter disinterest in whether they looked at her or not.

But in her hot pink dress, with her fantastic tits promising to slip out any moment, there was no way they weren't going to notice her.

I watched the reactions of the men; specifically, the one she was after. They had leaned in to speak to each other. It was more than evident that Jordan had been noticed, that Jordan was being discussed, and I could put good money on the talk being not safe for work.

My phone tickled my thigh.

How'd it go over?

Jordan. Jordan in a bathroom stall, probably not even there to pee. Jordan who was now being described in what I could only assume were the filthiest terms by the group of jocks in the VIP lounge.

And me. My cock already felt like it might burst.

Oh they saw you, I typed. It felt lame but I didn't know what else to write.

Watch this.

I have a hard time describing what that text did to me. It was almost like the words started to move inside of me. Watch this. I gripped the handrail and trained my eyes on the passage to the bathrooms.

It seemed to be a long, long time before Jordan emerged from the bathroom. She was un-missable in her hot pink dress, and when she came out she was clipping along at a pretty good pace. I had only a second to wonder what she might be doing when she crashed into her pretty blonde friend, who was holding a martini and essentially poured it all over Jordan.

Right in front of the VIP section.

I was still wondering what the ploy was, my mind a little behind the obvious: the two gorgeous girls were laughing, her blonde friend had a napkin (of course) and dabbed at Jordan's chest. It was far too clichéd to be real, like something out of a B-grade movie. Though, admittedly, sexy.

And the guys, of course, ate it up. I saw the wisdom of the scene immediately: they were just two hot girls, pouring drinks all over each other and laughing about it. And now, the men had a reason to talk to them and buy them a drink.

I could almost hear it: the men smiled, the sandy-haired target leaned on his muscular thighs and grinned at the girls. There was shaking of shiny hair and wide smiles were exchanged. Jordan pointed out to the crowd, and slipped away to retrieve her pretty black-haired friend.

And then I watched. There were three girls and five men, and these were the kind of guys who would divvy up their goodies like loot ahead of time. Who was the alpha male who would get Jordan? Because it was obvious, obvious by the way they looked at her: the blonde was sexy, the raven-haired girl was lovely, but Jordan – my wife – was the real prize.

Jordan came back, towing her pretty friend behind her. The blonde had already moved onto a couch and was busy charming two of the men. But even her lovely body and pretty face couldn't keep them from looking up as Jordan arrived. Like a hungry pack of wolves.

But Jordan went for her mark right away, and it was clear he had negotiated with his buddies to hit on her anyway. I watched as she sat down next to him, and they began to immerse themselves in that hookup kind of conversation that people out for sex have at bars: pretending to have a conversation, moving closer and closer to each other, doing the ever-shorter mating dance that is the prelude to a one-night stand.

I wanted to be closer. I was worried, though, that if I abandoned my place, I wouldn't find anything better downstairs. No way to watch my wife.

The hockey player was moving ever closer to Jordan, and I could see her smiling at everything he said. The two were in their own little world now. His hand went to her knee.

My blood pressure shot up as I watched him stroke her knee. Or was I seeing this right? I was too far away.

Jordan is actually going to do this.

I pushed my way down the crowded stairs. The music was humming through the floor and it was somehow even hotter on the first floor. Perfume, sweat, and alcohol mixed in the air, which almost throbbed with the bass of the music. My balls were blue, the vibration was only making it worse. I pushed my way to the end of the bar closest to the VIP lounge, but it was clear no one was going to let me stand there. I struggled to see as I waited in a chaotic line for drinks.

Heads moved in and out of my field of vision, blocking Jordan's laughing face, her pretty tits, her long, crossed legs. The hockey player's hand, which had moved up to her shoulder. More heads. A strobe light began to flash and the crowd went wild for whatever song was being played. Hands in the air, flashes now of faces and people and...

Jordan's mouth, against his.

I blinked. I froze. More people moved in front of me. Flash.

Jordan's lips forming a smile, her lower lips touching his mouth.

Flash. A pretty girl's face blanched by the strobe. Another head.

His hand moving along her thigh.

Between her legs.

More flashes. The place got darker, the strobes flashed more.

Everywhere around me people seemed to be bouncing into my view. I was unable to move, so I stood and waited until I got the next glimpse, and the next flash, and the next image:

Their heads close together, his hand between her legs at the knee.

Her lips on his, his hand under the fabric of her skirt.

Her mouth open, her hand around his neck. His arm between her thighs. Her eyes half closed.

More of the same. Jordan's head tipped up slightly.

Their lips back together again. His hand still between her legs.

This was it. I was seeing strobe light flashes of my wife letting another man slide his huge, grizzly, hockey hands up her delicate thighs and into the bare, wet slit of her cunt.

Her mouth was open again. She was smiling but her eyes were vacant with that just-about-to-come stare.

Heads moved in front of me. I thought I might collapse. I felt a freezing pain coursing through me, out to my fingertips, clawing inside my chest.

And my fucking cock actually hurt, it was so hard.

The heads moved. Jordan's eyes were open. She was still clinging to the back of his neck. It had been good for her, any fool could see that.

It slammed against me: my wife had just let this guy finger her in plain sight of everyone in this club.

He was talking to her. She was smiling.

Then they were moving. Standing up.

My mind raced. Where the fuck were they going? What was I supposed to do?

I took out my phone, as though Jordan would have sent me some message; some final request for approval while she was getting fingered by her hockey player. It was ridiculous, and we had already talked it out. I had given my approval. There was no backing out.

And I didn't really want to.

Or did I?

I started to push my way toward the VIP area. Jordan and her guy were already walking down the steps, hand in hand.

Into one of the many corridors that led off to the smaller rooms of the club, the ones I hadn't seen, the places where people were getting up to all kinds of illicit things. Pretty girls sat on pool tables and smiled like porn actresses; people exited small rooms rubbing their noses and sniffing. I was grateful for the crowds, and Jordan's hot pink outfit: together they gave me anonymity and a way to follow her.

They were pushing through a door. Jordan was suddenly in front of him, smiling, her arms around his neck. He had her by the waist and was pushing her forward, kissing her neck.

She looked over his shoulder, and her eyes met mine.

The hottest, the most pleasurable, and possibly the worst sensation I have ever felt cut through me at that moment.

She winked.

I felt my face smile.

And that was it. My last chance to stop her.

The door, a black wooden door, hobbled closed, and I pushed ahead toward where they were going. A black guy squeezed by them on his way out, and grinned appreciatively. He was still looking behind him and almost ran into me as I followed, and he smiled at me. The smile guys give when they see another guy about to score with a hot chick, when there is nothing left to do but congratulate him on his luck, nod in appreciation with some stranger.

Except I was not a stranger. I was her husband.

The bathroom was fairly full, and Jordan was not the only girl there. Nor were most people there to use the bathroom. I saw them disappear into a stall.

Was she really going to do this?

I stood, staring at where they had disappeared. I knew I probably looked insane, but no one seemed to be paying much attention. The place had disintegrated into debauchery and no one but me was taking much notice of anything. A girl emerged from the stall next to the one they had gone into. She smiled at me, and touched my chest. I shook my head and locked myself in the stall.

The wall was already trembling with the force of their two bodies. I stood there, staring at the metal wall, watching it shake. The music was blaring, but I could still hear them panting beneath it. The heavy, thick panting of two people who are about to fuck. Or who are actually fucking.

I looked down at the floor, and I lowered myself just in time to see Jordan's slinky shoes levitate, into the air. All that remained were the feet of her hockey player, leaning slightly forward, rocking slightly.

It didn't take a genius to know what was happening on the other side of the door. He had my wife by the thighs, pressed up against the bathroom door. By the strength of the vibrations in the stalls, he was pummeling her good, in hard, slow strokes.

I heard his voice, low and unintelligible below the pounding music.

Then Jordan began to mewl. The stall rattled and her voice came in strangled, sexual squeals that seemed to be almost punched out of her.

I wanted to take out my cock, but I didn't dare. I wanted to stand on the toilet and look over the wall to see my wife getting fucked, but I also didn't dare. I couldn't move. The whole thing was coming to me as though it were a dream now: Jordan's mewling, her howling, the shaking of the stalls.

I leaned my hand against the stall and felt it shake, harder and harder. Jordan's howling turned to a long, unending wail. Something slammed against the stall. Their panting was so heavy now it reverberated over the music.

I knew Jordan's tits were bouncing in her skimpy dress, bouncing with every thrust. Her legs must have been splayed, held apart by his thick, muscular arms. From the sound of it his cock was enormous, and he was manhandling her. The stall seemed like it might fall over.

I heard Jordan come, and I imagined her flushed face, turned upward at the ceiling. Coming the way she always did, but not for me. More slamming, now faster and harder, and then a guttural, wrenching groan. The stall shook violently as he pounded his orgasm into her.

I steadied myself on the stall. I had a violent need for release, but I still didn't feel like I could move without falling over. I heard Jordan laugh. My heart was racing and every beat was painful and delicious. My mind was whipping up a visual of what I had heard and replaying it slowly, over and over. My palms itched with the feeling of cupping Jordan's ass and hammering my cock into her – a feat I would never have been able to manage. And now she was stretched out and defiled and fucked, by this guy who could hold her up against a wall and pummel her.

Fuck.

I listened to them leave. They were talking but I had no idea what they were saying.

I don't know how long I stayed there, holding myself up against the door.

I needed to move. What was she going to do next? Was she going to go home with this guy? Maybe all of them? Maybe she was going to get wild, fuck them all. I needed to do something, and stop her.

I stood up. I took out my phone.

A message was already there.

I'm getting a cab. Appearances. Where you parked?

I stared at the time. Only a minute old.

Relief flooded over me, I don't mind saying. What I had just witnessed was almost too much, and I typed clumsily and in a hurry: Wellington and 12th. Five minutes.

I practically ran from the club.

AFTERWARD

A cab was idling a few cars down from my car, and when I approached, the door opened and Jordan stepped out. A car passed and guys whistled out the window. Jordan waved playfully and strutted toward me.

The cab pulled away. The cabbie seemed to be smirking.

Headlights silhouetted Jordan's red hair, her perfect figure. She was calm, composed.

"You okay?" she said. But she didn't seem overly worried.

This sort of bugged me, though I knew I had no right to feel that way.

It bugged me, but she was also incredibly hot.

She cocked her head. "Did you get to see anything?"

My throat was dry so my first attempt at speaking was a squawk. I cleared my throat. "I was in the stall next to you."

Jordan gave me a smile, one I had never seen before on her face.

"Mmm," she said. "So you heard it all."

"I couldn't hear it all," I said.

She twirled her purse around. "Take me home. I'll tell you all about it."

I fumbled like a guy on a first date with my keys and opened the door for her. Jordan watched me, amused, but as she stepped into the car she paused, and reached out for my face. "You're okay, right?"

Now she seemed concerned.

"Of course," I said. "I asked you to do it. We...you know, we did it together. It's good. It's..."

I was having a hard time articulating that the stabbing pain inside of me was part of my thrill, even to myself.

Jordan kissed me. "I love you," she said. "I only did it because I thought you would like it."

Her eyes fell on my erection, and she smiled. Then she dropped into the car.

There was no denying, of course, that there was one part of me that very much, very much, liked what I had just seen. I closed the door behind her and gave her a smile.

My feelings were a tornado as I walked around the car, but I couldn't deny it even to myself:

My wife had just fucked another man, and I loved it.

I started the car and drove a few blocks. There was a silence in the car, but it wasn't awkward, and it didn't feel bad. The tension between us was just a searing longing, the kind of feeling that appears only very early in a relationship, before you know what will happen, before you know what it will be like to have that person.

Jordan was looking at me; I could feel her eyes on my face, on my cock. I could feel her sexual energy from across the car.

I knew her pussy was wet with her own cum, and another man's. I knew she would smell different when I pulled her legs apart.

I pulled the car over. I turned to her to say, "I can't drive," but she moved closer to me before I could say anything, and we kissed violently. Her hands found a way underneath my shirt, and then they moved over my jeans and grasped my cock through the material.

I didn't even think, for a second, about how the street was pretty public. It was residential here, but party-goers were walking by every now and then. I leaned back in the seat and let Jordan unbutton my jeans. She pulled my cock out of my boxers.

I thought she had something in mind like the first night I had watched her honey-trapping, at The Yacht Club. That maybe she would jerk me off or dare to give me a blow job in a car on a public street. She stroked my cock, and then she leaned over, as though she planned to lick the gushing precum from my glans. She surprised me by seemingly losing control of herself. She reached down to move the seat back and hopped onto my lap, in quick succession.

It was a tight squeeze, there between the steering wheel and the seat-back. Her breasts brushed against my face, and I pulled at the fabric, stretching it down to expose her supple flesh, and her hardened nipples. I took one into my mouth, and felt her body shudder as I swirled my tongue around the pebble in the center of her aureola. I moved my hands down to her skirt, pushing it up to her hips.

I slid a finger down her scanty underwear. It seemed to be no more than a string and a shred of lace, and I wondered what she had done with it in the bathroom stall. The fabric was soaked, and it sent another wave of arousal through me to feel it. To know what it contained.

My fingers were on her smooth pussy now, sticky with her own excitement. I pulled her panties aside. She grasped my cock at the same time, guiding it quickly to her dripping hole. Her legs tensed as she rose up to accommodate me, and then she slammed herself down on my cock.

Without speaking, we stared into each other's eyes, and she pressed herself down against my pelvis, grinding herself into me, until we both came. It was brief, but the intensity of it was almost painful.

Jordan laughed, and climbed, with decidedly less grace than she had come over with, into the passenger seat. She leaned her head back against the headrest, and blew her tangled hair away from her face.

I reached over and pulled on her dress, because her breasts were still exposed.

I wiped my forehead. Turned the car on. And we drove home.

WE ALL KNOW WHEN WE'VE CROSSED THE LINE

“Did I ever tell you the story about my brother?”

Doug has finished a hamburger, which he consumed like a wild boar, and he is now dabbing at the corners of his mouth like a pixie.

Inwardly, I groan. Doug pulls out this anecdote for nearly every occasion, whenever he wants to make a point, and God only knows what his point might be this time.

He looks at me archly.

I suspect that Doug believes I might be in on this corruption in the DAs office, and who can blame him? I've been acting funny. Like a guilty man. Slinking around, sneaking into the bathroom, making phone calls in the stairwell.

Either that, or he's just sick of my incompetence. I've been leaving early, sweating more than usual. I've been distracted, vague, unprepared.

I nod, in answer to his question, but I know he's going to tell me this story anyway.

His brother never had a drink until he was twenty-five, the story goes. And then he turned into a raging alcoholic. In some versions of the story he ran over the family dog; in others he put the car through a neighbor's living room window. In all the stories, he goes to AA, and tells the group about this memory that came to him as he was sobering up. One night he had gone to bed wasted, and still he couldn't sleep. He felt sick, and he got out of bed, and then he went downstairs and poured himself another drink. He knew, as he looked at it – in some versions a clear shot of vodka, in others a brown, rich whiskey (knowing Chip, in reality, probably Everclear) – and then, he drinks it. But he knows. He knows he's gone too far.

“We all know,” Doug always concludes, “when we cross the line.”

I know this is a story meant for some other issue Doug thinks he understands about my life. But still, my stomach twists. He might as well see right into my private life, right into my marriage.

When we got home the night Jordan fucked the hockey player, we had great sex again. Again: this is twice in the same day, and we're a long-married couple. Jordan on all fours, telling me how big his cock was, how he lifted her and pinned her to the wall and fucked her like she had never been fucked before.

He had given her his number. Begged her to call him.

Put his lips on her pretty nipples.

Felt her thighs against his chest.

I wake up all the time, or stay awake, or fall into a daydream in the middle of the day. I snap into the moment, over and over, and I can taste it, smell it, hear it, feel it. The sweat and the fake smoke on the dance floor. The pounding music, the pounding blood in my ears. The flashing lights, Jordan's bright pink dress.

A hand between her legs.

A sexual smile on her face, but not for me.

The bathroom stall, cold on my skin, shaking and rattling as my wife is slammed against it, a big, veined cock between her legs.

Jordan's mewl, over and over again.

Inside of me, a snake of arousal, and a knife of pain.

When Jordan is there and I think of these things, I roll over and wake her with my fingers sliding into her flesh.

We fuck, like we had not fucked in a long, long time. Every time we have sex now there is the excitement of all the thing we've shared together: the clubs, the men, the flirting, the sex in the car, sex in bathroom, sex in public places, wilder sex than we've ever had. The danger of it all: for her job, for mine, for our marriage.

I don't want those things to taste so good. Like Doug's brother's midnight drink, I know I've probably opened a Pandora's box.

Where could it possibly go from here, except too far?

I said as much to Jordan one night, across the pillow, our bodies sticky with cum and sweat, our legs tangled together. It was one in the morning, and we had been writhing in the bed, muffling our screams of pleasure, fucking ourselves silly.

"I'll tell Arest I need to quit," she said, and on her face I could see she thought the same things I did. "Or...I can just go back to flirting."

Because no alcoholic wants to quit, not really. No smoker wants to have the last cigarette. No gambler wants to play his last hand.

I pulled her to me, and incredibly, given how much we had just screwed, we were both aroused again. Our bodies came together, and soon I was inside of her.

But we both knew, or at least I think we did, that the passion was as fiery as it was because of these dangerous, glittering things. And that it would fade, like a high, like a drunken buzz.

And that we would both need to have more.

Maybe we do all know when we've crossed the line. Hindsight, the saying goes and goes, is twenty-twenty.

But then: what the fuck are you supposed to do about it?

The Hobby Job

Former career professional Laura is going crazy living her stay-at-home-mom life in a small country town. Her husband Conrad has the perfect solution: get a “hobby job.” Laura gets turned on to the idea, and to Conrad's surprise, chooses to wait tables at a run-down restaurant down the street. But she gets a lot more than a hobby job when she meets Nate, a young, hot waiter who has his eyes on her from the start.

Conrad and Laura start on separate journeys, exploring new possibilities in their marriage, and opening up to their hidden desires, fantasies, and needs. Will their journeys merge, or will Laura's “hobby job” make a hobby of their marriage?

Ela's Performance

Peter's sweet-faced and fiery wife is headed back to school for a degree in violin performance. Unexpectedly, Peter finds himself becoming very paranoid about who Ela is spending so much time with, and what she is doing at school so very late. It isn't as if he doesn't have his reasons for suspicion. There's the way his own relationship with Ela started, and their own past experiment with an open relationship before they were married. A few other strange things to fuel his jealous fantasies...

And when he discovers someone from Ela's past has resurfaced, he'll take a chance and confront his own desires and obsessions...but will he get what he really wants?

The Hotwife Tattoo

When Greg's brother marries his wild, tattooed, ex-girlfriend Renee, he knows things will be a little complicated. But when Renee befriends his wife Sara, she starts to change in almost unbelievable ways. Greg sees that there is something more to Renee's plans than just friendly sister-in-law bonding. Is Renee's influence all bad, or can Greg get something he has always wanted and never admitted to is wife – maybe even himself?

The Tenant: A Very Naughty Hotwife Novel

Once upon a time, his exotic and incredibly sexy wife Anna loved to indulge Brian's fantasies...to a point. She teased strangers, and took them to cruel, tantalizing places. But she never went all the way. The game ended when Brian and Anna got married, and that was that.

Or was it?

When the gorgeous, charming, and very black John moves into their basement rental, Brian finds that his sleeping desires have been building up all these years. He doesn't just want Anna to tease. He isn't just toying with the idea. He is obsessed with driving his wife to do things with another man. Lewd things. Obscene things.

When he confesses his desires, is Anna just a little bit too willing to make things just like old times? Is she too easy to push over each new line? Brian can't help but wonder if his own obsessions have gone too far...or if Anna's have.

A Gamble: The Making of A Hotwife

Ryan is just an average guy, coaxing his sweet, beautiful wife Victoria into playing into his hotwife fantasy – even if they're just pretending. But a trip to Vegas with his co-worker Brad and his sexy wife Irena turns Ryan's life upside-down. To help Ryan, Brad makes a proposal that could change everything...but it all centers on Victoria's innocence. How far will Victoria go to save what she holds most dear, now that her virtues, her love for Ryan, their marriage, Ryan's desires, and even their finances all hang in the balance? This is a 52,000-word novel about risk and romance, filled to the brim with the hard, steamy scenes you love. Please enjoy!

The Hotwife Summer

When Ben and Summer have the chance to spend the summer in Italy, their stale marriage starts to heat up in ways Ben could only have dreamed about. Summer is ready to take his hotwife fantasy all the way, and her choice is a sexy, Italian, Michelin star-studded chef. It's too late to put the brakes on what he's set in motion when Ben discovers the humiliating truth about Summer's choice of man. Summer has a taste for being naughty, and a filthy little plan of her own. Will it be everything he could wish for, or will Ben's cuckold fantasy turn into a nightmare he can't escape?

A Dark Place: Cuckolded In Lagos

Three people are carving out their fortunes in Africa's largest city, but each of them holds a deeper, darker desire. What is the secret desire of the angelic Charlotte, who finds all men's eyes on her after dark in Lagos? What about Andrew, who keeps a secret hunger so buried perhaps he doesn't admit it even to himself? And what could be darker than Clement Ambode's already shadowy “reliability” as an all-purpose contractor in the underbelly of Lagos?

Charlotte, Andrew, and Clement will find themselves in a very dark place when their worlds collide in this ultra-sexy, novella-length cuckold story.

Not Black And White

When a photographer turns Rick on to the idea of watching his wife with another man, Rick feels an obsessive desire inside of himself catch fire. He can't help arrange for his shy, girl-next-door wife Danielle and the rugged, black photographer to cross paths. He knows that Drake Reyes' erotic photographs are not as abstract as they appear, and that Reyes sleeps with his married models. He knows his wife is not immune to Reyes' charms – no one is. He just can't help but imagine what it would be like to stand in his gallery, looking at Reyes' lurid photos, knowing his own wife is the model, knowing how the photos were taken. But was it really his idea, or have Drake and Danielle been as manipulative as he has?

Please note, this is the novelized version of the short story Black and White, with significant changes to all scenes depicted in the short story, as well as the point of view. There is, however, some repetition: scenarios which occurred in the short occur in the novel. There are plenty of fresh new adult scenes, however. Please enjoy.

Try To Have Some Fun

Poor Keith. He's been condemned to a campy cruise with his family and friends. Worse yet, he suspects something is going on between his wife and bad-boy Hank, the husband of a family friend his wife has invited along. Keith's in for a very big surprise – and much more naughty, adult fun than he expected on this cruise – when he finds out what's really going on.

Claire's Cowboy

When he gives his wife Claire the gift of a vacation of her choice, Chris is perplexed when she wants to go on a horseback-riding adventure in Montana. Nothing about that kind of trip has ever appealed to Claire. Next, she mentions a mysterious ex-lover, and she turns out to be nearly a professional at riding horses. Chris can't help but wonder if her choice of vacation, and the rugged man who will lead the tour, are just an uncanny coincidence...or if there is something more to Claire's cowboy?

Nothing Better To Do

Rob is finding out from the locals in his wife's small mountain hometown that his soccer-mom wife Kirsten may have been quite a different person once upon a time. He'll find out the truth first-hand when a late summer blizzard traps everyone at a party, and his wife comes up with some very indecent ideas for passing the time.

After all, there's nothing better to do...

If you're a new fan of Arnica Butler, why don't you try Wives Gone Wild?

I've put together ten of my short stories about wives on vacation, who get taken every way you can think of while their husbands watch. Ten stories for $4.99! For fans of my longer hotwife novels, these stories may not be for you (but then again...they might). These are quick or medium-length, dirty stories about men taking willing wives right out from under their husbands' noses. Most include very graphic scenes of humiliation, menage, cleanup and...well, that's all I can write about here!

Stories included in this bundle are: Double-Cucked; Cuckolded in Texas by The Oil Tycoon; Watching My Wife Get Trucked; St. Paddy's Day Cucktale; A Long Hard Winter; Watching My Wife Get Lumberjacked; My Wife Goes Back To Black; Cuckolded On A Plane!; Cuckolded In Vegas!; and Cuckolded on My Dominican Vacation.

All stories are available for purchase individually for $2.99 and some are in Kindle Unlimited for free, with the exception of Cuckolded In Texas, which is only available here. I want to give readers a chance to read some of my earlier works and quickies at a discounted price.

Because sometimes, you just want to get down and dirty, right?
Enjoy!
