THE WEDDING

“I can't believe she's going to do it.”

Sara stirred her drink again. She'd been stirring it for half an hour, looking into it like it was an archeology dig, and meanwhile all the ice had melted.

A perfectly good gin and tonic had gone to waste.

She poked the lime with a plastic sword and made a noise of vague agreement. It was a sure sign she wasn't listening at all.

Then she looked up quickly.

“Do what?”

We were standing on a balcony, looking over an expanse of manicured lawn and gardens. A fountain splashed anemically in the center, and standing on the edge of the fountain was Renee.

Renee, encased in cream-colored lace and satin from her wrists to her ankles. She teetered on the narrow concrete fountain wall.

Sara sucked in her breath. “What is she...”

But the squeals of the women standing behind her, pressing forward like a horde of starving refugees at a Red Cross food drop, answered her question.

Renee's hand, holding a bouquet of red roses, waved erratically in the air. The high-pitched wailing rose and fell with its movements.

The crowd of women flapped around, then their excitement dampened.

She was only trying to get her balance.

I had to hand it to Renee.

Sure, you could still see her obscene tattoos through the lace sleeves of her dress, if you were looking for them, and I had watched her knock back about fifteen shots of Jameson before taking her vows, but she had really tried to be as classy as possible for this whole thing.

She had done her shots without thrusting the shot glass into the air and yelling for more.

She hadn't once poured alcohol on anybody, even herself.

As far as I could tell, she had not snorted any coke in public, and possibly, even in private.

I even overheard her directing her maid of honor – a terrifying woman with bright pink hair who had the dental indications of a former meth habit – to hide in the bushes to smoke her weed.

Renee was on her best behavior.

I mean, she was seventy thousand sheets to the wind and climbing on a three-inch wide concrete wall in stiletto heels. But that was fairly good behavior for Renee.

It wasn't so much that she was on a wall – she did that sort of thing all the time. It was actually her motivation to get on the wall that I couldn't believe.

I couldn't believe that she was going to participate in a bourgeois ritual, and toss a bouquet over her shoulder.

“She's going to fall,” Sara said, plainly horrified.

Sara saw dry-cleaning bills everywhere at this wedding. She was already writhing in her skin because I had spilled wine on my tie.

“Yep,” I said.

Renee wasn't going to fall.

Renee had been almost every kind of thing you could be in this world, and one of those things was a dancer.

As though reading my thoughts, or Sara's, Renee extended her leg and waved her hands around, pretending that she was falling backward, but with Chaplinesque control. The women squealed, the men on the sidelines raised their eyebrows in appreciation of the act. It provided a nice view of her sculpted thigh, which until now had remained hidden underneath a remarkably conservative dress.

Renee's back was turned to the crowd, and she raised her hand up in the air. The bouquet rose and fell a few times, and the squealing women's voices went with it again. Up and down.

Renee conducted her orchestra for a few moments, and then, at the end of a backward arc, she flicked her wrist neatly forward and the bouquet went past the other side of the fountain and onto the lawn.

Skills.

The throng of women froze for a second, and then surged forward, screaming.

I couldn't see her face, but I'm sure she was quite amused with herself, watching the dignified old men who were smoking cigars on the opposite side of the fountain, my father among them, as they turned to see the mass of women hurtling toward them, screaming hysterically.

I smiled and brought my drink to my lips.

David's reddish-sandy head, a foot above all the others, moved out of the sea of tuxedos and flapping dresses, and floated up to the white-clad Renee.

He lifted her at the knees and spun her around as he brought her back to earth. They kissed. It was adorable.

It made me want to fucking gag.

Renee threw her head back in laughter, and took a drink – someone else's order - from a passing waiter. She tipped her head back and knocked the drink down her throat in a quick second, with time enough to get it back on the tray before the waiter could even look annoyed. She patted him on the shoulder as a condolence, and I heard her voice as she took the second drink from his tray.

"I'm sorry," I could hear laughter in her voice. "I'm sorry, but you're going back anyway, now, right?"

She held up her second drink as if to say, so what's the use of it all?

The waiter was a young kid, probably not technically old enough to be serving that booze, and Renee's tidy, petite tits- the only exposed thing in her conservative dress – must have filled up his head along with her smile.

That and her voice – deep and gently ragged from years of smoking, it was sexy as hell.

The waiter took her second empty glass with a smile.

Because even though she had just gotten married right before his eyes, and even though Renee was quickly attached to my brother's lips like a blood-sucking leech, one always wanted to leave the possibility open, even in the imagination, of having a chance at a girl like Renee.

"He's got his hands full with her," Sara said. Her lips were slightly pursed.

He did. He had his hands completely full, and I tried very hard not to think too much about what he would have his hands physically full of in about three hours.

Fucking Renee.

I watched my ex-girlfriend – the craziest and the most annoying, the best fuck and the most fun, the hottest, wettest lay I had ever had, the meanest and most uncontrollable, spiteful bitch I had ever imagined, and also the coolest – suck on my brother's lips like she was slurping up the meat from an unopened oyster.

I raised my glass in their direction and smiled.

“Good luck, Davie.”

They spun around, looking as though they might suddenly get disgraceful, but then they parted. David looked up at me, and catching my raised glass, extended Renee's empty toward me.

“Cheers, buddy,” I mouthed.

Fucked, I decided, bringing my straight vodka to my lips. I am somehow totally fucked.

FRANKIE

“So what's this, then? Frat-boy shit? This your frat?” She screamed the last question into Mike's face.

She was using a cloying, elementary-school teacher voice, but her eyes were narrowed with disdain.

Mike turned to me for help. After all, he was only here on my advice.

I cleared my throat and repeated to myself to keep my eyes firmly glued to the top of this girl's head. She was barely clothed, and what was clothed was only lending itself to a strange allure. She had a white wife-beater shirt on, and some raggedly cut jean-shorts. Every piece of skin hanging out of her was stained by intricate and complicated tattoos.

“It's...” I said, and my voice sounded terrible. “It's a math equation.”

For a moment she stared at me, her straight eyes hard over her nose, which was doll-like and completely at odds with the rest of her tough face. Her lips were thin and gave her a boyish sexiness. Her eyebrows and her chin lifted simultaneously, and then her voice was instantly gentler. “Oh. Huh. That's cool, I guess.”

Her tone revealed nothing about whether or not she thought it was 'cool.'

Her arms were folded over her flat stomach, and she pushed herself away from the counter she was leaning on with her folded leg. “K. I can probably freehand this. You want to do it now?”

Mike had enough trouble with girls in his own league, and his own universe – the cold, cemented hallways of the engineering school. He was frozen.

The girl shifted her jaw back and forth, an amused little grin forming on her lips. She was used to this reaction from guys, especially guys like us. She enjoyed it.

She flicked her eyes to me, and grinned just a fraction more. Then she stepped suddenly, with an uncanny grace, right into Mike's personal space.

Just a hair too close. She shifted in front of him in tiny movements, like she was ready to start a fight.

And then, as if some droplet of sweat forming on Mike's forehead let her know she had tormented him all that she needed to, she backed away and smiled outright. "Come on, frat boy. Don't back out now." She patted the chair and folded herself neatly up on top of a rolling stool in one fluid movement, also managing to push herself across the floor to a the sanitizing station.

Mike looked at me. I shrugged. "Do it," I said.

He crumpled into the chair.

She spun around and began to swat Mike's arm with her alcohol swab. "So," she mused. "What brings a couple of nice kids like you into this fine establishment?"

I started to open my mouth.

"What do you want a tat for anyway?" she hollered at Mike, before I could say anything. She began to screw her gun together. "Doesn't that...prejudice your job prospects or some shit like that."

"Language!" someone bellowed from across the room. I was too afraid to turn around and see where it came from. There were men in this place who looked like they were in a biker gang.

"Fuck off," she hissed, smiling. She looked at Mike now, charmingly. "You know I'm just fucking with you, right?"

And again, without waiting for an answer: "What are you then, a future...accountant?"

"Engineer," I said.

She flipped her eyes up at me, annoyed. Then she turned her attention back to Mike's arm. She was moving it around with surprisingly gentle manners. "Close enough. Engineer. Math."

Someone hissed a laugh behind me.

"So tell me why, since you're good at this kind of thing, put your arm like this...there...don't move okay, no matter how much blood comes spurting out. I'm just kidding, tell me why..." she squinted at something on her gun and then sucked in her breath and nodded at Mike as if they were conspiring together.

She leaned over him, and spread her gloved fingers across his skin in the most sexual manner I have ever seen. "Here?"

Mike nodded but she didn't seem to care about his answer. "Ready? Good." She started in. Mike went white but held still, and I was certain his loss of color was more because of her than because of any pain. She was terrifying.

"Why is my bank account always fucking empty?" she said, suddenly finishing her previous question.

The big laughter cackled across the room again. A low rumble of additional laughter followed it. "Fuck if I know, Frankie. It ain't because you pay anyone back."

Frankie steadied herself on Mike's arm and flipped her raggedly cut hair as she turned to her attacker. I was in her way so she moved me with her eyes. I stepped to one side.

"I pay you back, Big Pete, with my fucking charm."

A snort. I still didn't dare to look behind me and see who Big Pete was.

Frankie's eyes lifted up to mine, and she winked.

And then she started in on Mike's tattoo.

"You here for moral support or you some kind of suburban service duo, gonna fucking write this up on the internet or some shit?" she said after about ten minutes and the better part of the equal sign, which she started first.

For a moment, I had no idea she was talking to me. I was mesmerized by the tattoo process, and the high-pitched whine of her gun, and the easy way she was drawing and wiping, calm like a surgeon. I was also thinking about what a fucking asshole Davie was sending me to this place.

She paused, her gun hovering over Mike's skin. "You."

Mike jumped a little.

"I'm talking to you. Tall-dark-and-handsome."

Mike had been opening his mouth, but it was obvious that was not for him.

"You an engineer, too?" she said, not waiting for the answer to her first question.

"Not yet."

In high school, I had been a fucking nerd. But since entering the hallowed halls of the Engineering Department at UCLA, I had floated into a calm, cool demeanor that surprised even me. My own voice surprised me. It was like I had found a way to channel Davie.

I just didn't believe it myself.

She made a sound through her nose and continued with her work.

And then, after five minutes:

"You're stressing me out. Go sit over there."

No indication of where 'there' was. Mike looked up at me.

"You'll be fine, good buddy," I said, in my relaxed tone.

I took 'there' to be the single chair by the door, which was occupied by a large, rolling waves of brightly colored skin, spilling out of a black t-shirt and black shorts, ending at the bottom in two Doc Martins of Nazi-esque appearance and extreme wear. At the top of this pile of flesh was a mean, bulldog face. The flesh-man's small, closely set eyes targeted me and I looked away quickly.

"Hall!" Frankie's voice, even when she screeched, was smooth like a good, expensive drink. "Get me some wipes out the back and give that kid the chair. I need him outta my face."

The mountain of flesh erupted from the chair. The man smiled, flashing a set of gold teeth at me, and did an elaborate wave, as though for royalty, toward the chair.

I tried to look cool as I sat down.

"It's pretty cool," Mike said, holding his arm like he'd been shot.

It was a stupid fucking tattoo, but Mike was a strange guy. He had really, really wanted it. In retrospect, he clearly was semi-autistic. He had Asperger's before everyone started talking about it, but then so did half the department. I had befriended him largely because he was a fucking maniac programming, and he saved me hundreds of hours of work. The more time I spent around him, the more he seemed like a stray dog I had taken in.

"I'm sorry that place was so...weird," I said.

He looked genuinely surprised. "Was it?"

Like I said, Asperger's.

I slapped him on the back. "Great. So listen you cool to drive yourself home? I've got some stuff to do down here."

"Bye."

Like I said.

I made sure he went the right way out of the parking lot, and when I turned around Frankie was standing right in front of me.

She had a cigarette curled underneath her whole hand, and she bypassed her lips to hold it next to her ear. She suspended that arm with the other. "You staying back for a tat?"

I shook my head.

"What's wrong with that kid?"

"Asperger's."

"Like Rain Man." She smiled, and brought the cigarette to her lips. "Smoke?"

She was shaking her head from side to side already, her eyes wide and her mouth grinning, before my lips even formed the word 'no.'

"Wanna fuck?"

She gave the same knowing shake of the head before I managed to move my own head slowly left and right. And the only reason I was doing that is because she was scaring the hell out of me.

I might as well have come from a different planet. The girls in the engineering department were about as forward as hibernating mice.

The rest of the women in the world seemed like hibernating mice compared to this one.

She shrugged. She smoked the rest of her cigarette without saying anything, and then smiled beguilingly as she dropped the butt on the sidewalk. "Catcha later then."

I replayed the scene so many times in my mind that I would be surprised if I was wrong about anything she did. Her final gesture was a smile that made it seem as though she winked at me.

I watched her shaggy brown hair swinging lightly, just at the nape of her neck. Her lean body moved with a fluid grace, and I captured every second of her walk. A pantomime of gangliness, her long legs barely impacting the sidewalk, like a nymph. Her low nasal voice told at least two people to fuck off, before she turned the corner, gave a last glance at me, and disappeared.

That was the first time I met Renee. I wouldn't see her again in the flesh for a year.

But I fucked her all the time in my mind.

RENEE

I was thinking about Renee, who I kept in my imagination as Frankie the tattoo artist for a year or more, as I sat on the edge of one of the two double beds while Sara showered after the wedding.

And showered and showered and showered.

It was pretty obvious that she was trying to blow me off for sex, and I was honestly so tanked it was an impending disaster, but something about the way she was doing it, by staying in the shower for forty minutes, made me want to wait her out.

Thinking about Renee, anyway, was giving me ideas, and my cock was getting hard in spite of the huge amount of vodka I had consumed.

The next time I saw Renee, she stepped on my netbook and ground her stiletto heel into it.

It was Mike's birthday, and we had gone to a trashy bar that attempted at very turn to mimic Coyote Ugly without getting sued for copyright infringement. Instead of biker-country trashy, it was urban-corporate trashy, which all amounted to basically the same thing, just fewer cowboy hats.

Don't get me wrong. The girls were hot and they ended up on the tables pretty frequently, and if you were lucky enough to have a seat at the bar, as I did, you could look right up their short skirts and see either lacy black panties or none at all, and if you didn't look up, you still got a lot of nice, sculpted calves in strappy shoes, right at eye level.

The girls at Tin Roof (as in Cat On A...) loved Mike. I wasn't sure what he had done, but he had become sort of a mascot. They flocked to him like it was a strip club and he had a huge bankroll, neither one of which was true. They bought him drinks, and then rubbed his hair.

It was scandalous. The reason they liked him was because he was utterly confused and harmless. He just smiled politely, looked at their wrists or their earlobes or something, and left a huge tip.

I had gotten my netbook out to check on some idea I had for a class, and then I had set it on the table because something had caught my attention. I didn't notice the music coming on, I didn't notice the girls dancing on the table.

I heard Mike shout out my name, and I turned around. The whole scene rose up in my consciousness just then, and so I reached back to grab the notebook when:

Crack.

I stared at the foot, a nice tan one with black polish on the toes, and a tattoo on the ankle of a dragon. My eyes went up, the whole statuesque leg, all the way to the shadowy place underneath the short black skirt.

Above all of this sexy flesh hovered two narrow, dark eyes, looking right down at mine.

I recognized her instantly. I had spent so much time thinking about her that I was no longer sure about whether or not the things I imagined had happened or not.

She grinned, that same devil-may-care grin, and lifted her foot up. As though it were nothing, she balanced on her stilletoed heel, and lifted the foot she had jammed into my notepad to her standing knee.

The move afforded me a nice view of what was underneath her skirt – just her legs, and the place where they met in a tiny patch of silky brown hair. Shaved almost to oblivion. I caught a glimpse of her pink slit, and then I quickly diverted my eyes back to hers.

She shrugged. The music was blaring and the other girls on the bar were bumping into her, but she barely reacted: she easily adjusted her balance as though there were nothing to it, standing like a flamingo on a slippery bar in five-inch heels while being jostled by sorority girls.

“Sorry,” she said, but her face told me she wasn't especially.

And then she put her foot down and crouched, so that her bare snatch was right in front of my hands, and visible if I looked. Which I didn't.

“I know you, don't I?” she screamed into my ear.

Her dark brown eyes moved back and forth, looking into mine. Then she smiled and tapped the notebook. She said something but it was swallowed up by the sound, and she stood up, spinning as she did, and went back to dancing.

I looked down at the notebook.

The screen was cracked and it was useless.

When I looked back up, she was behind the bar, pouring herself a drink. She looked down at the bottles, to ask me if I wanted one.

She placed the drink in front of me, on a napkin, and sashayed with her own drink out from behind the bar.

I stood up, and followed her.

She went outside, and by the time I reached her she had her cigarette lit. She blew smoke in my direction and smiled as I approached her.

“You new here?” I said.

She looked back in the bar, as though she needed to remind herself. “Oh I don't work here.”

She still had her drink in her hand. She raised it in a mocking cheers.

“You trashed my notebook.”

“Sorry.”

“I do know you,” I told her.

She looked up at the sky and blew her smoke at it with an amused hiss. “People say that to me all the time.”

It was three weeks from graduation. I had already done everything I needed to do, really needed to do, to graduate. My last exam was in the bag. I was already starting to feel the lightness that comes at the end of the semester. A nice breeze was blowing off the water, and it was not too hot.

Frankie leaned against the wall and her eyes were inviting like the weather, like all the promises of what lay ahead. She was terrifying and she was sexy as hell, and even though I should have run from her like she was the plague, I found myself saying:

“You did a tat for a friend of mine.”

She raised her eyebrows and gave me look, as if to say that this piece of information helped her about as much as saying I was six feet tall.

I pointed through the window. “The weird kid. A math equation.”

She brought her cigarette to her lips, and she teased me with her eyes.

For a long while she looked confused, and Renee really is an excellent actress.

Then:

“I know who you are, frat boy.”

A chill made its way through me.

I tried to be cool.

“I’m not in a frat.”

“I know that, too.”

We stood there, looking at each other. I was so strung up I could actually feel my cock stretching apart. No girl had ever gotten me this worked up before.

“I’m Greg,” I said, stupidly.

“Renee.”

Renee?

“I thought your name was Frankie.”

She shrugged. She was still smiling, still boring through me. She had a foot up against the glass window, and her ass was probably visible to everyone behind her. Her long arm folded up and unfolded across her stomach as she moved the cigarette to her mouth and then down by her leg to flick the ashes. More smoke. “It was.”

I cocked my head.

“It’s a sign of stable mental health,” she said sarcastically. “Changing your name all the time.”

Looking back on it, I should have run.

I just stood there, grinning idiotically. Unsure of what to do with my hands. I put them in my pockets.

“I’m not going to make the first move this time, frat boy,” she said. She tipped her head to the side. She tossed the cigarette and knocked back the drink in her hand.

She threw the glass in the gutter and it shattered. I resisted the urge to flinch.

“I’m leaving,” she teased, in a sing-song voice.

It was now or never, I could see that. I had been fantasizing about this girl since I met her. The night was warm and I was young...

Her legs were moving away from me.

And then that voice, the one that wasn’t mine, spoke confidently for me:

“Want to fuck?”

She had put her hand on the door and she started to pull it open, so I was sure all was lost. A knife of disappointment went through me. But as she backed up to open the door, she pretended to stumble backwards, and she let go of the handle. With her very agile, dancer's abilities, she fell backward against me. Trusting that I would catch her.

She was laughing. Her legs and arms were dramatically akimbo. "Let's go," she said.

She lifted herself easily out of my arms of her own strength, and she was facing me by the time she stood up. "I have to show you how sorry I am about your computer." She walked her fingers up my chest.

I had had sex with five girls by the time I was twenty-two, which is astronomical by engineering standards. And it had all been pretty standard stuff: fumbling around for breasts, unceremoniously undressing to screw on a couch. Mostly missionary, the occasional drunk doggy style. The occasional drunk blow job, but the kind that girls gave up on halfway through and we went back to fucking.

Renee was a whole different universe.

She strutted to my car, and I had barely turned on to the road when she reached over and placed her hand – a long-boned, sculpted hand with black polish on the nails – on my cock. No screwing around with my thigh or my knee: right on my cock. She found the form of it as though I weren't wearing anything, and with an easiness that made her seem professional.

My cock was already pulsing and probably purple – I do not actually remember my dick ever being this hard before.

"Not here," I practically panted like a dog, "we have to find a....a road or something." We were in the middle of fucking Los Angeles.

I felt like an eighteen-year old again. I drove recklessly, with her hand on my cock and her long legs stretched out on the dashboard. She didn't wear a seatbelt, and she rolled down the window to smoke. She was lying in my car like the spread in a men's magazine, one hand on my cock, another lazily out the window dangling her cigarette. She looked straight ahead.

I finally gave up. I parked the car on a street that was probably even less private than where we came from, but it was quiet for now. She flicked the cigarette out onto the pavement.

She turned immediately to me, and with her expert fingers she unzipped my pants and pulled my cock out in a fluid movement. She looked at it for only a second, almost as though she were scanning it. And then she leaned over, and guided me to her mouth.

I had to put my hands on the ceiling of the car to steady myself as she took me inside of her mouth. She pressed her lips against my skin just so, and inside of her mouth she was wet and warm and she just kept going, without hesitation, all the way into her throat. So wet, so soft.

And then she began to do the most extraordinary thing – sucking, really sucking, but all the way down the shaft of my cock, down to the base. Her cheeks hollowed in with her efforts, but I couldn't look down at her or I was going to explode. I pressed harder into the roof of the car and squeezed my eyes shut.

“Jesus!” I hissed.

She began to move her head up and down, and I put the fingers of my right hand in her soft hair.

Her head moved with my hand, and a desire to do the things I was never brave enough to do with other girls came over me.

I began slowly at first, almost as if I did not believe it. A little push, a little nudge down my shaft. I felt her throat spasm slightly and heard a little gurgle. But she did not try to pull away, and come up for air, and wipe her lips and then try to have missionary sex as all my other girlfriends had. She let her throat open up further, let me push her down onto my cock even more. Until she gagged a little.

She wanted more though.

I grasped her head and pushed lightly down on my cock again. She just opened up, and swallowed me.

And so I pulled, and then pushed, gently.

She let me go all the way inside of her, even though she gagged a little. It was a secret favorite of mine, in porn and my own fantasies, this gagging. The throaty, sticky sound of a cock in the back of a woman's throat. Who knew why, that in particular?

And here she was, happy to make it. Happy to keep making it.

But she didn't stop there. I felt a light, tickling caress on my balls. It took me a moment to realize that she was moving her tongue between her lower lip and my cock to lap at my balls when she was at the base of my cock.

I groaned, and buried my other handful of fingers in her hair.

I looked down now. The sight was so tremendously hot and satisfying. To have a head in both hands, a wet, pliant mouth over my shaft, and to pull and push her over me however I pleased. It gave me a rush, and I could feel I was close to coming.

I moved her head faster.

There was no objection. Just submission. The word rose up through the haze of hot aching in my cock, through the blood pounding in my ears: submission.

My cock hardened to the point that it felt stretched, and I felt something snake through me. A desire to dominate – but stronger than I had ever felt it before.

I really have no idea, up until then, what it was like to have perfect willingness to be this lewd, this sexual; a human head in my hands that I could pound onto my cock however I liked.

I began to move her head furiously over my cock. The sensation itself, of her mouth and her throat over my dick, was incredible. I was getting drunk on it the longer it happened, pushing her harder, forcing her down further.

When I came it almost came out of nowhere. I yelled and released her head, pushing my hands up against the ceiling of the car again. Released, she was free to lift herself off of my cock, but she didn't. She went all the way to the base of me again, and her throat moved in waves of massaging swallows, almost like she was pressing the cum from my cock. She swallowed it all, and then slid slowly off of my shaft, with a wet, slurping sound.

A tiny bit of spit and come dribbled onto my balls. She placed her lips on them, and slurped up the cum. As though sipping up hot tea.

Then she flopped back in the seat and placed a hand by her cheek. I was panting and shocked, still pressing my hands to the ceiling. She opened the glove box and pulled out the owner's manual, flipping through it with disinterest. "Five-o coming this way, better not look like a john," she said, without looking up.

When I didn't move she gave an icy stare to my hands, and then to my pants. I hastily zipped them up.

The cop stopped at our car anyway. He surveyed the scene in front of him. He had seen it all before.

He asked for my driver's license.

“He can't ask you for that,” Renee said, flipping another page of the manual. Her leg was crossed at the knee now, and the cop would have a good view of her pussy if he looked the right way.

“You got an ID, miss?” he said to Renee.

“You got a good reason to be asking for it?” She flipped another page of the manual.

The cop sighed, and stood up to put his flashlight on my ID. It was pretty clear he didn't give a shit and was sorry he had looked inside the car.

“What's the situation here?” he said, handing my license back to me.

Renee showed him the owner's manual, displaying it to him with a smirk.

“Got a car problem?”

I was sweating. “Yeah, yep. No, it's fine. I have...”

The cop squinted into the car. “Soon as you get that fixed...and I mean, as soon as you get the car fixed, you'd better find someplace else to go.”

“Yes sir,” I said.

“You got it, Officer,” Renee charmed in cheerfully.

The cop moved on, muttering something under his breath.

Renee watched him out the back window. “Not bad,” she said, as though appraising him in a beauty pageant.

I stared at her.

She smiled.

“Let's go to your place,” she said. “Or do you live in a dorm or some shit?”

I had a lot of roommates. The place was trashed.

“It's -”

“Fine,” she said. “Mine it is.”

There was no way for me to do anything but follow her lead.

When we got to her place – a dump worse than mine, but it seemed it was her own private dump – she opened the fridge and handed me a beer, twisting off the top and tossing the cap at a trash can with a tomboy-like agility. She brought the bottle to her lips.

I was doing a lot of staring. I had no idea what I was supposed to do with a girl like this.

“What kind of porn do you watch?” she said abruptly.

Was she fucking serious?

Was this actually fucking happening to me?

“Do you want a shot?” she said, before I could answer, which I'd noticed was a thing she did. She got glasses without waiting for my reply, which came in the form of a shrug. She had the vodka poured and was handing it to me in a cool ten seconds. She handed the shot to me between two strong fingers, the other shot squeezed next to it. She tapped my shot glass as I took it.

“So?” she said. “What kind?”

I had no idea how to answer this question. I had no idea what she was looking for.

“Uh...”

She was sucking on the end of her beer bottle like it was a cock, and I found myself incredibly aroused. Even though I had just come, and even though she was scaring the crap out of me, I was getting high on her intoxicating body, her tattoos, all the lewd sexuality that seemed to just ooze out of her. She was twisting a little, and she pulled the bottle from her mouth so that it gave a slight pop.

Everything she did seemed laced with sex.

“Shy?” She gave me a sort of haughty snort. Then she moved closer to me.

“Let me see if I can guess.” She still had her beer, and her body was inches from mine. I could feel how hot her skin was, and she magnetized the air between us, so it felt as though she was stroking the whole front of my body somehow as she twisted her torso left and right, teasing me. Her eyes glittered with mischief.

“Sci fi stuff?”

I managed to roll my eyes.

“Tentacles. Eels. That kind of thing.”

I had never seen anything like that, so I tried to play it cool, while making a note to myself to look it up.

She was smiling. I could tell that she already knew what I wanted. I could tell that she had me all sized up, and she just wanted me to say it.

“Kiddy porn.”

“Please.”

Another grin. “You don't give me a bi vibe, so none of that. Pets.”

“Pets?”

“Like girls you keep like a dog. On a leash. Eating out of a dog bowl. Woof, woof.”

I shook my head. Even though none of this stuff was my thing, the way she was talking about it was turning me on. My cock felt like it was going to split again.

“You like femdom then.”

“Not really.”

She was practically laughing now.

I mean, what else is left, and what do most guys watch? It wasn't like it was rocket science. I just couldn't actually get the situation under control enough to say: I watch girls getting fucked in the ass or sprayed with tons of cum.

But that was just fine, because Renee already knew what I watched. She walked into her living room, and turned on the TV as she walked past it. She got onto the table on all fours, and adjusted her TV with the remote control in her hand.

The way she was propped up, her skirt lifted almost over the top of her ass, and I could see everything: her nearly-bare slit, glistening with her excitement. Almost, peeking out of the shadows, her asshole.

I was utterly paralyzed. I knew that's what she wanted, what she was used to. What she liked.

The TV screen filled with skin-colored shapes, and the sounds of porn filled the room. She had it on loud and made no effort to mute or subdue the throaty gasps and moans that came from one of the characters on the screen.

I looked past her, and tried to figure out what I was seeing. The screen was split, so that you could see the thick cock of a male actor, moving in and out of a stretched asshole, and on the other side, the contorted face of the same girl, looking right at the camera, moaning and gasping and saying it was too big and it hurt too much.

It was exactly the kind of thing I liked to watch.

A cool freeze was coming over my limbs, even while my cock was getting so hot and so hard that it was almost painful.

And then I looked over to the table.

Renee's skirt was down at her knees, and her heels were spread apart, but her knees were pressed together. Her long legs, bare and toned, ended now at her ass – small but firm and rounded. And between them, her light-brown hair, her engorged pink pussy, and her black fingernails at the end of her slender hand. Her hand was draped over the top of her ass. Her finger moved from her clit to her asshole – a tight, dull pink ring. And then I watched, my mouth open and my cock throbbing at me like it had been pounded with an anvil, as the dark black fingernail disappeared inside of the little eye.

First one, then another.

Her asshole opened up easily, as though she did it all the time, and her two fingers disappeared, all the way to her knuckle, while the girl on the TV moaned. “Oh my god, oh, it hurts, it's too big!” she half-screamed.

Renee looked back at me, over her shoulder and her tipped-up ass, and her two fingers embedded in her asshole. She spread them apart, and her ass gaped open for me.

I realized at that moment that I had not been breathing. I gasped for air.

Renee said nothing, she simply remained there, her ass tilted up toward me. Looking at me.

The girl moaned.

Somehow I managed to set my beer down. I walked toward her.

I could see her ass now, and the soft pink flesh inside, beyond the ring of her anus. Her fingers spread it apart, showing it to me. Her pussy was dripping onto her thighs, and the sweet scent rose up to my nostrils. The sounds of the TV only heightened the experience, sending waves that were almost painful through my crotch and into the tip of my cock. I unzipped my pants and let them fall, shaking them off of one leg.

I had no idea what I was doing. I actually couldn't even believe this was happening in front of me.

Her eyes met mine and she seemed to have some kind of control over me, drawing me close, pulling me in. At the same time, she seemed annoyed by my hesitancy.

I moved closer to her, reaching out a hand to touch her smooth, hard ass. Her fingers were still inside of her, and I watched them, transfixed.

I looked over quickly at the TV screen. The girl was crying and her face was twisted in the bizarre combination of pain and pleasure that porn stars master so perfectly.

Renee took advantage of the moment to withdraw from herself, grasp my hand and guide it to her ass. She slipped my thumb in for me, and I widened my eyes as the heat of her body overtook me. The tightness of her anus squeezed at my outermost part, but the rest of my finger was hot and felt like it was touching superheated silk as it slid in deeper, deeper, all the way to my joint.

“Get your cock wet first,” she whispered. “And then you can fuck me in the ass.”

I started to pull my thumb out, but she held my hand in place.

I guided my cock, which was paining me now, to the feathery, drenched hair that surrounded her pussy. I found the softest part of her gash, and I leaned in toward her. I savored the molten wetness that engulfed the tip of my cock, and then I nearly fell inside of her – she was so wet and slippery that I glided in. Her pussy flowered open for me and swallowed me up in its wet heat. I closed my eyes. I didn't want to come just yet.

I was afraid to move much, but she began to grind against me, pushing me deeper. “Oh, fuck,” she moaned. “Oh, fuck, you have a nice big cock. Put it my ass and stretch me open.”

Her words very nearly tipped me over the edge. I felt that intense, consuming high almost cresting, but I pulled my cock out in time and saved myself from going over the edge.

She made a tortured moaning sound as I pulled my thumb out of her ass. It was certainly drier inside of her, and not knowing what else to do, I drew some of her honeyed juices up to her ass, rubbing the ring of her hole lightly with my thumb.

She moaned appreciatively.

Inside, my chest felt like it was being squeezed tightly in a vice. I couldn't believe she was asking me to do this.

My cock was so painfully swollen now I almost wondered if I would make it inside of her. I lifted the tip and placed it on her small ring. It was pulsing slightly, almost kissing the tip of my cock. I shuddered.

I pushed forward, and she whimpered a little but threw her head back and told me to keep going.

And then she just opened up for me. My cock was suddenly encased in her scorching hot ass-flesh, squeezed tight by the ring of her anus as it passed along my cock, up, up, up to the base.

I looked up at the ceiling. I wanted a breather so I could enjoy her just a little bit more before I came. But Renee herself began to move back and forth on my cock, and I heard her voice rise up in an anguished, sexy moan. “Oh fuck,” she said. “Come on, fuck me. Fuck me good and hard in the ass like a little whore!”

She had a hand on her pussy, and I figured she was playing with her clit, but she used a few of her fingers to tickle my balls.

Seriously?

I thrust a few times, a little hesitant to actually 'fuck her like a little whore,' since no one had ever said anything like that to me before.

I could hear a sloshing as she stroked her clit, and then her ass clenched around my cock as she squealed and came. Her juices flowed warm against my balls. I rammed myself deep into her ass, and then my own orgasm shook through me.

“That's it,” she coaxed. “Fill my ass full of come.”

Jesus fucking Christ.

I stood over her, while the moaning, crying girl on the porno kept going, whining about the size of the guy's cock in her ass. I couldn't move.

Renee tossed her hair as she looked back at me. She gave me a wicked smile. Then she rose up on her knees, and pressed her back against my chest. My cock slipped out of her slowly, and bounced against my leg. Our thighs were covered in liquid.

“I'm going to take a shower. Make me a drink, would you?”

AFTER THE WEDDING

I closed my eyes.

Back at Davie's wedding.

The water cut off and signaled the end of Sara's long shower. After thinking about Renee, my cock was hard as stone in spite of all the drinking I'd done, and the fact that we were up way past our bedtime.

Sara was wrapped in a white hotel towel, her hair up in that funny towel-but women do, and her lovely legs were uncharacteristically exposed, as though she had put on the type of dress Renee would probably have preferred to wear to her wedding.

Sara gave me a displeased glance. Or perhaps it was disdainful. Maybe just tired. "I didn't expect you to still be up," she said.

I know.

"Oh, but I am," I said. I did my best to imitate Dracula, but it probably sounded like I was just extremely drunk. Sara ignored me, either way, and sat on the edge of her bed. As she sat, the towel lifted and revealed her round bottom. She started to apply lotion to her arms.

I took a good look at my wife, to appreciate what I had. I needed to shake the memories of Renee, and Renee's hot, sweaty, animal preferences for sex, from my mind.

Sara was everything that Renee was not. She was fair – porcelain skin, that blushed a pale rose when she was embarrassed or angry. Her eyes were a light, Nordic blue, and her features were full and plump. She had a full figure, which she detested and kept whittled to its absolute minimum through hours of daily exercise.

As for her personality, she was demure and classy. She had spent the first thirteen years of her life in Georgia, among girls who still rode ponies and went to debutante balls, and even though she had left all of that behind at age twelve, and never gone to her debutante ball, the high-class southern drawl and the haughty classiness never vanished completely. She spoke in quiet tones and always had the perfect, diplomatic thing to say.

I hopped across the space between our beds and bounced toward her. Her lovely shoulders were exposed, and I moved in, placing my lips on her neck first.

“Gregory,” she said. In that tone. The one that was always followed by, I have an early morning, or I'm really tired.

I was too drunk to be so easily discouraged, and, if I was being honest, I was too hotted up from thinking about my brother's new wife, to be shut down on the first go.

“I am still up, and I want to taste your blood,” I said, continuing with Dracula impression. Sara fought a faint smile at the corner of her mouth and stroked more lotion into her leg.

“You are drunk,” she said, but there was a hint of laughter in her voice.

I moved to her arm, kissing her down the length of it. “Drunk on love,” I said, maintaining my shitty accent.

I got a full smile for this, even if she did roll her eyes a little.

I was making progress.

A flash of Renee's gaping asshole fluttered through my mind, and my cock pulsed with need. This gave me the audacity to say, while stroking Sara's arm:

“I don't know. I'm feeling sort of...romantic after all that wedding business.”

I meant it. Did I mean it? Who knows, I was wasted.

Sara is the type of kind, sweet woman who totally goes for this kind of thing. “Awwwww,” she cooed. She reached out and tousled my hair.

I was in.

I moved in to give her a kiss, and I tried very hard, very hard, to keep Renee's wry smile, her quick, clever, mischievous grin out my mind. I tried not to think of the things she had done with her mouth, not just to me but to hundreds of men.

Sara, Sara, Sara, I told myself repeatedly.

Sara had a perfect mouth. It was full, and pink, and pristine. Sara, the mother of my children, had only sucked on my cock, and not even that much. She had certainly never, as I had seen Renee do, licked the cum out of another girl's ass.

So I should enjoy kissing her, I thought. Enjoy the cleanliness and the purity of my angelic wife.

I moved my hand down to her towel, and loosened it from around her breasts.

Even after ten years of marriage and two kids, Sara reacted to my first moves like a high school virgin. It was sometimes a turn on.

It is always a turn on, Greg. You love your wife and you love that she is a shy, almost virginal Georgian peach who blushes when you touch her breasts.

She had this way of sort of moving away from me without really moving away from me. Every time, it took a little bit of coaxing, a little bit of convincing – just a tiny bit, mind you, but definitely it was there.

I pushed her gently back onto the bed and pulled the towel away.

Then I began the usual ritual, the very sweet and intimate ritual we had. I kissed her body, up and down. Her nipples hardened in my mouth, and she squirmed a little, working her fingers into my hair. I moved down, and on the first pass I went quickly past the golden prize between her legs. I moved to the inside of her thighs, down to her knee. This was the nicest part, because she liked me to suck on the back of her knee, and she would lift her leg for me to do it. It always made her twist and gasp, and the scent of her excitement would release into the air, wafting towards me.

Normally, I would take some time to kiss her thighs, to work inward, ever-inward, and to pull apart her light-colored hair, her sweet pink lips, and find her clitoris. It usually took a while, some gentle persuasion, to get her wet and ready for me to fall inside her.

Tonight though, I was almost bursting. I sat up on my knees after teasing the back of her knee, and I yanked her by the legs toward me. Her face registered surprise, and her arms drifted above her head. I pulled her legs apart and jerked her up toward me, toward my cock.

“Greg!” she said, but it was neither a protest nor a sanction. It was just surprise.

In my mind I was thinking of Renee's hot ass. I'm sure my brother had his cock squeezed tight right now by her molten pink ass flesh, and her tight little ring...

I pulled Sara's pussy over my cock, and her eyes widened. She was wet – not as much as usual, not as much as the whole elaborate ritual would have made her – but after I fell on top of her and grasped her arms, pinning them above her head, I could feel her welling up with juices. I slammed into her, trying hard to think about Sara, Sara my wife.

She made a sound that was very unusual for her, kind of a cat-like moan. Her hips began to move underneath me. I tightened my grip on her wrists and she closed her eyes, as if somewhat in pain, but her pussy grew tighter with my grip. I began to fuck her, hard and dirty, and I felt her squeezing me. Her abdomen tightened.

I went over the edge when she mewled again, and I fucked my cum into her harder than I had fucked her for a long time. She howled as she came a little later, and I could feel her legs shaking, wrapping up around me.

I released her hands, which I had squeezed so fiercely they were bright red. The color faded from them and she pulled them to her chest.

She seemed a little embarrassed. She smiled almost shyly, and rolled over on her side, so that we could spoon.

A put my arms around her and kissed her neck.

“Sorry about that,” I said. ‘I guess I got a little carried away.’”

I knew what I wanted her to say. I wanted her to say, it's okay, it was hot.

Or did I?

Sara sighed. “It's okay,” she said.

And nothing more.

I would have lain awake thinking about it all: thinking about the fact that Sara so obviously liked what we had just done, about Renee, about...

But I was drunk, and I fell asleep.

When I woke up the next morning, Sara had moved to the next bed and was sleeping neatly – she did everything neatly – in a cream-colored silk nightie, her arm draped over the comforter like she was in a sleep ad.

My own sheets were damp and I had obviously flipped over on my back, taken up the whole bed, and snored away the night.

My dreams had been terrible. Renee, floating in and out of them, screaming at me, running over a dog I didn't have, sucking my cock, me feeling guilty about and telling Sara, who I found in bed with David...really horrible stuff. It was all inside my head, refusing to pack up and get the bad taste out my mouth.

My mouth. God, it tasted terrible.

I rolled over and watched Sara sleeping for a while. She, of course, had probably gotten up and showered again, put on her nightie, brushed her hair, brushed her teeth, and now looked like an angel.

I loved Sara. The dream about cheating on her with Renee was really bothering me.

I watched for a while, trying to absorb some of her sweetness, and then I sat up. I needed a shower. I needed a shower for the inside of my brain, but the one in the hotel would have to do.

I turned on the water and hopped in before it was even completely warm. The ice-cold water gave me the jolt I needed, and the cobwebs started to clear.

I placed my hand on the wall and turned the water down to cold again after a while. I leaned forward and let the water cascade over my head and shoulders. The pain was intense, but I could feel myself straightening out. Like getting ironed. I let the pain push out my dream, I let it push out my hangover.

Just a few more hours, and then we would be home. We could make excuses for the rest of our lives not to see those two, and all of this would be over, and everything in my mind would go back to normal.

The water, inexplicably, turned scalding hot, and I jumped back, screaming like a girl.

Ominous.

SARA FLEMING

I had gone to high school for one year with Sara Fleming. At the time she had been a freshman, and so there was no way in hell I was going anywhere near her. She had looked like a kid, at the time, but everyone could see she was going to turn into exactly what she was: a very hot soccer mom.

I just didn't expect to be the mom-making part of that equation.

And then I had gone to school. I had studied and had a few drab girlfriends, downloaded a lot of porn, and spent a very lonely four years getting a great degree.

Then I had met Renee.

Things had been lovely with Renee until they were not, which was right from the start or never at all, depending on how you looked at it. Just when Renee was reaching her craziest, and I was thinking of getting out, I ran into Sara Fleming.

I actually ran into Sara Fleming.

With my car.

There's nothing like the sound of hitting a human being with your car. Nothing at all.

I hadn't hit her very hard. She was crossing the street, I was making a right turn. No one ever walked there, and it was an unusually rainy day, and she was clad in gray and black.

Until I hit her. She spilled over the hood of the car, and the black and gray overcoat opened and her flowered dress spilled out like blood on the hood of the car.

"Jesus!" I screamed.

I jumped out of the car and ran to her. "You okay?"

Sara pushed herself off the hood and looked down at herself. She was wet but I couldn't see any blood.

I admit, the moment she seemed okay, like a total dick I started checking her out. She was not dressed exceptionally sexily – she never is – but her very large breasts pressed against her flowered dress, and I caught a glimpse of the dark valley between them as she lifted herself from the hood.

Her champagne-blond hair was damp and clung to her face in places, because it was quite rainy. She looked down at herself, and I admired her face: full lips, cheeks blushed a pale rose color.

"I'll call an ambulance," I said, after staring at her for a moment. I put out a hand to her shoulder. "You okay? Does anything feel broken? You want to sit in my car?"

Then I heard the drawl. When her ice-blue eyes met mine, I felt the fingers of recognition reaching around in my mind.

"I think I'm okay. I..." she looked down at herself again, as though expecting to see herself bleeding all over the car. And then she started crying.

I took out my phone.

She covered her face, and then she reached out a hand, and held my arm. "No, oh my god, no, don't call an ambulance. I'm just...I get so..."

I stood there with the phone in my hand. She had her slender fingers – manicured, French manicured, no chipped black or extra-long nail for coke – covering her face, and she was crying with a sort of wild hysteria underneath it, like she was laughing. Her face went red.

I looked her over, to make sure she wasn't dripping blood somewhere.

"I think we better call someone," I said. I wasn't being super convincing. Who wants to call an ambulance to a scene like this? Also, even though it was ten in the morning, and I had showered and gone for a run to get the evening before out of my system, I'm sure there was some legal way I was over a limit of some kind.

She waved her hand around quickly. "No, don't. Don't call anyone." She pulled her hands away away from her face. "I get this tick, where I get so upset about..." she motioned to the car.

By now traffic was piling up. People were starting to flip us off out the window, and pretty soon they'd be shouting lewd comments.

"Let me at least drive you somewhere," I said. "Where are you going?"

She smiled. She held a hand up to stop the rain from dripping in her eyes, and pointed to the campus, on the other side of the street. "Just there." And then, her eyes blinking away the rain with what is best described as childlike sweetness, as though she were sorry for troubling the rain, she said, “Hey...don't I know you?”

There are ways in which the people we are around make us into someone different. Renee made me one thing, and Sara made me the kind of person I wanted to be. She made me the smooth and orderly engineer, the clean-cut guy who opened doors for ladies. The kind of guy who said:

“Sara Fleming,” in a low, gentle voice.

She smiled. A clean smile, a smile that revealed exactly what it was supposed to and what it was. She was thrilled that I knew her. She gave a cheerful chortle, wrinkling up her nose. “You remember me!” she exclaimed.

I opened the passenger door. “We better get out of here,” I told her, pointing with my chin at the traffic.

Sara fucking Fleming. She had turned out exactly as we had all imagined.

She plopped in the car and I ran around the front in the rain.

I slammed the door behind me. “We better get out of here before we get mobbed.”

She laughed. She was delighted with anything I said. I only had to say nice, pleasant things and she fluttered and laughed, like a butterfly on gas.

“I have to tell you this,” she said excitedly, when we were safely away from the intersection and no one was honking at us anymore. She bit her lip, and she was flushed with excitement.

Young, fresh, rose-colored excitement.

I smiled at her.

Sara Fleming. Champagne and porcelain and ice-blue Sara Fleming, with her huge, pillowy tits well concealed under a flowered dress.

“I had a huge crush on you in high school,” she said. And then she actually blushed – when Sara blushes, the color creeps up high on her cheekbone, a bright pink like she's been running on a cold day. She lowered her eyes.

I told her...what? I can't even remember what I said. Nothing clever, nothing witty. That makes my day, Sara Fleming. Or, Me, too.

Something simple.

Something sweet.

And Sara Fleming blushed more, and looked at her lap. We drove to a coffee shop, and then to dinner. In my car she pressed her knees together nervously, and giggled. And then I dropped her off at her apartment and gave her a kiss, because somewhere in the evening she confided to me that she was still a virgin.

THE NIGHT BEFORE

Sara was – is – amazing. I'm thrilled I married her and our marriage has been a great one.

So the next thing I'm going to say should not be taken wrongly: I probably wouldn't have dated Sara so seriously, or asked her to marry me just three months later, if I had not just been through the wringer the night before I hit her with my car.

And the week before.

And the month before.

But especially the night before.

It was foggy that night, which is not particularly relevant or important but rather something I remember: a hot, dense fog was hanging around the city, making everything strange.

Renee had called me, asking me to meet her at her apartment. It was an unusual request, made early in the evening, before I even left work.

I was suspicious immediately.

Well, in fact, I was suspicious of everything Renee did, because every single gesture, every glance, every piece of food she chewed, was somehow laced with menace.

She was always up to something, and I knew not all of it was good.

In the short time I'd been 'hanging out' with Renee – and there was nothing else to call it, really – she had almost been arrested twice, gotten me to try cocaine, taken me to a strip club where it turned out she had worked and she decided to give the whole crowd a freebie for old time's sake. That was the night she ended up licking the cum of another man out of her stripper's friend's ass, while I watched. And then we had gone to the bathroom and fucked.

She was insane.

She scared me.

She was like cocaine, exactly like it: she burnt and then anesthetized, she had a peculiar, special flavor, one that wasn't sweet or bitter or anything else. And then, inside my head, she made me feel invincible. Lights were brighter, cars were faster, everything hummed.

And the sex was hot. Searingly, scorchingly, molten-iron hot.

But like her drug of choice, she reduced everything else to a beige soup. She made me stupid and reckless.

She was not a good idea.

But she became a habit. A habit I hated but went back to. I went back to her to get burned, to rub her all over my gums and transform life into something brighter, beating faster, like my fucking heart.

I was addicted to her, and so I had the same misgivings anyone does about their addiction, as I crossed the unkempt lawn at the shithole apartment building where she half-lived. It was a place where the bass hum of music could be heard seeping through the walls at all hours of the night, where you knew to stay out of hallways with no lights on.

I knocked on the door, but there was no answer.

I didn't want to hang out in the hallway, where two kids were already eying me suspiciously. In a way, I already knew that the door was going to be open. It turned in my hands and I gave the kids a haughty look.

The lights were on, and music blaring. Some kind of dance club junk that no person in their right mind should listen to outside of a club or not high on ecstasy, which was another favorite of Renee's. The constant low beat, with the building, spiraling, predictable chord progression, made me feel like I was high on something myself.

I heard Renee's laugh, somehow, over the tinny notes.

Her seductive laugh. The kind of laugh you hear and you know is a laugh for someone, a laugh that could not be at a TV, or because of a book. A laugh meant to entertain as much as the thing that drew it out.

A sexy laugh.

I moved toward her bedroom door, where I thought the sound might have come from.

I've asked myself why I never called out. Why I just walked through the crescendo of electronic garbage in silence, toward her laugh. I was cold from my chest outward.

From the hallway I could see through the door to her bedroom, and it suddenly filled with dark skin. Muscles. A back. The back of a large black man.

I backed away, my stomach filling with cold pain.

I could have gone to the door and let myself out. I could have moved faster, gotten out of there.

But I didn't.

I was drawn by some unknown force, almost as if it had its hands around me and was moving me like a puppet, into the room next to her bedroom. That room was permanently dark; it had no light. Renee tossed everything she didn't need or want in it, and closed the door.

I stumbled over a box of papers, and sent them sliding to the floor, but even this close to the boxes, I couldn't hear the noise I made over the loud music.

In Renee's bedroom, there was a large hole that she claimed to have punched herself. She had covered it with an exotic-looking fabric, which she insisted on calling a tapestry even though it wasn't.

I stood in the room, trying to keep my balance among all the boxes. The loud music was making it hard for me to orient myself.

What the fuck are you doing?

What the fuck was I doing?

Whatever it was, I kept going at it.

Eventually, my eyes adjusted, and the light from a streetlamp near her window filled the room with a steel-colored glow that allowed me to see to the place in the wall where Renee's temper tantrum had burst through.

I tripped over boxes again, and knocked a bunch of things to the floor. But I didn't care.

In front of the hole in the wall was a chair, something I was grateful for but gave no thought to at the time.

And when I sat down, I was surprised to find that the 'tapestry' had been removed.

By pushing a flap of cheap drywall out of the way, I had a view of everything that was going on in the room next door.

The music was so loud I could hear nothing at first. Renee's laughter managed to cut through the music. The two of them were cozy on the bed, having drinks, looking at something on a phone.

But the man was half-naked, and Renee had only her bra and panties on.

Renee looked over at the wall.

I jerked my head back, and then remembered that there was no way for her to see me because of the darkness of the room.

People have to look at something, I reminded myself.

But she looked again.

And then it all began to make sense. Not real, crystal-clear sense, the kind where it was easily accessible in my muddled mind. A soupy sense.

The chair.

The invite.

The music.

Renee's eyes kept returning to the hole, and then she looked at the time on her clock.

Suddenly, her demeanor changed. She moved closer to the man, and placed her hands on his chest.

Whatever he had been doing with the phone, he stopped. The lighthearted laughter ended. They stopped talking.

Now he was looking at her with lust. Raw, animal lust.

I cringed as Renee's tongue appeared and she began to trace slow, lazy circles all over the man's dark, hairless chest. She flicked her tongue quickly on his nipples.

My own nipples got hard as I watched it, and even though deep down inside I was disgusted by what I was seeing, and filling up with a poisonous jealousy, I couldn't look away. I couldn't help getting turned on by what she was doing.

All the while, she was smiling. Smiling like a porn star, her mouth open and ready for whatever this guy – or anyone, it would seem – wanted to put in it.

Her tongue flicked in and out of her mouth, ready to lick whatever she could.

I looked at her hands now. They were exploring south of his nipples, working their way down, into his pants. She found her way between his belt and his skin, reaching in as though to a bag of Halloween candy.

When she found his cock she made a face as though she had found a treasure. Her open mouth opened even wider, in a very clenched but seductive expression of pleasure and surprise.

I saw his pleasure rippling through him, as she moved her hand around in his pants, massaging whatever she had her hands on.

Very suddenly, the music stopped, having reached the end of whatever horrible CD she had put in. The silence seemed deafening. My ears were ringing with too much overheated blood and the ghost of the loud music.

The two of them seemed to notice nothing.

She was still licking his chest like he was a chocolate ice cream.

Whatever she was doing to him was good enough that he couldn't stand there passively any longer. He reached up and yanked her shirt down to her elbows, tearing the fabric.

Now the sounds of the scene before me made it through the ringing in my ears. The panting. The tearing.

The man's big, work-worn hands grabbed a handful of her small breast in one hand and kneaded it like dough until her tit burst out of her lacy bra.

But Renee was not going to just be manhandled.

"Take your belt off," Renee breathed. She was not trying to be quiet, or hide what she was doing. I could hear every treacherous word that left her mouth.

He did as she said, and Renee smiled her inviting, impish smile as he did so. Letting him know she had some kind of plan for that belt.

My cock throbbed. In spite of the pain I was feeling, I also knew:

I wanted to see it. I wanted to see whatever she had planned for that belt. I wanted to see her get slapped silly, or ridden like a little whore pony, or whipped like the bad little girl she was.

"Save that for later, Roger," Renee told him.

It seemed to me that she had dropped his name deliberately. For me to hear.

Roger seemed to figure out, just then, that he had permission to have an upper hand sexually. Renee was still grinning and inviting him into it, but he knew what she wanted.

He licked his own lips.

"You gonna need some kind of punishment?"

Renee pushed her jean shorts down her hips, almost as though it were part of a professional act and she actually was a porn star.

She shook them off and stepped out of them.

She had no underwear on.

"I'm a very bad girl," she said. "I sometimes need a good, hard, spanking."

Fuck. My cock squeezed outwards, filled bursting by this last sentence and the way Renee curled her filthy mouth around every word.

"But right now," her eyes dropped to his crotch, where I was also looking, and where a chunky, large bulge was pressing against his jeans.

She slipped her fingers under the fabric. "I need some cock in my mouth."

My cock bulged again.

She pushed his pants and his boxers down.

His prick, every bit the cliché, popped out of its silky prison and struck Renee on the thigh.

She held him in her hands for few moments, moving her fingers up and down the length of him. His cock was just as long and dark, as thick and meaty, as I had expected.

The expression on her face was one I had never seen until I watched all her dirty porn: it was a hungry, insatiable look.

She had a look of total absorption on her face as she held him in her hands.

"Mmmhmmmm," he said, getting into the groove of things. Renee had taken him by surprise but now he was recovering. "You like you some black cock, little girl?"

Renee smiled again. She wasn't going to play the game exactly as he wanted.

That was so fucking hot.

Then:

"You know how to throatfuck?" she said.

He stood back a little, and the look on his face might have mirrored my own.

Because who actually expects to hear a woman, not on the set of a porno, to say a thing like that?

A new kind of smile appeared on his face.

“If that's what you want,” he said, and he sounded a bit hesitant, as if he might shatter a dream. “Definitely can do it.”

“That's what I want,” Renee said, and her voice was getting that sticky quality to it, clinging to the back of her throat like cum and saliva. “I want to feel your cock all the way down my throat.”

She walked her fingers up his chest. “But don't come yet. I want your cock in every. Single. Hole.”

I was actually on the very edge of the chair now, in danger of falling through.

Renee had moved fluidly to the bed, and lay down on it. She was still smiling, and she reached her hand up and pulled Roger by the cock toward her face. She licked her lips seductively. She opened her mouth, and it was so wet with spit, almost like an excited pussy, that the saliva strung from her tongue to the roof of her mouth.

And then her face disappeared as Roger stepped in front of my view.

Great. I felt myself sigh. Now it seemed like I wasn't going to get to see anything but Roger's ass.

Then it became clear. As Roger tried to lower himself, to get his cock all the way into her waiting, open mouth, he had to open his legs to lower himself more.

Now I had a view of something I absolutely could not believe I was going to get to see, up close, just feet away from me.

My eyes widened.

My cock started to scream at me for release.

I was panting, and my chest was tight, but inside my pulse was racing.

More.

I wanted to see more.

I caught a glimpse of Roger's thick, dark cock sliding into her mouth. Her lips spread and her cheeks puffed out, and then all of his meat disappeared between her lips.

Renee had her eyes closed, and until Roger's cock slipped all the way inside of her, she kept them closed.

But when his big, hairy balls came to rest on her nostrils, her eyes flicked open like one of those creepy dolls, and she looked right at me.

I stared, transfixed, my cock ready to burst without me even touching it. The sounds of Renee's throat gurgling, sticky and wet as he pummeled her face and her throat, filled the room. I knew the bulge of his big, thick cock was moving up and down her throat, that he could see it inside of her neck.

But Renee's eyes – red and watering, her mascara starting to stream down her face, looked right at me.

Fuck.

She tapped Roger's thigh and he pulled his cock from her mouth. Spit trailed from his meat to her lips, and she gasped for air. Her face was shiny and slick with all the spit and tears, but she opened her mouth and took him in again.

And all the while, she kept looking at me.

She was really just opening up wide for him and letting him have his way with her face, like she was a blow-up doll. I could even hear a slap as he rammed his thighs into her face, shoving himself as deep as he could go into her. I watched as she just opened wider and wider and swallowed it all, taking the whole huge, black snake all the way to her chest.

His balls slapped against her nose, and he plunged in deep, choking the breath out of her.

She kept her eyes on me.

I knew she could see me. I knew she had arranged all of this so that I would see it. And I wondered how she knew that it was going to make me as hot as it did.

It was actually the hottest fucking thing I had ever seen.

She tapped Roger and pushed him away from her. She twisted into a new position, on her knees, pulling him toward her by his cock.

Renee's hands found his still rock-hard cock. She guided him around the bed, leading him by the dick.

I couldn't understand for a moment, until I saw: she was trying to give me a better view.

She jumped with her superhuman grace onto her back in one single movement, and pulled her flexible legs up to her ears.

She lifted them up, up, so that they were in a V-shape and spread open for him. She held her own thighs open and looked him in the eye. "I want you to fuck me until I come hard all over your cock,” she said. “But you better be good and wait to come, because I want you to fill up my ass.”

Roger started toward her.

She held her hand against his chest.

“Bad boys who fill up my pussy don't get to make me scream with their cock in my ass,” she warned.

Roger nodded. His cock seemed to have enlarged twofold, and I knew he was having a hard time keeping it together.

But I hoped he would. I wanted to see that whore get fucked in the ass. I wanted to her to go back to that belt.

What the fuck was I thinking?!

I couldn't really believe the thoughts going through my head. I knew I should be angry at Renee, and maybe I was – but more than anything, more than jealousy, I just wanted to see that little girl get fucked.

Renee watched his cock all the way to her pussy, eying it as he moved toward her. “I want to get fucked hard and good. Fuck me like you mean it.”

Roger was perfectly happy to comply.

He grabbed her ass, his big hands pressing into her white flesh and grasping it until it turned pink. He pulled her up onto him, and she gasped and wiggled, squealing in delight, as his thick, spit-covered cock slipped into her drenched pussy.

My eyes went straight to where his black cock was thrashing against the pink folds of her pussy. The same pussy I had eaten out, the same pussy I had come in just the day before.

The same pussy I so naively had been elated to believe was somehow being reserved for me.

The same pussy I was truly enjoying seeing thrashed by another man.

Her eyes were trained on the cock moving in and out of her, her mouth open. “Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!” she shrieked. He pumped into her harder, slapping against her ass.

She arched her back and made a howling sound as she came.

I released my cock, because if I even touched it for one more second, it was going to explode all over the place. And I wanted to save it. Save it for what was left of this lewd scene.

“Feel that cum all over your cock? Get it nice and wet. Let my cum drip down all over my ass. Get it all ready for you to pound hard.”

I almost felt myself tipping past the point of no return, like her words were actually reaching out and sucking on my cock.

Roger slowed as she twisted with the last of her orgasm. Renee released her legs and let them flop, with an uncharacteristic lack of grace, to her sides.

But then she regained her dancer's agility, and rose by the power of her abs, to a sitting position, and put her arms around his neck.

My mind was spinning. I had my cock in my hand again but I was so close to coming – again – that I was afraid to move it.

I knew there was more: the words Renee had said earlier were still freshly printed on my mind and impossible to ignore:

Fuck me in every hole.

Renee was turning around.

She crawled into a doggie-style position, but she pulled some pillows from the top of the bed towards herself.

Leaning on the pillows, she placed her hands on her ass, and turned it upward, tilting it toward Roger's face.

I couldn't see what he could see, but she had done it for me, and I knew what he had for a view. I knew that her hands were holding her cheeks away from her sweet, pink hole for him.

Watching Renee in such a submissive position, giving herself not to me but to another man, I got dizzy. I couldn't tell with what. Pleasure, a deep and dark one.

I loved that her tight hole was about to get pulled open and rammed by Roger's enormous black cock. I loved that I was going to watch it instead of doing it.

Roger moved his cock to her asshole. I couldn't see what was happening in detail but I had no trouble imagining it from his perspective: the tip of his thick black member snuggled up against the pink ring of her anus, the tension on the end of his shaft as he pushed, pushed, pushed.

I could almost feel, on my own cock, the heat of Renee's flesh as his own hard flesh sank in, centimeter by centimeter, pushing her soft, hot flesh apart.

Still tight, too tight to go in. Renee shrieked.

She moaned and cried out a little.

Roger's cock was too big for her. The idea of this shuddered through me, ice-cold and red-hot.

But Roger didn't stop. He placed a hand against her back so that she would stay where she was.

"Oh, you're gonna get what you asked for, Renee-baby," he growled. "Pull that ass open for me. Roger's been a good boy, and now I'm gonna fill your tight ass up with my load."

Renee inhaled sharply as his cock sank in deeper.

She turned her face toward me, in the closet. Her eyes met mine, or at least, she intended for them to do so. She smiled.

I knew the smile was for me, and it washed away from her face as Roger pushed forward and her face twisted in agony.

I allowed myself a squeeze from my own hand. I wanted so much to put my own cock in there, to feel her asshole finally give way, opening up, and then have my cock deep in her hottest, softest flesh while she squirmed in discomfort, giving herself up to me totally.

But I also wanted to watch Roger fuck her hard and fill her up with cum.

Almost as if he could read my mind, Roger thrust hard, suddenly. Renee groaned and closed her eyes, crying out in agony. Her mouth fell open, and she whimpered a little.

"Too big for your little hole?" he said. "Take it. You can take it like a little slut, I know you can."

But then Renee seemed to relax.

I saw her smile.

"There we go, that's it. You just relax and enjoy that cock in your ass."

Renee bit her lip.

He started to pull his long cock out. I watched it, snaking out of her tight hole as she squirmed and dug her fingernails into her flesh. She moaned.

"Ready? I'm going to fuck your ass full of cum now, baby doll."

Renee reached out and grabbed the belt, and waved it back at him.

I felt like I was quivering like jell-o. The belt. I licked my lips and slowed my stroking. My cock throbbed back at me, but I wanted to see this next bit, see it while I was still hard.

Roger looked momentarily confused, and then he grasped the belt.

He slapped her lightly on the ass. "Say it," he growled.

"Say what?" she said, sassily.

He gave her another slap, harder this time, and she smiled and whimpered.

Fuck. I sucked in my breath.

"Say, I'm going to ride your cock, Big Daddy"

Renee opened her mouth, but then she just smiled.

I watched as Roger lifted the belt behind him, and time seemed to stop as it sliced down through the air, hurtling toward Renee's ass.

It cracked across her skin, with a thick, mean slap.

She shivered in pleasure, and her mouth opened in shock, but she took it.

"I'm going to ride your big, black, hot cock until you fill my ass so full of cum I can taste it in my mouth."

I'm going to ride your big, black, hot cock until you fill my ass so full of cum I can taste it in my mouth.

The words felt like they were fucking my ears. Did she actually just say that?

And then: did I actually start imagining cum spurting out of her mouth as Roger fucked it into her?

Renee put her hands against the wall at the head of the bed, dragging Roger with her, his cock in her ass. She began to move herself back and forth, bucking and sweating and groaning as she worked her ass over his cock.

Roger looked down at her ass, smiling and giving her a slap, just like a jockey to a horse, when she slowed.

Which I noticed, she was doing deliberately, just to get whipped like a pony.

Fuck. I was going over the edge when Roger grabbed her by the hips, unable to take any more, and started to slam himself into her at his own, animal pace. All the way, all the long inches of his cock. His thick member had to be stretching her to her limits, pulling her apart and shredding her tiny hole, but she just smiled like she liked it and turned toward me.

I saw her hand slide down between her own legs, and she fingered herself as he thrust again and again, harder and faster, his skin slapping onto her ass and his big balls flying all around. He was moving so fast against her now that as she yelled, it came out as though someone were thumping on her chest, broken into little bursts of yelling.

All the time smiling and looking right at me.

Roger tipped his head back, and groaned loudly. I was grateful that he could cover up my own loud gasps as my cock exploded in my hand. I squeezed my eyes, trying not to scream.

I was disappointed that I couldn't see her gaping asshole, the cum dripping from her, or gushing from her mouth, the way she had described it with her filthy, slut mouth.

She slid her hands behind her, to cup her small, tight ass and pull it apart. She held herself open for him to view what he had done: almost certainly, her ass was gaping wide, dark red and then black in the center, with his white cum bursting out of it as she was racked by final little spasms of her orgasm. Her sphincter squeezing closed in waves.

Roger was panting, staring at his handwork, admiring what he had done.

I leaned back against the chair, unable to watch any more. My temples were pulsing with the leftovers of my orgasm, and the cool-hot feelings I had when I first started watching were surfacing again. The jealousy, the addiction, the anger, the humiliation.

The hunger.

I looked up at the ceiling.

What in the fuck was I doing with a girl like Renee?

Like the first and only time she had convinced me to do a line of coke with her (it had turned into three, then four, then five by the end of the evening), I was high as hell. But I could already feel myself falling. I could already feel the ground, rushing up at me from below.

Just like coke, I needed to cut myself off. I needed to never do it again.

Renee's face appeared in the hole in the wall. She grinned.

And what did she say?

“Did you get it all?”

I stared at her.

"I can't see your face. But don't pout Gregory." She turned and went to her bed. She sat down, and then flopped across it to her nightstand to get a cigarette. She stayed where she was, lying across the bed, looking at her door and not at me.

"You wouldn't have watched it if you didn't like it, sweetheart."

I had no idea what to do.

She smiled, as though the smile were for somebody else.

"Can we please get some Chinese food from that place by the laundromat so I can get my laundry? I left it there last week."

I zipped up my pants. I knocked over another box as I tried to extricate myself from the room.

"Careful," she warned.

I stood at the doorway, my heart pounding.

A sensible thing would be to go cold turkey. To walk out of her house. To go home, do some work.

Instead I turned right, and walked into her bedroom.

She looked up at me. "You hungry now, or..." she looked down at my crotch. "You ready to go again?"

But she was already getting up on her knees, her cigarette in one hand, beckoning me toward her.

She was bad news.

But I went to her like an addict to a line of white powder.

DEFLOWERING SARA

So when Sara Fleming, her eyes gray under the gray sky, walked with me in the freshly-cleaned streets and everything smelled of rain, she felt like a lifeline.

When she told me she was a virgin, and blushed as she said the word, I decided that she was my ticket to salvation. Like a hobby they give you in rehab. Gardening, or painting, or training rescue dogs in the sun.

Something clean and noble and good that I could do, instead of Renee.

I called her the next day, and the day after that. We watched movies and kissed, we ate popcorn.

Sara was finishing an education degree. She wanted to teach. She was one of those people who genuinely wanted to stand around in a flowered dress and be pleasant to other people's kids.

She was passionate about it. Her eyes lit up as she wrapped her hands around a mug of hot chocolate and she explained how her patience and guidance might never get appreciated in the public school system, but she really believed she could change someone's life.

"Even if no one remembers me," I remember her saying.

There wouldn't be a single male student of Sara's who would not remember her, but I kept my mouth shut. Her idealism was so pure, so unspoilt, that I just watched her with amazement.

The night we finally had sex, the electricity went out in the middle of the evening, and sirens filled up the neighborhood. Both of us drank too much wine, and we got to being silly. The lights came back on, but I was too drunk to drive.

Sara didn't have a car, but rather, diligently used public transportation to save the planet.

"I can't drive you," I apologized. "I could sit with you on the bus, but I might get mugged on the way home."

I really hoped she would not make me do that.

“I could stay here.”

The words sliced through me, like tiny razor blades inside my chest.

“I can sleep on the floor,” I offered, without much commitment.

She looked flustered, when I said that. I knew then that she wanted me to sleep in the bed. That she wanted me to kiss her, and be the first man inside of her.

We didn't talk much as we made a big show of putting things on the floor for me to sleep on. There was a complicity to it: I could have just as easily slept on the couch.

It seems strange, maybe even like it makes no sense, but her indirectness was just as big of a turn-on as Renee's directness. It was Sara's equivalent of Renee's want to fuck?

But it was safer. Cleaner, less adrenaline-inducing, less enraging.

We played a game for a while. I offered her a t-shirt, she put it on and came out of the bathroom smelling like my soap, but somehow more feminine. She had only her underwear on, and my shirt came to just the very top of her thighs. She moved hesitantly, like a colt. She wanted to flirt but she didn't really know how.

She slipped under the covers on my bed.

“Well...”

“Greg,” she said, and her eyes were wet and large. Ice-blue eyes, almost too pale to be believable. “Do you want to..?”

I sat on the bed. I put my hand on hers. “I want to do whatever you want to do.”

It was true, in a way. It was true because I felt like I had something delicate, after handling shards of glass with Renee.

She blushed again. Then she laughed, and covered her mouth. Then she buried her face in her hands, the way she had after the car accident. Then she laughed. “I'm sorry,” she said, into her palms. “I just don't know what to do.”

I swung myself into the bed and bounced on it a little. “It's okay,” I said valiantly. “Leave it to me!”

This made her laugh, but not uncover her face.

I stroked the outside of her arm with my finger. “Hey,” I said. My cock was aching now, but with a completely different kind of ache. That sort of proprietorial, claiming, almost non-sexual arousal, if that makes any sense.

I wanted to make Sara my own.

“We'll go slow.”

She turned quickly and tumbled face first into the pillow. She was half-laughing, and half on the verge of being hysterical. “I'm really sorry,” her voice came from the pillow, muffled and adorably embarrassed. “I don't even...like, I don't have...anything.”

I put my hand on her back. Her skin turned bumpy with arousal at my touch.

“It's fine,” I said amicably. I already knew I had won, I had already claimed her, which made it all the more fun to play the game of seducing her. “I'll just read a magazine.” I grabbed a copy of Foreign Affairs, which had no good reason for being there, from the nightstand. “Hmmm. Israel and Palestine are having some kind of dispute....this is very interesting. Computer simulations of zero-sum strategies in Sino-American-”

She slapped her arm on mine, her face still in the pillows.

“Please!” she wailed. “Don't make it worse.”

Her thigh was next to mine, and it was sending an a warm – not hot, just pleasantly warm – sensation along my thigh and into my groin. I looked at her legs, porcelain and just-shaven. There was no mistake about what she was hoping for, and how special she wanted it to be.

To give herself to me.

The thought surged inside of me, and I turned on my side.

I coaxed her from the pillow, and she was still half-laughing at herself. Then I kissed her, on her full pink lips.

She responded to me like a magnet, pressing up against me, and her whole body turned. I could feel her breasts, large and round, pressing against my chest. I slid my hands along her ribs, my mouth still on hers, lifting the shirt up and over her head. Where it became a funny tangle, and she needed to twist awkwardly out of it.

I didn't give her time to second-guess. I moved my mouth down her shoulder blade, back in to her chest. My hand found her full breast, where her nipple was hard like a tiny pebble.

Sara was under my control, completely, as I moved my mouth down her body. She rose up from the sheets when I teased her with my mouth, she fell down when I released her. I moved my hand between her legs, and I slid my finger easily between the folds of her outer lips. She was dripping wet.

I brushed my finger over her clit and she closed her eyes and almost seemed to growl.

I kissed her down the length of her body, enjoying the way she squirmed with a kind of fresh discomfort, so unlike a girl like Renee. Sara was overwhelmed by her feelings because she had never had them before.

It gave me a different high, but a high nonetheless. I moved my hands beneath her body and lifted her up gently, so that her mound came to my waiting mouth.

When I placed my tongue against her clit, she whimpered and tried to spring away from me. I pushed against her abdomen and spoke to her like she was an untamed horse. "Be still," I said. She relaxed against my hand and let me move further into her, where I could press against her hard button. She was coiled up inside of herself, though, ready to spring.

She tasted like an exotic fruit, slightly tangy, but sweet. I moved my tongue in circles on her rawest skin, until she was moaning and sweaty, but because it was her first time, I didn't want her to come just yet.

I lay over her body, her soft breasts against my chest, moving up and down with her rapid breath. We were both sweating now – it was a hot and unusually humid evening, and my air conditioner was on the fritz. I liked the way our sweat mixed together. Her blond hair clung in places to her face and her lips, and she looked at me with her wide, blue eyes.

I looked into her face as I pushed my cock against her tight, unbroken seal. I was so hotted up thinking about this being her first time, and I had no idea why. The idea of being inside of her first was as erotic to me – though in a different way – as fucking Renee in the ass.

The tip of my cock was covered in her wet flesh, and I had to balance precariously to keep from suffocating her, and from pushing too hard.

She bit her lip, but kept looking at me, as I pushed into her tight hole. I tried to be gentle, and she sucked in her breath. Then I realized I would have to do it, to break into her I would need to push hard, so I thrust myself inside of her. I felt the resistance of her hymen stretch, and then break open.

She gasped, and I stroked her forehead. Around my cock I could feel her molten moisture, and what was probably blood, though not a lot. She was so tight around my cock it was almost like anal, and after lying there a bit shocked, she began to warm up. She started to move her hips against mine.

I could tell that she was working up to her own climax, and I let her set the pace. It was a struggle, as she squirmed and moaned beneath me, tight and gushing wet, her very first time with a cock inside of her, not to come hard with just the thought of it all.

But I waited, until I felt her pussy clench around my cock, and it was so tight it felt like a hand was gripping it – a silken, hot hand.

I yelled when I came, and then I lay on top of her. All of her softness. I breathed in the scent of her neck.

I was sure, as I lay there holding Sara Fleming, that she was what I wanted.

Before I fell asleep I made a decision to stop calling Renee, or seeing her, or going anywhere where I might run into her.

Maybe I had days, the way smokers say they have with cigarettes, where I had a craving for Renee. Or a Renee-like substance.

But I loved Sara.

There's a difference.

And I knew what I wanted.

No matter what Renee would say about it ten years later.

THE CABIN

Our escape from David and Renee did not last even a fraction of the time I thought it would. Within a week David called me. At work.

“David?”

My brother almost never called me. We had a good relationship, in that I really looked up to him, with what was turning into irritated jealousy in middle age, and he seemed to feel some kind of caretaker's responsibility for me, in spite of the fact that I was more responsible and grounded in every possible way.

Still, everyone thought the world of David no matter what he did, because he was charming, handsome, fun, and always had incredibly good luck. None of the stupid things he did ever bit him the ass.

I wondered, annoyed by the thought, if Renee would be the same.

At any rate, we didn't hang out a lot. We were close in the way that most white, suburban, middle-class families were close. We got drunk on holidays and told each other how much we loved each other.

“Did something happen?” I said.

David laughed. “No man. I'm calling about a vacation.”

“Wrong number. This is Thurgood and Associates.”

“Seriously. I have a friend who's got a place up...sort of by Palm Springs. Anyway. Great place. I've invited you and Sara.”

His choice of verb tense was peculiar.

I was stumbling all over the place in my mind. I assumed this would mean Renee was coming. What in the hell was my brother doing?

“Uh...” I found it impossible to say no to him, but he seemed to have added his own insurance package.

“Look,” he said, and his voice was smiling. “This is sort of just a courtesy call. Sara suggested I do it. Truth is, I've already arranged everything and she's taken care of, like..the kids and stuff. You're just coming up for the weekend. All you have to do is ask for Friday off."

"When?" My heart was seizing up in my chest. "This Friday?"

"Yup."

"I...I don't know about the..." I started thumbing through papers on my desk, as if they would somehow be seen by David and explain my predicament.

What was my predicament?

Who didn't want to spend time with their brother at a free cabin near Palm Springs?

David didn't give me a chance to tell him. "Great. Sara has the address. See you there."

"Okay brother."

"Okay bro."

"This is lovely," Sara proclaimed. She swatted elegantly at a large mosquito, and did not change the enthusiastic expression on her face for a nanosecond.

It was this kind of Southern tact that I marveled at in Sara. If we had been her alone she would have had her nose scrunched up and been swatting like a crazy person. She hates mosquitoes, and in general she hates the outdoors.

"Renee," she said, dribbling her warmth all over everyone like honey on a pecan pie. "Show me the inside. It looks gorgeous."

It was Sara's way of getting herself inside as soon as possible. It would have worked wonders on anyone in our regular social circle, but I watched Renee in dismay as soon as Sara began speaking.

Renee was leaning over the banister of the porch, a beer bottle suspended between her index and middle finger, her palm upright. She had one bare foot against the inside of her thigh, like a yoga pose, and she looked plainly at home in the woods. She looked at home anywhere. She had probably, in addition to all her other many jobs, been a park ranger, for all I knew.

Or a lumberjack.

But Renee, very surprisingly, turned on a sweet smile. Her eyes went quickly to me, and sprinkled a curious expression on me. Just as quickly she was back to Sara.

“Sure,” she said, and she sounded genuinely friendly. Just the way poison berries look genuinely delicious.

She waved her in, setting her beer down on the banister.

I blinked.

“Come on in. We're giving you guys the master bedroom because you drove all the way....” Renee's voice disappeared into the cabin.

Maybe, I thought. Maybe everything will be okay.

Davie had watched Renee go into the house, admiring, no doubt, her ass and the way it almost hung out of her very skimpy cutoffs.

He turned back to me. “Want a brew, brother?” His eyes were smiling.

“Yeah.” But he was already popping the cap off of one, in a tidy little movement he'd learned as a bartender, on the railing of the banister. No fucking bottle openers for Davie.

His shirt was off, and he was lean and muscular as ever, even though he was five years older than me, and so right in the chubbiest prime of middle age. He jumped over the banister in an athletic movement, and without spilling either of the two open beers in his hands.

He extended his arm toward me, both beers clasped between the fingers of one hand by the necks. I took one, and he released it easily. Then he clinked the bottle against mine.

“Thanks for making it out here, bro. Renee really wants to start doing more family shit.” He took a swig of the bottle and sighed. “Meh. I guess I do, too.”

He reached out and tousled my hair.

Sara being escorted around the cottage, or anywhere really, with Renee, was making me nervous as hell. I cast an uneasy eye at the door.

David, as usual, was oblivious to everyone's unease with life. I think he just assumes that everyone is gliding around with no friction, like him.

“Come round the back, come see the water,” Davie said. He turned and began to skip down a path.

David's muscular back in covered almost entirely in a large, green-black tattoo of a complex tree, branches extending in all different directions, twisting together. On each one is some deeply meaningful and thoroughly disturbing Latin phrase, representative of something important to Davie in his life.

It's completely out of alignment with the rest of Davie's life – in fact, almost no one knows about his tattoo or why he got it, and a lot of the people at the straight-laced car dealership that is the company business, would be horrified by it.

Sara was horrified by it the first time she saw it. But in her very loving way, she had asked him about it and decided she was okay with it after he explained it to her.

I watched his muscle moving beneath his tree as we headed through bright and shadowy patches to a lovely lake with clear water and a dock extending out into the blue.

“No boat,” Davie said. “But it's fun to jump off the end of the dock.”

And just like that, he was off, down the dock at an unsafe speed, and hurtling through the air.

From above me, I heard Renee's voice giving a whoot of encouragement. And then: “Got your swimsuit on?”

I sat down on the wood stairs that lead down to the lake. Cicadas throbbed around me and the heavy scent of dry pine filled my nostrils. I should be thrilled, I thought to myself, to spend the weekend with my brother. And my wife.

If it just wasn't for Renee.

As if on cue, Renee sped past me, tapping me lightly on the back of the head. “Come on!” she yelled over her shoulder, but it wasn't clear who it was for. Me, or Sara, who was walking prudently on the sliver-filled, unsteady wooden steps.

She turned back and looked at me. “You coming?”

Renee's svelte figure was already seven feet up in the air, tucked into a neat cannonball, her toes pointed as if she were competing in gymnastics, her voice piercing the air.

I shook my head. “I hate lakes.”

Sara looked for a moment as though she would sit down with me, and she looked back and forth with hesitation at her choices. “Well...I'm going in. Just for a little bit.”

She turned, and walked down to the dock.

I looked out the window through the foliage. The sun was glinting on the navy-blue lake, and fell through the green pines like gold. The sky was utterly blue. The scene looked surreal, too good to be true.

My eyes drifted to the dock, and widened when I saw Renee and Sara, sitting side by side, their feet in the water and their backs to us at the very end of the long dock.

But sitting very close. Sitting with their arms touching, as if they'd been friends for years.

I heard the shattering cackle of Renee's laughter, and the murmur of Sara's voice underneath it. She was telling a story, and Renee was laughing. I could only make out Renee saying "No!" as though Sara had said something scandalous and interesting.

The whole thing was entirely incongruent with either girl's personality.

Sara didn't gossip, and she wasn't a terribly good storyteller. She hardly ever leaned in to tell someone something that would make them say no!, scandalized.

Renee didn't listen, anyway. And if she did listen to something on some rare day, she never participated as a friendly audience, agreeing with a nod of the head or a 'No!' when the story was supposed to be scandalous. She in fact reacted in the least predictable ways. Talking to Renee was unnerving.

I raised my eyebrows.

David stood next to me.

"Looks like those two are really getting along," he commented.

I looked at my brother. Did he know what a crazy psycho Renee was? Had she changed for him, and if she had, had she really changed?

Or had David, always so cool, always such an alpha male beneath his laid-back exterior, gotten a completely different Renee?

Or maybe, I reminded myself, things had just changed. It had been over ten years.

Maybe she was cleaning up, feeling motherly.

Renee threw her head back at the end of the dock, as if she were laughing at the funniest thing she ever heard. Her long, tan arm pressed against my wife's, and she kicked up her feet as she leaned back. It was an effortless-looking motion, but one that only a dancer could achieve.

Sara tucked her light hair behind her ear and nodded. As she turned her face to Renee I could see she was smiling.

The scene looked almost idyllic.

But I couldn't dislodge the ominous sensation it gave me.

I stood there until I realized that David had been asking me the same question over and over about what kind of vodka I wanted in my drink.

"They're all the same," he informed me, once he could see that I was paying attention. "But I bought a couple so you can feel like you have a choice."

At that precise moment, Renee turned to look up at the house.

It seemed like she was looking right at me, her leg dangling in the water, her mischievous grin flickering at the corners of her mouth.

Later in the evening, we had all gotten a little tipsy. Sara went to the bathroom, and David got up to fetch more wine from I'm pretty sure he called a boathouse, though there wasn't one of those around. The party broke up the way they do late at night, leaving just the two of us at the table.

Renee turned to me like a hyena upon its kill.

"Finally," she said. "Alone at last."

She tapped a cigarette out and lit it as she put her feet up on the table. Her long, toned legs unraveled across the wood and I looked up, clumsily, at the ceiling to get away from them.

"David knows we fucked," she said. "If that's what you're worried about."

It was, and it wasn't.

David and Renee had known of each other long before they started dating. David got his tattoos at the place where she had worked, which is why I had even set foot in that crazy place and met her to begin with.

Then Renee, as Renee apparently tended to do, if you believed the stories she told about her life, disappeared for a few years.

When she came back she had a bunch of money, origins unknown, and bought the tattoo parlor. They saw each other again, got to talking, and the rest is history. It wasn't until two months before the wedding that I met Davie's fiancée.

God what a shock that was.

Renee looked out at the water, where David's barely visible body was swimming into the lake, apparently distracted from his wine fetching. He had to be as drunk as I was, and I hoped sincerely he didn't drown. But he was an extraordinary athlete, and it almost wasn't worth worrying about. David survived every stupid thing he did.

Renee rubbed her feet together. Her nail polish was a conservative peach color.

She caught me looking, and grinned in her aggressive way.

"Ehhhhh..." she squawked. "For the wedding. It's back to black after this."

I wondered if she had chosen those words more deliberately than they sounded.

And then, in that way she always had of stringing unrelated topics together before anyone could think twice, she nodded at the stairs. "She's a real cutie, Greg."

A cool sensation spilled out of my chest and sank into the rest of my body. I wasn't sure why. Something about Renee taking about Sara, or even looking at her with her impish eyes, made my stomach twist in knots.

"Very nice. Very sweet."

A little tiny bit of emphasis landed on the second word in these pairs. Sweet. Nice.

Not enough that anyone could accuse her of being sarcastic. Or anything at all.

"It seems like you're happy."

Her voice was completely neutral. But her eyes were moving quickly over my face, registering even the slightest flinch, the tiniest twitch.

I tipped my head back and groaned at the ceiling.

It was the only thing I could think of to do.

Renee laughed. I little girl laugh, the kind of laugh a small child would give to finding an Easter Egg, or winning at War. She blew her smoke in my direction.

I remained, face up at the cracked wood ceiling over the porch, wishing I hadn't looked at it so closely because it was structurally unsound.

Renee had moved on to other things. She waved at David. She moved her foot along her leg to scratch a mosquito bite.

I heard Sara's footsteps behind us.

“Help me get my old man out of the lake,” Renee said to the area behind me. Sara drifted outside, past us, looking out to where David could only be heard splashing and hollering.

Sara was drunk, and she laughed as she thumped unsteadily down the steps.

“Your problem,” Renee said, standing up, clutching a beer, “is that you don't really understand what you want.”

And then she skipped away from me.

I looked at the two of them, standing close to each other. Renee whispered something in Sara's ear.

What the hell was Renee talking about?

I didn't have a fucking problem.

Except for her.

And I did not want her.

What I wanted was for her to get away from Sara before she somehow tainted her with her bad vibes and her slutty ways.

What I wanted was for Francesca Renee Jung, Crazy Bitch, not to be part of my family.

BACK TO NORMAL

The cabin weekend ended, to my relief, without any real incident taking place. What kind of incident? I have no idea. I had learned to expect anything from Renee, and the fact that she spent the next two days being a normal person disturbed me even more than if she had done something crazy.

I was relieved as we drove back to the city.

And then things were back to normal.

Maybe it was possible, I began to think, to have a normal relationship – whatever that was- with my brother's wife. Maybe we would occasionally go the cabin, and maybe it would all wear off, all this need for family connections.

David had certainly never wanted to spend that much time together before.

And then a week later, Sara flipped over in bed.

“Hey do you have anything planned tomorrow evening?”

I folded the magazine closed. “No,” I said, putting on my 'sultry' accent.

This was good news. Whenever Sara planned a date night I could usually get a glass of wine into her and we could have some more-passionate-than-usual sex. Which is all I could hope for, at this point.

Or just any sex at all was fine.

“What did you have in mind?” I cooed. I did a Kelsey Grammar impression. “A fine white wine? A tasteful theater excursion and a classy dinner...excursion?”

“Nice Kelsey Grammar.”

“I was going for Tupac.”

It was an old joke. She wrinkled up her nose in loyal appreciation and then her face fell a little.

“Actually, no. Sorry, no, I didn't mean...not for us.”

“Oh.” I tried to hide my disappointment. I tried not to be a dick and turn back on my back and open a magazine.

But I did it anyway.

“What for, then?”

“I was just wondering if you could watch the kids for a bit. Renee actually called me today.”

My heart felt like someone had injected liquid nitrogen into it. It was pumping steadily into my system. Now it was at my carotid, pulsing, cold as ice.

“Strange, huh?” Sara was looking at me strangely. I must have had a terrible expression on my face.

“And?” I managed to say.

Sara plopped herself back on her pillow. “And, not much. She just wanted to go out, maybe do some shopping. You know, girl stuff.”

“Girl stuff,” I repeated dryly.

Sara nodded.

“Renee?”

Sara turned quickly to me. “Why?”

Danger. Danger, danger, danger.

“It's just...not what I would expect Renee to want to do. But whatever. Don't get arrested for shoplifting.”

Sara sighed. It was a long, strangled sigh. “You know Greg people change after ten years, and also...why would it be so unusual that she wants to hang out with her new family? We live right here. I think it's sweet.”

Oh lord. She had gotten going, and now she was going to talk for another ten minutes.

“She just wants to get to know us better. Anyway, I think it's kind of fun to have a girlfriend, to go shopping with. You hate shopping anyway.”

“Maybe I'll get some new summer clothes...”

“It's a great idea.”

It was the worst idea I could think of.

Sara talked on and on, and I tried to picture the two of them, laughing with shopping bags in their hands, heads together, smiling like an ad for a new mall. I tried to picture them sitting at a coffee shop, legs neatly crossed under knee-length skirts, sipping coffee.

But instead, my mind filled up with images of Renee dragging Sara into a biker bar, getting her drunk on shots of tequila, and convincing her friends to do body shots on my inebriated wife. I was just getting going, thinking of a big, bearded man slurping tequila from the crevice between her breasts, while she tossed her head back and laughed, and Renee poured more and more between them...when I realized that Sara had stopped talking and turned out the light.

“What time are you leaving?”

“Seven.”

“Okay, I'll try to be home by then.”

Sara kissed me.

This was the problem with Sara, and also why she was so wonderful. The scent of her soap, light jasmine, filled my nostrils. Her cream-colored nightie slipped off her shoulder, and she wrinkled her nose.

Meanwhile, I imagined a smokey-tasting bartender grabbing her by the neck with a big, tattooed hand, and forcing his tongue inside of her clean, pink mouth.

“Thanks,” she said, and twisted around quickly before I could put the moves on her.

David's car – a black Lexus he obtained at an auction – was parked in the driveway when I arrived home the next day. The sprinklers were on, which sent a jolt of annoyance through me, because the water was mostly spilling onto the sidewalk.

I took a deep, cleansing breath before I went inside.

I needed to be nice to Renee. I needed to reel her in gently, like the clever little fish she was, so that I could find out what she was up to with my wife and all this 'family-first' business.

Because people could change, and people did change, but Renee changing into a sweet sister-in-law and suburban soccer mom was about as easy to believe in as...I don't know. Hitler turning into fucking Mother Teresa.

Okay, maybe not that drastic. But still incredible.

When I opened the door, I was surprised to hear David's booming laugh. Even more surprised to smell a fresh, garlicky appetizer, even more surprised to find the three of them gathered around the kitchen counter, wine glasses in hand, laughing like we got together all the time.

“What's this?” I said. I tried to sound pleasant.

Renee was dressed in a pair of khaki capris, the jungle-adventure kind, but all the way to her knees. She had on a black shirt – fitted, but covering every part of her torso, which was unusual for her. Her left arm was covered in tattoos, but she almost looked...tasteful.

“I thought you were going shopping?” I said to Sara.

“My car broke down,” Renee said. “So then David had to drive me, and then we decided, why not have some wine..one thing led to another. We've been waiting for you.”

She sounded so cheerful, so genuine.

So suburban.

Again.

I looked at Sara. She was holding a glass of wine in her hand, and had a pleasant, relaxed smile on her face.

I scanned the kitchen. There were quite a few pieces of packaging lying around on the counter, and Sara seemed not to even register their presence.

She was eating cheese.

I let my briefcase fall to the floor with a loud thunk.

“Okay!” I almost shouted.

David handed me a glass of red wine. “We saved this for you. We drank the rest.”

“It was so good,” Renee crowed.

What in the actual fuck was going on? Why was my brother in my house, on a Wednesday evening, eating cheese and drinking wine like a suburban dad?

“Help me with your barbeque,” David said to me, holding up a package of prepared shrimp from Pure Harvest, the health food store down the street.

What in the actual fuck?

I followed him outside and gulped my wine, and helped myself to another glassful while David unwrapped the package and began to place the shrimp carefully on the barbeque.

“I know we're kind of springing in on you, man,” he said. “I just..I guess now that I got married and we're thinking about starting a family, I want to spend more time with you guys. I'm sorry I was never there much for you when you had the kids...”

David went on and on. My mind had stopped, and I had almost choked on my wine, when he had said thinking about starting a family.

“You know?” David said, turning to me expectantly.

I had no idea what he had been saying. The wine I had slammed was going to my head. I poured myself a third glass and raised it. “Don't worry about the past,” I said, starting with the one thing I was sure he had said. Then I added, I felt rather adeptly, “It's only the future that matters.”

David smiled at me. “Right on man.”

Renee and Sara appeared giggling in the door. “David,” Renee said. “We're getting quite drunk. We're just going to take a cab, and then you can drive me home, right?”

David frowned. I frowned at Sara, who did seem to be quite tipsy. She was giggling and holding onto Renee, like they were high school girls at their first party.

“Uh...yeah okay. I gotta get back to the store and do a few things, then I'll swing by and pick you up?”

I gulped my wine, looking at Sara clinging to Renee. My head was spinning off in a moody drunk. No one seemed to care what I thought or what I had to say, so they made their plans, and then David set a plate of shrimp in on the table. Small plates had materialized from somewhere, and I managed to open another bottle of wine.

All of it happened in a blur, of giggling and Sara and Renee with heads together, laughing and plotting and scheming, and David smiling at me calmly.

And then they were all gone, and I was sitting on the concrete porch, fuming silently, though I didn't really know what about.

JOHN GOTTI SAID THAT

At eleven, the girls came crashing through the door drunk, giggling. I glared at them across through the kitchen and across the living room.

“Quiet!” I hissed.

“They're both up,” Renee yelled. I see their gamer lights on through the window.” She started to kick off her shoes – black, strappy heels that wound like bondage around her feet, covering her slightly mangled toes, which were the only unattractive thing about her. But which she also didn't give a shit about.

“Teenagers don't sleep on the same cycles as us,” she added knowledgeably, and crossed the room, where she dumped some of the wine into a dirty glass that still remained on the countertop.

“How did you get home?” I snarled.

“Cab. Like the one we took when we left,” Renee retorted.”And now I'm waiting for your sober brother to collect me.”

I rinsed a dish angrily in response.

“I have to go pee,” Sara said, revealing that she really was drunk because for her, it was a bit vulgar.

I turned to Renee, who had limped into the kitchen. She obviously wanted me to know that her feet were sore from soooooo much of whatever she had been doing.

I wasn't going to take the bait.

She had her arms folded again, and was balancing on one foot, her other turned up and resting against her ankle. She was twisting lightly back and forth, her eyes glinting and her mouth turned up in her challenging grin. She knew what was coming, and it amused her.

“What are you doing Renee?” I managed to sound cool. Easy-going. Elongating my sentence, making it sing-songy. All just friendly here. All just a friendly rivalry.

“Waiting,” she answered, and looked in the direction of the bathroom.

But she knew my question was about something else. I bored into her with my eyes.

She sniffed.

“She's my sister-in-law, Greg. Just having a good time.”

I cocked my head, and Renee mimicked the motion almost before it even happened. She grinned a little more.

I brushed past her to get to the freezer.

I made myself a vodka.

Renee plopped onto a barstool and smiled her little, secretive, arrogant smile.

“I'll have what you're having.”

I ignored her.

“What are you up to, Renee?” This time my anger seeped through.

Renee sipped her wine. “Okay, seriously?” she said, as though she were about to divulge the secret.

I took this bait.

“Seriously.”

“Seriously,” she said, and she let it linger for a moment. “You have some fucking issues, man.”

“Oh give me a fucking break, Renee.”

She raised her eyebrows as she gulped the rest of the drink down.

“Okay,” she said, snottily. “Let's see...what am I up to, Greg? You tell me.” She leaned on the table. “That's right. You're not very good at telling people things, are you?”

She let it sink in. Was she implying that she knew I hadn't told Sara about us? It sounded like it.

“Look, Greg. I'm just trying to be friendly to my new sister-in-law.”

She moved the features of her face with the same agility as her body. They were all lined up now in an expression of absolute neutrality, but strung tight like a piano wire, ready to break. Which way would it break?

You never knew.

She looked out the window, as though deep in philosophical thought, and said:

“You only lie when you're afraid. John Gotti said that.”

“Lie,” I retorted. “About what?”

“Oh I'm SORRY! I didn't realize you told your wife that you had put your cock in MY ASS and -”

“Shut up!” I hissed,

Renee smiled, triumphant, and gathered coasters together as though she'd won a poker game.

“You're up to something,” I said, pointing my finger at her. “And I want you to stay away from Sara.”

It was a bold move, a ridiculous move, a move that had been pushed out of my mouth by the vodka I had slammed (I was realizing that I had poured myself a glassful instead of a shot).

Sara emerged from the hallway at that moment, her sandals clattering on the wood floor. She was drunker than I had ever seen her.

That was my proof, my proof that Renee was up to something.

And even if she wasn't up to it deliberately, she was a terrible influence.

Renee had raised her eyebrows, and she mouthed: Grow. The. Fuck. Up.

I claimed to be exhausted, and I went to bed, where I fumed until Sara stumbled into the room, made a racket trying to be quiet, and plunked into bed next to me.

SOMETHING NAUGHTY

There was no stopping Renee, though. She called Sara in the middle of the day and asked her to meet her at her tattoo parlor for lunch, where apparently they ate sandwiches while they watched people work. I just loved the idea of Sara sitting on one of those stools among all those heavily-tattooed biker men. Like a pale princess, while they thought about stuffing their cocks in her pretty pink mouth.

She called Sara at eleven at night to ask her if she was watching some mindless TV show, and Sara started watching it.

She called Sara to go shopping, called Sara to have tapas, called Sara to try out a wine bar. On and on.

For weeks.

I could see something about Sara transforming, and I didn't like it one bit. She got a new haircut, and it was sexy as hell, but it wasn't really her. It was like Renee had cut it herself. It was edgy where it should have been soft.

She got new make-up. Maybe she did. Maybe she didn't. It seemed like her lips were stained a different color. Brighter. More slutty.

Maybe I was imagining things.

Then one night Sara was full of a different energy. Or maybe, to put it better, she was just slightly changed. She hummed at a different pitch. Or maybe she moved faster, and more carelessly. She was flushed with something, like a light fever just before an illness.

She leaned on her elbows and slid across the counter.

Her cheeks were pink with some kind of excitement.

She bit her lip, and smiled. "I did something today," she said.

A few feelings, entirely at odds with each other, spiked through my insides. Pain and anger shot through my chest, downward, but a searing hot spike of lust was filling my cock at the same time.

Meanwhile my mind went a thousand directions at once. I pictured her riding cowgirl on a big, muscular man. I pictured her snorting a line of coke with Renee.

I pictured Renee sliding her panties from her hips.

I closed my eyes, in one long, slow blink, as though I could erase all of this from my imagination by doing so.

My mouth was dry. I cocked my head instead of trying to speak.

"It's really naughty," she said, and my heart slammed against the inside of my chest.

Did she actually just use the word naughty?

"So promise me you won't freak out."

As she said all this, her eyes were glittering with mischief and she was smiling seductively. She had moved her hands to mine, and she had unfolded my index finger from my tight fist. She had done all of that without me noticing, and now she was stroking my finger between her thumb and pointer finger. Up and down. Like she was rubbing my shaft.

I shook my head, but my mouth said: "Okay."

She seemed to register nothing about my ambivalence, and grinned. "Okay," she said.

She held my hand in hers and began to walk around the counter, but then she paused, as if listening for something.

"Are the kids even here?"

I shook my head. "Friends."

It was only now that I really noticed what Sara was wearing. She had on a bright blue dress, the same shade as her eyes but brighter, made of a crocheted fabric. The top was a halter, and plunged between her breasts almost half way to her navel. The skirt clung to her body all the way down to her mid-thigh, where it ended abruptly. She had a pair of very impractical tan sandals on her feet.

"I can just show you here then," she said, and before I had time to even process what was happening, she leaned over the counter and hiked the skirt halfway up her back.

She jerked her head, in a frighteningly similar gesture to one that Renee would make, at her backside.

"You have to look at it," she said, when I didn't move.

I went around the counter, where her full bottom was exposed, only very narrowly covered by a strip of bright blue silk that ran between her round ass-cheeks. I moved my eyes up and down her legs, which were casually crossed at the bottom.

I felt my cock straining against my pants.

“Do you see it?” she said. Her voice was light, almost laughing.

For a moment I almost felt as if I were cheating on Sara, she was so unlike herself. I looked around guiltily. Then I ran my eyes over her body again, this time higher...

I leaned in, close to her body, to get a better view.

There was a tiny white patch on the small of her back.

“Take it off,” she said. “Take a look.”

It was tiny, no more than the size of a nickel, really. Only black. A delicately crafted, unique vine with a single flower on it.

It was tasteful and incredibly trashy all at the same time. It was still fresh, red and lightly swollen.

Something about the slightly puffy, abused look of it turned me on as well.

She swung her hair over her shoulder and looked back at me.

My head was starting to cloud. Did she have the same kind of look in her eyes that Renee had so often?

It wasn't helping that all the blood was going to my cock.

“Did you get this with Renee?”

Sara nodded. She bit her lip. “What do you think?”

Sara. Sara blond and Nordic, Sara fresh and clean and pristine, my Sara, with a trashy tattoo on her back.

I just swallowed.

And then I just went for it.

“I think you've been very naughty, Sara Fleming Pemberton.”

To my surprise, Sara Fleming Pemberton did not giggle with embarrassment or turn around and take me toward the bedroom. She instead placed her hands on the counter and shook her hips a little.

I replaced the small square of gauze, and moved my hands down her hips, which were bare except for the small, stringy strand of thong underwear.

So unlike her.

I mean, she had thong underwear, but she wore them rarely and only with tight pants. Only for practical purposes.

I moved my hand along the outside of her leg. I worked my fingers underneath the thin straps of her underwear.

I let the thong guide me inward, down, all the while expecting her to twist away. I was sure I would get her in bed now, but she would break free any minute and want to go to the bedroom.

But as my fingers passed over her lower back, and then down in a plunge to the crack of her ass, and then down, even further, my knuckles grazing her ass and her slit – she just let me do it.

The center of her underwear was wet.

Drenched-wet.

I sucked in my breath.

“Very, very naughty,” I ventured, and she moved her ass against me.

I moved my fingers inside of her. Two of them, and she let out a moan. Inside, she was hot and slippery, and for a moment I forgot it was even her. We hadn't had sex bent over a counter for almost ten years.

I pushed inside of her with a third finger, and used my thumb to stroke her clit.

She mewled, and twisted her body. Her flesh closed around me and then rolled away.

I didn't want to let the moment disappear, so I unzipped my pants and took my hard, throbbing cock out.

I pushed inside of her, and she arched her back.

Feeling brave, I slapped her ass. She shuddered and I felt her pussy clench around me.

Sara Pemberton, you naughty girl.

I slapped her ass again, and she gasped, but her hips moved back against mine.

I wanted to slap her again and again, and tell her what a bad girl she was, but I also didn't want to risk it. Leaving my handprint, bright red on her white skin, was enough for one day.

Anyway, I knew I was close to filling her up, and I thrust into her, pounding her like I had not done since a very brief, lovely period of our honeymoon.

She screamed, and I felt her tighten around me. Her pussy juices seemed to well from deep inside of her, and then she lay her face on the table while I buried my cock all the way to my balls inside of her.

When I came I yelled silently, and pulled her hair to balance myself as I thrust as deep inside of her as I could possibly go.

I lay awake looking up at the ceiling for a long time that night.

Don't get me wrong: having sex with Sara that night, in the kitchen with all the lights on and the windows open, and her blue dress and her thong underwear, was all incredibly hot. Incredibly hot. Her tattoo was hot, and her dirty mouth was hot.

But something bothered me. Something bothered me deeply.

Did I really want Sara to be like this?

Sure, it was fun, every now and then, to have a dirty-mouthed woman who fucked like a whore, but was the change going to stick? Was it going to seep into every aspect of our lives?

Renee had been like that – fun, sexy, incredibly sexy, and then too sexy. I know it isn't a manly thing to say. But she was, in fact, too sexy.

Way too sexy.

I turned on my side and looked at the curvy outline of Sara's body on the bed. Her pale hair shone in the blueish light from the yard.

It was too late now, after sex and after hanging out, to bring up the tattoo. I wanted to know why she got it, what she was thinking. But then, did it matter? It wasn't like it could be undone.

Sex with Sara. Always sweet, always safe. That was what I liked about her. It's why I married her.

Wasn't it?

Sara was desirable without being crazy. She was loyal and she was not out flaunting herself to every man on the street. Sara was not the kind of wife who would cheat.

And that was what I wanted.

Wasn't it?

I felt my cock getting hard again, pressing up against her lower back.

It's just the dress. The dress and the good sex.

Because the last thing I wanted was a woman like Renee.

A woman like Renee who had sex with everyone she met.

A slutty, dirty girl who would do things in bed no one had even thought of putting in a porno.

That's the last thing I wanted.

Wasn't it?

THE WHISKEY BARREL

The next few weeks went on as any other couple of weeks. Sara drove the kids to soccer matches, I sat in traffic, we ate dinner.

Sara was perpetually different, though.

Her clothing changed. Her shirts were still the basic uniform of the soccer moms: plain t-shirts and jeans, or a blouse and jeans.

But was it me, or were her jeans tighter, and her necklines ever-plunging?

“Did you go shopping?” I said, one night.

She suspended her fork in midair. “The fridge is full.”

“No..I meant, clothes.”

She shrugged. No commitment. “Why?”

I looked at her. “It just looks like a new shirt.”

She looked down at her black v-neck, which dipped low between her full breasts and clung to her body tightly.

“It's just a t-shirt,” she said, with a shrug.

I chewed on a piece of steak.

“It's just more revealing than usual.”

What the fuck was wrong with me?

Shut up Greg.

Sara eyed me with amusement.

“You don't like it?”

This was good question. On the one hand, I did like it. It made her look ten years younger, it gave a nice view of her big, sensational breasts.

On the other hand, it had Renee's trappy stamp all over it. Like my wife was covered in a nice, lace-trimmed residue of Renee.

“I just...it looks more like....it's not you. More like Renee.”

Sara rolled her eyes. “What's your problem with her anyway?”

Now, here's the thing I maybe should have mentioned, and the thing it was probably way too late to do anything about. Anything but sit on the sidelines biting my nails and hoping no one said anything about it, some night when they were drunk. Like at Christmas, everyone seated around the table.

Or some evening when they were mad at me. Either David or Renee, which was bound to happen.

It was pretty much a ticking bomb, and it had been ticking for so long I felt like there was nothing left to do but hope, that like some unexploded WWII mine in a farmer's field, it would just escape detonation against all odds. Forever.

And that was this: I had completely neglected to tell Sara about me and Renee.

Or maybe more accurately put, I hadn't told Sara about me and Renee fucking.

Just to make sure, I suppose, that the bomb was good and delicate, I also hadn't bothered telling Renee or David that I hadn't told Sara about it.

It just never came up in conversation.

She knew I had known her, of course. There was no hiding that. I had referred to this time of my life as my 'college days.' I had made some vague references about her, and parties, and sort of swept the whole thing under the rug.

And Sara, sweet, trusting Sara, hadn't bothered me about it again. Hadn't asked any more questions. Hadn't tried to connect any dots.

So now it was just up to Renee keeping her big mouth shut, and one never knew how that would pan out. She talked about some things too much, and some things not at all, and I just had no idea where the chips were going to fall with this one.

In short, I was being the biggest kind of pussy, the kind I most resent, the kind I most often am, by not confronting things head-on.

Sara stood up.

She delivered a very surprising speech.

"I think it's sexy. I think you think it's sexy. And another thing. I think you just look down on Renee because she isn't as..." Sara scanned the ceiling for the right choice of word. She was being unusually direct, and her southern accent had disappeared along with her diplomacy. "Well, she's just kind of different."

Sara could never hold up that kind of attack for more than two seconds.

“She's crazy,” I countered.

Sara turned on me, angry.

“Why crazy? Why do you keep saying that? She's not crazy, she's just...fun. And I for one really like her.”

Jesus fucking Christ.

“I have to go get Sam,” she snapped.

And then, in a gesture that had Renee sprayed all over it, she looked at me flippantly, while she adjusted her two, full breasts so that they were practically spilling over the top of the shirt.

Winked at me.

And left.

It wasn't just the clothes that Sara was changing.

A few days later I came home to find her in the kitchen, alone. There was no sign of the kids being home. Nothing cooking.

She was wearing jeans and a cobalt-blue top that barely came together at her belly button. It revealed just the outline of her breasts where they met in the middle of her chest, and the smooth shadow of their shape, and then threatened to fly open, but magically did not.

I looked down at her feet. She seemed exceptionally tall.

“New shoes?” I said, like an idiot.

She stared at me. Then a flicker of amusement crossed her face and she kicked a hell up. “That's it?”

I looked her up and down. She looked hot. Smoking hot. Still classy, but a little trashy, like a high-class hooker might go grocery shopping.

“I sent the kids to Ronnie's.”

I had no idea who Ronnie was.

“I thought we could have a nice evening. Like...go to a bar or something.”

I blinked.

Was my wife, Sara, queen of the conservative outfit and grumbling tee-totaler extraordinaire, actually standing in my kitchen with this sex-goddess shirt on, asking me to take her to a bar.

“There's a trendy place Renee told me about -”

“Please tell me this is not some place where we will run into Renee,” I huffed, and instantly felt like an asshole.

Sara brushed it off. Or better yet, it glanced off of her, like she was expecting it and had already positioned herself to deflect it.

“No Renee, Renee said she wouldn't be seen dead in this place. It's a whiskey bar. It's for old fogies like us.”

The fogie was really endearing.

Also Renee was six years older than Sara, but oh well.

Whiskey. In a bar. With Sara dressed like that.

Sure, it had Renee's smutty fingerprints all over it, and who knew what the fuck she was up to.

“You had me at fogie.”

Sara smiled. “It was the last thing I said, so that's good it worked.” Then she grabbed a purse from somewhere, and tossed it over her shoulder in a girlish move. “Let's go.”

The Whiskey Barrel was a dark, hunter-green and mahogany, leathery, manly place. Except that it was filled, almost inexplicably, with young and middle-aged, classy people. All shouting at each other over the trendy music that was ill-suited to the décor. Yet somehow it all combined to create a great atmosphere.

I followed Sara, who had unpredictably taken the lead walking into the bar.

As she clacked her way to the seductively lit wall of whiskey from everywhere in the world, the eyes of the men seated in the booths on either side of the walkway lifted, almost as if they could not control themselves. Lifted, and floated right to the skin that cut through the center of her blouse.

Every. Single. Pair. Of. Eyes.

Most of these guys were with someone, but they couldn't stop themselves.

As I followed her, I began to see her as though she were a stranger. As though I were one of these men in the bar, seeing her for the first time, unable to keep my eyes from going to her and drinking her in.

Because she really was stunning. Her hair was still naturally light blonde, and her full figure was well-sculpted. Her face was not drawn and angular like a lot of women her age, but full – full lips, full cheeks, full everything. She was all plump curves, like a peach.

I watched other men's eyes sliding over her body, trying to lick her up with their stares. I felt my cock starting to ache.

The bartender gravitated to her the moment he saw her. I was a few yards behind and he looked disappointed as I approached.

It didn't stop him from flipping a bottle flamboyantly and, after dropping his eyes for a perusal of my wife's cleavage, lifting them to smile at her through twinkling eyes.

I rolled my own eyes.

"What can I get for a beautiful lady?" he said.

Sara put her purse in her lap and sighed adorably. "I don't know!" she declared. "I never drink whiskey."

She leaned on the bar and put her head in her hands. It was a child-like gesture, and she really hammed it up for maximum cuteness, opening her eyes wide as she scanned the bottles and bottles of whiskey behind him. "What's your favorite?" she cooed.

Was my fucking wife flirting with this guy?

I looked at her, open-mouthed, and neither one of them paid any attention to me.

"You should have a Glenlivet," I said, annoyed.

"A girl like you," the bartender began, and he picked up her hand – the very one with her simple wedding band on it (no rocks for Sara, she snagged them on things and said they looked tawdry), "needs a more adventurous whiskey."

"I'll have a Glenlivet," I said.

"I have a Swedish whiskey that might suit you. Are you Swedish by any chance?"

Sara smiled and shook her head. People asked her that a lot, probably because she was very tall, very blonde, and her cool blue eyes seemed to only have possibly originated in an iceberg.

He kept going though. He ignored my Glenlivet order completely, took a bottle from the shelf, and stroked it as he explained the whiskey to her in great detail.

I watched Sara. I watched how she moved, leaning in to look at what he was showing her. Touching her throat.

She looked at me and smiled as the bartender went to get some other bottle. She placed her hand on her neck and winked.

When he came back, she placed her finger on her lips and drew his eyes toward her mouth. It was then that I saw she was doing it deliberately. She was flirting with him for fun, and she wanted me to know it.

“I think,” she said finally, rubbing her finger along the hem of her shirt, right above where the swell of her breast began, “I think...I'll have a Glenlivet.”

My eyes were so glued to her hand moving up and down her skin that I missed the reaction of the bartender.

It was almost like I had been transported to another place or time, and I was watching this through a portal to an alternative universe.

At the same time, it made me wonder: why the change? What had transpired inside of Sara after so many years, so that now, only now (when, coincidentally, that slut of a whore Renee had decided to be friends and take her out on the town) she was deciding to get so adventurous?

My thoughts began to spiral ever-downward into madness.

The bartender sauntered away for a moment, and Renee looked over at me.

She smiled, as if she were figuring something out.

“You like the bartender flirting with me,” she said. She almost sounded like she was teasing.

“So do you,” I countered.

She shrugged. “He's a little young.”

“And you're a MILF. It happens.”

I had no idea what to expect her to say next, but it certainly wasn't:

“Want to play a little game?”

Who the fuck was this woman?

But yes, I did. I did want to play a 'little game.' Even if I didn't know what little game it was. Sara was starting to taste like cocaine at the back of my throat.

The bartender set two Glenlivets on the bar, glared a little at me, winked at Sara, and went back to work.

I swallowed it without savoring it. It might as well have been a shot of gasoline.

“Tell me about your game,” I said.

She tossed her hair over her shoulder. “I don't know...”

“What is it?”

I could feel heat creeping up on me, addiction pulling me under, adrenaline gushing through me.

She bit her lip. "Okay, it's just for fun, right?"

"Sure. It's a game."

"Okay, you just watch."

Just. Watch.

Could she know those words would travel through me like an electric shock, and come to a hard, painful stop right in my cock?

"Move over a few seats," she said.

I did.

And then we sat there. I had a perfect view of her in the mirror behind the bar.

At first, I thought her plan was to flirt with the bartender, which she did plenty of.

But then the bartender got busy, and another one came on the shift.

After about half an hour, I was starting to get bored, and wanted to go home and have sex and sleep instead of spending thousands of dollars on an already expensive scotch, when the bartender brought her a different drink.

She had only had one, but it was already sending her into tipsy mode.

"This is from that gentleman over there," the bartender said.

My dick thumped back to hard as a rock again.

"Oh my," Sara said, thickening her Georgian accent to a syrupy drawl. She waved at the man, who naturally slid his own drink off the bar and began to walk toward her.

Sara looked at me in the mirror, and I smiled without turning her way.

Her man was a bit sleazy-looking: slick suit, pompous and overpriced LA-chic. The kind of guy who went around posing as a movie producer but probably worked in an office.

"Hello," Sara said. God she was laying her accent on thick. It made her sound a little bit like a bimbo.

It was also so false, and something about that was incredibly exciting. Little Sara, always so genuine, telling lies from hello.

"Are you here all alone?"

Sara looked around, as though embarrassed. "It's really embarrassing," she said.

"Don't tell me a date stood you up."

I shook my head and smiled into the mirror.. Sara caught my eye, and a fleeting smile almost broke her cover. She looked down at her lap to cover it up.

She blushed.

Then she leaned in, and whispered something into the man's ear.

I watched her lips moving, close to his ear. I watched his face, already interested, get washed over by an intense excitement. He turned to her, impressed by whatever she had said.

"I can help you with that," he said.

What had she said to the guy?

"Hold on, cowboy," Sara said. "I have to...vet you first."

Sara's confidence was in the stratosphere. It was getting me so hard I didn't know if I could stand up and walk out of here, ever.

How far would she take this?

"I'm Tom," he offered.

Tom put his hand on the bar, next to Sara's fingertips. He moved in closer to her.

It was getting difficult to hear them. The bar was getting louder, the music had been turned up in an effort to make us spend even more money.

I tried to sip my whiskey slowly, and not physically lean in to see or hear what Tom was doing with my wife.

Occasionally she would toss her head back and laugh, touching her gorge of a neckline.

Tom put his hand on her leg.

Sara smiled and placed her head on her hand, looking up at him with expectant eyes.

She reached out her hand and touched him on the bicep. She lingered there, eyes batting at him. He moved his hand up her leg a little more.

Then she looked at me.

I realized that I had abandoned my attempt at looking like I was not looking, and that I was facing her and watching with my tongue practically hanging out.

She stepped off her barstool, and pretended to fall forward. "Oh! Oops!" she cried out. "Oh, hey, look, I have to go the little girls' room." She said this loud enough for me to hear. Then she placed her hand on the back of his head, and leaned in to say something to him in a low voice.

I watched her sashay in the direction of the restroom, and I followed her a few seconds afterward.

Tom was looking at himself smugly in the mirror.

I caught up to Sara. There were several turns down a hallway to get to the bathroom, which luckily for us was a single. Unoccupied. I pushed her through the door and spun her around to close it and lock it as I pressed her up against it.

“Nice game,” I said. And then I didn't give her a chance to say anything else. I put my mouth over hers and drank her up. She tasted like whiskey, and then there was this dirty taste to her. The image of Tom's hand moving up her thigh while her eyes twinkled gave her a film of filthiness that she had never, ever had before, except perhaps the night of the tattoo.

I dipped my hand into her shirt, and found her breasts. She was fumbling with her jeans, trying to slide them over her hips.

I plunged a hand into her pants, between her skin and the silk underwear she was wearing. Instantly I felt that she was wet – so wet, in fact, that her panties were damp to the touch.

“I see you liked that game,” I said.

“So did you,” she countered, pushing her hip against my hard cock.

I moved down, fighting the pressure of her jeans and her underwear against her mound, until my fingers slid into her jelly-wet excitement, and after fishing a little, found her hard knob.

She moaned lightly when I found it, and slid along the wall a little to give me more room to finger her.

I watched her face as I worked my finger up and down her clit. Her eyes closed halfway like a cat, and the capillaries of her cheeks filled with blood and flushed her cheeks bright pink. Her mouth opened and she breathed raggedly. I moved faster, even though the angle was killing me.

“Oh god,” she whispered. I could feel her stomach tensing.

She slammed her head against the door, and started to slip down as she gave up on controlling her self. I lifted her up with my hand, and slipped another finger inside of her.

She purred.

I put a second, and then a third finger into her, and contorted my hand to get inside her deeper.

I used my pointer finger to keep stroking her clit.

Around my hand, I felt her gushing her hot liquids, and then she began to tighten. She twisted around me. "Don't stop," she breathed.

And then she came, and her legs nearly slipped out from under her. She bit her lip and squinted her eyes closed. Her breath seemed to be trapped in her chest until she leaned forward and sputtered a little with her orgasm.

I had resigned myself to having to wait, and as she stood up and I pulled my hand from her, I was already trying to get into the mindset of walking out of there.

But she slid down the door, and got on her knees.

My wife, Sara. On her knees in a public restroom.

She slid my belt buckle through the loop slowly, looking up at me and smiling. I watched, almost unable to believe it, as she dropped my pants, and my underwear, and then dropped her eyes to look at my cock. She wrapped her hand around it, and licked it.

Now, here is what I wanted to say, and the words very nearly tumbled out of my mouth.

I wasn't entirely sure where they had come from, just that they almost came up from inside of me.

Show me how you would suck Tom's cock.

I had no more time to think about it, though, because she opened her mouth wide, and guided me inside of her dark pink mouth.

And then she began to suck on my cock. Deeper, and more enthusiastically, than she ever had before in all out years of marriage. She took me all the way to the base of my cock, and grasped the base with one hand while she moved her head back and forth.

I looked down at her, and she turned her eyes up to meet mine.

Her look sent me over the edge, and I placed my hand on her head. "Oh fuck," I said. "I'm gonna come."

Usually she would get well out of the way of that, and finish me off with her hand.

But she just kept going.

I warned her again, and she looked up at me.

I went over the edge, gasping as my cum exploded in her mouth.

But Sara, my always pristine little princess of a wife, pushed her own mouth deep over my cock, and I felt the light pressure in the back of her throat as she swallowed my cum.

She stood up, and went to the mirror. She adjusted her makeup, wiped a trace of cum from her lip. I watched her, my ears ringing, still shocked.

“Let's get home,” she said. “And you can repay me the favor.”

FLOWERING TATTOO

We went home after the bar and had hot sex. Hot sex that was a little muffled, because our kids were home, but very hot sex nonetheless. Sara's underwear were sopping wet when I peeled them off of her, and we twisted in all kinds of positions we rarely used, pounding ourselves together. I was thinking about her hands on Tom the sleazy man from the bar, and her mouth on my cock in the bathroom. I don't know what she envisioned for herself, but she came like a rocket.

And then we fell asleep, and the next morning started like any other day. She didn't mention what had happened, and neither did I. There was just never really a good time to talk about it.

I'm not sure how much time transpired between that hot night and the time that I noticed the tattoo.

The same tattoo. I saw it in the shower, as she turned to soap her hair.

Water slid down her body and I was watching the waves of soap sliding with it, making patterns of foam that matched her curves.

The tattoo wasn't bad, I remember thinking. It was sexy, it was small, and it was a tiny little secret that I knew about her.

Something about it caught my eye, though.

I stared. Soap quickly covered the tattoo and gathered in a strange little pool instead of continuing on its way. I waited impatiently for it to keep going, and then, there it was:

The same beautifully crafted tattoo. A vine, the elegant flower, and then, next to the one flower: another.

Sara turned, and smiled at me through the glass. She turned off the water and emerged, wrapping a towel around herself.

My chest was tight, and something was brewing inside of me. A sort of unease.

Why two flowers now?

Sara looked at me strangely. "What is it?"

“Did you add another flower to your tattoo, or am I going crazy?”

Please say that I'm going crazy.

Sara approached the mirror, and used the meat of her fist to wipe steam from it. This was an incredibly non-Sara move. I stared at her. She leaned in to the mirror, her face mysterious.

“I did that about a week ago,” she said. “I'm surprised you didn't notice.”

I looked at her. She was examining something about her face, not really paying attention to me.

“Why?”

She shrugged.

“I dunno. You usually notice things.” Then she looked at me, through the mirror.

She turned around. She must have seen that I needed a different answer. “Why, what?” she asked.

“Why did you change it?”

Sara leaned on the countertop and drummed her fingers on it. “I don't know.” She turned around again and opened a small jar of face cream. “I just wanted to add another flower.” She dipped her finger into the cream, and I watched her bring it to her face. She placed it in small dots on her cheek and her forehead.

I remained where I was, watching her. Something was deeply unsettling about her tattoo, and the moments she had chosen to put a flower on it. All of them linked to a particularly un-Sara-like sexual exploit.

But her face was calm and untroubled, and she didn't offer any more explanation.

And since I didn't know exactly what I was thinking about it myself, I had no more questions for her.

I turned and went into the master bedroom, feeling awkward.

My thoughts, while they weren't clear, were consistently clouded by one thing: Renee. Renee and her proximity to my wife, Renee and the way she seemed to be enfolding Sara into her world.

The feeling it gave me was like a mass in the center of my chest. But I couldn't really tell how it made me feel. It was like adrenaline, but I had no idea what was triggering my reaction. Was I excited, or was I afraid? Was I elated, or was I angry?

Maybe I was just going crazy, and Renee was driving me there.

CRAZY IS AS CRAZY DOES

I went grocery shopping on Thursday. I was pushing my cart angrily, glowering and half-mumbling as I thought about Sara, Sara's tattoo, Sara's mysterious change in personality.

And so, inevitably, Renee.

When who should actually be standing right in front of me? Her long legs were dragging behind her body, which was slumped casually over a grocery cart, trolling through the aisles.

Of my grocery store.

She didn't look behind her to say:

“Are you ignoring me? Because that's childish.”

I stared at her. What in the actual fuck was Renee doing in my grocery store?

“Why,” I hissed, “are you here?”

Renee looked around, as if she honestly wasn't sure. “I have an appointment for my methadone dose? I'm fucking shopping for food, idiot.” She pulled her cart backwards and next to mine, and looked into my groceries.

I looked at her arm, and remembered the tattoo.

I abandoned my curiosity about why she was in my store, to ask about what I really wanted to know.

“Oh that reminds me. Care to tell me, Renee, why Sara's tattoo keeps growing?”

My own tone was surprising to me. What kind of psycho was I was being? I sounded jealous, paternalistic, insane.

Renee looked amused. Really, really amused.

This only served to make me infuriated.

“What if I told you,” she said, her voice sultry, leaning in close to me so that I could feel her breath on my ear, “that the tattoo was symbolic of something?”

I gritted my teeth. She was fucking with me.

"I know it's fucking symbolic. So I want to know: what of?"

Renee pushed her shopping cart ahead of her playfully. She walked her fingers over cans and boxes. I followed her, irritated that she was dragging me along.

She snorted. "What could it be? It doesn't have to be just, oh, this flower is for love. This flower is for love too. It can be more sophisticated than that. It could be...oh, look at this. They've gone and made gluten-free dish soap." She waved the package in my face and tossed it into her shopping cart.

I followed her, waiting for her to pick up on what she had been saying. We rounded the corner and she threw some Wonder Bread in the cart.

"Your problem," she began, as she paused to select a pesto sauce, "is that you have no imagination."

I followed her, marveling at her ability to suck me in like this. Marveling at my own inability to resist her.

She strolled along, and then paused in the candy aisle. She used two hands to scoop ten or so candy bars into her rapidly-filling, psychotic shopping cart.

I glared at her.

She looked up at the ceiling philosophically and squinted, as though what she wanted to say were written in the ceiling. "Or I guess it could be more about...counting."

I went cold from the inside out. Counting what?

I wondered it to myself, but didn't dare say the question aloud. It was getting too close to what I was thinking without thinking it clearly: that the tattoo was keeping track of something I wasn't sure I wanted my wife to be doing, and something I wasn't sure I didn't want her to be doing.

"Are you following me?" Renee said. She snapped her fingers in front of my face. "Or do you want to go get a coffee?"

I felt like lapping her sometimes.

"What. Is. The. Fucking. Tattoo. About."

She opened a package of Twizzlers and bit into one like an animal. "Mmmmh. Fuck. These things are so good. Greg why don't you talk to your wife about her tattoo?"

Why, indeed. What the hell was I doing? I felt my defensive tone boil over inside of me.

“Because you are the crazy bitch who made her get it.”

“Crazy?!” Renee screamed. She shook her cart violently and rolled her eyes back in her head. “You think I’m fucking crazy here? Who’s fucking crazy?” Her voice was rising to hysterical levels, and people were turning in the store to look at us, but I could see that beneath her theatrical performance, she had it all under control. She was just floating behind her own movements, controlling them with eyes, her eyes gleaming as she watched me disintegrate into discomfort.

She pointed at me and screamed at a woman at the end of the aisle. “He’s calling me crazy! Him! He’s the one eating Velveeta cheese and Monsanto products!” She grabbed a box of crackers out of her cart and waved it at the woman, who turned abruptly and rounded the corner.

Suddenly composed, Renee gave the cart a light push.

“Crazy is as crazy does,” Renee said calmly. “One man’s inability to speak to his wife about something is another man’s bird in a tree, or something like that.” She took a package of gum from the shelves and studied it carefully before tossing it into her cart.

“What the hell is that supposed to mean?”

“If I were you,” she said cheerfully, “I would think outside the box.”

And then, cryptically, she placed her hands in a box shape over her crotch.

Smiled.

And skipped away.

“I don’t want to talk to you anymore, Greg, until you talk to your wife,” she called out behind her.

I stood, jaw slack, staring after her.

“Excuse me. Oh thank you, that tenth of an inch really helps me get by here. Are you serious?” I heard her voice in the adjacent aisle. “Jesus, fucking suburbs.”

I sat in the parking lot, lost in thought, until I almost suffocated myself in the heat. It grew around me without me noticing, and if the man parked next to me hadn’t come out and slammed his door so hard, I might have died.

Maybe it's for counting.

God, I fucking hated Renee. I hated her because she was right; I should be talking to wife about this.

“But I wouldn't have to, you crazy slut, if you hadn't made her get that fucking tattoo,” I said aloud, as though Renee were there to hear it.

Sara never would have done that if not for Renee.

And Renee would never make friends with someone like Sara except to fuck with her, or me, or someone.

Right?

Was it possible that Renee was just being who she claimed to be?

No fucking way.

Deep down inside, where I kept dark thought locked up so I didn't even think them, the thought was there. Growling, pacing, invisible in the darkness, like an animal behind a locked door.

That Sara's tattoo was a record of her infidelity. It was for counting her sexual exploits. It was marking off men.

A car door slammed, and I turned on the ignition. I turned the vents onto my face and looked at myself in the rearview mirror. My face was red as a beet.

But that wasn't really it.

The real animal was something else.

YOU CAN'T ALWAYS GET WHAT YOU WANT

I knew I was being crazy.

I knew I was being crazy from the moment I took the keys off the hook. At that point, I wanted to stop myself. But I had already told Ian I was leaving. I had already taken the key into my hand.

Not leaving, by then, would have seemed stranger than leaving.

But my head and my body were disconnected. I felt out of control. I was not in control of what I was doing.

Sara and Renee were out again. On a Wednesday night. An impromptu date between the two of them, and Sara had been especially cryptic about it. As the hours wore on, and the evening faded away to the dark night, my thoughts faded to darkness as well. I sat alone in the kitchen the clock ticking, imagining scenario after scenario, Sara's back filling with tattoos and her mouth filling with cum. I imagined Renee taking her to her favorite strip club, where she had once worked. I pictured them letting men snort cocaine out of their belly buttons.

I got in the car, and I started to drive. I drove with purpose, with calm. Almost like I knew where I was going.

In my mind, everything was blank. Everything but the place where images gathered to torture me. There, they were piling up in a collage: Renee's open mouth, her head tipped back to laugh. Sara's tattoo, her hair over her shoulder and her ass in the air. Renee's mouth around my cock, Sara moaning as I drove my cock inside of her...

After ten minutes of driving in what I had thought was aimlessness, I realized where I was taking myself.

Brilliant, I thought. You are a brilliant man whose subconscious works so well for him.

I had gotten on the highway and headed to the shitty neighborhood where Renee's tattoo parlor was. I just assumed it was the same place, the place where I had met her, but I really had no basis for believing that it would be. And no basis, whatsoever, for believing they would be there. Sara had only said that she was going 'out.'

It was called Frankie's now.

As soon as I saw the sign, I realized how idiotic I was being.

Why would the two of them have come here? I was being a crazy man, a man driven by jealousy and need...

I was looking through the window, losing myself in my thoughts. About to – it felt- come to an epiphany about what it was that was making me jealous and crazy. Getting around to what my problem was, to why I had driven in the late evening to a shitty part of town, trying to find my wife who was out with my sister-in-law. Getting to my trust issues, getting to myself.

When.

When in the big glass window I saw Renee's figure.

It's the way she walks, you see. The way she moves is so distinctive that I can spot it in my peripheral vision. A swagger, but like a ballerina's rendition of a swagger. A floating, billowing swagger.

I snapped my head in the direction of the shop. And sure enough, taking a magazine off a table, was one Renee Pemberton.

She flopped into a chair.

The lights were all on in the shop. There was no sign of Sara.

I felt as if I had stepped into an action movie. I got out of the car and stood, heaving, staring into the shop.

Just breathing and staring. Sweat was forming on my upper lip.

What was I even thinking? My mind had turned off again.

I walked across the street (not entirely like an action hero from a movie, because I did still possess enough sense to look both ways before crossing the street).

There was a little bell on the door and it jingled as I stepped inside.

"Closed," Renee said, without looking up.

I stood there.

She looked over at me, and I was pleased to see that, finally, I managed to unnerve her.

Not a lot, but her face could not stop itself quite in time, from registering her surprise at seeing me.

Her features recovered quickly though, and almost instantly she looked carefree again. She flipped a page of her magazine with an exaggerated gesture, and then tossed it back on the table.

“Where the hell is Sara?” I said.

Renee held her hand out, examining her fingernail polish. She was back in control of herself, and everything else.

“She's getting some work done on her tattoo, Greg.”

She brought her thumb to her mouth, and started to chew on a hangnail.

I stood in front of the door, my chest heaving. I was dizzy. Again, it felt like I was high. I turned and started toward the back room, where the sound of a tattoo gun had been buzzing all along.

Renee leaned forward, elbows to knees.

“What is it you think you're going to see, Greg?” she called out.

God, that fucking bitch. She was like a fucking parrot, with her screeching voice.

My stomach was cold and I didn't know what I was going to see.

I didn't know what I wanted to see, or what I didn't want to see.

In short, I was acting crazy and I knew nothing.

I threw back the curtain.

I took it all in. Sara's smooth back, the beginnings of the dip between her two full buttocks. The red lace of her bra – still fastened.

The glare of the man with the tattoo gun in his hand.

And from behind me, Renee's laugh. Low, almost hidden under the silence somehow.

The guy raised his eyebrows at me.

“It's just my fucking brother-in-law, Jimmy,” Renee called out. The eyeroll almost made into her voice. “He thinks you're fucking his wife.”

I turned back to Renee, who had her finger next to her ear, making circles with it to signal that I was crazy. She winked at me.

Jimmy shrugged. “Not yet,” he said, and glared at me as he adjusted something at the tip of his gun.

I looked down at Sara.

Her face was as deeply annoyed as a wife's face can get. Which is pretty fucking annoyed. All kinds of deep annoyance covers her face almost every day. Dishes in the sink instead of the counter. I fart too much. The lawn isn't cut. I am “creepy” when I look at her like that. I am eating like an animal.

But this annoyance was like all of that in a bottle, and then given even more annoyance for good measure.

“What the heck, Greg?” She shook her head.

So dismayed.

“Just finish Jimmy. I'm sure Greg needs to be getting home.”

She turned, and placed her chin on her arms, facing forward.

Jimmy glared at me again. “Can't work like this,” he mumbled, the gun hovering over Sara's back.

I let the curtain fall closed.

Fuming, I turned and started to walk back toward the door. Renee had propped her magazine up on her thin legs, which were stretched out to a stool in front of her. She bounced the magazine a little, pretended to be reading, and smirked.

Then she started to whistle. I was close to recognizing the tune when she cut herself off.

“I'm just helping you, you know.” She fluttered her long, mascara-laden eyelashes up at me.

“What in the fuck,” I hissed at her, “could you possibly be helping me out with, Renee?”

“We know what we are, but know not what we may be.”

My head felt like it was going to explode.

“Are you actually fucking quoting Shakespeare to me?!!!” I screamed.

Renee shrugged, as if she honestly didn't know. She turned back to her magazine.

“Stay out of my business, Renee.”

She looked up at me and blinked. Then her eyes went back to her magazine. “Technically speaking, Gregory, you are in my business right now.”

I threw the door open and marched into the street.

TRUTH

Sara arrived at home about three hours later.

“What is wrong with you?!?”

Sara paused, and then slammed her purse on the table for good measure. She sat on a barstool, and folded her arms over her chest. Raised her eyebrows. “Seriously Greg. I am not moving from here until you explain your problem.”

“My problem,” I said quietly, trying to control my anger, “is Renee.”

Sara shrugged. Looked around, as if she had an audience. Can you believe this guy?

“What about Renee? What exactly about her?”

I walked over to the freezer, pulled out a bottle of vodka, and poured myself a glassful of it.

“Pour me one.”

I slammed the bottle on the table. “This. Just..this. She's a bad influence on you. Tattoos. You're coming home drunk. Now you want a fucking vodka.”

Sara glared at me. Her cheeks were getting flushed. An unusual anger erupted in her voice and broke it into a staggering, almost hysterical tone. “You know, she's right about you.”

I was enraged, so suddenly and so thoroughly, that I almost crushed the glass in my hand.

“Renee? Renee's right about me? Oh, okay. This should be good. That cracked-out crazy woman is right about me. I can't wait to hear it.”

Sara had her arms folded. “You! Are controlling. You want me to be this sweet little madonna figure while you do whatever you like.”

I rolled my eyes.

“Renee says that.”

Sara nodded. “And she's right.” She spun around and hopped off the chair, stomping into the hallway to the bedroom.

I swallowed my vodka.

Then I followed her.

“Just what the hell is that supposed to mean?” I snapped.

Sara slammed the bathroom door on me. But she wasn't done. She yelled through it. “It means you want a wife and mother figure, and you don't want me to do anything outside of that, except that you're also bored by that, so you find yourself in this...mood all the time!”

I opened the door. Sara was scrubbing her face furiously. She was really hyped up.

“All this from Renee? A crack whore tattoo artist? Where'd she get all these great insights? At her job as a fucking stripper?”

Sara raised her eyes to the ceiling, as though looking for heavenly inspiration.

“What the hell is your problem with her?! She's never done anything to you!” She stomped toward the door.

“Get out of my way.”

I held my hand up and pressed it on her chest.

She slapped it away. “Get. Out.”

She pushed past me and sat on the bed in huff.

“Why are you so mad?” I said, trying to introduce my calm, jokey tone.

She flopped into the bed and turned on her side.

“I am not mad. You were mad, remember?”

I scrolled through my memories, which were dimming with the vodka I had consumed. Was it me who had started this?

“Renee is my problem,” Sara said, in her imitation-Greg voice, which made me sound, inexplicably, like I was from Long Island.

It was true. I had started this fight. And why?

Was it because I was controlling? Was it because I wanted Sara to be a madonna figure, and was simultaneously dissatisfied by that?

My brain rejected these hypothesis outright because they came from Renee.

But Sara had asked the crucial question, and now, through the haze of anger and booze, it was making its way to where questions, central questions, are asked in my brain.

Why was I so mad at Renee?

Why was I so mad at Sara?

As though reading my thoughts, and also because this is how women fight, Sara gave an exasperated sigh and rolled onto her back. "I mean, I just don't understand why you have to...to to to..to always think the worst of her. She's never done anything to you."

You only lie when you're afraid. John Gotti said that.

"I need to tell you something," I blurted.

It was too late to take it back, and I almost wanted to, the moment it began to pour out of my mouth.

But it was too late to stop it.

And it was all true, what people say about feeling better after confessing.

Sara closed her eyes. Then she she squinted with them shut.

"It doesn't make sense," she said.

I shook my head emphatically. What the hell?

"No," I said. "that's it, the truth, the reason I've been so...edgy about you and Renee. It's why I don't like her."

Sara opened her eyes.

"No. None of that gave you a good enough reason to lie to me from the beginning about you and her."

She was getting angry now.

I felt anger rising up in me too. As I always did, if I apologized or told the truth, and everyone didn't instantly pat me on the back like a hero.

"Is it that you're still attracted to Renee? Is that it?!" she shrieked.

"Oh, god. Oh, god, I've been so stupid..." she looked up at the ceiling.

"She's totally right about you."

"Stop saying that," I said, louder than I meant to.

Sara bristled.

"I'm not attracted to...look, Renee is attractive. I won't lie about that."

Sara folded her arms.

"But I don't want to fuck her. I really don't like her, Sara. Really."

As I was saying the words, I realized I was speaking the truth, which only served to confuse me more. It was much simpler if my real problem with Renee was that she was my brother's wife and a woman I wanted to fuck. That was easy.

Inexplicably, I was feeling a strange feeling for Renee now, one that was less like sexual attraction and more like camaraderie.

I shook my head. This was all tiring, and crazy. I wanted to go to bed and forget it ever happened.

Not Sara.

“There's more to the story, then.”

I had told her that I dated Renee, that I slept with Renee, that Renee was crazy and that I had been with her for the sex. I had told her that I stopped seeing Renee to marry her. I had told her everything.

Everything except the night with Roger.

You only lie when you're afraid.

I rolled my eyes at my own inner voice. What the hell was I afraid of?

Sara looked at me. “Spit it out, Greg. Spit it out so we can get this over with.”

I couldn't move.

I sat down on the bed, facing the wall.

And then everything sort of melded in my mind, and the words were out of my mouth before I could take them back.

“Look,” I said. “I want something. I'm afraid to ask you for it.”

Sara sighed.

“What on earth,” she said, exasperated, “does that have to do with...oh great. Oh great, I get it. You want to have a threesome? Is that it?!”

“It isn't that.”

Although, to be honest...

Stay on target, Greg.

Sara sighed and started another long, emotional tirade. “I just want to-”

“Sara!” I snapped. “I'm trying to tell you something, here.”

She closed her mouth. “Okay.” Something in my tone must have made her realize it was serious.

I pressed my folded hands to my lips. Where to start?

What was I even about to say?

We know what we are, but know not what we may be.

You only lie when you're afraid.

Fucking Renee, and her fucking quote factory.

I ran my hands through my hair.

"I needed to get away from Renee when I met you because..."

And here it was. The big moment. I didn't even really know what going to come out of my mouth next.

"I didn't know what I wanted," I said, and it was like a revelation from someone else. "I had..an experience with her and I thought I didn't want it, and so, I ran away from it. Also, she was fucking crazy. And I met you...and that's all there really is to the story."

There was a pause.

"What kind of experience?"

I looked at the wall.

"Greg?"

Her voice was sweet. Understanding.

I turned back to her.

"I caught her...she set it up so that I could...watch her."

Sara looked genuinely perplexed in her reflection in the glass.

"With another man," I muttered.

I turned back to the wall.

"You said you thought you didn't want it."

It seemed as if a tide had suddenly turned on me in the room. Desperation, humiliation, frustration, all felt like they were receding suddenly.

Sara's voice was not shocked.

Not judgmental.

"I liked it," I said, rubbing my fingernail on the back of my two front teeth.

I turned to her. "I liked a lot."

My cock was getting hard.

"Renee is fucking with my head," I continued. "She knows I liked it. And she's..." She's what? What the hell was I even thinking Renee was doing?

I was stuttering like an idiot, but I plowed ahead. I wanted Sara to stay silent until I could get it all out.

What are you so mad about?

"Like, she implied to me that your tattoo gets a new flower every time you..."

Sara's eyes widened. "Every time I what?"

"She only implied it," I cautioned. "But that's like her. Never to actually say anything that she could get quoted on."

"What would you quote her about? A new tattoo every time wha..." her voice dropped off.

A look of understanding washed over her face. It was too bad that anger was building up in her features again as well.

"Wait. Wait..so, you think Renee is...you watched her, with another man, and you liked it, and now you think Renee is fucking with your head, and she's telling you that I'm sleeping with other men?"

Her voice was accusatory, and as I listened to the words, I realized it seemed ridiculous.

"It's not just that. It's subtle shit. It's...and you're doing all kinds of things that you would never do." I started to build up momentum. "You're drinking, and having sex in new adventurous ways. Where does all that come from?" I was getting pretty worked up. "From Renee, that's who!" I declared triumphantly, as if I had made an intelligent argument.

Sara had drawn her arms and her lips into tight, angry lines.

But something was starting to dawn on me. If that was the story, the whole story, the way it really happened, then maybe I actually had Renee all wrong.

Maybe Renee was not an antagonizing bitch.

(Stay with me.)

Maybe she was actually trying to help me. Help me...to get what she knew I wanted?

I narrowed my eyes. Could that actually be what was happening here?

Sara turned to face the window. We were back to back on the bed.

"I don't know what to make of any of that," she snapped, after a long pause.

Which meant some of it, at least, rang true.

I said nothing, I would just have to let her talk now.

A moment later.

"I mean, so...you really like watching? Like...not just what I did at the Whiskey Barrel...something more. All the way."

The way she said the words was so delicious. All the way.

I nodded.

“Like a voyeur kind of a thing?”

I shrugged.

“Do you watch other people?”

“No,” I said. “It's only...I only want to watch someone I'm with.”

I said the last part quietly.

“With another man?”

I nodded again.

“So, like you want, you fantasize about, say me, with another man?”

Why had I never been able to put it so simply to myself before?

I nodded again.

She must have been reading my nods from the reflection in the window, or just assuming that I gave them.

She looked up. “So you think...you were actually thinking these three flowers are three men.”

I didn't do anything.

“Because Renee said that to you.”

I shrugged.

“And you liked the idea?”

I nodded again. “Yep.”

I heard her sigh. “I don't get it,” she said, simply. I wasn't sure what she was referring to: my hatred of Renee, my believing her, or my desire to see her with another man.

My heart sank a little bit.

I lifted my head to the ceiling. “It's...complicated,” I said. Only as I said it, did I realize what I was saying was true, whatever of those three things it was that Sara was saying she didn't get. It was all complicated.

I was, after all, only just now getting around to analyzing it myself.

“I'm only just now getting around to analyzing it myself,” I said.

There was a long pause.

“Greg?” Sara said finally. “I think I just need to go to bed for now. I need to think about this.”

THE NEXT DAY

I slept on the couch, which made Ian raise his eyebrow on his way to the kitchen at 5:30 am.

Why in the hell did this kid get up so early?

“Practice,” he said, biting into an apple, and disappeared out the sliding door to the back yard.

Sara wandered into the kitchen. The sight of her sent a chill through me, like I was going to have to confront something.

“Ian gone already?”

“Yeah.”

“He eat something?”

“An apple.”

Sara groaned and opened the refrigerator.

She looked well-rested – better than me, at least. I had lain awake much of the night thinking about what I had said to her, and how much I wanted to take it back. And then reversing my feelings, and being glad I had said it and gotten it out in the open. And then feeling unsure about whether or not it was even what I wanted.

And then jerking off, thinking about Sara coming out of the bedroom, in the middle of the night, to climb onto my lap and tell me that she'd thought it over, and what she really wanted was to find Roger and re-enact the scene I had witnessed with Renee. Over and over and over again...

And then feeling guilty. And then thinking about the virtues of honesty.

Repeat.

Sara, on the other hand, seemed to have fallen asleep and slept well.

She made some coffee, asked about the weather, and trotted off to take a shower.

She was so casual about it that I wondered, for the rest of the morning and with increasing seriousness, if I had imagined the night before.

When I came home that night, after wasting the whole day with distracted work that would need to be re-checked and probably re-done because I spent the whole day thinking in circles about my wife, Renee, my wife and Renee, my wife with other men, Renee with other men, my wife and Renee with other men, and myself and what I really wanted, I found a note.

Dinner is in the fridge.

Sam home @ 7:30

Ian staying w/ friend.

The note revealed nothing else. It was in Sara's handwriting, but did not say, for example: I'll be home soon.

Or, I love you.

The fact that she had abbreviated at and with was also extremely annoying to me. It was so irreverent. It said, I am so unconcerned about you that I can't write a two-letter word out.

I crumpled the note then felt silly.

I sat down and tried to think about something else. I managed to do so for about half a minute.

I called Sara's cell, but after a few rings and no answer, I didn't even bother waiting for voicemail. Her note made it clear she didn't want to talk to me or explain where she was.

I knew it had something to do with Renee, though, and I was more distracted all night than I even had been at work.

I burnt dinner while I stood right next to it heating in the oven. I ordered pizza for Sam and he slunk away with it to his room, leaving me staring at the walls and creating absurd scenarios in my mind.

Finally, I heard a car door slam, and Renee's smoky voice saying toodles.

The jingle of keys, and then Sara.

I looked her up and down. She had on a red blouse – another plunging neckline that showed off her cleavage. Her jeans were tight, and her shoes seemed quite a bit higher than usual.

Though what was usual anymore?

She didn't look like she had been thrown up against a wall and fucked, however.

I wasn't sure if I was disappointed or not.

“Nice evening?”

She stood on one foot and took her shoe off. She must have dropped three inches in height as she did the same with the other foot.

“Don't be like that,” she said, and her voice was gentle, not angry. “I had to talk to Renee about...things.”

After she had acted as though we hadn't even had that conversation this morning, I was relieved to hear her say something about it.

“Sam home?”

I nodded.

She grinned. “Too bad,” she said. She walked very seductively across the living room and into the kitchen.

“I want to talk about your idea,” she said, sitting on the bar stool. “Let's pour drinks and go to bed.”

Sara stretched out on the bed and gathered a pillow up underneath her. She had unearthed a drink stirrer from somewhere in the kitchen and was stirring her drink and then sucking a little of it off of the stick.

I sat down in an armchair across from her. Until that moment, I wasn't entirely sure I had even noticed the chair existed.

My chest was tight with anticipation. I was a little agitated by the way Sara seemed to be drawing things out, deliberately. It was unlike her. Her personality was to be shy, to hide her face in the pillows, and to get any conversation about sex out of the way as quickly as possible.

But why did it bother me?

After what seemed like an eternity of playful drink stirring, Sara moved her vodka soda to the nightstand.

“I talked to Renee about what you said. Don't,” she cut off the long exasperated sigh that was welling up from deep inside of me.

“Just listen.”

And then a pause. A long stillness that seemed to fill the room to bursting.

“I think I want to do it,” she whispered.

My reaction was strange, even to myself. I suppose because of the shock. “Why?” I said. Then with a hint of disappointment: “Because of Renee?”

She placed her head against her hand and looked at me. “Renee made me understand you better. Like, what you like about it. But no, I want to do it because...I guess I just really...well, it's two things. One, that I get it a little more. And two...you know when we were at the whiskey bar?”

I chose to nod, because whatever noise I made with my mouth was going to be extremely lewd. It was interesting that Renee had managed to explain me so well to my wife, and 'what I liked about it,' considering that I couldn't really explain it to myself.

She started to stroke the bed like it was a cat. “I liked that feeling. I liked...the feeling that you were watching me while I tried something new.”

She stroked the bedspread.

The situation was so delicate that I decided it was best to do nothing. I knew I wanted her to keep going, to get to the point where she would commit to the idea of being with another man. I knew I wanted to hear her say that she would do it. But it was like watching a snowflake forming: if I touched it, it felt like it would melt.

“I also liked,” she said, after a pause, “doing something new. You were right that Renee has had some influence on me. I mean, she doesn't tell me to do anything, if you're thinking that. I just mean that...I don't know. I see there's so much I haven't done, that I spend so much time being uptight, and then someone like Renee just does whatever she wants. It's really...attractive to me. So that's all the tattoo was about. Just doing something I hadn't done.” She was speaking slowly, looking at her hand. Like she was confessing something. “The tattoo doesn't have anything to do with other men.”

I almost opened my mouth, and I was glad I didn't, because she added:

“Not yet.”

Her words filled my arteries with such an erotic heat that I could barely stand being inside of my own skin. I could hardly believe she was talking to me about this.

In the back of my mind, though, I was also thinking of Renee. Of what it was that she had said to Sara in one night that had so altered her thinking.

And there was the why. Why was Renee doing this – influencing Sara, meddling in our marriage?

“I guess I just thought it meant you didn't love me,” Sara continued. “I mean, that's a natural reaction, right? But...I don't know. Renee explained it to me, that it's about trust – and at first I laughed at her? But then, I don't know. She explained it so well...”

What in the holy fuck had Renee said?

I wasn't going to break the spell by asking, though.

No way. Not when I was this close.

When Sara looked at me, it was with a caring expression. “So. I don't have the first idea how to go about doing it. But I want to choose the guy, okay?”

I was frozen to the chair.

“Greg? Are you with me?”

“I just...I can't...” I stuttered.

She rolled onto her back. “I know. I can hardly believe I'm having this conversation myself.”

She held her hands out in front of her.

Her wedding ring glinted in the light.

I moved over to the bed, and we made love, in our very traditional way. There had been enough thrill in the conversation for both of us.

SARA'S CHOICE

“Reggie Dalton?”

I had agreed to her conditions, that it had to be her choice, but seriously: Reggie Dalton.

“Why him?” I said, as evenly as possible. Since we had decided to go ahead with this plan, there had been a hum in the air, and everything seemed brighter and more exciting. I was walking on eggshells not to shatter the whole thing. I felt like if I said something wrong, Sara might snap out of it, realize she was about to do something crazy, and that would be the end of my fantasy.

But Reggie Dalton?

Reggie Dalton was the star of the football team in high school, a junior when I graduated. He was clean-cut, All-American, a great athlete, and everyone liked him.

He was also black as the night, and the mention of his name immediately summoned all the stereotypical insecurities that 'being black' implied.

He also belonged to that class of guys who had intimidated the hell out of me in high school. In that way you don't want to tell your wife, or anyone else, about.

Sara shrugged. “It's weird. It's almost like fate or something. As soon as we decided to...you know...he sent me a friend request on Facebook.”

Ah, Facebook. Love you so much, Facebook. So helpful.

“Anyway. The ten-year reunion is coming up...”

“I don't...” Sara pondered this. “I think Karen Mulroney was a little bit irresponsible planning it. Anyway. The point is...” She looked a little flustered.

Her face was blushing bright pink.

I backed down.

I smiled for her, to encourage her to keep going. “Oh, Karen Mulroney,” I said, as though I knew who she was. “She was always like that.”

Sara seemed to feel better with our shared complicity in insulting the irresponsible Karen Mulroney.

“Anyway,” I pressed, hiding my trepidation under a very false smile. “Reggie Dalton.”

He was the kind of guy that only high school superstars had for a friend, and everyone else referred to as “Reggie Dalton.” First and last name.

“Okay. I always had,” Sara began, and her voice cracked a little. She leaned in close to me, and looked around our own kitchen as though someone were listening. “I had a little crush on him, and I also had...”

Her eyes met mine.

It was all I could do not to grab her by the shoulders and shake it out of her. Just say it! A craving for a big, giant athlete with a huge cock!

She lowered her eyes. She was really turning pink, which is one of the things I loved most about Sara, but it was also one of the things that made me think she wouldn't be able to go through with any of this. She just got so flustered.

“I always had this curiosity...” She stood up and cut herself off. “I mean, I'm curious, basically, about anyone. But I had this special curiosity about Reggie.”

She looked at me helplessly. She would never be able to say it.

I let her off the hook, because I didn't want anything going wrong. I was already miles away in my mind, picturing Reggie Dalton's big hands on her breasts, squeezing them like they were a football, throwing her onto the bed. The fantasy was cutting through me two ways: my cock was hard as stone, but my chest felt like it was being squeezed by one of Reggie Dalton's big, manly hands.

“It's okay,” I said, and I was out of breath. “I got it.”

“Okay good,” she said. “I told him I would meet him for a coffee.”

A coffee?

Blushing Sara started to melt away, and the Sara from the Whiskey Barrel began to show through the cracks. She leaned on the countertop and gave me a seductive smile. “Don't worry, Greg. It's just a first meeting. To scope things out. I'll arrange the rest later, just like we planned.”

The plan was to go to the Hilton downtown. Over several fun weeks, we had spent our date nights getting rooms at hotels (blowing through extraordinary amounts of money, which Sara barely flinched at) and rating them for compatibility with our plan.

Then having sex and rating the bed, having a shower and rating the shower.

Sara was wild and fun, bouncing on the beds, sitting cross-legged and frowning at me behind the curtains. “You can see like a foot of your leg,” she would bemoan. And then she would fall apart in giggles and toss her hair on the bed, kicking her legs up for me invitingly.

It was great fun, renting rooms and then leaving before we had even slept in them. It made us both feel like we were having an affair. It seemed illicit, a little dirty, a little glamorous. Sara started dressing up really spectacularly. She had a black dress that was so sexy, so stunning, that most men actually turned to watch her walk by.

When we were doing this, the shy Sara always faded away, and she became like another person. This only added to the sexiness of it all: it was a little like having an affair. She took the lead on so many things, which was not her usual style.

We had settled on the Hilton downtown because the curtains were long, and the rooms of the junior suites were divided by curtains, so there were places galore to hide and watch the bed.

I spent the next week, leading up to Sara's coffee date, remembering the suite in detail, imagining how the curtain would feel in my hand while I clutched and watched Reggie's athletic body cover my wife's.

Sara insisted on going to coffee by herself.

“Nothing is going to happen,” she said. “At two in the afternoon. And I don't want anything to seem weird. It just has to kind of...play out, without you watching.”

Then she moved close to me, and put her arms on the outside of mine. “I promise to tell you all about it. Every last detail.”

I knew she was teasing me, but she sucked me in. I spent the whole afternoon drunk on my fantasies.

I had watched her as she got ready to go: putting lipstick on, brushing her hair. Slipping her feet into a pair of absurdly tall sandals she had purchased with Renee.

She turned and looked at her ass in the mirror. It looked great in the cream-colored skirt that came to just above her knee.

“What do you think?” she said. She was criss-crossed by cream and blue stripes that set off her eyes and picked up the platinum shades in her hair. Her lips were pink. She looked classy, beautiful, and incredibly sexy.

I swallowed. “It's good,” I said lamely. “You look...amazing.”

“Do I look sexy?” she demanded.

“You look perfect. There's no way he'll be able to resist you.”

The dress clung to her curves, and did a particularly lovely thing at the top, where it dipped low to showcase her breasts.

I had felt a tiny urge to stop her, if I'm honest. I half-expected her to suddenly abandon the whole thing.

But she smiled, and there was excitement fluttering on her face.

And off she had gone.

She didn't return until six on the evening. I had resisted the urge to text message her and call her, and the urge to drive down to the coffee shop she had claimed to be at. I imagined her being so swept off her feet by Reggie's charm that she had let him fuck her in the bathroom, up against a wall. Or in the car. Or right there on the table in the coffee shop...

But at six, the door clicked open.

My eyes examined her. She did not seem rumpled or tousled.

“So?” I said. I was trying not to sound as hungry as I was. Trying to play it cool.

Sara crossed the room and climbed onto my lap. The dress had to be hiked up to her hips, and as she sat down, a small puff of air delivered the scent between her legs to my nostrils.

Wet. Excited. But not the scent of another man.

She was flushed again, but not with embarrassment. The shy blush began higher up on her cheekbones, and burned up her entire face. Her excited flush just colored beneath her cheekbone, and it was bright pink.

I moved my hand up her thighs. "So," I repeated. Her hair was hanging down, tickling my neck. She was smiling her seductive smile, her eyes glinting with excitement.

She let me move my hands all the way up to her underwear, and then down the curve of her thigh and inward. My fingertip touched the soaked material between her legs and she shivered a little. Just a subtle shiver, one I could only feel because I was holding her on my lap. Her arms were around my neck.

"I think it's going to work," she said.

"You promised me every last detail."

I moved my finger over her mound, through the fabric, and then began to seek the hem.

"My drink was a frothy, creamy, latte. I watched as the barista poured the rich, dark, coffee into a glass..." she cracked her self up and couldn't continue.

I moved my finger under the fabric of her underwear and slid it down to her hole, I grinned in appreciation of her joke, but I let her know with my eyes that I was serious. This was serious to me.

"He hasn't changed at all," she breathed. "He's still athletic. Big, muscled."

I stroked her clit, and she flushed even brighter. I could feel the heat radiating off of her skin.

"What did you tell him?" I slipped my finger into her hole.

"I told him we're on the outs."

"So he knows we're married."

She nodded, mischief in her eyes. I wondered if she knew that it turned me on more to think about Reggie Dalton knowing that the woman he was fucking was married.

"Why are we on the outs?" I asked, moving my finger up and down, feeling her tremble at my touch.

"I told him," Sara gasped for air, "You're so busy with work...you never pay any attention to me."

"What else did you say?"

"I told him I always had a crush on him in high school."

"And how did he look at you?" I was finger-fucking her now, and her eyes were half-closed. I put a second finger into her, and she leaned back to give me more access. She started to move her hips. "He looked at me like he wanted to eat me."

"And you want him to do that, don't you?" I pressed. "You want him to eat your pussy, and make you come."

Sara was getting close now, and ventured to get a third finger into her. She mewled softly as I pushed it inside of her, so I let her lean back, and moved her legs apart even further. "You want to feel his huge cock inside of you, don't you?"

I pushed my fourth finger into Sara, and she was so wet that my partial fist slid in almost easily. She gasped, and opened her eyes in surprise, but she didn't squirm away from me. I began to fuck her slowly with my hand. "Tell me about it," I said. "Tell me about it and I'll make you come."

I looked down at my wife, who was squirming at the end of my fist. Sweet, angelic, Sara. I watched her mouth as she began to talk dirty for the very first time in our marriage.

"I want him to fuck me," she began.

I smiled inwardly, because it wasn't coming naturally to her right off the bat.

She whimpered as I pressed further inside of her.

"I want him to do all the dirty things to me that you have never done," she breathed.

Oh Sara. That's more like it.

My cock swelled. Around my hand, Sara's slippery pussy was hot and pulsing.

"Like what? Tell me what he can do that I can't."

Sara's eyes were half closed like a sleeping cat, and she was close to coming.

"Will you let him fuck your mouth?" I whispered.

Sara smiled. "I'll swallow his cum if he does."

I was almost certain that I could actually have an orgasm without even touching my own cock.

"Will you let him fuck you in the ass?"

"I want him to fuck me in the ass."

I pulled my hand out of her, and let her pant on top of me. Her face turned crimson with the heat of a denied orgasm, and she shuddered.

I grasped her by the neck and brought her close to my mouth. I could feel her pussy juices dripping onto my thigh, and seeping into my pants. "Maybe you should get some practice first," I hissed.

I stood up, and walked with her wrapped around me, which I'm going to admit right here, was no easy feat, so I threw her on the couch.

I was really expecting her to back down when I said, "Turn around."

But she didn't. Back down, that is.

She twisted around and climbed onto her hands and knees. I knelt behind her on the couch.

My eyes flickered quickly to the front door, and the open curtains. But I didn't feel like stopping, even if it was a little bit dangerous.

I pushed her skirt up over her ass, and yanked her underwear down to her knees. Her moisture was smeared down the insides of her thighs, and had dripped down to her ass when she was sitting on me. I reached out a trembling hand, almost unable to believe what I was doing, and touched her last virginal hole.

I traced the pink ring with my thumb, and she sucked it back in instinctively. I used another finger to swipe her flowing juices up to her hole, and circle them around her anus. She moaned lightly.

Then I pushed my thumb inside of her, and she whimpered. The tight ring of her sphincter clamped down on my knuckle, but the rest of my finger was deep into her superheated, soft flesh.

"Relax," I coaxed. "It's a little weird but you have to almost push out."

She squirmed, and her ass spasmed around my finger as she tried to figure out what to do.

And then, like a gateway to a forbidden garden, her asshole relaxed suddenly, and my thumb slid in to my first knuckle as she gasped.

I used my other fingers to stroke her clit again, and she heated back up almost immediately. She pushed herself back against my hand, and my thumb plunged a little deeper.

A started to move my finger, and she sucked in her breath. I could see, from the side of her face, that her eyes were wet with tears. But she moved herself up and down in rhythm with my fucking.

I pushed her forward gently, and with my thumb still inside of her, I fumbled with my belt and pants to take my cock out.

I grasped her ass with the palm of my hand, thumb still embedded in her flesh, and pushed my cock inside her pussy. It was stretched out from the fisting, and so wet, that it seemed to barely kiss me as I slipped in.

No matter. Anything more and I would have burst open inside of her cunt. I only wanted to cover my cock with her own, slippery juices.

I pulled my thumb out and she gasped again when it reached the end. I looked down to see her tight hole squeezing itself shut.

I withdrew my cock from inside her pussy, and slid it up to her hole. I moved it over the ring, teasing her, and letting her sigh. She pushed back against me.

I pressed the tip of my cock forward, and again she squealed and I felt her anus clamping down. But this time she recovered quickly, and opened up.

And then my cock was covered in her hot, pink ass. She pushed herself slowly down to the base of my cock, and then she collapsed onto the couch. "Oh god," she squealed. She grasped a pillow and buried her face in it.

I slowly moved out and back, and she moaned into the pillow.

I went tenderly at first, letting her work up to it, fucking her slowly as she howled and turned her face to one side. I could see her open mouth, her watering eyes.

She threw me off when she whispered. "Fuck me harder. Fuck me harder like Reggie Dalton will."

I tried my best. I thrust into her, slamming my thighs against her ass for a few incredible, mind-blowing moments. But her whispery voice, saying such an obscene thing, such an exactly right thing, had already sent me over the edge. I came on the third thrust, deep, deep inside my wife's tight ass.

It was only then that I realized she had moved her fingers up to her clit, and was stroking herself furiously. I remained where I was, filling her ass, as she came.

When she did, her ass clenched around me and sent a shudder through me almost too intense to bear.

We collapsed on the narrow couch, and held each other, sweating and saying nothing.

THE BIG NIGHT

Sara had made plans to meet Reggie on Saturday for drinks.

“Just drinks,” she warned, over the phone, looking right at me with an impish smile when he called to confirm their plans.

Just drinks, but at the Hilton bar.

Everyone knew what that kind of date meant.

I sat on the bed and watched her through the bathroom door as she got ready. I watched her pull a pair of black, lacy panties up over her ass. They were an attractive boy-cut style, and her round bottom hung out of the lower portion of them, tantalizing and white.

She put on stockings with wight inches of black lace at the thigh.

Then she twirled for me.

“Good?”

“Good,” I murmured.

Over this beautiful scene she slipped a black dress. It clung to her curves and dipped low to show off her cleavage.

She looked stunning.

She put on red lipstick, a strange choice for her but a beautiful combination with the dress. Then she looked at me in the mirror.

“Last chance,” she said. “If this isn't what you want.”

I looked at my wife, leaning over the counter.

It might have seemed strange, but it was what I wanted.

I smiled.

The plan was simple, and probably nothing original in swingers' circles, but we felt like stars of an espionage film planning out our signals and codes. I wanted to watch her with Reggie before she went up to the room. I was going to be at the bar long before either of them, tucked away at a small table, dressed as a businessman.

I had even brought a briefcase.

When she thought they were about half an hour from going upstairs, she would get her lip gloss from her purse and put it on. That would be my cue to go upstairs, hide in the room, and wait.

I settled into the bar, and ordered a whiskey and a water. I didn't want to get so drunk I would miss out on any detail of what I was about to see, but my nerves were turned up on high. I could barely breathe with the excitement I felt.

Reggie arrived first. He was unmistakable: tall, well-dressed in an expensive suit that almost seemed to have been tailored to him. He scanned the room quickly; it was easy to see that my bombshell Sara was not there.

He left, and then came back into the room.

For a few minutes I wondered if Sara had changed her mind. I pulled out my phone and saw the message icon.

My heart sank as I opened it. I would of course do whatever she wanted, and even getting this far was almost too good to be true, but I was so hungry to see this play to the end that I felt a little sick as I swept her message open.

Love you XOXO

When I looked up, she was coming through the doorway.

She changed the air in the bar, which was almost entirely filled with businessmen. Every one of them perked up, and their eyes followed her. But when she headed directly toward Reggie, they mostly gave up, settling back down. She had gone to the most worthy man, and that was that.

Reggie stood up, and when Sara reached him he put his arms around her as if she were a long-time girlfriend. His dark fingers were at the very lowest part of her body that could still be called her back.

At least he pulled her chair out for her. What a gentleman.

And then they leaned in toward each other. Sara laughing, Reggie's voice a low, undecipherable rumble across the room.

An hour later, they were quite close, and quite drunk. Reggie had been stroking Sara's thigh, his fingers working their way under the fabric from time to time. Slowly, smoothly. He was smooth, this guy.

He had walked his fingers over to her hand, and now he had it in his massive grip as they talked. Somehow they had scooted closer on their two chairs. They were practically drinking out each other's mouths.

Man, was Sara really drawing it out, and torturing me.

Finally – and time seemed to slow when she did it, so that every second passed like a glacier, almost imperceptible – she reached her hand into her black purse, and emerged from it with a slender silver tube. I watched the color stain her lips, and I had a fleeting thought, just for a sliver of a second, that perhaps I should stop all of this.

But then I stood up, and unsteadily walked out of the bar.

Outside the bar it was bright, strange. My ears felt plugged, and sounds seemed distorted. My heart was thumping in my chest. And my cock was so hard I could barely walk.

The elevator doors closed with bizarre ding.

This was it.

I was waiting for more than half an hour, overheating even in the air conditioning, behind a curtain in the section of the suite that we had decided she should try to keep out of, so that I could better position myself to see her. This way, also, I could sit down if thing got drawn out for a long time. Sara's thoughtfulness, not my idea.

Finally, the hotel door clicked, and their voices, flirtatious and sexual, led them into the room.

Sara was so much more...sexual. Her skin-tight black dress turned her into nothing but curves, and every move she made pushed her closer to Reggie. Her body, her mouth, all of it moved toward him in ever-shrinking circles.

Now that I saw him in the room, I could see that Reggie was a big guy. I mean, really big. My memory hadn't quite done him justice.

My balls were blue and aching by now, and I still had to wait for the thing I had come here for.

Sara guided him to the bed, and he sat down next to her. He pulled her hand toward him and moved the her wedding ring between his fingers.

“Sure this is what you wanna do?” he said.

Sara piled her legs beneath her. “I told you what the deal was. I want to have a good time. I want you to give me what he doesn't.”

This particular part of the lie was not anything we had agreed on. It burned through me, and it stung, but my cock told a different story than the pain I was feeling inside – I liked it. In fact, it was so fucking hot I felt like my whole body was going to split open from the pressure building up inside of me.

And where in the fuck was she getting this stuff from?

Reggie kissed her for a while, and then he pushed her forward to look at her face. I thought he might say something romantic, but instead he took her jaw in his large hand and held her for a moment. "You gonna be a good girl for daddy, then?" he said. His voice had a dominating, menacing quality to it, and for a moment I felt like maybe I should jump out and stop the whole thing.

Sara didn't say anything, but she nodded.

She had a light smile on her lips, and I could see that her eyes were sparkling with excitement. The expression on her face was one I had never seen before, but it was miles from fearful or hesitant. She wanted to 'be a good girl for daddy.'

I reminded myself that Sara had chosen her man, and Sara had done it after a lot of thought. She must have known what she was getting into, and it must be what she wanted.

Oh god. My cock was so swollen it felt like it might break off.

Reggie pushed his thumb into Sara's mouth, and she let her lips open for him, and sucked on his dark skin.

I could tell by the way that she was moving her mouth around his thumb that I was going to get a real show.

Seeing my wife as though she were another woman, and also realizing that she was not, and seeing her choice of man in the flesh, combined in a sick and twisting pain inside of me. A pleasant pain. I was getting so overwhelmed already I didn't know how long I would last, and it had only just started.

Reggie was about to manhandle her. That much anyone could see. It wasn't what I had imagined, but I realized that I wanted it.

He pulled his hand out of her mouth and grasped her hair in his hand. Then he pushed her head down, down to his crotch.

I watched as he held her where she could look at his fingers, and did so obediently, as he unfastened his belt with the other hand. He unzipped his pants, and pulled out his cock.

It took me a second to register that not only was it twice as big as mine, it wasn't even fully erect yet. It was dark and meaty. It continued to twitch and inflate, but I had no time to see him at his fully erect size, because he growled at Sara.

“Open your mouth, now, baby.”

Sara's mouth opened, without hesitation. She opened her mouth wide and it formed a smile.

Reggie's fingers gripped her hair tightly, and he pushed her onto his cock.

Sara opened her mouth, his cock disappeared inside of it. He pushed her until her pink lips were up against his dark pubic hair. My wife's pink lips, around another man's black cock and buried in his dark hair.

“That's it,” he said. “That's what daddy likes. Swallow that whole thing.”

I could see that Sara was gagging. His thick member must have been all the way in her throat, and her cheeks were puffed out with the effort and the size of him. But he was holding her firmly close to him, pushing himself deeper and deeper inside of him.

He did not relent, holding her head so that she could not lift up from his cock. I could hear her labored breathing through her nose and her stuffed throat, but she kept sucking and slurping up everything he gave to her.

He kept her there, watching her for a few more moments, and then pulled her up so that she could breath.

Now his cock was hard, and it just kept coming from her mouth as he lifted her up – it seemed like it might never end. A huge tower of black cock. When the tip finally emerged from Sara's open mouth, it was sticky with her spit, and a sparkling glob of it clung to his cock for a moment, before dripping back against her face. She looked at him, looking him right in the eyes, and smiled.

He was still holding her hair in his fist.

He plunged her face back onto his cock again, and pushed her all the way down. But then he grasped her hair and shook her head from side to side, almost like he was rubbing her face in his crotch. Sara made a surprised noise, and it became mangled and gurgly in her throat as he pushed her head around, shaking her by the hair in a violent motion, with her mouth pressed up against his pubic bone.

It was so abusive, so lewd. I knew I should have felt more...offended. But it was probably the hottest thing I had ever seen in my life.

He lifted her by the hair, so she could breath again. Sara licked her lips, and I saw that she was smiling.

Which was a relief, because I didn't want to stop the show, and even if I did – there was probably no way to really do it.

Reggie held her head suspended, and with his other hand began to slide the belt out of the loopholes. Sara watched with fascination.

I looked down, briefly, at my own pants. A stain of precum was spreading out from the center of my crotch. My cock ached more than I think I had ever felt it in all my life.

“Put this around your neck,” Reggie said in a low voice, giving the belt, to Sara, who he still held by the hair.

Oh god.

Sara took the belt with a sexy smile, and slid it around her neck as he held her head aloft with his one hand. He stroked his cock with his other.

He watched her obediently put her neck in a leash.

Then I watched my wife, who seemed to have had her body stolen by a demon, as she handed him the loose end of the belt with a smile. A sexy, porno-grade smile.

Reggie took it, jerking it so that it tightened around her neck.

Sara's face slowly turned from porcelain to pink to red.

I knew I should be feeling fear, but all I could feel was more deeply turned on than ever before.

Reggie released the belt, and pushed her face back onto his cock again. He lifted her up and down by her hair for a few sloppy thrusts. Her eyes were watering and her makeup was a mess now, but she was obeying his physical commands, opening her mouth eagerly, wanting to be used and abused like a sex doll.

When he lifted her from his cock this time, she smiled at him as the spit dripped onto her chin.

“You like sucking on that cock, don't you baby?”

Sara didn't say anything. She just opened her mouth and leaned forward to get more of it.

Using his enormous, muscled arm, he held the belt up in the air, and it pulled Sara, almost choking, away from his cock.

To my surprise and delight, she extended her tongue and tried to lick it, straining to get some of his cock in her mouth.

I couldn't believe this was Sara.

Reggie did this for awhile, amusing himself by teasing her, letting her lick at the air, trying to get his cock.

I was watching my wife crave another man's cock.

He stood up, pushing her back on her knees. Now the full length of his cock was clear: it was enormous. It stood out in front of him but was too heavy to stay horizontal. He held it to keep it pointed at Sara's face.

"Keep your mouth open," he coaxed, jerking on the belt-collar, and Sara complied, opening her half-closed mouth and sticking out her tongue so that he could slap his cock on it. He slapped his big slab against her extended tongue.

Then he rubbed his cock on her forehead, and then her cheeks. I watched, the mixture of feeling churning slowly inside of me, almost bringing tears to my eyes because I was so overwhelmed by them, as this big man marked her face – my wife's face – with his dark, dripping cock.

She smiled at him and tried to capture it in her mouth. She turned her eyes up toward him, submissively.

Was this really Sara, my conservative wife who had always preferred sex in the missionary position?

"Get that cock all the way down there. All the way. I want you to get that tongue out and lick my balls," Reggie said.

No way, I thought, was that even possible.

But Sara opened her mouth, wider and wider, and Reggie pushed himself into her, and she took it all down her throat – every last, thick inch of it. I could actually see his cock bulging in her throat. I rubbed my eyes.

Was I actually seeing that?

It was true, and it was very real. Reggie's big, thick cock was filling her throat so full that I could actually see it pressing out against her skin as it went down. All the way down to her collarbone.

I opened my eyes to make sure I was really seeing what I was seeing.

Sara's jaw was open to what seemed like an impossible stretch, and her lips were wrapped all around the base of his thick, black cock.

He looked down at her. "Show me your eyes," he demanded.

I couldn't see her gaze from here, but I shivered with delight thinking of her light blue eyes open and gazing at him, her throat full of his cock.

“Get that tongue out. Lick them balls,” he continued.

I shivered, and my eyes went to where her lips were.

Sara's pink tongue emerged, between her lower lip and his big black cock. I stared in amazement. She started to lick around on his dark, huge balls.

I thought the pain of my hard cock was going to make me keel over now. I stared at her tongue, sopping with spit, making circles on his balls. The most disgusting, sloppy, wet gagging sounds were coming from her mouth and her lips.

Reggie emitted a groan that had the effect of making me even harder than I was already. “That's it, that's it,” he said. “Just like that, oh yeah,” he bit his lip.

I tried to imagine what it might like feel like to have my cock all the way in my wife's throat, and then to feel her tongue licking my balls.

I could almost feel it, even though she had of course never done anything like this. I decided when next had sex with Sara I would try to get her to put her big lips, at least, on my ball sack.

“Take off your clothes,” he ordered suddenly, pushing her head away from him.

I looked at Sara's face. Streaks of black dribbled from her eyes to her cheeks, and her lips seemed almost puffer. Engorged. Her eyes were red and her face was wet with every fluid that could be involved in this particular sex act.

Something about how trashed she looked was incredibly erotic to me.

His big hands guided her into the position he wanted her in, moving her around in firm jerks like she was a sex toy. When he was done moving her she was on her hands and knees, with her legs together behind her, he used his hand to push her lower back down and turn her ass up in the air, toward him.

His fingers lingered on her tattoo. I could see that he was tracing the outline of it, looking at it.

“I want to fuck you in the ass,” his low voice rumbled. “You ever done that?”

I sucked in my breath. I was panting now, behind the curtain, like an animal.

Sara shook her head. “No, no, it will hurt too much,” she said. “It's too big, I can't do it.”

Her voice was whining, but I could tell she was making a show of it. It was an act. An act to please him, and to please me. She wasn't really protesting.

She turned her head for the first time, so that she was facing the curtain, and she smiled as she looked at me.

Sara. My wife. About to take it in the ass.

“You can do it, girl.”

Reggie moved his hand over her round ass, and he watched his own hand moving with a lusty expression. I could see that he appreciated the same thing I did: Sara's full bottom, which in this position was near-perfect in shape and size.

His hand moved between her legs, and I couldn't see very well but I could hear the sticky sound of her pussy juices as he slipped his fingers into her folds. And then he drew his finger up, up toward her virginal pink hole.

He traced circles over her tiny hole, and Sara moaned in low voice.

Then she squealed, as his finger disappeared inside of her.

“Ssshhhh,” Reggie said, like he was training an animal. He placed his other hand on her ass reassuringly, stroking her. “Just relax.”

Sara was facing the wall now, and she lifted her head and arched her back. Her eyes were squinting in concentration.

Reggie gently moved his finger in and out of her.

After a few minutes, Sara seemed to relax. Her body drained of the tension writhing beneath her skin, and she let out a low moan. “That's it,” Reggie said, confirming my observation.

Sara leaned down onto the bed, so that her ass was up in the air for Reggie. She had her eyes closed and her mouth open, and Reggie had won her complete submission.

Oh fuck, it was so hot.

I heard her whimper as he put a second finger, which he wet with her pussy juices, into her ass. But she recovered quickly and began to moved her hips a little in rhythm with his finger-fucking. Just like she had for me.

I looked at Reggie's face. His eyes were on her hole and his fingers moving in and out of it. He was smiling.

I started to stroke my cock, because I couldn't bear not touching myself any longer.

Reggie fucked her like this for a bit, working on her to get her ready for the next part.

He guide the tip of his formidably large cock toward Sara's opening.

I realized I was holding my breath in anticipation.

I looked at her ass, where her very tight asshole was puckered and closed, and beneath it her pussy was dripping with moisture, so much that she had shining smears of her own juices on the insides of her thighs, just like the night before. Except now, instead of imagining his cock, it was really there.

Reggie placed the tip of his cock in the pool of wet juice that was dripping from the entrance to her pussy. He used his cock to rub against Sara's swollen, hard clit, and she squealed in pleasure.

Sara started to move her ass up and down lightly, enjoying the treatment he was giving her. I could see that she wanted to make herself her come.

Jealousy bit at me as well now. I narrowed my eyes, and watched Reggie's dark fingers slowly working her up to froth. She was whimpering now, but with desire. She wanted him to let her rise over the crest of pleasure, and I could see that he was very expertly slowing whenever she got too close.

He wanted to keep the control to himself.

She made a loud howling sound when he pushed his thumb into her anus, just the tip of it. I knew her ass had closed up again.

"Easy girl," he said, as if talking to a horse. "That's it."

She twisted her head back and forth, and clawed at the sheets.

"Open up for me, baby. Be a good girl and give daddy what he likes," Reggie said, in almost a whisper.

His baritone voice was so sexy it was actually making me harder.

Sara squirmed and tilted her ass to him. He pushed his finger in all the way to the fold of his palm, and she moaned, half in pleasure and half in pain.

The sound was enthralling, coming from her. Such a slutty, whoreish moan, as she did the dirtiest thing she had ever done, and with another man.

My mouth was open and drying up. I licked my lips and watched, absorbed. I stared at Reggie's cock, unable to wait for him to push it inside of her ass. I couldn't wait to hear the sound she made as that big, thick black cock stretched her open.

But Reggie wasn't done taking the scene to its absolute heights of submission.

"Get your hands up on your ass," he breathed to her.

I sucked in my breath as I saw Sara's hands go obediently behind her, to her asscheeks. She placed her hands high on her rump, fingers pointing down, to display her ass for him. It was the most deliciously submissive thing I had seen a woman do.

He pulled his thumb out of her ass and she gave a sharp yelp.

He dipped his big cock all the way into her pussy, and she moaned as he did it.

"Let me get that nice and wet for you, baby," he said. "You been a good girl, there we go."

Sara moaned in pleasure as he fucked her gently. I watched his thick, dark cock moving in and out of her pussy. My wife's pussy.

But it wasn't what I wanted to see, as erotic as it was. I wanted the next part, I wanted her ass spread open with his cock inside of it.

"Now remember what I told you, you just relax and this will go a whole lot easier."

And then his cock was at her asshole, which was slightly opened from his fingering. But still, it was so small next to the thick black cock in front of it.

I couldn't actually believe he would fit inside of her.

Sara's scream, or yell, or howl, or better worded, the indescribable sound she made when he pushed his cock forward into her asshole, made the room quiver. It was agonized and yet still inviting, and she kept her hands on her ass, and her ass tilted up for him. She kept screaming as he went in further, further, further still – his cock was so long I thought for sure he wouldn't be able to go all the way. Her mouth was open and her face was toward me. She opened her eyes as looked at me, as the final inches slid in.

The look on her face almost made me come.

“Nice and easy,” Reggie guided her. Her muscles were straining against her skin, she hadn’t relaxed yet.

“Ooohhhh,” Sara wailed. Her ass was stretched into a thin red line around his big black meat. I was getting close to coming and I stopped moving my hand before I went too far.

I wanted to wait to come until Reggie filled her ass up with his cream.

I watched her open mouth, her pained face. I couldn't believe this was my Sara, letting a man fuck her like this.

She suddenly seemed to relax, and as she did, Reggie almost fell into her. All the way to the base of his cock.

Now she started to put on her own show. She moaned and wailed. “Oh, oh! It's too big, it's so big. It hurts!” Her hair was sticking to her face, and her eyes were open now, smiling at me.

“Good girl. Keep tellin me how it hurts. I like to hear that.”

Yes, me too. Keep telling him how much it hurts and how big daddy's cock is.

“Open up for me,” Reggie coaxed.

Inch by inch, he filled her up, not stopping until his cock was all the way inside of her. All the way to his big hairy balls.

And then he started to fuck her. He went slowly for the first few thrusts, and she let out long, mangled howls as he moved back and forth. “Oh!” she whined. “Oh god! Oh my god!”

He just kept going, ignoring her pleas, which were not real and we all knew it, to stop because it was too big. There was a sexual, pleased moan to her voice; she was begging him to stop and begging him to keep going.

“You wanna come for me, baby? Get that hand down there and make yourself come. I wanna feel your ass nice and tight around my cock. Do it!” he said.

He slapped her ass, and Sara moved her hand underneath her torso. As he thrust, I could see snippets of her white hand, her fingers moving quickly over her own clit.

I shuddered.

It didn't take long. She let out a low, bestial sound as she came, and I heard him say, “Oh yeah, that's how I like it,” but in a deep, barely audible whisper. I knew that Sara's ass was clenching even more tightly around his cock now, and he could feel her hot, pink flesh tight around his dick.

He pumped at her, his thighs slapping into her ass, as she wailed that it was too much, she couldn't take any more. "Oh god! Oh god, it hurts so much!" She was hollering now, and he had grabbed her hips and was holding her fiercely in order to slam himself even harder into her, all the way, all the way to the base of his huge long cock. She could probably feel it up in her chest, his dick was so long.

And then he grunted, and pushed her down into the mattress so that his final thrust was as far inside of her as it could get. Sara howled, and it sounded like she was crying softly.

He looked up at the ceiling and let out an animal groan as his seed gushed from his cock and exploded inside of my wife.

He gave a few more light thrusts, grunting and panting as he did, getting ever last drop of his cum into my wife's ass.

My own orgasm had begun to surface when Sara came, and I reached down to move it along. It ripped through me, and I fought to keep from yelling as I splattered my cum all over the curtain.

But the two of them were making so much noise that they wouldn't have noticed me anyway.

Reggie took his time, standing with his cock still inside of Sara. He was panting from the exertion.

I waited. I had waited so long and been tortured by blue balls just to see this.

And then I saw him start to move, and my patience and daring were rewarded: his cock slid out of her ass, and there was her gaping hole, stretched wide, wide open. Dripping out of it, all of his creamy cum. Her ass throbbed, and with each pulse it closed just a little, but it stretched out to an enormous black hole, and with each pulse the cum gushed out just a little more.

That was what I wanted to see. I was practically getting hard again from the sight of it. I knew this image would stay burned in my mind forever.

Reggie slapped her on the ass. "Good girl. That what you were looking for?"

Sara smiled, and she was looking at me as she did. "I think it's what we both wanted," she said.

God, was it ever.

I was a little bit relieved that Sara still seemed okay with what had happened, because I had gotten so caught up in how hot it was I had really not been on the lookout to stop anything if it seemed like it was going to far.

She fell onto the bed and turned her side. Then she gathered the sheets around her, and sat up.

"I have to meet my husband in about an hour," she said.

For some reason, in spite of all the things I had just witnessed, it was this particular act that I would think about the most when I remembered this night. Sara Fleming Pemberton, telling a lie, and telling it well. A lie that was a shared, complicit secret between the two of us, just like everything she had just done. It sent a shiver up my spine.

Reggie was already looking for his pants. "I got it." Then he tisked. "Damn you're cold."

Sara touched her mouth and shrugged.

Reggie smiled, very satisfied with himself, gathered his stuff, and leaned in to kiss Sara on the mouth. "Give me a shout if you need something like this again."

She smiled, revealing nothing, and away he went.

I pushed the curtain aside after the hotel door slammed and clicked behind him. Sara had played it like an expert, a secret agent, revealing nothing until the door was firmly closed. Then she flopped onto the bed, on her side. She was smiling.

I smiled back.

"How was that?" She seemed a little nervous about my reaction. Her act had slipped away now that it was just the two of us, and I found it endearing that she was a little shy given how she had just acted.

I shook my head in amazement, because I wasn't sure what to say..

A look of worry clouded her face. "Was it too over-the-top?"

I shook my head, this time more enthusiastically. This time with a smile.

I sat down on the bed. "I liked it," I ventured. "I really...it was fucking hot."

Sara turned onto her back. "You aren't weirded out by it, for real?"

"Sara...I'm the one who asked you to do it, really. So, no."

There was a pause.

"Me either. It doesn't make any sense."

She was still a little unable to accept that it turned me on, or understand why it did.

"It's the hottest thing I've ever seen," I breathed. Images of Reggie's cock moving in and out of her filled my head, and I started to get hard again.

Sara rolled back on her side again. I stretched out next to her.

She moved her hands down to my pants and found my erection with her fingers. "What was your favorite part?" she said, her voice sultry, back to her hammed-up southern accent.

She was pushing my pants off of me. They were already open, and I wriggled out of them easily.

And then Sara, my newly dirty wife, grinned mischievously. "I didn't get very much attention in one place," she said. "So tell me, while you give me what I want: what did you like best?"

I watched her hand move down and grasp my cock. Her grip was firm. She seemed almost possessed by someone other than herself. It occurred to me, just before I moved my fingers down to her engorged and wanting slit, still creamy with another man's cum, that I had gotten exactly what I wanted: a wife who was chaste, virginal, and pure.

Who was also a whore, at my bidding.

Renee's whistling cooed softly inside my head. There were the rest of the lyrics: but if you try sometimes, you get what you need.

I plunged my fingers deep inside of my wife. My very naughty, very used wife. And when I climbed on top of her, and saw her eyes filled with love for me, and felt the sticky cum of another man, slipping from her ass and covering my balls, I knew I had what I really wanted.

Thanks to that fucking great bitch of an ex-girlfriend, Renee.

EPILOGUE

Sara's tattoo has grown, from the tiny three-flowered gem in the middle of her back, to a full vine of eight flowers. The last five we have added together, and I like to see them while I fuck her from behind and she recounts her favorite parts of her adventures. They are a symbol of the trust we have built in enacting my fantasies and hers. We build them together, deciding who and what and where and when...and most deliciously: how.

Renee has done some of the work on the tattoo, and she smiles knowingly while she admires it when Sara is wearing a swimsuit or a shirt that reveals her midriff. But Sara has told me – and I believe her – that she hasn't told Renee what the tattoo is really about now.

One night, Renee and I were left alone again after a dinner with the four of us. We were sitting on the porch.

Renee had taken to smoking cigars in an attempt to give up cigarettes. It did not seem to be working. She puffed on the end of it and blew smoke in my direction.

“So,” she said, bringing the subject up out of nowhere. “Sometimes a tattoo is just a tattoo.”

I smiled, more for her cleverness, which she wielded with as much talent as her physical grace. The girl was like a dancing scythe.

“Sorry about the misunderstanding.”

Her eyes, which never seemed to miss anything, were smiling. I wondered if Renee figured that we had gone through with it.

You could never tell what she was thinking.

“I wonder if I should thank you,” I said, after a long pause.

Renee puffed away on her cigar, and shrugged. She had an expression on her face that was almost impossible to read. Like she had no idea what I was talking about, and every idea what I was talking about, all at the same time.

What a perfectly lovely sister-in-law she turned out to be.

Did you like The Hotwife Tattoo? You'll love The Hotwife Summer

When Ben and Summer have the chance to spend the summer in Italy, their stale marriage starts to heat up in ways Ben could only have dreamed about. Summer is ready to take his hotwife fantasy all the way, and her choice is a sexy, Italian, Michelin star-studded chef. It's too late to put the brakes on what he's set in motion when Ben discovers the humiliating truth about Summer's choice of man. Summer has a taste for being naughty, and a filthy little plan of her own. Will it be everything he could wish for, or will Ben's cuckold fantasy turn into a nightmare he can't escape?

A Dark Place: Cuckolded In Lagos

Lagos is the one place in Africa where you can make anything happen.

Three people are carving out their fortunes in Africa's largest city, but each of them holds a deeper, darker desire. What is the secret desire of the angelic Charlotte, who finds all men's eyes on her after dark in Lagos? What about Andrew, who keeps a secret hunger so buried perhaps he doesn't admit it even to himself? And what could be darker than Clement Ambode's already shadowy “reliability” as an all-purpose contractor in the underbelly of Lagos?

Charlotte, Andrew, and Clement will find themselves in a very dark place when their worlds collide in this ultra-sexy, novella-length cuckold story.
