1: NEW NEIGHBORS

Leigh sighed and uncrossed, then crossed again, her sinuous legs, angling them out to the side so that they formed a long, slender line with the curves of her calves to either side. They formed a pretty shape, vaguely reminiscent of her feminine parts, which is probably why it turned Jeremy on so much.

He watched his wife push a loose strand of her rich, red-tinged brown hair from her forehead with the backs of her fingers. These were all signs that she was getting anxious, and he smiled to himself. It was just like Leigh to get anxious about whether or not someone was coming to a barbecue.

“What if they don’t come?” Leigh complained, almost as if she had read his thoughts.

Her eyes were on the enormous bowl of potato salad she had made, arranged beautifully in a pretty dish on top of some ice in a clear baking tray. She had prepared enough for twenty people, even though only two were invited.

Jeremy laughed and leaned forward to gain some momentum to get out of the reclined back of his Muskoka chair. He had a beer in one hand and a small bowl of Leigh's potato salad in the other, which he had taken so she felt someone was at least making some headway on the darned thing. “They said they were coming,” he told her gently. “And if they don’t... we can eat potato salad for the next two weeks.”

Leigh was frowning toward the side of the house, her pretty, chocolate-colored eyes squeezed into a squint and her generous mouth worked into a comical pout, puckered and off to one side. “It only keeps for like three days. Max,” she said earnestly.

Even after six years of marriage and some financial ups and downs that had pressed them into some tight places and difficult decisions, Jeremy was still head-over-heels in love with his wife. One of the things he loved most about her was how seriously she took food safety and having enough food at barbecues – two manias that were now coming to a showdown on the first sunny Saturday of the short-lived New England spring.

He leaned over and kissed her on the lips, drawing the pout back into her natural shape: a generous, almost ethnic-looking mouth, lower lip slightly fuller than the well-defined carving of her upper lip. "It will be fine," he assured her. "Bales will eat it, right Bales?"

Their black Labrador lifted his head lazily from under the table at the sound of his name. Assessing that no one was actually offering him any food, he rolled onto his side with a loud sigh.

Bailey would, in fact, eat any amount of anything, being a lab. But he only got up if the offer was genuine.

"It has onions in it!" Leigh said quickly, and then realized that her husband was provoking her a little. She rolled her eyes at herself, her long eyelashes striking her eyelids in a fan of magnificent black plumage. "Okay. Okay. I'll relax."

"Have a beer," Jeremy suggested.

"Sooo many calories."

Leigh had recently lost ten pounds in a fit of exercise that she had not enjoyed, and she had vowed to never put it on again. Jeremy hadn't actually minded the extra weight, and if he was being honest, he couldn't really tell the difference. His wife always looked great to him. She was a well-proportioned woman, with pretty, slender legs and a well-turned ass. She had fairly large breasts and a thicker waist, but there was no flab on her anywhere.

Especially not now.

Jeremy popped the cap off and poured a little into a small glass.

"Just have a taste," he said. "It's a craft beer, a honey wheat, you'll like it."

Leigh shook her head, but she reached for the glass.

"Hey hey," a voice said from the side of the house, and they heard the creak of the garden gate. The screech made Jeremy cringe; he'd been meaning to WD-40 that thing for at least three months.

Leigh stood up and smoothed her sundress, a pretty light blue floral dress that wrapped across her chest and tied just below her breasts. It was a conservative length, just below her knees, but the wrap-over bodice and the funky sandals she'd paired with it gave an elegant, but slightly hipster, look. Her hair was pulled back in a pony tail, but it was a pretty one with a few carefully selected stray strands. The kind of pony-tail that took time and care.

Leigh was ultra-fashionable, and although Jeremy wouldn't have minded her straying to the sexier side, he loved that she always looked good. Leigh, for example, would never be caught wearing her hair in a bun, unless it was some kind of stylized bun for a formal occasion.

The source of the voice was the female of the new couple on their street, Billie and Craig. Billie was short for Biljana – not that Jeremy was aware of that. She was much much more of a “Billie” anyway: she had a crop of light brown hair that came to her jawline; wild, light brown eyes that gleamed with mischief in the flecks of green smattered throughout, and an ensemble of plain features that together gave her a very cute, sexy countenance. A sort of sporty, friendly, Midwestern girl look.

She dressed, however, like a sporty sex bomb. Since Jeremy had come across them on his morning run, Billie had changed her clothes and was now clad in a pair of cutoff shorts that left very little to the imagination, and a form-fitting white shirt that ended just below her belly-button, revealing a sizable slice of her torso. Her skin was a naturally toasted almond color, and a very appealing brown mole winked at Jeremy from just above her hip bone.

Leigh extended her hand to Billie, and kept her eyes right on the new neighbor's twinkling eyes, though she was tempted to let them wander up and down the very risque ensemble. “I'm Leigh,” she said. “Nice to meet you.”

“Billie,” Billie said, in a voice that was as sultry as whiskey on the rocks. For the first time, Jeremy noticed that she seemed to have a foreign inflection in her voice. It was very slight, but there.

Billie looked at Jeremy, and she crinkled her eyes so that she winked at him. “Hello, Jeremy,” she said, as if they were very old friends and she saw him every day. She scanned the table next and let out a little laugh.

“Oh, good,” she said. “We've brought you some more potato salad.” She gave a half turn and held her hands up to frame the large bowl that Craig was holding in his hands.

Craig lifted it to better display the extra potato salad.

Jeremy gave Leigh a quick look. He was happy to see that Billie's humor was keeping her from tipping over the edge about the potato salad, which was now in full-on fiasco mode for her.

“This always happens to me,” Billie said. “But,” she said, digging into a bag slung over her forearm, “I also have some sangria.”

Billie was the type of woman who cast a magical spell on everyone she met, which Jeremy was beginning to see now. She had done it to him, and she was doing it now to Leigh, who ordinarily would have been induced into further anxiety about the potato salad, but was laughing instead at Billie's joke.

Billie shook a bottle, which looked more like some hooch someone would be selling out of the back of their car in the Bronx than sangria. "It's a Bulgarian recipe," she said, with an impish smile. "After this you won't mind having all this potato salad, you'll need it to soak it up."

"I'm Craig," Craig said, stepping forward to shake Leigh's hand with a charming smile. Jeremy let his gaze travel along Craig's very toned, tanned arm to where he grasped Leigh's.

Jeremy didn't remember Craig being so good-looking.

Craig was tall – taller than Jeremy by a few inches, and Jeremy was a pretty average 6 feet tall. But where Jeremy was more a curly-haired, slightly shorter version of Jim from the immortalized TV series "The Office," Craig was a rough, Marlboro-man type with a square jaw and stubble, straight hair cut expertly in a tough-guy cut, and raft of tattoos on his right arm that gave him a mild air of danger.

He was also, or at least he said, a financial adviser at Woods-Gunther, which is why Jeremy had opted to invite him over. (On looks alone, he might have been reluctant to do so). But the guy had to be an upstanding citizen if he worked at Woods-Gunther, and he also had to be one hell of an investor if he landed a job like that in spite of those tattoos.

Leigh responded to Craig the way most women do, which was to feel a little surge of adrenaline in her chest and coil of excitement a little lower. But Leigh wasn't the easily-frazzled type, and she wasn't the kind to lose her cool. Also, she was really happily married and didn't think much of men who were, as she put it, "too good-looking."

Or so she said.

"I'm Leigh," she said, shaking his hand in a perfunctory, friendly-only way.

Craig cocked his head and looked at Leigh intently. "Have I met you somewhere before?" he said.

He did not release Leigh's hand, and the grasp was just long enough to be awkward and make Leigh look down at their fingers.

Jeremy felt a little shiver travel down his spine. Craig had a very flirtatious voice while asking this question.

Or maybe flirtatious wasn't the right word. A seductive-flirtatious tone. A George-Clooney-tone.

In fact, it was just the way Craig generally spoke, and it was for every woman he saw. In a way, Jeremy sensed that; but when it was directed at his wife, it was unnerving as hell.

Leigh shook her head, but she took both his question and his tone for a "standard" flirtation.

Leigh was accustomed to men trying to charm her.

"Not that I know of," she said, sweetly and politely, and in a way that would have shut the charm down with any other guy.

Craig, though, kept his eyes on hers. He smiled right through a simmering few seconds until, to Jeremy's surprise, Leigh did become flustered. She dropped her eyes and made a big show of looking around for something. Then she held up a finger and turned toward the table as if she had something important to do there, though there was nothing but potato salad to attend to.

Jeremy felt something flip in his stomach.

When Jeremy turned back to Craig, the man was squinting into the sky. It seemed to Jeremy as though he really did recognize Leigh, and was trying really hard to remember from where.

"Okay, where are the glasses?" Billie said, interrupting his thoughts. That line of thinking, at least for the interim, came to an end.

Leigh did her best to relax about the plethora of potato salad, and Billie did her best to pour sangria over Leigh's anxiety, but in the end, she boiled over and went inside to make something else.

Billie, being quite a sport, went with her. Jeremy saw her lean on the kitchen counter, her sinewy limbs akimbo a cute and very sexy way. The next time he looked into the kitchen, Billie was sitting on the counter, swinging her legs.

And Leigh, who was facing the window, was just talking pleasantly to her.

"Huh," he commented.

Craig raised his eyebrows to ask him what he meant by that. The two of them were flipping hamburgers, a task they'd had to start over because they'd let them burn while engrossed in a conversation about day trading.

Jeremy smiled. "Just... Billie. She's a real charmer."

Craig smiled, and nodded, because he clearly agreed and already knew that. "Why do you say that?" he asked.

Jeremy smiled, turning back to the burgers. He pointed at one of them to indicate to Craig it should be flipped. Craig started sliding a spatula under it with no need for clarification. "Just... Leigh is pretty uptight about a lot of stuff," he began.

Craig laughed under his breath. "You don't say," he said.

"And Billie's sitting on the counter in there, and she doesn't seem to care."

Craig arched his neck to peer over Jeremy and confirm the scene he had described. He smiled again. "Yeah, Billie has a way about her, that's for sure."

Jeremy was pretty pleased with how the evening was going. They didn't have any friends in the neighborhood – it was one of those typical suburbs where people left early and came home late, and you could live there ten years without ever knowing what your next-door neighbor looked like.

Leigh, who had grown up in a small town in Ohio, always talked about how strange that was to her. Jeremy could see, as the evening went on, that she was really pleased with the "neighborliness" of the barbecue. And he was glad Craig was a pretty cool guy to talk to, because he could already see that Leigh was planning many, many more barbecues like this one in her mind.

They ate outside, because it was still early enough in the season that they weren't going to be devoured by bugs, though Jeremy felt certain he'd wake up with a few oozing mayfly bites.

Leigh had quite a bit of sangria with Billie, which loosened her up and made her laugh a lot as the two ladies camped out on one side of the porch talking about places they'd traveled and TV shows they hated, and some kind of neighborhood gossip that Jeremy couldn't even understand how Leigh got, since they barely knew anyone.

Jeremy and Craig settled into lawn chairs next to the barbecue.

As a general rule, Jeremy tried not to ask everyone about their job right off the bat. He'd avoided it so far the whole evening, but he was dying to know how a guy like Craig, who would have looked at home in a prison yard or an adventure company, ended up as a financial planner at a firm like Woods-Gunthry.

“So how’d you get into financial planning?” he finally asked, when he couldn’t take any more.

Craig held his beer to his lips, and appeared really lost in thought. He didn’t answer the question. Jeremy felt unsettled; guys like Craig unsettled him anyway, but he wasn’t sure what to do when the man just wouldn’t answer him.

He wondered if Craig was just annoyed to be talking about work. Jeremy decided to shut up.

“Man,” Craig said after a while. “I feel sure I know her from somewhere.” He raised his eyebrows. Jeremy followed his gaze to where his wife and Billie were giggling on the other side of the porch.

“She’s a real hottie, too,” Craig said, turning toward Jeremy and seemingly changing the subject slightly. He gave Jeremy a humored look up and down. “How’d you manage that?”

It was a good question, and one that Jeremy spent plenty of time pondering himself. Leigh, with her long limbs and extreme curves, her pretty face and the glorious mane of brown hair, could definitely be considered out of his league. And if it ever occurred to Leigh to get a little sexier than usual in the way she dressed, then she would be decidedly in another league.

But Leigh was a fairly conservative woman, and just a very nice girl with almost kooky old-fashioned values. She wasn’t church-going or prude, but she definitely fell more on the conservative than libertine side when it came to almost everything.

All of this was lucky for Jeremy, who was a pretty nice, conservative choice. He knew that his boring job in urban planning with a pension and no potential for scandal, his somewhat bland looks and his lack of extreme personality traits all appealed to Leigh.

Which is sort of a boring way to get the girl of your dreams, but how much did it matter?

Jeremy responded by shrugging. “Just lucky I guess.”

Craig was back to staring at Leigh – or at least it seemed that way to Jeremy – and sipping his beer absent-mindedly. The man was really into this “I’ve seen-her-before” thing.

Jeremy watched Craig's eyes as they took a long, lingering walk over Leigh when she stood up and poured two more drinks for herself and Billie. He couldn't be 100% sure, but it was fairly obvious that the man's eyes stopped for a rest on the curve of her breasts and the flare of the dress that hid the shape of her ass – to wonder what it might all look like if that floral material were stripped away.

Leigh was laughing, and she seemed a little bit tipsy. "Oh, my God," she giggled, as she placed her thumb in her mouth to suck some sangria she had spilled from it. She turned to Jeremy with bright eyes and her drink sloshed around precariously in her hand. A stray curl of brown hair sprung loose from her disintegrating pony-tail.

"Did you know this?" she said. "The house up the hill, that one that you said gives you a creepy vibe?"

She waited for Jeremy to say something, but for the life of him he had no idea what she was talking about.

Leigh became impatient. She leaned on her knees and cupped her hand to her mouth, a funny, drunk gesture because she yelled when she said: "It was a meth house!"

Leigh turned to Billie and slapped her playfully on the knee. "How do you know all this stuff. We've been here for three years and I had no idea!"

A laugh escaped her, and it was very out-of-control. Leigh was pretty drunk. It was nice to see her loosening up enough to get a little tanked like that, though.

The ladies went back to talking to each other.

When Jeremy turned back to Craig, the man was still watching his wife. Jeremy could see he was trying really hard to place her, and the fixation on Leigh made a wild sensation flutter in Jeremy's core.

Finally, Craig shook his head, shaking off the thought. "So," he said. "I'm having another burger." And he got up to cook.

"So," Billie murmured, closing the door by leaning backward on it and propping her leg sensually against it. "They're a very nice couple."

Craig smiled, admiring as always of his wife's audacity. When she got something into her mind, she rarely let go of the idea until she got what she wanted.

Which was perfectly okay with him, if he was right about what she was thinking now.

“I feel like I know that chick from somewhere,” he said, his mind only half on Leigh and how he knew her. The rest of his thoughts were dedicated to thinking about his wife’s rounded thigh, and whether or not it would be salty or sweet when he licked it all the way to her bare, pink pussy.

“You know Leigh?” Billie laughed.

She was hinting that the most likely place he might have met Leigh would have been at a swingers’ club or as a bull for her husband, and it was laughable because Leigh and Jeremy were obviously not the types.

Well, Leigh wasn’t, anyway.

But as she mulled it over, and thought about the darkly pretty woman she had talked to all night, Billie also started to feel like her face was familiar.

She looked up at the ceiling. “Oh, I hate it when you do this to me,” she complained. “Now it’s stuck in my head and I won’t be able to think about anything else.”

Craig stepped closer to her. He hooked his hand under her knee and tugged on her leg, forcing her to straighten it and giving him access to the length of her thigh. He used his other hand to feel his way up her soft skin, into the dip between her pussy and her hip, and then over the silken skin of her pussy lips. Billie rarely wore underwear, and today was no exception.

“Anything?” he murmured.

Billie gave him an inviting grin. She didn’t say anything, but her body moved toward him, responding to the touch of his fingers on her pussy. The waxed outer lips were soft and dry, but when he touched her gash it was slick with her juices, and the moisture welled from between her petals like it had built into a bubble and he had burst it with his touch.

Billie grinned as she watched his expression change. She knew what he was thinking: that the reason she had gotten so worked up had something to do with their new neighbors. And he was right.

He pulled her to him, and she hooked her legs up over his hip and hung off his shoulders as he made an exploratory pass through the soaked contours of her cunt. She let her head hang back slightly, her face more mischievous than ever. This was one thing he loved about her, most of all: her fun and impish side.

They were both attracted to women like Leigh. Girls weren't really Billie's thing; she played with them to excite Craig more than anything. But she enjoyed a woman like Leigh as much as he did, and for the same reasons: she was the difficult kind. Conservatively dressed, a little uptight, a tiny bit prude.

"I see someone enjoyed talking to Mrs. Hobbs," Craig said, and he moved his fingers to her hardened clit and rubbed a slow, deliberate circle against the face of it.

Billie tucked her entire lower lip behind her front teeth and grinned. This was her response to what he said; her body shook with pleasure as his fingers worked their magic on her clit. He felt her heel pressing harder against his ass.

He had been aroused all barbecue long, watching his adventurous wife pouring more sangria for Leigh, drawing her in with her sweet brown, twinkling eyes, laying the groundwork for her future plans to flirt and seduce.

And Leigh, what a piece of work underneath that flowered dress. He could tell she had a pair of incredible tits, and he was going to enjoy imagining what they looked like when she lay on her back and got pounded.

By him.

Billie's hand was on his cock now, and her fingers explored the thick bundle over the fabric before she grabbed the elastic of his shorts and jerked on it to release his thick member. It was another thing that he liked about Billie: she didn't hesitate to really grab his cock. She wasn't timid about anything she did in bed.

He had met Billie in a crowded club in Ibiza almost ten years ago. The attraction had been instantaneous and animal, and they had just stared at each other on the dance floor without saying anything. Within five minutes Billie had her hand around his cock and had jerked him off in the middle of the dance floor while looking him right in the eye with the same impish look she was giving him right now.

Thinking about all of this drove him wild. His cock pulsed in Billie's hand, and she ran her fingers over the crown. He could feel that they got slippery with precum.

He lifted her up by her thighs and pushed her against the door. Billie was a small woman, easy for him to lift and to manhandle, which she liked her fair share of. She spread her legs and his cock slid easily inside of her. He felt her ankles close around his lower back as his shaft sank deep inside of her until it kissed her cervix.

Her breath was hot on his earlobe as she gasped.

He started to fuck her, as slowly as he could, because he was really feeling the need to release some of the night's energy.

"I'm thinking about..." she breathed quietly into his ear. It was one of her favorite games.

"Kissing Leigh. I think at first she'll be very, very surprised, and maybe I'll just have to run my tongue along her lips, until she opens up for me, but then after that, I think she's the kind to really get into it... don't you?"

So much for a long, leisurely fuck. His cock boiled at the base. He shifted so he could look Billie in the eye, at her glinting eyes, her wry little smile, the way she sucked on her lower lip as she teased him about all the things she would do with her new neighbor friend.

He grabbed her hair and leaned his forehead against hers. They both looked down at the length of his cock moving in and out of her gash. He felt Billie's body harden, and her pussy tightened around his cock, just before she seemed to melt like hot butter all around him.

He thrust deep inside of her and emptied his seed deep in her body, groaning with his eyes on the ceiling as he did.

Billie let her legs drop, and when one heel clicked on the ground, Craig shifted and let his cock flop out of her with a sloppy wet sound. The heavy column slapped against his thigh.

Billie shifted to pull down her skirt, and then she kissed him on the mouth. "I want one last drink," she said, which meant that she also wanted a cigarette, which was something he supposed he'd just have to put up with for the rest of his life. Billie had almost no accent – she'd moved here when she was 12 – and if you didn't spend much time with her, you'd never know she was Bulgarian.

But on some counts she was coldly Eastern European, and smoking was one of them. He didn't even try to talk her out of it.

He watched her as she slinked away to the kitchen, his hands still pressed against the wall. His blood was still pounding in his ears, and his mind was back on Leigh.

Billie's heels stopped before she reached the kitchen. She seemed frozen, and for a second his pulse raced and he thought maybe there was something wrong, an intruder or a fire.

"Bill?" he said, and his heart went wild when she didn't answer.

"Billie?"

Billie turned, and her mouth was open, but not in the kind of surprise that a burglar or a fire would cause – she was half-smiling and she held one finger up next to her ear.

Craig looked at her expectantly.

"I know," she said. "I know where I've seen her!"

And then she took off running – actually running – for the stairs.

Craig slid his shorts up and stood for a moment to fully catch his breath. He heard a lot of banging around upstairs. Drawers opening and closing, Billie moving from room to room.

"Hey where is your Kindle?" she finally called.

Craig squinted at the upstairs balcony, a length of hallway that connected the two sides of the house – the guest bedroom, offices, and exercise room on one side, and the expansive master suite on the other.

Kindle?

"Uh.." he said. He couldn't even remember the last time he had read a book, let alone what that would have to do with anything. Was Leigh an author? No one had even mentioned what she did for a living.

"I found it!" Billie practically shrieked. She moved so quickly as she came back down the stairs that she almost fell and had to grab the handrail to stop herself. She was using one hand to frantically search the device.

"Shit!" she said, and shook the tablet.

Craig looked at her quizzically. Somewhere in the back of his mind, though, he was starting to feel like this all made sense... why?

Billie looked at him frantically and shook the tablet at him again. "Out of juice!" she said. The more excited she got, the less she sounded like a native English speaker.

She looked around, the smile on her face fighting with the impatience she was registering at the Kindle.

The Kindle, the Kindle... Craig could feel himself honing in on what it was... yes, Leigh had something to do with it...

Billie pushed past him impatiently and then stopped, turned abruptly, and ran back up the stairs. "Here, come here, I'll put it on the computer."

He followed, moving slowly, trying to get to the bottom of it before Billie showed him herself. He hated when he couldn't figure things out.

He got it at exactly the same moment Billie brought up the screen with the book on it.

Of course.

"And there's more," Billie said. "She is on... like five different covers I can think of off the top of my head."

Her fingers typed nimbly on the keyboard, clattering away and bringing up window after window with book covers from the Amazon web page.

Craig stared.

Billie turned in the chair to face him leaning on the back of it. She crossed her legs. "That's her, isn't it?" she said with excitement. Her eyes were wild.

Craig's eyes were wide. "Bring up the first one?" he said, moving closer to the computer.

Billie put a hand on his waistband and moved her fingers seductively over his lower abdomen as she used her left hand to bring up the first book cover.

And there she was.

Sitting on the edge of a bed, a simple, strapless sheath of black clinging to her ample breasts and ending just below her bottom, her long legs closed at the knee but slightly askew. Her face caught in an expression of uncertainty – halfway between seduction and guilt. Her hair was down, she had a lot of makeup on, and her skin had the dark, full tan of a men's magazine model.

But there was no mistaking it: that was Mrs. Leigh Hobbs.

Craig's jaw dropped open a little. Not many things shocked him, as many things as he'd done.

But Leigh Hobbs being the model on the cover of a novel – he was remembering now – that he had liked very much, very much – shocked the hell out of him.

"I can't believe it," he said stupidly.

“I’m officially obsessed with this now,” Billie said. Her fingers were moving over his shorts again, seeking out the shape of his cock. He was already getting hard again.

Billie flipped through more covers. “This is her, too,” she said.

Craig leaned in and looked at the cover. The picture was much different, and this time the darling and conservative Mrs. Hobbs was poised in a feline stretch on a bed, nothing more than a white tank top and a pair of lacy panties covering the incredible curves that Craig had suspected were hiding underneath that sundress.

It was her tits he liked best: they were large and full, and they had given the false impression that she had a bigger torso than she did. But in the bed pose, he could see that they were just perfect, round spheres that would push out her clothing – unless she chose to wear a skin-tight top like the one she was wearing in the photo.

“She is like, on the cover of so many erotica books,” Billie said. She switched to another book.

Craig read the title of the book. “Spanked By The Doctors?” he said.

Billie shrugged. “I like to read it,” she said simply. This was another thing he loved about Billie; unlike a lot of women, she didn’t feel the need to explain things she did, or hide things about her sexuality out of guilt.

Though it did sometimes make her a little difficult to manage.

Someone like Leigh, though, apparently had another side to her, and she obviously did feel a little guilty about it.

“This is going to be fun,” he said.

Billie turned to him and grinned. “I know.”

She pulled his shorts down for the second time that evening, and massaged his cock in her hand.

“Put it on that first one,” he said.

Billie grinned, and turned a little to comply. She filled the screen with the first book cover, the one he had vaguely recognized, the hotwife story he had liked so much.

He stared at Leigh Hobbs, her full breasts and her closed knees, while Billie closed her mouth around his cock, and took him deep into her mouth. While his own wife sucked on his dick, he imagined pulling that black dress down until Mrs. Hobbs’ round breasts sprung loose, and he got to flick his tongue at her nipples. What color would they be? Judging by her lips, a caramel brown, maybe a little dark, like her eyes. And then he could nudge those closed knees open, and slide his fingers into her gash...

He sank his fingers into Billie's hair, and enjoyed the feel of her head as she bobbed up and down the length of his cock while he stared at Leigh's picture.

His stomach flexed almost involuntarily as his climax seized him, and he bent over a little, clutching Billie's head to him as he came, emptying his seed into her hot, waiting mouth.

Billie's tongue swept in nimble circles around his shaft, darting here and there to tantalize him to almost painful ecstasy as his cock pulsed with the last of his orgasm. Her lips were tight on his shaft as she moved up to his crown, her tongue swirling, the vacuum of her mouth sucking him dry.

She released him with a wet pop, and flicked her tongue out playfully at the tip of his dick after she did. Her eyes went back to the screen.

"This is going to be fun," she said.

2: HOW I KNOW YOUR WIFE

“You’re sure you don’t want to go with us?” Billie teased, slinging her big black leather purse over her shoulder.

But she wasn’t really waiting for the answer. She turned before she even finished the sentence, hand on the door, and popped outside before Leigh could even let her mouth fall open in confusion.

“Have a good time,” Jeremy said, holding up a beer in a mock toast. He winked at his wife, who smiled back.

“I promise not to spend too much money,” she assured him.

Billie called back to the house from near the car. “I don’t!” Her voice was cheerful, but it didn’t sound like a joke.

Leigh slipped through the closing door. Jeremy turned to Craig, who nodded as he brought his beer to his lips. “She means that,” he said solemnly.

Craig wasn’t sure, as usual, what to make of what Craig said. The two seemed to enjoy playacting the classic tropes of marriage: she drives poorly, he never takes out the trash, she spends too much money shopping, he doesn’t pay enough attention.

Even though he hadn’t known them very long, though, Jeremy sensed their relationship wasn’t really as traditional as all that. They seemed incredibly close, for one thing, and for another, they were all over each other like newlyweds.

Billie had called Leigh the weekend after their first barbecue, and asked if she wanted to go shopping while Craig and Jeremy went golfing. It had been a surprising call, and even more surprising was Leigh’s reaction to it (not that she didn’t love shopping), which had been almost ecstatic.

She really liked Billie.

And Craig had a membership at White Stone, one of the most elite golf clubs in town. Jeremy wasn’t a snob, but he wouldn’t mind seeing what was up at this well-known place. And he liked golf.

He was just surprised that the neighbors, who seemed a heck of a lot cooler than he and Leigh were, had called them back and made plans so soon after their first visit.

Craig took a swig of his beer and made the classic sound for refreshment: “Agggh.” He set the beer down hard on the table. “Ready?”

Jeremy still had a good half a beer in his hand. He hadn’t downed a beer in years, but he wanted to get a nice buzz going. Why not? Craig was driving his Audi. He tipped his head back and slammed the beer (regretting it almost instantly, as a painful bubble of carbonation lodged itself in his gut). “Let’s do it,” he managed to say.

It was only a week later, but already the temperature was creeping up along with the humidity. The swarms of insects that plagued the summer were already filling the air, but out on the pristine course at White Stone, it was still like springtime in that respect.

Unfortunately, that wasn’t where Jeremy was spending most of his time.

“Just take the stroke,” Craig said, his hands hung over the 9-iron he had placed across his back. This had the effect of pulling his shirt tight against his chest and the shape of his lean, hard chest.

Jeremy looked up at him from the shallow, dry ravine where his ball had rolled. He swatted away some mosquitoes.

The thing was, he couldn’t just take the stroke. Not when Mr. Bad-Boy-With-A-Golf-Membership was standing there looking like a surfer Adonis with a degree in finance and obvious business connections.

Jeremy grimaced and took another swing.

Miraculously, the ball sailed between the dense trees and back onto the course.

Craig let out a low whistle of appreciation.

Jeremy dug himself out of the ravine and dusted off his knees, which had somehow gotten dirty in his undignified trip down into the gulch.

They observed the ball, and took a little breather. At White Stone there was not usually a gang of people behind you. Tee times were well-spaced in a complex formula accounting for people’s handicaps.

It was that kind of place.

They were on the twelfth hole, and Jeremy was already pretty tired of the game. This happened every time he played golf. He didn’t want to be a dick, though, and call it quits at the prestigious White Stone, which he would likely never get to golf at again. He squinted into the distance and trudged toward his ball.

“Man,” Craig said, swinging the club out from behind his shoulders in a way that looked a little like it came from a mafia movie. “It’s hot as hell. I’m sort of sick of this game. Wanna go grab some beers at the club?”

It was music to Jeremy’s ears.

The club was much more impressive than the course, which was nice, but hadn’t been especially amazing, given the reputation of the place. Jeremy tried not to gawk at the opulence as they cut through the main building to a large room with twenty-foot ceilings and rich wood paneling from floor to ceiling. A patio outside was decorated with more modern decor, and well-placed fans that seemed to be blowing air-conditioned breezes, as well as some large, living shade canopies, salvaged the area from the blistering heat.

Craig, as Jeremy had expected, took care of ordering the beers after pausing for only a brief moment to see if his choice was okay with Jeremy.

It was the kind of club with no prices on the menu, so Jeremy said a little prayer and hoped he wouldn’t be in too deep of shit with Leigh, who may have been out shopping right now but would never do anything impractical with money. Like possibly order a $50 beer.

The beers came, and they went down easy. Craig ordered nachos, which came out with a helping of the toppings placed individually on each nacho.

Jesus help him.

But after a few beers and some idle chit-chat, Jeremy felt the warm glow of booze and the laziness of summer taking over his worries. He relaxed.

Craig was a surprising guy. Surprising in the sense that he didn’t go through the usual litany of questions about what Jeremy did for a living, and when Jeremy broached the subject with him (out of habit), he side-stepped it to talk about whether there was any way to kite-surf closer than the sound. They ended up talking about places they’d been, things they did, an interesting book Craig had read, because apparently the guy, in addition to being muscled, tattooed, and a financial planner, was also an avid reader of fiction.

“So man, did I tell you how I thought I knew your wife from somewhere?” Craig said, out of the blue, during a pause in the conversation while they were looking through some shrubs out to the golf course.

Jeremy was feeling pretty buzzed. The slow buzz of the cicadas and wet heat had thickened his mind as much as the air. It took a few moments for the sentence to make its way through his brain.

“Really?” he said. He took a sip of his beer. Leigh was going to be pretty displeased that he had had so much to drink, no matter how much it cost him or didn't.

Oh well.

“You know her?” he said, his thoughts thick.

Craig laughed at him. He shook his head. Jeremy watched Craig's fingers as he deftly maneuvered the matchbook he was playing with with his fingers. Jesus. Hadn't the man had just as much to drink as he had?

“No, I said, ‘remember that I told you I thought I recognized her from somewhere?’”

“Oh,” Jeremy said. He had his mouth open to say something else but decided not to. He was slightly confused at this point.

Craig slapped him on the back. “So, I figured it out. Where I know her from.”

Jeremy nodded. “Oh,” he said.

The conversation suddenly had a strange feel to it. There was something odd in Craig's tone.

Suddenly, his mood shifted. He was prone to wild swings when he drank – euphoria one moment, half-despair the next, and for not much reason at all. He felt like clouds had just come in on them, and he even looked skyward to see them.

The sky was cloudless and blue.

“The thing is...” Craig said. He squinted at the sun. “I, um, I don't know if you know about it or not, so I, um... didn't want to say anything.”

Jeremy felt like someone had just flushed his head. He was instantly sober.

What would he not know about, with his own wife?

“Oh, I know about everything... with Leigh,” he said, though he felt less certain than he sounded. “We tell each other everything.”

What the fuck was this guy talking about?

Had to be something from her past.

But Leigh's past was fairly uneventful.

Jeremy scanned the tattoos on Craig's arm.

There was that time, when they were really broke and paying on both of their massive student loans, that she had taken a lot of odd jobs. She had worked at Hooters for two days, but found it too disgusting to continue. She had worked at a night club as a cocktail waitress, and a handful of restaurants. Maybe that was it?

“Okay,” Craig said. “So, you know, then, that she’s on the cover of about half the erotica books on Amazon, right?” He paused, while his words made a very slow circle through Jeremy's brain.

When Jeremy just sat there staring at him, his mouth slightly open, Craig added: “And I happen to read a lot of erotica. So... that’s where I saw her.”

Jeremy had an experience that he had never had before in his life: his brain actually just completely stopped working. He gave a strange little shake of his head, and made a face, because his brain had long enough to figure out that he had no fucking idea what this man was talking about.

But after that? It just stopped working.

Craig's smile turned down a little and he put his hand on Jeremy's shoulder. “Dude,” he said. “I hope I haven't let the cat out of the bag or something.”

He sounded, though, like he didn't really care if he had let a cat out of a bag.

“You, what?” Jeremy mumbled.

“I'm sure it's her,” Craig said. “Shit. If this is something you didn't know about, man, I...”

He slipped his phone out of his pocket. “Here man,” he said, leaning over. “It's your wife, you'd know better than I do if it’s really her.”

And then, quite suddenly, Jeremy was looking at a photograph of a woman who indeed appeared to be his wife.

Not at first glance.

This woman was dark-haired like Leigh, and had Leigh's color of eyes. But she was wearing a strapless black dress, and showing a lot of delicious leg.

“This?” Jeremy said, and his voice was a mixture of relief and hope.

He was about to say, “This isn't my wife,” but the longer he looked at the picture, the more he realized:

It was.

The shape of the woman's legs, and the striking cut of her large, sensual mouth were the first things that clued him in: Leigh was like no other woman in these respects.

She was wearing a lot of make-up, and a much sexier dress than she usually did, but it was her.

Jeremy closed his mouth with a snap. His heart was starting to beat wildly with a feeling he couldn't identify. Adrenaline, but why? He felt like he had caught Leigh in the act of something very naughty, and he felt rage that it was being held in the hand of a man he barely knew.

And he felt.. a little excited.

After all, Leigh looked hot.

He leaned toward the screen, and then snatched it out of Craig's hand without thinking, to get very close to the woman's face. It couldn't be her.

But it was.

Then he read the title of the book:

Julia's Big Boss.

A very erotic sensation traveled through him.

“What is this?” he said, turning the phone toward Craig. His mind was swimming, trying to reconcile the picture of his wife with the book's title. “What kind of book is this?”

Craig leaned closer to him. “Oh that,” he said. “That's hotwife erotica.”

The word “hotwife” lodged in Jeremy's consciousness. What the hell did that mean?

“But she's not just on that one,” Craig continued, cheerfully. “She's on all kinds of books. Billie likes to read these motorcycle club things...” He took the phone from Jeremy's hand. Jeremy was still staring at it, his mouth open, and he continued looking at his empty hand with the same expression on his face as Craig swept his fingers over the screen.

“See?” Craig said, holding the phone out so Jeremy could see the screen. “Look at this.”

And there she was again. This time, there was no doubt that it was Leigh, wearing a skin-tight white shirt and a pair of cutoffs (looking quite a bit like Billie had, at the previous weeks' barbecue.) But the kicker? A very burly man with a huge beard had his big, muscled arms around her, one large hand on her bare midriff, fingers pointed down to the hem of her jeans.

The scene looked for all the world like it had gone on from there – burly-man sliding his hand down and into her jeans, further, further, into those little cutoffs.

Jeremy's eyes went wide and his heart raced.

He found he couldn't stop the train of his imagination: he envisioned even more to the scene. The man's other hand slid up to cup Leigh's breast. Leigh opened her mouth and moaned, leaning forward so that her wild hair could stick to her sweaty face. She could feel his big, hard cock against her lower back...

Suddenly Jeremy remembered where he was. He blinked and tried to focus on the book.

The title was Tie Me Up: The Rye MC Series.

He stared at his wife. The very proper, very conservative dresser that Leigh was now looked like a trashy mens magazine model.

His cock, peculiarly enough, twitched with excitement.

He looked at Craig, who was watching him with interest. Craig raised his eyebrows. "Dude," he said. "Tell me you at least knew she was a model?"

A bell went off in Jeremy's mind, and he was flooded with a very temporary sense of relief. She was a model. He remembered that. It had been another quick job, one to help pay the bills, one which hadn't, to his recollection, lasted very long.

And just because she had modeled for these photographs, did not mean that she, Leigh, had anything to do with the erotic content of big bosses, or being tied up by burly men.

Jeremy's insides twisted again.

"She did some modeling," he said uncertainly. "I just... I didn't realize it was..."

Erotic?

His wife.

Craig slipped the phone from Jeremy's hand and leaned back in his chair. He shrugged. "She looks fucking great. I have to tell you, I couldn't stop thinking about it because that was one of my favorite books. I pictured the woman in the story being just like the picture."

Jeremy stared at him.

"So you might say," Craig mused, "I was inadvertently jerking off to your wife."

Jeremy felt a wild sensation, that same inexplicably erotic feeling, travel through him again.

Craig held up his beer. It took Jeremy a moment to realize he was toasting him.

But Craig being Craig, he made a joke of it by smiling.

His smile, though, said maybe he wasn’t.

It was difficult to keep his cool while Billie and Craig said their goodbyes. It was a really drawn-out affair, in which they had a glass of wine, and Billie held up the clothes she had purchased. Then she made Leigh show the dress that she (Billie) had pressured her into buying.

Leigh stopped short of a fashion show (probably because the dress was shorter than anything she owned, and bright red, and Leigh didn't particularly care for being the center of attention.) then it was another fifteen minutes before they sort of trickled out of the door and away.

Jeremy was so full of nervous, anxious excitement that he could barely think straight. His skin crawled and his torso felt like a pit of snakes.

He shut the door behind his guests and held on to the knob. Part of him felt like flying off the handle. He had an urge to turn to Leigh and demand to know what the hell was going on, why she was apparently the porn queen of Amazon, and how this had happened.

And deep inside of himself, there was also a part of him that wanted an interaction like that to end kind of dirtily, sexually. Part of his mind wandered off to brief fantasies of Leigh's face changing, her eyes narrowing, her mouth getting even sultrier. A fantasy in which she would say: “Yeah, so what? Can I make it up to you?” and then get on her knees to do just that.

But when he saw his actual wife, brushing a lock of loose hair from her face again, her ponytail carefully crafted in an old-fashioned, bobbing curl at the end, an actual ribbon tied up in her hair – his heart softened.

This was Leigh.

There had to be a reasonable explanation for all of this.

“What's up with you?” she said, leaning on the counter on her elbows. Then her face changed and she squinted a little. “Did you have too much to drink with Craig?”

Her tone wasn't especially accusatory. But Jeremy was on edge.

“Can't a man have a beer with a friend? I didn't drive, either,” he snapped.

Leigh stood up straight. “I was just asking because you seem really lost in thought,” she said bitterly. “God.”

She turned and got herself a glass from the cupboard behind her and poured herself some water.

“I'm sorry,” Jeremy said. He realized this was an excellent segue into what he wanted to say anyway. “I'm sorry. I was... I was distracted.”

Leigh turned back to him and set the water down, her eyes caring. Her face was attentive. She was listening.

“It's just... uh, Craig told me... he showed me something really, uh...” he sought an appropriate word. “Sort of disturbing,” he said.

Leigh's face changed to a look of confusion. She looked curiosity, confused, and a little preemptively grossed-out. Leigh was not a fan of “disturbing” things. She didn't like horror movies or bad news stories, had no interest in seeing what had happened at a car accident, and just about fainted when she saw blood. “What?” she asked.

Jeremy stepped closer to her. He took her hand. “Did you... hmm. You remember when you did some modeling?” he stammered.

A flicker of recognition went through Leigh's face. It was obvious from her expression that he had reactivated a latent worry of hers, a sense that was already there that she had done something slightly improper.

Instead of making Jeremy feel angry, that she had perhaps told him a lie, or feel sorry for her, because she obviously felt bad – it ignited that feeling he had felt earlier in the day at the golf club.

Arousal.

Leigh looked down. But she just nodded. “Mmmhmm. Why?”

“What were they for?”

Her eyes snapped back up to his. “What do you mean?”

Jeremy was taking out his phone. “Just that,” he said. “What were they for? What were you modeling for?”

What had she said about these photos at the time? She had shown him a few pictures from the photo shoot, because he had, of course, asked to see them. The pictures she had shown him had been of her sitting in an office, ostentatiously drinking coffee, looking at a computer.

Nothing like what he had seen today on Craig's phone.

"They're just pictures. Stock photos," Leigh said. Her voice had grown a little nervous, Jeremy noticed. "Why?"

Now she had something on her mind. Something wasn't sitting right with her, and in order for that to be true... she had to have an idea of what he might be showing her next. Jeremy swept his fingers over the screen of his phone.

"So, just stock photos?" he said.

Leigh said nothing. She just watched him as he tapped away on his phone.

"So..." he murmured, to fill the silence, as he searched for Julia's Big Boss.

Leigh peered over the top of the screen. When the book materialized on its product page, her eyes widened and she snatched the phone from his hand to look at it more closely – a very un-Leigh-like move.

Jeremy watched his wife's face. Color was creeping up from the back of her neck and spreading all over her cheeks and her temples. It was hard to say if she was ashamed or furious: he hardly ever saw Leigh looking like either. In fact, he had never seen her furious, so that would be a new one -

"What the hell is this?" Leigh said, interrupting his thoughts.

And that was another thing: Leigh didn't typically cuss.

Her fingers were swiping the screen, and then her eyes were moving back and forth, reading.

Jeremy watched her face, which had turned to stone except for the way it was changing color. What was she reading? And what effect was it having on her beneath that stern expression?

Her mouth dropped open. "This is... this is... this is porn, this is disgusting, this is..."

She swept her fingers up the screen, and her eyes moved rapidly as she read.

Then they slowed.

And Leigh appeared, for just a moment, to get sucked into the story.

Her face got more and more red, and little droplets of sweat appeared on her temples.

She looked up at Jeremy, snapping out of her reverie. "I don't," she stammered. "I don't have any idea what..." She held her hand to her mouth.

Jeremy took the phone from her hand.

She looked so horrified that he was starting to feel sorry for her.

"It's not that big of a deal," he said reassuringly.

But he did have something nagging at him, in the back of his mind. Why hadn't she shown him these photos, or even talked about them?

"It's porn!" she practically screamed. She looked from side to side, almost like she wanted to find something.

Then she reached for it – her phone.

"What are you doing?" Jeremy asked.

Leigh was even redder. Now he could see that it was a combination of embarrassment and rage. She was acting blindly, her heart beating wildly, her mind obviously consumed by some illogical idea that she could do something about this. "I'm going to call Dmitry," she said.

"Dmitry?" Jeremy said. "Who is Dmitry?"

He had a lovely flash of hot-red jealousy sear through his chest.

"He took the photos!" Leigh practically shouted.

Leigh was actually coming a little unhinged. It was not the reaction Jeremy had expected, though as he watched it, he wondered why he hadn't anticipated that Leigh would act like this. If she really hadn't known that her photos would be used this way, it was only natural that she would come unglued.

It was just too much impropriety for Leigh.

She started pressing the screen of her phone, her hands shaking. "I can't believe this," she muttered. She ran her fingers over her hair. Then she pointed at the phone in Jeremy's hand with hers. "That's porn. I'm in porn on the Internet now."

Jeremy reached for the phone and took it from her hand. "Hey," he said, gently. "Give me this and let's think-"

"Jeremy, hey. Give that back!" she screeched.

Jeremy pocketed the phone after ending the call. "Leigh. In a minute. But don't call him angry. Stop for a second and think."

He wasn't sure where his calmer-than-Thou attitude was coming from, but he was pretty happy he'd managed to tap into it. He put a hand on Leigh's arm and stroked it, trying to calm her.

The anger was radiating off of Leigh. He hadn't seen her this flustered, or angry, in all the years of their marriage. But she was thinking. She didn't reach for the phone.

Leigh put her hands up to her hair and smoothed it, even though not a hair of it was actually out of place. Her eyes were fixed on a point in the wall, and she was obviously not looking at it: they were unfocused as she thought.

“Okay,” she said. “Okay.” She put her hands together and moved her wedding ring in circles around her finger.

“So... when you took the photos,” Jeremy said. “What did he say they were for?”

“Stock photos, I told you,” Leigh snapped.

“Well... I mean... Leigh, come on. What did you think a photo like this was going to be used for?”

To him it seemed the most obvious use of the photo he could think of.

He was also thinking about the fact that she had taken photos with another man. She hadn’t mentioned that, and he found himself wanting to hear about it.

A lot about it.

His question, though, really pissed Leigh off. Her eyes flashed with anger as she looked at him sharply. “I’m in a dress. I’m sitting on a bed. I’m not... wearing lingerie and doing this!” She made a face at that moment, pushing her lips into a pout typical of models wearing racy lingerie and trying to look sexy.

It was both hot, and hilarious. Leigh really exaggerated it, sticking out her butt and putting her hand on her hip to make her point.

Jeremy snorted. “True,” he said. He held up his phone and looked at the photo. “Still... it’s obviously a... sexy picture. And what about the one with the guy?”

“It could be for jewelry, or a dating service, or something like that!” Leigh protested. Her eyes moved without looking at anything, searching her memory. “Dmitry told me that it couldn’t be used for any porn.” Her voice was getting a desperate ring to it.

“Isn’t what?” Leigh’s voice was sharp.

“Isn’t being used for porn,” he said.

Leigh’s mouth fell open. She was furious again. “What do you call that? Jackie’s Big Boss? What-” “-Julia’s Big Boss -” Jeremy corrected quietly.

“-is that if it’s not porn. I don’t care what the name is!” Leigh shrieked the last bit.

“But you’re not in it, ” Jeremy argued.

Leigh took the phone from his hand with a swift, snappy movement. Wielding it like an automatic weapon she was very familiar with, she swiped and typed while looking at Jeremy with a stone-cold stare.

“So when someone reads,” she said, her eye finally dropping to the phone, ““She squealed as the first thick inches of Mr. Carson’s meat stretched her pussy wide. Her legs trembled and she tossed her head back and forth on the pillow. ‘I can’t take any more!’ But he pushed inside of her, and Mike’s cock dribbled with precum as he watched the last thick inches of Julia’s boss sink into her cheating cunt.’ - who do you think they’re picturing?”

Jeremy’s mouth was practically on the floor, and his cock had gotten hard in three almost painful throbs (at the words “squealed,” “stretched,” and “pussy,” respectively). He had probably never even imagined hearing his wife say the words “pussy,” or “cunt.”

He had certainly never actually heard them leave her mouth.

And then there was the fact that she had a point: in all likelihood the reader of the book was in fact imagining the woman on the cover of the book.

He was.

“Well,” he said, in a desperate effort to make her feel better, “Craig said it’s hotwife erotica...”

“What the hell is that?” Leigh said.

‘I don’t... I don’t really know...” Jeremy said.

But somewhere in his mind, he realized that he did, actually know what it was. He found himself saying: “It’s the kind of erotica that men read who like to think about their wives with another man.”

He sounded very authoritative.

“So probably,” he added, “they won’t imagine you. Just their wives.”

This made Leigh’s mouth snap closed like a turtle.

Jeremy was actually stunned by how smooth of an explanation and an assurance he had just given.

Then Leigh’s mouth dropped open again. “What?!”

And then to his surprise, she laughed.

Jeremy smiled.

But then she frowned again. "But this might not be the only one."

Jeremy made a face. "Yeah... it's, uh... not."

Leigh's eyes went wide. "How do you know this? How do - " She cut herself off, seemed perplexed for a moment, and then waved her hands wildly as she practically shouted: "You know what? I'm calling Dmitry."

Jeremy pulled the phone away from her and she glared at him. Then she lunged at him and snatched her phone from his pocket. Jeremy was too shocked to respond. Leigh never did things like that. She made an abrupt about-face before walking out of the kitchen, phone to her chest.

3: LEIGH THE MODEL

Leigh lost steam as she stormed down the hallway and up the small flight of steps to the master bedroom, a suite tucked a half-floor up in the back of the house. She closed and locked the door, and looked around.

She probably didn't even have Dmitry's number in her phone anymore, which she had realized almost as soon as she had taken out her own phone the first time. But she felt like she needed to do something. There had to be something that could be done about this.

She crossed the room to the large glass doors that opened to a small porch that wrapped around the back of the house. After several turns, it connected to the porch outside the kitchen. She locked the sliding door, just in case Jeremy decided to follow her.

Her breath was unsteady and rapid, and she could almost feel her heart in her chest.

Calm down, she urged herself. Calm down.

She held the phone away from her and swiftly scanned her contacts. She knew Dmitry's number wasn't there – she had never added it because in her mind, he wasn't really part of her life if she didn't.

And neither were the photos, then.

And neither were her lingering doubts about what she had done.

And there were doubts.

Sure, she was a pretty conservative person and she knew a lot of people made snide remarks about it behind her back. She knew she was a little bit of a joke with some of her friends, for wearing knee-length skirts and not talking openly about sex.

But she wasn't naive. When she had taken the pictures in the dresses, and then with the men, she had pretended to be naive. She had pretended so hard that a part of her even believed it herself.

But deep down inside? She wasn't born yesterday. She had known there was a chance something like this would happen.

Just... hotwife? What the hell did that even mean? She had thought maybe she'd end up on some dirty romance blog, or a website for meeting women, or some telephone sex line or webcam service home page.

She had never thought of erotica.

She stared at the cover of Julia's Big Boss. The words she had read aloud to Jeremy re-surfaced in her mind and she shivered thinking about the sound of them as they had left her mouth. Cunt.

Pussy.

It had all begun innocently enough.

Jeremy had moved for his job, and they had bought a house in South Carolina. Since they were taking their equity from New England to the South, they had purchased a big house, more than they needed, because why not?

They could afford it.

And then the cuts had come, and Jeremy could either move back to his original location, or lose his job. Unfortunately, they had landed in a real estate market that was sinking fast. All their equity had gone up in smoke, and not only that, it had cost them ten grand to get out from under the house.

So when they came back (settling in the less-expensive, though further-from-the-city Riverdale), Jeremy had a job, which was great in the long run. But Leigh was back to square one with seniority at the community college she taught at, and relegated to contract work. Not only that, rent had soared, and so had house prices. They were set back ten years on everything.

So she started taking odd jobs. She had paid for a lot of her college years by waitressing: she was pretty and friendly and she usually got good tips.

But she had wanted to step it up a notch. A friend of hers, Cecelia, suggested Hooters. She had worked there before; she knew the manager. The outfits weren't really that skeezy (they were for Leigh, but for a lot of women these days they were practically modest).

In retrospect, Leigh didn't even know how she had been talked into setting foot in Hooters, let alone working there.

But she needed the money. But after working her first shift and only making $120 in six hours on a slow lunch, she decided there had to be something else she could do for $20 an hour that didn't involve short-shorts and getting a pat on the ass.

(She had never told Jeremy about that one).

It was actually Cecelia who told her about Dmitry. He was a Russian photographer with no work permit, waiting on his visa paperwork and making money taking stock photos and selling them on different stock photo sites.

Well, Leigh had steered clear of that at first. It sounded sketchy, and in no small part because the guy was Russian.

But Cecelia had a way of selling her on ideas. He paid cash, she could make $100 a shoot, just to stand around with coffee in her hands or smiling or something. It was kind of fun, and better than working at Hooters.

And “stock photos” sounded so... well, boring. Like cardstock or stocking grocery shelves.

“No racy shots?” Leigh remembered asking Cecilia.

“Not if you don’t want to. Those pay more, but he needs all kind of stuff,” she had assured her.

Cecelia had introduced Leigh to Dmitry. He had been almost exactly what Leigh had been envisioning before she met him: stubble on his face, intense Slavic eyes, the long hair and general look of a photographer. He was rough and artistic at the same time.

She would be lying if she said that she didn’t feel a tinge of attraction toward him.

But when Leigh felt things like that, she was very good at building up a wall between herself and whoever it was. After all, she loved her husband and she didn’t need to indulge in any feelings or thoughts about another man. She decided to be cool and professional at all times.

Professional, even though she had never modeled before. It turned out that she was pretty good at it, or at least Dmitry and Cecilia concurred on this. “Lot of people think there is nothing to modeling,” Dmitry said. “But it has its own art.”

Leigh took this for more gratuitous flattery of the kind men were always giving her and dismissed it. She sat in an office chair in front of a white background and pretended to type and use her phone for half an hour while Dmitry snapped photos of her.

Then she did the same in the coffee shop next door to his studio, which was in an unappealing and un-sexy strip of shops in the suburbs. He paid her $100 and told her he’d contact her if he needed more photos.

You couldn’t argue with that kind of money, especially if you were going underwater and could only get 10 hours a week at the college.

Leigh showed up for three more shoots – one that took about two hours and another that took almost three because of the makeup. She didn't even care when that reduced her hourly rate to $33 an hour. It was better than Hooters, still some good money, and Cecelia was right: it was fun.

Dmitry had approached her about the photos with a man after the fourth shoot.

In his abrupt, Russian way, he had broached the subject by getting immediately to the point.

“I need model for romantic shoot. You are perfect. Want to do this?”

Leigh remembered the way he had stood there, about a foot taller than her, his impassive Russian features sort of boring into her, and she had felt a strange and unauthorized flutter inside of her. She couldn't say exactly why – intimidation? Attraction? Money? The appeal of doing something a little reckless? Whatever it was, she had caved right then and there.

She had nodded, quickly. Cool and professional, she had told herself. Professionals just did what needed to be done, and that's what she was going to do.

“Text me,” she had said.

And feeling very, very guilty, very nervous, and – down where she wouldn't admit it, kind of excited – she had left the building, her ponytail bobbing in a way that she would never know made Dmitry Kislev's cock hard as a rock.

The “romantic shoot” had been just that, in her opinion. Dmitry had them get dressed up in period costumes for a series “for Highlanders” as he had put it. Leigh had been given a green velvet dress with a tight bodice that shoved her ample bosom up and out of it. When she had left the dressing room Dmitry had come over to her and adjusted the dress by pulling on the bodice, his fingers brushing over her breasts. The touch was feathery, and Leigh was aroused by it – but she tamped down the feeling and pretended it never happened.

“You are falling all out of the dress,” Dmitry had murmured, and his voice was sensual, vibrating somewhere inside of Leigh that she didn't dare admit to herself. “You are perfect Highland lover.”

She knew that Dmitry's words made her cheeks turn hot, and something twisted inside of her, but he had his back to her and she regained her composure by the time she walked over to the white backdrop.

Her companion for the photo shoot was a heavily muscled, dark-haired guy with a white shirt that was cut open to reveal his hairless chest.

Guys like that didn't really do anything to Leigh. As they took the photos, it was the man behind the camera who was stirring her emotions. Dmitry told them to embrace, to stand here while he grasped her from behind, to fake kiss and swoon. He got a fan going to create some wind, and the whole thing ended up being lighthearted and fun. Again.

And Leigh had driven home, her mind on Dmitry. Wondering what Dmitry thought of her, wondering how he viewed her through his lens. She didn't want to have an affair with him, she knew that. She just liked to fantasize that.... what?

That he wanted her.

Sure, the clothes were a little offensive, she thought. But there was something in her, again, deep inside, that had actually enjoyed wearing the low-cut bodice, seeing her full breasts pillowing out of the tight green velvet. Something inside of her that had enjoyed the way both the other model and Dmitry had been unable to keep their eyes from wandering to it, taking it in, savoring the shape of her breasts.

So when Dmitry called again, she went again. Another silly romantic shoot.

And what had she been thinking, then? Dmitry had told her they would be used for the covers of romance novels. It seemed likely enough. She didn't ask any questions. She was clothed, they seemed like all the cheesy romance covers she'd ever seen.

Why ask?

So when he asked her to do the other shots, just by herself – the sexier shots – she had agreed. She had insisted that she wouldn't pose in lingerie, and he had said that was fine.

But even without the lingerie, the dresses were sexier. And the makeup was sexier. And she was sitting on beds or draped on couches, giving him a sultry look (he called it “sool-try”) over and over again.

Leigh knew what she was doing, and she knew that these pictures would be used for something other than a “romance novel.” She had never had the courage to ask Dmitry about it outright: how it worked, where her pictures would end up. She had never wanted the truth to be spoken aloud.

She was the one who had fabricated stories about how they would be used for dating websites; these were lies she told herself.

But deep down inside, she knew that the content would be much more sordid. She was no idiot.

And even deeper, where she had buried the thought of it – she liked the idea. She liked the idea of men looking at her, the way Dmitry did, the way her male model companions did (when they weren't gay). She liked the thought that somewhere, a man was looking at her and getting a hard cock.

(This was very, very deep down inside, at the level of subconscious thought.)

Back in the master bedroom with the phone in her hand, Leigh was still living out her lie to herself, and pretending to be very, very horrified by the whole thing.

But she abandoned her contact list. She had no intention of calling Dmitry, and she had known that all along. When he had started insisting she wear lingerie, she had gotten spooked by the whole thing. The reality of what she was doing, and where her pictures could end up, had begun to sink in, and she hadn't taken any more work from him. Anyway, she had nothing to say to him now. He had never misled her, and she knew that as well – even if she had a hard time admitting it to herself. She had signed a release in exchange for her wages, and Leigh was the type to read contracts thoroughly: the pictures were going to be put up on several stock photos purchasing sites. From there, the image could really end up anywhere.

She found herself, instead, going to the book Jeremy had shown her.

There were a lot of layers to Leigh – layers she wasn't fully aware of or in control of, herself. One of those layers of her personality had purchased the book, thinking all along that she was only doing it to be able to read a dirty passage to Jeremy to make the point that men were reading very, very dirty things and imagining his wife in those very dirty scenes. But that same layer of her personality had also been thinking: she could read it now, and have an excuse for having it. An excuse for Jeremy, and an excuse for herself.

So she started to read.

She opened the book on a random page, swiping right to the good stuff, where things began to be dirty:

“Lie down on the bed, Krista.”

Krista's mouth turned up in her amused little smile. She unfolded herself and stretched out backwards like a cat. All of her perfect skin was exposed except for the parts that were lightly frosted by her revealing lingerie. And of course, her blindfolded eyes.

Steve had already started taking off his clothes. His eyes were on my wife, and her lithe figure stretched out beneath him. His eyes moved over her with a familiarity that sickened me. How many times had he thought about this? He took in her ample breasts, her flat abdomen, her endless legs, all as though he were admiring a painting he had seen a million times before. Krista had her mouth parted already, anticipating; the inside of her mouth was cherry-red and shone like it was coated inside with lip gloss.

Steve looked to me as he pushed his boxers down, and on his face he had a cocky grin. It's the grin of a little shithead who is standing right over your wife and about to fuck her. Then he waved at me to get next to her ear, which I had to kneel down to do. Meanwhile he climbed up to the bed, his legs on either side of her already squirming body. He slid his hands over her stomach, under her arms, lifting them over her head.

And Krista? She slipped her long legs around him, stroking his back with her foot.

Did she notice it wasn't me? If she did, she didn't care or miss a beat. She murmured something nonsensical and smiled.

I placed my mouth near to her ear, where it would be if I were Steve now, lying on top of her.

“Not yet,” I said, reading from the script. “I want you to spread your legs for me.”

Krista's mouth opened wider and her pillowy lips made the slightest smile. She opened up her legs, spreading them wide for Steve. He jerked her bra up, sliding it up her arms to her wrists, where he twisted it expertly into a binding.

“Leave your hands up there,” I said, miserable and excited at the same time.

Steve put his hands on either side of Krista's rib cage, his thumbs turned inward to stroke her pink nipples into hard little balls. Krista's red mouth emitted a gasp of pleasure. But he didn't waste any time, he moved down, down her body. He sat back on his heels and surveyed her spread legs and the satin panties between them. I moved with him, and looked at Krista: the satin between her legs was already moist.

Steve reached down and moved the panties aside with one finger, holding them open so that he (and I) could see the bright, wet pink of her pussy, already engorged and craving his touch. He started lightly, placing a fingertip on her clit and stroking it lightly like a feather. Krista sighed and twisted, her hips moving up and down in desire.

Steve parted her petals one by one, feeling each layer of her as though he were testing an expensive silk. He held her skin between his fingers, feeling how soft and wet she was, smiling – surely with the thought of how good it would feel when he slipped his shaft between each of those swollen, soaked lips.

He toyed with her clit, making circles on it with his forefinger while she struggled to stay still enough for him to touch her. Her muscles contracted and twisted beneath her skin, and her breath came in ragged, sexual puffs from her mouth. Then I watched, fascinated and aching with humiliation and pain, my cock so hard it felt like it might split, as Steve dipped his finger into her hole.

It glided into her, she was so wet. I could see her juices glistening on her thighs, dripping down to the bed. Then he put another finger in, and another. And then he sort of clawed upward with his hand inside of her, and she mewled and howled, her legs starting to tremble, her stomach muscles crunched into a tight ball.

Steve pulled his fingers from her body, and lifted them to his face. I could smell her from there, her tangy-sweet pussy that I wanted so badly to taste the thought almost crossed my mind to lick Steve's fingers. He smiled, enjoying, obviously, both my wife and my pain.

Then he stripped the panties away from her, ripping the seam in a single motion. I saw Krista smile, impressed, pleased. Steve reached up and grasped her hands, pulling them free of the bondage of her lacy bra and bringing them down to her legs. He threaded each arm beneath one leg and back up, so that she was holding her legs open, ready for his hungry, conceited mouth to lap at her.

He gave me a look and motioned for me to move to where I could get the best view as he leaned in and tugged at the skin above her clitoris, exposing her hard, throbbing little button. The dark pink membrane that covered her raw flesh was stretched like my cock felt. She writhed beneath him, eager to feel a tongue on her rawest part.

He extended his tongue and toyed with her, lapping with feathery, light, agonizing touches. The sounds Krista was making now were animal and torturous to hear, but I sank into them. She squeaked and growled, panted and whimpered.

Steve went in, and I could not see what he was doing but it must have been terrific. Krista flopped around and screamed, digging her nails into her thighs, biting at her own lip. I could see her orgasm rising up in her, her muscles were stiffening and her legs were trembling so wildly that her stiletto heels were flapping at the ends of her long legs like something in the wake of a boat.

And then he lifted his head.

The howl that came from Krista was an awful sound. Shiny drops of sweat were soaking out of her skin, her hair was damp and she lifted her head. "Don't stop," she begged. "No, don't stop."

Steve pointed at the iPad. I knew what he had planned, because by now, of course, I had been reading ahead. I didn't even need to look at the screen.

"That's good. Good girl, beg me. But I want you to beg me a different way. And if you are very, very good, I will make you scream."

Krista moaned. She made all kinds of dirty, filthy promises. She begged like a whore. When I read the instructions off in a dampened voice, she flipped onto her stomach and grabbed her heels as though she had done this a million times. She was poised on the bed as though in a slutty yoga pose: hand grasping the heels of her shoes behind her, head lifted to cock-height in front of her. She opened her mouth, and it was wet and hungry. She flicked her tongue out, without any bidding, to lick the precum from the tip of Steve's cock.

Surely Krista would know, when this stiff piece of meat entered her mouth, that it wasn't me?

I watched as Steve took his cock and flicked on her obediently extended tongue. My dick ached painfully, thinking of how much I wanted that wet mouth on my own cock.

He looked at me, grinning, as he moved forward just an inch. Now Krista's big, poofy lips closed around the tip of him and she sucked on him like a lollipop. He let her lick and suck away for several minutes, prompting me to praise her. "That's it," I said. "Good girl." My cock was so hard it was sending pain through my entire lower body. This heat mixed with the pain of saying these words, praising my wife as she slurped away at the fat end of another man's cock.

Steve worked his fingers into her hair, and grasped it. As though she were a blow-up doll, she opened her mouth nice and wide, with no command at all, and let him slide her face all the way down his shaft.

Krista had never, ever let me do anything like this. I watched as she took the whole thing in her mouth, apparently unaware that it was not me. Down her throat, all the way in.

And then she started making these porn-star noises, like she was eating some meal she couldn't get enough of. She moved her own head forward when he pulled away with his cock, trying to get more of it into her throat. "Mmmmmmmmmh h h h h," she was saying.

Steve tightened his grip on her hair and held her still. He then began to face-fuck her, pulling himself out after a few thrusts. Long threads of saliva connected her distended lips to the tip of his cock, and then fell onto her face sloppily, before he would go back in. From deep in her throat the sounds of absolute submission: choking, gurgling, swallowing sounds. And her sultry, moaning approval. Her mangled yum yum yum. She was eating up all of that cock like it was the best thing anyone had ever put in her mouth.

When he pulled out for the last time, she was smiling like a porn star, spittle dribbling all over her face.

"Get on your hands and knees with your ass to me, now," I read from the iPad.

Krista turned around like she was a dancer in a strip club, waving her round ass up in the air, arching her back, giving Steve a nice feline stretch.

"Get your head down," I said, and my voice sounded hungry. I licked my lips, because they were very dry. My cock felt so heavy it might tip me over.

Krista lay her chest down and spread her arms out, grasping the sheets. Her face was turned towards me now, and I could see her cheeks were flushed. Her skin was sticky with her spit and the precum that was gushing from the tip of Steve's cock now. She was a gorgeous mess.

Steve took his hand and fanned it out, and then he dipped each of his fingers in her pussy. She whinnied like a horse and whined, clenching the sheets in her fists.

Then he knelt forward, and licked her, starting at her clit – she squealed – and then up, up, in an agonizingly slow line. I knew where he was going. I wanted to look away but I could not. He trailed his tongue in circles around her dull pink anus...

Scandalized, Leigh closed the window and set her phone face-down on the night table. She leaned away from it, almost like she didn't want to touch it.

But the words she had read were burning through her mind. She felt a dull ache between her thighs.

What kind of erotica was that? she wondered, very deliberately for the conscious part of her mind.

The unconscious part of her, though, was aroused.

Imagining.

Thinking.

Leigh gave in to her thoughts for a brief moment. Then, remembering where she was, she brushed her stray hair back toward her ear and tucked it under. She smoothed her sundress and started toward the door, phone in hand.

Between her thighs, she could feel that she was slick with excitement. She pushed the thought from her mind, and walked back to the kitchen, where Jeremy was waiting.

"There's nothing Dmitry can do," she said.

Which was not untrue, but a little misleading.

She watched her husband's face, looking for his reaction.

Leigh found herself battling a lot of different emotions.

There was a feeling of guilt – one she had never quite gotten rid of – for having taken the pictures with the men. She hadn't ever disclosed it to Jeremy, and she had justified to herself by telling herself that he hadn't asked.

Because he hadn't.

But Leigh knew this was a silly standard to apply to disclosing the truth: why would Jeremy have thought to ask her about it? She had a pang of guilt as she remembered him saying to her: you're getting all this money just for taking stock photos? I didn't know there was such demand for pictures of pretty women in offices.

The door had been open there, for her to correct that mistake, and she hadn't taken it. That was as good as lying, and she knew it, just like Jeremy knew it now.

In addition to feeling guilty, though, there was a little rush Leigh was feeling. Was it the rush of doing something bad, which she almost never did? Was it the rush of ending up on the cover of an erotic story, and therefore ending up in a lot of other men's fantasies?

Whatever she was feeling, she saw that Jeremy was not particularly upset. This surprised her and confused her, but she was relieved when he shrugged and stepped around the counter, putting his arms around her waist. "That's what I figured," he said.

Leigh braced herself for questions about why she hadn't said anything about the photos, but all Jeremy did was move his hands around her abdomen, caressing her, pulling her closer to him.

"Why don't you go try on that dress you bought with Billie?"

This question took Leigh by surprise, and she furrowed her brow while she looked at him. "Huh?" she said.

Jeremy slid his hands over her hips. "I don't know. All these pictures of you have made me... want to see more. Come on. Go try it on for me."

Leigh smiled and chewed on her lower lip a little. "It's a really crazy dress," she said. "I don't even know why I bought it."

"Come on," Jeremy urged her.

"Okay..." she said, turning around. "But I'm probably taking it back."

She sauntered down the hallway.

She didn't know why she had bought the dress, once she got home and Billie's magical spell had dissipated. Billie had insisted she try it on, and she had this way about her that made Leigh just sort of float into doing what she wanted her to do.

Leigh typically went for dresses that seemed to have come out of a fifties sitcom, and partly that was her style, but partly it was because she didn't feel super-comfortable flaunting her figure.

Billie, on the other hand, seemed most comfortable wearing as little as possible. She had gone wild in the stores, attracted to racks with skimpy lace and satin strung over them, barely clinging to the hangers, hardly in the shape of dresses at all.

“Here,” she had said. “Put on this red one, come with me to the dressing room. I get so bored in there by myself.”

There was a certain dictatorial, scary quality to the way Billie spoke, her light Bulgarian accent adding an extra layer of mafioso brutishness to it. Even if Billie was a small woman with a cute, sporty countenance, Leigh felt like she might turn ninja on her.

So she went.

The dress Billie had selected was not as skimpy as the ones she had selected for herself, but it was far outside of Leigh’s comfort zone. The hem only came to mid-thigh, and the neckline swooped down to just above Leigh’s breasts. The fabric squeezed against her torso and her hips, with only a little flare and some fancy tailoring to save it from looking like a hooker costume.

“Okay,” Billie had said, calling to her from outside the curtained room. “Come and tell me if you think this makes me look like I was smuggled into America in a shipping crate.”

Billie had turned to Leigh as she swept the curtain open. “Because that’s the look I am going for,” she had said with a grin.

Billie’s eyes had been immediately drawn to Leigh and her dress. She moved them up and down her body, and Leigh felt a queer feeling snake through her as another woman looked her up and down. “You look fucking hot,” Billie had said. “You need to buy that dress.”

Then she had turned back to her own image in the mirror and adjusted the numerous slits and straps that made up the grungy but sexy black dress she had put on. “Me, it’s not my look, but you are very elegant.” Her eyes had flicked back to Leigh’s in the mirror, and for a moment they seared right through her.

She had smiled, her mischievous smile. “Get it,” she had purred.

And so here Leigh was, putting on the much-too-racy dress to show her husband. And that would be the end of it, because there was no way she was wearing this thing out of the house.

She pulled the material up and over her torso, letting the straps snap onto her shoulders. The red color was far brighter than anything Leigh ever wore, but it complimented her brown eyes and her dark hair beautifully. It picked up the natural coral-red of her lips.

She wondered what it would be like to wear something like this. To be more like Billie, who seemed to thoroughly enjoy flaunting her body and getting attention from men everywhere.

She was so busy admiring herself – the length of her swan-like neck, the fullness of her breasts, her firm waist and the sight of her sculpted thighs below the hem, that she didn't even see Jeremy come into the room and stand behind her.

When she caught sight of him, she gasped.

“Uh, here,” she said, flustered. “This needs zipping.”

She took a step backward, with her fingers on the zipper of the dress. She didn't need help with it: the zipper was easily done up by reaching behind and pulling it up to her waist.

Jeremy admired the way the dress clung around Leigh's shoulders. It had almost no back, something he hadn't noticed before. And before she zipped it, it hung open all the way to the middle of her butt. Silvery-gray panties covered the shape of her firm globes in a silken wrapper, but the view was still nice.

He liked the dress. And he liked that Leigh was flustered.

He took a step toward her, holding his hand out like he was going to take the zipper from between her fingers. Instead, he placed his fingers on her spine, and trailed them up along the bumps in the center of her toned back.

A shiver ran through Leigh. A spray of goosebumps washed over her shoulders when Jeremy's fingers reached the middle of her back.

She met his eyes in the mirror.

It had been a long time since she had felt this turned on by something that Jeremy did. Or, if she was being honest, by anything at all. She felt her pussy throb between her legs, and she gave herself over to wondering if it was the photos, the erotic story, the dress, or the lies for only a moment.

But when Jeremy's hand moved under the straps of the dress and pushed it from her shoulders, she lost her train of thought completely.

She watched him in the mirror as he stepped closer to her. Before he even pressed his lips to the back of her neck, she had another shiver radiate over the back of her neck and up to her cheeks. He pushed her ponytail to the side and she felt his lips graze the light hairs beneath her hairline.

“I like this dress,” he said, even as his hands pulled the straps down and her breasts felt cool in the air (it was not the kind of dress you could wear a bra with, which also felt both scandalous and delightful to Leigh).

The sides of her arms fell victim to more gooseflesh as Jeremy’s hands moved down them. She could feel an ache building between her thighs that almost scandalized her, and her mind raced to try and figure out why. Her guilty feelings intersected with the brewing excitement pooling in her abdomen, and she started to feel lightheaded.

She looked at her reflection in the mirror. Her breasts were big and buoyant, and Jeremy’s hands were moving to cup them. She felt his touch on her nipples as though from a distance as she watched him roll her long nipples between the pads of his fingers.

Another river of liquid, boiling heat traveled through the center of her and to her pussy, which was wet with excitement and aching.

She liked watching him touch her, she realized. Was this why men liked to watch their wives with someone else in those... what were they called? Hotwife books?

It was titillating, watching his hands as though she were watching a porno (which she had never done), as he slid the dress over her hips and it fell to the floor, and his fingers dipped into the front of her panties.

He pulled her close to him, and wrapped his arm over her chest to put his left hand on her right breast. He played with her hard nipple as he pulled her panties down and revealed the triangle of trim and downy hair. Leigh stared at herself in the mirror, at the lewd beauty of her nakedness and the way Jeremy was playing with her body.

His fingers worked their way into the lips of her pussy as she watched, and she shuddered against his arm across her chest when his pointer finger found her pulsing clit and pressed against it. She watched as his knuckle bent and his finger pulsed in the mirror, to the rhythm of the strokes of pleasure he was delivering to her aching pussy.

He pulled his arm back around her after giving her nipple a solid squeeze, and she leaned forward, losing her composure and her balance. He pushed her gently forward over the counter, and she felt his hand tugging the panties over her ass.

He pulled his fingers from the front of her body, and her pussy quivered with lost desire for a moment, until he came back around and got his fingers between her legs. One fingers stroked her clit again, and then she felt two of his fingers slide inside of her.

Then three.

She looked into the mirror, at her swinging tits and her wild eyes, her mouth hanging open and her body craving even more inside of her. The scene was dirty and she loved it, and she felt her pussy squeeze involuntarily around her husband's fingers.

She watched his hands moving behind her, all the motions of unfastening a belt and unzipping his pants. As one of his hands engaged in this subtly lewd action, his other hand fucked her.

Watching herself, and the motions of her husband behind her, was a strangely erotic experience for Leigh. Her body raced to a climax – and this didn't happen very often. Usually it took quite some time, and a lot of concentration, but today all the events, all the dirty, bad things that were floating around in her mind and Jeremy's, conspired to make her come quickly.

She gasped and let out a little yelp, and the wave of ecstasy rolled through her. She leaned forward on the counter, panting. With her head close to the mirror she could see that little droplets of sweat had formed on her temples, across her chest.

But Jeremy wasn't done with her yet. Instead of letting up after her orgasm, he placed his now-free hand on her back and held her in place as he continued to fuck her with three fingers, twisting and stretching her.

For Jeremy, the scene was equally appealing in its lewdness. Leigh, in a dress that was on the verge of being slutty, bunched up with her panties around the knees, bent over on the counter like a whore. In the back of his mind he still had the images of her cover photos, the implicit filthiness of them, the indecent way his wife was tantalizing men all over the internet with the promises of being a naughty wife who liked her boss's big cock.

Leigh's pussy was still pulsing around his hand. He sometimes wondered if she faked – or at least exaggerated – her orgasms, but there was no faking this. Her cunt had exploded in a burst of hot liquid and it was quivering around his fingers. He felt her squirm as he continued to tease her, but he didn't stop.

He guided his cock to her dripping pussy, and slowly withdrew his fingers. Leigh jerked when he rubbed the crown of his cock over her clit, and he did it a few times, until she began to respond with renewed excitement. He would love to make her come again, and he would love to think that part of the reason she would was that she herself was enjoying a similar fantasy.

He entered her, and slowly filled her up. The way she was bent over the counter made her body squeeze him differently, pressure down on the top of his dick. Leigh arched her back and looked at the mirror.

Jeremy was surprised and turned on as hell by the way Leigh watched herself, her eyes on her beautiful, bouncing tits. He pushed deep into her, until her soaked pussy squeezed cum in a trickle down his balls.

He pushed her hair from her face and leaned in close to her as he fucked her, slowly and firmly. She lifted her eyes to meet his in the mirror.

He was never sure if he only thought it, or if he actually said it. Either way, as soon as he did, Leigh's mouth dropped and she began to buck against him, riding up against his cock to sate her need.

"So many men have thought about fucking you."

They came at the same time, grinding against each other like they were teenagers. Jeremy couldn't remember the last time he came so hard, and as his seed filled Leigh full, he imagined her exactly as she was. Bent over on the counter, a slutty red dress crumpled around her knees, her makeup smeared and her perfect ponytail askew and coming undone. He imagined her moaning and then squealing, just as she was.

Except... the cock that filled her full of cum was Craig's, not his.

Leigh looked up at the mirror and met Jeremy's eyes. She didn't know how long they'd been standing there, panting and bent over the counter.

She gave a shy laugh and looked down, moving her hips so that Jeremy's cock slowly slid out from inside of her.

"Whoa," Jeremy said.

Leigh looked back up at him in the mirror and smiled. She caught sight of herself again: her red dress crumpled, her hair a mess, sweat beaded on her forehead.

There was something appealing about seeing herself this way, and she let that wriggle in her chest for a moment.

But it also made her uncomfortable. She adjusted her dress and slipped back toward the closet. She would have to dry clean this thing already.

“That was hot,” Jeremy said, taking her hand and pulling her back toward him before she could escape. He kissed her, and Leigh gave in to the kiss, enjoying the unfamiliarity of it. It was so much more passionate than usual, so much so that it almost felt like...

Kissing someone else.

Leigh pushed the thought from her mind, and pulled away.

“You okay?” Jeremy asked.

She squeezed his hand. “Of course,” she said, though she knew her voice had some uncertainty in it, and that she couldn’t hide it from him or from herself. “That was just... really... intense.”

Jeremy made a concerned face, and then he kissed her again. “I thought it was really hot,” he said.

Leigh felt a flutter in her heart. Then a squeeze of guilt.

“Me too,” she said. She squeezed his hand again, and gave him a peck on the mouth. Then she trotted away to the closet. She felt high, but at the same time, terribly weighed down.

Oh well.

She stepped out of the dress and fumbled with it, tucking it into a dry-cleaning bag. It had been a strange day. She could put it all behind her now. What was bothering her, after all? That her picture was on some erotica books? It wasn’t like anyone she knew read those books. And even if they did, they wouldn’t say anything to her. And it wasn’t like she was the star of a porno or something.

If they imagined her in the story, then that was their business. Their imagination.

So many men have thought about fucking you.

Leigh shuddered as a finger of pleasure snaked through her.

Why did that turn her on so much?

She pushed the thought out of her mind and went back to the bedroom to wait for Jeremy to finish his shower so she could be next.

4: BILLIE THE MATCHMAKER

It was difficult to put the idea out of his mind.

It wasn't as though he had never thought about it before.

From time to time, he found himself giving into the fantasy of Leigh with another man, but he had always assumed it was just the way his mind fantasized. Voyeuristically. Even though in his fantasies for jerking off, the man he imagined his wife with was not him, he could tell himself that it was just a faceless substitute for himself. He did it while he masturbated, and then he didn't like to think too hard about why he had imagined what he had imagined. It was just a tableaux, a titillating scene that he had envisioned for the purposes of jerking off.

There was no deeper psychological weight to it to that.

After seeing the hotwife erotica, though, he couldn't help thinking about it more. The mere knowledge that there were enough people out there like him, fantasizing about their own wives with other men – enough to warrant someone writing a whole book about it – allowed him to comfortably bring the idea to the surface of his mind.

Truthfully? He liked it when men looked at Leigh. He liked to turn the memories over and over in his mind. The man passing in the grocery store, who so blatantly did an about-face to view her ass Jeremy had pretended he hadn't noticed, and so had Leigh. But what if she had noticed? What if she had noticed and decided not to react to it because deep down inside she liked the attention?

Traveling down this vein of thought while driving home brought its own special delights. Jeremy found that he enjoyed thinking about it so much he spaced out completely and missed the exit to the expressway. He had traveled a full ten minutes beyond, into the boonies, thinking about his wife secretly ignited on the inside by the filthy-minded gaze of another man. He imagined her aching low in her belly as she felt another man's eyes wandering over her – sliding over the curve of her breasts, devouring the shape of her bottom, gleaming as he mentally stripped her clothes away to discover her pretty snatch.

And then he took his fantasy a little further. What if Leigh were to react to another man when he wasn't looking? Maybe she did. Maybe she did it all the time, and he was just a fool who thought that Leigh was a conservative lady-like married woman.

He imagined her squeezing his hand in the hardware store: "Hey, I'm just going to go look at rugs." She did that all the time; the pretense was that looking at nails and screws was far too boring for her. But what if she turned when she reached the rugs, and kept walking, all the way to the lumber section, where she leaned over the counter touched her throat while chatting with one of those fit young guys about their wood? He pictured her in one of her little retro skirts that looked like it was from the fifties, her heel rubbing along her calf to push the skirt up and over her thigh, her long eyelashes batting while some lumberjack-type looked at her mouth and imagined what it would look like if it was wrapped around his cock....

"Shit," he said, when his mind floated down from the pleasant high he was on and he looked out the window to find that he had no idea where he was. He was disoriented for a bit, and then found a familiar landmark: a giant apple next to an overpriced pie restaurant/tourist trap where they sold overpriced maple syrup and pies to city people. Fuck. He was fifteen minutes out.

He pulled over at the apple and called work to let them know he'd be late, before turning around on the highway and falling – cautiously – back into daydreams about his wife again.

When he got to work, he hit the ground running, since it was the beginning of the week. Messages, inevitably, had piled up on his voicemail, and the usual throng of people had called on Monday morning, all with their own "Get It Done This Week To-Do lists that they were clearly tackling.

But by 2:00 things had settled down, the fires were out, and he could escape for lunch.

If he wanted to.

He found himself, instead, perusing the Amazon store. At first, he went in search of covers with his wife on them. The first half hour of searching was enlightening and disappointing: enlightening because he really had no idea how much erotica was for sale on the Amazon storefront, and disappointing because he felt adrift in an ocean of books, and none of them had Leigh's face on the cover. How could they? He was starting to see that there were millions of books. She could only possibly be on a handful of the covers.

This was disappointing in its own way, and reassuring in another.

But then... it all changed.

He discovered a function that let him view the top 100 books in each category of erotica and romance.

And there she was.

Leigh.

Leigh everywhere.

On one page of results, she was on the cover of three books. It seemed a lot of authors had liked the pose of her sitting on the bed, her face a mixture of uncertainty and allure, her big breasts nearly tumbling from the velvet.

But they had also liked a smiling Leigh. A Leigh looking over her shoulder and tugging on a lock of hair with a sensual, bare back. Leigh in a dress that was made entirely of lace, the material stretched over her curvy hips and then tapered against her slender legs.

His stomach went cold and his pulse raced.

He found the original title, the one that had started the whole thing: Julia's Big Boss.

And then he started to look for more books like the one Craig had shown him.

The world of erotica unfolded for him, branch after branch of hotwife and cuckold erotica stretching out before his eyes. He had no idea that there were, evidently, so many men out there who shared his fantasies. Men who had embraced them.

Were there men who convinced women to actually give into them?

There were stories that seemed almost romantic: men and women who seemed to improve their relationship by engaging in the fantasy. There were dark stories of men whose wives cheated on them, or cuckolded them. Stories that were humiliating, which he didn't really care for but found himself reading nonetheless, feeling a peculiar sort of burn right through his chest as he did.

It was four o'clock by the time he snapped out of it. In a hurry, he wrapped up the projects he could and left by five-thirty, only half an hour late. It was clear to him, though, that he needed to get this obsession out of his mind. He hadn't been this caught up in something since... well, dating

Leigh, back when he still had to wonder if he could lure her to him completely. The excitement of it made his skin tingle.

He felt alive.

As he drove home, though, his thoughts gave way to a more depressing truth: this was all fine, and exciting, and good. But it wasn't something Leigh was ever going to go for.

Not Leigh.

His spirits picked up though, after only a few minutes of thought. Jeremy was, in the end, an optimist.

After all – he wasn't really going to do anything like that, anyway.

It was all just fantasy. Enjoyable, exciting fantasy. And he could indulge in it all by himself, without Leigh ever having to know about it.

Craig waited with a little bit of delicious impatience for the neighbors to invite him and Billie back for a barbecue.

Billie knew what he was up to (she always did), and she flipped lazily through magazines and suggested that he just invite them over himself.

That was so Billie. He loved it about her, on the one hand: her edgy, Eastern European directness. Especially the way it came out of her cute little mouth with a wry smile at the edges.

But sometimes the woman screwed with his plans.

Leigh Hobbs was a real fascination for him, and it was one of the few times in his life he felt like he really had to work to figure one out (Billie, of course, would be another, and he still hadn't nailed down everything there was to know about her).

On the surface, Leigh was a pretty standard puzzle: she was tightly wrapped, conservative, liked socks rolled a certain way in a drawer. She would be a pretty tough nut to crack, in the sense that while he knew how to get a woman like that to think about fucking him (that was never especially hard for Craig), getting her to actually act on it was probably not worth the effort.

That didn't mean he couldn't enjoy looking at her, but with those woefully long dresses and weirdo ponytails, it would soon lose its charm.

But then... this modeling thing put a whole new spin on a woman like Leigh.

And the tantalizing fact that she clearly hadn't told her husband about all of it.

Now, those things made Leigh interesting as hell.

It also made him almost 100% sure that there was a bad side to Leigh Hobbs. Under that fresh-faced, fifties-housewife exterior, a very naughty little girl was being held captive.

The long and short of it was: he thought it was best to wait with a girl like Leigh.

See if she came to him.

Unfortunately, Billie had her own plans, as Billie usually did.

"I invited over neighbors," she announced, making one of her rare and lovely grammatical slips. She had winked at him, and that was hot, too. He could tell Billie had her own agenda, though he couldn't exactly be sure what that was.

Maybe she liked Jeremy.

Maybe she liked Leigh.

Maybe she liked them both.

You could never tell with that woman.

Of course, if he asked her, she'd tell him. But that wouldn't be nearly as much fun.

Billie liked parties but she didn't like doing jack shit to make them happen. She called this "Bulgarian style," but Craig suspected it was just laziness. She had torn up a hole in the backyard grass and thrown some huge rocks around it to make a "fire pit." It was probably illegal, but Craig didn't bother worrying about that either, since Billie could talk her way out of anything. At her "Bulgarian-style" barbecues, she cooked by throwing things into the fire wrapped in aluminum foil, and making Craig fish them out for her whenever she remembered they were still in there.

It was all in stark (and very appealing) contrast to the way Billie spent a ton of money on herself and the inside of their house. She kept herself waxed and trimmed, manicured and dressed in expensive, sexy outfits, tanned and gymed and exfoliated to the tune of thousands a month (which Craig happily paid).

It was just crazy to see her hawk potatoes and chunks of pork into a fire and call it cooking.

Leigh and Jeremy arrived at seven on the dot, and it was pretty clear from the way Leigh emerged from the house first and waved Jeremy down the driveway with one hand while balancing a casserole dish in the other like she had stepped out of Leave It To Beaver, that Leigh was the reason the trains ran exactly on time at the Hobbs household.

Craig enjoyed looking at her through the peephole as she smoothed her hair and her dress.

She was wearing a long-ish blue dress, another sundress that was charming but not especially sexy. But she had painted her lips a bright red.

Craig smiled and watched her for just a moment more before opening the door.

“Hey guys,” Billie said from behind him. She stepped under Craig’s arm and looked up at him, her eyes all smiles and her face a big lie of neutrality.

That Billie. She always knew what was up.

“Come on, come to the back yard,” she said, taking the casserole dish and ducking back under Craig’s arm.

“That’s not potato salad!” Jeremy blurted. Billie smiled wryly.

Craig backed up against the door and ushered them in, letting his eyes rest for a moment on the shelf of cleavage under Leigh’s blue dress. From where he was standing, he could see down the front a little ways, to the crevice between her flesh.

That’s when he got the idea, the challenge, the thing he wanted to get:

He wanted to get his cock right in there, between her pillowy tits, and jerk himself off until his cum leaked all over her neck and her chin, maybe across her cheeks and her lips. He wondered if the uptight little miss Leigh would lick it from her mouth.

She probably would. If he could get her that far, she probably would.

He snapped back to reality to keep the erection he was getting from getting any worse.

Billie had made the good choice (bless her) of inviting a few other people – some from her work, a friend from university, and a coworker of Craig's, just to keep a good mix going. Cal and Diana were an easy-going couple who liked skiing and snowboarding, and therefore found an instant audience with Jeremy, who professed to want to move to Colorado for the snow. Diana was good for tossing Billie's crazy potatoes around in the fire while she smoked a joint. Dave was a good listener and drinking buddy, and he brought his dog, a dopey-looking bulldog puppy who attracted all the ladies and made them squeal when he drooled on them.

Nicely played.

Mike worked with Craig, and he was someone Billie had played with about a year ago. Craig normally enjoyed having him around for sport, because Billie had never really clarified for Mike that she and Craig had an open relationship.

She claimed, in that Eastern European way of hers, to have simply omitted it, but Craig knew she got off on it.

Whatever. As long as she was honest with him. He could understand it. Everything was hotter if it was illegal. He also didn't mind the look of fear that washed over Mike's face every time he talked to him.

Back to Leigh.

Leigh liked the dog, which was a good sign that she wasn't an ice queen. She poured herself a conservative glass of wine and drank it slowly, and to Craig's delight seemed to bore of the conversation about snowboarding.

Good. She was looking around, looking for something to do. She wouldn't go over to the dog again (too messy), and she wouldn't go by the fire (too Reefer Madness for her). He could move in on her in just a few minutes, just when she'd be grateful for the company.

He watched her stand up and cross the yard to a table where Billie had haphazardly thrown items for the barbecue. He gave it a beat, looked around the yard, then looked back at Leigh, who was placing a potato chip delicately between her teeth.

She bit into it like she didn't want to break it, and as he watched, Craig modified his plan a little.

He'd like to jerk off in her tits.

But he'd also like to know what it felt like to have prim little Leigh nibble at the tip of his cock with those perfect, straight white teeth, the way she was biting into that potato chip.

He stood up, taking his paper plate with him, and headed toward Leigh.

Billie cut him off, giving him a knowing wink over her shoulder. "Leigh!" she said, in her melodic voice that was as seductive to women as it was to men (or at least Craig liked to think so). "Come and help me wrap these potatoes for the fire."

Billie gave an extra shake of her ass as she placed her hand on Leigh's back and pushed her in the other direction.

Craig tipped his hat at her, and veered to the left to attend to the barbecue – where he was doing the proper, American cooking - and watch his wife at work. Whatever that work was.

Jeremy had consumed about four tall boys in the pace of a few hours, which had him at a very sweet spot of not being too loaded to be comprehensible, but not much caring about what he said. He enjoyed the show of Leigh at a barbecue, sinking into a pleasant fantasy in which he wasn't there, and his wife was alone, up for grabs...

Billie had pulled Leigh away with her, which was another thing he enjoyed watching with fascination. Was he losing his mind, or was Billie flirting with his wife?

Billie had her arms linked through Leigh's by the fire, and two were clutching each other to talk to Diana in what looked like a very conspiratorial manner. Jeremy let a wave of fantasies about that wash through his mind, and almost forgot about his pleasant thoughts about Craig fucking his wife, which he had also been enjoying as he drank his beer.

When, speak of the devil, Craig plopped into a chair right next to him.

Craig didn't take his eyes off Leigh. Or maybe he was looking at his own wife – they were, after all, standing right next to each other. But it seemed to Jeremy that the man had a particular kind of seedy, hungry expression on his face, and it wasn't the look a man gave a woman he slept with every night.

“Man,” Craig said, after a long silence that threatened to turn awkward. “Leigh is really something.”

Jeremy felt his heart thunder to a new pace, but he kept his cool. “Yeah,” he said, not really knowing what else to say. In the same way he hadn’t been sure how to deal with Craig’s comments at the golf course, he didn’t know what to say or do now. He kept quiet, waiting to see how things turned out. This was more because he didn’t know how he felt about them himself: were they erotic or infuriating? Did he feel intrigued or jealous?

Craig turned to him. “Hey how’d that conversation end up going with her?”

Jeremy, of course, knew what he was talking about, but for the sake of looking like it wasn’t the only thing on his mind day and night, he played stupid. He squinted. “Conversation...?”

“About the covers. You remember... the erotic modeling shots? You know, after we saw it was her, we found a bunch more books she’s on the cover of.” Craig looked back at the fire pit, where the women seemed to be huddling ever-closer to each other, giggling. “Some of them are hot.”

Jeremy brought his beer to his lips. “Oh, that,” he said. “Yeah. She was... surprised. But she did some modeling for some guy who does stills. I guess... that’s something they can be used for. Erotica.”

Craig leaned on the armrest of his chair, and the crappy little fold-up shifted precariously under his muscled weight. “Tell me man, are there any more of those? I can’t find any of her in her underwear. But there have to be some.”

Jeremy leaned back. Was this guy for real? As thrilling as it was, he had some fucking gall, just straight up asking for pictures of his wife in her underwear.

Craig seemed to pick up on the bad vibe. “Oh hey man, I didn’t mean, like, any disrespect. I just... they’re up there, you know.” He tipped his beer into his mouth, finishing off the last drop, before weaving the bottle through his fingers gracefully. “Sometimes I step over the line. I forget, since Billie and I are the way we are, not everyone is cool with that.”

“Cool with that?” Jeremy repeated, sounding like a parrot.

Craig tossed the bottle into a trash bin. “Yeah, you know. Open relationship. Sometimes I forget.”

Jeremy felt like he had been smacked in the face. His vision even sparkled a little at the edges.

“Open relationship,” he parroted again. He leaned forward, shifting in his chair. “Seriously? You guys?”

Underneath the expression he was making, the look of curiosity, the smile of disbelief, Jeremy was masking a budding arousal.

Craig smiled at him. “Sure, man. I thought you knew that.”

Jeremy leaned back in his chair. His beer was empty but he brought it to his mouth and tried to take a drink anyway. Craig laughed at him and stretched forward toward the cooler to snag them a beer each. The bottles hissed as he popped the caps off with the butt-end of a lighter.

Very manly. Jeremy had never quite gotten the hang of that trick.

Jeremy took one and shook his head. “So you... books like that are kind of... you actually do that stuff?”

“Which book?” Craig said. “I don’t do everything.”

Jeremy’s heart was racing. He was so close to the conversation he’d wanted to have all night but had thought would never happen, that now he worried he would bungle it.

“Uh... you know. What’s it called? The first one we saw?”

Julia’s Big Boss. As if he would forget the name.

“Oh, that. That was a.. a hotwife book, wasn’t it?”

Jeremy’s heart beat faster.. “I think so.”

Craig nodded. He sipped his latest beer. “Yeah. Yeah, we do that.”

“Really,” Jeremy said, attempting to sound clinical. “You.. so how does... how does it work?”

Craig turned to him. Jeremy could see that the other man could read his face, read his interest. In a moment, Craig knew. He knew that Jeremy was hanging on his every word, thrilled to hear about hotwifing. His eyes were lit up with curiosity, but also excitement.

Craig put his hand on his thigh. “Well...” he said. He looked back at Billie. “It works like... she finds a guy she wants to play with, and then I watch.”

Jeremy emitted a strange sound. “And you just... um, guys just go along with it?”

Craig smiled. “Why? You want to fuck Biljana?”

Jeremy shook his head quickly, and though it may have looked like a childish denial of the truth, it was hardly that. He didn’t really want to “fuck Biljana.”

He wanted Craig to fuck Leigh, though.

He shook his head again, hoping to clear out his mind. No. God no. He didn't really want that. "I was just... curious." He felt the need to keep talking. "Curious about how... yeah, how do you, you know... get the ball rolling with something like that?"

He hoped that wasn't an offensive thing to say to someone who had just asked you if you wanted to fuck his wife. He felt incredibly out of his depth here. He also couldn't be sure that Craig was completely serious.

Craig laughed. "Well, what would you do if some guy came to you and said, hey do me a favor and fuck my wife?"

Jeremy was flummoxed. His mouth hung open for a moment. "I..." He laughed. "Man, I have to tell you. I have no fucking idea what I'd say."

Craig grinned and looked back at the women by the fire. "Well, most guys – once they know you aren't fucking around – say, sure, no problem."

There was a pause, and then Craig added, "Especially if your wife looks like Leigh."

Jeremy felt another twist in his gut, and again, it was hard to tell if the feeling was pleasurable or painful.

Craig looked back at him. "You know, I didn't figure this out about myself for a long time," he said.

Jeremy squinted. "What do you mean?"

Craig smiled. It was an almost paternalistic smile, and it would have gotten under Jeremy's skin if not for the fact that Craig really did have his number: there was something about himself that he was just coming around to admitting.

Jeremy watched as his new neighbor shrugged, stood up, and walked toward the fire.

The message was clear. "What he meant" was: watch this.

Craig recognized a lot of himself in Jeremy: he was being sincere when he said that. But Jeremy had all the makings of a guy who only wanted to watch other men fuck his wife, and Craig had met a few of those – enough to know.

Craig himself (and Billie for that matter) was a man of far more tastes than that, and one thing he enjoyed doing was being on the other end of it. For the record, he wasn't the kind of husband to just watch, either. He liked to be in the game.

It was hard to tell what kind of guy Jeremy would end up being, but for now it didn't really matter. To Craig, it all seemed like a perfect opportunity.

He had one thing in mind for now: giving Jeremy a taste of how nice it was to watch another man try seduce your wife.

He circled the fire and the three women. He was unsurprised that Jeremy had taken his cue and stayed where he was, in the distance, watching. The guy was a little naive but he wasn't a sap, and maybe he didn't know how to articulate what he wanted, but he wanted it badly enough he wasn't going to stop Craig right now.

Leigh, Craig could tell, was already feeling a little guilty. It was probably the combination of having been caught out for taking racy photos – racier, evidently, than her husband knew about – and being there by the fire under Billie's influence.

She looked up as Craig approached, and met his eyes for one searing moment. Her expression, before she quickly looked away, was a lot like the one she had in the photo from Julia's Big Boss. Alluring and hesitant; sexualized and prude, all at the same time.

Craig made his mind up that, no matter how things panned out with Jeremy, he was going to get that little girl to fuck him.

"Ladies," he said, plopping down on a carved chair Billie had insisted on buying.

Billie gave him a grin. She was certainly an asset in this game.

"We were just talking about making S'mores," Billie purred. "But Leigh doesn't want any."

The way Billie said this was a thing of beauty. It was dripping with insinuation, and yet it wasn't. Billie managed to walk a fine line in her mischief: she was always fun, never mean... but she managed to stir the pot no matter what.

"Doesn't want any S'mores, huh?" Craig said, and chose the perfect moment to look at Leigh, who had her hands between her knees, clasped together, pulling a bit of a Catholic choir-girl look. He wondered if she meant to do that, or it was entirely subconscious. She looked at Craig like a deer in the headlights.

Billie gave the whole uncomfortable moment a few beats, before she broadened her sunny smile and hopped up. “I tell you what, I’m going to get them and then you decide. Diana, come help me carry all these things.”

And just like that, he was alone with the lovely Leigh.

Craig was already picturing the things Billie was envisioning with her S’mores: the dripping chocolate, the creamy, sticky marshmallows. She probably didn’t even like S’mores – it wasn’t exactly her style to like sweet, campy American things. But she probably did like how messy they would get.

Leigh gave her ponytail a little shake and smoothed her hair against one side.

Oh, what the hell. Craig was a little lit, and Leigh with her ponytail really got to him.

Just to see how she’d react, and hoping to get things burning, he jumped right in.

“Jeremy must have told you I’m the one who recognized you from your pictures.”

Leigh’s pretty mouth fell open a little. She was totally disarmed.

Craig felt a delicious ripple of excitement. Leigh, Leigh, so tightly wrapped and yet so sexy, so willing to pose for pictures like that and then so quick to blush when someone mentioned them. She was just the kind of fun, tightly-wrapped girl who might spring open in a delightful burst of really filthy naughtiness if someone just found the right way to unlock it...

“You’re really quite sexy.”

Leigh shot him a look, and then turned her eyes quickly back to the fire. Her embarrassment showed, traveling over her neck as a bright red splotch and making her twist her hands together.

“I... uh, didn’t realize they would be... you know, used for, uh... erotica.”

The word “erotica” had such a hard time leaving her mouth that it was slightly misshapen by the time it did, sounding a bit more like “uroh-tig...uh.”

Craig took a long stick and poked it into the fire. “You’re quite the popular cover girl,” he mused.

And then he waited, just a few seconds, while his words sank all over Leigh. He pushed a charred scrap of wood around and watched it disintegrate into flames. Then he said, in a low voice: “I can see why.”

Leigh's eyes flickered quickly from the fire to meet his, and for just a moment he saw exactly what he wanted to see: a thrill traveled through her. A naughty little thought. Her lips parted slightly, and she put her hands to either side of her hips and kicked one foot out toward the fire.

Then she shook her head.

Embarrassed.

But really embarrassed? Or was the flush on her cheek a flush of excitement?

"I'm so embarrassed," she said quietly.

But there was a little smile on her lips, barely noticeable but there.

"What's there to be embarrassed about?" Craig said. "You look great."

Leigh pushed a nonexistent stray lock of hair from her forehead. She shrugged. "I guess I just didn't... think of myself as a... um... erotic... person."

Craig edged a little closer to her. "Maybe that's what's so erotic about it," he said.

She looked up at him. He met her eyes, and there was no doubt that his magic was working, he could almost feel her insides quivering from where he was sitting. He pointed a finger at her. "That right there," he said. "That look you have. Like you're not quite sure."

Leigh's eyes flicked away from his face, over his shoulder, to where Jeremy was sitting.

Craig waited. This would be a real test of how easy or hard it would be to lure the pretty Miss Leigh to indulge in her dark side.

Her eyes came back to his. "Not quite sure about what?" she said.

Bingo.

"About how bad you want to be," Craig said, in a low voice.

Leigh's mouth fell open a little bit again, and she pulled her feet up and under the bench. She smoothed her flawless hair again, her mouth open to say something, though it was clear she couldn't exactly find the words.

"I don't..." Leigh's eyes went back to Jeremy.

Craig followed her gaze.

Jeremy had evidently decided to pretend he wasn't watching them. He had reflective sunglasses on and his head was turned slightly to the side. But Craig knew his eyes were actually on them.

He turned back to look at Jeremy's pretty wife. But what did she think? And why was she looking over there? Was it because she secretly wanted to get away with something? OR was it because she wanted him to watch? Or was it because she felt guilty?

Oh, any possibility was delightful.

Leigh placed her hand on the back of her neck and looked down at the ground again.

"Okay, we have a lot of things for S'mores, coming through," Billie's voice said, cutting through the tension that was building up.

Which was for the best. Let it sit with her.

Leigh's head was spinning.

She'd had far, far too much to drink. So much that she had lost track of it, and the calories, and she would have to plan out a few days of eating practically nothing to make sure to make up for it.

And then Billie had come out with those damned S'mores.

But that wasn't really why her head was spinning. Not the booze, not the S'mores.

It was Craig.

He was being so... utterly inappropriate. Right there, in front of everyone. His wife was in the kitchen, Jeremy was right there, and he was saying things like...

Like what? What, exactly had he said? He had flustered her so much it had flown right out of her head.

She felt like she should probably tell Jeremy. Or someone. Or do something.

The guy was hitting on her. He had to be. The way he was looking at her, and that low drawl as he purred: it depends on how bad you want to be, or whatever it was he had said. And talking about her pictures.

"Here," Billie was saying, handing her a S'more.

She took it, her long fingers resting on it delicately like it was a fragile piece of glass.

She bit into the S'more, and the graham cracker split open, crumbled, and let a river of oozing hot chocolate and marshmallow gush from the center. To her horror, the hot liquid dropped from her fingers and onto her chest, missing her dress by just a centimeter. She could feel the heat of it as it snaked toward the collar, along the ample curve of her breast.

She held the S'more away from her awkwardly and looked down at the chocolate drop, making a "mmfff," sound.

Before she could even think about what was happening, Billie's finger was on her chest, and she swiped up the drop of chocolate. She did it in a very swift, fun movement, a grin on her face.

"Whoops," she said casually, and for a second there was nothing to it.

But then, she brought her finger to her mouth and sucked it off.

It wasn't overtly sexual. She went right back to the fire, and whatever she was doing there.

Leigh turned to look at Craig. His eyes were locked on her, and he had a pleased smile on his face, like he had seen the whole thing, and liked it very much.

Leigh's stomach felt like it was on a boat in the ocean. She stared at Craig, no idea how to react to him.

He was hitting on her, wasn't he?

Leigh stood up. "I.. uh... I'm going to go..." she pointed helplessly in the direction of the house. She set her S'more down on a plate.

Craig kept looking at her, and he smiled. "First door on the right after the kitchen," he said.

She felt like she was floating above her own legs as she walked to the bathroom. She locked herself in and sat down on the toilet lid, smoothing out her dress before she did. She brought her hand to her mouth and looked up at her reflection in the mirror.

What was wrong with her?

Her wedding band glinted and reminded her of her marriage vows. Which had never come into question for even a moment -

-even a moment, Leigh? What about Dmitry?-

until this guy, Craig, had shown up.

She knew the right thing to do would be to tell Jeremy. That they should probably go home, now, and maybe stop seeing the Oswalds altogether. It was all just so... inappropriate.

She looked into her own brown eyes in the mirror.

It would be too bad, though, to lose the friends they had finally made in the neighborhood.

And how inappropriate was it, really?

What had he even said?

He was probably just drunk.

She was probably reading more into it than there was.

Leigh stood up and lifted the toilet seat and her dress to actually use the bathroom.

She repeated her justifications to herself.

A casing of guilt still enclosed her heart, no matter what she told herself. And that was because, deep down inside, Leigh knew that the reason she wasn't going to go home right this instant, or probably even tell Jeremy, is because she secretly hoped to get another little thrill like the one she had had out there next to Billie's fire pit.

The kind of thrill that traveled all over her skin, and pooled in her lower abdomen.

The kind of thrill she got when she read Julia's Big Boss.

There was nothing wrong with a little thrill, right?

She folded the squares of toilet paper neatly over one another as she unrolled them, and she was so lost in her thoughts that she had piled up about half of the roll by the time she stopped.

She rolled it back on as neatly as possible, used a little to wipe, and washed her hands, in a hurry to get back to the barbecue.

She dried her hands on the neat towel – Billie, she had noticed, was curiously neat and tidy in her housekeeping practices, which Leigh approved of wholeheartedly – and then put her hand on the door.

The whole of the doorframe was taken up by him, and for a moment Leigh lost her sense of balance. A montage of things swarmed in front of her eyes. His grin; the stubble on his jaw very lightly peppered with a precise amount of gray to make him look lion-like and not old; his tanned and muscled arms, the tattoos wrapping over them and moving sexually with every motion he made. The musky scent of him, mingling with the vague smoky flavor of the fire.

He didn't move.

The bathroom was small – a half bath of the sort plunked into any suburban home to ratchet up the home value. It seemed to Leigh that Craig was actually moving closer to her.

But there was nowhere for her to go. His hand was stretched up and over the doorframe, his shirt pulled tight against his muscular frame, and he was everywhere. There was nowhere for her to look, and when she looked down she found her eyes falling – purely accidentally – on the bulge in his jeans where...

Leigh took a breath in.

Craig didn't budge. He just kept looking at her.

She felt a part of her mind break free and engage in a fantasy, a fantasy in which Craig did actually move toward her, his eyes locked on hers the way they were right now, pushing her hard into the wall behind her and pulling the door closed behind them. "I can't," the Leigh beneath the weight of his muscles whispered breathlessly.

Leigh shuddered a little and regained control of her thoughts.

"Uh..." she said. She smiled and squished her arms together, pointing them at the hole under his arm.

Universal language for: I need to get by.

Craig didn't budge. He just continued to hold her there with his gaze, his charcoal-green eyes, for another moment.

What a jerk, Leigh tried to tell herself. I mean, seriously, effectively, a jerk. Who the hell did he think he was, trapping her in the bathroom like that, and looking at her salaciously, where anybody might see?

Craig brought his hand down from the doorframe. "I thought you'd be in there forever," he said.

Trying to be oh-so-charming.

Leigh pushed back hard on the way his voice was working its way through her mind. Meanwhile, she stared, horrified and excited, as his fingers drifted down from the doorframe, closer and closer to her skin. Closer to her chest.

She was suddenly keenly aware of her exposed chest – hardly a burlesque outfit but quite risque for her, in ordinary life. She could feel every inch of her exposed skin burning out here in the open, and it was almost as if an electrical spark formed between her skin and his fingertips as they came closer and closer.

Move, Leigh, she remembered thinking.

But she didn't. She just let his fingers fall onto her chest, about three inches away from her hardening nipple, on her right breast.

The pads of his fingertips were a little rough. Hot. They scratched but they stroked her lightly, sending sparks of heat through her skin. They electricity traveled down her spine, through her core, and – undeniably – made her pussy throb. She could feel a damp stain spreading on her nice, new, white cotton panties.

“You still have a little bit of chocolate here,” Craig said, and he pushed against her chest with his fingertips. The push was light as a feather but it forced Leigh to step back, because there was a kind of forceful command to it, a steeliness underneath it.

Maybe it came from his eyes.

With his free hand, Craig swiped the hand towel from the hanger and got it wet under the sink.

Then he slid the wet towel over Leigh’s chest. Once, twice. The ice-cold of the towel over the still-burning embers of his touch made Leigh quiver from head to toe, but she managed to keep it together.

Her mouth opened to say something, again, but what?

What was she doing?

React.

She fell, very suddenly, from the place where she was floating.

Just who the hell did this guy think he was?

She grabbed the towel from his hand, meaning to pull it away from him and wipe her own skin off. As she did, she tried to push to the side and past him, out of the bathroom.

But Craig caught her hand in his, and so she did nothing of the sort.

She found herself instead breathing: “I’m married.”

The words left her mouth much, much more deflated than she had envisioned them. Almost whispery, almost... seductive-sounding. The sound of her own voice angered her a little but she also found it almost alluring.

Caving in... she was acting like some helpless tart. She squeezed up against the doorframe and tried to leave.

Craig smiled at her as she did, moving his body so that it didn’t so much block her, as press against her. She could feel the shape of him – the muscles of his pecs, the skin of his forearm, the bulge between his legs.

“You know,” he said. And then he leaned close to her, far too close for a man who was not her husband to be leaning toward her.

Leigh found herself paralyzed. Instead of squirming away she remained motionless, so that when he finished his sentence his breath was on her neck, and his gray-green eyes were close to hers.

“You might try telling your husband all about this, Leigh. You might be surprised what he would say.”

His fingers traveled down her arm, and sent a wave of gooseflesh over her shoulders. She squirmed away, and Craig grinned at her as she looked back. He closed the door.

Leigh stared at the white door for a moment, and then she looked around jumpily.

The hallway was empty, and the voices from outside indicated that the party had just gone on, with no one the wiser.

What the fuck just happened?

Leigh took a deep breath, and practically ran out to the party.

She was going to get Jeremy, and they were going home, and then she would...

She would what?

Billie was on the other side of the screen door by the time she reached it. “Oh perfect, can you open the door for me?” Billie said, smiling broadly at Leigh.

Leigh felt a plunge through her heart. She really liked Billie. Everything that had just transpired was awful, whether Leigh had gotten off on it or not. Poor Billie.

They weren’t long-time friends, but Leigh couldn’t stand the idea of betraying even an acquaintance.

She opened the screen door for her. Her hand shook as she did.

“What’s gotten in to you?” Billie said. “You like like you found my cat.”

Leigh blinked at her.

Billie set the dishes on the counter. “My cat. Little crazy gray cat. We call her Waybill, because she’s a fucking psychopath.”

Billie grinned as if this was some great joke, and so Leigh laughed. It came out a little maniacal.

Billie made a face.

Leigh cleared her throat.

Get out of here now, she thought. Get home, clear your head and your thoughts, you can decide what to do about this... situation... there.

“I... um, feel a little too... drunk,” Leigh said.

Billie frowned. “You’re still standing,” she argued with a smile.

Leigh heard the bathroom door open.

“I’m... I have to go, I think, I feel... not very well...” she pointed behind her vaguely.

Craig came into the kitchen, and stood behind Billie. He slid his arms over her slender hips and rested his chin on her head.

Leigh smiled. “I think I have to go home,” she concluded.

Craig was still looking at her.

What an ass.

Billie came over and kissed her on the cheek. “Oh, thanks for coming,” she said. Craig followed, and he was there with his arms out for a hug before Leigh could think of any way to get away.

He gave her a hug in a very neighborly, neutral way.

Leigh should have found it smarmy, but if she was being honest?

The cool way he did it only excited her a little bit more.

“Well, bye,” she said.

And then she practically scurried out to get Jeremy and get the hell out of there.

Jeremy had followed Craig into the house. He had done it because Craig had practically instructed him to, by looking at him deadpan from across the yard and jerking his head in the direction of the house, where Leigh had disappeared moments before.

Craig got up, and walked calmly toward the house, so Jeremy had followed.

What had he expected to see? As he walked down the slight incline toward the house, it had seemed like an eternity to him. An eternity in which to imagine all sorts of scenarios, all of them painfully delicious.

But had he really expected Craig to make such a bold move on his wife?

Maybe not.

Nothing could have prepared him for the feeling he experienced as he stood there watching them together. For a moment it seemed as though Craig might step into the bathroom and lock the door behind them. That he might get right under Leigh’s sundress with no more than a cool stare from his implacable face.

Jeremy was at the end of the hall, so he couldn't see much besides Craig as he spoke to Leigh. But it took a long time, as he stood there, blocking her way. And it wasn't as if Leigh really tried to escape.

He pictured her on the inside of the bathroom: chests heaving, mouth open in disbelief.

Or was she smiling?

He heard her mumble, "I'm married," and his heart swelled.

And then she turned, trying to slide past Craig.

Craig had caught her up against the doorframe, and she had just wilted for him, plastering herself against the doorframe and waiting with baited breath for his next command.

Jeremy's cock had gotten rock-hard, even as his eyes stung with angry disbelief.

He stared as Craig tilted his head, his lips very close to his wife's neck. He lifted his eyes and met Jeremy's stare.

And then he heard him say, very clearly:

"You might try telling your husband all about this, Leigh. You might be surprised what he would say."

Jeremy had tucked himself back against the hallway, and then, seeing that Billie was headed toward the kitchen, ducked into the laundry room and thankfully found another door to the side of the yard. He popped out and walked back to where he had been sitting, his whole body on fire. His cock was hard and his skin was crawling and his stomach flopped as his heart clamored.

He stared straight ahead, waiting, for as long as he could.

Billie was still in the kitchen.

But had Craig somehow pulled his wife back into the bathroom?

And what if he had?

The possibility burned inside of him, both awful and enticing. They could be in there, right then, their tongues darting in and out of each others' mouths -

No, that wasn't Leigh.

They could be in there, Leigh pressed against the wall, that look on her face, the same look from the cover of Julia's Big Boss, a look of not-wanting-to layered over an expression of lust. Craig could be sliding her dress up her thigh right now, and Leigh would just be letting him go further and further....

Leigh practically ran out of the house at that moment. Her dress was in order, as was her hair. It was only the wild look in her eyes that seemed out of place.

“I feel sort of too drunk,” she said, her voice skipping along at an unusual pace. “Let’s go home.”

Jeremy’s heart soared at this flustered loyalty. He took her hand and they walked briskly past the other attendees, waving goodbyes and making watery excuses for leaving.

“Oh,” Jeremy said. “Your dish-” he started to turn toward the table.

“Leave it,” Leigh said.

She tugged him around the house and down the street.

When they got to the house, Leigh let go of his hand and moved quickly through the foyer and into the kitchen, where she retrieved a glass and poured herself some water.

Jeremy followed her.

The walk back to their house had been so brisk, and his mind had been swirling with so many thoughts, that he hadn’t come up with any good ideas about what he should now, now that they were home.

But as he watched Leigh disappear into the kitchen, it occurred to him that he should probably just wait for her to say something. In fact, he was a little curious about Leigh and what she would do.

From his perspective, watching the scene that had unfolded in the hallway, Leigh had been both uncomfortable, but not entirely unwilling. This meant that she must have some kind of attraction for Craig.

And while he knew it wasn’t fair of him – given that Craig had basically told him what he was going to do, and Jeremy had stood there and watched and made no effort to interfere, basically giving him permission to do it – he still wanted to know if Leigh would be compelled to tell him what had happened. And if she did, how much would she say?

“You feeling okay?” he asked, leaning on the kitchen doorframe and folding his arms.

Leigh waved her hand frantically as she gulped water from the glass. It was actually a little unseemly for her. She set the glass down with a loud thunk and breathed loudly.

“Leigh,” he said. “Are you okay?” He was actually worried now that something might be wrong with her.

She held her hand to her head, and gave a shake that swung her ponytail. “No, I’m fine. I just... had too much to drink.”

Jeremy felt his gut twist. “That’s it?”

Leigh looked up at him, and for a moment her face looked desperate. She opened her mouth as though she wanted to say something, and Jeremy half-expected a full confession to come tumbling out.

But Leigh seemed frozen. No words left her mouth. She looked back down at the glass.

Jeremy waited. There was something intensely erotic about the tension in the room. Memories of the way Craig had touched his wife swirled through his mind, and the waiting for what Leigh would do next only heightened the pain of it.

“You sure left in a hurry,” he said, finally, unable to wait any longer for Leigh, who seemed to have stopped in time. “Are you sure you’re okay?”

Leigh’s chest rose and fell in a little huff.

“Leigh?”

Jeremy had an urge to go over to her and put his arm around her, but he stopped himself. It felt disingenuous, since he had let the whole scene with Craig take place, gotten off on it, and maybe even provoked it in his own way.

He suddenly didn’t like the feeling of having this – what was it? It wasn’t really a lie, just a... disparity – between the two of them. If his wife had been looking so distraught under any other circumstances, he would have gone over to hug her. It seemed strange not to do it now, yet doing would feel a little wrong.

“I have to tell you about something,” Leigh said quietly.

Jeremy felt a wave of relief.

“Me, too,” he said.

Leigh looked up at him, confused. They looked at each other for a moment, then Leigh waved her hand impatiently. “Me first.”

She exhaled sharply. “I don’t really know what to make of it, um... so Craig, you know, he said a few things to me tonight that make me feel like he’s, um... hitting on me. And he sort of...” Leigh looked up at the ceiling. Her features were contorted into a very strange expression. She was really having trouble getting it out. “Like, I don’t really know how to describe it -”

“I know about it,” Jeremy blurted.

Leigh dropped her eyes and her face went white. “What?”

Jeremy moved closer to her, his hands in his pockets. It was a habit of his when he was in stressful or confrontational situations: he put his hands in pockets and gestured with them. It seemed to put people at ease, probably because it made him look a little sappy.

Whatever worked.

“I sort of had a conversation with Craig today that, um... well, it made me think I needed to follow you. When you went in the house.”

Leigh’s eyes widened. “What?” she repeated.

“So, I saw the... exchange you had with him. At the bathroom door.”

Jeremy couldn’t know for sure, but it looked to him like Leigh’s heart went into free fall. Her jaw fell open slightly, and she stared at him.

“So, what... why didn’t you... say anything?” she said, finally. Then, with a note of anger: “What do you mean, you watched?”

Jeremy put a hand on hers. “Leigh, that’s not exactly fair to get mad -”

“What?”

“Well, from what I saw, you didn’t exactly slap him and tell him sternly to get his paws off you.”

Leigh’s face went bright red instantly and she dropped her eyes again. She drew her lips into a tight line.

It wasn’t really the reaction Jeremy had been hoping for, or the way he had wanted the conversation to go. In fact, it didn’t make any sense at all for anyone to be mad.

“Leigh,” he said. “Here’s the thing. Let’s... don’t be mad, first of all.”

Her eyes flew open and she glared at him.

“Seriously. Being mad about this is silly. Think how silly it is.”

Leigh shook her head and made a face. “What are you talking about?!”

Jeremy shrugged. “Look... you obviously didn’t feel the need to stop him. It’s pretty clear that you didn’t have a... let’s say, saintly, reaction to what he did -”

“I told us to leave right away!” Leigh snapped. “And then I told you about it!”

“That’s true, and I think that’s -”

“You’re the one who... I don’t know. Set me up!” she said furiously. She turned and put her glass in the sink.

“Leigh, all I’m saying is... you obviously didn’t hate it. And I obviously didn’t either -” he stepped into Leigh’s path to keep her from storming out of the kitchen. “So, what’s the big deal?”

Leigh bumped into him and took a step back. Her eyes were wild, but he could tell she was giving it some thought.

“You... you... no, this is... get out of my way!” she said.

Jeremy reached for her arms. “Let’s just talk about this -”

“I don’t want to talk about it. I don’t want to have a conversation about.. about... this.”

Jeremy took a step back, which surprised her into halting. “Why not?” he said.

Leigh’s tense posture crumpled. Her face even softened a little, confusion washing over it.

It was a good question. Jeremy took a moment to admire his skills of negotiation.

“Because it’s preposterous.”

“Why?”

Leigh blinked. “You’re talking about... you’re talking about cheating, here. This is our marriage and you’re like, talking about... I don’t even know what you’re talking about.”

“Okay,” Jeremy said. “So it’s something new. But can’t we just talk about it?”

Leigh looked at him. He could see that the idea was making its way slowly through her mind, and she was embracing the possibilities. But Leigh was never one to do risky things – not in a conversation or real life. She shook her head. “I don’t even want to talk about this.”

“I think we have to,” Jeremy said.

She shook her head.

“Well, then,” he said. “Hear me out, at least. Because I feel bad about what I did.”

Leigh pressed her lips together and folded her arms, waving one hand to indicate that she would, begrudgingly, listen.

Jeremy exhaled. Where did he start?

He found himself starting in a completely unexpected place. “Leigh, things have been sort of stale in our marriage lately. I think you know that.”

“What about...?!” she protested. He knew she was referring to the other night, when they had fucked on the counter.

“Yeah, what about that?” Jeremy said. “You and I both know that had something to do with... you know, our neighbors.”

“No,” she said. “It had to do with the... book covers, and the...” She frowned. Her body deflated and she let her hands hang at her sides.

“I don’t see why this has to bother you so much,” Jeremy said, taking a step toward her. “It’s something that we both obviously like. So... why don’t we just stop pretending it’s not something that turned us on, and just -”

“Turn into swingers and fuck everyone in town?” she shot at him. “Is that what you want?”

“Well,” Jeremy said, a little taken aback by her sudden outburst. “I was going to say ‘talk about it.’ Can’t we do that?”

Leigh hugged herself.

Jeremy stepped closer to her and rubbed the outsides of her arms.

“Why does talking about it bother you so much?”

Leigh shook her head. “I don’t know. I just don’t... I don’t want to be that kind of person, you know? I don’t want our marriage to be like... everybody else’s. Where we have to do something like that just to keep things interesting. And... ugh. No. I don’t want to have this conversation.”

Jeremy looked at her.

He had found, over years of marriage, that it was usually best to let Leigh go her own way when she shut down like this. The conversation would come back around, and usually sooner rather than later.

“Okay,” he said. He pulled her close to him. “Okay. If you don’t want to talk about it, we don’t have to.”

He hugged her, and she put her arms around him reluctantly at first, then hugged him back tightly.

“Okay,” she said.

But there was a tone of uncertainty in her voice.

They’d definitely be back to this topic, he knew.

He just had to be patient.

5: A DIFFERENT KIND OF MODEL

[Billie Oswald]: Come shopping with me. I know u have the day off because I stock u.

Leigh stared at the text message from Billie, unable to hold back her grin. Billie's spelling error was hilarious by itself, but it was also funny to imagine Billie standing still behind her curtains, looking out the window, stalking her neighbor. Leigh had to laugh in spite of the troubled feelings that had been plaguing her since the barbecue.

Billie weighed heavily on Leigh's mind. She really liked her, and because she had such a sweet face and smile, and crop of sporty hair, Leigh felt even guiltier if she had somehow instigated something with her husband.

As usual, Leigh felt compelled to set the record straight, but was really afraid of doing so.

She sighed, and set the phone on the counter to make herself a cup of coffee and think. She found herself picking it up again before she had even finished the preparations or started the coffee.

She started a message and then deleted it.

She started again.

What could she say? Billie was right, she didn't have anything to do today. Her car was in the driveway because she had moved it to give Jeremy more room to get the lawnmower out.

She could say she was sick.

The thing was, she really wanted to get out of the house.

Why would Billie be texting her now?

Leigh's stomach sank: what if she knew?

Then she felt a prickle of fear.

She felt bad about doing something that betrayed Billie, and Billie's nice smile and cheery demeanor inspired an extra amount of guilt.

But the woman was Bulgarian, and even though she was small, she had that feisty look like she might jump on you and break your neck, Hollywood-style. Also, she was as direct as a knife to the heart.

Leigh tapped away on the phone and deleted her excuse again.

She could just say she didn't get the message.

She set the phone down and finished making the coffee. As she did, she thought about it, and realized that in all likelihood, Billie would just come over to get her in her car, and there would be no way out.

She might as well be actually dressed for it.

She might as well face the music.

She typed:

[Me]: when? I still need a shower

She waited. She still didn't know if she should say something to Billie or not about what had happened with Craig. She didn't want to – and there were many layers of complication to that story – but she also didn't want to do the wrong thing.

Her phone buzzed.

[Billie Oswald]: im not even out of my bed. Ill come to you at 12

Meekly, Leigh typed: okay

This gave Leigh more than two hours to get dressed and think.

And think she did.

She spaced out in the shower so long her fingers turned to prunes.

The right thing to do would be to tell Billie what happened.

Every time she had that thought, she felt a drop in her heart.

She liked to tell herself that it made her feel bad because it would ruin her friendship with Billie.

But Leigh knew that the real reason was much more insidious than that. The real reason she didn't want to rock the boat had to do with Craig.

The night of the barbecue, she had gone to bed and lain awake, pretending to be asleep. She hadn't wanted to talk to Jeremy, and since there was nothing else to do, she let her mind wander. And it wandered and wandered, to all sorts of fantasies that she couldn't make herself stop thinking about. She began with little vignettes between her and Craig, in neutral enough settings. More barbecues, more of him cornering her in hallways and bathrooms. Pushing her into empty bedrooms and holding a finger to his lips, then sliding those hot fingers down to her thigh and under her dress, up the length of her leg, right into her panties...

She would snap awake from the daydream with a shudder.

After all, she didn't really like Craig. Who did he think he was? He was so full of himself, so arrogant, so sure he could just seduce the next-door-neighbor just because he had hard biceps and stubble on his square jaw that would feel like sandpaper against her inner thigh -

No.

And then she thought about Jeremy. He was right, things had been stale in their sex life. But whenever she brushed up against that thought she recoiled from it like from a hot coal. She didn't want that to be them. She didn't want it to be true, and as long as she didn't want that she wouldn't think about it. And if she didn't think about it then she didn't have to think that there was a need to do anything about it.

And what the hell with Jeremy? When she thought of him just watching another man swipe up chocolate from her breasts, her face got hot.

She was so angry when she thought of that.

But that wasn't true, either, and she knew it.

She knew it because sometimes, when she had her daydreams about Craig, and he was slipping his fingers under the fabric of her panties... sometimes, she lifted her eyes, and Jeremy was there in the window, staring at her. His face was absorbed by a cold rage, a wild hunger, and she could almost feel the sinking, painful heat in his chest as Craig slammed her against the wall and slid his cock between her thighs...

Leigh closed her eyes in the shower.

Jesus. This was all so... wrong.

She shook her head and dipped her dark hair under the water.

What was she going to tell Billie today?

Anything?

Nothing?

She wiped the condensation from the shower mirror and looked herself in the mirror until more steam made her face disappear.

Honesty is the best policy, she thought to herself.

But as she rinsed shampoo from her head, she found herself indulging in a fantasy of another kind.

Billie was prompt, which surprised Leigh, and also delighted her. She climbed into her car: a Mercedes E-class Cabriolet, a convertible, which she of course had the top down on.

Leigh grimaced. She had not put any sunscreen on.

“What is it?” Billie said. “Please don’t tell me we have to put the top up, I hate that.”

“I just forgot sunscreen.”

Billie looked over at her. “You know, if you just got a really bad burn as a child then you wouldn’t have these problems. That’s how we do it in Bulgaria.”

Leigh stared at her.

Billie laughed and dropped into an accent. “I make joke with you,” she returned to her normal voice. “There’s sunscreen in the glove box, actually.”

Leigh took out the sunscreen and applied while Billie drove outrageously fast to the highway. She was feeling guiltier about what had happened at the barbecue with every passing second, because Billie was so sunny and fun to be around.

“I meant to ask you,” Leigh said, “What do you do?”

“Like for a job?” Billie said. She looked over at her with a smile. “I am a professional golddigger. This is my job.”

Leigh stared at her.

Billie waited, and then used her false accent again: “I am making joke.”

Leigh smiled, nervously.

“I do taxes,” she said. “It’s very boring. But I only work three months of the year.”

“Oh,” Leigh said, because she couldn’t think of anything else to say.

“In the winter I am a dogsledding guide,” Billie added.

She looked over at Leigh, who did not know how to respond to that. Billie nodded and grinned. “Ah, see? That’s interesting. Okay. Hold on to your hair, we’re going fast now.”

The Gallery in Woodbury was a new mall about thirty minutes outside of town. During the drive, Billie did most of the talking, while Leigh gave distracted answers and sank a little further into her guilt.

The mall was a new, upscale one, and Leigh had wanted to visit for a while. She had wondered how they managed to have an open-air mall in this climate, but Billie seemed to read her mind by explaining, unsolicited, that the walkways were all heated.

She insisted on starting the day by getting a latte at a pleasant cafe, which took almost an hour. Billie was not the kind of woman that Leigh would call “hurried.”

Craig had some kind of charity event coming up through Woods-Gunthry and Billie needed a new dress. Leigh decided not to spend any more money on dresses with Billie, after really splurging the last time they went shopping. She sat outside the dressing rooms and vaguely approved of whatever Billie came out wearing, her thoughts miles away, with Craig and his fingers stroking her breasts. Or even more sordid scenes, with Jeremy watching.

She liked Julia's Big Boss. She had read the entire story – a sordid and utterly implausible story about a man who owed gambling debt to his boss. The wife, Julia, was taken as payment, but the husband and boss tricked the wife into thinking he was just into some kind of BDSM thing. They blindfolded her and the husband read off a script to her while the boss did what he wanted to do.

Julia didn't like admitting that she liked the story. Especially the part where the wife realized that the boss was fucking her because his cock was so big... probably like Craig's... but by then it was too late.

Ugh. It was so... base. Fantasizing about the size of a man's cock and his hard muscles, as if that's all there were to attraction and pleasure in bed.

Sometimes she couldn't believe herself.

There was so much more to it. So much more to seduction.

Like slowly teasing a woman by staring into her eyes and glancing over her breasts with your fingertips.

What was she even thinking about?! This was Billie's husband.

Leigh stared at the floor, her chest flashing hot and cold with guilt.

Billie's voice broke through her reverie. “What's up with you?” She put her hand on her hip and lifted the handwritten price tag of her dress. “I tell you I'm going to spend $2,000 on a dress and you say nothing."

She collapsed in the couch, up against a wall in a hallway of dressing rooms closed off by heavy curtains, next to Leigh. "What's on your mind?"

Leigh bit her lip. It was pointless saying it was nothing... but she didn't really have the guts to tell Billie the truth.

Or you don't want to, she thought.

But Billie didn't have to know what she thought. Billie only had to know what was happening.

"Spill it," Billie said. She stood up and gave herself a twirl in the mirror. "Oh, now, I don't know. You know, this would look better on you."

"I'm worried about a friend of mine," Leigh blurted. "I think, um... her husband is up to something with another woman. And I don't know how to tell her."

Billie seemed to not even hear at first. She was looking at herself in the mirror, turning and posing, trying to see how her butt looked.

"Is this about Craig hitting on you?" she said, almost with disinterest, as she craned her neck behind her. Then she looked back toward the astonished Leigh. "Because you don't need to worry about it then."

Leigh found her mouth hanging open for what seemed like the gazillionth time in the past month.

"No?" Billie said. "It's someone else?"

Leigh closed her mouth. She shook her head. "No... I..."

Billie unzipped the dress. "You really need to try this on," she said. "It's better with your figure."

Leigh stared at her as she dropped the dress to the floor.

Billie's body was lean and flawless – not an ounce of fat on her anywhere. Her hips and breasts were small, but shapely. Leigh looked away quickly, but not before she saw that her friend was brazenly not wearing any underwear, and that she was fully waxed. "Um," Leigh gulped. "I think I need a bigger size."

Billie went back into the changing room at a leisurely pace, given that she was standing around buck-naked, and closed the curtain behind her.

"Also," Leigh babbled, not knowing what to do in the face of so much... skin. "I can't... this is too expensive."

Billie poked her head out of the curtain. "You must have known that me and Craig are in an open relationship?" she said, looking at Leigh. She abruptly changed the subject, as though she hadn't dropped a bombshell.

“Ask the clerk, just try it on. We can take a selfie and put it on Facebook or something.” She raised her eyebrows. “Or something more racy.”

She disappeared again. Leigh picked the dress up and held it in her hand.

She wasn’t sure what to feel. Relief was one emotion coursing through her.

Confusion.

Curiosity.

And... there was no doubt:

Arousal.

She folded the dress in half and lay it across the couch. She could see Billie’s little feet stepping into a red dress.

“Oh, this one is more like Billie,” Billie breathed. The curtain slid open with flourish. “Ta-da!” she said.

It did look good. With her extra-lean figure and naturally tan-colored skin, her light brown eyes and her petite features, Billie looked a lot like models who were so popular in fashion magazines now. The spaghetti straps of the dress held the bodice (just barely) over her handful of firm breasts, and from there the dress turned into a slinky, silky fabric that clung to her as she moved and then let go of her body, teasing with every motion she made. It was short, and her slender thighs hung enticing out at the bottom.

Leigh’s head was still spinning from what Billie had said about her open relationship. While her eyes were taking in the dress and she tried to concentrate on paying her friend a proper compliment, she couldn’t stop turning Billie’s proclamation over and over in her mind:

Billie held her hands out impatiently. “Well?” she demanded, but her mouth was smiling. “Aren’t you going to say anything?”

Leigh stuttered. “It looks... it looks... good.”

“Good,” Billie repeated. Then she turned with a huff and pulled on the curtain.

“I mean, it looks great... it looks great, Billie. It’s a very hot dress,” Leigh stammered. “I’m sorry,” she said, putting her hand to her forehead. “I just... um, I can’t...”

“Oh,” Billie said, stepping back out. She propped herself up against a wall and put her hand on her hip. “This is still about the relationship.” She furrowed her brow. “I thought you knew.”

Leigh looked at her, her eyes wide.

Billie shook a finger at her. “That’s a very bad thing you did, then.”

For a moment Leigh’s heart plummeted with fear.

She was surprised to find, though, that it was also racing. She was experiencing a kind of excitement she hadn’t ever really come into contact with. It was perhaps the first time she had been so close to something so forbidden. But between the conversation with her husband, and now with Billie, and Craig’s obvious advances... it almost seemed like everyone was conspiring to make her do this very bad thing. Like she barely had any choice. Like it would all be okay if she just followed her desires...

Billie quickly smiled. “Hey, I’m joking, okay? It’s not a big deal. Anyway... it seems like you had a good time, right?”

Leigh started to shake her head, trying to move her mouth to find the appropriate thing to say to the wife of the man who had been stroking her breast so inappropriately in hallway just a few days before.

Whatever the appropriate thing to say was.

Billie mimicked the motions of Leigh’s head, and then she plopped down next to her on the couch. “I’m sorry,” she said. “I really thought you knew this about us. But still... you have to admit you liked it, just a little.”

Leigh knew that the expression on her face looked like alarm.

Billie leaned her head back. “Craig is really into you,” she said.

Leigh was startled by the way Billie made this declaration. It was so matter-of-fact. She didn’t seem to care at all that she was informing another woman that her own husband was “into” her.

Billie turned her head to the side and grinned. “It’s the pictures. Especially the one on that hotwife book -”

Billie cut herself off with a gasp. She grabbed Leigh’s forearm and squeezed, biting her lower lip. “I’ve got such a great idea!” she said, jumping up.

And then she disappeared, practically speedwalking in the little red dress she was wearing, out of the dressing rooms and out to the store.

Leigh stared at her retreating.

Was this really happening?

Inside her mind though, a damn seemed to be breaking. She couldn't stop the trickle of thoughts in her mind from turning into a gushing river, no matter how much she wanted to put it all out of her mind.

She had liked Craig's fingers on her chest. She had liked imagining the bulge in his jeans pressing into her, feeling it against her thigh, feeling his fingers moving between their bodies as he freed his cock. She could almost feel the hot weight of his dick in her hand.

She fanned herself with a brochure for an art festival that had been abandoned on the couch.

She was turned on, all the way to the center of her legs, where she was getting wet.

Jesus. What was wrong with her?

A swishing sound and a flurry of activity in the direction of the store announced the return of Billie, who was holding a hanger and a mass of black, velvet fabric in her hands. "Look at this," she said. "I saw it and that hot cover for that hotwife book was the first thing that came to mind."

She halted and released the fabric she was carrying in one hand.

A very short, very skimpy, strapless dress swung seductively beneath the hanger, suspended by clear plastic straps.

It was a lot like that dress. It might have even been the exact same one.

Leigh's hand went involuntarily to cover her mouth, though she wasn't sure which expression she was trying to hide.

Billie shook the dress. "Oh, come on," she said. "Just try it. This is the dress that Craig can't get out of his mind. Just try it on, maybe you'll need it for something in the future."

Leigh continued staring, feeling almost paralyzed.

"Jeremy will like it. I know he will."

Leigh could feel herself wanting it. She wanted to try it on, she wanted to grab it and wear it and then prance around somewhere where Craig could see her in it, and Jeremy could see Craig seeing her in it. She could feel a very unfamiliar feeling inside of her – she wanted to drive men wild. It felt good.

But she had a hard time just jumping into that the way Billie did.

Leigh found herself shaking her head. "It's too... it's..."

Billie reached for Leigh's arm and pulled her from the couch. "I can see from your face that you want to put it on. Just put it on. What's the harm in putting on a dress?”

She practically shoved Leigh into the dressing room. Her lean arm shot up and jerked the curtain closed. “Come on, just for fun.”

Only because of the way she said it, she made it sound like if Leigh didn’t do it, she might slit her throat.

Leigh looked at herself in the mirror.

What was she doing?

But her body was way ahead of her, already peeling off her clothes.

Before she knew it, she was stepping into the dress, which did look remarkably like the one she had used in the photo shoot. She could feel a flush spreading over her face and her body, with the memory of that particular photo shoot creeping into her mind.

In particular, there had been the illicit excitement when Dmitry had asked her to move the photo shoot to the room adjacent to the studio – his room, presumably where he slept. Leigh had never asked but the evidence was there: the slightly rumpled bed sheet, a towel over a chair, the scent of his aftershave hanging in the slightly damp air. The shoot had a peculiar feel to it: it was noon, but Dmitry had just gotten up, answering the door in nothing but his boxers. He had asked her to get changed into the black dress, and she had changed into it as reluctantly as she was doing now. But, just like now, she had been pleased with the feel of the fabric, the way she looked, the shortness of the dress even if it made her uncomfortable.

While she was changing and getting ready – she put her hair down at his request, and a make-up artist who spoke no English materialized, apparently from next door, to put on the finishing touches – Dmitry had evidently taken a shower and shaved.

When they began the photo shoot, it was in the studio, against a white background, then a black one.

“You know,” he said, dropping the camera from his face to stare at her intensely. “This would be more realistic on a bed.”

And before she had known what was happening, she had been following him to the open door to his bedroom.

Sure, she knew it was inappropriate. It was just the sort of thing a guy would say before putting the moves on her. It was something she wouldn’t have done in the presence of her husband; it was something she knew she wasn’t going to tell her husband about. It was the kind of thin, gray line that she shouldn’t be crossing, and she had known it.

But she had kept walking forward, right into the faintly humid bedroom, the scent of Dmitry's shower still hanging in the air. Her heart had been beating wildly, an ache twisting painfully between her legs, her conscience on fire, as she sat down on the bed.

The photo on the cover of Julia's Big Boss, Leigh knew, was the first one he had taken, after she had sat nervously on the edge of the bed.

"Try to relax," Dmitry had purred.

And that was why she looked the way she did, like a woman on the verge of doing something very, very bad, who was not too sure she really wanted to do it.

Or better stated, that she really should be doing it.

She looked like that in the photo because that was how she had felt. And if Dmitry had gotten too close, or set his camera down on the long table behind him, very deliberately, and waked toward her to push her hair behind her shoulder? What would she have done?

Back in the changing room, Leigh could feel the excitement of that memory (and the truthful answer to that question) searing through her. She pointed her elbows up at the ceiling to tug the material into place, and wished she'd had the same push-up bra she had been wearing in the photo shoot.

But no matter, she still looked good.

This is the dress that Craig can't get out of his mind.

Leigh tugged on her tidy ponytail and let her hair fall down around her shoulders.

"Are you done yet or what?" Billie said, and she pulled on the curtain without waiting for the answer.

She ran her eyes over Leigh's figure.

"Oh God," she said. "You have to buy it. It's so hot."

Leigh looked from Billie to the mirror again. "I don't..."

Her voice trailed off, because she really did want to buy it. It was impractical and not her style, something she would probably never wear, but something inside of her really wanted to make the purchase.

Something inside of her really wanted Billie to go home and tell Craig she had made the purchase. She wanted him thinking about it.

She wanted Jeremy thinking about it.

Billie looked both ways and then stepped toward the compartment, pushing Leigh inside and closing the curtain.

Leigh felt her heart flutter and then mild panic rose up inside of her. Billie wasn't going to try and hit on her or something, was she...?

But Billie took Leigh's phone out of her purse instead. "I have an idea," she said. She was smiling, and swiping at the screen. "Why don't you take a picture of this and send it to Craig?" Her eyes lifted and she looked at Leigh. "Or better yet," she mused, "why not send the picture to both of them?"

Leigh grabbed for the phone, but Billie was too quick and snapped a picture, pulling her hand away.

"Don't!" Leigh hissed.

She had to admit that her heart was not entirely in her refusal.

"Listen," Billie said calmly. "I happen to know that Jeremy is into watching you with another man. And. I happen to know that you at least like the idea of it."

Leigh tried very, very hard to keep her face from going red.

Billie smiled graciously and shrugged. "Don't be embarrassed. Who cares? I don't care, Craig... I know he doesn't care, and Jeremy doesn't care. So what's the problem?"

Leigh put her hands on either side of her nose. "I don't know... I just..." she shook her head.

Billie nodded. "You're not really into it. I get it. It's not something for everyone. Although..." she dropped her voice to a purr, "Craig has a really thick cock, he's very good in be-"

"That's not a consideration... I... this is..." Leigh shook her head again. "Oh, I can't believe I'm having this conversation."

Billie smiled. "Okay what about this?" She waved the phone carelessly in her hand. "We take the picture and we send it, and you send it 'accidentally' to Craig?"

Leigh paused.

Billie pointed at her. "See? You want to do it. Come on, it will be fun. It's not anything all that bad."

Leigh's mouth opened slightly.

It was bad.

It was a bad thing to do.

Just like sitting on the edge of Dmitry's bed was a bad thing to do. It was a line, and she was crossing it.

“You want to do it,” Billie sang. “And so does everyone else.” She smiled. “Want you to do it, that is.”

Leigh looked at her uncertainly.

Why on earth was she even giving this a thought?

Because she wanted Craig to see her in this dress. She wanted him to open a photo and see her big, bountiful breasts, barely covered by the black fabric of the same dress he so admired her in.

Billie was watching her.

Then her eyes lit up, dangerous and almost orange. “I’ve got an even better idea,” she whispered. She tapped the phone against her lower lip.

“Pull the dress down a little, like this -”

And before she knew what was happening, Billie was pulling her dress down and her nipples nearly sprung loose from the fabric.

“Billie!” Leigh complained, and grabbed the material to pull it up.

“No way,” she said.

The uncertainty in her voice was almost embarrassing.

What was wrong with her?

She looked at the phone in Billie’s hand.

Billie was smiling.

Leigh pulled her arms more tightly across her chest.

“What if,” Billie suggested, “I take it with my phone, and I pretend it’s a sneaky photo?”

The appeal of this traveled right through Leigh’s spine. All the possibilities of this idea went through her mind at once, and she felt the dull ache between her legs throb to a new height. Her panties were getting wet.

She started to shake her head.

“Come on,” Billie said. “I can stand behind the thingy here, and you just start to take the dress off. Then I’ll get the photo and you can keep up your game.”

After a pause, Leigh stuttered: “My game?”

Billie smiled at her. “You know, your game, where you are like, ‘oh! I would never.’” Billie winked at her and pretended to fan herself off. “It’s very sexy.”

Leigh had nothing to say. For one, Billie had nailed “her game” - even if Leigh wasn’t 100% certain she was playing or not.

And for another, she had such a great way of saying something true, calling you out, and still being friendly, so Leigh wasn’t even annoyed or compelled to correct the “truth.”

But was she actually thinking about doing this?

“What about Jeremy?” Leigh said, flailing around for a way to get herself out of the mess she deeply wanted to be in.

Billie grinned. “What about Jeremy? He’ll love this. You can just tell him about it. Or...”

Billie seemed to have a devious thought.

“Or, what?” Leigh said nervously.

Billie stepped out of the compartment. She closed the curtain so that only a sliver of light came through, and Leigh saw her lining up the lens of the phone camera on the open space. “Or, maybe we think of something better, some better way for him to find out, you know? A surprise.” She popped an eye through the crack, over the phone. “Now just take your dress off, like you would anyway.”

Leigh flashed her a look.

She wasn’t actually going to do this?

“Only my breasts,” she said, her voice an echo of the same voice she’d used to tell Dmitry she wouldn’t lie down on the bed in his bedroom. Under any circumstances.

“Got it,” Billie said. “We take what we can get for now.”

Leigh glared at her.

“Got it,” Billie said, her voice smiling. “Only boobies.”

“You have to give me the phone after you take the picture.”

“Oh wait, this is your phone,” Billie said. She popped out to the couch where she had left her purse, and Leigh was alone for a moment in the changing room. Doubt began to spiral around her.

But she just watched, immobile, as Billie arranged herself and the phone in her hand again.

“Go any time,” Billie said, her voice low and terribly sexual.

And Leigh found herself actually doing it.

She turned to the wall, as though she had no idea that Billie was behind the curtain. She swung her hair around to one shoulder, though, so that her face would be visible. And then, staring at the yellow and gray wallpaper on the wall of changing room, she slowly pushed the dress down, as though she were taking it off.

Her plan had been to stop there, and demand the phone back from Billie. She glanced to her left and downward, seeing a reflection of herself in the mirror as she kept going, pushing the dress further and further down.

Suddenly, she was seized by the realization of what she was doing. She pulled the dress up quickly and turned to the curtain.

Billie handed it over and smiled, returning to the couch.

“Oh, please don’t delete them,” she said.

Leigh set the phone down on a small bench worked into the corner of the room. She stared at it for a moment. She really shouldn’t have done that. She really should delete them.

She dropped the dress to the floor and hurried to put on her own clothes. The svelte silver phone burned in the corner.

She picked it up.

It was locked.

“Do you want to go to that place that says it’s French and have mussels?” Billie asked, almost yawning. “I’m starving.”

Leigh looked at herself in the mirror, her hair down, her dress put on hastily, much the way it might look if she threw it on because she heard her husband come home...

“Okay,” she said quietly.

And then she straightened her dress, fixed her hair into a ponytail, and opened the curtain.

She handed the phone to Billie. “Let’s go,” she said.

“But you’re buying the dress,” Billie said, picking it up from the floor. “If you don’t, I will.”

Leigh gave an exasperated sigh.

Even if that was sort of what she had wanted to happen anyway.

They ate an early dinner, and Billie browsed her way out of the mall, so it was almost seven by the time they got home. At six-thirty, when they were in the car, Leigh was terrified by the buzz of her phone in her purse and the sight of Jeremy’s name on the notification bar.

The realization of what she had done – and the fact that it could have consequences, consequences like her husband being mad, hit her like a ton of bricks. Billie had kept the conversation at dinner light and unrelated to what had happened in the changing room, and she was so adept at it that Leigh had (almost) forgotten about what had happened.

What she had done.

But her heart started pounding as soon as she saw Jeremy's name.

The text message was neutral: he was only wondering where she was.

The remainder of the drive, and the conversation with Billie, turned into a blur.

Leigh's mind was miles away.

She was going to have to confess what she had done to Jeremy.

And what if he didn't think it was great, as Billie had promised?

Her stomach twisted.

She felt the same way she had felt when she had left Dmitry's loft after taking the photos: not dirty, per se. Just a little filmy.

Dmitry had never hit on her, not at all. She had skated very close to temptation, and she had been there, willing if he only asked her, willing to give in and go over the line, but he never had.

Now she had really done something over the line.

But not that far over the line.

What was a photo, after all?

And after all, she could always say she hadn't known about it.

"You okay?" Billie said, turning to her briefly. "You look worried."

"Should I tell Jeremy?" Leigh said. "About the photo?"

Billie had her hand in her short hair, and she tucked it uselessly behind her ear. The wind was whipping it behind her, and she looked like she was twenty with her big sunglasses and her cute cut.

She shrugged. "It's up to you," she said. "It's your game."

Leigh turned to the windshield. "I just don't want to be dishonest," she said, as quietly as she could so that Billie could still hear her.

"Then don't be," she said, turning the steering wheel onto the wide parkways that led into their development. "It's a good policy."

They drove for a bit, turning through the winding streets of the idyllic suburban neighborhood.

"But," Billie said. "Sometimes there is just keeping things a secret for a while. SO they're more fun."

Leigh had just been beginning to feel better, and Billie's words sent her sailing off a cliff again.

Billie turned into their driveway. “Okay, I have to go quickly so I’ll leave you here.”

She leaned over and kissed Leigh on the cheek. “Ciao ciao.”

Leigh stepped out of the car in a daze.

Billie lifted her fingers from the steering wheel as she let the car roll down into the street.

Another wave of mild panic rolled over her.

She had, essentially, stage a photo of her tits for her neighbor.

The neighbor. Craig.

Craig of the tattooed arms and the hard body and the huge package.

“What am I doing?” she whispered aloud.

There was still a way, she reminded herself, to proclaim her innocence. After all, Billie was the one who had take the picture. It looked like a candid photo.

But it wasn’t.

Leigh felt as though another wave of panic was going to roll over her, but just as it began, it turned into something else.

She thought about Craig, opening the message, looking at the photo.

She had done such a bad, bad thing.

She turned toward the house.

Jeremy was home; the lights were on.

Leigh trudged up the steps and into the foyer.

She was still turning over her decision in her mind.

There was something up with Leigh from the moment she walked through the door, late, shopping bags in hand.

Jeremy was in the kitchen, and looked up and out the window to see Billie drive by in her silver convertible. It was very clearly Billie (as opposed to Craig), and so he could dispense with some of the thoughts he’d been savoring, bitterly, in the kitchen while waiting for Leigh to come home.

Leigh wasn’t a shopper. And she wasn’t a note-leaver: she sent text messages to say where she was going or that she’d be home late. Today, though, she’d chosen to write:

Shopping. Be home soon.
PS- Billie drove on a sticky note. The “PS” looked as though it had been added hastily, as she was leaving and realized that her car would still be in the garage.

Jeremy had picked up the note.

Why a note? Why not text?

The thing about a note, he thought, is that it can always be thrown in the trash, supposing the person who left it gets home before the other person.

Sure, maybe he was just reading things into it, but it really was out of character for Leigh. Leigh who hardly ever did things out of character.

And why? Why would Leigh not want Jeremy to know that she had gone shopping with Billie? Why leave the door open like this, to not telling him?

From there, with the help of a few beers, he’d spun up an incredible number of stories and possibilities. Almost all of them had to do with Leigh sneaking off to Woods-Gunthry, or the hotel next to Woods-Gunthry, or maybe even just walking down the street and knocking on the door, where Jeremy was “working from home.”

But that was definitely Billie who had just driven by.

He rounded the corner by the dining area, and stopped when he saw Leigh.

And there she was. Looking...

Looking, what?

Out of sorts.

Her hair looked as if it had been let down, and then put back up. Hastily. It was not in its usual tidy pony-tail, or carefully-crafted bun.

Leigh never would have done her hair like that.

And then there was her dress. It had a long wrinkle on it, across the lap, and it was sitting on top of her perfect body as though it had been thrown on hastily as well. Leigh didn’t put dresses on hastily. She spent several minutes lifting the material by the shoulders and the hip, placing it on her body in exactly the right way.

She had a shopping bag – a white and black, heavy duty one with a box inside of it, in one hand. She dropped it on the floor.

Jeremy's eyes went to it. "That looks expensive," he said, lacking anything else intelligent to say.

Leigh pushed her hand against her hair and blew out.

"Hot?" Jeremy said. "I have cold beer."

Leigh's eyes looked a little vacant.

Didn't they? Like she was thinking about something else?

He felt a shudder go through him.

Why did it turn him on so much, thinking like this?

"Too many calories," Leigh said, though her eyes were glassy and unfocused. She seemed to snap suddenly back into the room. "I... because I had, I had a dinner with Billie and some white wine."

That explained it, didn't it?

"Why is your dress so... wrinkled?" Jeremy asked.

If he had been hoping to catch Leigh off-guard, he certainly got his money's worth. A look of near-panic crossed her face, and her eyes went, curiously, to the bag before sweeping around the room, as if the answer would be there.

This all took only about three seconds, but it was a second too long.

"Huh? Oh." She looked down at her dress.

Another moment passed, also too long, given the circumstances. "It must have been... the car."

Of course, Jeremy thought, semi-relieved. The car. The car had wrinkled her dress and blown her hair around.

"That's why your hair is such a mess," Jeremy joked.

Leigh looked alarmed again and brought a hand to her head. "What? Oh. Yeah."

Jeremy was snapping in and out of "suspicion" mode so fast it was making his head spin.

"Something wrong?" he asked.

Leigh looked at him for a moment, and it was the kind of look you'd expect someone to give you right before a lengthy confession, one that starts with, "I've done something really bad."

He was so ready for this that he took a step forward, to be closer to her when she spilled her secret.

She surprised him by shaking her head quickly. "No, no. NO, I'm... nothing. Just the heat. Maybe I need something... maybe I just have low blood sugar."

Jeremy stared at her.

“I thought you said you just ate.”

Leigh looked at him, and he was certain a look of horror was creeping across her face.

He wasn't proud of it, but the look of guilt washing over Leigh had the effect of driving him wild more than anything.

“I... I did. I just, I was explaining that because of the wine. It was actually just mussels, so... yeah, I'm still hungry.”

There was a moment while they stared at each other.

“Okay,” Jeremy said. “Well... let's get something to eat.”

Leigh picked up the bag and started for the hallway.

Suspicion again gnawed at Jeremy. He stepped out to block her path, putting his arm on hers. “Oh, just leave that,” he said. “Come on, I'll make you a nice cold lemonade or something.”

Now she definitely looked nervous.

God. Had Leigh actually done something bad? After all that hullabaloo about Craig touching her?

And what was it? What was in the bag that she wanted to hide away so much? Why was she being so weird?

Jeremy took a calming breath as he gently moved Leigh in front of him and prodded her into the kitchen. Now was not the time to ask these questions.

All in good time.

He poured Leigh a glass of wine anyway, suspecting – and rightly – that whatever was going on in her mind was giving her the jitters and that she would decline the drink at first and then drink it anyway.

Which is exactly what she did while he put together a chef salad.

“So, when did you decide to go shopping with Billie?” he ventured.

Leigh looked at the clock. “Oh... like, ten o'clock or so.” Then she quickly added: “She called me.”

“I see.”

He cut some cheese into cubes, surprised by two things: that Leigh didn't add any more to the conversation, and that she said nothing about the cheese and how much he was adding, even though she was staring right at it as he chopped.

He finished the salad, and then sat down next to her at the counter. Leigh seemed to not even notice that he had slid the salad bowl and utensils toward her.

“Soup’s on,” he joked.

Any minute now, he could feel, she was going to turn to him and suck in a deep breath of air. Jeremy, she would say, breathlessly, I’ve done a terrible thing.

Just thinking about it was giving him chills. All the way down his spine and right into his balls.

Why? Why did he want to see that look on her face so much? Why did he want to hear those words and then whatever came after? Why did it delight him so much to think of Leigh having to confess that she’d had more than just mussels in her mouth this afternoon?

But Leigh didn’t do any of that, not as she ate, and not when he offered to clear away the dishes.

Okay.

“So,” he said. “What’s in the bag?”

Leigh looked as though she had been struck by lightning for a moment. Her eyes went to the bag on the floor.

It was impossible for her to say “nothing.”

“That? Oh, that.” She was falling all over herself. “It’s just a... you know, I’ll probably take it back, just Billie’s so... you know how she is.”

Jeremy raised his eyebrows. He certainly did know how Billie was, but he’d rather make Leigh cough it up.

Leigh stared at him helplessly. “She’s so... pushy. Anyway. So, I think, yeah, I’ll definitely return it.”

She swallowed a large gulp of wine.

“Can I see it first?” Jeremy said. His curiosity was piqued.

Leigh looked terror-stricken again.

“I’m returning it,” she repeated.

Jeremy shrugged. “We won’t take the tags off.”

Leigh’s mouth fell open slightly. “Um... well, this is a pretty... strict store, about returns. I don’t want to... you know. Cause a problem.”

Now there was definitely no way she was getting through the night without showing him the dress.

“Let’s take our chances,” Jeremy suggested. “Come on. It could be fun.”

Leigh gave a slight shake of her head. "I don't..."

Jeremy started around the counter to grab the bag. Leigh jumped from her stool and grabbed it. "Jeremy, seriously. I don't, I have to return it."

She clutched the bag to her chest.

Jeremy leaned on the counter. "Leigh," he said. "What the hell?"

He could see that Leigh suddenly realized how ridiculous the whole scene was. IT looked almost like she was about to cry.

"I just don't want to try it on," she said.

Jeremy folded his arms. "O-kay... but can I see it?"

She was running out of plausible excuses. And now Jeremy was really intrigued. What could possibly be in the bag that she didn't want him to see? Lingerie? Something even more risque? What?

He could see her thinking, desperately, and then he saw the exact moment that she gave up. Her face fell, and she let out a sigh of exasperation. "Oh, all right," she said.

He reached for the bag.

Leigh was extending it toward him, when suddenly she seemed to get another idea. "I'll try it on," she said.

"Huh?"

"I changed my mind. I'll go get it on."

She didn't give him any time to think about this sudden change of events before turning on her heel and walking out of the room.

Jeremy was still leaning against the counter.

And then suddenly, he guessed that he might be being taken for a ride.

He waited for Leigh to turn down the hallway, and then he took several steps toward the hallway himself. Thinking better of it, he turned back into the kitchen and crept toward the sliding door, opening it slowly and then dropping to a crouch.

He crept along the side of the house as he followed the wrap-around porch. All the while, his back groaning mildly at him, he wondered what the hell he was doing. Sneaking around his own house like a burglar.

And what the hell was up with Leigh?

He reached the master bedroom. A sliding glass door let out onto the porch, and a high window let light into the closet.

He supposed he had already known what he was going to see when he peeked in there. He supposed that's why he was there.

Leigh was in the closet, pushing frantically through her clothing. Her lines of dresses, organized by color, many in dry-cleaning bags, looked like a rack in a store.

She finally found one, a checked one he had never seen before, and she pulled it frantically from the hanger. Then she stuffed it on a shelf and began to undress.

Jeremy dropped from his toes and looked out into his yard.

So this was it. Leigh, of all people, doing something sneaky behind his back. Their marriage had finally come to this.

He knew he should feel bad about it, but instead he was just turned on. Wildly turned on...

He pondered what to do.

Leigh was hiding something, that was for sure. Just... what was it? What could possibly be in the box inside the bag?

It was tempting to let it play out, to let Leigh continue her lies until she could stand it no more. Or to follow her around and discover her doing something truly illicit.

But curiosity got the better of him.

What was in the fucking box that she needed to hide so bad that she was pretending she just bought another dress?

Jeremy spun around, and with an assured step he hadn't had for a long time, he grasped the handles of the sliding door and threw all of his weight into it.

He was so sure it was going to open that he didn't balance himself, so it was a good thing that it did. The door flew open, thrown by more force than he realized he had given it. It bounced against the stop and slid back halfway closed – unusual for the door, which was still very sticky with lack of use.

Leigh hurried out of the closet, clutching her checked dress to her chest. It was halfway up her hips, and now Jeremy could see it was one she had bought a long time ago, before she lost weight. It was too loose on her.

Leigh's face went white, and her features were unable to pull themselves together into any kind of expression. "What?!" she shouted, with that tone that people use when they're truly shocked. "Jesus," she said. "Jeremy, what are you -"

Jeremy pushed the door open a few inches to squeeze into the room. He wasn't sure what was boiling under his skin – anger? Excitement? Jealousy?

But it was boiling.

“What are you doing?” he said.

His voice was calmer than he had expected it to be, but it was sharp as a knife.

Leigh's facade collapsed. Her shoulders slumped and she let her arms fall. The dress peeled away with them, and she was half-undressed, looking deflated. Her face fell. She shook her head.

“That's not the dress,” Jeremy said.

She shook her head again.

“Then what is? What did you buy?”

Leigh let the dress fall to the floor, and turned to the closet. Jeremy heard the opening of a box, the rustle of the bag. He took the moment to close and lock the sliding door.

She returned with a heap of black velvet in her hands. For a moment it looked like a dead animal.

He didn't understand.

“Put it on?” he said.

Leigh let the material tumble out, and then she sorted it with her hands before dropping it to the floor and stepping into it.

She pulled the velvet fabric up and over her skin, shimmying and twisting it into place until the soft black material rested snugly on the large crescent of her breast. As she did, Jeremy could feel recognition flickering in the back of his mind.

But it wasn't until she pulled the dress into its final position, and reached behind her to let her hair down, that Jeremy realized why it was familiar:

It was the dress from the cover of Julia's Big Boss.

Or one very much like it.

They stood in silence for a few moments. Leigh looked at the floor.

“I don't get why -” Jeremy began, intending to ask why she didn't want to show him the dress.

But Leigh cut him off with a bombshell:

A complete silence descended upon them, and Jeremy stared at her, his ears buzzing.

“What?” he said finally.

Oddly, the next thought in his head was: what the hell did this have to do with the dress?

Leigh looked up at him. “I went shopping with Billie, and she told me to try this on, because it looked like the one from the... the cover. And so I don’t know why I did it, I just did, and then she was like... I told her about me, and Craig, you know, because I felt guilty, and it turns out she’s, they’re, they do this... I guess they’re swingers -”

“Hold on,” Jeremy said, because Leigh was just babbling at this point. “What about this picture?”

Leigh took a deep breath. “I’m trying to explain. Billie and Craig are... they do things like this. So Billie didn’t even care about Craig doing that. She was like, ‘oh, just let me take a picture of you changing, and send it to Craig,’ and she said you’d think it was good, too, and... I don’t know!” She sounded very close to crying. “I don’t know why I did it.”

Jeremy turned Leigh’s half-incoherent speech over in his mind.

“So you sent him a picture of...” he said, trying to clarify.

Leigh shook her head. “Billie took the picture. Of my... of me taking the dress off.” Leigh looked back up at Jeremy. Her eyes were a little wet. “She did it like, like I didn’t know about it.”

Jeremy folded his arms over his chest.

The boil beneath his skin had identified itself: he was wild with excitement.

“And Billie thought I would like that, huh?” he said. He realized it was a little cruel to keep Leigh guessing about his reaction, but he couldn’t help that he liked how pale and fragile she looked at that moment. And guilty.

But then it was a little too much. Leigh looked devastated.

He stepped toward her. “Honey,” he said. “I told you about this. Right? I wasn’t kidding. I’m... I think it’s hot.”

In his mind, he was picturing Craig and Billie, looking at the picture together. He wondered if Billie told him the truth – that she had arranged for the picture to be taken? Or if she let him believe it was a secret shot?

And if she sucked his cock while he looked at it?

Leigh looked worried, but no longer devastated.

Jeremy wondered what was going through her mind when he stepped forward and pushed her hair from her face. She hardly ever wore it down; it changed everything about her. Leigh said nothing as he put his mouth close to hers.

He dropped his hand and found the hem of the dress. It came only to mid-thigh, and it was easy to slip his fingers underneath it and up the length of her smooth hip.

Leigh's pupils dilated, and he could feel; a quickness inside of her. Her pulse was faster, her breath trembling as it left her lips.

His fingers found the soft material of her panties, and he hooked his finger underneath them. His wife, whatever she was thinking, could not hide that she was already wet. His fingers confirmed it, touching a warm and slippery dampness that could not have happened just now.

No, Leigh had been turned on by whatever she was doing long before this conversation.

"Take your panties off," he said, stepping back from her a little.

Leigh's face registered some confusion, but she complied, sliding her hands up to slip off the panties. They landed on the floor with a soft plop, heavy with her treacherous wetness.

Jeremy shuddered.

"Go sit on the bed," he said. "On the edge."

His plan was to get her on the edge of the bed, much like she had been in her photo shoot. Leigh did as he asked, and whether deliberately or not, she gave him the same look that she had treated the audience of Julia's Big Boss to.

Hesitant and lurid.

Jeremy leaned over her, and she turned her face up to him. He gave her a long kiss, and then he lowered himself to the floor. One hand on the bed to support him, he used the other hand to wedge himself between her legs, which she was subconsciously leaning together.

His fingers slid over her pussy again, into her folds.

He got on his knees in front of her, and Leigh looked at him with mild alarm. She let him pull her legs apart. The tangy scent of her cunt assailed his nostrils, and his cock throbbed with excitement. He played with her clit with his thumb, admiring the glistening petals of her pussy, and the way she was welling up with juices at his touch.

He placed his hands on her thighs to hold her legs open, and dove in. As his tongue explored the gash of red flesh nestled in her downy red-black hair, he moved his fingers toward the center to slide his thumbs over the outer lips of her cunt. As he pulled them open, a wet, silky valley of flesh unfolded for his mouth.

His wife's juices filled his mouth, sweet and honey-scented. She was so wet his face was covered as he pressed forward, lapping at the hard knob of her clit, swirling down to her dark, sodden hole. He flicked his tongue inside of her, and then fucked her with his tongue for a moment while she squirmed. Then he worked his way back up to her clit, enclosing it in his mouth. He used the tip of his tongue to tease her, running it over the face of her enlarged button. He teased her, sucking on her clit and then making fat, wet waves on it with the blade of his tongue. Her thighs pressed against the sides of his face when he settled on a rhythm, undulating over the bundle of nerves that so drove her wild.

Leigh lay back on the bed, and Jeremy looked up to see her full breasts heaving as he brought her to orgasm. She panted and then finally began to cry out. When she came she arched her back and squeezed his head between her legs. Her pussy burst into a hot, wet mess of cum all over his chin and his mouth.

Her thighs relaxed, and she released him.

He wiped his mouth, savoring the taste of her on his lips as he rose up to unbuckle his belt and take his pants off. He slipped his shirt over his head.

Leigh watched him, her mouth open and her eyes glassy with satisfaction.

And amazingly, hunger.

She was still ready to go. Her legs were splayed open and her thighs were wet with her own cum.

"Pull your dress down," he said. "Show me what you sent to Craig."

Saying the other man's name, and Leigh's dirty misdeed, aloud, made his cock bounce in the air.

Leigh pulled on the velvet material to free her big, beautiful tits. Her nipples were hard in the center of them, like a melting chocolate. Good enough to eat.

Craig put his hand on his cock, staring at his wife.

“I bet Craig is jerking off to your picture right now,” he said. He started to stroke his own cock. A bead of precum formed at the tip and he paused to touch his fingertip to it.

Then he climbed onto the bed, pushing on Leigh to get her to scoot up until she was fully lying on it.

He touched her lips with the drop of cum.

Leigh let him place it on her mouth, staring at him.

He started to stroke his cock again.

“I bet he has his big cock in his hand right now,” Jeremy said. “And he’s looking at your tits and thinking about jerking his cum all over you. You like that?”

Leigh touched her mouth, where he had placed his drop of cum, and then she sucked on her finger. Her face had an expression like she was thinking about it. Did she like it?

Was she teasing him?

“You like thinking about Craig coming all over your tits?” he prompted. His own cock was ready to explode just thinking about his neighbor crouching over his wife like he was now, his thick cock in his hand, ropes of cum landing silently on Leigh’s bountiful breasts. White cream glistening on the peaks of her nipples.

Leigh looked at him, her eyes distant. She was imagining something, and it was making her wild.

He felt her hand rather than saw it as she slid it down between her legs. He could hear the sticky squelching of her soaked pussy as she played with her clit.

And then she said:

“Yes,” in a voice that barely sounded like her own. “Yeah. Yes. Come all over my tits. I want to feel your hot cum all over my tits...”

And Jeremy barely had time to dare to think of his name, to will her to say it, before she said:

“Craig.”

He watched, almost as if it wasn’t him in the scene, as thick strands of his own cum splashed all over Leigh’s creamy tits, over her jaw, and one splatter on her lower lip. He felt her body undulating beneath him, and heard the sound of her fingers working wildly in her pussy. Then her eyes seemed wide and blacker than usual, as her mouth dropped open.

Jeremy dropped his free hand to her lip and used his thumb to push his cum into her mouth as his wife let out a gasp and came for the second time.

This time, thinking about another man.

Leigh's orgasm seemed to take her breath away. If she was acting, it was the best acting Jeremy had ever seen. Her face was flushed and her mouth was open in a gasp that seemed to freeze in her muscles. He felt her legs tremble between his thighs.

Jeremy moved to her left side and slid down to lie next to her, his hand propping up his head. Absent-mindedly, he rubbed his cum into her skin, as Leigh's breath slowly returned to normal.

She was looking at the ceiling for a long time. Jeremy wondered what she was thinking about. It had been a long time since he had pondered the thoughts in his wife's head; they'd been married so long now. When they were going through so much tedium in their marriage – things that had nothing to do with love, or romance, or passion, and everything to do with bills and money and stress – he had lost the desire to always know what was inside her head. Not because he didn't care, but because he had begun to take her for granted, to take her love and her loyalty for granted.

Now, he found himself wondering what it was she was thinking about again. It was both a torturous exercise and a beautiful one, and he felt invigorated by the feeling of uncertainty.

Almost as though she heard his thoughts, Leigh shifted her eyes suddenly to him.

Then she quickly looked away.

Jeremy took her hand in his and brought it to his lips. "Something wrong?"

Leigh shifted her weight a little on the bed, and then turned to face the opposite wall, pushing herself back toward him to spoon. It was another thing they hadn't done in a long time. Jeremy enjoyed the sensation of her soft body along the length of his, the feel of her warm against him, his cock, still semi-hard, against the small of her back.

"Leigh?" he asked.

Leigh sighed a little. "I don't know. Was that... I don't know."

She paused for so long that Jeremy was about to say something, before she half-turned to him. "Was that too much?"

Jeremy had to smile a little. He kissed her hand again. Then her mouth. “Um... what do you think?” He grinned again, and moved his pelvis a little against her to remind her of how much he had been turned on by what they had just done. “I think you know I liked it.”

Leigh turned away again. “Really? Because... I don’t know. It feels so... weird.”

“Weird, how?” Jeremy asked. He sank his face into her hair, nuzzling her until he found her neck. “I thought you had a good time, too.”

Leigh made a motion like a shrug.

“Come on,” Jeremy said.

Leigh was silent.

He traced his fingertips over her shoulder. “It’s okay if it’s true,” he said. “Is that what you’re having a problem with? Because I told you: it really turns me on.”

Leigh didn’t move. Then he felt her body shift as she held her hands out to speak with them, even though he couldn’t see them. “But why?” she said.

Jeremy propped himself back up on his hand. He placed his mouth on her arm, peppering her with feather kisses. “Does it matter?”

Leigh took in a breath, like she was going to object, and then she exhaled and turned back to face him. “Doesn’t it?”

Jeremy was surprised. He had honestly been expecting: “What do you mean, ‘does it matter?!’” and was almost ready with a response.

Leigh seemed to be genuinely interested in the answer now.

He lifted her hand and played with her fingers. “I think,” he said solemnly, after considering his reply. “The only thing that matters is if we’re okay with what we’re doing. It seems like you are. And I am. And I like this... I don’t know. Different thing. It’s kind of like how traveling puts things in perspective, and you see what you like about home.”

Leigh looked up at the ceiling.

“I just always thought, you know...” She was having a very tough time with whatever she wanted to say. “I just never thought I’d... I’d... want to do anything like this.”

Jeremy’s eyes went wide. “Want to, huh?” he said.

Leigh blushed and looked down. “I don’t know.”

“Hey,” Jeremy said. “No, I didn’t mean it like I’m teasing you or something. I meant it like... well, you know what I meant. Like I said, I’d be into it. If you are.”

“And what if I am?” Leigh said. “How do we... you know?”

Jeremy finished the thought for her. “Get it going?” he said. He laughed and leaned down to kiss her. “Honestly, I don’t know.”

It was true Craig had told him at the barbecue, but he still didn’t feel exactly right about that kind of... straightforwardness. Not yet. Not for Leigh.

Leigh grinned bashfully and turned back to the wall. She pushed herself back against her husband. “I can’t believe we’re thinking about this.”

Jeremy kissed her shoulder again.

“I wouldn’t want to start something with our neighbors that gets out of control,” she added.

“No,” Jeremy said. “That’s true.”

“I think we’d better sleep on it,” Leigh said.

Jeremy knew better than to argue with Leigh as she started to retreat from an idea. She needed time to come around to it, look at it from more than one angle. But he also knew that she was coming the right way around. He just needed to be patient, and wait.

Little did he know, Leigh would be more impatient than he was.

6: A DIFFERENT KIND OF LEIGH

Leigh felt like she was discovering a new side of herself when she picked up her phone and called Billie the next day. She had classes to teach in the morning, and a lot of work to do grading and prepping, but she found herself asking Billie to meet her downtown for a coffee instead.

“I don’t drink coffee after twelve,” Billie complained, in her sultriest voice. “It keeps me awake all night. So let’s get a margarita.”

And Leigh found herself agreeing, not even putting up her usual show of a fight.

Even if she did calculate how many calories that would be.

They decided to meet near the downtown campus, in a side street of bars and cafes and no car traffic.

Leigh never went there: something about all the time scrimping and saving with Jeremy had left her reticent to spend money on coffee or lunch in the trendy area. Now, even though it was warm and sunny, and she was wearing a white sundress of her usual style (conservative), she felt a little twinge of guilt as she walked to El Toro, like she was doing something far more illicit than she was.

She found that she liked it.

Billie was already there, and a college-aged guy was already hitting on her. She was sitting at one of the wrought-iron patio tables, a short, sporty pink dress and sandals on, her chin in her hand and an amused smile on her face.

Walking toward her, Leigh couldn’t believe Billie’s audacity – flirting with a guy so much younger than her, kicking her feet around in little circles under the table.

She also felt jealous.

A little thrilled.

Billie didn’t care what she did, and she seemed to be having fun.

When Leigh reached the table, Billie looked over at her and collapsed on the table, stretching her arms out. “This guy is telling me the margaritas are no good here,” she moaned. “How do you feel about daiquiris?”

The “guy” looked over at Leigh, and she could almost feel him appraising her in relationship to Billie. She watched his face: would he know she was an adjunct instructor, in her thirties, or would he mistake her for a student, as he obviously had with Billie? And what kind of student?

He smiled at her. “You guys should come over here,” he said, hooking his thumb over his shoulder at the bar next door.

Leigh glanced over and saw a crowd of young guys – probably seniors in bachelor’s programs, for chrissake, who were looking in their direction. One of them waved.

Billie smiled at him. “We have to talk business,” she said. “Then we’ll come over.”

The two exchanged a very blatant look between them, Leigh felt a little flushed, and then the guy disappeared to go report on his moderate success with the hot chick at El Toro.

“I already ordered margaritas,” Billie said, watching him go. “I just thought I would throw him a bone.” She moved her eyes back to Leigh. “In case I want him to throw me a bone later.”

Leigh’s mouth fell open again, and she made a conscious effort not to let her jaw hang open all afternoon.

Billie laughed and leaned back in her chair, picking up her feet and bringing her knees close to her chest. Her skirt was short enough that she was giving the boys at the patio next door a nice view of her panties.

If she was wearing any.

Leigh kept her eyes up. She felt that same mix of admiration and scandal wash over her.

A waiter brought them their drinks, and Billie flirted with him as well.

After he left, she leaned over and placed the tip of her straw seductively in her mouth. It was a show for the boys on the patio, and she knew it, but she did it as if it were second nature. “So,” she said, and then sucked the tip of the straw. Her lips closed around it and she popped it from her mouth, tailing it with her tongue when it departed her lips. “Did you want to know if Craig saw your picture?”

That was why she was here. Leigh wouldn’t have been able to articulate to herself, but that was what she wanted to hear.

She blurted out: “I told Jeremy about it,” instead.

Billie adjusted herself in her chair, smiling, and scooted closer to her. “Well,” she said, “that is interesting. And?”

Leigh demurred.

Billie dipped her straw into her margarita again and tipped her head as she brought it to her mouth, curling her tongue out to lick the sweet drink from the shaft of the straw. There was no mistaking her intent, especially when she flashed the boys to their left a sultry look before she closed her mouth around it.

It was obscene, but she somehow did it without being overly obscene.

“I bet he liked it,” Billie declared, tucking the straw into the drink and taking a long draw of the margarita.

Leigh held her straw between her fingertips and delicately sucked on the end of the straw.

She knew they were watching her. Probably talking about how she was holding her straw, thinking about how she did it like such a priss...

“Well?” Billie said. She leaned back again. “I know Craig liked it,” she said.

Leigh looked up at her.

Leigh almost choked on her margarita. She hit herself on the chest with her hand, not that that ever helped, but more out of instinct.

Did she actually just say that?

Billie laughed out loud, more of little cackle, that ended with a sing-songy “eeeuh.”

She met Leigh’s eyes again. “He did like it didn’t he?”

Leigh waved her hand like she was still choking on her margarita.

“Question is,” Billie mused. “Did you?”

Leigh put her hands up to her face, cupping them over her mouth. She coughed a little.

“I don’t know,” she said.

Billie snorted. “What do you mean, you don’t know?”

Leigh shrugged.

“Did you have an orgasm, or not?”

Leigh nodded.

Billie smiled. “Then that’s all you need to know. I think you liked it.” She tapped her fingers on the table. “I told you everyone would like it.

So now...”

Leigh lifted her eyes and stared at Billie, who had an impish look on her face. “We need to think of a way to step it up a little. Right?”

Leigh shook her head. “I couldn’t,” she said into her cupped hands. Then she let them drop to the table. She stared at them as she smiled and blushed a little. “I mean... I don’t think I could, you know... do anything else.”

“Why not?”

Billie’s voice was matter-of-fact.

Leigh shrugged. “I don’t know. I told you... it just isn’t...”

Billie sighed. “You know, what you need to do is do something like an icebreaker.”

Leigh raised her eyebrows in confusion.

“Maybe this isn’t the word. Like, something not so big. Maybe you just need to go a little further, do something a little more.”

Leigh was silent for a moment.

Billie waited patiently, her eyes wandering over to her fan club of boys.

“Like?” Leigh said, giving in.

Billie’s eyes came back to meet hers, and she played with the straw in her margarita. “Like... maybe you let him just see them. Or put them in his mouth.”

She let Leigh squirm for a bit.

“Or,” she said, her eyes glinting. “I can tell you what he wants to do.”

Leigh sensed that she was at the edge of a decision that would change things forever, so in her conscious mind she wanted to take it very seriously. She felt her mouth and her eyes making expressions that reflective pensiveness, and guilt, and uncertainty.

Deep down inside, though, she knew that she was just play-acting. While she hesitated and said she really shouldn’t be talking about this, she knew she would eventually say:

“I guess you could just tell me.”

And that’s what she eventually did.

“Well,” Billie said, leaning forward, her fingers still playing with her margarita straw in a way that was driving the boys in the adjacent patio wild. “What if you just let him put his cock in your tits?”

Leigh took this in.

She had never actually let a guy do anything like that, even though she had imagined it a few times. When Billie's words went through her mind, she pictured it so vividly she could almost feel it. Her nipples got hard imagining the hot strength of Craig's cock rubbing between them. She pictured him looking down at her, that expression on his face, the one all men have just before they come: a look of complete absorption and obsession.

And Jeremy watching.

Leigh gave a little laugh and put her hand to her lips. "Oh God. No, this is crazy. I couldn't."

Billie leaned back in her chair. "Why not? Jeremy could watch."

Leigh gave her the side-eye and shook her head into her hand.

But really, she was thinking about it.

"It's a good way to do something without really doing anything," Billy said, tapping her straw on the edge of her margarita and bringing another lump of cold, icy liquid to her lips. "And you know how wild it drove Jeremy just thinking about you sending your picture to another man?"

Leigh shook her head again. "This is what I don't get."

Billie's eyes went wide. "What? What's there to get? That men like watching women have sex?"

Leigh dropped her hand and twisted back to face Billie. She twisted her hands under the table. "Not that, just... I don't really understand how that's appealing. Me cheating on him."

Billie shrugged. "It's dangerous," she said. Then she looked plainly at Leigh, as if to say: what's there to understand?

Leigh frowned. "How long have you two been doing this?"

"Long enough," Billie said. "It's really been good for our relationship."

Leigh brought a hand to her mouth and chewed lightly on her thumbnail.

Billie didn't say anything else. She turned to the boys who were watching her, transfixed, and grinned at them.

She turned back to Leigh, intending to tell her to think about it, but she was going to join her new friends. Leigh surprised her by dropping her hand and leaning closer to Billie on the table.

"So what would I... how do I make this work?"

Billie gave the boys a disappointed smile. Too bad.
“Okay,” she said enthusiastically to Leigh. “Let’s just make a plan.”

Jeremy got a text from Leigh on Friday that read, simply:

[Leigh]: I have a surprise for you. Don't be late

By then, they were three days out from their conversation in the aftermath of the breasts picture, and while Jeremy thought about it constantly, Leigh hadn’t said anything further about it. They’d had hot sex every night, though, so he wasn’t complaining. But they never had an explicit conversation about it again.

Leigh seemed to be acting a little strange. She had a light smile on her lips. She had come home pretty lit after teaching on Wednesday, saying she had run into Billie downtown. But she didn’t divulge any secrets: she just smiled her secretive smile and left Jeremy to wonder what she was thinking about.

So when he got the text, he was thrilled, and shocked. What kind of surprise was Leigh planning?

After getting worked up about the possibility of it being another illicit picture, or maybe even something more, Jeremy stomped all over his own desires and decided that in all likelihood it was just a special dinner or something. He didn’t want to get his hopes up too high. In any event, if they just had some more exciting, passionate sex like they’d been having, he could live with that.

He typed back:

Okay. I'll try to be there on time

Fridays were terrible for escaping the city, so he had to hustle to try and leave by four if he wanted to make it home anywhere near six. His hard work didn’t help: the expressway was crammed full of city-dwellers headed for cottage destinations and an escape into the sprawling suburbscene that people took for “the country” these days.

When he pulled up to the house, nothing looked unusual. He had called Leigh halfway on his way home and left a message apologizing about the traffic. She never called back, which was strange for her, but no matter.

Jeremy alternated between wild fantasies and putting a damper on them all the way home. By the time he was in the garage, turning the doorknob to the house, he had settled on being thrilled with whatever dinner she had made him and hopefully some wine.

No one was in the kitchen. The lights were out, and it didn't smell like food.

"Leigh?" he called out.

It was then that he heard her footsteps. She hurried into the kitchen. The first thing that he noticed was that she looked a little flustered. "Oh, I'm so glad you're here before..." her voice trailed off.

"I'm sorry," Jeremy began, meaning to talk about the traffic. But he cut himself off when he saw what Leigh was wearing. "Oh," he said. "So this is the surprise."

Leigh was in the black velvet dress, and she had gone all-out to fix her hair and put on make-up. She looked a lot like she had in the photo from the erotica cover.

"I love it," Jeremy said. He wasn't 100% sure what he was saying he loved, because there was a strange energy surrounding Leigh. She was nervous, even if she wasn't showing it in any specific way.

She tucked a strand of hair behind her ear. She seemed to not know where to put her hands, or where to look.

Jeremy was uncertain of what to do.

"Wine," Leigh said. "I have some chilling. I wanted white so I don't get a headache. Here."

Her words were running together in a rush. She opened the cupboard that stored the glasses and then left it open to open the refrigerator.

"What's up with you?" Jeremy said, stepping in to get the wine glasses before she smashed them to bits with her nervous energy.

"Uh... I just... well, I need to tell you about the rest of -"

The doorbell rang.

"The surprise."

Leigh's voice was like a dagger through Jeremy's heart. A good-feeling one, and an ominous one.

She set down the wine. “Open that, and... I guess...” she waved her hands and headed to the front door. “Three glasses,” she called out, halfway to the door.

Then she came back in, in a rush. “I’ve only agreed to one thing. And it’s not sex.”

She looked at him, as though she honestly expected him to react that quickly to what she said. So he nodded, still trying to get his head around what was happening.

Jeremy stood with two wine glasses in his hands, his mouth open, his brow furrowed.

He heard the sound of the door.

And then a deep and masculine voice.

Abandoning the wine glasses, he walked out to the hallway and then stopped again, unsure of what he was seeing.

There, in the entryway, stood Craig.

The surprise.

They had a glass of wine in the living room, but there was a lot of tension in the air. Leigh set her glass down, half-finished, and declared. “Okay. I kind of just want to... jump in. Before I lose my nerve.”

She sat down on the edge of the couch. The very edge, as though she didn’t want to commit to being there. She looked over at Jeremy nervously, and he offered her a look of what he hoped she recognized as encouragement.

Slowly, Leigh unrolled the velvet black dress from the swell of her breasts. She watched her hand on the fabric, a little flushed. The solid, creamy curve of her skin seemed to go on forever before the fabric rolled over the caramel pool of her areola, her long brown nipples erect in the center.

All the way down, until the shape of her breasts was framed only by the black dress on her torso.

Jeremy sucked in his breath. Her tits really were glorious, and now that someone else was watching them, with the intention of touching them...

Craig stared at Leigh for a moment, until she lifted her eyes to meet his gaze. She still seemed uncertain, and Jeremy wondered if she wanted to back out of the deal. But as they had discussed, she had only to say the word, and everything would come to a halt. Her lips were parted but they did not move to stop what was happening.

A look of fear – perhaps better stated, of losing control – briefly flashed over Leigh's face when Craig put his hand to his belt and began to slide the leather strap through the metal buckle.

Jeremy's cock went rock solid.

Leigh kept her eyes on Craig's face, though, and the expression of fear melted back into uncertainty.

“Lie down, there,” Craig told her, one hand motioning toward the divan, while he continued to thread the belt out of its buckle.

Jeremy heard the metal rip of Craig's zipper opening, and as she obediently reclined for him, his wife's eyes dropped to his crotch, where the bulge of his cock was straining to get out. When she lay down, her open legs were facing Jeremy, so he could see under her skirt: the length of her thigh, the material of her panties, the swell of her ass.

I only agreed to one thing. No sex.

Leigh seemed to be resolute in how far she would go: her panties were ordinary, and she seemed to have chosen them specifically for the purpose of not going too far.

Perhaps to control herself?

Jeremy's thoughts wandered away from his wife's thoughts as Craig climbed onto her, shifting his weight from side to side as he moved up the length of her body on his knees.

Would Craig really hold up his end of the deal, going only as far as they had agreed?

And did anyone care if he didn't?

Jeremy moved over to the armchair by the window when Craig was finally straddling Leigh. He could no longer see what he wanted to see: the contact between Craig's cock and his wife's fleshy tits.

But when he sat down on the other side of the room, the view was perfect. Leigh turned her head slightly and met his eyes, and he nodded a little in answer to what seemed to him to be another request for encouragement. Everything seemed to be moving in slow motion.

Craig's cock sprung loose from his underwear as he slid his jeans down to mid-thigh along with his boxers. Leigh turned her face back abruptly and stared at Craig's dick. It was a long, thick column of pink, ribbons of vein straining against the meat. The crown of it was a fat rounded bulb, leaning slightly to the right. Craig held it suspended with his hand, over Leigh's bare chest, and slowly lowered his body closer to her, the veined member getting closer and closer to her skin.

Leigh stared at Craig's cock as it moved closer to her. Jeremy saw her suck in her breath as the fat meat hovered just half an inch from her skin. Her big breasts were splayed open, and the valley between them was wide for Craig's cock. He slid his hand along the shaft and down to the crown, dropping the slab onto her tits with a heavy splat.

Jeremy shuddered.

Leigh looked back at Jeremy, seeking his approval, which he gave.

She turned her attention back to Craig when he said, in a low voice: "Press your tits together now."

The sheer vulgarity of it must have coursed through Leigh, who didn't move for a moment.

"Be a good girl, press them together and let me feel those titties."

Jeremy had a moment of raging disappointment, because he felt sure that Craig was speaking to Leigh far too crassly and she would decide to back out. He didn't talk dirty to Leigh like that, mostly because he felt she'd toss him out of bed.

But to his surprise, his wife complied. She brought her hands to her breasts, and pushed them together until they swallowed up Craig's cock in the burrito of her pillowy tits.

Jeremy's breath ceased to move in his lungs, and he didn't know for how long. It seemed like a long time, the scene before him frozen: his wife's breasts squeezed around Craig's thick, veined cock. Leigh's nipples were hard and swollen, and her face expressed as much disbelief as he felt.

Was she actually doing this?

Craig had lowered himself so that his balls were against Leigh's chest, and Jeremy wondered if she could feel them there, under her breasts, sticking to her skin. Or did she only feel the length of his shaft, hot and hard, between her tits?

Craig began slowly. He rocked his hips back and forth. The length of his cock slid close to Leigh's neck, the fat crown grazing the underside of her chin. Slowly he pulled back, and as he did, Leigh's skin stuck to his cock and her breasts went with him.

He repeated this action several times, slowly, and Jeremy's cock throbbed almost painfully. Leigh looked at Craig, and her face revealed that she didn't know where to put her eyes, or what else to do.

Craig stopped for a moment. He lowered his hands and pulled on Leigh's fingers to release her breasts. Then he reached down and touched the tip of his cock, where a bead of pearly precum was forming.

Jeremy sucked in his breath as Craig's fingers lingered in the air. Jeremy hoped he would let his finger's drop to Leigh's mouth, and rub the slippery cum over her lip. He wondered how his wife would react: she was so transfixed by what was happening, she would probably just let him do it, unable to stop him.

Craig drew the precum down the length of his cock instead.

Leigh's breath became faster, and her chest lifted and dropped Craig's cock in quick breaths. Craig let a glob of spit fall from his mouth and onto his cock, and then he used a hand to spread it over the length of his shaft. Then he dropped another, and another, right into the valley of Leigh's breasts.

Jeremy felt sick now from the combination of terrible pain and arousal that racked through his lower body, watching another man dribble spit onto his wife's tits.

"Push them together again," Craig growled, and Leigh hesitated only a moment, her face slightly confused, before she obeyed. The wrap of her flesh closed around Craig's cock again.

Lubricated now, Craig's cock slid in the enclosure of her flesh. He started to move in rhythmic, faster thrusts, his pink cock sliding back and forth, the crown of his dick grazing and sometimes punching the underside of his wife's chin.

He increased his pace, and started to thrust further. The tip of his cock began to slide up and over Leigh's chin, and close to her lower lip.

Jeremy felt like his balls were being squeezed in a vice. A sound came from him, or maybe he only imagined it. No one paid him any mind, and Leigh kept staring above her, her eyes a little glassy. It was as though she was hypnotized.

Craig's voice came to him through a fog. It was lower and less commanding as he told Leigh: "That's it, Leigh, you're doing so good."

Jeremy had to lean over himself in pain and ecstasy.

"Squeeze for me," Craig said.

His cock was grazing Leigh's lower lip with each thrust now. The spit between her breasts was squeaking a little as it began to dry, and Craig kept going. Jeremy could see that his cock was getting fatter, wetter at the tip. His precum was smearing on his wife's lower lip, Jeremy realized with another pang in his gut, one so hard it sent a metallic taste into his mouth.

And then, in slow motion, he saw Leigh's lip quiver, and then her mouth opened.

Just a little.

Her jaw dropped open slightly, and Craig moved up a little at the same time. Leigh was pushing her breasts upward toward her face as much as she could, clearly to keep up the illusion that Craig was "only fucking her tits."

But Craig's cock was now against her throat and her lips far more than between her breasts. The top part of it was sliding over her mouth – the lower lip, the open hole, the upper lip.

For a moment it was only that: Leigh with her mouth open, and Craig's cock rubbing over her lips.

Then Jeremy saw her tongue, emerging from her wet mouth, pink and glistening with her spit. She pressed it up against the column of meat that was sliding over her mouth.

Craig slid backward a little after making several passes over her mouth.

Leigh seemed to snap out of it when Craig took his cock in his hand and started to rub the crown over her lips. Her eyes went wide and she made a sound like a gasp.

She turned her head toward Jeremy, her eyes frantic. Jeremy was staring, open-mouthed, but he managed to nod his head a little. Do it, he willed her.

Craig's cock slid over Leigh's cheek, and then he moved his hand down to her chin and pulled her face back to look at him. He had his cock between his fingers, and he tapped the crown lightly on her lips.

"I'm not... supposed to..." Leigh murmured.

She started to turn back to Jeremy.

Craig stopped her. At the same time, Jeremy said, "it's okay, honey." And Craig quickly followed:

"Just get it a little wet. Then I can slide it easier."

Leigh's mouth was open, and she was breathing fast, but her eyes were wide with fear and she looked as though she might scramble away any second.

Jeremy found himself willing the bull with his cock so near his wife's mouth to control her, to settle her down, to say or do the right thing to get Leigh to open up for him.

Craig leaned down, putting his hand on the wall on the other side of the couch. He used his free hand to slide a strand of hair from Leigh's cheek, while the weight of his cock pressed onto her lower lip. "You're doing so good, Leigh. Just have a little taste. Jeremy wants you to do it. Let him see it."

Jeremy wasn't breathing. The air was ringing in his ears.

Craig took his cock in his hand again, and guided it to Leigh's mouth.

And then, there it was: the pink of her tongue, sliding out of her mouth and licked the crown of Craig's cock.

Craig let her do this for a moment. Then, moving with admirable stealth, he slowly began to shift his position from Leigh's abdomen, up to just above her breasts. He pressed both hands against the wall, and began to move his cock along her face, letting her drag her tongue up and down the length of his shaft.

And then he slid his balls onto her mouth.

"Open your mouth," he told Leigh.

Jeremy stared as his wife opened up, and the hairy ball sacks disappeared into her mouth. Craig's cock twitched on her face as he enjoyed dipping his balls into Jeremy's wife's mouth.

Then he moved back down, sliding his body a little, and placing a hand behind Leigh's head in one smooth motion.

He started to fuck her tits again, and this time his cock crackled with the sound of her spit. He went faster and faster, and Jeremy found himself anticipating the spurt of cum that would land all over Leigh's face. Any second now...

To his surprise, though, Craig tilted Leigh's head in almost unnoticeable increments, until her mouth was lined up with his bobbing crown.

And then Leigh – without any prompting from anyone – opened her mouth.

First the crown went in, and Leigh sucked on it. It slid out of her lips with a pop. Then back in, then back out.

With each thrust, Craig dipped his cock even further into Leigh's mouth, until, after a few minutes of sticky, slippery pops went by, he had half of his shaft in her mouth.

And he was fucking her mouth.

Jeremy was paralyzed.

Craig fucked Leigh's mouth, going deeper until Jeremy could hear her start to gag. He didn't go any further, but he kept moving in and out.

"That's good Leigh, you're doing a very good job," he said, and Leigh looked up at him, her eyes a little watery.

With a groan, Craig came, and his cum welled up in Leigh's mouth. He was partway out and so a lot of his cum landed on her chin and her cheek, and Leigh left her mouth open, the cum dribbling from her lips.

Craig put a hand on her lower lip and forced her mouth open. He looked at his own cum inside of Leigh's mouth, admiring, no doubt in Jeremy's mind, the filthy seed inside of her pristine hole, dribbling down her lips.

Leigh brought her hand to her mouth and wiped much of it away, but Craig pushed her mouth closed afterward and she had no choice but to swallow his seed.

He shook a few last spurts of cum from his cock, still kneeling over her face.

"That was very hot, Leigh," he said.

He leaned back, and dropped his hand behind him, between her legs. "Maybe you want a reward for being so good," he purred.

But Leigh closed her knees and shook her head on the pillow. "I... I can't..." she said, flustered. She turned to Jeremy. "I..."

But Craig was already climbing off of her. "Maybe some other time," he said. "Or maybe Jeremy has something for you."

He kind of laughed, and collapsed in another chair.

Jeremy was already standing up by then, moving closer to the couch to take Craig's place. He barely noticed where the other man went: his focus was on his wife, sprawled on the couch, hair spread on the pillow, lips parted slightly and glistening with Craig's cum.

Leigh's knees were still up, and she pressed them together still, rocking her legs back and forth as though she was unsure of what to do. Jeremy put his hand on her knees and slid between them. Leigh's legs fell apart and she slid her ankles down to the other end of the couch.

The dress was still bunched up beneath her tits, which were also wet with spit and cum. She watched Jeremy as he stood over her, unable to decide what he wanted to do.

His cock was painfully pressed against the zipper of his pants, so he started there. He released his dick and let his pants fall down to his ankles, along with his underwear, which he had to scoot along with his fingers. He was almost clumsy as he did it, so off-balance had the experience made him.

By then, he had decided what he wanted to do with Leigh, so he climbed onto the couch near her calves, and pushed the dress up to her hips.

He found her panties and pulled them to her knees. Unable to wait to find what he wanted to, he slid his hand up, along her thigh, seeking her pussy.

He watched Leigh's face, and he found he was pleased when a look of alarm came over her again. She squeezed her thighs together as he got closer to her pussy, and he could tell that the reaction was a sort of unconscious one. He knew what it meant, even before he pressed on and his fingers found her cunt.

He was unsurprised that she was wet. The feathery hair of on the outer lips of her cunt was slick with her juices. She looked down for a moment as he slid his fingers into her.

Jeremy felt another thrill, enjoying, to his surprise, her shame.

She was so wet it was easy to slide two, then three fingers inside of her. He finger-fucked her for a while. He rubbed his thumb over her clit and she gasped.

Unable to take any more, he rose up and guided his cock to her pussy. With his other hand, he took her leg with him, pushing it up, close to her head. Her other leg was still lying along the length of the couch, squeezed against the back of it by his body.

This changed the shape of her pussy, squeezing his cock from the left as he slid into her. Enough for it to feel foreign. She was so wet he could hardly get any friction.

But he didn't need it: all he had to do was remember her lips on Craig's cock, the little gag she made as he pressed further into her throat...

He tried to think of something else, to make it last longer, long enough for Leigh to come. Luckily for him, his wife did not need much help either – and his last thought before coming was about whether or not it was for the same exact reason as him.

Maybe all Leigh had to do to make her pussy clench around her husband's cock was to think about the feel of Craig's balls stuffing her mouth.

"Fuck!" Jeremy yelled, just as Leigh began to mewl and her pussy went tight around his dick.

His cum exploded deep inside of her as he thrust violently to her cervix.

Jeremy slammed his cock inside of Leigh until he felt the last throes of his orgasm shudder out of him. He collapsed on top of her, and only when he heard a slight commotion behind him did he remember that Craig was still there.

He turned and looked over at his neighbor, but Craig seemed to have been in this situation many times before, and knew how to avoid it becoming awkward. He already had his clothes gathered in his hand, and he was standing up. He lifted the hand with the clothes in it in a kind of goodbye wave, and smiled, pressing on a button on his phone.

"I'll just let myself out," he said amiably.

And then he was gone.

Leigh brought her hand to her face and covered it, but she let out a laugh and her pussy squeezed Jeremy's dick again. "Oh my God," she said.

Jeremy pushed her hand away to kiss her on the mouth. "Oh my God," he said. He could taste – or he thought he could taste – the salty precum that Craig had deposited on her lips.

"I can't believe that just happened," Leigh said. She searched his eyes with hers. "I didn't mean for that to happen," she said. "I... are you okay with that?"

An image of Craig's balls in his wife's mouth flashed through his head. His cock involuntarily twitched inside of her.

He grinned. "That should answer your question," he said, with a grin.

They looked into each other's eyes for a moment. Jeremy could feel his cock getting hard again inside of his wife's pussy. He started to slowly fuck her, and Leigh opened her mouth, letting out a gasp. Jeremy could only think of the way that Craig's cum had dribbled into her mouth, and how much he wanted to see his cock inside of her.

“Did you like swallowing another man’s cum?” he said.

Leigh closed her eyes. She ground her hips against him, and he felt a pulse of pleasure through her pussy.

“Say it,” he said. “Say it for me, you dirty little slut.”

“Oh,” Leigh said, and she pushed up against him.

Jeremy had to force himself to slow down to tease her. Leigh’s body was hungry and she wanted to come again, and he knew it was from thinking about what a slut she had just been, about sucking on another man’s cock right in front of her husband. Maybe she enjoyed getting her throat filled up with cum. Maybe she was a dirty little slut deep down inside.

Concentrate, Jeremy urged himself, He thrust deep inside of her and gripped her by the ass, refusing to move.

Leigh’s eyes fluttered open. She tried to grind against him but she was pinned in place. He felt her pussy clenching his cock, trying to ride the crest of her orgasm, unable to get there. “Please,” she whispered.

“Say it,” Jeremy said, smiling.

Leigh stared at him, tried to move some more, then closed her eyes. “I liked swallowing Craig’s cum,” she said. She opened her eyes again. “I liked sucking on his cock, too.”

It was the filthiest thing he ever could have imagined Leigh saying.

He released his grip on her hair, which he hadn’t even been aware he was doing, and then he fucked his cum into her hard.

7: AFTERWARD

Leigh set the brown bag of groceries down on the counter and waited for the crumpling sound to die down, almost holding her breath in the silence.

She heard the clock, and the hum of the air conditioner.

The house was otherwise silent.

A pang of guilt for hoping for such a thing traveled through her.

But the truth was plain as day: she was happy Jeremy wasn't home.

Another little ripple of guilt bit its way down her spine as she left the groceries and walked, almost trance-like, to the hallway. Up the small flight of steps and into the master bedroom.

She closed the door, and paused with her hand on the handle.

Should she lock it?

She felt strange, standing there, wondering such a thing. It was a hot day; she had forgotten to close the curtains and the room had grown a little stuffy in the sunlight. It was bright, sunny, so normal. And here she was, wondering whether or not to lock the door in case her husband came home.

She opted not to. It would only look more suspicious if it were.

She looked around the room, and finally settled on going into the bathroom and taking a shower. After all, Jeremy could come home any moment, and if he did, what would she tell him?

She ruminated on this for only a moment, arriving at only half of a plan.

But she was sidetracked from her explanations, her guilt, her.. plan... by the very thing that had made her do something like this each day. The very thing that had made her rush home early on Monday, forget half of her groceries today.

She turned on the water and slipped out of her clothes.

While she stared into the shower, watching it steam up, slipping her underwear down to the floor, her eyes became fixated on the shower-head.

The pulse massage function.

She already ached between her legs. It had been like this for a week now.

What she had done with Craig had been very, very bad. Very crazy. She didn't want to do it again – she shouldn't have even agreed to it to begin with. And she knew that they needed to stop this in its tracks. She didn't want to go down some path of “open relationships” and debauchery.

That didn't change the fact that all she had to do was think about Craig's cock, hard, hot, slightly damp between her breasts, or the feel of him in her mouth as his crown slid over her soft palate and into her throat – all while her husband watched her. It didn't change the fact that thinking about Craig's voice, telling her that she was doing a good job, made her panties wet and her pussy ache in a way that she had to – she had to – do something about.

There were other things she didn't even like admitting to herself, and she pushed them out of her mind to climb into the shower. She didn't like thinking about how her heart raced when she thought about Craig. She didn't like thinking about the very naughty feeling that fueled her pulse like a drug when she thought about doing bad, slutty things in front of her husband.

She held the shower head in her hand while she slid her fingers into the soaked folds of her pussy with the other. She jumped a little as her fingers moved over her clit.

She'd never been this... what was the word for it, even? Aroused? Horny? Oversexed? Obsessed?... before in her life. She couldn't stop thinking about the scene that had played out in her living room.

She knew that Craig had filmed it.

The thought – the dirty little secret she was keeping to herself – rose up in her mind and sent a wave of perverse pleasure through her.

She had looked over for just a moment and seen him there, through Jeremy's arm and her own heaving breasts. The glimmer of his phone, held away from him. Filming.

When she had seen it, it had pushed her over the edge.

What had he filmed, she wondered?

She turned the shower head on pulse. The water pumped against her skin in hard, fast pulses. Pulses that would feel so good against her clit.

She moved the shower-head down her body, and used her other hand to spread her pussy lips open. When the hot, pulsing water struck her clit on the hard ridge, she gasped.

But it would feel better in the center.

She drew the hood of her clit up with one finger and twisted the shower-head until the pulses of water were landing squarely on the face of her clit.

She doubled over, letting out a loud gasp and leaning forward to push on the wall. She moved the shower head.

It was too much.

She was shaking as she tried it again. The waves of pleasure that rolled over her were so intense she thought she couldn't go on, but she pushed herself to do it. Very quickly, she felt an orgasm rise up and shatter through her.

She twisted the shower-head and sprayed the regular spray over her body.

It was dissatisfying, as nice as it had been. She had barely had time to think of what she wanted to think of.

That's good Leigh, you're doing a very good job.

She slid down the wall of the shower and spread her legs open. Just the way she'd love to spread her legs for Craig.

Or maybe he wouldn't want that. Craig seemed like the kind of man who liked to take a woman from behind, so he could grab her and really pound himself into her.

She imagined Jeremy watching, watching her spread her legs or bend over, all so he could watch her, all so she could be a naughty slut for him.

She guided the shower head to her sensitive clit and closed her eyes, imagining Craig pushing her to her knees, holding his cock in hand, inviting her to suck it. She could almost feel his dick in her mouth, almost too fat, far too long to ever get it all the way in.

The pulses of the shower struck against her clit and made her legs jerk with each spurt. It was so overwhelming it almost didn't even feel good, which was fine, just what she wanted, giving her more time to think about Craig making her serve him. While Jeremy watched.

It wasn't long before the pleasure began to build, and she ached for a while as the water battered her clit. She pictured herself being used all night by Craig, filled in every hole, bent over and spread open, pushed onto his cock with his fingers on the back of her head. Breathless and sore, unable to take any more.

She opened her eyes and stared down at her clit as the water splashed against it. “Ohhhh,” she whined. She threw her head back against the shower and squeezed her eyes. “Oh, Craig, oh, stop, I can’t take any more!” she said, so caught up in her fantasy that she could almost feel him between her legs.

She was so caught up that she didn’t notice at all that her husband had come home five minutes ago, and was watching from the doorway.

Jeremy had a sense of what he was going to see before he saw it.

Since the night with Craig, his wife had seemed different somehow, even if everyone – Craig, Billie, Leigh, and himself – was playing it cool, like nothing happened. There was something different about Leigh.

She was lost in her own thoughts much more than ever before. Leigh was the kind of woman who was incredibly present most of the time. It was something Jeremy loved about her, even if he didn’t really know how to articulate to himself what that aspect of her personality was. A lot of women seemed to be out of the room, their mind somewhere else. This was never the case with Leigh, whose eyes always seemed keenly bright, her face always had an expression like she was listening. In a way, she was always “on.”

Since the night with Craig, though, this had changed very noticeably. Leigh often had a vacant look in her eyes. It wasn’t so much that she wasn’t able to carry on a conversation, or missed anything that he said. No, it was just her response time, a little delayed. Her eyes, a little far away.

And he had noticed other things as well – small little details about her daily routine. Tiny details, really. Some things were so small he wasn’t sure if they were different than before or if he just hadn’t noticed them. On Tuesday she had been standing in front of the mirror, appraising her appearance by turning from side to side, appraising her waist and, he could see by where her eyes were directed, her cleavage.

It was very unlike Leigh to do that. He couldn’t even remember the last time she had done it. She did it absent-mindedly, like it wasn’t even part of her conscious thought. And then she had sauntered out of the room, some kind of sexy tilt to her step.

Maybe he was imagining things.

Another day during the week, she had spritzed a sexy scent on her chest. Just a light mist of a perfume he had bought her in New York on a business trip. One she rarely wore, because she rarely wore perfume. The droplets had atomized and landed all over her chest, almost as if she had wanted that particular part of her body to smell especially good.

Maybe he had not been as observant of his wife all this time. This was another distinct possibility. They had been married quite a while. He was so used to her presence, the normalness of it, the uneventfulness of it, that even though he loved her, he didn't pay as much attention to her as he did now.

Now, everything about her came into sharp relief. Every time she spritzed perfume or tied up her hair, slipped on a pair of panties or looked at herself in the mirror, checking out how her butt looked in a skirt, he paid a great deal of attention to it.

She had come home early a couple of days. Usually she ended up staying late at the school, working on her lesson plans and the work she was doing for her online degree.

He didn't know what to think of her coming home early. Wasn't a man supposed to worry if his wife came home late? But there was something about the way she looked when he came home: flushed, a little out of sorts. Unable to explain why she was there with any real conviction. One night she had claimed that she preferred to do her research reading at home, which directly contradicted everything he'd ever heard her say about research or reading. Another night she'd claimed to not feel well, which was probably as close to the truth as things got, but it wasn't like Leigh to abandon work she needed to do over a cold that obviously wasn't that bad. What's more, she had seemed healthy all night and had never mentioned feeling unwell again.

Jeremy had been pondering all of this, as well as the proximity to their neighbor's house. It couldn't be that Leigh – who didn't even seem that sure about what they had done on Saturday night – was now having an affair with Craig, could it?

It was absurd, of course. His wife of eight years was not going to drop everything they had to go over and have a wild affair with Craig in the middle of the week just because she had liked the way his cock felt in her mouth one Saturday. After doing something she hadn't really been that gung-ho about anyway.

Was she?

The jealous burn that crawled through him when he thought about it was painful and delightful at the same time. He didn't want to ask Leigh about something so ridiculous, and risk her getting annoyed with him. But he also didn't want to say anything because he was enjoying the feeling too much; if she told him yes, or she told him no, the feeling would change into something else. Something less pleasurable, less fun.

So he decided to play a sort of game instead. That's how he found her in the bathroom on Friday afternoon, legs spread, shower-head pointed at her throbbing, swollen clit, her eyes shut and her head leaning back against the tile while she moaned:

"Oh Craig, oh stop, I can't take any more."

Jeremy froze for only a moment, staring at the scene in utter disbelief.

Then he stepped to the right, and behind the wall. When the image disappeared from his eyes his brain slammed back into thinking mode. A cold weight went heavy in his chest, pressing on his heart.

He backed out of the room, and walked, trance-like, down the hallway and out to the garage. He thought about turning the car on, backing out quietly and taking a drive around the block, but in the end he just sat there for a few minutes.

He hated to admit that he felt a little betrayed. He knew it wasn't fair for him to feel like that – after all, whatever was in Leigh's mind was her own business. And as far as what she had actually done? He was the one who had pressured her into doing it. It had been his idea, his fantasy.

Was it her fault now if she was fantasizing about Craig?

But this wasn't what he had wanted.

Not really.

Or was it?

He couldn't tell. His cock was hard, his chest hurt like he was getting punched, he felt cold all over and yet he also felt about as turned on as he ever had.

His mind went back to the image of his wife masturbating on the shower floor. Fuck. It was hot as hell, no matter what it was she was thinking about.

He pulled the key from the ignition, and marched into his house.

Leigh was stepping out of the shower when he reached the Master Bedroom. Leigh let out a little shout, a lot like the one she had given when he had caught her changing up her dress, what seemed like ages ago.

Jeremy watched the surprise and the guilt wash over her face. He enjoyed it, whether that was something to be proud of or not. He enjoyed the way Leigh wrestled with her feelings, the way they pulled her in two directions.

But enough of that. He was growing tired of waiting for her to make up her mind.

“You’re home early,” Leigh said, stepping toward him. She seemed to be recovering her composure.

“Actually,” Jeremy said, “I was home a little earlier than this.”

Leigh’s face went pale and she looked at him sharply.

He moved to the bed and sat down on it, close enough to reach out and pull Leigh to him by the backs of her knees. She went to him, a little reluctantly.

He pulled her closer, and then tugged on the edge of the towel to open it up and then pull it completely apart. The wine-colored fabric split open and hung for a second on her full breasts before sliding off of them, down her body, and to the floor. Droplets of water still clung to her navel, the insides of her thighs, and the downy hair between her legs.

He was starting to realize, as he did this, that what Leigh really wanted was direction. As much as she might have professed to be a feminist in the company of others, deep down inside she really wasn’t.

She wanted to explore outside of their marriage as much as he did, but she didn’t want to be the one to take the lead. He could see that now. It was clear as day, and she had never really hidden it. This was Leigh of conservative dresses and pony-tails, Leigh who loved putting on an act of being innocent, but really liked getting down and dirty.

She just didn’t want to be the one to take the lead.

Jeremy placed his hand on her hip, and pushed his thumb into the light bush between her thighs. His fingertip pushed through silky hair until it plunged into the silken, hot jelly between her lips: I saw what you were doing,” he said. He felt Leigh’s body go stiff beneath his hand, and he gripped her so that she couldn’t move away.

He grazed his mouth over her pussy, inhaling her scent, which he could smell beneath the fresh soap of the shower.

He looked up at her. "Leigh," he said. "I think it's time we did something more than just pretend."

Her eyes were wide with excitement. He could see now that this is what she wanted, even if she was about to act as though it wasn't.

She started to shake her head, and Jeremy shook his in time with hers. "Don't tell me that this isn't what you want," he said. He slid his finger through the hot butter of her cunt, and then brought them to his mouth to suck the tangy juice off. "I think we both know that's just a lie."

Leigh's lips were parted, and she gasped as he worked his fingers back in to find her clit. By now she must have been quite sore, because each stroke of his finger sent a shudder through her that made her legs shake.

Leaving his fingers inside of her, he stood up, bringing his body close to hers and dipping his fingers inside of her to pinch her clit from the inside and out. Leigh gasped, but she didn't move away.

He turned her around and lined her up to fall on the bed, then pushed her slowly onto the bed, pulling his fingers from inside of her as he did. He unbuckled his pants, holding Leigh's legs together with his knees as he did, looking down at her to let her.

"Sit up," he said, holding his cock out for her. Leigh pushed herself up and opened her mouth to take him inside. He placed his hand on the back of her head, and pushed her forward to the base of his cock. He looked down at her, and she looked back at him.

Leigh hadn't engaged in an act of such complete submission to him for years. It nearly sent him over the edge. He could feel cum boiling up at the base of his cock, and he tried to distract himself by thinking of something – anything else.

But it was almost too late, he was almost over the edge.

"Leigh," he said, moving her head along the length of his shaft. Leigh sucked on his cock diligently, her mouth wet and pliant, hot and welcoming. Her eyes were locked on his. "This is what we're going to do. We're going to make a plan, and you are going to let me watch while Craig Oswald fucks you just like you imagined in the shower back there." He gripped her hair. "Aren't we?"

Leigh responded by making a sound in her throat, but he was already exploding in her mouth before the vibration reached his senses. She gurgled as her mouth and throat filled with his cum, and his head filled with images of Craig plunging his cock into his wife's pussy.

"You're totally serious about this," Leigh said, resting her head on his chest. "It's not some kind of thing like dirty talk where you don't really mean it."

"I'm serious about it. And so are you."

Leigh tapped her finger on his chest.

"Tell me if you're not," Jeremy said. "Because it's about to get really serious."

Leigh tapped him again.

Then she took a deep breath. "There's just one thing," she said. "It really bothers me."

"What's that?"

Leigh lifted her head. Her hair slipped over his chest, silky and soft. A little shiver ran through Jeremy. Leigh's eyes were bright and pretty, and her lips seemed almost puffy, more sensual than usual. It was almost as if her appearance were transforming with her sensibilities, though Jeremy figured this was all in his imagination.

"They're our neighbors, you know. I don't want this to turn into some kind of... like, where we are all just..." she waved her hand in the air.

"Coming and going?" Jeremy offered.

"Like a hippy commune or a cult or something," Leigh said at almost the same time.

"A cult," Jeremy repeated, smiling.

Leigh covered her mouth. It was silly. She laughed. "You know what I mean."

Jeremy looked up at the ceiling and stroked her back. "I do."

What to do about that? There certainly was the possibility that things could get really weird with those two, if they started down this path.

And Billie was a real wild card. He didn't know what he could expect from her.

"And the thing is," Leigh continued. "I'm not doing this because... I mean, I know it seems like it's out of attraction to Craig, but honestly, I don't really even like him all that much. I just mean, I don't want to start some kind of... weird thing.” Leigh threw an arm down to slap the bed. “Agh! I’m not making any sense. I just -”

Jeremy nodded. “Look, I think I get it. You don’t want to have a weird relationship with our neighbors just because you slept with him one time.”

Leigh sucked in her breath. “It sounds awful when you put it like that.”

Jeremy laughed lightly.

“Let’s think on it,” he said. “We don’t have to solve this problem tonight.”

Leigh nodded.

Jeremy closed his eyes.

“It’s going to keep me awake,” she said.

Jeremy smiled.

Leigh kept talking, but he drifted off.

In the morning, Jeremy woke up and rolled over to snuggle next to Leigh, who was still sleeping. As he woke up and the memories of the evening before, and the weeks before, spilled over into his consciousness, his regular morning erection grew against the small of her back.

He slid his hand along the curve of her waist and hip, then dropped from her hip to her belly, taking a swipe across her patch of downy hair. He moved his fingertips over the tops of her thighs, playfully, teasing himself as much as her.

His fingers kept moving up to the swell of her breasts, pressed together slightly by her draped arm.

Leigh stirred. But instead of swatting him away, she pushed her ass back against Jeremy, and as she did the roundness of it rubbed against his swollen cock. The tip of him dipped into her crack, and he the valley between the two mounds of flesh that made up her full, tight ass was hot. Inviting.

She made a sound, a little like a moan.

Jeremy stopped, not because the sound was discouraging, but precisely because it wasn't. They hadn't had morning sex in ages. His cock throbbed against her ass.

He propped himself up on his elbow, and looked at her face. Her eyes were still closed, but her lips were parted in a small smile. She rolled to her back, still giving the impression of sleeping, but it was obvious she was awake, or waking up.

He slid his hand up to her freed breasts, hoping to tease her nipples into hard beads.

His fingers found her right nipple, and he enjoyed the sensation of its hardness as he made a circle around it. The pleasure of feeling her harden in his hand traveled down the length of his arm to his cock, where it throbbed.

He moved his hand down.

He slipped into the folds of her pussy, and with his forefinger he sought the slit between her two lips.

His finger dipped into a thick, hot wetness.

He leaned forward and pushed her hair from her neck, meaning to nuzzle against her skin.

But Leigh moved, and her eyes opened as though wakefulness had suddenly clutched her and squeezed.

She didn't pull away, as Jeremy expected. Instead, she turned again, pushed her ass back against him, and sort of folded herself over.

The message: no foreplay.

It was highly unusual for Leigh, but what man was going to turn it down? His fingers had been clamped into her wet flesh and rolled with her. He pulled them out easily, gliding in her slipper-wetness.

She moved her hand up to where his was and grasped it, and for a moment he felt the preemptive ache in his cock of getting turned down, especially painful because she had let him get so worked up.

She held his hand against her hip, and turned slightly, her breath ragged and as excited as he felt. "I want to tell you before I forget," she said. "I have an idea. The solution to our problem."

She pushed her ass toward him, lifting it seductively.

In uncharted territory, her words bouncing around in his head like an echo that he could not make sense of, Jeremy paused behind her.

He could smell her excitement, sweet and honeyed.

Her hand slid down, behind her hip and her bottom, and found his cock. She pulled him toward her, and so he guided his cock to the soaked opening of her pussy, and they shifted until he slid in. She was so wet there was almost no friction, and her body was hot and liquid around him.

...the solution to our problems...

She didn't mean...?

He thrust into her a few times, slowly, and moved his hand back around to the folds of her cunt, seeking the engorged crest of her clit. “What’s that?” he breathed.

Leigh arched her back, pushing herself deeper onto his cock and tilting her head back into his chest. It was a feline, erotic move, and Jeremy stared down at her breasts, thrust forward, almost as if on display. She moaned again.

“I’ll do it,” she said.

She let this linger in the air. Jeremy’s cock throbbed inside of her, pressing against the walls of her pussy. He knew she could feel the jerking reaction to her words. He saw the way a smile crept into her lips.

“I’ll do it,” she continued, “but what if we make a rule that it’s only when we’re out of town. To keep things from getting... messy?”

But Jeremy was beyond talking about details. Not of that kind. He pulled Leigh’s hips toward him, and then, when he felt he couldn’t get deep enough inside of her, he rolled her onto her stomach and buried his cock to the hilt in her pussy. “You’ll do it,” he said. “You’ll let Craig fuck you?”

“Oh!” Leigh moaned.

He was getting close. “You’ll let Craig fill you up with his big cock?”

Leigh clawed at the sheets.

“Yes,” she said.

Jeremy wanted her to say something else, talk about it in more detail, but he was too close.

He leaned on his hands and watched his wife’s gaping mouth as he pounded her until she squeezed her eyes closed and her cunt clamped down on his cock, before bursting into waves of wet, fleshy orgasm. And then he came.

8: A GAMBLER

Jeremy wasn't a big gambler, in the sense that he would never go out of his way to go someplace like Atlantic City. But standing at the top of the stairs looking out on the sunken floor, he could feel the excitement of it pumping through his veins. All his senses seemed heightened. Everything was coming to him in sharp relief: the scent of felt and hard liquor; the reds, greens and blacks; the muffled clatter of dice on tables, the hard pop of a roulette ball; the distant ringing of winning slot machines.

Craig clapped him on the back. "Let's get in some blackjack before the ladies get here," he said. "And a few drinks."

Atlantic City was no monument to elegance any more, but Leigh had suggested they dress up. Jeremy was wearing a suit, one he reserved for Christmas and retirement parties at the office. It was a little tight – nothing was going to rip, but it was an unpleasant reminder that he maybe needed to get back to the gym. Craig looked trim and muscular beneath an expensive gray shirt. He had let a little stubble grow on his jaw (or maybe it was truly a five-o'clock shadow) and it gave him a vaguely mafioso look in the shirt.

Leigh, in addition to suggesting dressing up (which was what she was doing right now), had suggested a lot of things, like this trip. It was an odd-as-hell choice for Leigh, who didn't drink that much, didn't gamble, and did not exactly "blend" in this kind of scene with her prim sundresses and perfectly-coiffed hair.

Or her sense of order and decorum, which casinos seemed to teeter on the edge of.

After she had agreed to take things a step further with Craig, though, it was as if Leigh had grown another brain: she had taken it upon herself to plan the trip, to lay down the rules of her game, and to recruit Billie and Craig for it (though just how much "recruitment" either of these two needed, was up for debate).

What had in fact happened is that Leigh had gone to Billie and told her she wanted to take the next step and actually sleep with Craig, but that she wanted to make a rule that they only did it on vacations, away from home.

“That’s so convenient,” Billie had purred. “Because there is some kind of thing in Atlantic City next week. You should come, too.”

And away Leigh had gone. She had booked the hotel and taken care of the details, and all Jeremy had to do was show up.

It was a little unnerving that she had thrown herself into the details like that, but who was he to argue? And how did he even know if she was really going to go through with it?

So here they were. He was just going to let it unfold however it did.

He followed Craig to a blackjack table with only one other player, and they sat down to lose some money. Jeremy had set a strict budget for himself of $500, which was another thing that Leigh had acted strangely about. After she had decided on Atlantic City, he had told her he wanted to gamble. He had told her about the $500 limit (thinking he’d have to talk down to $250). But Leigh had done very little else besides shrug.

The first few hands, though, went well for Jeremy. He won $40. He could feel the cool anesthesia of the whiskey he was drinking, the glittery sights he was seeing, and that little punch of adrenaline from winning, working together to take him to a dangerous high.

Oh well, he was up, and the ladies would be joining them soon, Leigh would probably want to just go to dinner and not gamble too much, which would get him out of here before he lost too much money.

“Quick,” Craig said, nudging him with his arm and throwing back what was left of his whiskey. “Get your last hand in before Billie comes over here and tells you how bad the odds are... whoa.”

Jeremy turned to look in the direction of Craig’s gaze, and he immediately saw why Craig’s sentence had ended so strangely.

Billie was in front of Leigh, already coming down the stairs. She was smiling and waving with one hand, clamping it open and closed. As always, she looked great: her small figure was slipping around in a loose black sheathe and her very athletic legs sprawled out of it. They were made dangerously long and pretty by a pair of high heels. She had taken the unusual step of putting a little bit of dark eye make-up on, and a glossy lip color.

But however sexy Billie was in her odd KGB-spy-posing-as-a-tennis-star kind of way, she wasn’t the reason Craig had ended his sentence with “whoa.”

Leigh was walking slowly behind Billie. She wasn't smiling like Billie, but she was missing her normal hesitance as well. Walking slowly, not as much because she was shy, but because she was being deliberate.

Or at least, that's how it seemed.

She was wearing a black dress from a shopping trip with Billie. This one had a severe cut in the middle, showing off a large amount of her breasts, but it still hinted at the dress that had set the whole thing in motion. Her large breasts were propped up beneath the dress, pushed together to form two full, delightfully round curves. The material hugged her waist and hips, and the dress ended far, far above Leigh's usual hemline. Her legs were toned and sculpted, and she was wearing a pair of sexy and simple black shoes.

Her hair was down, transforming the shape of her face. Like Billie, she had make-up on, but hers was a more natural-looking blush and quiet darkening of her eyes with shadow and mascara. Just enough to make her look sultry, instead of her usual home-spun, sweet fifties housewife look.

Jeremy felt his pulse start to race.

Billie slipped her arms into Craig's and gave him a kiss, kicking up one heel. "You know blackjack is terrible odds. I don't know why you play this game." She looked at Jeremy, and kissed him on the cheek.

But Jeremy was still transfixed by his wife, who was walking slowly toward the group.

She shrugged when she got to them, holding out her hands. "Well," she said. "What do you think?"

Billie leaned toward Jeremy, who was staring at her. "It's hot," she prompted Jeremy.

"It's...so hot," Jeremy said.

Craig didn't say anything. He didn't have to. His eyes were doing the talking, and so was his mouth, turned into a smile of approval and satisfaction. Jeremy felt his spine burn all the way down to his tailbone.

"Let's go play some craps," Billie suggested. "Leave these two here with their bad odds."

Jeremy started to stand up, but Craig pushed him down gently with his hand. "Let them go," he said. "It'll be fun to watch them."

Jeremy hesitated, but eventually sank into the chair and played another hand. His heart was racing. Barely paying attention to his hand, and asking for a hit on 18 and 19 on his first and second, respectively, his attention was dragged to the craps tables, where the two women were glittering their way into the crowd.

Men around them were turning like magnets and watching them unabashedly. Billie, of course, was flirting with everyone she ran into, and so by the time they made it to the craps table, they had a few men basically dragging along behind them.

Jeremy felt a little surge, the feeling of being out of control. His wife was so much hotter than he often allowed himself to believe, and dressed like that, she was getting wild attention. He loved it, but it was also making him feel raw and exposed.

His stomach twisted.

Craig stood up. "I'm losing a fucking fortune," he complained. "Let's go get some drinks and watch the ladies."

They made their way to a bar, where there was a good view of the craps tables and Billie and Leigh, who had somehow obtained two expensive-looking, non-house drinks. They were large, blue martinis, and Billie slipped her arm into Leigh's to drink them together.

Leigh consumed hers very fast, and Jeremy could see that the glow of the alcohol took over her almost immediately; her smile loosened up, and she started to look less awkward as Billie touched her – holding onto her arm, leaning against her as she spoke to a pair of guys who approached them.

Jeremy shuddered as he watched the scene: Billie introducing Leigh, Leigh smiling, the guy's eyes unabashedly walking all over her body.

They seemed to invite the two to play craps.

Jeremy turned back to the bar and ordered himself a drink. He was feeling anxious, wanting the game that Leigh was playing to get back into the realm of Craig and Craig alone. This was not what he'd had in mind.

"Don't worry," Craig said, in a low voice, like he could read Jeremy's thoughts. "Billie just likes to have a little fun. She'll bring it all back around."

Jeremy looked at Craig, unsure of what to say.

After all, what do you say to the guy you want to fuck your wife when he assures you that his own wife isn't getting your wife drunk and pimping her out to a bunch of other guys, even if that's what it looks like?

Jeremy stared in front of him, trying to get himself under control. Maybe this was a bad idea. Maybe this isn't at all what he wanted.

He looked back at Leigh, trying to catch her eye.

One of the guys was trying to give Leigh the dice, and she was shaking her head.

“Come on,” Jeremy could see the guy saying. “For good luck.”

Or some dumb thing.

Leigh looked around, hesitantly. She didn’t find Jeremy, and so she seemed to give in. Her body relaxed, and her eyes stopped searching. She took the dice.

The small crowd watching the game shifted, and Jeremy’s view was partially blocked. He heard an excited peal from the table. He saw Leigh’s big smile as she turned to the guy who was flirting with her.

It was like something out of a movie, and it set his blood boiling. He started to stand up.

Craig put his hand on his arm. “Easy, tiger. They’re just getting warmed up. Stay and watch a little.”

Jeremy felt a flare of rage toward Craig – who the fuck did he think he was? - but then he remembered the whole reason they were here.

Was it really fair to get this worked up because Leigh was doing something a little more than she had promised?

And was he really upset by it?

Or turned on?

His cock throbbed, almost like an answer to his question.

He looked back at the craps table, and watched as his wife laughed and rolled the die, looking nothing like herself, while a stranger looked right into the crevices of her tits and she said nothing to him.

This went on for a while, and then the game seemed to cool. Billie had her arms draped over the shoulders of a guy who had taken a liking to her, and didn’t seem to be paying any attention to Leigh, who was looking around again.

Jeremy couldn’t wait any more. He stood up and tipped his head in the direction of the girls. “Let’s go,” he told Craig. He wasn’t just going to let this unfold “however.”

“Oh, there you are,” Billie said, when she saw them coming. She had really ratcheted up her accent, which didn’t sound much Bulgarian as Transylvanian at this point, so it was obviously an act. She held out her hand. “Here is my cousin, Tim, and my... “friend,” Jim.”

When she said “Tim,” she pointed at Craig, and at Jeremy when she pointed out “Jim.” Then she extended her hand and moved it over Jeremy’s cheek. “This is Brian,” she purred.

Leigh was looking from Billie to “Tim” (who was smiling) to Jim.

Then she surprised Jeremy again by saying: “Oh hi, guys.”

Jeremy stared as, when she turned around, the guy behind her put his hands on her waist.

Leigh was slow to react, almost as if she didn’t realize he was doing it. But then she looked alarmed.

Jeremy stepped toward her and kissed her on the mouth, leaving no doubt that he knew her very well. This college-aged kid wasn’t who he had in mind, and he was getting a little unnerved by Leigh’s reckless, off-the-rails behavior.

The guy pulled his hands away, trying to make it look like nothing had happened. Jeremy met his eye and gave him a cool stare-down until he looked away.

“Well,” he said, “we gotta go.” He rubbed his fingers through his hair. “Chris?”

Chris, who was having infinitely more luck with his girl, looked very reluctant, but he had also run his eyes over the whole scene a few times, with extra attention to Craig’s tattoos. He opted to get out of there.

“Oh Jeremy,” Billie sighed. “You got rid of my nice new friends.” Then almost in the same breath: “Let’s go play roulette.”

Leigh slid her hand into Jeremy’s. Billie linked arms with Craig and they started toward the roulette tables. “What are you doing?” Jeremy whispered to Leigh.

Close to her, he got a taste of just how magnetic she really was. He couldn’t help letting his eyes drop to her beautiful rack, pressed up by some magical force beneath the dress and perfectly sculpted into full, spherical shapes, only the black fabric clinging to them (and barely).

“Just flirting,” Leigh said. “I thought you would like it. They came over to us.”

“I thought this was about Craig,” Jeremy said. “Not... you know, anyone off the street.”

Leigh stopped in her tracks. “Okay,” she said, almost sassily. “Sorry.”

Jeremy realized then that she was pretty tipsy.

“Look,” he said, and then faltered.

No, he was tipsy.

He didn’t really have any right to complain about what she had just done. “I’m sorry,” he said. “It’s -”

“Look, if you don’t want to do this,” Leigh started to say.

“No,” Jeremy said, squeezing her hand. “No, that isn’t it... I just... I didn’t expect that, I wasn’t ready for... I just want...”

“Keep it to Craig?” she offered.

Jeremy looked relieved.

Leigh swatted him, and she gave an exasperated sigh. “What did you think I was going to do?” she said, and while she was doing her best to indicate she was just pretending to be offended, Jeremy knew there was some truth to it. She shook her head. “I can’t believe you thought I’d just run off with some... that kid is like twenty.”

Jeremy was racking his brains for a way to save the situation. “Billie would do that,” he said.

Thankfully, Leigh laughed. “Yes, yes she would.”

They looked at each other.

“Listen,” Leigh said, and she stepped toward him, taking both hands in hers. “If you have any doubts about this, now is the time to say them.”

It was a weird, romantic moment, there on the floor with the glittering, flashing, clanging gambling scene all around them. Like in some chick flick, the whole world seemed to condense down to just the two of them. Jeremy looked at his wife’s eyes.

There wasn’t really any going back from this, he realized.

“Okay, but just Craig,” he said.

Leigh shook her head and smiled. “Got it,” she said.

She began to walk again, and had to tug on his hand to get him to follow her. She looked behind her, right at him, giving him a smile, and his stomach lurched. Even in that wild dress, even with the makeup and the hair, Leigh looked so incredibly... unspoiled, virginal almost. That was all about to change.

But he didn’t stop her. He just followed.

She shrugged. “I don’t know how,” she said. “I don’t really gamble.”

Jeremy saw that this lit Craig up from the inside. He slipped a $20 chip out of his pocket. “It’s easy,” he said, and he moved toward Leigh, his voice low and seductive. He picked up her hand and placed the chip in it, stroking the meat of her palm in a little circle as he did. “You just put the chip somewhere on this table, wherever you want to bet, and then you wait. And see what happens.”

Jeremy’s head spun while he watched the effect of all this on his wife. He could almost see the hum it stirred up inside of her: the flush of color to her skin, the flutter of her breath in the hollow of her throat, the electricity that was traveling through her and making her finest hairs stand on end. And lower, he knew: she was welling up with excitement that was soaking right into whatever lingerie she had on.

Leigh’s eyes fluttered over to Jeremy, and then seeing his approval, she looked away to the table and scanned it. “What do I bet on?” she said.

Billie, who was watching this whole scene unfold with interest while sucking something strong through a straw, gave a laugh. “Black, always,” she said. She reached out and set her chips on the table on a totally different bet.

Jeremy couldn’t tell if any of this went through Leigh’s mind, or if the innuendo meant anything to her. She turned to the table, and set her chip on the black square.

Craig smiled.

“Okay,” she said.

And then they waited. The ball dropped with a rattle and then a smooth scraping sound, Craig moved closer to Leigh – just close enough that she could feel his body against her back. His thighs close to hers, his chest, hard as a rock, against her upper back, but only barely.

Click.

The wheel created delirium for a moment, as the ball came to rest in the pocket for 28, black, and the effect of it stopping made the wheel appear to spin in another direction. Sighs of disappointment were drowned by cheers, overall Billie, who had placed a bet on the third twelve.

Billie tossed back her drink and rubbed her hands together. “I always win so much money at this game,” she said. “I love it.”

Craig shrugged. "You lose so much money at this game, too."

Billie smiled as the croupier removed the dolly and she collected her winnings. "I only lose when I play with your money," she purred.

Leigh gingerly collected her winnings. "Wow," she said, twisting the chip in her fingers.

"Play again," Billie said, scoping out her next bet.

Leigh looked at Craig, holding the two chips in her fingers as if to ask for permission.

Jeremy felt a burning sensation creep through his abdomen as his wife turned to Craig with that familiar expression, the one that always belonged only to him.

Craig smiled. "Go ahead," he said.

Leigh looked uncertain. "What if I lose?"

Craig shrugged. "It's just money. Anyway Billie's losing so much of it you can't possibly compete."

"I'm up like $900," Billie protested.

Jeremy saw Leigh suck her breath in a little at the – for her, for them – staggering sum.

Craig reached for her hand, and took the chips. As he did this, he leaned very close to her, and caught her eyes in his serious, commanding gaze. His lips were very close to hers. "Red or black?" he said, and to Jeremy it seemed that he moved his lips a little closer to hers.

The man was seductive as hell.

Jeremy knew his wife could almost feel his lips forming the question, taste his breath on her skin. She dropped her eyes. "Um... black again."

"Black it is," Jeremy said, and placed the bet.

Then he retreated behind Leigh to watch – but this time, he slid in behind her and placed his hands on her hips.

When they won, Leigh lifted her hands and turned around, her face flush with the excitement of winning, and they almost kissed. Her breasts pressed against his shirt, and Craig's hands moved over the shape of her hips as though they were a couple, had always been a couple.

Jeremy's head was spinning.

"I need more drinks," Billie said, turning around abruptly to Jeremy. Her eyes flitted over at Craig and Leigh, and she grinned as she looked at Jeremy. "Come on, let's go and get them," she said, linking her arm through his.

They sauntered to the bar. Jeremy wasn't sure how he felt about Billie, and the familiar way she was putting her hands all over him. Certainly he was attracted to her, but that wasn't his main concern right now. And he had never really talked to Leigh about how she felt about any crossing of the line on his part.

So he had the sense that he was doing something vaguely inappropriate, as strange as it may have seemed in that situation.

"Are you nervous?" she said, swinging her hair around and plopping into a high chair at the bar. "You seem nervous."

A bartender of course came right away to attend to Billie, who leaned on the bar and intimately asked him a question about drinks she already knew everything about until she settled on a gin and tonic.

"Same," Jeremy said, in a daze, even though it wasn't his drink at all.

"You know that Craig filmed you the other day, right?" Billie said.

Jeremy's eyes nearly popped out of his head. Billie laughed. "It was hot," she said, picking up a straw from a dispenser behind the counter and playing with it between her lips. She moved the straw along her lower lip, in and out of her mouth, slowly insinuating something oral and filthy with a grin. "You know women will do all kinds of things with another man that they won't do with their husbands."

The bartender returned with their drinks and set them on the table. Jeremy fumbled with his wallet.

Billie smiled. "We forgot all about those two," she said, biting sensually into her lime.

Jeremy had no idea what to say. Billie's eyes were burning through him, and she was leaning close to him on the chair, her olive skin begging him to have a tiny taste. Maybe just her shoulder, or the long neck under her brown hair. Billie seemed like the kind of girl who would like to be on top, or contorted into some impossible position...

He blinked.

Billie's eyes dropped to his erection, and then she grinned again.

"Their drinks," she said. "I meant, we forgot all about their drinks."

She spun on the swivel chair and beckoned the bartender back to them, while Jeremy tried to calm his heart down.

“What am I doing?” he asked himself under his breath.

Craig and Leigh were still at the roulette table, betting, flirting, very close to each other. As Billie and Jeremy approached, Jeremy saw Craig slide his fingers into Leigh’s hair on one side of her head as he brought her ear close to his.

Just telling her what to bet on.

He lifted his eyes from the table and looked at Jeremy as he approached.

Jeremy’s gut twisted.

The wheel began to spin again.

“I’m winning so much money,” Leigh said breathlessly, when Jeremy stood behind her.

Her eyes were lit up and she was definitely on a high, between the alcohol, Craig, and the fact that she was winning at gambling. She didn’t look like herself.

“Black, 29,” the croupier called.

Leigh gave a low, excited shriek and turned back to the table.

“Again!”

“What is she betting, only black?” Billie purred to Craig, handing him his drink.

He smiled. “Sometimes red.”

Leigh turned around with her chips in her hand.

“Maybe,” Billie purred, “we can make this bet a little more interesting.”

Leigh was quite drunk, and Jeremy only realized how much so when he looked at her reaction to Billie’s declaration. There was no mistaking what Billie was insinuating, even if she hadn’t laid out the specifics yet.

Leigh just laughed a little, and took her drink from Jeremy. She took a sip.

Jeremy was starting to feel out of control again, and his sense of it was mirrored in Leigh’s loosening up. She was far from being herself, and he wondered if it wasn’t too far for her own comfort.

But there was no time to discuss it, because Billie was already holding some chips in her hand. “What if we have a friendly wager between the four of us. If red wins, you get something you want, and if black wins, we get something we want.”

Craig’s face registered interest, but he also seemed to be used to Billie’s “ideas.”

“And what it is you want?” he said.

Leigh looked at Billie, her interest piqued as well.

Jeremy wasn’t even sure which team he was on. Who were “you” and “we” in this game?

Billie slung her arm around Leigh’s shoulders, almost as though she sensed the question and wanted to answer it. She smiled sweetly. “If we win, you have to order us a massage.”

Craig looked at Jeremy, and winked. He folded his arms, as though he were negotiating. “Do I get to watch?”

Billie shrugged. “Sure.”

This felt like a win-win to Jeremy, supposing he had sorted out the teams correctly.

“And if we win?” Craig said.

Billie put her finger to her lips. “If you win,” she teased, as if she hadn’t really thought about it, “we will... kiss each other.”

This sentence made its way through Jeremy’s body with a strange hum. He stared at Leigh, who had evidently heard Billie’s plan, but did not seem as scandalized by it as she should have been. She just flitted her eyes at Jeremy, and smiled.

Then she looked at Craig. A long, deliberate look.

Jeremy moved closer to the table to hide his erection. The croupier eyed him warily.

Craig looked at Jeremy. He raised his eyebrows. “Sounds like a good bet,” he reasoned.

Jeremy just nodded. His head was spinning. Leigh and Billie were still clinging to each other, and they now turned their attention to the table, where Billie placed a pile of chips on red.

“Wait,” he said. “I thought...”

Billie looked over at him, and her lips were tantalizingly close to his wife’s shoulder. “This is so I win either way.”

“Okay,” Jeremy said. He was pretty inebriated, and he wasn’t sure that he knew exactly what the rules of the game were, but he was pretty sure that any outcome was going to be okay with him. He set some chips on black.

The croupier called an end to bets, and Craig rubbed his hands together. "Now, this is getting interesting."

Jeremy looked at Leigh as the ball spun in the wheel. He vaguely wondered if he shouldn't put an end to this before she did something she'd regret later. She seemed pretty drunk.

At the same time...

He didn't have much time to ponder it, because the ball landed on a red before he knew it. Things happened very quickly and yet in what seemed like slow motion after that: Billie turned her head, smiling. Her bare shoulders moved up, and down, in a shrug. She slid herself between Leigh and the table, and looked first at Craig, then at Jeremy.

Leigh let herself be maneuvered into position by Billie, but if she had any doubts about what was going to happen next, her face didn't reveal them.

Jeremy stared in disbelief as their mouths moved closer to each other, and then met. Their pink tongues darted in and out of each others' lips, in a kiss that was not just a kiss, but a filthy, wet kiss.

Billie bit on Leigh's lower lip as she pulled away.

And that was that. They – Craig and Jeremy – had won.

Billie turned and collected her winnings, gave Jeremy another smile, and tucked some of her chips into her purse.

Craig was excited, and for the first time that evening Jeremy could see the bug of gambling biting at him. Up until then, he'd been pretty blasé about it.

"Okay," Craig said. "Let's talk serious bets."

Billie seemed thrilled with this, and Leigh looked at him with interest. She stole a glance at Jeremy, because it was pretty evident that this was the moment, the one they wouldn't be able to turn back from.

"Serious bets," Billie said. She gave Jeremy a friendly smack on the shoulder. "What do we win?"

At this moment, Leigh, who had seemed to be in more of a trance than anything else, sort of slouching and spacing out, suddenly came to life.

And it was then that Jeremy realized she was not drunk – not so drunk that she couldn't make decisions. He also saw that she had been waiting for a good moment, and thinking on it, kind of circling around the scene to see where she could jump in.

“Everyone say what they want,” she said. “And then we decide what the odds should be.”

This made Jeremy jerk his head a little. “Really?”

Craig’s lips formed a smile. “I like it.”

Billie said nothing, just twisted her straw.

Jeremy looked at Craig, looked at his wife, and then at the roulette table.

Well, he supposed he could just put his faith in fate. It was kind of better this way.

“Okay,” he said, and his heart fluttered so rapidly for a moment he thought he might keel over.

“I want to have a foursome,” Billie said, plainly, like she was ordering a smoothie.

Everyone looked at Leigh, whose face did register a certain amount of uncertainty at this thought. Her mouth opened. “I don’t... I never...”

“Hmmm,” Craig said, grinning at Billie. “What about a corner bet?”

“What’s that?” Leigh asked.

“Okay,” Billie said.

“What’s that?” Leigh repeated, and this time she looked to Jeremy for help.

“Four numbers,” Craig said, sliding his hand down her arm while he whispered in her ear. “All touching.”

Leigh’s eyes went wide, and Billie grinned at her. “Anyway it’s a long shot,” she said, turning her attention to the table.

Jeremy gave Leigh a look, meaning to convey to her that if there was anything she didn’t want to do, he had her back. But Leigh’s trepidation disappeared quickly.

“Okay,” she said. “Um... I guess my bet is, uh...” she looked at Jeremy. “I want to be a hotwife.” She blushed. “But specifically I want, like, that scene in Julia’s Big Boss.” She looked at everyone’s face, including Billie, who was making a sort of impressed smile-frown and nodding her head.

“Bet on black,” Billie suggested.

Leigh put her chip primly on the black box.

“Better hurry,” Billie urged.

Jeremy shrugged. “I want the same thing as Leigh.”

As he said this, and Billie murmured, “Bet on red, then,” while bringing her straw seductively to her teeth, Craig leaned over and whispered something in Leigh’s ear that made her eyes go wide. At the same time, he managed to get his chip on the first third box before the bets were called.

“I don’t know...” Leigh said, alarmed, turning toward him.

“Let’s just see how it goes,” Craig said.

The croupier dropped the ball.

They all stared at the white marble, spinning in large, lazy circles. It seemed to go on forever, the sound of it steady as though it would never stop.

At last, it bounced, and rattled, and bounced, and plunked.

8. Black.

A pause came over the group, everyone calculating what it meant.

“Oh,” Billie said. “How sad for me, I’m the big loser.” She delivered this proclamation with her usual cheerful mischievous voice and brought the straw in her drink to her lips. Then, her eyes were already moving elsewhere, in search of her next adventure.

“I lost, too,” Jeremy said, not sure about the feeling that was overtaking him.

Leigh had won, and so had Craig, which meant... what?

Leigh looked a little nervous. Her eyes were on the wheel and the fate it spelled out, and Jeremy was having a hard time figuring out if the flush on her face was happiness, or that she regretted her bet.

Jeremy leaned over to her. “It’s just a game,” he said, in a low voice. “You don’t have to do it.”

Leigh was still staring, at the croupier now, watching him pay out the winners.

She turned slightly toward Jeremy, and there was a moment he really had no idea what she was going to do.

The corner of her mouth turned up a little. “Fair is fair,” she said. She turned to Craig. “Well?”

Her confidence was staggering. Jeremy felt lightheaded.

Craig grinned at Jeremy. Then he held out his arm and Leigh slid hers into it.

“Nobody even says goodbye to Billie,” Billie muttered, but if she was actually sad about anything, she was doing a good job of not showing it. She gave a quick flick of her hair, and smiled at Jeremy. “You should have bet on something else,” she said. Another smile, and Jeremy felt a sliver of heat inside of him. “Maybe next time.”

Then she turned on her heel, and was gone.

Jeremy looked to where Leigh and Craig had gone, and they were almost at the elevator. Leigh looked back at him, and for a moment he wondered if she really wanted him to come. But then she stopped walking, and put her hand on Craig’s.

He walked briskly to catch up with them, not caring that he looked like an amateur speed-walker.

They went to Leigh and Jeremy’s room, something they never really discussed, just did. A party of drunken guys got in on the second floor and went up a few floors before realizing they wanted to go down.

Leigh caught the eye of one of them, and he did a double take. The friends piled out on the same floor as the trio, but the guy couldn’t stop looking at Leigh. The same jealousy and wild loss of control he had experienced below moved through Jeremy. And if only those guys knew what he was about to sanction his wife doing.

Leigh seemed to have made up her mind. She walked at a brisk pace and used her own key to open the door.

Jeremy was last, following Craig, who was walking toward his wife as though Jeremy weren’t even there. He had already started to loosen his tie, and Jeremy found the movement of his hands to undress himself, in preparation for fucking Jeremy’s wife, oddly arousing.

Leigh stopped next to the bed, and gave a half-turn. “So....” she said. But she had a seductive, more than nervous tone. She touched her shoulder, stroking her soft skin.

Jeremy sat down – or more like melted - into the chair by the window.

He was expecting, for some reason, a bit more of a seduction scene. Somewhere in the elevator and on the walk to the room, he almost felt like he had transported out of this space and was watching, not even visible. He thought maybe Craig would do more coaxing, more drawing of his shy wife toward him.

But Leigh, he realized, was not really shy. Not anymore. Leigh was looking at Craig with a hungry expression on her face – it was very different than the last performance she had given so reluctantly.

Craig was nodding, a smile on his lips as he moved closer to Leigh, his hands reaching for the straps of her dress. He slid them down her shoulders in a smooth movement, his hands all over her skin. The fabric seemed to peel away from her body, exposing skin, the curves of her breasts, then finally her nipples.

Craig stared at Leigh's breasts for a moment, before sweeping his fingertips lower and lower until he reached the nubs on her breasts. He played with them, tapping his fingers over them slightly until they stiffened at his touch.

He pinched one, then the other, and then moved closer to her to cup her breasts and play with their weight with his hands. He edged his mouth closer to hers, until he brushed his lips over her lips lightly. At last, he covered her mouth and began to explore it with his tongue, moving his jaw against hers forcefully, like he wanted to suck the life out of her.

Jeremy shifted in the chair. His stomach felt like it was falling through the floor. His cock pressed against the zipper of his pants.

Craig released Leigh's lips with a loud smack, and then he tipped his head slightly to place his mouth close to her ear. Her eyes went wide as he whispered to her. Jeremy strained to hear, but could make out nothing. He could only see by Leigh's face that whatever was being said was scandalous, or filthy, or worse.

He gripped the fat handrest of the chair and forced himself to stay where he was. After all, as Leigh had said, fair was fair. And this was what he had wanted, after all.

As Craig whispered, his left hand moved slowly down Leigh's body, tucking into the dress, turning so that his tattoos twisted with the motion as he turned his palm to face her body and move lower, lower still, until Leigh gasped as Craig's fingers made their way to her pussy.

Jeremy stared at the motion of the dress as Craig's hand moved to do whatever it was doing under there. He lifted his eyes to watch Leigh face. Her mouth was open and she was looking straight ahead. She brought her hand up to Craig's shoulder to balance herself.

He was done whispering to her, and now his mouth was moving along the length of her shoulder. Leigh gasped, and she stumbled a little, but Craig steadied her as he continued whatever he was doing beneath her dress.

Leigh looked over at Jeremy suddenly, meeting his eyes. Her own eyes registered a bit of shock, as Craig's fingers slid into the wet folds of her pussy. Almost like she couldn't believe she was actually doing this.

Jeremy again offered her the nod of encouragement she knew she needed.

He could hear the sloshing of her pussy now as Craig moved his fingers through her lips, playing with her clit. He lifted her leg to hook it on his hip, and when he did, Jeremy got a great view of his fingers embedded in Leigh's pussy.

Leigh's totally bare pussy.

Jeremy stared, wondering if he was seeing what he was seeing, and yes – it appeared to be true. The faint, feathery hair that Leigh kept trimmed neatly had been completely waxed off, and only her smooth lips remained to surround the red, wet gash of her cunt.

And Craig had his fingers in it, two of them, and he was moving them in and out with a smooth expertise while he held her leg up.

Leigh's eyes went a little glassy and she gasped again. Then her eyes closed halfway and she mewled.

"That's it," Craig said. "Get nice and wet for me."

"Oh," Leigh said. "Oh, oh..." the last words dribbled away in a strangled cry as her foot kicked violently in the air. Leigh ground her hips against Craig's body as she came. His fingers glistened with her cum as he continued to plunge them in and out of her.

"Oh," Leigh moaned. "Oh, stop, I can't..."

"Shhh," Craig hushed her, soothingly. "Be a good girl."

Leigh squirmed in his grip, but he held her firmly, almost like she was a rag doll. He had one hand along her spine to keep her from falling backward, and his big muscles strained with the effort.

At last, after making her squirm and mewl for a few moments, he let her fall to the bed. Leigh collapsed in a heap of her dress and her long limbs, her hair stuck to one cheek with sweat.

Craig quickly pulled his belt out of its loops and shimmied out of his pants. He tore his shirt over his head to get completely naked.

Jeremy stared at the sight: his wife squirming on the bed in her own juices, and the naked man in front of her. Craig's cock was pointed straight in front of him, thick and almost muscular, like his arms. The tattoos that crawled over his biceps seemed to move menacingly as he removed his shirt.

He climbed on top of Leigh, and pulled at her dress, pushing the fabric to the middle of her torso and then clawing at her panties until Jeremy heard them tear. Craig pulled on the red fabric until it slipped out from under her bottom.

He threw the panties to the side after holding them to his nose and inhaling Leigh's scent.

Jeremy stared at Leigh's pussy. The folds of it were bare, but the center of her gash had been spread open and burst out from between them from Craig's rough finger-fucking. He could smell her juices from where he was.

Craig lowered his hips by spreading his legs, and worked his cock into her breasts again and gave a few thrusts as he pushed her tits together himself. His thumbs moved over her nipples. "Oh, fuck, that's nice," he said, in a low growl. "Such nice, pretty tits." "Lick his cock again," Jeremy said. His voice left him before he even realized he was talking.

Craig didn't seem to react to Jeremy speaking, except to put his hand on Leigh's head and help her to lift her head so that she could reach his cock with her tongue. Leigh looked over at Jeremy, surprised, but she extended her tongue to lap at Craig's wet crown.

The taste of his briny cum was in her mouth now, on her lips, Jeremy thought. He felt like he could double over with the sweet pain of it, but he stayed as he was. Watching as the bulbous head of Craig's cock squeaked through her tits and then glanced over her willing tongue.

Craig rose up suddenly. "Not quite yet," he said, as Leigh hungrily went after his cock with her mouth. He reached behind him and slapped Leigh on the hip. "Turn around," he said. "Get on your hands and knees."

He scooted backward as her body rotated beneath him. Leigh looked over her shoulder at Jeremy as she rose up onto her elbows and knees. Craig gave her a light slap on the ass. "Let's see that thing I wanted," he said.

Craig placed one hand on Leigh's ass and squeezed, pulling her left buttock open. He turned slightly so that Jeremy had a better view of Leigh's pussy and her pink buttonhole anus, the cum sliding between her thighs. Craig's took his cock in his left hand and watched, as did Jeremy, as Leigh hesitated, then leaned forward on her chest and brought her right hand between her legs.

Craig changed the angle of his hand to work his fingers into the lips of Leigh's pussy and pull them apart. Now Jeremy and Craig had an excellent view as Leigh slid her fingers into her wet, messy cunt and played with her clit.

"You can do better than that," Craig said. "Make yourself come."

Leigh turned her head to face the headboard, and at the same time she plunged her fingers into her hole, first one, then a second one, finger fucking herself.

Jeremy stared as his wife masturbated for both of them, sliding her fanned fingers over her clit and into her pussy at the same time. Her fingers sloshed and squelched until she began to pant and twist her feet. She moaned and her fingers began to work faster and faster.

Well, Jeremy thought. At least Craig's "bet" hadn't been anything too filthy.

He felt a pang of disappointment along with his relief.

"Make yourself come," Craig said. "Make yourself come for me."

Leigh worked her fingers over her clit, and Jeremy stared as she worked herself into a frenzy. Only after a few moments of watching her, his cock throbbing, did he notice that she was using her left hand. Her wedding ring plunged in and out of her pussy, glimmering and then gone, then again and again.

He heard Leigh squeal as she came, and she turned her face to the pillow to bite it. Cum welled up from her cunt and coated her fingers, sliding down her thighs. Craig held her open to watch, and after she had squelched out the last of her orgasm, he reached down and took her hand in his by the wrist.

He used his other hand to pull her back toward him, by the hair, so that she was sitting up. Then, so Jeremy could see exactly what he was doing, he played with the fingers of her hand – still shining with her wet cum – and then, slowly, brought her ring finger to his mouth.

Jeremy watched as his wife's finger disappeared into Craig's mouth, as he tasted her sweet juices, and then, as her finger emerged – the ring removed. Craig dropped her hand and brought his finger to his mouth to take the ring out. He leaned over to set it on the nightstand. It glinted at Jeremy, and then he looked back to his wife, whose ringless hand was being suspended still by Jeremy, limp with submission.

She was still breathing quickly from the exertion of her climax. Craig pushed her hair to one side and whispered into her ear.

“I don’t know if I can,” she said.

“Just try,” Craig urged her. “After all, I won my bet.”

Leigh looked back at Jeremy, and then she fell forward onto her hands and knees.

Jeremy stared as Craig brought his cock to her pussy, and rubbed the crown of it in the gushing juices. The stickiness seemed to echo in the room for several moments as he used his cock to get her excited again, teasing her clit.

Then, he pushed the whole big slab into her pussy.

“Oh!” Leigh moaned. She sank back against him as he slowly fucked her, and Jeremy could see that his wife was getting hungry, wanting to come again.

Craig watched his own cock sliding in and out of Leigh, and he fucked her slowly for a bit. Then he said, “now I think we’re ready for my winnings.”

A jolt went through Jeremy. He watched as the long snake of Craig’s cock slid from inside Leigh, and she looked back, over her shoulder, at Craig and what he was doing.

Beads of sweat had formed above her lip, and on her forehead. Her hair was humid, tangled, clinging to her neck. Her face had acquired a slutty expression, an expression of need. And now she was not looking to Jeremy, but to Craig, for his next move.

Jeremy stared, gripping the arms of the chair, as Craig guided his cock to the pink eyelet of his wife’s ass.

Leigh bit her lower lip. “Oh,” she said. “I don’t know if I can.”

She squirmed as Craig, ignoring her remark, moved his cock over her hole, and brought his thumb up to massage the ringlet as well.

Leigh watched him and began to pant heavily. Then, finally, she looked over at Jeremy.

Jeremy nodded.

You can do it, he thought silently.

“Oooh!” Leigh said, and Jeremy’s attention went back to her ass, where Craig was slowly slipping his thumb inside of her.

“Just relax,” Craig said. “You can do it.”

Leigh bit her lip. Craig pushed his thumb deeper inside of her, and she threw her head back. “Oh!” she said. “Mmmm... I don’t know, I can’t do it,” she said.

Jeremy started to get worried, and he felt his thighs tighten as he started to stand up, but Craig looked over at him and shook his head slowly. “You can do it, Leigh,” he said, still looking at Jeremy.

He slid his thumb out of Leigh’s eyelet, and then brought his cock back to the center.

Leigh dropped to her chest, and held onto the sheets, as if she was going to be whipped away in a storm. She looked at Jeremy.

And then, slowly, Craig pushed forward, and Leigh squealed, and his cock began to sink inside of her. Leigh’s mouth opened wide.

Then she said, “oh no, oh, no, stop... no, just slower, go slow, no don’t stop, I want it all the way in... oh, I can’t... just a little more...”

Craig, not for a moment unnerved by anything she said, kept moving slowly, opening her up, filling her up with his fat prick. Jeremy stared as Craig’s meat disappeared into Leigh’s ass, stretching her wide open.

Then he dropped his hands and held onto her hips. “There we go,” he said. “You did it.”

Leigh rose to her hands again. “Oh my.. oh my God,” she said. Her voice was throaty, her face frozen in an expression of disbelief.

Craig began to fuck her, slowly at first and then picking up speed.

Leigh braced herself on the bed, and moaned, open-mouthed, as he began to really pummel her. Jeremy was shocked that Leigh – Leigh of all people – could take such a filthy fucking, her first time (as far as he knew) anal.

“Oh!” Leigh screamed, as Craig began to fuck her fast, his buttocks clenched with his oncoming climax. “Oh, oh!”

Craig manhandled Leigh, holding her like a prop or a toy as he jammed his cock deep inside of her and groaned, filling her with his cum.

Leigh grasped at the sheets, still squirming. She continued to push back against him, still wanting more.

“Holy shit,” Craig said. “This one’s a natural.”

Leigh moaned a complaint as Craig slid his cock out from inside her. Jeremy stared at the white cum welling up from inside of her red ring. "Oh, I still want to come," Leigh complained.

Craig smiled and fell back on the bed, up by the pillows, facing Leigh, who was still on her hands and knees.

"I need a minute," he said. He looked at Jeremy.

Jeremy didn't need any more invitation than that. His cock was throbbing wildly. He unzipped his pants as he stood up, and kicked them off as he walked over to the bed.

Leigh edged back to him. She turned and looked over her shoulder. "Make me come," she said. "Please."

Jeremy's cock was aching hard, so he guided it to her pussy and slid it in. He tried to go slowly, but Leigh pushed back against him, her pussy squeezing him. Cum from inside her ass, as hot as her body, slid down and onto him, and he had to think hard about something else to keep from going over the edge.

He pulled Leigh's hips hard against him, and drove his cock deep inside of her. He was pleased when she gasped and began to quiver all around him, her muscles tightening as she ground herself against him, bucking like a wild horse.

"Put your finger in my ass," Leigh said.

Jeremy stared at the back of her head, not quite believing this was his wife, but he did as she asked: he placed his hand over the small of her back, and, as Jeremy had, he slid his thumb into her hole.

The effect was immediate and stunning: Leigh mewled and her whole body began to quiver.

Craig pulled on her face and brought her down toward his mouth.

And then, as Jeremy crooked his thumb down and toward Leigh's pussy, so he could feel his own cock through the silky membrane of her flesh, Leigh screamed into Craig's mouth as she came. Her ass clenched around his thumb, and her pussy squeezed him tightly until it melted into lava-hot cum.

Jeremy groaned as he came – hard and violently fast – into her pussy.

It was then that Jeremy saw that Craig's cock was getting hard again, pointed up into the air and twitching.

He let his cock fall out of Leigh, and it landed with a slap on his thigh. He stared as Craig reached down for her leg, and guided it up and over his legs so that Leigh was on top of him.

Leigh was exhausted, and so she simply complied as Craig guided his cock to her cunt, dripping with Jeremy's cum, and pulled her down to his pelvis, sinking into her.

Leigh sat up and arched her back. Craig had a nice view of her bouncing tits as he grasped her hips and bobbed her up and down on his cock. "Oh god," Leigh complained. "I'm too sore, it's too much, I can't..."

But she could. Soon enough her thighs flexed and she was riding Craig herself, grinding deep onto his cock. Jeremy stared at his wife, Billie's words scurrying through his mind like animals in the underbrush: she'll do things with another man she'd never do with her husband...

Jeremy's cock was getting hard again. Leigh was bouncing on Craig, her head thrown back, her big, pretty breasts bobbing up and down for Craig's pleasure. Craig had handfuls of her ass in each hand, and his dick deep inside of her.

Jeremy wasn't even sure there was an actual thought in his head as he rose from the reclined position he was in, pushing his left hand out to Leigh's back. As he got up on his knees, he pushed Leigh down onto Craig's chest, and as he turned he saw Craig give him a look before grabbing Leigh's hair in his hands and pulling her mouth to his.

Jeremy worked his way between their legs. With Leigh bent over Craig, he could now see the other man's cock in her pussy, bent slightly by the shape of her body and the weight of her bending, his hairy balls squashed like a plump pillow beneath his cock.

Leigh's legs were spread wide, and so her gaped asshole was on full display, still dripping cum.

she'll do things...

Jeremy guided his cock to her hole, and placed it against the wet pucker. The small gape took the very tip of him in like a small kiss -
- with another man that she would never do with her husband - and he pushed forward.

Leigh turned her head sharply and looked back at him.

Craig pulled her ear close to his mouth, and slid his free hand down to her hips to hold her close to him. Jeremy put a hand on the small of her back.

“You can do it, baby,” Craig said.

“Oh!” Leigh squealed, as Jeremy felt his cock slide in to the very hot hole of her ass. He stared as his cock bent a little against the resistance of her muscles clenching, and then began to sink into her flesh.

The inside of her ass was silky, wet with Craig’s cum, and so much hotter than her cunt. He sank in all the way, while Leigh moaned. She bucked against him at first and then finally relaxed, dropping her weight down to Craig’s body and embrace.

Jeremy fucked her slowly at first. He could feel the hard rod of Craig’s cock through her body, and then the three of them began to rock in their own motion. Leigh’s body tensed beneath him, and he felt her thighs trembling and her back trying to arch as she started to get closer to the crest of her climax.

When she did, it sent him over the edge and he lost control of his slow, smooth strokes when her tight ass tightened even more in hot waves as she screamed into Craig’s shoulder. He fucked his cum into her hard, staring at Craig’s fingers mingled in the back of her hair.

He let the last violent jerks of cum spurt into her, and then he noticed how much his arms were aching. He fell back onto his heels, kneeling behind them. Cum drained from inside of his wife, mingled with Craig’s seed. Leigh was still shaking.

Craig tried to get her to ride him some more, but it was futile – Leigh was fucked-out and too sensitive to move anymore.

She let him roll her over like a rag doll, and Jeremy moved out of the way by scooting backward. Craig turned her onto her back, lifted her limp legs up and spread them wide open. He lifted her up so far her ass was off the bed to ram his cock deep into her pussy until he, too, finally came.

Jeremy staggered backward, feeling a little dizzy, and collapsed into the chair again.

Craig stayed inside of his wife, collapsed on top of her, for a few minutes.

Then he kissed her, and rolled over onto his back.

“Heh,” he said after a while. “Jesus.”

Jeremy stared at his wife, who was splayed on the bed. “You okay Leigh?”

She brought a hand up and waved it, presumably to mean, “okay,” before letting it drop to her stomach.

“Well,” Craig said, suddenly filled with energy. He sat up, his abs flexing, and then swung his legs over the side of the bed. “I’d best go see what the hell my wife is getting up to.”

Jeremy arched an eyebrow.

Leigh rolled over, taking some of the bed covering with her.

Craig hopped into his clothes. He seemed to have a lot of practice doing this, because he was dressed in no time and waving goodbye as he popped out the door, whistling.

Jeremy got up and flopped onto the bed next to Leigh.

She looked at him, the comforter wrapped up to her breasts.

Jeremy tugged on it, wanting to slide his fingers over her body. “You okay?” he said. “That was... pretty wild.”

“Too wild?” Leigh said, making a face.

Jeremy leaned in and kissed her. “It was... unexpected. But I wouldn’t say ‘too wild.’ I’m just...”

“What?” Leigh said.

“Just surprised, is all.”

Leigh looked hurt. “Like in a bad way?”

Jeremy shook his head. He slipped his hand under the covers and cupped her breast. “No, God, of course not a bad way. That was... incredible. Really hot. I just... can’t believe you did... all that.”

Leigh blushed. “Neither can I,” she said.

Jeremy suddenly remembered the ring. It glinted at him from the table. He leaned over Leigh and slid it across the night table, then got it into his two fingers.

A strange expression flashed over Leigh’s face as she saw it in his fingers. “Oh God,” she said. She eagerly held out her hand so that he could put it back on her finger. He knew it was all symbolic, but when the ring finally reached the base of her finger and she twisted it into place, he had a feeling of relief, almost reclamation.

“I think that was too much,” Leigh said softly, admiring the ring. “I just wasn’t sure...”

“It was hot,” Jeremy said. “In its own way...”

Leigh looked at him strangely. “I don’t know...”

Jeremy moved a strand of hair out of her face. “Hey, you know what they say.”

She looked at him quizzically.

“What happens in Vegas stays in Vegas.”

“We’re in Atlantic City,” she protested. She bit her lip.

“Same thing,” Jeremy said. “Just, ‘Vegas’ is easier to say.”

Leigh gave him a small laugh.

I’m so proud of you,” Jeremy said. “I know it seems like a strange thing to say.” He leaned in to kiss her, his fingers moving down, down into the wet mess of her pussy, where his cum and Craig’s was flowing out onto her thighs. He kissed her, long and deep.

At the end of the night, Leigh was his, no matter what she had done.

EPILOGUE

Jeremy held out his hands to Leigh when she came back into the living room, beckoning her to come and sit on his lap, which she did. Her round, soft bottom settled on his upper thigh, and she scooted a little so that some of her spilled over into his crotch and massaged his cock, which responded by throbbing to life.

She was wearing a stunning red dress – not the short one she'd bought with Billie, but a stunner nonetheless. The red was bright and would have been sort of slutty, except that the dress was a pretty conservative, Leigh-type dress: flared, down to just above her knees, tight at the waist.

But with a great, deep cut between her breasts, which every guy at their Thanksgiving/Christmas party was staring at whenever he thought his wife wasn't looking.

Except of course, Craig, who didn't care what Billie saw.

And Billie was looking as well.

Leigh leaned toward Jeremy and gave him a nuzzle on the ear.

They were pretty well-imbibed by now. Jeremy was enjoying the warm buzz, the fall cheer, his stunning wife, and the nice bonhomie in the house.

Since Atlantic City, they had managed to stay good friends with Craig and Billie, and there hadn't been any real weirdness among them, as he had actually assumed there would be.

Leigh's plan had worked incredibly well.

Billie moved slowly over to them. She was wearing a white dress that clung to her lean body, and while she lacked Leigh's raw sexuality, she looked stunning as always. With Billie, it was more about attitude, and she had plenty of that. Every step she took made people think of something sexual.

She took a rum ball from a plate next to Leigh and Jeremy and popped it sensually into her mouth.

"So," Shane Rogers said, pulling his eyes away from Billie's ass with some difficulty. "You guys are thinking of going where?"

"The Bahamas," Billie said, twisting her ass deliberately in front of him before sitting down next to Craig.

“It’s so expensive,” Shane’s wife said. “We went one year, it’s too much. Why not another island?”

There was a pause, just a little too long for the comfort of the guests, as the four of them exchanged glances and then smiled.

“Billie has a thing for gambling,” Craig said finally.

Billie, who had somehow snagged another round, shiny treat on a stick, brought it to her mouth and kissed it before she placed it between her teeth and bit into it. “I feel like this year I’m going to have a winning streak,” she said.

Jeremy’s cock flexed against Leigh’s ass, and Leigh smiled in no particular direction at all.

But it was a wicked little smile.

Charles keeps a secret desire about his wife Zoe. Her sizzling beauty is typically hidden under scrubs and a hair bun, so his fantasy may never happen. The Tenant: A Very Naughty Hotwife Novel

Once upon a time, his exotic and incredibly sexy wife Anna loved to indulge Brian's fantasies...to a point. She teased strangers, and took them to cruel, tantalizing places. But she never went all the way. The game ended when Brian and Anna got married, and that was that.

Or was it?

When the gorgeous, charming, and very black John moves into their basement rental, Brian finds that his sleeping desires have been building up all these years. He doesn't just want Anna to tease. He isn't just toying with the idea. He is obsessed with driving his wife to do things with another man. Lewd things. Obscene things.

When he confesses his desires, is Anna just a little bit too willing to make things just like old times? Is she too easy to push over each new line? Brian can't help but wonder if his own obsessions have gone too far...or if Anna's have.

Not Black And White

When a photographer turns Rick on to the idea of watching his wife with another man, Rick feels an obsessive desire inside of himself catch fire. He can't help arrange for his shy, girl-next-door wife Danielle and the rugged, black photographer to cross paths. He knows that Drake Reyes' erotic photographs are not as abstract as they appear, and that Reyes sleeps with his married models. He knows his wife is not immune to Reyes' charms – no one is. He just can't help but imagine what it would be like to stand in his gallery, looking at Reyes' lurid photos, knowing his own wife is the model, knowing how the photos were taken.

But was it really his idea, or have Drake and Danielle been as manipulative as he has?

Please note, this is the novelized version of the short story Black and White, with significant changes to all scenes depicted in the short story, as well as the point of view. There is, however, some repetition: scenarios which occurred in the short occur in the novel. There are plenty of fresh new adult scenes, however. Please enjoy.

A romantic hotwife novel with a deliciously corruptible and reluctant heroine.
