WIVES GONE WILD

A Collection Of Ten Dirty Cuckold Short Stories (Naughty Wives Go On Vacation)

To the reader:

This is a collection of fun, dirty, cuckold humiliation stories about wives who get naughty on vacation. I also write longer hotwife novellas, like The Hotwife Summer and The Hotwife Tattoo, in which the characters enact their fantasies in a loving relationship built on trust and love.

These stories are not like that.

There's a debate about the terms cuckold and hotwife, and where one draws the line between the two. For me, the distinction is this: hotwives are not as mean as the wives in these stories, which I place firmly in the realm of cuckolding. The wives in these stories are not coaxed into their naughtiness by their husbands. They go out and get what they want for themselves, or the superior men around them take them right out from under their husband's noses. (And these are wives who are out to rub their hubbys' noses...and sometimes other things...in it!)

Now don't get me wrong. These men love it. But if you're a fan of some of my other fiction, it may not be what you're looking for.

However, if cuckolds cleaning up after the men who manhandle their wives is what you like to read about...then read on and Happy Reading!

DOUBLE-CUCKED: CUCKOLDED ON A CONTAINER SHIP

Captain Jack Teller gives one last, superior smile. It's the pleased smile of a man who has just enjoyed the inside of your wife. The pleased smile of a man who has managed not just to cuckold you, but to double-cuckold you.

Right after sneering at me, he takes a big eyeful of my wife's pert bottom. She's already trotting down the gangplank, holding her oversized, floppy hat to her head. She's waving at some Spanish kids who have run up to the ship to offer us services we don't need. She's wearing a short, white dress that is blowing clear up to the very tops of her thighs.

It doesn't matter. Captain Jack has already seen everything underneath her dress. Many times.

I know my cock is hard and pushing out my pants a little, and this may be the first time I'm grateful for having a small dick. Watching his face, as he humiliates me one final time, by smearing his eyes all over Carrie's body, is turning me on.

Above me, hanging their hands over the bars of the walkway, the crew members wave their hands in a satirical goodbye. They laugh amongst themselves. One of them blows me a kiss. "Goodbye, Timmy!" he says, through puckered lips, and they all start laughing.

I tuck my passport deep into my pocket, and follow my wife onto land. Finally, the nightmare is over.

She turns to me as though we just stepped off a cruise ship, a real cruise ship where we both actually enjoyed ourselves. There is a strong breeze blowing off the bay, and she has to hold her hat to keep it from blowing off.

Beneath the hat, her face is fresh and untroubled. She took a shower and put on makeup, and there is no way of knowing, just by looking at her, that she was smeared with cum of some crew member – who knew which one – just hours ago. That she has probably sucked on every cock on that ship, and every man waving at us from the balcony has filled her in every hole.

"I need to eat," she says simply.

Then she turns, and waves to the crew. "Bye, bye boys!" she calls out, and blows them a kiss.

Her hat blows off when she lifts her arm, and she turns to me with an expression on her face like I am a servant. “Go get that, will you?”

So I chase her hat down the pier. There is no way to do this without looking like an idiot, so I'm sure the guys on the ship really enjoyed their final view of me.

The hat blows into the water in the end.

My wife walks past me and says nothing, just gives me one of her disappointed looks.

And that is the end of our “cruise” on a container ship.

When my wife first proposed the idea to me, I thought she was making a joke.

We were sitting on our porch, enjoying the first bit of spring weather, even though it was really too cold to enjoy. It had been a long winter, so any taste of spring was appreciated.

We had been married for five years at the time. My wife was a lot younger than me, and I was starting to worry already that she was a little disappointed in her choice to marry me.

She had been a graduate student when I met her. I was at the party of a colleague from a different department, and she spilled bean dip all over my shirt.

I think she had been caught up with the romantic ideas of dating an older man (not that much older), who was a professor (assistant, no tenure) and who taught ancient languages and Classics. She was really enamored of the idea of traveling all over the world to do research. Also, there is a weird thing that comes over women while they're in school, which sort of fades as soon as they're out: they really look up to professors, and see them as an authority figure. I guess because we're so high up in the hierarchy.

I've had more than one conversation about it with my colleagues. The rule of thumb is never to get involved, and definitely never to get married. Never get involved, because if she gets mad she could ruin your career. And never get married, because once she leaves school, it's like midnight for Cinderella. You go from being an authority figure with a lot of power, in an established hierarchy, surrounded by people who think you are brilliant and defer to you – to the awkward geek you really are. Who doesn't even know how to change a car tire.

But of course no one follows this advice. They just give it.

Carrie was a violinist, doing a Master's in performance. She was average, according to my colleague, with a fairly unpromising career. She wanted to follow me around the world and busk and take auditions, which for the uninitiated, basically means: she was going to play music on the street like a bum.

She was more interested in adventures like skydiving and ice climbing, which were also way outside of my own comfort zone, and not anything I really wanted to do.

I liked the juxtaposition of classical violinist and thrill-seeker, though.

And, if you saw this girl, you would have probably done what I did, which was to not care at all about any of our potential incompatibility.

She had a nice, full rack and she liked to show it off in low-cut tops, and she was always smiling and pleasant. She was curvy and lively and had a lovely face.

But not only that, she laughed at my jokes, and she placed her head in her hand and looked at me attentively while I spoke. Whatever I said.

It was only after we got married, and the romance of traveling to Europe each summer became tarnished by the realities of a non-tenured professor's research grant budget, that she started to become noticeably bored by me.

It was just little things. She stopped looking at me so intently as I spoke. I could see she wasn't listening or was thinking about something else, miles away. At first this was just moments, and then it became hours, and then whole days.

One thing that had made me a little blind to all of our potential incompatibility was that she was really hot in the sack, and she was willing to have sex all the time. Not only that, she instigated it most of the time.

I am no Don Juan. This was a big deal to me, and it made me blind to everything else that might have been going off the rails.

After one year of being married, though, her interest in sex began to fade.

I knew I disappointed her.

I'm not an adventurous person, sexually. I also lack confidence in my own skills, which I know is a real disaster for sex. But in the beginning, it seemed like I had finally found a woman who enjoyed having sex with me. She yelled and screamed and really seemed to be having a good time. In turn, I felt better about myself, and so I probably did a better job than I ever had of pleasing a woman.

As time went on, she put less effort into her enjoyment. I started wondering if it had all been an act. The more I thought about that, the more convinced I became that she had been faking everything all along, and the less confidence I had.

It was a negative feedback loop. I even knew that, and tried to things by thinking positively. Reciting things like, I am great in bed, so that it would come true. Of course, I think you have to actually believe in that bullshit for it to work, and I didn't really believe myself.

By the time this trip rolled around, we were only having sex maybe every two weeks, and it was always a little weird and subdued. She seemed to be thinking about something else...or someone else.

I started to get the feeling she was just doing it to appease me. My thoughts turned darker and darker, and I started fantasizing about her having an affair.

Outside of campus, I saw the way men looked at her. The way they looked at us, sizing up the situation. Older man, thin but not because he was fit. A little awkward, quiet, definitely not the alpha-male type. Younger woman. Petite, pretty, classy, cute.

I wondered what they thought the deal was.

Men smiled at her, and opened doors for her. They made jokes and looked at her when they thought she wasn't looking back at them.

My wife had always played oblivious at the beginning of our marriage. Now – at least it seemed to me – she skillfully flirted back. She maintained an oblivious, fluttery attitude, but I felt sure she was just a little too fluttery; a little too giggly; a little too overcome by the jokes men told her.

This was an incredible turn-on for me for some reason. It also made me angry. It was hard to explain. I would drag her away from the counter at a coffee shop, where she would lean over the counter to watch something on YouTube that the hipster barista had suggested she look at (while he looked at her cleavage). But even as I did so, I had a strange, cool feeling in my pelvis. Delicious and not; a turn-on and not.

I got a similar feeling when I stood on ladders and looked down.

I didn't want her to be unhappy, but for me, it was kind of hot that she was rejecting me like this. It was strange: I hated it, but I also liked it.

That's probably why I didn't make more of an effort to change things, until it was too late.

That was sex.

She was also clearly unhappy with so many other things. Or maybe her unhappiness in bed bled into daily life. I almost wished she would find someone to have an affair with, so she could be happy again.

It was hard for me: I couldn't let go of my own romantic ideas about her, and hope things would go back to the way they were at the beginning of our marriage. I was too scared to confront her about any of this, because I didn't want to hear from her that she really was bored with me, that she really did think I was a huge disappointment in bed. I liked fantasizing about these things, but in my fantasies I had total control over what she said and how the fantasy ended. If I talked to her about it in real life, anything could have happened.

Every now and then, we would have some wine on the porch or go to a movie that she really enjoyed, and she would get flushed and excited, and things would be a tiny bit like they were.

(One evening she climbed onto my lap after four glasses of wine, and even though we were in the back yard where any of my neighbors could see us, she took me out and slipped me into her pussy beneath a short sundress she was wearing. Just out of the blue.)

It was things like that that kept me from dealing with the problems in our marriage. The dull and the unsatisfied Carrie made up a big percentage of our lives, but I was in love with and wrapped around the finger of the Carrie who did things like that, and so I'll admit it: I was afraid of changing anything at all and making her disappear, too.

So when she came to me with her proposal, and her face was lit up with excitement and a bit of natural blush colored her cheeks, I could hardly say no.

"You'll be on Sabbatical, anyway," she said.

I agreed.

"And you wanted a place with no distractions," she continued.

Also true.

"So it's perfect, in a way, because then I get to travel like I wanted to, and it's not super expensive, and everyone is happy!"

She clasped her hands together and batted her eyes at me, and that was that. She was irresistible, especially for me, because in the end I was hopelessly in love with her. All I wanted was for her to be happy.

Her proposal was to take a cruise.

I had always felt the day was coming when she would ask me for that, and I couldn't really think of anything I had less interest in. The pampering, the old people, the commodified fun of it. I didn't like being an uppity-professor type, but it was just a little too theme-parky for me.

It was, however, the kind of thing Carrie would really like. She liked drinks with umbrellas, and pools, and anything “fun.” She liked roller coasters, for goddsake.

She also liked that she was very pretty, and that men were attracted to her like bees: she liked standing at a tropical, vacation bar and just watching them start humming around her, coming in from miles away.

So I agreed to the cruise right away.

“But...I'm not done. It's not what you think!” she protested.

I pictured her laughing in the sun, smiling at the pool boy, winking at him as she walked by. All the old farts at the bar watching her walk away, their eyes floating down to her full ass...while I frantically transferred money from my retirement account to pay for her to do it.

“It's a cargo ship cruise,” she explained, interrupting my thoughts. “You go on a container ship.”

I arched my eyebrows with interest.

“See,” she said. “I knew you'd be interested.”

It turns out that you can purchase fairly budget tickets to travel on a container ship. You get meals with the crew and a modest cabin, and that's it.

It actually sounded fun. Apparently there was nothing to do, which was perfect for me at the time because I had a ton of writing to do. There was no internet to distract me, no real activities on a cargo ship.

“What will you do?” I asked her.

“Oh,” she said. “The one I have mind...it has a track and a pool, and then..I don't know, I have a lot of reading I want to do. I just want a rest,” she said. She was dismissive, and she started making some coffee.

I should have known better, but she just seemed so excited.

So I agreed.

The cruise left from New York, crossed the Atlantic, and went through the Mediterranean and beyond, if we wanted to stay on. I looked through the pictures online: a nice, plain cabin. Beautiful views of the placid Atlantic. Smiling and satisfied customers. Gorgeous, clean ports with exotic promises...

So six months later, we packed our bags.

All the way to the port, we were smiling and filled with excitement. The fun we would have! The things we would see! How cool we would be, when we told people what we had done that year! The sea on our faces! Hooray!

I followed Carrie up the gangplank. I felt worldly. Adventurous.

As I mentioned, Carrie is the one who wanted to ice climb and hike around Timbuktu (in the middle of a takeover by hostile fundamentalists, which she never knew because she did not read the paper).

But I felt proud of myself boarding the November. Carrie was happy, I would no have to do anything except write, and I could punch in 60 days or so of Adventure, and not have to do anything like this again for years. It was a perfect plan.

As we boarded, the crew began to emerge from wherever they were hiding, and rest their arms on the balcony railings. The smell of cigarette smoke wafted from the side of the ship, where a man with a face made of leather and a trimmed beard stood with a dark-skinned man with piercing blue eyes: all four eyes were following Carrie's ascent onto the ship.

I felt the tension immediately, of other men watching my wife.

I gave a quick glance over, in the direction of the smoke, and saw that the two men were buttoned up in the uniform of the shipping line. They looked important, hardened. I assumed it was the captain, and his first mate.

Or whatever. I had no idea how sailor hierarchy worked. Or what a captain would look like. This guy just looked like he knew about celestial navigation and pirates.

I looked away quickly.

Above us, a variety of men looked down as we boarded the ship. Big, muscled white guys covered in a layer of grime. Wiry, dark-skinned South Asianers, smiling with bright white teeth. Men wearing uniforms.

A sense of unease began to fill me, but I ignored it. I was being paranoid, I told myself.

These men had not come out to ogle my wife, but to look at the bustling port of New York, to take in land before they went out to sea. To say goodbye to their families, for chrissake.

The accommodations were modest, but not terrible. They at least seemed clean.

“Holy teal explosion,” Carrie said, but she sounded cheerful and amused. I was actually impressed by how relaxed she was being: she preferred to think of herself as a girl who didn't need to be pampered, but she did. She was always signing herself up for rugged adventures and then talking about how much she didn't mind how rugged they were, in an overexcited voice that revealed she was actually very disturbed by them.

Here, she seemed to actually be content with the place.

I wondered how she would feel as we crossed the Atlantic, but there would be nowhere to go and no one to complain to but me by then.

The room was more spacious than I had expected, especially for a ship. We had a sitting room and a bedroom, and our own bathroom. A wall of windows gave us a view of the multi-colored containers stacked on the enormous deck, and we would be able to see the ocean in several directions once we en route.

The decor left something to be desired, even for a man like me who rarely noticed these things. The floor was carpeted with a sickly lilac and teal carpet, and teal curtains assailed us from all directions. The chairs were covered by teal, the bedspread was teal.

“It looks like a wedding from the eighties,” I said.

Carrie flopped on the bed. She laughed, genuinely, at my comment. I admit that my chest swelled up with happiness as she did so. She rubbed one of her feet along her tan leg and bounced lightly on the bed.

“It's pretty good,” she said.

I couldn't tell if she was flirting with me or just making an honest assessment of the mattress for sleeping. But, like any guy, I worked it out in my mind to be the former. I dropped my duffel bag and moved toward the bed.

Carrie let herself fall onto the bed, and she looked up at the ceiling. She let out a sigh of contentment.

I of course took this as further encouragement and moved closer, resting a knee on the edge of the bed.

“This. Is going to be. Great.” She said pronounced this, and then, without paying any attention to me and my slow creep across the bed, she sat up and neatly got herself onto her knees. "Let's go explore the ship!" she said. "And wave at people as we leave the harbor."

I gave her legs a last, longing look, and agreed that it was a fine idea. Anything to keep her in this buoyant mood.

When I read the original information they sent to us about the cruise, I noted that there was room for ten passengers aboard this ship. They also suggested that reservations be made well in advance, and made it sound like the ship filled up all the time with transatlantic passengers looking for a cheap deal.

After making rounds on the big ship, and checking out the small outdoor pool, the running track, the vast pit of containers, and the entirety of the accommodations, housed in an unremarkable square box at one of the ship, it became clear that my wife was the only woman on the ship. And that we were the only passengers.

As we walked around, the place was eerily uninhabited. Most of the crew, I figured, was doing whatever they were supposed to be doing. I guessed that in the vast belly of the ship, there were a lot of things to be done in dark, wet crevices with pipes running overhead. The control room was the top deck of the nondescript housing complex, and I imagined that's where everyone else was to be found.

Occasionally, a suspicious crew member would eye us from a perch on a balcony, or coming up a ladder. They nodded, looked up and down my wife's body, and moved on.

I watched one such crew member walk away. We were on the running track, walking in circles and enjoying the sun and the sea air, tingling with the honeymoon feeling of a new trip.

"Hmmm," I said. "Maybe you should put on some...baggier clothes."

I was only half joking.

Carrie turned to me, and let the wind pick up her hair. Her shirt was white and hugged her full figure tightly. I could make out the hard knobs of her nipples, lightly raising the fabric. Her skin was glowing, and it was everywhere.

"What?" she said. She seemed lost in thought.

"It's just...these men have been at sea for a long time. You seem to be the only woman on the ship..."

She rolled her eyes. "This trip just started," she said dismissively.

Some of these guys did not have the appearance of well-rested men who had just spent weeks with their lovely wives and only just today boarded the ship. In fact, a lot of them looked cagey and wild-eyed, the way men get if they haven't had sex for a long time.

I looked out over the sea. We were heading to five miles out, and then down to Baltimore and on to Georgia. I could still, just barely, see the coastline. Was it too late to jump off? Maybe this was all a mistake.

I pushed it out of my mind. We could jump off in Baltimore.

The first five days were uneventful. I was getting a lot of work done, and Carrie was exercising like crazy in the gym and on the track, and then taking incredibly long naps on the sun deck with a book face-down on her lap.

I kept on eye suspiciously on the crew members who slunk along the rails or popped up out of hatches, but they started to ignore us after a while.

I began to relax.

We ate in a dining area, where we met the captain.

He was, indeed the same leathery man I had seen while walking up the gangplank, but when he entered the dining room he was all smiles and friendliness. His sailor scowl had disappeared, and he seemed more like someone's friendly father than anything else.

He seemed to enjoy being a tour guide, and liked to complain about how all the young sailors knew nothing about anything. They didn't know their knots, they didn't know how to navigate without GPS. The new ships were all computers, and not really ships at all.

He spent, he assured us, about half of his time on his computer, sending emails.

I was delighted with how bland and boring the life of the captain actually was, though he hinted about the "old days" several times, and I thought I caught an exchange of some sort between him and my adventure-seeking wife. Something that changed in the air; a wink I didn't catch. I was surprised that she didn't breathlessly ask him questions about pirates and his time as an old-school sailor, because that was just the sort of thing Carrie typically did whenever she was on one of her "adventures."

Meanwhile, she seemed truly content with her choice, and how boring it was turning out to be.

"Are you bored yet?" I asked her, repeatedly.

“No,” she said. “This is exactly what I wanted.”

It didn't seem like her, but I wasn't going to argue. Perhaps she had finally tired of trying to get me to jump out of an airplane or ice climb or eat monkey brains in Cambodia. I looked around with a sort of pathetic middle-aged pleasure at the stiff, clean lines of our cabin. Fabulous.

Deep down inside, I was hoping that her newfound, mature sense of peace with the banal would also translate to contentment in the bedroom. Not just here, on a container ship, but in general.

I knew I wasn't adventurous enough for her, and I tried, but I just didn't have it in me to do anything crazy in the sack.

The first night, she flopped on the bed with all the curtains open. The black sea to one side was dotted with a few green, red, and white lights of ships sailing along the coast like us. A city illuminated the cloudy sky on the side where the shore was. It was a beautiful view.

I jumped up to close the curtains when she flopped on the bed next to me with a playful look on her face.

She stopped me.

“Leave them open” she complained. “It's so cool.”

I frowned at the deck below. Though I knew it was physically impossible for anyone to see up here, from down there, something about it made me uncomfortable.

She patted the bed. “Come on,” she insisted. Then she rolled her eyes, aware suddenly of my misgivings and what they were. “Oh God,” she muttered. “No one can see us.”

I gave in and we lay down on the bed. I kissed her passionately, inspired by the dramatic seascape around us.

She surprised me by taking the lead. Unbuckling my pants, helping me out of them, and then lifting her sundress up over her head.

She had no panties on.

I made a mental note to talk to her about that tomorrow. It was strange, and there were so many ladders around where men could look right up her dress...

She moved her hand down to my cock. Unusually, I was already turned on, and I could feel myself solid and hard in her hand. She straddled me and sat on top me.

I gave a nervous glance to the windows, and she smiled. Then she shook her head.

She moved her hand down, between her legs, and found my balls. She squeezed them gently, and I let my head fall onto the pillow and gasped. She played with them for a while, sitting atop me and looking down at my reactions with amusement. She worked her fingers to the base of my cock, and squeezed my dick beneath my balls. I closed my eyes. "Fuck," I hissed.

Then she knelt above me, and did my favorite – well, one of my favorite – thing. It was hard not be nervous that her full breasts were being whistled at from the deck. She was right by the window. But as she took my cock in her hand, and used the tip of it to make gentle circles on her own clit, masturbating herself to an orgasm with her eyes closed with the tip of my cock as her sex toy, I forgot all about the windows. I watched her, and my cock got harder and harder, and blood rushed in my ears.

"Oh!" she gasped, in a breathy whisper, as she began to move her hips slightly. She was going to come, and her pussy juices would drip over my cock, which was already wet at the tip with precum.

"Oh! Oh!"

I watched as she tilted her head back, and her breasts, washed silver-white in the night light, moved up and down. I felt her cum sliding down my cock, which was still imprisoned in her hand.

I liked waiting for her, with anticipation, until she slowly slid herself onto me. My cock was absorbed into her warm, wet pussy, inch by inch, and then she sat down on me.

Now it was my job to clutch her hips and fuck her until I came, which didn't take long.

She looked down at me, watching me. A strange expression on her face.

An expression of disdain. Or amusement? It was hard to place.

It only made me hotter, and one of the reasons I liked when she did this is that she had already made sure of her own pleasure, and so I could burst inside of her, filling her up, whenever I wanted to.

I pressed my lips together and tried to be quiet as I exploded inside of her very wet, very hot flesh.

But it was difficult to stay quiet.

I was looking forward to more cargo ship sex like that.

Even if my wife was slowing in the light from the decks, next to a window.

The next morning we went to breakfast in the ship's mess, which was another extreme teal room next to the kitchen on the first floor of the living quarters "tower."

"Hello, Captain Teller," I said, as he came into the room. I was feeling cheerful after the night before. I hoped, on the one hand, we hadn't made too much noise. Like any man though, I secretly didn't mind if we had.

Teller smiled. "It is indeed," he said, in his most maritime voice. "Today we set sail for the open seas," he proclaimed, while miming the punching of buttons on the computer he detested so much. "Last chance to get off, maties."

Carrie giggled. "Oh, Captain Teller," she said.

I took a sip of my coffee to hide my annoyance. Grow up, I told myself.

"When are the new passengers coming aboard?" I asked. We had docked early in the morning, and as Teller had warned, there was not much time in each port. We expected to depart by the afternoon.

It had been pretty fun for me to watch the containers being loaded and unloaded on the ship all morning. Carrie had eventually (after a few minutes) gotten bored and gotten off the ship to get last-minute items. We were in Savannah, the last stop before, as Teller put it, hitting the open seas.

Teller looked out the window, and looked at his watch, which appeared to do almost everything a watch could do. He squinted. "They had better hurry," he commented, with no intonation at all to indicate what he might mean by that.

The slight queasiness that had been twisting in my stomach on our first day aboard the ship wriggled back to life. I shrugged, attempting to be nonchalant.

But as I headed back to the cabin with Carrie, I started feeling a little ill. I was sweating.

"Did you eat something?" Carrie said, and I was so distracted I didn't really say anything back.

"Honey!" she said sharply. "Did you eta something bad, or something? You look pale."

She had her hand on her hip, and her face had an expression that was unique to my wife. It was slightly concerned, but more...disappointed. I was ruining her fun again. I was a stuffy, middle-aged man with no sense of adventure. I couldn't fix a car, and I wouldn't sky dive. And now I was going to get sick and ruin her cruise.

I gulped. "Oh no," I said. I straightened up. "I'm actually...just...I think I might have had too much wine," I said as though I were confessing something.

"You should go to the gym," she said, and flopped onto the bed with a magazine.

I looked out the window, my eyes on the dock, and prayed for the other passengers to arrive.

In the end, we left Savannah very late because of some kind of snafu with the containers that put everyone in a very foul mood. It was a boring day, because we weren't allowed out on the deck, where the crew was bustling around, and the colorful containers were swinging high above everyone's heads like child's blocks.

I kept my eyes on the dock, and turned my computer at the desk so that I could see out to where the other passengers would presumably board. The afternoon bled away into evening, and when it was blue outside and the green lights had just begun to twinkle around the dock, we heard the signal for departure.

I froze in my chair.

Carrie had taken a nap and binge-watched a TV series all afternoon, utterly content with all of her TV time. She had loaded thousands of hours of television onto sixty USB keys and seemed thrilled with the excuse to be able to watch them all day long. But now she jumped up and rushed to the door.

She liked to watch the boat leaving port. She went all the way to the back of the ship (which she repeatedly corrected me for calling "the back,") and looked down into the water. I usually went with her, because it scared me when she leaned out to look down at the wake of the boat. If she fell off the boat and no one saw it, it could be hours before anyone would know.

But she was a good swimmer, and we were near land, and I wanted to walk around in the cabin area and see if the new passengers had gotten on without me seeing.

I was having second thoughts about staying on at all, but the distance between the ship and the docks was growing, and it was too late.

It was too late.

The feeling gnawed in my stomach. We were stuck on this ship, and Carrie, my wife, was the only woman. Among a lot of very dirty, dirty-minded sailors, who seemed to have their eyes on her.

The Atlantic crossing, if the weather is good, is ten days.

For me, it would be ten days of hell before we reached Algeciras, the Spanish port that was our first stop and our first chance to get off the ship.

The demeanor of Captain Teller changed almost immediately, once we were on “the high seas.” He began to appear in the mess every time we were eating, and he began to look only at Carrie as he spoke.

He seemed intent on telling stories about pirates and confrontations on the sea, all of which he was the hero of.

Was it me, also, or was the salty air making him look even more rugged, more hardened? More like a man?

There was no end to his tales of adventure. All of the things that Carrie had dreamed of doing, he had done. This was all back in the times when he was in the merchant marines, mind you: the ships docked for long weeks then and he could travel to exotic places.

One of his ships had sunk and he and his crew had been stuck in a lifeboat for thirteen days, and washed ashore on a real deserted island.

“How did you survive?” Carrie fluttered. She was actually soaking him up with her eyes, her hand under her chin, her fingers touching her lips provocatively.

Teller launched into a story about hunting and fishing and having to cut open his own foot with no anesthesia and wash it clean in the salt water to avoid infection. He had used his salvaged navigational charts to determine where they were, and they chanced it to get to an island in Malaysia where they stood a chance of being rescued.

“You don't really believe all these stories Teller tells,” I said, out of nowhere, when we were back in the cabin. Teller was eating away at me. Maybe because my wife was paying so much attention to him, and none to me. Maybe because he was so rugged and manly. Maybe because I did actually detect a sinister overtone to him now, like he wanted to fuck my wife.

Carrie was stretched out on the bed. She had already turned me away when I had sat down next to her to rub her back. She was getting tan, sitting on the deck all day and sunning herself by the saltwater pool in a revealing bikini, which all the men surely appreciated. She flipped her magazine closed. "Oh god," she said, rolling her eyes. "Of course you wouldn't believe him."

"It's just...all his stories seem a little far-fetched. Like he's trying to impress you."

She looked at me, and for a moment her eyes were cloudy with her fascination with Teller. Then she rolled her eyes again.

"Not everything needs to be academically scrutinized, or whatever it is you think you do," she said. Her voice was defensive. Defensive for Captain Jack Teller. "He's obviously the captain of a ship. All of that stuff probably did happen. You're just jealous because if you ended up in a lifeboat you wouldn't know how to do anything." She sat up and put a see-through cover-up on. She stood up.

I think she muttered, though I can't be sure, "They'd probably throw you off, first thing, because you couldn't do anything."

But I did hear clearly: "I'm going down to the pool."

I resisted the urge to follow her.

Just ten more days, and then we could get off this boat. I could fake an illness, and we could go spend time in Spain. I didn't care if we lost our deposit. I couldn't take much more of my wife sunning herself under the lecherous gaze of so many horny sailors. Or laughing while Teller told her sea stories.

I tried to concentrate on writing. From our room I could see where she was at the pool, which was a nice view. I had, though, some buried feelings that turned me on. Something about knowing that all these men were looking at my wife was making also, just a little, proud. And turned on.

I got nothing done for hours, and then I finally managed to immerse myself for half an hour in what I was doing.

When I looked up, she was gone.

I stood up and scanned the deck in a panic.

Relax, I tried to tell myself, she's probably just walking back here.

But then I found her. She was on the stern side of the ship, with two sailors. Their dark skin contrasted with the white shirts they were wearing.

She was leaning back against the balcony, her chest thrust forward and her breasts showcased. Her hair was blowing around, and she kept tipping her head back and laughing.

The men were standing very, very close to her.

I slammed my computer shut, grabbed a towel, and marched down the stairs. I would use the pretext of going to the pool.

But when I reached the deck, they were gone. I stormed back across the deck, past the pool, and there she was. Reading a book.

I turned around, looking around the deck and trying to figure out what had just happened.

Was I imagining things.

She set her book down in her lap. "You looking for something?" she said.

Her voice was friendly now.

Maybe I was imagining things. Maybe I was crazy.

"You just missed some dolphins," she said. She patted the chair next to her. "Maybe they'll come back. Enrique and Dominic said they would keep an eye out for us."

She seemed unperturbed. She didn't seem nervous, or like she was trying to cover anything up.

Maybe I had let my jealousy make me paranoid, maybe I was seeing things wrong. She loved dolphins. She would have been looking into the sea to watch them, not flirting on the balcony. I was going crazy, I told myself.

The crew were just being nice, trying to talk to a pretty girl. Who wouldn't?

I was the one who was turning it into more than it was.

I sat down in the chair, and opened my book.

As with all the nights since we left Savannah, she turned me down again for sex.

I rolled over on my side, and fell asleep.

A quick burst of horn blasts woke me up. I opened my eyes, remembered where I was, and closed them. I almost fell asleep, when it occurred to me to try one more time to get Carrie to have sex with me...maybe if she was sleepy, I could just rub her back, kiss her neck, roll her over...

I sat up with a start after I turned over.

The bed was empty.

I pulled my pants and shirt, hanging on the chair next to the bed, on quickly. I opened the door to the hallway.

Where could she be?

I moved quietly along the passageway. If crew members were sleeping, they wouldn't appreciate being woken up: they worked twelve hour-minimum shifts, sometimes more.

I got to the end of the passageway, and opened the door to step onto the grated walkway leading to the stairs and along the outer wall. I heard nothing except the ship's constant rumble and the ocean, layers beneath it, splashing against the sides of the ship. The deck was mostly dark, and there was no sign of movement anywhere. I went up the stairs to look in the mess.

There was no one there.

Where on earth could she have gone?

I turned, planning to head down to the gym, which I remembered was open all the time, for the crew members had such odd shifts.

Maybe she just had insomnia.

Maybe other horn blasts had woken her up.

Then I heard her voice.

It had to be her, because she was the lone female on this ship, and the voice was melodious, high-pitched. A woman's laugh, and a woman's voice.

I looked up. The last floor was home to the control room, and we were strictly not to go up there.

I climbed the stairs, and crept down the walkway to the door. I tried to turn it, but it was locked.

I crouched, and looked over the bottom edge of the portal window.

My heart fell to my knees.

Carrie was sitting on the control panel. She was tossing her hair back and flirting outrageously, very sexually smiling and asking questions about this knob or that knob.

And Teller was standing very, very close to her.

He was moving in. He was putting his hand up to her cheek -

"Man," A thick accented voice said behind me. I jumped and hit my head on the window. Teller and Carrie stopped what they were doing and looked over. "Man you can be here," the voice said.

I looked behind me and saw the first mate. He pushed me out of the way and looked through the window. His mouth transformed into a smile.

He looked me up and down, as though he were bringing me down to size, and his jaw moved from side to side. He was amused. "Captain just showing your wife all buttons," he said. And he laughed. He opened the door.

'Carrie!' I hissed.

Reluctantly, Carrie smiled at Teller and came toward the door.

I grabbed her wrist and pulled her onto the walkway.

"What the hell were you doing?" I hissed.

"Oh," she yawned. She seemed totally unaffected by being caught. "I couldn't sleep so I--"

"I saw you!" I practically shouted, I'm sure to Teller and the first mate's great amusement.

She shrugged. "Saw me what?" she said, and her lips were turned up in a smile. "Stop being ridiculous. You're embarrassing me. I want to have a nice time on this trip and learn about...shipping." She almost laughed at herself as she said this.

Didn't she?

Her face could look either sarcastic or sincere at the same time.

She turned and stomped down the walkway.

I followed her, not knowing what else to do.

When we returned to the room, I wasn't sure what to say or do.

My wife was behaving like a different person. But she made it clear she didn't want to discuss it. She lay down on the bed and put on her headphones, placing the computer on the bed next to her and starting up an episode of her TV shows.

I lay on the bed and fumed.

Was I being overly jealous? Was I seeing things that weren't there?

What had I seen?

I started to doubt myself.

I knew that I entertained the fantasy of her cheating on me, however much I didn't actually want her to do it. Perhaps I had read more into what I saw out of my own perverse pleasure.

I looked over at Carrie, who had fallen asleep while watching her show.

That wasn't the conscience of a woman who had just done something wholly inappropriate.

Was it?

I didn't fall asleep until the horizon was beginning to light up with blue, dawn light.

When I woke up, Carrie was already gone. It was ten o'clock.

I stood up and looked down to the deck. She was by the pool, and no one else was in sight. She was wearing her cover-up and reading a book.

She looked fine, I told myself. She wasn't being overly sexual. I was being overly ridiculous, and I was ruining her trip.

I took a shower, and sat down at my computer.

I was cracking up. I forced myself to keep my eyes on my work, and maybe this whole thing would blow over.

At dinner that evening, Captain Teller was present. As always, he seemed to be there when we were.

He smiled at me.

"How is the cruise so far?" he said.

He seemed to be laughing at me behind his smile.

I nodded. I was embarrassed about the night before, but I didn't know what to do about it. Apologizing was out of the question.

Carrie was tearing her roll into little pieces and popping them in her mouth, smiling and batting her eyes at the captain the whole time.

"It's so nice to have your wife on board," Teller said.

A cool feeling slid through me. The comment was obvious, and it was meant to test me.

I didn't know what to say.

I looked from him, to her, and said nothing.

He suddenly made a sound, something like a snort, and turned to Carrie. "Come up to the control room this evening," he said, and turning back to me, raised his eyebrows, "If that's okay with your husband" He turned back to Carrie. "The night is supposed to be clear, and I can show you about celestial navigation, since you were interested in it."

"Oh great!" Carrie exclaimed, popping roll bits into her mouth.

Was she doing this...seductively?

Captain Teller excused himself.

I decided not to make a spectacle of myself about the "celestial navigation."

Carrie seemed to be challenging me to do it.

“Captain Teller could navigate a boat by the stars alone,” she said, provocatively, a propos of nothing.

“I can't wait to see how you map things out by the stars,” she said, at another point.

I bit my tongue – literally – and stared at my computer.

I was not going to act like a jealous husband. I was not going to make a fool of myself.

After all, Carrie wouldn't do anything terrible with Captain Teller. She was just doing it to get my goat. She liked adventure and adrenaline. It was fun for her.

“That sounds great,” I said. I was careful to keep my eyes on my computer.

After she left to go see the stars with Captain Teller, however, it was a different story.

I paced the room. I imagined all kinds of horrible scenarios.

I fantasized about all kinds of those scenarios. My cock got hard as I thought of them, thought of Captain Teller touching my wife, pulling her black, silky shirt from her shoulders. Placing his scarred, rough sea hands on her soft breasts. Her eyes widening with pleasure as she saw his huge cock..

My fantasies became more detailed as I sank into them. I sat on the bed and unzipped my pants, stroking myself as I imagined her swinging her legs from the perch on the control panels, her legs open, a view of her panty-less pussy there for Teller to enjoy.

Her eyes would grow wide and she would reach out to take his cock in her hand.

“It's so big!” she would exclaim.

Then she would fall to her knees, eager to please the captain.

“Open up, Carrie. Open up and suck on that cock.”

Carrie looks at his cock, like she's about to start in on an expensive meal that she isn't quite sure how to eat. She closes her eyes, exactly the way she would do at a restaurant if she was trying something new, and opens her mouth.

I watch, frozen in horror, as her mouth puffs out and her lips stretch to accommodate the enormous cock.

Teller puts his hands on either side of her face, and tilts her head. Even though she is gagging a little, she seems to be urging him on, and opening wider and wider for him. He pushes himself in deeper and deeper, until the entire slab of meat disappears into her mouth, and down her throat.

I open my eyes in amazement and alarm, and the awful knives of jealousy and lust turn in my crotch at the same time.

Teller works his fingers into her hair and begins to move his hips while holding her head still for himself. His thick cock moves back and forth, and my wife's lips slide over his gigantic member. Slurping sounds echo on the bare metal, audible for some reason over the low hum of the ship's engines.

Carrie can barely breathe, she has so much dick in her mouth and her throat, but she just takes it all. She even looks up, submitting to his will. Enjoying servicing a manly man, a man who commands ships and women...

I started to stroke my cock furiously.

I try to look away, I really do, I mean: I do not want to see this, right? But I am transfixed by how open her mouth is, how spread her lips are, red and perfect against the pink flesh of the man's huge cock.

Finally, he pulls his cock out so that just the tip is in her mouth.

I see the white cum splashing all over her lips, onto her cheeks. He has a whole fountain of white cum built up in his balls, and it spurts all over her until she is sticky and glistening with his semen.

She gasps for air and opens her mouth to catch some of his seed on her tongue. Her eyes are wet and reddened, and mascara streams down her face, but she is also smiling. Smiling and trying to get herself as covered as possible with his cum.

She turns to me, for I am somehow in the room, and tells me how much bigger and tastier Captain Teller's cock is.

Alone in the cabin, I groaned as I spilled cum all over my pants.

Carrie did not return for hours.

After masturbating to my fantasy of Captain Teller getting sucked off in the control room by my wife, I felt ridiculous.

As the minutes ticked by, and then the hours, I started to get crazy again with jealousy.

Finally, at one am, I could take no more. I burst down the hallway, onto the metal walkway, and up the stairs. I was determined, and I was angry. No matter what I saw, I was not going to let my wife get taken by the captain of the ship.

But when I got to the control room and looked in, only the first mate was at the helm, and the room was otherwise empty.

I ducked before he could see me.

I went to the hallway where Teller's accommodations were – up at the top, adjacent to the control room.

There was no one inside, and no noise. The door was locked, but I could look in the windows, which were open, and saw that no one was there.

What the fuck?

I stormed down the stairs, and began to march around the ship.

It was huge, and it only seemed bigger as I tried to get to every place I could think of. Maybe they had gone aft, to get a better view with less lights in the way.

Maybe they were hiding stern, or by the pool.

But everywhere I looked on the deck – nothing.

Then I saw the stairs leading down into the belly of the ship.

Of course, my jealous, raging mind though. Of course.

Without hesitation, I went down.

The bottom of the ship was cramped and pipes ran everywhere. It seemed wet in every corner, and it was hot and loud.

I knew I wasn't supposed to be down here, and eventually someone would catch me, but I had gone off the deep end. I didn't care.

I heard voices, and I slowed to approach the room they were coming from.

The doorways were hatches, and so I had to step through them. It seemed like the ceiling was getting lower and lower, and the place was getting hotter and more cramped. Pipes hissed, and water dripped onto my head.

And then I heard Carrie's voice.

Unmistakably.

I was furious. Blood rushed to my head.

Had Teller dragged her down here? And if he had, he must have done it with the first mate's approval and knowledge. They must all be laughing at me, getting cuckolded by the captain of a big ship, while I hid away like a mouse in my room, typing.

I crept into the area where I heard her voice.

I was completely surprised by what I saw.

Carrie was there, and two other men, but no Teller.

Laughing. She was laughing and batting her darkly mascaraed eyes around, flirting. She was sitting on a chair, with her legs crossed, but she was totally and completely:

Naked.

For a moment, in spite of everything I'd seen up until then, I was so astonished my mind started to play tricks on me, and I actually saw her as naked and then clothed, naked and then clothed. I began to hallucinate her clothing, because...this just couldn't be my wife.

Could it?

I heard two male voices, also laughing. A dark hand appeared from behind the pole, and handed her a beer.

What the fuck? Where was Teller? This was even worse than I had imagined.

The conversation was about something trivial, like shopping or a movie, but I didn't even try to understand what was being said. The accents of the men she was talking to were so strong that they sounded like they were speaking another language, and the hum of the ship ate up the rest of their words.

The way that she was smiling and her casual giggles cut through me like a knife, her comfort at being stark naked in the belly of the ship on a chair – sucking noodles up whoreishly from a plastic bowl with a seductive little smile- said everything I needed to know.

I fell to my knees, weak with anger and embarrassment. Hot, humiliation was rising up in my cheeks. I felt sick.

Confusingly, a hot throb was also pulsing through my cock, which was hard again.

I couldn't look away. I tried to get up, but I couldn't will my legs to push me up to standing. I also had no idea what I would do if I did manage to stand up. Would I go and fight off these men? Or would I run upstairs and cry in my cabin, looking out over the bleak gray sea...?

My hard cock answered for me: what I really wanted was to watch.

Carrie smiled at this point. She was looking up, and something had changed in the ambiance. Her smile was so sexual; she looked like a different person.

“So,” I heard her voice a little more clearly as some unknown mechanics made the hum of the ship dive to a lower pitch and become more quiet. “Are you going to show me your sailor knots?”

The man she had been talking to moved forward, and I could see him now: he was one of the big, Eastern European men, tattooed and muscled from head to toe. He had a length of rope in his hands, and Carrie as watched him twist it in his hands, she squirmed and licked her lips. She put a hand out and touched him on his his sinister tattoos, which looked like they had been hacked into his arm in a prison, and kicked her ankle around in appreciation.

He grasped her hands and tied them to the back of the chair, pulling the knots tight and whispering something next to her ear.

She made a flirtatious, cooing sound. “Mmmmm,” she said. “I sort of like this rough treatment.” But she said it in the velvety, throaty voice, like she had said it a million times. She looked up at him, batting her eyes again.

“I think maybe I've gone and violated safety procedures again. I think maybe you need to go over them in more detail.” And then, casting her eyes in the other direction, to the unseen man blocked from my view by poles and pipes, she smiled her mischievous, sexy smile. “You too, cowboy.”

She ran her tongue over her teeth, like a porn star would on a shoot.

I leaned my forehead against the support I kneeling next to. I felt sick from the jealousy twisting in my stomach and chest, but I couldn't look away. My eyes were on her smile, on her hair as she tossed it over her shoulder. On her eyes, watching the big Slavic man circle her.

The second moved out from where he had been lurking. I looked at his dark face; some unidentifiable ethnicity, and then down to his black-clad torso and hips. My eyes widened. He had already unzipped his pants! He had his hand on his cock and was guiding it – big, dripping with precum – toward Carrie's mouth.

It was enormous. It must have been ten inches long. I stared at it, so big and thick and black – and headed toward my wife's open mouth.

She looked right at him, looked right at his cock. Expectantly. Her smile revealed how impressed she was by his member.

And then she stuck out her tongue, and leaned against the restraints to get closer to him, and extended her tongue to lick him.

Smiling, purring, licking her lips to get him wetter and wetter at the tip of his huge purple cock.

She turned to the big Slavic man, who had taken his own cock out. His fat, uncircumcised cock was not as long as the other man's, but somehow it was thicker. He was moving toward her, stroking his own cock to get it ready for her. She opened her mouth to lick him as well. She placed her plump red lips around the tip of his shaft and sort of popped the air around them, smiling and moaning a little. "Who's first, boys?" she said.

The muscled Slavic man placed his hand on her hair, and she opened her mouth up for him without hesitation, smiling as though she were pleased with the choice, just before he pushed her face onto his cock.

It was so big that she was having trouble getting the whole thing in. He released his hand from her head, but she kept pushing forward, trying to get him all inside of her.

Then she lifted her head, and a long strand of glistening saliva trailed from her open, smiling mouth to his pulsing pink cock.

The dark one grasped her by the hair, and pushed her mouth onto his own cock. Smiling still, making a sound like mmmmmmmmm, she went all the way down on him.

And that's when I started to realize: she was no stranger to deep-throating it. She in fact seemed to be quite an expert.

I let the pain of this sink in as I watched the purple-black cock sliding in and out of her mouth. She had never, ever, done this for me. She had never been willing to do more than just suck me off, she when she did, she did it quickly and with a little distaste.

The few times I had tried to push it in further she had pulled away.

Yet here she was, sliding those serpentine cocks all the way down her wet, sticky throat without even so much as gagging.

What did that mean?

Had my wife been cheating on me all along?

I focused on her wide, open-mouthed smile, her lips upturned and spreading wide over the purple shafts. The mean took turns bobbing her head over their huge cocks, one and then the other. Pushing her head down and onto their shafts, and then lifting her up by the hair. She fluttered her pretty eyes up to them before turning, ever so willingly, to the cock next to her, which she also gulped down. Thirsty, hungry: devouring all of the two huge cocks, smiling when her mouth wasn't full of meat. First white meat, then dark meat.

“Okay,” I heard the Slavic man say. “We gotta hurry this up.”

I watched with a mixture of fascination, horror, jealousy, rage, and humiliation – all of which was somehow hardening my cock until it felt as big and purple and ready to burst as the two sailors' cocks must have been.

I watched as Carrie placed her manicured hands around their stiff shafts and stroked them in rhythm with her mouth, moving her own head now – no pressure needed – all the way to the base of their cocks.

At last, the black man stiffened and grasped her hair when she turned to open up for the Slavic man, and he pushed her down deep onto himself while he thrust his hips quickly. It was clear than he was exploding, cupfuls of hot cum filling her throat. She swallowed it all up like she was downing a glass of delicious wine. When he pulled out of her his dick was less outrageous, and the white, glue-like cum gushed out of her mouth and all over her lips.

He said something, because his lips moved. He directed himself to the other guy when he spoke. I couldn't hear anything because of the deepness of his voice, and the low grumble of the ship's motors.

The Slavic man's cock was twitching in anticipation. He moved around behind Carrie, standing over her, letting his member fall into her hair, rubbing himself on top of her head.

I watched the purple snake that was moving over Carrie's head, and her eyes.

“Carrie have you ever fucked in the ass?” he said. His words traveled to me over the sounds of the ship.

Surely she wouldn't.

I tried to stand up. I thought about it, and gave the instructions to my legs, but I was paralyzed on the floor.

I did nothing, just let the humiliation, which was stinging and heating me up at the same time, roll in waves over me until it stopped, rock solid in my dick.

Carrie smiled. It was her secret, her smile seemed to say.

The big cock was tangled up in her hair.

The dark man was getting agitated. He had to go, he seemed to be saying. He was probably due on watch, and we were going to hit an iceberg and die because Carrie, my wife, wanted to take a big cock in her ass.

He was torn. He wanted to see this next part. That much was clear.

The Slavic man untied Carrie's wrists from the chair, and moved her with his big, tattooed arms, into position on the chair, so that she was sitting doggie-style and ready to be taken.

"You never done that before?" I heard him say.

Carrie shook her head.

He started moving his hand up and down her leg. "You ever even tried?" he said. "No thing to it."

Now the expression on Carrie's face had changed a little. She looked genuinely worried. "I don't know..." she said.

"You don't know until you try." He was moving his hand up her leg, in between her thighs. She closed her eyes and her mouth went slack.

Her makeup was smeared on her face; her lipstick rubbed off (ringing, no doubt, the base of each man's cock). Her mascara was smeared.

She looked younger somehow.

The other man abandoned his plans to go wherever he was supposed to be. He reappeared next to her other side and started to stroke her arm.

"Can be real gentle first time, open you up like flower," one of them said. Maybe it was the black man.

I was fumbling with my own pants to get my own cock out clutching the pole, breathing heavily. I knew what I must look like, but I didn't care. I wasn't going to do anything to stop them, and if my wife was determined, as she appeared to be, to please two men at once, I wanted to see it. I wanted to see her give to them what I knew she would never give to me.

"Won't it hurt?" Carrie said, and her voice was half honest and half-flirtatious.

What a little slut my wife was turning out to be.

The Slavic man was moving up to her ass now. "We take it nice and slow."

The black man was pushing her hair out her face, watching the Slavic man as he circled in on her ass.

He was moving behind her, his hands all over her nice ass. I could imagine what that looked like, but she got into this position so rarely for me: mostly Carrie just lay there, bored, while I pumped away at her.

Now she was moaning like a cat in heat, turning her ass up in the air for these two bad sailors with enormous cocks.

The Slavic man watched his own hands as he manhandled her ass, and I think he even licked his lips. The black man placed his hands on the small of her back and her belly, tipping her so that she was arched up for the Slavic man behind her. They were acting in unison, with so much coordination. And Carrie was just along for the ride.

He was behind her now, moving his hand a little, but I could tell he wasn't in her. Probably just making lazy circles around her anus.

"I start..... one finger." The ship ate up his words. His mouth was moving and his hands were moving into Carrie's body.

Her face contorted with discomfort as he did whatever he was doing. I could only make out snippets of his words. "...two.....relax.....me"

She didn't protest, even when she lifted her face and grimaced, yelping a little. Her face was looking right in my direction, and I hoped I couldn't be seen in the shadows. I no longer cared. My humiliation was reaching such lows that I didn't care about anything.

He kept talking to her, putting more and more fingers into her, while the black man looked on, enjoying the show. I could see that his cock was getting harder and harder.

I could see Carrie's face screwed up in concentration.

By now I had to actually stop stroking my own cock because I didn't want to come until I saw more.

There was silence while she squeaked and squirmed, and then the man said, clearly, above the ship's growling: "That's it."

I saw his hand moving back and forth now, and Carrie's face started to relax.

"You like...little girl?"

I was straining to hear his voice. I wanted to, as much as I didn't want to, hear every dirty thing he said to my wife, and feel her willing responses like shattered glass inside of me.

And even though I had stopped holding my cock, I almost burst when Carrie lifted her head, turning back to him. I couldn't hear her, but I imagined what she said, in a deep, throaty purr, coated in the black man's sticky cum: "Oh yeah."

He said something in reply, his mouth twisted into a cruel smile.

And then she gasped, and made a whining noise, like she was really being tortured, but she started panting, and the man's hands started to move with fluidity again. He smiled. He was really talking now, but all I heard clearly was “nice, pink ass, so hot.”

The black pushed her back into position again, and held her there. “Hold that ass up, Carrie,” the Slavic man, with his fingers buried in her asshole said. “There we go.”

He leaned over her, and pulled her hair so that her face tilted up and I could see her squint with both pain and pleasure.

Carrie began to yell, and then very suddenly they seemed to make a new plan, and he lifted her like a rag doll while the black man kicked the chair out of the way. He pushed her down onto the floor, so that her ass was up in the air, the two round mounds of her buttocks clear to see. Behind her, the giant cock of the Slavic man was aiming right for her. The black man placed his knee on her back, and his hands on either buttock.

I knew, even though I couldn't see it clearly, that he was holding her down and holding her open for his friend.

“Oh god,” I heard Carrie moan. She was hot as hell for this cock in her ass.

He started in – I could see him leaned into her, slowly, slowly, opening her up with his gigantic dick.

I imagined that little hole opening up for him, all that fat, pink meat stretching it open, starting to fill her up. From under the second man's leg there came a high-pitched squeal, getting slowly and slowly louder.

For a while she just made nonsensical noises. She slapped her hands on the floor and sobbed lightly. But it was all theatrical, I knew. I could tell by the pitch of her voice. She was loving it.

“It's too big!” she finally whined. “Oh god, it's too big!”

“You can take it,” I heard him say clearly.

His eyes were on himself, pushing open her pink ring, sliding his cock into all that dark, soft ass. It must have been so tight on his cock.

Carrie started crying, but it was a porn-star grade cry. “Oh,” she screamed. “Oh, god. No, it's so big I can't take it. Ohhhhh, it hurts!” She was screaming in her pseudo-agony for a full minute until he grasped her hips and tugged, pushing his gigantic cock all the way in to the very base.

Carrie moaned and lowered her head to the floor.

The black man pulled away and sat on his knees, his big cock pointed at her. He was so hard he looked like his cock would rip apart at the seams.

It was hard to believe he had already fucked her throat once and come in her mouth.

“Relax, Carrie,” the one fucking her said. “Squirm a little, that's right. Just relax.”

Carrie must have relaxed, because he stroked her ass a bit and said “That's good. There we go.”

Then he reached over and pulled her up to her hands and knees by her hair. “Now I'm gonna take you for a ride.”

I could only really see Carrie now, her hair falling into her face where it was not balled up in his hands, her mouth open wide and her eyes open to the ceiling. “Oh god,” her mouth screamed. “Oh, god!” Over and over again while her hair bounced and her head bobbed and the man behind her thrust and thrust into her. I could hear his skin slapping into her ass, and she screamed and moaned and said, “Oh god!” about fifty times. The ship ate up her screaming, I knew, and it couldn't be heard anywhere but here.

But I worried that she would bring the whole crew down on us.

Behind her, finally, the big, tattooed, Slavic monster said something in his own language, a string of curses no doubt, and bent over her, panting, sweating.

My eyes filled up with a swarming red mist, and all I could see or imagine was her asshole, pink and distended, gushing out his white cum.

He shuddered with his orgasm, jerking himself into her ass for a few minutes. Then he pulled out, and Carrie gave him a little yell. He moved off to the side, and the black man, who had held her open this whole time, took his place behind her. He gathered her hair in his hands and then wasted no time, pushing himself inside of her.

Carrie screamed and tried to drag herself away from him: his cock was much longer than the other man's, and she should know this better than anyone after swallowing so much of it.

“No, I can't!” she screamed, but he dragged her towards him and somehow pulled her onto his cock. He pulled on her hair until she was seated on his lap. Naughtily though, with her ass opened up and coating his cock.

“Ooooooohhhhh,” Carrie cried, half-moaning, half-crying. But you could tell she liked it, that she was enjoying her abuse as much as she was in agony from it.

Now her lithe body was stretched open and I could see her wet cunt, and beneath it, the thick cock of the black man inside of her. She was arched like a cat, her huge tits bouncing lightly as he thrust in quick little spurts up into her, deep inside of her.

He placed his mouth near her ear and whispered something I couldn't hear. She moaned and screamed, and then she – screaming – began to move her body up and down his shaft. First she moved slowly, wailing her sticky-wet, cum-drenched agonizing wail. Then she started making porn-grade moans, screams, and grunts.

Then dirty little whore of a wife started screaming in ecstasy, bobbing up and down on that cock like she was riding a horse. She was sweating buckets, screaming oh yeah FUCK me just like that!

I was trembling now with all kinds of feelings as I stroked myself furiously, spilling my cum all over the floor and not caring, just as that big man with the huge cock pushed my wife onto the floor, flat on her face, and sprayed his cum (so much of it, such a big fat tankload of wet, white cum) all over her back, into her hair, onto her ass.

And what did she do?

Make me come, she was moaning and begging like a whore.

The Slavic man dragged her to rest on his lap, and the black man hastily pushed apart her legs and pushed his hand into her wet cunt. He finger-fucked her as the Slavic man held her and whispered something into her ear, holding her still from twisting away.

I stood up slowly. I needed to get out of there before I was discovered. I still had some hope of dignity if I could get away and pretend to everyone that I hadn't seen this.

But the black man's whole hand was in her pussy now, stretching her open. White cum was dripping out of her ass, and his hand was disappearing inside of her while she screamed in pleasure.

I wanted to leave, before I was caught by any of them, but I couldn't tear my eyes away from the sight of the black fist that was disappearing into my wife's pussy, and her face twisted in pleasure, lying across the chest of the big Slavic man whose cum was dripping from her ass. Her yelling was at first inaudible, and then rose, higher and higher-pitched, until she was shrieking in pleasure as his hand fucked her to her final release.

They lay there, panting in a heap, and I was unable to move.

The black man remembered, suddenly, that he had other places to be, and he jumped up. He mumbled something I could not hear and likely would not have understood anyway, before running away, down the corridor on the other side of the ship.

I watched as Carrie lifted a hand and stroked the muscles of the Slavic man who was still holding her in his lap, and they seemed almost like a couple.

I started to get up, when the Slavic man stirred.

"I must get to deck," he said. He slipped his clothes on easily while Carrie sat down on the chair, in no hurry to get dressed.

I pushed myself into a small space in the shadows as the Slavic man looked around.

"Did you hear something?"

Carrie smiled. "No, no."

I held my breath, praying he wouldn't go by me to get out. I heard his footsteps disappear into the ship's hum. I waited for a few minutes.

I wasn't sure what Carrie was doing. Would she leave? Would she get dressed? Would she try to walk through this passageway? Should I confront her? How could I? I had just watched the whole thing.

And then a cold feeling stabbed me as I heard her voice:

"Was that good?" she drawled.

I peeked out from behind the wall I was hiding behind.

My heart felt like it actually stopped.

Teller was pushing a strand of her hair behind her head.

He did it tenderly, like a lover.

The reality of what had just happened started to sink in: not only was my wife fucking other men, she was doing it to please Teller, instead of me.

She was, pretty much, double-cuckolding me.

Teller pushed her against the wall, and lifted her up so that her already-naked legs were wrapped around him.

He was going to fuck her right there, and it looked like his plans were to fill her pussy up with his own cum.

I saw his navy-blue pants drop down to his knees.

Carrie gave a cry of pleasure.

I leaned against a pole. I was sweating.

No, this couldn't be happening.

The other men had been one thing. But this was too much.

I felt myself going weak, and I saw Carrie's feet twisting in pleasure as Teller entered her. She slammed her head back against the steel wall, eyes rolling.

And then I slipped. I slipped on the endless water in that fucking ship. I fell to the ground, and all around me it seemed to echo loudly. How one man could clang and crash so much against a steel floor, I had no idea.

I stared at the floor, knowing that I was in the hallway, that they could see me, that I was on the floor like a dog, and a man who had his cock in my wife was turning around now...looking at me...seeing me for how pathetic I was.

Nothing happened.

When I looked up, Teller was looking back to my wife, obviously having turned to see me on the floor. His ass was moving back and forth in hard, solid thrusts.

Carrie screamed with each one, screaming in pleasure as his cock spread her open and made her hot.

And she looked right at me.

"Oh, fuck! Oh, that's so good! Oh, you're so much bigger than Tim! So much more of a man!"

Teller was whispering into her ear, telling her what to say. I could see his mouth moving next to her ear.

But it was her mouth that said the words, and her eyes on me, enjoying the pained expression on my face, as I crouched on the floor, watching Teller fuck his cum into my wife.

He let out a loud groan and pumped hard and fast into her. She screamed and banged her head against the wall, shrieking as she came. Her feet bounced around in the air and her legs shook with the power of her orgasm.

I couldn't look away, not even as he finished with her.

But he wasn't done, and neither was she. Teller looked back at me, and then whispered something else into her ear with a smile.

Carrie dropped her feet to the floor, and walked over to me.

"You're in a restricted area," Teller said, looking down at me. "I could lock you up for that."

I managed only to open my mouth. The pain that twisted inside of me made it impossible to say anything.

Carrie was getting to her knees, a terrible smile on her face.

“I could overlook it,” Teller said. “If you get this mess cleaned up.”

Carrie turned her ass to me, and I looked at her two gaping holes, dripping with other men's white cum. I understood what they wanted, what my final humiliation would be.

I leaned toward her, and licked up the cum dripping from her pussy first. It was sour and salty, and the wretched taste was a perfect compliment to my pain. I buried my tongue in her flesh; her used, stretched flesh, and lapped up Teller's cum from my wife. She giggled.

Teller looked on with approval. “That's it,” he said. “Good boy.”

I was humiliated, but he was prepared to take it all the way. He grasped my head, and moved it so that I was aligned with her stretched asshole. “Get it all,” he said. “And I can overlook your trespassing.”

I placed my hands on her ass, and pushed my tongue into her asshole.

“Suck it up,” Teller urged.

I buried my tongue inside of her, for the first time tasting my wife's intimate hole, and sucked up the awful white cum that the big Slavic man had filled her with.

Teller pushed me deeper and deeper inside, and Carrie laughed.

Like it was all a big joke.

Finally, he released my head, and I fell back to the floor, cum smeared over my face. I wanted to cry as I looked at my wife's bare ass, and thought of everything I had just seen, and tasted. Teller was grinning. She looked back at me, and her expression was remorseless. She smiled.

I managed to back away into the corridor behind me, and crept along the passageways until I found the ladder I had descended on, and I went up into the dark, cool air.

When I got up to the deck, there were two Filipino men smoking on the side of the ship, looking out into the water. They turned, and looked at me. A knowing expression of amusement glided over their faces, and they nudged each other, and gave cruel half-laughs in the dark.

I scurried – for their really was no other word for it – back to my cabin, and sat alone in the dark, looking out onto the deck for when my wife would emerge.

I looked out at the ocean.

There were five more days of this humiliation, and nowhere to go. No escape.

CUCKOLDED IN TEXAS: MY WIFE AND THE OIL TYCOON

I was warned that Texas this time of year (July), is “hot as a two dollar pistol,” to quote Dan, the American I used to work with. He let out a low whistle when I told him Jules had gotten the fellowship she had been longing for. It involved, among other things, a long stint doing research in Texas in the middle of the summer. The work involved spending weeks on end in the middle of what seemed to be nowhere. “Hot as the hinges of hell,” he commented, with a twang. “What in the hell is she going there for?”

Dan was from Philadelphia, but he enjoyed relating all information about any part of America to us in the accent of the region being discussed. My job was kind enough to give me an extended holiday so that I could accompany Jules to Texas, which in spite of Dan's warnings, seemed like a good idea at the time. I could get some writing done, catch up on reading. Watch American TV on a flat screen and order room service. Oh, and of course, support my wife in her research, which up until now had not been going particularly well. Jules, a quiet, raven-haired girl from Ipswich who loved biology, had for reasons that were forever unclear to me, chosen to invest herself deeply in the ecosystems of the desert.

But no matter. I would stay in the ultra-air-conditioned glass buildings of the Americans, and enjoy some authentic barbecue. Dan advised me on the finer points of beef brisket, explained their elaborate system of tipping, and I was off.

But it turned out slightly different than I had imagined. For one thing, we were housed in double-wide mobile homes in the middle of nowhere, and the air conditioning was sufficient but not quite as I had envisioned. Instead of a cool, glassy hotel with a flat-screen TV (which Dan has assured me even a Holiday Inn would have), I had a television with cathode tubes that hummed loudly and seemed to be ready to explode. And no cable, only the local channels with shows like Leave it to Beaver and Father Knows Best on endless repeat in the middle of the day. And a fascinating game show: The Price is Right. As entertaining as this was, it was not exactly what I had imagined.

And the dismal landscape: there was nothing in sight but the flat, gray-brown earth, dried up and turned to dust, and the black, insect-like heads of the oil pumps, ceaselessly sipping the black liquid from the earth. Or at least that's what it all looked like to me. Jules saw other things, because she researches desert biology. All I saw was dust, stretching out all around to the ends of the earth. And the heat. Dry, almost artificial-feeling heat. So much heat that it caused an updraft, and I had the sensation I was standing perpetually inside a clothes dryer. The air above the ground shimmered. If there is a hell, it almost certainly looks like the oil fields of Texas.

Two weeks languished away like this. I began to take a nap in the middle of the day to avoid the heat. Jules' fair skin grew darker each day, as she traipsed around the desert in the sun. She was thrilled, and she seemed flushed and happy each day that she returned.

The third week of our dismal stay Jules announced that she had been invited by her nemesis here in the States, Wayne Simpson, oil tycoon.

To a:

“Lunch! Can you imagine? To discuss business! As if there's anything to discuss! I am not here on some bloody business trip! I won't be bought by some polluting, Tory, oil -”

“I think they're Republicans, here, dear,” I said gently.

“WhatEVER! I will not - “

I was dying to get out of the “house.”

“Why don't we give it a go?” I suggested, folding up the newspaper I was reading. “It might be amusing.”

Jules threw up her hands in exasperation. But I was aching for some cold beer, a flat-screen TV, and more than anything, something amusing. I would win.

Wayne Simpson was not precisely what I expected, but he was (Dan's voice interjected in my mind: gosh darn close). He wore jeans but they somehow looked expensive, even if they were slightly worn, and his shirt had a similar designer-like quality to it. The man, after all, was a billionaire, and even though he had donned the attire of the land, his was cut from a different cloth by a different tailor. He was a big man, the kind of man who walked with a swagger because his arms were so large that he had to swing them slightly around his barrel-chest as he moved. He had the thickness of a well-fed man, but he was not flabby: evidently some personal trainer or dietitian had managed his bulk into something fairly fit.

His face was geologically creased, like the Marlboro man, and a light-blond stubble spread out across his square jaw and lower cheeks. He topped off this extraordinary appearance with a large cowboy hat, and although I did not dare to look down at his shoes, I knew they were cowboy boots. It seemed almost illegal to wear anything else here.

Wayne Simpson carried himself like a man with a lot of money, and there was no need to introduce him or point him out. He walked like a man who owns everything in sight, and he had the aloof nonchalance of a man who is too busy to trifle with small matters. Wayne Simpson did not have time to ponder tens of thousands of dollars or what he was going to eat for lunch. A lot of lackeys followed him busying around him and giving him updates on god only knows what almost every ten seconds. Wayne listened and nodded or shook his head, always with the same serious expression on his face. His eyes, brown and quick, moved from side to side as he made decisions. They indicated sharpness and efficiency.

We watched him in awe, and I could feel Jules bristling next to me. It was rather exciting to think about how touch little Jules was going to get feisty with this man. I ordered a beer to further enjoy the spectacle, and pretended to be absorbed in the television, with one ear and my peripheral vision keenly attuned to what was happening at Jules' table.

Everyone stood up when Wayne arrived at the table, and Jules, being the only woman and not really knowing what to do, stood up awkwardly after the moment dragged on.

“Miss...Richter I believe? Do sit down,” he drawled, turning his piercing glare in her direction. He immediately softened into a charming gaze. “I don't know how they do it in England, but here in Texas a lady shouldn't have to stand, especially not a lovely English rose such as yourself.”

My god. Did he really just say that?

And for whatever reason, it did not come out as cheesy nonsense. It actually sounded good.

But Jules wouldn't fall for that. Right?

She hated Big Oil, and she hated Wayne Simpson. Jules was not easily moved by charm.

I turned a little, to better see her reaction. She remained stiff and icy, and extended her hand.

“It's Mrs. Richter,” she said, in her most proper British accent. “Shall we?” Simpson smiled, and it was evident that Jules' iciness had intrigued him, rather than put him off. I doubted Jules would pick up on this, because she was not exactly the most perceptive girl when it came to the thoughts of men. Jules was, in fact, blissfully ignorant of what was really going on inside their heads.

But I could see it. I saw the glint in Simpson's eyes, and the way they traveled, very quickly and very discreetly, down the curve of Jules' neck and over her torso, down to her feet and back up. Taking measurements. Picturing her without her ill-fitting suit. He did it in an instant, a man well-versed in not getting caught. Then he went around to the back of Jules' chair, and pulled it out for her.

Jules looked flustered for a moment, and then sat down stiffly. “Thank you,” she said. Her voice was cool and direct, but I could tell she was thrown off-guard.

Simpson sat down, and his lackeys settled down with him, like layers of sediment coming to rest in a lake. He adjusted his big arms so that he could get his elbows onto the table. He was not a fat man, but he was taking up quite a bit of space at the table, and you could see he meant to.

Jules opened her mouth and dove right in. “So, Mr. Simpson, we've looked over your offer of-”

“Miss Richter,” Simpson said, and he did it with such an unexpectedly deft ease that it barely sounded like an interruption. “I do so apologize for interrupting, but I rarely get a chance to relax and have a meal. I'd love to discuss our offer with you, but I would so much like to do it after we've had a nice meal.”

Jules looked at him with her mouth slightly open. I waited for her to snap that it was Mrs. Richter, but instead she seemed to get a little hypnotized by his gravelly baritone drawl.

“Uh...yes...of course.” She reordered the silverware in front of her.

“Excellent,” Simpson said. He waved at the men who had sat down with him. “Why don't y'all get another table. Come back when it's time for business.” He turned to Jules, and smiled.

Even I was getting a little bit charmed by the man, where I was sitting.

“I like to really spread out while I eat, you understand.” He clasped his hands together and rubbed them. “You may wonder why I've asked you here,” he said. “This here is the best barbecue in west Texas.” He raised his hand and waived over a waiter.

Jules turned to me, and she looked sheepish. She shrugged. I wondered if and when she was going to tell Mr. Simpson that she was a vegetarian. And also, when and if she was going to suggest that I come over and sit with them, since they weren't talking business.

Half of Jules' colleagues were also vegetarians, and I looked at them. They, too, seemed to be lulled by something in Richter's personality, and were simply staring at him with the same dull glaze on their faces as his yes-men. No one piped up when the waiter took the order from the boisterous Mr. Simpson, who asked to speak to the cook about the brisket in person, and spent about five minutes talking about how exactly he wanted the meat for the table. He ordered something he called a Wagonwheel, which as far as I could discern contained beef, another kind of beef, pork, sausage, chicken, and fried cheese.

Jules looked down at her lap, but said nothing.

Don't get me wrong, I could see why they were all silent. This was the kind of man who made people shut up. If he wanted you to eat what seemed to amount to five pounds of overcooked, smoked, greasy meat, and you had been a vegetarian for five years, or ten: you just did it. He delivered the order with just the right amount of enthusiasm, friendliness, and then this special quality that so few people have, of finality: they would all have the Wagonwheel, and they would all love it. And that was that.

When the waiter left, Jules leaned in to say something in her weak lilt, and Simpson smiled and beckoned her with a finger to get closer. A band had struck up on the stage at that particular moment and they were deafening. I watched as Jules leaned in, and her face changed from her normally cool expression to one of genuine laughter – an expression that Jules very rarely wore. She crumbled into a warm, giggling school-girl type, and then she leaned in closer. She turned and pointed to me. I could see her lips moving, now turned up in a smile – how had he done that so fast? - and then Wayne Simpson turned his gaze upon me, following Jules' slender finger in my direction.

For a moment he looked at me like a bull, challenging a weaker animal in the pen. His eyes seemed to turn black. They were unrelenting and sent a message of dominance and fear to me, even across the room, even without him changing his expression at all. I was reminded of a BBC special with wolves in it: the pack leader subduing all the pack around him without standing up, just by glaring down at them with the same expression that Simpson now wore.

The watery, cool sickness I often felt in college shimmied through me.

I was such a sissy.

But his face suddenly changed, and he broke into a wide, friendly smile. It was fake, of course, but he lifted his enormous hand and beckoned me over. What could I do? I took my drink, and feeling like a small, weak man in my loafers and suit, thin and slight compared to all these burly American men, I shuffled over to the table.

Wayne waved away one of Jules colleagues, who scampered like a dog to an empty seat.

"Thanks," I said meekly, sitting down in a chair next to Jules. I gave her a look. She blushed a little, for she certainly knew that she was behaving strangely, after everything she had said about Wayne Simpson. Here she was thawing for him in less than ten minutes. If she kept it up, she'd be an outright puddle in the next half hour.

"Now," Wayne Simpson said. "I know what brings the missus to Texas, but I can't think of why you're here, too," Simpson said, looking me directly in the eye and chuckling.

His voice was condescending and the message was clear: only a whipped man would follow his wife on some environmental goose-chase.

"I had," I began, and I aspirated my drink a little and began coughing. My throat felt as though it were being clenched by Wayne Simpson's brazen stare. "I had some holiday time coming to me," I squeaked. "So I thought -" I interrupted myself to cough, "I thought it might be interesting to see the States." I covered my mouth and coughed until tears came to my eyes.

"Y'alright?" Simpson hollered. He reached over and smashed his enormous man-paw on my back. I felt as though he were going to crush me.

"Just some," I coughed again. "Some - "cough, cough. "I got my drink caught in my...throat."

I was practically crying.

Jules looked at me with a mixture of disdain and embarrassment, Wayne smiled.

"You know, we ain't got nothin' like that here. Holiday I mean. I'm sure you know. What do you do all day, then, Niles?"

"It's Nigel," I said, and my voice was weaker than I expected it to be.

Simpson looked at me as though this small difference made no difference to him, and stared until I felt prompted to answer his question or be eaten alive.

“I...I'm catching up on some reading, some things I have to do for...”

A waitress appeared, thankfully, with enormous platters of food. Enormous platters of meat. I looked at Jules, who instead of giving the plate her usual smirk of disdain, crinkled her nose and smiled.

“I don't normally eat meat..” she said vaguely.

Simpson peeled his eyes away from me, and smiled pleasantly at her. “Trust me, pretty lady, you'll love it.”

And Jules, she actually said this, and she was giggling in an absurd, high-pitched, girlish way: “Well, when in Rome!”

Simpson nodded. “When in Texas.” The way he said it I felt like he had pushed me over in my chair and licked my wife from head to toe right in front of me.

He took his eating utensils and grasped them in his gigantic claws, and began to obliterate the meat in a display of barbarian gluttony. Somehow he managed to do it in a moderately elegant way – nothing spilled or dribbled on his high-priced clothing, but he destroyed the entire platter of meat in no time at all.

Jules bit into a sausage, nibbling away on it while Simpson watched her out of the corner of her eye.

He surveyed my plate. “Dig in, Niles. This is the best damn barbecue this side of the Mississippi. And that side too.”

Jules gave him an appreciative – perhaps too appreciative – laugh.

Simpson began to tell Texan history stories and anecdotes, which generally included some details such as how he had donated to save a landmark, or purchased a landmark, or created a grant for students to study the landmark, or bought an entire museum, or been on the board of directors for the hospital at the time...

Lunch went painfully on like this for about half an hour.

“So, Nigel,” he said, deciding, abruptly, to say my name correctly. “What is it you do that you can take such a long holiday from?”

Jules twittered: “Oh, he's an accountant.”

Simpson looked at me with an arched eyebrow. “That so.” It was a statement, and not a question, and his disdain was evident. “Huh. Well, some people count the money, some people make it.” He sat back, as if he hadn't said anything at all, and stared me down.

Then he folded up all of his napkins and the detritus from his meal, and placed them on the table. “Well!” he shouted again. “I suppose it's time for business.”

He gave me an even harder stare.

The message, after several uncomfortable moments, was clear. I scooped up my now-watery drink and headed back to the bar.

I am almost certain that Wayne Simpson slid his chair just a hair closer to Jules.

In the corner of my eye, I could see that Jules was tossing her hair and laughing her flirtatious laugh. Naturally, I was angry – but there was also the part of me that savored the fantasy, a fantasy I'd been keeping a secret from Jules for a long time. I loved imagining her with another man, and now that man was Wayne Simpson. I imagined his big, muscled arms holding his weight over Jules' small frame, while she gasped and told him how enormous he was...

I tried to interrupt my fantasy before my cock got hard and it was impossible to hide, but it was too late. I crossed my legs, hoping Wayne didn't see it – and somewhat hoping that he did, that he took it for a sign to be bolder than he already was towards my wife. I swiveled back to the TV. When he stood up from the table to leave, Wayne Simpson nodded in my direction, but the tip of his hat seemed to be full of mockery. He kissed Jules' hand, and sauntered away.

I waited for Jules to come to the bar, but instead she sat at the table, her head cocked in the direction Simpson had left, his lackeys following him. She was thumbing through a hefty binder of legal-looking papers.

Finally, I walked over and sat down.

I was about to begin chastising her, for eating meat and flirting so obviously with the enemy, when she stopped me cold by lifting head and looking at me. Her eyes were glittery and she was excited – more excited than I had seen her in a long time.

“You would never guess what Wayne Simpson has just offered me!” she exclaimed.

Oh, but I would venture to, my darling, I thought.

She reached out and took my hand. “He's very excited about our project. Did you know that he's actually looking to get into alternative fuels? He's also trying to change the image of his companies and holdings, make them more environmentally friendly...oh, darling, don't look at me like that, I know what you're thinking, but I do think the man is genuine, I think he really is interested in change, and here's the very best part!" She plopped the binder in front of me.

I looked from the binder to her colleagues, who were also nodding like bobble-heads, and then back to Jules.

"What's this, then?"

"A joint project proposal!" Jules was practically screaming, and her face was flushed. "It could mean a lot of funding for our project, and who knows what else?" She began to blather on excitedly, and my hearing became hazy and diluted. I retreated to my own thoughts, where I imagined Wayne Simpson discussing this funding, and what Jules could trade for it.

We drove home with Stephen and Michael, Jules' geeky number-crunchers, and the drive was silent. I hoped that the two of them were thinking about how Wayne had slid his eyes all over my wife and made her laugh and flirt, and that they were laughing – just a little – inwardly, at my expense.

I was annoyed by the time we got home.

"I can't believe the spectacle you made of yourself," I said, when Jules asked me what was wrong.

"I knew you would say that," she scoffed. "I knew it. But sweetheart he really is a good man who just wants to put his money in the right places."

"You ate meat," I countered.

"Oh I know!" she said. "It's bad, but honestly I didn't see the point of aggravating the man. We are in another country. We need to have some sort of respect for their customs."

I harrumphed.

"Oh, darling, please don't be cross..." She drew a little heart on my chest, and made a pouty face. "My mopey teddy," she said, in a girlish voice.

I looked up at her, trying to keep my sullen expression, but her playfulness, finally directed at me, caught me off guard and I couldn't help but smile back.

"You're not going to be a grouch the whole evening are you? One thing we haven't done while we've been here is have some fun. We're supposed to have a bit of fun, remember?"

She leapt, still playful, onto the bed and rolled over onto her back, keeping her eyes on me, and with one hand pulled her dress up past her knees. My eyes moved down to her legs and I could feel my expression soften as I realized what she was talking about.

"You gonna come over here and make it up to me?" She mimicked – horribly – an American accent.

The corner of my mouth turned up in a half smile. I stood up and put my hands on my belt and started undoing my buckle. Jules raised her eyebrows. "Not so fast, buster. You're going to have to work a little harder than that to win me back." Her American accent was fading, and she was lighthearted and silly now.

I got down on my knees and put my hands on her hips, dragging her body the rest of the way to the edge of the bed. My lips touched her inner thigh, and I felt her shiver. I started to work my way towards center in small pecks and kisses.

Jules writhed in my hands, and I tried to concentrate on what I was doing, but my thoughts kept returning to Wayne. And it turned me on. Instead of listening to her moaning as though it were for me, I began to envision her squirming and twisting in Wayne Simpson's hands, as his tongue moved toward her sweet center...

I didn't waste too much time on foreplay. As my lips touched her beneath her panties, she let out a moan of pleasure and put her hands on the back of my head, running her fingers through my hair and pushing my face towards her.

Drawing circles in her folds, my mouth moved up searching for mound. Her eyes were still closed when I found it and another moan let me know I was in the right place. As I began working harder, Jules pushed my face towards her wet, open pussy even more. I could feel her wetness starting to drip down into her ass.

I didn't mean to imagine what popped into my mind next. The gaze of Wayne Simpson across the table, smirking at me.

But curiously, I feel certain that Jules had something else going on in her mind as well. She twisted and moaned, but her eyes were vacant, not in the room with me. She opened her eyes wide and stared at the ceiling. I noticed her hands stop moving on my head.

"Everything okay?" I was panting, and I just wanted to continue, but I felt that I needed to ask. If you're imagining Wayne Simpson, I wanted to say, go

"I'm fine, keep going..." she replied. She seemed annoyed, and that sent a jolt of ecstasy through my torso and into my stiff cock. She closed her eyes. I hoped she was trying to recapture the moment she was fantasizing about: being with another man.

Jules had never been the kind of girl to look at other guys, or wonder whether they were looking at her. I thought about what she must be thinking: she had no idea where the image of Wayne Simpson had come from or why it had popped up at that exact moment, but the surge of adrenaline it had given her, with me in between her legs, made her and me both feel good. I prayed that as I got back to what I was doing, a nervous tickle would grow in her stomach.

There was nothing wrong with thinking something, right? she must be telling herself. As long as she didn't act on it, and she would never do anything like that, there was nothing wrong with just thinking something inside your own head? She pushed my face deeper towards her center, and she relaxed. I imagined that she brought the image back into her mind. That she saw the smirk, the burly hairy arms, the giant pecs underneath the expensive cowboy shirt.

I hoped she was imagining every detail when she felt a flood of pleasure start to wash over her. I picked up the pace as I felt her muscles tighten. As pleasure ripped up and down her body, she convulsed, unable to control her own motions. A cry escaped her lips and the sound of her own voice reacting to her orgasm brought another wave ecstasy and her hands pushed my face as close to her as she could get me. As the waves kept coming, she swayed her hips and rubbed her clit on my tongue trying to squeeze out as much of the feeling as she could. She finally let me go and let her hands fall by her sides.

Jules lay on the bed, arms at her sides, not caring what was happening with me. She was exhausted from the most intense orgasm she'd ever had. I could tell, and I secretly hoped it was because of – not in spite of – Wayne Simpson. When I finally caught my breath, I asked, "What the hell was that?!?"

Jules waited a few seconds before replying, not wanting to leave the moment behind. She propped herself up on her elbows and looked down her body at me. I was crouched between her legs.

"I don't know. I guess you just did a really good job."

A jolt of pleasure rippled through me. She was lying, I could tell by the way she was looking sideways at the floor. Jules rarely lied, and when she did it was only about something like this – a dark thought of hers, something she shouldn't be thinking.

I stared at her for a few moments. It had always taken at least ten minutes for her to get off, and her orgasms were never as dramatic as the one she'd just had.

"Wow. I guess I'll have to do it that way the next time too," I said. I tried to capture bewilderment in my voice, to let Jules believe I did not know what or who she had been thinking about.

I started getting up. I am sure my eyes betrayed what I wanted to happen next. As Jules lay back down on the bed, a faint feeling of irritation creeping across her face.

I imagined her thoughts, for my own desires: It wouldn't be fair not to let him have some fun too, but it was the last thing she wanted.

I didn't bother to take my shirt off. I crawled in between her legs and probed for her opening with my cock. Jules reached down and helped me inside, pretending to inhale as I stretched her out.

I wasn't very big, but she always tried to put on a show so I didn't feel badly about my size.

I started thrusting quickly almost right away, thoughts of Wayne Simpson filling my head: Wayne touching Jules, Wayne stroking Jules, Jules telling Wayne how big his cock was. Jules let out a few soft moans in a show of enjoyment, but I knew she was just being a good sport.

She rarely climaxed from intercourse, and often she was just going through the motions to keep her husband happy.

I came quickly, almost more so than usual, thinking of Wayne and Jules together. Jules, as always, said nothing of how quickly I came, or how she thought it was pathetic – she was always so good about that. But from her lips a mild sigh escaped, and she patted me, not playful anymore, on the back. She rolled over, plopped her feet onto the floor, and disappeared into the bathroom.

The month dragged on, mercilessly hot day after hot day. Jules was busy nearly every day, and would come home late. I wanted to ask her about her “deal” with Simpson, but I didn't have the guts for it, and I accepted her version of her day – that it was just data collection – without further questions.

But I had my suspicions.

Meanwhile, I was stuck in the hot desert in our awful accommodations by myself, bored to tears.

Winds began to pick up in the afternoon and bring terrifying black clouds with them from the west. It was quite a spectacular sight, and even though I knew I shouldn't, I stood outside watching the storms come in until the rain – always brief – whisked its way over our parched compound. The earth soaked up the water like a sponge, and turned to dust again within the hour. It was just such a storm that whipped through and cut off the power to seemingly everything near us. I sat on the couch and let the storm pass over – the clouds were so dark that reading was impossible, and the effect was impressive. Silence, no humming, just the thunder and the quick, pelting rain.

The clouds went away, however, and the sweltering Texas heat returned. I heard Dan's voice in my head, reciting one of his seemingly endless Texan sayings. Hotter than a preacher's knee.

After a while, it was just hot. Hotter than a cheap housing unit with no AC, might have been a more appropriate term.

For once it was more pleasant outside than inside, where at least an occasional breeze came by. I sat in the sweltering heat, tested Jules, called Jules, and tried to get pages to load on my phone to get information, but they took so long I lost patience and tossed my phone inside so it wouldn't melt in the heat.

There was nothing to do but drink the cold beer – which was the only thing cold in the house – and wait for Jules to come back.

At six-thirty I saw what appeared to be a motorcade coming towards the compound. Oversized vehicles, almost military in appearance, left a trail of dust behind them as they zig-zagged over the desert road and into the fields and then back again. Showing off. If I hadn't been so hot, I might have been terrified that the mob or even the American military were coming for me.

The cars pulled up to all of the “houses” in the compound.

Jules stepped out of the car that parked in front of our tin cabin. “Hi sweetie,” she said. She was wearing an apricot shirt now, which I recalled was not what she had been wearing this morning, nor anything I had ever seen before.

"I texted you," I said, dryly. I was slightly drunk, and now I was a little annoyed. But my interest was also piqued. I wondered if Jules had something improper.

Why did she have a different shirt?

"Sorry I got it just as my phone died," she said. Sweetly. Was she lying?

"Hmmm," I grumbled.

"Guess what?" she said. She looked cool, refreshed, perfectly coiffed.

Hadn't she gone to work in the field this morning, taking samples? Wasn't that what she had told me? Why did she look like she'd spent the whole day in air conditioning?

I decided I was probably losing my mind, from the heat.

Jules ignored my lack of response and gushed on. "Wayne's offered to let us all stay at his ranch! Isn't that marvelous?"

I narrowed my eyes.

I was actually quite a bit drunker, I realized, than I had thought. I looked over at the pile of bottles next to me. Yes, I suppose I had chugged quite a few. Six, in an hour, to be exact. It was just so damn hot.

Jules' eyes fell on the beers, and she frowned, but only temporarily. She walked towards the house and pushed past me. "Come on," she said. "We have to get our stuff. Or do you want to stay here in this heat. It's supposed to take three or four days to get the power back on."

Power. She certainly was delving right in and sounding like an American.

My head was reeling. I stood up, and I nearly fell down the steps.

"So what's this about staying at his ranch?"

"Isn't it just marvelous, darling?" Her cheeks were flushed with her healthy American tan now, and she was quickly cramming things into her suitcase.

"Take your swimming trunks," she said. "He has a grand pool. And tennis courts, so take your trainers." She babbled on and on, excitedly, about the expansive riches that awaited us.

Most importantly, however, she was talking about him as if she had been there already.

"I thought," I proclaimed suddenly, "that you hated Wayne Simpson and his companies and all of his wealth!"

Jules sat on her suitcase to get it closed. She was really packing for an extensive trip. She sighed. "Oh," she said. "I did...I do...oh, I don't know. Once you get to know someone, you find out all sorts of things about them that you didn't suspect. He really is trying to do more environmentally friendly things.” She bounced on the luggage, smiling in a strange, secretive way as she did.

“Mmmmmmmhmmmm,” I grumbled.

“Oh darling, it's true, and anyway....this is insufferable. We can't stay here.

We might as well...” her voice trailed off as she turned around to press down on the luggage with her hands and try to tug the zip closed. “We might as well...” she heaved herself onto it, really fighting to close it.

“We could get a hotel,” I said, but I didn't say it with much enthusiasm. It would cost too much, and it would be a cheap, run-down place.

And there was something else. Even though I hated Wayne Simpson, there was a strange flicker of excitement coursing through me as I imagined him hitting on my wife again, right in front of me. Looking her up and down while she trotted along in her clumsy, bookish way to the pool, while she took off her cover-up, while she slipped into the pool, giggling at how cool it was...

“Fine,” I said. Jules had never responded to me, because, I could see, her mind was made up. I pulled out a duffel bag – Jules had used the only decent-looking luggage. I began to toss my clothes into it.

I was drunk and did a terrible job packing. I didn't care.

Jules kissed me lightly on the cheek. “Oh thank you sweetheart. It will be such a lovely break from this place,” she said. “And isn't he just lovely? He's offered to put everyone up.”

It was true, I could see, and immediately felt a little better, but also a little let down. Better, because this was obviously not a ploy merely to get my wife into bed with him. But let down...well, for precisely the same reason. All the other buildings in the compound had cars parked in front of them, and the wives and kids and husbands of the biology team were excitedly getting into them.

So much for ethics. Everyone, in the end, want a pool and some air conditioning.

I tried to maintain my balance as I headed for the car.

Wayne Simpson's estate, or ranch, or whatever it was called, was even more in the middle of nowhere than the place we had come from. The road dipped into a light but expansive depression of the same dusty earth that surrounded everything here, with tumbleweeds rolling over the highway. His estate stood out in the middle of it all, an emerald-green oasis of enormous size, in the middle of which a lot of white, expensive-looking marble buildings rose up like an entire town.

As we drew closer, I saw that the estate had the appearance of a modern castle: the turrets were missing, but essentially the entire place was walled off by a stone wall, and the house buried inside of it stretched on for what seemed like hectares.

As we neared the estate, the other cars seemed to thin out, and by the time we reached an enormous wrought iron gate tucked between huge trees that seemed to have no business here, it was only us.

I looked behind me.

“I thought you said everyone was coming?” I said it with both nervousness and excitement. I could hear it in my own voice.

Jules was immersed in something on her iPad. “Mmmhmmm,” she said, without paying me much attention. “I think they're just...going somewhere else, or....it's a big place.”

This didn't really satisfy my question, but I remained silent. The gates opened for us after the driver had a brief conversation with the guard at the gates, and the car moved on to an expansive driveway.

Statues, which I could not help but find in poor taste, lined the driveway.

They seemed strewn about, as if someone had gone mad purchasing them, and for lack of a place to put them, had dropped them off here and there. It gave off the air of having far too much money and no sense of taste, if you asked me. Jules looked at everything with wide eyes. “My god,” she mouthed to me.

Every other statue was also a fountain, here in the middle of the expansive desert where water was at an ultimate premium. Water wars in this part of America were legendary, and yet Wayne Simpson seemed to have tapped into enough of it to be splashing it all over his marble statues as though he had a well as deep as his pockets.

The house itself had seemed small on the approach, but it was just an illusion of distance: it took a good five minutes to pass from the gate, down the driveway, through the out-of-place trees, statues, and expanses of green, perfectly kept lawns. I was reminded of an article I had read recently on the origins of the American lawn, which dated back to England in a way: if one had enough money to grow something other than food on his land, he was extremely wealthy.

Well, Wayne Simpson, it was already known, was more wealthy than me and every person I had ever met put together, and his bright green healthy lawns in the middle of the desert certainly demonstrated that.

“He must pay his gardeners a fortune,” I said, stupidly.

But really, he must.

Back to the house. By the time we actually reached it, it cast a shadow far behind us, and glowered over us with the cheerful American architecture of money. It was modeled after a Tudor, but hardly the same size.

I half-expected an entourage of butlers and maids to greet us, but instead Wayne himself came swaggering out of the door and up to the car.

Americans.

He opened the door for Jules, and she stepped out eagerly. “My goodness,” she exclaimed. “This really is something!”

I ground my teeth. Jules had historically never held her tongue about her thoughts on the wastefulness of lawns and landscaping that was not water-friendly, and this place was the epitome of waste.

I heard Simpson's gravelly voice chuckle. “This old place? It isn't really even home. You know I'm so rarely here I had a whole floor fall down on me a while back? Someone left the water running in the bathtub and the place collapsed.”

They started walking towards the house. It was as if I did not exist. I watched, waiting for Jules to remember that she had a husband, that she was married, but she was too busy laughing at Simpson's jokes to even look back. She had left her luggage as well.

I tapped on the glass between myself and the driver.

“I suppose I need to get into the boot, mate,” I said to the impassive driver.

He squinted.

“The hood.”

He squinted more. He turned around. “Man, I think y'all mean the trunk.”

“Yes, that.”

He reached beneath him and popped it, making no effort to retrieve our baggage himself.

Jules was disappearing up the walk.

I meekly got out of the car and walked around to the back of it. I started to lift Jules' overstuffed suitcase, when I heard Simpson call out. “Hey man, don't bother with that. Someone'll get it.”

I dropped the baggage and, feeling like a twat, walked up to the front gate, while Jules and Simpson looked down at me from the top of the steps, a look of amusement on each of their faces.

Did Jules look embarrassed? She said something to Simpson in a low voice, with a smile, and he chuckled his hearty redneck chuckle, which made his whole massive chest heave, and they turned and disappeared into the house.

I set the suitcase down, stood awkwardly for a moment on the driveway, and headed into the house.

Simpson had already, somehow, poured Jules an enormous glass of wine, which she held in her hand.

She inhaled the rich aroma. "It's fabulous," she said, and it almost sounded like she was moaning. She barely glanced at me as I came through the kitchen door. The kitchen was larger than our flat in London, and the back wall was made entirely of glass and let out to an immaculate garden.

Everywhere there were water fountains, spraying Wayne's wealth all over the entire lush, green, moneyed landscape.

I approached the counter.

Simpson eyes me. "What'll it be?" he barked.

"Uh..." I said. "I'll just have wine, I suppose." I wasn't even certain that was what he was asking.

Simpson harrumphed, and took a swig of his beer before pouring me a glass of wine.

He didn't say it, but his stare made it evident: Real Texas men drink beer.

Jules looked away and began to fawn over the garden.

I gulped the wine down, and it was a mistake. I was already quite drunk, and now I sort of felt ill. The two of them moved to the window, and I poured myself another glass anyway. I teetered over to a chair.

I wanted to ask Wayne where everyone else was, and how this arrangement was supposed to work. But I would wait. I would wait until he stopped chatting with my wife.

My eyes felt heavy and I closed them for a moment.

I opened them sluggishly and saw Jules and Wayne in the garden. Did it...?

It looked as though his hand was on her lower back...

My eyes closed again.

I opened them once more and the two of them were gone from my field of vision.

I closed my eyes.

I am not sure how long I was drifting away, in and out of sleep, but it could not have been very long.

Wayne Simpson's voice, sharper, edgier, less Texan-sounding, cut through my sleep like a knife, but I was so exhausted I didn't open my eyes. It seemed, at first, like a midday dream: the same people of your everyday life, but doing things they wouldn't normally do.

Or would they?

"Listen, Jules, I wouldn't want you to do anything you wouldn't want to do, it's not like that." Simpson's deep voice was in its charming, Texan mode.

Friendly, open, honest. A politician's voice.

I heard Jules' voice but she was whispering.

I struggled to fight my way out my sleep, but I couldn't get my eyes open.

Maybe it was just a dream.

"I just don't know," Jules was saying. Her voice was fake, she knew exactly whatever it was she was saying she didn't know.

Through my eyelashes I struggled to see the scene. Jules and Simpson were sitting at the counter. They were snuggled up together – not so close that anyone could claim something improper was happening, but their hands were touching on the table. Simpson had his big arm extended and it was balanced on her chair possessively.

I closed my eyes. I was so tired.

"If it's not something you want to do, Julie darlin,' then I understand. But I'm a businessman. And so I think to myself, isn't everything just business? I'm attracted to you, and you're attracted to me..."

Jules gave a little laugh. A laugh that neither denied nor confirmed what he had said. I would in fact call it a laugh that encouraged him.

"There's no reason we don't have to get the most of this situation, the two of us."

"It's just that...it's just Nigel."

I could hear Simpson standing up, moving around the counter. "Nigel?" he scoffed. I heard a beer bottle open, and the glug glug of more wine being poured into a glass. "Honey I know people. I know something about men, also, and I reckon Nigel is the kind of man who wouldn't mind at all."

This guy was getting on my nerves, but he was right.

Jules made a strange sound. “Why do you think that?”

Now her voice sounded seductive.

“Well, Jules. What kind of man lets his wife come here, stay the night...falls asleep when another man is around? It's no secret you're a fine English rose.”

His voice dropped, and I could not hear what he was saying. I opened my eyes a crack. A cold, paralyzing feeling was coming over me, and my cock was beginning to twitch alive as I pictured the scene before I saw it.

I could only make out the silhouettes of the two, heads together, speaking in the hushed, giggling whispers of new lovers.

I tried to listen, but I felt so tired, and they were talking for so long...

I fell asleep again.

When I awoke I had a pounding headache and the room was dark. I struggled to my feet and began to search for water. I opened cupboard after cupboard but was confused by all the different kinds of glasses, so I ducked my head under the faucet and drank from the tap.

I stood in the moonlight that came in through large windows.

There was a sticky note on the counter. It was Jules' handwriting.

Your room is down the right corridor. The door is open. I'm sleeping in my own room because I have to get up early, and you snore.

She had drawn a smiley face next to the last sentence and signed off Your Cupcake. She had also left an Ibuprofen next to the note.

Maybe I had imagined the whole thing. The room swayed as I tried to get down the hallway to find my room. I tipped into a wall as I entered the corridor. I stooped, and leaned against it. I shook my head.

Yes, of course it had been a dream. Who wakes up half-drunk and then falls asleep again? I had probably been snoring away with an embarrassing hard-on the whole evening. Jules had probably gone to bed early.

The door was open to the garden, and I heard a laugh.

A female laugh.

Jules' laugh.

I turned, still unsteady, and peered through the blanched darkness of the garden. In the distance, there was a structure, and for a moment it looked empty, but then I recognized the shifting yellow light of a candle, bouncing off the walls and barely glimmering through the window.

Another laugh.

I turned for a moment, to go to the room I had been assigned.

Then I began to wonder.

Why hadn't Jules told me where her room was?

I moved carefully, because my head was spinning, and began to cross the garden. I stepped off the crunching gravel path to cut across the lawn and the flower beds, to avoid making noise as much as to arrive faster. I could barely see anything, even in the full moonlight.

I prayed that I would not activate some alarm system or automatic light.

As I neared the structure with the flickering light in the window, I recognized the scent of damp cedar, chlorine, and humidity: a sauna, or a hot tub hut. Enclosed, of course.

I crept toward the window. Now I could hear Jules' voice. It was high and girlish, flirtatious, remorselessly sexual.

I mean, really.

And then I heard the deep baritone of Simpson.

"Come on in here. The water is just lovely."

Jules laughed. "I don't even have a swimsuit on."

But her tone was saying: I don't even have a condom!

"I won't look," Simpson said, and he was teasing.

I moved closer, crouching beneath the window. I strained to see the shadows on the wall, and attempted to guess where they might be from the shadows and their voices.

I heard a slosh.

"That's it." Simpson's voice.

"Okay," Jules said, and her voice was breathy. "You can open your eyes now."

Then there was a silence, and then a giggle, and then Jules said – but she was laughing, playful, as she did: "Oh no! No you don't you rogue!"

I went for it. I moved my head up so I could see over the ledge.

There was no window, so I had a good, fogless view.

Jules was splashing at Simpson, and his big arms were under the water and clearly reaching out for her, and getting some of her body – her naked body – whenever he caught her.

And then she stopped struggling to get away.

He moved in like a wolf, staring at her, cutting off her giggling and her splashing and her will to resist with his alpha-male stare.

I wanted to say something, but I was frozen. My cock was stiff as a board, pushing against my pants. I tried to form the words, No, Jules... but just like her, I sort of meant yes.

Jules' body floated toward Simpson as he dragged her through the water. I could tell that his hands were moving underneath the water, and Jules' face was disintegrating from laughing to concerned to totally serious to orgasmic, with each passing second. She closed her eyes, offering no resistance anymore to whatever he was doing, and her lips parted.

The water moved around them in gentle rhythmic waves while Simpson did whatever he was doing to Jules under the water.

Then she began to stir, to shake her head a little. "Oh no," she said, but she didn't move at all. "No, I'd better not..." her voice trailed away in a gasp.

"Oh, but what about Nigel? I had..." she gasped again. "I think I should - " Simpson lifted her up, standing with her body in his arms, and their bare skin glowed in the candlelight. Jules fell silent, and she looked into his eyes. He moved quickly to set her on the edge of the hot tub. "Don't worry about Nigel," he said.

He commanded, rather.

Jules' mouth opened slightly, but she said nothing.

He pushed her legs apart, and she willingly opened them for him, looking down at him as he sunk back into the water, so that his mouth was in front of her spread, dripping, pink folds. I could see her from where I was, as Simpson pulled his head back to kiss the inside of her thighs, next to her knee. Then he moved closer to her center. Closer, closer. Jules closed her eyes and opened her mouth. She lifted one hand and placed it on his head. "Don't worry about Nigel," he said again. "This is just between you and I."

I stared at her pussy until I could no longer see it, and Simpson's mouth covered it. She clenched her hand in his hair and gasped. "Oh!" she said, almost as though she were surprised. "Oh god, oh god that feels so good!" I saw her legs trembling almost instantly. She threw her head back and her mouth opened. It was so obviously genuine – her cheeks were flushed, her feet splashed in the water in convulsions, and she panted like an animal, like she had run a marathon.

"Oh god," she said. "Oh god, don't stop."

Simpson's head barely moved as he did whatever he did to her, but she began to squeal, and then she screamed.

His hand came out of the water and gently pressed against her mouth. She took his finger into her mouth and sucked on it. Her whole body was shaking.

Simpson stood up, water dripping down his heavily muscled body. He was a big, redneck, hairy man, and it was evident that he did a lot of some kind of work. He reached out and dragged Jules to him by her still-trembling thighs. "Did you like that?" he growled.

Jules just nodded, biting her lip. She was still shaking and flushed.

"You want some more of that?" he said.

"Oh yes," Jules mewled.

Simpson easily twisted her with his giant man-hands, almost like he was playing with a doll, and had Jules propped up on all fours in a split second. He put one large paw on her right butt-cheek and kneaded it, growling with approval. He moved his finger to Jules' pussy, which glistened with all of her dripping cum. His finger slid in easily, and Jules made a soft sound. He slipped a second finger in, moving slowly, and Jules tipped her ass up for him. He growled with pleasure, and added a third finger to his fingering. He moved slowly inside of her for a few moments, working her back up. She began to gyrate her hips with his motions, her head turned up, sounds that she had never, ever made with me escaping her open mouth.

He pressed the small of her back down, and arranged her ass so that it was turned up toward him.

I saw his hand move to his groin, and for a moment I believed he had taken some kind of dildo out of the hot tub. But the huge cock in his hand was his own.

He moved it to where Jules' pussy was opened up for him like a swollen flower, dripping with moisture and pulsing for his cock. He placed the tip of his cock on her clit, and rubbed it there for a few minutes while she squirmed and twisted, howling and moaning. She tried to push herself onto him but he pulled away.

"Tell me now, Jules, do you want my big cock?"

"Yes," she moaned.

"Tell me, darlin'. I like to hear it. Tell me how much you want my big cock inside you."

"Oh, Wayne," she whimpered. "Please. Please, I want your big cock inside of me."

"Say it again."

“I want your big cock inside of me!”

“Say my name, when you say it.”

“Wayne, I want your big cock inside of me. Oh please.”

He moved the tip of himself over her a little longer while she begged him. By now I had moved my hand down to my own cock, which was wet with precum and felt like it would burst.

Then Simpson slowly slid his giant red cock into my wife. One inch at a time. Jules yelped, and then she screamed, and then she said it was too big for her while she pushed herself onto it. He was really stretching her open, his cock was so much thicker than mine. Jules pushed her legs further apart to accommodate him, and fell down with her chest to the floor.

“That's it, Jules. Just take all that big cock and enjoy it. I bet you don't get to enjoy this much cock with your Niles do you?”

Jules naturally did not attempt to correct my name. She turned her head to the side. Her mouth was open and her eyes were rolling in the back of her head. She clutched at the rug on the floor and howled and moaned. Nothing she said formed a word.

I let my eyes rest on Simpson's cock, moving in and out, wetter and wetter with Jules' cum.

“That's it,” he said.

“Ooohhhh,” Jules moaned. “Oh god, it's so big!”

She kept saying this, over and over, tossing her head from side to side.

Simpson began to move faster, and Jules' feet curled under and she turned her face into the bunched rug and bit it, screaming.

But he wasn't done yet. He kept pounding and pounding at her, the water splashing, Jules screaming, and the slipping slosh of water and the sticky sounds of his cock in her wet, overflowing pussy.

Jules was not on birth control. But she seemed to have no intention of stopping him. In fact, she screamed, “Oh yes, fill me up with your hot cum!”

“I'm gonna knock you up, baby. I'll fill you up with some decent genes. You ready for me?”

“Oh yes,” Jules screamed. “Oh, give it to me!”

Simpson thrust into her so hard I thought she might break apart, but she just squealed and asked for more.

They both stood there, heaving and sweating. I quickly jerked myself off and my cum spilled all over my pants, right on the crotch. I tried to wipe it away but it only rubbed in. I could not stop looking at the scene in front of me.

When Simpson pulled out of her, her pussy throbbed and his white semen dripped out her. He slapped her playfully on the ass and sank back into the water.

Jules twisted around and pushed her hair out of her face. Her cheeks were flushed and glowing, and her mouth was turned up in a smile.

“Oh god,” she said again. It seemed like that was all she could say. “That was so...so much better than Nigel,” she sighed.

I moved my head down, because Simpson was swimming in the enormous hot tub toward where the window was. “It's survival of the fittest, darling. You done the right thing. Now maybe if you're lucky, I can get in there again before you leave, lock in the good genes.”

His voice was close to the window, and I began to back away into the dark. Jules' voice was low, and I wasn't sure what she said, but she certainly wasn't telling him anything that meant no way.

I wondered if this was the plan, all along? Was this what his proposal had been, back at the house? And what was Jules getting in return? Or did she already have it?

I crept across the lawn, not wanting to get caught with my stained pants. Part of me wanted to do something, but I realized now that it was too late. I stumbled into the room and locked the door. The same glass that lined the kitchen lined my own room, and I saw the two figures coming, hand in hand, across the garden. When they were about fifty meters from the house, they broke apart, and each went to another part of the house.

Jules did not come by to say goodnight.

Lying in the dark, feeling cold and hot at the same time, I wondered what Simpson's plans were for the rest of the time we would stay with him...and if Jules was going to return to England with a billionaire's baby inside of her.

WATCHING MY WIFE GET TRUCKED

I've had a fantasy about my wife sleeping with another man for as long as I can remember. Before we even got married. Getting married only made the idea even more tantalizing to me.

I mentioned it to her, but I always ended up making it sound like kind of joke.

Because the key thing about my fantasy is that it was a fantasy.

I stared at the chipped, cheap plywood paneling in the motel we were trapped in, somewhere in Wyoming that almost had no name. I kept my eyes facing the wall, and I didn't move. I didn't want her to know I was awake. I felt the cheap polyester blanket lift, and a cool puff of air as she slipped under it. She was trying not to wake me either.

I wondered if she knew I had been watching.

If she did, she didn't do anything about it. She didn't roll over to hug me, or to reach around and find my stiff cock with her cool hands. She just lay there, covered in the truckers' cum, filled up with truckers' cum, not moving.

When I turned over to look at her, she was asleep. She had a half-smile on her lips. Her lips that only half an hour ago had been covered in white creamy cum. Her lips that she had licked and smiled then smiled with; her lips that had pronounced the word yummy like a twenty-year old porn star. I grasped my cock and started to move my hand, resting on one elbow so that I could look at my wife. I could smell the salty, sour cum all over her skin. I thought back to the scene I had just witnessed, of all the men who had just had my wife in every hole while she laughed and pushed her ass open, beckoning them to give her more, more, more. I wanted to reach down and feel her pussy, feel all of the sticky cum that had dripped out of her ass and into her pussy. But I didn't want to wake her up yet.

Her placid expression made everything that much more painful, and that much hotter, as I pumped myself for my own pleasure. She had already given hers away, and now she was asleep.

Maybe she knew I was watching. Maybe she had done it just to please me, because she had thought I wanted the fantasy to be real.

But what if she had just done it because she wanted real men to give it to her hard, and take her the way I wasn't able to, to manhandle her and fill her up? Maybe she had done it because I wasn't enough for her. I groaned so loudly as I came that I was worried I would wake her up. But she just kept sleeping while I spilled all of my impotent cum on the sheets and my thighs. With that pleased little smile on her lips.

We were headed to her parents' for Christmas. Unfortunately, they lived in Idaho, which is just about as far away from any place that anyone wants to fly to as you can possibly get. The tickets were outrageous. We decided to drive.

The drive, which is pretty in summer, is boring as hell in winter. It also became clear to me as we slogged on that we were very likely to die in a car accident or get stuck in a motel in the middle of nowhere.

“Ugh,” Carrie muttered, swiping her phone dramatically the way she does when she's bad news and wants it to go away. “The weather is supposed to get really shitty today,” she said.

For fun, we had stopped at a dive diner for truckers somewhere in northern Colorado. The place was packed with burly, beer-bellied men in plaid shirts, acres of untrimmed facial hair, and frightening stares.

There was also a group of young truckers, all of them muscled and youthful. They wore baseball caps pulled low over their stern stares. Their eyes followed my wife around the diner wherever she moved.

She was the only woman in the diner, besides the hardened, fifties waitress whose name -almost unbelievably- was Dot.

My wife, as usual, was totally oblivious to the male energy that was checking her out. (Or at least, that's what I thought at the time. Now that I've seen what I've seen, who knows what my wife was actually thinking?)

The old men and the pot-bellied truckers did it on the sly. But the five young guys, with arms so big their sleeves were almost ripping, were being more than obvious about it.

Carrie plopped back into the torn vinyl booth, phone in hand, while the five truckers stared directly at her ass as she bent to slide in between the table and the booth. I cringed, unable to do anything about it. I should give them a hard stare back, I thought. But I was too intimidated.

“It's supposed to be a blizzard!” Carrie declared. She stabbed at a piece of bacon with her fork and comically held it up to nibble at it while she read more bad news from her phone. “Two feet of snow, minimum!”

I was looking at the edge of her face, past her so that I could size up the truckers without them knowing I was looking directly at them. A particularly large one, with dark skin and a slew of tattoos on his right arm, was looking right into my eyes. Even though I knew he had no way of figuring out what I was focused on, it sent a shudder of fear through me. The man looked like every photo of a convict I'd ever seen. I looked down at my coffee.

The worst thing was: I felt like we had seen these guys before. They stood out. Were they following us or something?

After an argument, we were on the road again.

I'm sure you can guess: I said we should keep going in spite of the blizzard. Race it. Chance it.

And Carrie, in a practical and irritated tone, said we should just wait it out. Be safe.

I only pushed my side of the argument, really, because of the truckers. I wanted to put some distance between us and them.

Carrie was surprised by my stubbornness, so much so that I think it may be why she gave in and sat pouting in the car for an hour.

The heavy snow began suddenly. It was so much snow so fast that it was almost comical. It was like a caricature of a blizzard.

I slowed to about 10mp, which was still a bit fast after a few minutes went by. Carrie continued to stare out the window. I knew she would start sighing any minute. I could feel it building up in her.

"Do you remember what the last exit was called?" I said, trying to head her off.

"How should I know?" she snapped.

Silence.

"I think you should pull over," she snipped, after a few minutes.

I kept driving.

"You can't see anything, Mark."

That tone.

To be honest, while it irritated me, it also turned me on a little.

"Sweetie," she said sweetly. Kind of like a sugar-coated knife.

It was getting bad, and I couldn't see anything, but I was determined to make it to at least the next exit. I didn't want to be some idiot on the side of the road.

“Probably,” I said with authority, “it’s a snow squall and it’ll be over in a minute.”

“What,” she said, with pronounced irritation, “is a snow squall?!”

When I didn’t answer, she hissed. “Pull. Over.”

“What do you want me to do?!” I yelled. “Pull over on the side of the road where nobody can see us? I’m going to the next exit!”

“Fine.”

Not fine, I knew, but I was starting to feel like an idiot. There was no better way to prove that I wasn’t than to prove my point. By proving my point.

This was the kind of reasoning that kept me going, into the white.

The next five minutes stretched out for what seemed like an eternity. The windshield was filled by a white void, with only a strip of the highway visible at the very edge of the car. A steady, muffled hum filled my ears, and the shriek of the wipers became rhythmic. I started to feel dizzy.

Carrie returned to pouting, which was what I expected.

“Hmmm,” I said, trying to reconcile things with her with humor. “I guess maybe getting stuck in a snowstorm wouldn’t be that bad...” I let my eyes wander to her tight red sweater, to the cowl neck that exposed her skin.

She started to say: “Yeah, it would - “and I’m sure she had a hundred practical reasons, such as freezing to death, as to why it wouldn’t be a good idea. But she cut herself off and made a bizarre noise before she got to them.

I looked up quickly. Maybe I had already looked up. I don’t remember exactly, it all happened so fast. But where the road had been there was suddenly nothing but snow.

Snow had blown across the road and covered it all. Now the effect of the dizziness was overpowering. I had no idea where we going.

I decided to keep going straight. I took my foot off the gas, and we started moving to slow to keep the tires going. The car rolled to a stop.

I tried to get it going, but it felt as though there were many feet of snow beneath it. The tires spun.

“Great,” Carrie harrumphed.

Oh, she was enjoying being so right about everything.

“Fuck!” I shouted. I tried again to get the car going. I felt like a huge ass for being such a crappy winter driver. I had no idea how to get a car out of this situation.

Carrie reached for the door handle. I reached out and stopped her.

“What are you doing?”

“I want to see where we are,” she snapped, and started to open the door.

“No!” I said. “Stay in the car. That much I know you have to do.”

She threw herself against the backseat and rolled her eyes. “Now what?”

We sat in silence for a good fifteen minutes, while I played over the possibilities in my mind. Like any guy, I didn't take a long time getting around to the part where we had to huddle naked in the back seat under the same blanket and keep warm.

Carrie was rolling her eyes again. I must have said it out loud.

Just as I was about to say, surely someone will come along, out of the blinding whiteness a bright light appeared and flashed at us.

A trucker.

The relief that came over me was short-lived, though, and even before the two figures reached our car, I had a feeling about what I was going to see.

Tap tap.

Sure enough. The tattooed man was wearing only a jean jacket and his white t-shirt. No hat. His head was shaved, and I wondered idly how it wasn't cold. He peered through the driver's window at me. His face had a scowl that could have easily been taken for murderous rage. But his eyes looked quickly past me, to Carrie.

I looked to her side of the car, where she was rolling down the window for the tattoo guy's buddy. He also had on a light, unzipped coat.

“Oh thank God,” Carrie said, and I grimaced. The man at her window was taking in her full breasts with a menacing stare. But he was smiling. He looked like he was going to eat her.

My stomach felt cold. I wasn't sure what to do.

“You okay?” the younger guy said, to Carrie and very much not to me. He had a handsome, rugged face. A five-o'clock shadow hung about his strong jaw. He leaned his thick arm on the window and put the other over the roof of the car. Possessively.

“You're clean off the road,” he commented, still to Carrie.

Knock, knock.

Tattoo man was looking at me. I quickly rolled the window down. A blast of wind rushed through the car and both Carrie and her handsome man glared at me like I was an idiot.

“You got some kind of problem? Have an accident?” the man yelled.

The man talking to Carrie touched her shoulder. “Well, you're okay, better roll that window up then.”

I opened my eyes wide. Really? Did he really just touch her shoulder?

I turned back to the tattoo man.

“We're stuck,” Carrie offered. She was in a real snit.

The tattooed man made a sort of laughing noise, and his eyes looked my car over. “Yeah this car don't have enough weight. Also, you're off the road. It's back there.” He hooked a thumb in the direction of nothing in particular behind him.

“Oh that's...very nice,” I began, and I could see Carrie rolling her eyes. “But I think we'll just...call AAA and wait for-”

“Gonna be waitin' all night. Next people to come by here gonna be the national guard. There's a motel up here we stay at sometimes. Take you there.”

His last sentence was not an offer, but sort of a command. His hand was already on the doorhandle and pulling it open. Carrie had turned around to reach for something in the back, and her torso was exposed as she did it.

The tattooed man made no effort to disguise the fact that he was staring at her, With approval. He raised his eyebrows and drank it in.

“Thank you,” Carrie said, shaking herself into her coat.

Tattooed man didn't say anything.

But the other guy was right here when Carrie stepped out. Such a big, strong, rescuing gentleman – he took her bag and her elbow, helping her down the road to the big truck.

I felt ridiculous clambering in.

Carrie bounced on the seat. “I've always wanted to see the inside of one of these,” she said, her eyes lighting up.

I had no idea what had come over her. She was being outrageous.

Probably she was just doing it to spite me. I wanted to say something to her, and tell her to quit egging on these beasts, but I was too much of a coward to open my mouth. I had to just sit there and listen to my wife giggling and acting like a bimbo for these truckers.

“Gonna be a tight fit,” the handsome man said, looking right at me. My cheeks burned. Surely he didn't mean the double innuendo?

And then he pretty much just lifted Carrie up, with one hand, onto his thigh.

“There.”

Carrie had no reaction to be set on another man's lap.

I stared out the window as the big truck rolled back and then forward, and we started down the highway. The cab bounced, and so did Carrie, right on the lap of the strapping young trucker. Tattoo man had an amused look on his face, and I could guess what it was about: how this doofus wimp who didn't know how to drive in the snow had his wife sitting on the lap of another man, and was too much of a wuss to do anything about it.

My cheeks were hot with humiliation, but I was also sort of turned on. I looked straight ahead into the whiteness, trying to keep a straight face.

"Thanks," I said, trying to sound as manly as possible after nearly falling out of the cab of the truck. I wondered if I should give them a tip, but the way the big tattooed man – Norm – was scowling at me, I decided to just get out of there with as much of my dignity as I had left. Which wasn't much.

But Carrie had other plans.

"Thank you so much," she bubbled. She clasped the young guy's hands. His name was Dirk. "I don't know what we would have done. You guys aren't going anywhere in this, are you? You have to let us buy you dinner at least." Dirk looked at Norm. I stood there, looking stupid and thinking about how much these guys could probably eat.

"I won't take no for an answer," Carrie said.

There was along, awkward pause. Then Norm erupted:

"Gotta see where our buddies are at."

Carrie, who had spent the entire drive chatting about truckers and trucker life as if she thought it was the most interesting thing in the world, while she bounced around on Dirk's knees, nodded as though she completely understood.

Then she said:

"Of course. We'll just go check in...hey, invite the, too!"

I groaned inwardly, remembering the men who I had seen ogling my wife at the diner with these two beasts.

"Oh, Carrie," Dirk said, and I felt a stab of irritation – how was this guy seriously calling my wife Carrie, like he knew her or something? "We couldn't impose on y'all like that."

"I insist," Carrie said. "Get 'em on the horn, or radio, or whatever it is, and tell them dinner is on us."

Was she serious? She was tossing her hair around. She had placed a friendly hand on his arm.

She skipped into the motel, and I followed, imagining the awful dinner awaiting me, with the five truckers chewing on giant drumsticks and pouring gallons of ale into their open mouths while they undressed my wife with their eyes. Carrie, patting everyone on the arm and jiggling her boobs for them.

I mean – it was kind of hot to fantasize about. But also it was horrible.

I shut the door to the room with a deliberate bang.

Carrie ignored me, tossing her suitcase on the bed and then bouncing on the edge of it herself.

She was so cheerful.

“Could be worse,” she said, smiling.

I was still annoyed by the trip here. “Not really,” I said.

She rolled her eyes and unzipped her suitcase. “I’m taking a shower,” she sighed.

“Yeah,” I said, and even as I started speaking, I knew I sounded like a little, whiny bitch. But I couldn’t stop myself. “You wouldn’t want to look anything less than splendid for Norm Redneck and company.”

She shot me an irritated look. “What’s that supposed to mean?”

“Oh, please. Sitting pretty cozy on Santa’s lap, weren’t you?”

She turned her back to me and started to take things out of her bag.

“Don’t be stupid,” she said finally.

I softened, because she had a slightly playful tone to her voice.

Maybe there was a chance...

I stood behind her. “Still,” I said. “You kind of liked it. Admit it.”

She gave me a backwards glance, and a faint smile. “You always said you fantasized about me with another man,” she said coyly.

She had never said anything like this before.

I put my hands around her waist.

She sighed, and I knew without seeing it that she also rolled her eyes. “Not now. I have to take a shower.”

“Have to look good for Dirk,” I said, and I tried to sound like I was joking. Was I? I couldn’t even really tell what I was doing myself.

“Yup,” she said curtly, and it sent a jolt of hot lava straight through my torso and into my cock. “For Dirk. I’m going to put on my hottest sweater.” Then she trotted into the bathroom, leaving me in the room with a hard on, fantasizing about Dirk and Norm and my wife.

The dinner was worse than I had imagined it would be. The friend truckers showed up, one by one, complaining that the roads were so bad they'd be stuck there for at least a day. Then they decided that, if that was the case, they might as well have a few drinks.

Carrie, also, decided to have a few drinks. She began with a conservative glass of wine, which gave her cheeks a pink blush and made her eyes wet and sparkly. She started to giggle and toss her hair around, biting her lip during the action sequences of the trucker stories that each of them offered her.

Dirk asked me what I did for a living. My answer of accountant was met with chuckles and knowing expressions. "That's nice," Dirk said.

But not very manly, I could see him thinking.

Then one of the truckers ordered shots of tequila.

I fully expected Carrie, who had gotten sick the last time she drank tequila, to decline. Instead, she waved her hands dramatically at the bartender when the shots were ordered and said, "No, no, no – wait a minute! No Cuervo for these guys. You have Don Julio? Let's have some real tequila!"

She leaned over the bar, and her low-cut shirt revealed her ample bosom. She was certainly showing it off tonight.

I leaned in and whispered to her after she placed the order. "Carrie," I said. "Maybe you should take it easy..."

She glared at me and opened her mouth, but at the same time Rob, one of the three friends who had arrived and graciously taken Carrie's offer of a free dinner, grabbed my arm and bellowed: "Oh, Marky Mark. Take it easy. Ain't nobody getting' out of her tonight or tomorrow. Relax a little."

"Yeah Mark," Norm said, staring at me from the bar where he had been sitting with his arms folded, giving me cold, steely eyes all evening. "Relax. Let the lady have a drink if she wants to."

I gave in, and shut up.

After a few moments, I helped myself to a shot.

Carrie started laughing with her mouth wide open, and smiling at every single thing they guys said to her. I sat, pouting, and pouring myself drinks.

Carrie was getting plastered, and the truckers were getting more and more feely as they did as well. Their hands started moving around her waist, pinching her knee and telling her what good shape she was in. They stopped even attempting to cover up that they were staring at her tits.

I went to the restroom at some point, and when I got back, Carrie was sitting on Norm's lap.

“Carrie!” I hissed.

But Carrie looked up and laughed. “Sweetie,” she said. “Norm is just teaching me how to...what is it called...?” But she collapsed in a waterfall of giggles and was unable to finish what she was saying.

“I think we should go to bed,” I said, curtly.

“Okay,” she said. “Okay, honey.” She tried to compose herself as she slid off Norm's lap, smiling. She sat down in the chair next to him and looked at me. ‘You're right. Let's go.’

I snatched her coat and turned toward the door.

I assumed she was following me. I had already left the bar, and the door was swinging behind me, when I realized that she had not come after me. Rather than be humiliated by stomping back into the room like a scorned woman, I decided to just go to the room.

She would follow me.

Wouldn't she?

After a half hour, I got into bed and turned off all the lights. I fumed silently, preparing what I would say to her the next day about her behavior. I most have dozed off.

When I opened my eyes, with a start from some bad half-dream, I looked at the clock.

What the fuck? Was she seriously still drinking with those assholes?

I opened the door and stuck my head out the hallway. Nothing.

I crept down the hallway, feeling almost like a teenager sneaking out of his house – which was ridiculous, I knew. But I felt it anyway. I had every right, I kept telling myself, to go see what my wife was doing at 12 am with five truckers.

But I didn't want her to see me, and I didn't want to have confront them and put up with their jeering. They had already made me feel like an ass.

I went down the back stairs so that I could approach the bar from the back, where it was less likely they would see me.

It was a long walk down the hallway. The lights were on, bright and buzzing, and a soda machine hummed loudly like every soda machine in every hotel in America. A door clicked shut and I jumped, but the sound came from a hallway behind me.

There was a cheap door of full-length glass and aluminum dividing the hallway from the small, wood-paneled room that serviced both the diner and the bar. But there didn't seem to be anyone there. No sound, no shadows moving. The back door I was coming through turned sharply into the diner, like a small entryway, so I could open the door and creep into the space without – hopefully – being noticed.

On the other hand, if anyone did notice me, it would look that much more like I was spying on my wife. Maybe I should go back to the front door. But the lack of activity in the bar, where I had left my wife last, flirting in a low-cut shirt with five muscled truckers, pushed me on.

There was no one in the bar. There were glasses littered on several tables and behind the bar, but no one was there.

I breathed a sigh of relief. Maybe Carrie had returned to the room, by going through the front door, and we had just missed each other.

Or maybe the gang of truckers had kidnapped her and they were gangbanging her in the back of one of their trucks.

And then, my eyes fell on her purse. It was in a chair at one of the tables littered with glasses.

And then I noticed one of the trucker's coats. The Carhart jacket that Herb or Harvey or whatever his name was had been wearing.

Almost at the same time, I heard a small crash in the kitchen, and a male voice. And then a sound that sent a shiver through me: a cross between a moan and a cry.

My first thought was that they had dragged her into the kitchen against her will, and that now I would have to do something. My veins filled with fear. I looked around for a phone.

Then, I heard her voice again.

That was not really the sound of someone who was doing something against her will.

Another small clatter. I moved toward the swinging door that divided the diner and the kitchen. There was a tiny window in it, and I crept up to it, approaching it at a crouch so that I could peep my head up from the bottom without being seen.

I looked into the kitchen. At first I saw only a surprisingly large kitchen with aluminum counters and typical kitchen appliances. It also appeared that no one was there.

Then I glimpsed jeans, and skin, and a shoe, in the doorway beyond the kitchen. There appeared to be a manager's room; the floor was carpeted. And there was someone in it.

There were quite a few people in it, and one of them was Carrie.

I slipped into the kitchen, driven by something I couldn't describe. I knew Carrie was in there, and from what I could see: her leg, bare, and the jeans; and from the sound – I knew what I was going to see if I could get to a place to observe that room. I didn't want to see it, and I didn't want it to be true. But I also did want to see it. And I did want it to be true.

I felt like I was dreaming as I moved through the kitchen, watching the light in the office and listening to the voices coming from it. I heard it all, but it washed over me as if it weren't real. The sound of zippers, the male voices saying things like, "That's it, baby. Take it all."

My cock got harder and harder as my mind imagined what I didn't truly expect to see: my wife's mouth opening for the cock of one of those dirty, foul-mouthed truckers. Taking in their unwashed, hairy cocks...images filled my head, but secretly, I still believed it would end up being some kind of silly misunderstanding. They were actually all washing dishes, like in a campy eighties movie.

I was worried about how I would get the view that I wanted, but as I crossed the kitchen, the answer presented itself – almost too good to be true. There was a small window looking out of (or in on, in my case) the office, to the right of the door. I would be hidden behind the wall.

I crept past the dangerous place in front of the office door, where I could have easily been seen if the man in the doorway had turned his head. I held my breath and actually squeezed my eyes closed, praying to avoid confrontation. But he didn't see me, and I picked up the pace, on tip-toes, to get to safety around the corner.

It was pitch black on the other side of the office where the window was, except for where a patch of light fell against the wall. I moved about three feet from the window, where I felt exposed but knew that I wasn't. No one could see me in the dark because of the reflections on the glass. I repeated this to myself several times, because each of the five enormous men with thick arms could break me in two by himself.

I stared at what I saw through the window.

This cannot be happening, I thought to myself.

My wife was propped up on a chair, her knees and hands resting on the seat of the chair, her ankles crossed – and her completely bare ass open and exposed to the men who were watching her, encircling her like a pack of horny, hungry wolves. But more than that, she had her face turned up toward one of them, who was clearly unfastening his belt and unzipping his pants with one hand, and her face was lit up like she was getting a present. She was smiling, and running her tongue along the ridge of her teeth.

Her hot red mouth was making the most sexual, dirty movements I could imagine. She didn't even look like my wife now – she looked like a character in a porno who resembled my wife. I wanted to look away, but I wanted to see what she would do next.

I mean, I didn't. But I guess I had no choice but to watch. I certainly wasn't going to take on five guys.

Dirk, whose mopish hair I recognized, too his shirt off, and Carrie watched him attentively as he moved around the chair. I saw the tattooed arms of a bare-chested Norm stroking her neck and running his grubby fingers through her hair. He was kneading her shoulder like a baker with dough, clumsily, all the time pushing her face closer to where his cock was erect and waiting. He grasped her jaw in his hand and turned her face up. With his hand under her chin, and his fingers over her jaw, he squeezed her cheeks so that if she hadn't opened her mouth willingly, he would have opened it for her.

But Carrie had a seductive smile on her face, and she opened her mouth to let his fat cock fill it. He slid into her waiting mouth, and then he grasped her hair and pushed her head down onto him, all the way to the base of his cock.

A shudder went through me as I watched my wife's lips make contact with the hairy base of the beefy trucker's dick.

Then, to my amazement, when he let go of her hair and placed his hands on the back of his head, the way a person would relax on the beach, Carrie just kept going. She bobbed her head up and down, sucking and tugging on his cock, slurping and gulping and getting it wet with her spit until it shone.

“That's it,” Norm coaxed. “Oh, fuck. That's good. Just keep sucking on that cock.” He was speaking loudly, and it was easy to hear him through the glass.

I was so obsessed with what she was doing with her mouth, that I hadn't been paying attention to Dirk, who was moving around behind her, his own cock in his hand. His eyes were fixed on her round, naked ass. The way she was propped on the chair made her ass pop up, her legs crossed at the ankles underneath her, her chin resting on the back of the chair as she sucked on Norm's cock.

Dirk placed his thumb inside of her – I couldn't quite see where, and she moaned, but didn't stop sucking on Norm's cock.

I watched in horror, but also with my cock getting harder and harder, as Dirk guided his member to her opening and pushed in.

Carrie emitted a moan, and squealed, but her mouth was full of cock, and the moan was muffled. I looked at the expression on Dirk's face as he watched his cock slide into her – his greedy, lusty face as he watched his own cock get wet with my wife's pussy juices.

He started off slow, fucking her lightly, one hand extended to grasp her hair and pushed her onto Norm's cock while Norm maintained his casual posture, relaxing with his hands crossed on the back of his head like a day at the beach. Just relaxing, while my wife's mouth pleased him all the way down to the base of his fat, dirty cock.

Dirk started to pound into Carrie harder, sucking on his lower lip and watching himself.

Carrie let out a cock-filled squeal. I could only imagine, from where I was, that her cunt was glistening and swollen – so different than she ever was for me.

Dirk leaned forward and whispered something in her ear. She released Norm's cock from her mouth, a long trail of saliva hanging from her mouth to his vein-covered cock. Whatever Dirk said made her smile, then pant, then bite her lip, then say: Yes, over and over again.

And then she started to arch her back, and her legs began to twist beneath her. My eyes widened in jealousy, rage, and humiliation – just minutes into Dirk's treatment, she was flailing wildly and panting and squealing in delight. She moaned, and started to scream. She was coming, but the sounds of her ecstasy were dampened by the cock in her mouth.

My cock was so hard now that it was pulsing painfully with each beat of my heart, which was racing.

I had to free it. I moved my hand down to my zipper and hoped it wouldn't make any noise.

Norm reached out and pulled her from his cock, like he was lifting an animal from it. He was stroking his huge cock with one hand and holding her head up with the other. Her face was flushed, and she had that erotic smile on her lips.

Another expression that was new to me.

“Did you like that?” Norm asked her. “You want some more, though, don't you? Show me how much you want me to fuck you.”

Carrie smiled and licked her lips, but she didn't do anything else. She knew what was coming even before I did.

The chair she was on was a swivel chair. Dirk turned it, while she stayed propped up on it like a toy. Now I had a view of her ass, and her swollen pussy, her juiced dripping onto her thighs. She squirmed in the chair and pushed herself back toward Norm.

Dirk had already gathered her hair in his hands, and pushed her mouth onto his cock.

It was only at his point, incredibly, that I remembered that there were other men in the room. But they seemed content to wait their turn, their cocks in their hands, ready to fill her up after Dirk and Norm had their way with her. As Dirk pushed her head forward – but I must say, she seemed to bend that way most willingly – Norm slipped a finger into her, and stroked her lightly on her clit. She opened her mouth for Dirk, her eyes still fixed on him, and then she just swallowed him whole.

She had never, ever, done that with me. The most I could get her to do was lick me a little, and suck the tip of my cock. She did it with disinterest, certainly never looking me in the eye while she did it.

Dirk's cock was twice the size of mine – thicker, longer – and she just took the whole thing into her mouth, like she did it all the time.

Dirk tipped his head back and seethed through his teeth. “Oh, fuck,” he said.

I stared in horror at the sight, imagining what I couldn't see clearly: Carrie's red lipstick highlighting her lips, spread wide, wide open, and Dirk's brown-pink cock stretching them apart even further, buried all the way to his balls in Carrie's soft pink mouth. He started to thrust his hips, holding her head in place with his hand on her throat, and she obediently allowed herself to be manhandled and fucked like that.

My eyes flicked to Norm, and another jolt went through me as I saw what he was doing: he had gotten his finger wet in her pussy and now he was slowly sliding into her. I squinted. Did I have this right? Was he slowly sliding his finger into her ass?

I couldn't see very well, but the slowness of his motions as he began to push and pull inside of her revealed the inevitable truth: if he had had his fingers in her sopping-wet pussy they would not have met so much resistance.

Carrie did not moan or cry out – and perhaps this was because her mouth was filled to full with cock. Instead, she tipped her ass up more by arching her back, like an invitation. Norm looked down at her ass with new interest, clearly pleased that she was offering him some more.

I heard his gravelly voice. “You like that, huh?”

At that moment Carrie pulled away from Dirk's cock to catch her breath. Saliva trailed from his swollen member to her mouth, and her lipstick was smeared all over her chin and cheek. Her mouth was gushing saliva and sticky juices, probably salty precum from Dirk's near-bursting cock. She reached up a hand to take Dirk's cock in it and stroke him, as she turned with a smile to Norm.

“I like in the ass, if you do it right.”

My eyes bulged and I squeezed my cock to keep myself from coming all over the floor right then and there. What the fuck?! This was so unlike her. Or was it? Maybe I had just never had the balls to give her what she really craved.

She watched Norm as he inserted two fingers in her ass. The chair moved to the right, giving me a better view. I couldn't take my eyes off my wife's tight ass being pried open by Norm's stubby fingers.

Carrie closed her eyes and moaned, but she kept pushing her ass back toward him. Norm smiled.

Dirk, probably near blowing up, placed his hand on Carrie's head and pushed her back onto his cock. Into her mouth went the big slab of meat, all the way down, deep into her throat. Norm's eyes watched it, and I could see his cock was thumping around in excitement, like a big, twitching club. He moved his hand back and forth in Carrie's ass, and she made sounds like it hurt her and she liked it. She whimpered and moaned. But all the while she kept sucking on Dirk's cock, and pushing her ass further onto Norm's hand.

Norm pulled out his fingers and took his big, thick snake of a cock in his hand. It was too heavy and thick to stand out straight.

He teased her with the tip of his cock, dipping lightly into her pussy and rubbing her clit. Dirk pulled out of her mouth for a moment so that she could catch her breath and she gasped. "Put it in my ass," she mewled.

Yes, I thought sinfully. Put it in her ass.

Wait. I mean...no...but I mean yes...

Fuck, my cock was aching just imagining what it must feel like to have a finger in her tight ass. And the fact that someone else got to do it, instead of me...that was just making things worse.

Or better. Depending on how you looked at it.

Norm smiled. "I'm stretch you out first, sweetheart. Steve here has the biggest cock in the state. Why don't you see if you can get it all in that mouth of yours while I break you in?"

Rage was filling my head – both of my heads. Rage and heat. What in the hell was wrong with Carrie? Is this really what she wanted? Why wasn't she putting up any resistance to these men using her like a fuck toy?

She shook her head slightly as she kept sucking on Dirk's cock. She didn't want to stop.

But Dirk, with some obvious reluctance, obeyed the ringleader and lifted her head away from him by the hair. "Not yet, babe."

Now Steve – as that seemed to be his name – moved in front of her.

His cock, did appear to be, in fact, the largest in the state.

He held it out for her, and she flicked her tongue out. Like a kitten. Licking the tip of it. Teasing him, getting him hotter. Pleasing him.

And then Carrie's mouth opened in a gasp, because Norm – who not small by any accounts except in comparison to the ridiculous cock that Steve had – was pushing himself through the tight sphincter of her ass.

Her moan was muffled as Steve lifted his cock for her, and pushed her head down onto him.

She got most of his cock into her mouth, but it was too big even for my apparently talented cock-sucking wife. Still, she gave it her all, opening and opening, the bulge of his dick moving further and further down her throat. For a few minutes there was silence, and only the sounds of Carrie's holes being pumped, sticky saliva and mucous lubrication the passage of those huge cocks. Norm began to move back and forth slowly, and she whimpered a little with her mouth full of cock. I watched as her ass hole spread and spread. I imagined the searing pain, and the solid ache she had to be feeling now.

Steve lifted her head up and pulled himself out of her. His cock was soaked with her saliva, and she lapped at it, licking the tip.

Norm chose that moment to give a huge thrust, deep inside of her, and she screamed. "Oh god!" she said. "Oh, no, oh no, I can't take it! It's so big!" But her voice meant: I fucking love it, it's so big, fuck me harder.

I watched, mortified, as they went down her throat and into her ass again, enjoying themselves immensely, filling up nearly every hole of my wife with their huge, dirty trucker cocks.

At least, at least, they didn't seem to want to fuck her pussy and fill her up with their cum, getting her pregnant.

Right?

It was almost as if they read my mind. Steve pulled his cock from her mouth and breathed heavily. "Gotta wait a minute, sweetheart. You're gonna make me come and I want to fill you up."

Norm didn't stop. "I'm gonna fuck my load in her right now. You ready for it?"

She was, and she mewled that she was, but he didn't wait for her answer to grasp her ass on both sides and hammer into her until he growled and yelled. He pulled out at the very final moment, just as his hot cum started to burst from the tip of his cock. Dirk, without needing instruction of any kind, reached over her and held her gaping ass open so that his cum splattered into her dark, throbbing hole.

"That's one load," Norm commented. "Now Dirk's gonna fill you up. Steve is last."

One of the other two laughed and commented that she wouldn't be able to take any more after Steve. He pushed Steve aside, and guided his cock to Carrie's lips.

She opened obediently and started to suck on him, while Dirk pushed himself inside of her. Her cries were gagged by the cock in her mouth.

Norm's cum gushed out of her ass with slurping noises as Dirk moved in and out of her.

He didn't pull out to fill her up. He exploded with his cock deep in her ass. Carrie bawled like a farm animal.

The trucker with his cock in her mouth couldn't take any more, He was past the point of no return. He grasped her hair with one hand and tried to get out before he came, but cum was already spurting from his cock and into the back of her throat before he got out. Still, it gushed out, splattering all over her face and her cheeks. She smiled and opened her mouth, moving her head to try and catch it all.

The fifth trucker was stroking his cock so hard that I could see he was about to come. Carrie reached out and moved her hand along his shaft as he moved toward her. He almost made it to her mouth, but his cum sprayed all over her face as she turned to open up for him. Some of it dripped all over the chair.

Steve, who got to fill her up last, was moving behind her now. I moved my eyes around, not sure where to look: to the black center of her red-rimmed hole that was throbbing and squirting white froth onto her thighs, and the fat cock that was about to tear her open? Or to her cum-covered face, and her tongue that was happily licking it off?

But the two truckers at her head had plans for her still: they pushed her hair out her face and moved her to the chair where the cum was spilled.

Carrie needed no instruction: she extended her tongue and licked up everything they had spilled. She stopped only for a moment to howl as Steve's enormous cock broke past her tight rim.

They all watched, just like me, eyes riveted on the thickness that stretched her as far as she could possibly go. She howled but kept licking obediently, until ever last drop of cum was cleaned off the chair.

"Good girl," one of them said. "Give her her prize, Stevey."

"You want it?" he snarled at Carrie.

"Give it to me, please give it to me!" Carrie yelled. "Oh fuck, fill my ass up!"

Steve pounded her hard, and then he roared as he pulled out of her – leaving a big, gaping hole in her ass that was twitching a throbbing – and his huge load burst like a fountain. The cum kept gushing for what seemed like an eternity, and all of right into her sticky hole, until it was overflowing.

He slapped her on the ass.

I squeezed my eyes shut and bit my lip as my own cum exploded, soaking my pants. I panted and reached out to steady myself. I couldn't help whispering: Fuck.

And then I scampered away, before I got caught. I would deal with Carrie later.

Maybe.

ST. PADDY'S DAY CUCKTALE

This is a story that I have to share. By now, you've read the title, and you're thinking to yourself that something so preposterous could never have happened. You're wondering what could have happened in the universe to make the worlds of so many people crash together in a small pub in a small town in Ireland, on St. Patrick's Day: three very large, very tall, very well-endowed college basketball players; three very small but surprisingly well-endowed dwarfs; my red-headed but not remotely Irish wife; and of course, me, Stan. The ordinary man.

You're probably thinking it's too strange to be true, but I submit all of the strange things that have happened in the world, things that seem like they couldn't be true. You have but to Google it.

The baby who fell out of a window onto a man and so survived, not only once but twice, exactly one year apart. The same man.

Three-time lottery winners.

(Perhaps in my case, a better story is of the guy who got hit on the head by toilet ice that fell off an airplane.)

So if I tell you that all of these men fucked my wife, and that my wife uncharacteristically got drunk and let them – nay, she enjoyed the fuck out them doing it to her – you may, and you probably are, shaking your head and thinking I had a little too much of the whiskey and too much of Ireland and her story-telling ways, and I'm telling a yarn that no one can possibly believe.

But I am not.

This is the real true story of the time my wife cuckolded me. In Ireland. With dwarfs, who indeed could have been mistaken for leprechauns, as they were so dressed. And basketball players.

And you know what? This is a painful story. It's a real story, a serious story about the very real pain of being betrayed by my wife and cuckolded. By men big and small. So stop laughing.

It was my wife's idea to go to Ireland.

I can dispense right away with your disbelief about the first of these crazy coincidences: that all of this unlikeliness happened to happen on St. Patrick's Day. That is definitely just a coincidence.

Neither one of us is Irish. Not in the real sense of the word, and not even remotely. Even though pretty much any American is bound to be Irish, I am sure I am not.

She planned the trip months before we went, and she planned for dates that included St. Patrick's day only because she works at a university and could get away for Spring Break.

Also, it's important to note that St. Patrick's Day is not the big brawl of dyed-green drinks and beer and yelling that it is in America. It's a solemn occasion and a Catholic holiday, which was definitely a disappointment to me when I got there.

Anyway.

She's been obsessed with Ireland for years. She thinks it's romantic. I think she imagined as all fog and mist and green hills and charming people telling stories in their lovely accents. She loves all those dreary Irish writers.

I don't know their names. It's not important.

For the first two days we were there, Ireland was quite lovely. A little cold, a little gray, but lovely.

Ayla had an itinerary all planned out. She wanted to see a lot of landmarks related to literature, and I'll tell you honestly, I'm so traumatized by the events that happened on the third day that I have no idea what these things were. Somebody's birthplace, James Joyce's basement...who cared? The cool windy air was giving her face a nice pink blush, she was perfectly happy walking along and reading things out loud to me from little brochures. I could drink all the beer I wanted, and eat things like whiskey-glazed corned beef hash without getting any lectures about the food or the drink. And I wasn't at work.

She was really caught up in the romanticism of it all, too, so it was pretty easy to put the moves on her at night, in quaint little Irish bed and breakfasts. She might have been thinking about Irish writers or the IRA, but I didn't care because I was having sex and she was a little more into than usual.

It helped that she was trying whiskeys left and right in the name of having a full experience.

The third day, we were in a charming town called Kinsale. It was St. Patrick's Day, and the bartender informed us that there were parades in town for Americans. He did not approve of them, he noted, but so it was. If we wanted to see them.

The entire pub erupted into a discussion about how Americans were ruining the holiday, and the parades were an abomination.

We declined the polite invitation, and ordered more beer.

About an hour later, I was getting fairly drunk and feeling good about life. Ayla was smiling and also getting a little tipsy, and I was thinking about how I would have one more beer and then we would go back to our hotel and have extraordinary sex.

And that's when the door made it's almost creepy magical sound as it opened, a tinkling like faery dust, and in came the first of my troubles.

A leprechaun.

He hopped onto a bar stool and ordered a Guinness.

I myself had never run into a real dwarf.

I watch Game of Thrones. I think that guy is awesome. I liked to think of myself as the kind of person who would not act like a fucking idiot if I ever saw a little person. Because, Jesus. It was 2014.

However, I had a real case of the jackasses going on when this guy came in. First of all, he was, in fact, dressed like a leprechaun. I mean, the entire deal. Green suit, black hat, shamrocks all over him.

I could have done a lot of things, like just shut up, and not talk to him. Or just talk to him like a normal person.

Instead, I went into the over-thinking mode that I think many an average white guy can sympathize with: I wanted to demonstrate that I was not an average white guy who was insensitive to the plight of small men with dwarfism who had to dress up as leprechauns to make a living (or any other minority).

But then I started in on the dumb ideas: Or would that be rude? What if the guy just had a good sense of humor and didn't feel oppressed? Would ignoring him make it obvious that he was making me uncomfortable?

Because he was not. Or at least he shouldn't be. Maybe he wants someone to talk to him about his costume. What would I do if he were an average-sized guy dressed as a leprechaun? No, that didn't work because the joke would be about he was too big to be a leprechaun. Maybe this guy would like that joke. Maybe he wouldn't.

On and on.

Until I said – seriously, this is what I said:

“Are you a real leprechaun?”

The man, who had not appeared very leprechaunesque up until that point, seemed to become even more crooked and gnarled than a moment ago, and his face twisted up into an absolutely horrifying expression.

Ayla started laughing even before he spoke.

It was beyond awkward, especially since I had no idea what this guy was going to say.

Then his face returned to normal, and out of his mouth, in a very crisp, very non-Irish accent, he said: “Are you a real asshole?”

“He is,” Ayla assured him, and tossed her hair over her shoulder (was she flirting with this guy?) “But he doesn't mean to be. He's just an idiot, really.”

I watched the man's face change as Ayla spoke. She has that effect on men, especially when she is insulting me for sport. She had touched her mouth, and even from across the bar I could see that the man's beady little eyes were following her fingers to her lips. I could see a different kind of look moving over his face.

Doesn't everyone recognize the look on another man's face when he is thinking about fucking your wife? I don't know. Maybe I'm crazy, I see this all the time.

(And I am proven right at the end of this story.)

And the Ayla said:

“Can I buy you a drink? To make up for my husband's stupidity?”

I looked down at my beer.

“American!” the dwarf shouted, startling the entire bar. “I love American girls!” He dropped very suddenly out of sight.

He reappeared next to us, having walked around the bar. The guy had to climb into the bar stool, but somehow he did it elegantly, with a little hop and a lot of aplomb. “It's the accent,” he said, and leaned in toward Ayla.

“Say something else.”

Was this guy – a dwarf! - putting the moves on my wife?

Ayla giggled. Giggled in the nervous way that women giggle when someone is charming them. When a man is charming them.

Like any husband with jealous tendencies and insecurities, I began to immediately fantasize about my wife flirting with the guy all night. The sweet, painful insult of it. He was going to work his dwarf angle, and since that guy from Game of Thrones had done everyone the big favor of making dwarfs seem sexier, it was going to work. Right now she was wondering what it would be like, to have a little man please her. Would he make up for it other ways?

I was well down this rabbit-hole of dirty thoughts, with no idea how close I was to the truth, before Ayla even answered.

“Uh...something else. Well, what kind of beer would you like?”

The guy leaned over as far as he could, so that he could look at me. “Let's ask hubby. What do leprechauns drink?”

He was challenging me. He was starting shit right here in the bar, and there wasn't much I could do about it without looking like an asshole.

I racked my brains for a cool thing to say, and Ayla just blinked at me and turned back to her new friend.

The dwarf smiled.

“It's okay, mate. Hey, it's fine. I'm just winding you up. I am dressed up like a leprechaun.” He extended his hand across the bar.

I took it, and he gripped it like a vice. Smiling generously, and squeezing the holy fuck out of my hand.

It really hurt.

I smiled back. Was this actually happening?

I ordered a Guinness, which made the leprechaun roll his eyes, and then Ayla basically turned her back on me to talk to him.

This guy was a real charmer. And Ayla was really falling for it, hook line and sinker. He was playing his dwarf card really well, and for a half hour I told myself the story that Ayla was just being kind to the guy because he was...well...a dwarf in a leprechaun costume. I had had enough beer, and heard enough comments about how the size of one's hands did not necessarily determine everything, and how he could show her that, that I started feeling a little mean. Also, they were ignoring me completely. Ayla was laughing and patting him on the knee, and totally falling for his shit. After a while, though – and maybe because I was drunk – I began to get a really sinister feel from the guy. Like maybe he was actually charming Ayla.

He was just telling her how short men have a complex that they make up for by being more rigorous in other departments, and Ayla's face was lighting up with what seemed like genuine interest, and I was just about to get up and drag her out of the pub, when the highly improbable happened.

Two more dwarfs walked into the bar.

No, it's not the beginning of a joke. It's the beginning of my personal tragedy.

So there were were. My wife, laughing hysterically with the dwarfs, who were friends of the first one and all as charming as the last.

Things were getting increasingly inappropriate. The dwarfs were getting quite drunk, and so was Ayla. They had begun talking about sex, and Ayla posed question after question, miming an honest and virtuous curiosity.

“So..I don't want to sound..nosey, or like, inappropriate,” (giggle),

“but...you have sex with women who are not dwarfs, right? So how is it..like how is it different. Or maybe: what modifications do you make?”

“I've got a pony I stand on!” one of them shouted, and they all laughed and gave me the ghoulish side-eye.

“It's fantastic,” one of them said, leaning up close to her, so that his face was practically in her tits. “It's a dream to be a little man, look at the view I've got!”

And Ayla just laughed, a little too much, at all of this.

I mean, these guys were really working it. Hard.

I slammed my half-finished beer on the table, and I was opening my mouth to tell Ayla we were leaving. Not just ask, but tell her, dammit, and I wasn't letting three dwarfs stop me.

When the next thing happened.

The bell on the door broke up the light silence with an oriental tinkle, and a black Adonis stepped through it.

My eyes went wide, and my brain went berserk. This was the biggest guy I'd ever seen. He must have been seven feet tall, and he was just..big.

And he was a big huge black man in a small Irish town, currently inhabited by dwarfs.

He was gorgeous.

And he was, unpredictably, the answer to my prayers.

I gave a light sigh of relief and picked up my beer. I knew Ayla's eyes were going to look at the door, and she would see what had just come through it, and she would get captivated by how good-looking he was, and her goofy little dwarfs would seem just like what they were: goofy little dwarfs in leprechaun costumes.

But behind the black god, the dark air seemed to shift, and in came another one, dark as the night and just as large and beautiful.

The had stern faces, and I admit fully to suddenly having a sinking feeling that perhaps they were terrorists or something.

They just looked like such badasses.

Look, I know I had a lot of racist, bigoted thoughts in this bar that day, and I'm not proud of it, but I'm trying to tell this story as honestly as possible.

The first one who had come through door moved his eyes quietly over the room, as though searching for something.

And then they fell on the dwarfs, and my wife.

An arm extended nearly out from the gigantic body of the man, and it was the longest arm I had ever seen. It almost touched the nose of the smallest dwarf.

"You!" the voice of the man bellowed, and it felt like the whole room shook. Ayla looked terrified.

I was terrified, but also keenly interested. It would have been very convenient if this man was about to start a brawl with these dwarfs, but I was also a little worried I was going to get involved.

"You cheeky bastard!" he said.

And then, to my ultimate horror, the dwarfs and the two men burst into an absurd round of laughter – cackling, from the dwarfs, and a low, baritone rumble from the enormous black guys.

"You've already gotten to the best ladies in Kinsale, I see."

This guy's voice was actually rattling in my chest.

The door tinkled again, and another enormous black man walked through the door, greeted the two who were now looming over us, and the dwarfs raised glasses to him and shouted "Hey! Terry!"

"You have got to be kidding," I muttered quietly, as the second of the three statuesque men reached out and drew Ayla's hand to his like a magnet, lifting her up from her seat and bringing her hand to his lips. She moved as though hypnotized, her eyes never leaving his.

"And who are you, miss?"

"Ayla," she cooed.

I rolled my eyes, This could not actually be happening.

"Ayla," I said. I jerked my head toward the door.

"Don't be a spoilsport," she snapped.

I took a huge swig of my beer and held my hand up to order another.

"Enchante," this guy actually said. "Darrell." Da-REL.

Then they began a ritual of nudging and joking and flirting, moving into our group, nodding dismissively at me, and soon they were all sitting in a big group and laughing. Every single one of them working hard on Ayla.

These guys.

So they were “basket” players, from London. Darrell, the first to walk through, was kind enough to ask me a few perfunctory questions about the NBA, but after determining that I was a complete idiot who knew nothing about sports, he returned his attention to my wife.

I was getting slurry drunk by now, and I wanted to ask them why basket-players from London were in a small Irish town on St. Patrick's Day, and why they were such good friends with dwarfs who dressed up as leprechauns and did St. Patrick's Day parades. (The dwarfs had already explained to me that they did the parades for the opportunity to meet American girls).

“Ayla,” I slurred. “I think we should go.”

“Just have one more beer, darling,” I remember her saying.

Mr. Enchante leaned in to her, and whispered something in her ear.

And she is the one who got it for me. The beer.

Now, I will never be able to prove anything, and what happened up until now is a fact and I am sure it was all real. As to the next part, I believe that it happened, although sometimes I question myself. The detail is so horridly vivid that I can only believe it actually did.

Though who it was who drugged me, I shall never know.

The first thing I noticed was that the bar had become very quiet, and everyone seemed to have left. I looked around in alarm, and the first dwarf we met peered over at me, amused. He seemed to be talking through a swimming pool. “Don't worry, lad. I own the bar!” And he cackled.

It fell apart very fast after that.

One minute, they were all laughing together, and all of them were flirting with my wife. I began to feel sleepier than just a beer could make me. Or perhaps, not so much sleepy, as incapacitated. I couldn't lift my arms or my legs. I couldn't talk. It seemed like I had been hot with an animal tranquilizer.

I remember trying to move, and a few of them looking at me, watching me fall apart, and..smiling.

I heard them ask Ayla if she had ever been with a dwarf. What about two? What about three? And had she ever been with a black man? What about two? What about three?

I tried to make a noise. This was just inappropriate. But I couldn't.

And then it began. My nightmare.

The original leprechaun, I'll call Firsty because I never found out his name, moved toward her and unzipped his green, leprechaun pants at the same time. Ayla didn't move. She just sat there, watching with interest.

I rolled my head around, but whatever they had given me was definitely making it impossible to do much more than just sit there, looking stupidly at what my wife was doing.

Actually...okay.

I was interested, too. I was interested in seeing the cock of a dwarf, okay?

And I was also secretly hoping that when he took it out, and it was too small to be believed, everyone would laugh at him, and he would start crying and everyone would go home.

I was half-hoping this. The other half of me couldn't move, because I couldn't believe this was happening, and my wife was going to cheat on me with all of these dwarfs.

Who could?

But when he pulled his cock out, not only was it not small, it was huge.

It wasn't just huge compared to the rest of his body. It was a huge cock.

"What?!" I tried to mutter, but I think I just made a slurring noise.

Ayla opened her mouth, smiling. "Oh, my gosh," she said.

The guy nodded, looking at his own cock appreciatively.

Now things were starting to stir around him. All of the dwarfs were moving, and getting out of their leprechaun clothes.

For a moment I found the whole thing incredibly funny. I'm sure you do, too. I gave a little laugh, but it just made me drool lightly onto my shirt.

Firsty leaned in to say something to Ayla, and her eyes got wide and she laughed. "I couldn't!" she exclaimed.

Then, without further ado, my dear wife Ayla opened her mouth, and took Firsty into it, all the way down, into her throat.

She swallowed the whole thing. To my horror, everyone around her started unzipping their pants and taking out their big cocks. The dwarfs, and the basketball players.

A sticky gurgling sound was coming from Ayla's throat, because she was so stuffed full of dwarf cock. He grasped her hair and pushed her all the way onto him. Her lips touched his abdomen, his light, reddish pubic curls. She lifted her head, and looked at him to smile. His cock was wet with her spit, and she sucked it up like she wanted to drink out of it, all the way to very tip of his big, fat dick.

Ayla turned to her left, where the next guy, who I'll just call Second, was waiting with an astonishingly large cock in his hand as well.

She and opened her mouth for this next cock, the very next one she saw close to her smiling face, and swallowing it with an eagerness that she had never exhibited for me.

He was standing on a bar chair, and so she didn't have to do anything except remain where she was, and take him in her mouth.

Firsty looked over at me, and grinned his devilish leprechaun grin. His cock was shiny with my wife's spit, I thought to myself. He was still holding it in his hand. He had plans for more.

I tried to lift a hand, but I was as frozen by the disbelief of what I was seeing as I was by the drugs they had probably – no, obviously – given me. I could also feel, inexplicably, that my own cock was hard as a rock.

Now my wife had two dwarf cocks in her hands, one in each. She smiled and opened her mouth for the third. This was the biggest dwarf, who did not seem as much like a leprechaun, and his cock was more normal-sized, but still very impressive. Still in my wife's mouth. She still had to open wide to take him in.

Darrell was breathing heavy in his chair, and the light smile on his lips revealed that he was enjoying the show.

To my ever-renewing horror and fascination, Ayla switched from cock to cock on the three dwarfs, long strings of sticky spit linking her open mouth to the cock she had just sucked. As she turned her head to take another man into her mouth, globs of spit hung in the air for a moment and then fell to her chest, clinging to her low-cut sweater, marking up with light stains.

The third dwarf went behind Ayla's chair, where one of the amused black gentlemen helped him onto a stool. The dwarf placed his hands on Ayla's neck and gave her a light massage as Firsty dove into her mouth again. He was rubbing, essentially, Firsty's cock through my wife's throat.

Good god, what a spectacle.

I became alarmed for a moment, worried that he might try to choke her or strangle her. I tried to twist around and get out of my stupor, but I could not, and the sounds I made caused a few of them to look over at me briefly with disdain. They laughed as they saw what I was trying to do.

“Don't worry about him,” Firsty assured my wife, who was more than happy to go back to what she was doing.

Instead of choking Ayla, the third dwarf tipped her head back. She submitted willingly, smiling like she was getting some kind of present and she was excited about it. He spread her mouth open with two fingers, and used his other hand to guide his cock in her mouth, and all the way down her throat. The way she was tipped, I could not even understand how she could breathe, but here it was: the bulge of the dwarf's huge cock moved along her throat as though she had swallowed a frantic animal. He moved back and forth, mercilessly face-fucking her. And Ayla just swallowed it all. His balls were slapping her in the forehead, and covering her nose when he rammed deep into her throat. It was an act of contortion I had never even seen in a porno.

I groaned, and one of the black men's eyes was diverted briefly to me, and he smiled.

“Whatsa matter, Stan?” he asked cheerfully. “Got a problem with your wife getting fucked in the mouth by a trio of dwarfs?”

His British accent made him sound even that much more insolent. I could do nothing more than blink and watch the third dwarf's cock unzipped his green, leprechaun pants at the same time. Ayla didn't move. She just sat there, watching with interest.

I rolled my head around, but whatever they had given me was definitely making it impossible to do much more than just sit there, looking stupidly at what my wife was doing.

Actually...okay. I was interested, too. I was interested in seeing the cock of a dwarf, okay? And I was also secretly hoping that when he took it out, and it was too small to be believed, everyone would laugh at him, and he would start crying and everyone would go home.

I was half-hoping this. The other half of me couldn't move, because I couldn't believe this was happening, and my wife was going to cheat on me with all of these dwarfs.

Who could?

But when he pulled his cock out, not only was it not small, it was huge. It wasn't just huge compared to the rest of his body. It was a huge cock.

Ayla opened her mouth, smiling. “Oh, my gosh,” she said.

The guy nodded, looking at his own cock appreciatively.

Now things were starting to stir around him. All of the dwarfs were moving, and getting out of their leprechaun clothes.

For a moment I found the whole thing incredibly funny.

I'm sure you do, too. I gave a little laugh, but it just made me drool lightly onto my shirt.

The painful reality of what I was seeing soon ate away at my blitheness, though, and I felt like crying, because, without further ado, my dear wife Ayla opened her mouth even more, and took Firsty into her mouth.

All the way down, into her throat.

She swallowed the whole thing. To my horror, everyone around her started taking out their big cocks. The dwarfs, and the basketball players.

A sticky gurgling sound was coming from Ayla's throat, because she was so stuffed full of dwarf cock. He grasped her hair and pushed her all the way onto him. Her lips touched his abdomen, his light, reddish pubic curls. She lifted her head, and looked at him to smile. His cock was wet with her spit, and she sucked it up like she wanted to drink out of it, all the way to very tip of his big, fat dick.

Ayla turned to her left, where the next guy, who I'll just call Second, was waiting with an astonishingly large cock in his hand as well.

She and opened her mouth for this next cock, the very next one she saw close to her smiling face, and swallowing it with an eagerness that she had never exhibited for me.

He was standing on a bar chair, and so she didn't have to do anything except remain where she was, and take him in her mouth.

Firsty looked over at me, and grinned his devilish leprechaun grin. His cock was shiny with my wife's spit, I thought to myself. He was still holding it in his hand. He had plans for more.

I tried to lift a hand, but I was as frozen by the disbelief of what I was seeing as I was by the drugs they had probably – no, obviously – given me. I could also feel, inexplicably, that my own cock was hard as a rock.

Now my wife had two dwarf cocks in her hands, one in each. She smiled and opened her mouth for the third. This was the biggest dwarf, who did not seem as much like a leprechaun, and his cock was more normal-sized, but still very impressive. Still in my wife's mouth. She still had to open wide to take him in.

Darrell was breathing heavy in his chair, and the light smile on his lips revealed that he was enjoying the show.

To my ever-renewing horror and fascination, Ayla switched from cock to cock on the three dwarfs, long strings of sticky spit linking her open mouth to the cock she had just sucked. As she turned her head to take another man into her mouth, globs of spit hung in the air for a moment and then fell to her chest, clinging to her low-cut sweater, marking up with light stains. "Whatsa matter, Stan?" he asked cheerfully. "Got a problem with your wife getting fucked in the mouth by a trio of dwarfs?"

His British accent made him sound even that much more insolent.

I could do nothing more than blink and watch the third dwarf's cock move inside Ayla's throat, while the other three waited with greedy, beady eyes for her mouth to get freed up, their hands on their cocks, not needing to much to keep them hard and dripping with precum.

I dipped my head down, and looked at my own crotch. My own cock was solid, and a growing stain of precum was spreading out on my beige Dockers.

I must have looked like such a pathetic joke to these guys. My heart was clawing at my chest in pain, but I could barely lift my head. I strained to do it, to pull my head up and look at what they were doing to Ayla.

I could hear the sounds of their cocks moving in and out of her mouth, down her throat. Chairs shifted, and I struggled to get my head up.

What had they given me? Some kind of tranquilizer? Whatever it was, it wasn't dulling the pain of seeing my wife with them.

When I was finally able to lift my head, I was astounded by the sight in front of me. Ayla's hot red mouth was wrapped around Firsty's cock again, and she was not just swallowing his cock, she was massaging it with her throat and her tongue. I strained to see better: was she...?

Yes, she was. She had her tongue out to rub along his hairy dwarf balls.

She didn't even look like my wife now – she looked like a character in a porno who resembled my wife. I wanted to look away again, to let my head fall and drift into an oblivion where I didn't have to see this. But I was also driven by a dark desire to see the dwarfs would do next.

And what of these “basket” players? These big, black men, who diabolically happened to be watching this whole thing?

They were getting ready. They had moved, circling now like vultures around my wife and the dwarfs.

Darrell took his jacket off, and then his shirt. He moved around the chair, where my wife was happily sucking dwarf cock after cock.

The darkest one, Terry? Moved behind her where the third dwarf had stood to fuck her throat, and began to knead her shoulder like a baker with dough. He pushed her head closer to where Firsty's cock was erect and waiting, again, for another plunge into her throat.

He grasped her jaw in his hand and turned her face up, just as the third dwarf had done. With his hand under her chin, and his fingers over her jaw, he squeezed her cheeks so that if she hadn't opened her mouth willingly, he would have opened it for her.

He was much larger than the dwarf, of course, so he was standing over her with his enormous cock hanging down and over her lips. She opened, and he simply dropped himself into her, straight down.

And Ayla? She opened her mouth to let his fat cock fill it. He slid into her waiting mouth, all the way, bending his knees to get all of his incredibly long cock down the hole. Down, down, down – it seemed like it went on forever.

The three dwarfs stood with their cocks in their hands, impressed by the girth and the length of the big man crouching over Ayla's face. She swallowed the whole, huge, black thing. It must have reached to the middle of her chest.

A shudder went through me as I watched my wife's lips make contact with the black, curls at the base of his dick.

Then, to my amazement, when he cradled her head in one large hand, probably as he would hold a basketball, and began to pump in and out of her head. Vertically, like he was plunging something. Up and down, the big snake of a cock went in and out of Ayla's yielding throat.

I was so obsessed with how Ayla was swallowing all of this cock, that I hadn't been paying attention to Darrell and the other man, who were moving around behind this scene. They were scheming, all of them.

The dwarfs, as though receiving instructions from Darrell telepathically, nodded at him and got down from the chairs. They unbuttoned Ayla's jeans and slid her out of them.

Next went her panties.

Firsty, apparently finding himself in an amused mood, picked them up from the floor and came over to me. With his demonic face scrunched up in disdain, he laughed and pushed them into my mouth.

I was too paralyzed to do anything but grunt, which made him laugh and turn around.

My wife's panties were soaked with her wet pussy juices. I could taste them in my mouth.

Now Terry had removed himself from Ayla's throat, and she was sitting on the chair with only her sweater on.

“C'mon now,” the second, nameless basket-man said. “Take it all off for us darling, and get up on a table so we can see more of you.”

To my horror, that is exactly what she did. She smiled and seductively removed her sweater, and tore away her bra. All the men looked admiringly at her breasts, and Ayla hopped up onto the table, onto all fours.

Darrell's eyes were fixed on Ayla's round, naked ass. The way she was propped on the table made her ass pop up. She kicked her feet playfully, like she was having great time.

I could not believe this was my wife, acting like such a porno-grade slut.

I moaned into the panties. My balls were getting bluer by the second.

My wife. Naked on a table in an Irish bar, with little men standing around her, their cocks swollen and ready to go, because she had just sucked them all down to their hairy balls. And three big, black basket players, with surly English accents and huge, ready black cocks next to them. All waiting to fuck my apparently all-too-willing wife.

I couldn't believe what I was seeing. My mind began to feel numb. I decided it must all be a dream. It had to be.

"Turn the table a bit, Terry, so he can see both sides," Darrell said, and the anxious dwarfs laughed. Their cocks were throbbing now and I could see they were nearly bursting. They wanted to get a piece of my wife.

Terry moved the table easily with one hand, and now I had a perfect profile view of Ayla. The mirror on the wall reflected against the glass and the entire scene was spread out before me with great coverage. I could see every hole, and I would have a perfect view of them fucking her.

I could see, for example, that Ayla's pussy was wet and glistening in the dim light. Her ass was pale against the dark skin of the second black man.

Terry wasted no time. He moved his cock to the opening of her pussy, and without much hesitation, pushed himself inside. He slid in to her very wet slit with a sticky sound, and I watched as his cock became buried, all the way, in the soft flesh of my wife's pussy, black against white and pale pink. Ayla howled and bucked up against him.

He began to pump his cock into her. As he did, the second and so far unserved basket-man brought the tip of his cock to her mouth. She put her lips on the tip of it as though giving him a nice kiss, and licked at the little dome, smiling and teasing. He lifted it up to expose his big, hairy balls, and she worked her way down to them slowly, until she sucked them into her mouth like oysters.

I could hear her beginning to moan into the flesh in her mouth.

And why not? The big, black cock filled her up and stretched her open in a way I never could. So did the damn dwarfs.

And all around them, the dwarfs with their mocking faces, smiling and stroking their oversized cocks.

It was too much. I wept into my wife's panties.

Without me seeing it, the dwarfs had all changed positions again – if they wanted me not think of them as leprechauns, they were doing a terrible job of behaving like humans, sneaking around like that. And now one of them had wormed his way beneath Ayla's body on the table, so that his cock was pointed up at her mouth.

Darrell had moved to where he was standing behind Terry, waiting. He pushed Terry away and went for her pussy. All the while she kept the balls of the second basket-man in her mouth, moaning into them.

But Firsty tapped on her, and she looked down to see his cock there. She bent over and began to suck on it. She moved with ease and apparent delight between the big black cock and Firsty's cock, suck-suck, suck-suck, swallowing each of the big dicks whole.

In the meantime, Darrell had pushed himself inside of her, and thrust hard, making her howl into the cock she was devouring.

I stared at my wife's pussy wrapped around the big, black cock that emerged and buried itself inside of her.

I was sweating. My cock was painfully hard.

I was humiliated completely now, and there was still much to come.

The basket-man went to the back of her, and he was quickly replaced by Second-leprechaun, who eagerly thrust his cock into her mouth and began to ram himself into her face. Basket-man went to where her swollen pussy was throbbing her juices onto her thighs.

Darrell moved away.

He slammed into her, but Ayla made no noise, because her throat was already stuffed with Firsty's big cock.

The thrusts of the man fucking her pushed her forward, so that her forehead was slamming against Firsty's chest, and he had no choice but to grab onto her or he would get knocked off of the table.

He grasped her head, and started to fuck back, as if he wanted to counteract the force.

And there she was. My wife. Being used as a fuck-toy between a big black man a fierce little leprechaun.

Ayla's open mouth and her stretching pussy were emitting sticky, wet noises, and each man was slapping against her skin.

Meanwhile, she just moaned in pleasure.

Firsty was practically climbing on her head, and thrusting his cock in and out of her mouth. I could see he was about to come, because he began to fuck her more furiously, like a little animal on her face. He looked over at me, and smiled his crazy smile.

He pulled out in time for cum to splatter out of his enormous cock and onto Ayla's face. She turned her head and caught every drop, as if she were taking a shower and trying to wash her face. She opened her mouth to catch beads of his seed on her tongue.

"I'm gonna put a big load of cum in your pussy now, baby," Darrell grunted. His big cock seemed to get even larger as he hammered himself into her, and with a shout, he arched his back and buried his cock deep inside of her. I watched, my eyes on her pussy, wrapped around his cock. White cum splashed from the sides of her, dripping onto her thighs.

When he pulled his cock out, I had an excellent view of her quivering, swollen flesh, dripping with white cream.

I realized, through the haze of the drug I had been given, that my humiliation was incomplete. There were still two horny dwarfs and two hungry black men waiting to fill my wife up or to cover her in their semen. But it would not be as simple as it had just been. Terry wormed his way underneath her on the table, and lifted her easily like a doll so that she was straddling him.

I watched helplessly as Terry's cock disappeared into Ayla's pussy, and she rode on it like a cowgirl. She squealed in delight. "Oh, you're so big!" she cried out. She really enjoyed herself for a few moments, but the third man pushed her onto to Terry's stomach.

At this point, Second the dwarf was able to stand over the big man and easily access my wife's mouth.

My eyes widened as I took in the whole scene, and saw the third black man moving his enormous cock toward Ayla's ass.

He wouldn't.

Ayla had already filled her mouth with the cock of Second-leprechaun, so when she let out a long, agonizing yell as the black man entered her most intimate hole, it was muffled. I tried to lift and arm, to do anything to help her. But I could only make sluggish moans into the ball of fabric in my mouth.

As the big black cock in her ass began to rock her gently over Terry, the whimpering changed to moaning, and it was clear that my wife was not as agonized as she originally sounded. She liked all the cock inside of her.

The last dwarf was standing on a chair, waiting his turn unhappily and hungrily. He had such a view; I was almost jealous. A view of every cock in my wife, up close. He could see her stretched pussy, her gaping asshole, her lips around the cock of his friend.

And while he had to wait, he was probably thinking about how he had his choice of any hole.

Ayla's head bobbed forward as the third man rammed into her harder and harder.

In her ass, I thought. This man is fucking my wife in the ass.

Never mind that she is also riding another big stud, and her mouth is full of the cock of a leprechaun.

"Oh yeah," he said aloud, as if reading my thoughts and mocking me for them.

He was just working himself up to his orgasm. He started to fuck her faster and faster, and Ayla began to howl into Second's cock.

It seemed like she was getting off on this. Was she? She was starting to sweat, and she had her eyes half-closed, purring like a cat.

When the man groaned with his orgasm, he dove in deep and filled my wife's ass. At that same time I could hear Terry whispering things into her ear. He clutched her hips and jiggled her over his own cock, thrusting himself deep inside, where he could fill her up with all of his cum.

My eyes began to water. Now she was filled completely, almost in every hole, with the frothy white cum of these big black studs. She was overflowing.

Second, who had probably enjoyed his close view of her stretching holes, yelled loudly and grasped her head. He did not pull out to cover her in cum, but instead thrust his cock in deep and told her to swallow it up.

Ayla took it all. As deep as his cock was, there was really no need to swallow. It was probably just going right into her belly, like an infusion. The three men withdrew, and my wife was left on all four, dripping cum from every stretched hole.

But the last dwarf was still standing over her, on a chair, his eyes looking down greedily, deciding which way to soil my wife. He would have the final insult. He looked at me, and laughed.

My cock felt like it was going to rip open. There was now a splotch on my pants so large it almost looked like I had pissed myself.

Unsurprisingly, he surveyed his choices, and went for her ass.

Because of his size, he could stand on the table edge, and fuck my wife's ass standing up.

He placed his hands on her ass-cheeks first, and pulled them apart. He was providing me with a nice view of her gaping hole, and the white cum that was bubbling up out of it like a geyser.

“Mmmm,” Ayla murmured.

“Such a dirty, full ass,” he said.

He grunted as he entered her, and she moaned in pleasure. He was giving it to her hard, right off the bat. He was pounding his cum into my wife as fast and as hard as he could.

Just as he seemed like he might come, and this humiliation might end, he slowed. He stood, panting over my wife with his cock all the way to the base in her hot, stretched ass.

He pulled out slowly, and Ayla howled as he did. Then he went back in. He pulled out, and let me have a good long look at her, before he slowly pushed himself back in. Stretching her out, stretching out the humiliation. And there it was. My wife's gaping asshole, cum gushing from it. Stretched out, it was perhaps two inches in diameter. I stared at it. I closed my eyes, but then I opened them quickly. The cum just kept oozing out of her, before the last dwarf pushed his oversized member in and stretched her out even further.

Beneath her ass, her pussy was also swollen. Her juices had smeared all over her thighs, and cum from two men was also gushing from her. Her mouth was hanging open, and her face was covered in cum.

As I looked at all of this, her fingers moved into the scene, and pried apart the lips of her cunt so that I could see her finger working on her clit.

Ayla's fingers started working fast now, stroking herself as she moaned and complained about the giant size of the dwarf's cock. He thrust harder and harder, and finally scrunched up his face as his cum burst inside of Ayla's ass.

She came at the same time, and howled as she did. Juices squirted from her sopping pussy and dripped all over hand. The last dwarf pulled his cock out to shake the last dribbles of cum all over her, and I had a perfect view of her cum-filled ass throbbing and contracting. The creamy white cum was gushing from it.

I breathed heavily, and I don't know if I was relieved or disappointed. My cock was throbbing painfully, and I could do nothing to relieve myself.

At least my humiliation was over.

Ayla turned and sat on the table, swinging her legs contentedly, as if she had just played a very lovely set of tennis and won. She pushed her hair out of her face and looked at me.

“And what about him?” she said.

They all looked at me, and Firsty – that first awful, terrible dwarf, said something about me needing just a little more of a cocktail and I would be fine.

My memory is hazy here, but I feel certain that someone produced, from seemingly nowhere, a turkey baster. Ayla laughed and giggled, as if it was great fun, and turned to lean of the table so that one of the big, basket-men (I forget who) could insert it into her ass, and suck out the cum from the two men who had fucked her.

I closed my eyes.

The next hing I saw, when I opened them, was Firsty, holding a martini glass, and stirring something into the tan-colored, frothy drink they had made for me in my wife's ass. He pulled the panties from my mouth, and Ayla stepped into them, watching him with a bit of an amused sneer on her face.

He handed the drink to Ayla after he stirred it, who smiled at me as she came and sat on my lap. She touched my cock and laughed, and then she tipped my head back and pushed my mouth open, to pour the cocktail into my throat.

I tasted the sour cum, and watched Ayla smile and laugh, as the lights went dimmer and dimmer...

When I woke up, I had a splitting headache, and it was two pm the next day. Ayla was sitting at the table in the room, drinking a Guinness, and typing on her computer.

She smiled at me. She looked as innocent as a daisy, as she always had.

“You really tied one on,” she said. She almost had a disapproving tone to her voice.

As if nothing had happened.

Had I imagined it all?

She shut her computer, and went into the bathroom. “Come on!” she said.

“We only have one day left!”

I sat up on the bed.

I was convinced her quite a while that it was all my imagination. I even managed to tell myself that I tasted cum in my mouth because I secretly wanted my fantasy to be real.

But when I was in the shower, brushing my teeth to save time, I am certain – yes 100% certain...aren't I? Am I? - that I saw a navy blue thread in the toothpaste, formed into a dwarfish smile for just a moment, before it slid down the drain.

Blue, like Ayla's panties.

A LONG, HARD WINTER: CUCKOLDED AT THE ANTARCTIC RESEARCH STATION

There's always a period of time when you arrive at the station that you think everything is going to be just jolly. Especially the new station – it is a marvel of interior design, with wood that gives off a pleasant scent; bright, carefully chosen colors on modern furniture; and enormous windows that, when you first arrive, display a never-ending sunset. There is fresh fruit available, and people are new to each other and say hello in friendly tones. You think to yourself: this won't be as bad as they made it out to be in training. It will actually be a lot of fun. I will enjoy being here. I will do some reading in my spare time. I'll use the time to reflect on life quietly, in the peaceful comfort of this silent outpost at the end of the world.

I knew better than all that as we hauled our enormous bags through the entry portal and dragged them through the building to our new quarters. I knew better because it was my second tour at the pole, and I had seen the fruit get eaten, the smiles fade, and every trace of the sun disappear, and a long winter of bored madness set in.

However, this time, I was still filled with optimism. After all, Heidi was here, and that was going to make everything much more tolerable. Much, much more tolerable.

She loved the room, even though it had bunk beds. She thought that was “fun” and “charming.” She kissed me playfully on the cheek. “Don't worry,” she said. “I think we can both fit in the bottom bunk sometimes...or maybe the top?” She climbed up the ladder and stretched out on the bunk, and I admired her body even through the bulky clothing we were wearing. Heidi was a full-figured girl, but perfectly proportioned. Unlike a lot of women who might have complained about feeling too heavy, Heidi knew what she had. She liked being what she told me the young, black guys at her university referred to as “thick.” Not fat – just thick. She had great breasts, which overflowed from her lacy bras...

There would be no lacy bras here, I reminded myself.

Still, the prospect of spending three months here with Heidi was far better than spending three months with nothing but inaccessible women and ice-hardened workers.

There was an unsettling feeling brewing inside of me, though: there didn't really seem to be any other female crew around. I looked at my curvy wife, and her very lovely face, and started to have some feelings of both insecurity and jealousy.

Well, to be fair, I also felt pride: I knew every man at the station had watched her arrival with interest. Not only was she apparently the only woman around, she was actually attractive in real life. (After a few months at the pole, almost anyone began to look attractive).

But what would happen to my pride as the months wore on, and we were the only ones here? What if Heidi was the only woman? Men became strange as time wore on. She would get nothing but attention, with every man secretly hoping to attract her to him somehow, to find a way to have a taste of my wife...

I started to have some of the same doubts I had had during training, when a lot of the men teaching survival skills and procedures had been pretty “hands-on” with Heidi.

Heidi herself seemed oblivious to all of the attention.

“Yoo-hoo?” I heard her say. Now she was snapping her fingers. She was no longer on the bed, but standing in front of me. “What are you so deep in thought about?”

I blinked away my preoccupations. “What...what were talking about?”

Heidi rolled her eyes. “Oh my god,” she said. “I was asking you if you wanted to try out the bunk bed.”

“I...well, yes...” I stammered.

But Heidi had already skipped out of the room, swinging her hips seductively. “Too late,” she said coyly.

I smiled at her playful joke, but I was disappointed. I watched her strolling along, and she looking back at me to wink.

Then she smashed right into someone coming around the corner.

My wife is charmingly clumsy, so it was only a matter of time before this happened.

The person she collided with was so big, he knocked her to the floor.

I watched her fall and held my hands out, scampering toward her. “Oh my god, Heidi,” I said.

But the man who had run into her was already coming to her rescue. He was clearly not a rookie – there was a worn, unwashed smell to his clothing. He was stubbornly wearing non-regulation things, like a short-sleeved t-shirt that showed off his thick, toned arms. He also smelled a little like jet fuel.

“Whoa!” he said, in a gravelly voice. “Didn't see you.” He set the plastic box he was carrying down, and placed a big hand on Heidi's slender arm. My eyes widened. Was I imagining things, or did he linger there, rubbing her arm as he looked at her face tenderly?

I approached and stood awkwardly next to the two of them. “Are you okay?” I said.

Heidi didn't look away from the stranger who was stroking her arm. She placed her fingers on her forehead and rubbed it lightly. Her eyes were taking in the man's rugged good looks: stubble on his face, piercing blue eyes, strong jaw.

He looked like an action hero on a break.

“You okay?” he said, and the words left his mouth like the purr of a big cat. Was I imagining things or was my wife melting like butter?

Heidi batted her eyes and smiled, and I could have been on Mars for all she knew. I was still standing next to the two of them, but Heidi didn't even look up at me.

“I'll be fine,” she said.

He helped her to her feet. It seemed to me like he was making a big show of practically lifting her off the floor. She steadied herself on his enormous arms.

“Jim,” he said simply. He nodded to her, and then gave me a look.

“I'm -”

“You're Heidi Weiss,” he said, and I bristled at the mention of Heidi's maiden name. I tried to stamp down the feeling: of course she would use her maiden name here. She always used it for research.

“You're the only woman here this winter,” he said. And then he winked at me. “Everyone knows who you are.”

Heidi giggled.

“Sorry to have knocked you over first thing,” he said. “Usually I flirt a little first.”

Was this guy for real?

I felt a little tornado of fury swirling in my chest, but it did nothing more than get my cheeks hot. Jim put the very heavy box he had been carrying under one arm and sauntered away. “See ya' around.”

Heidi watched him go.

“He seems nice,” she said.

When I didn't answer she turned to me and punched me playfully on the shoulder. “Oh, come on,” she teased. She knew exactly what I was thinking, and it only made me madder.

“Let's get to the canteen,” I grumbled.

Don't act like an asshole, I told myself. It will only make things worse.

But I was still annoyed by what had just happened when we walked into the canteen.

If you wanted to make instant friends at the station, it was a great idea to stuff as much fresh fruit and veggies into your bags as you could manage, and then make sure to give something to everyone. Heidi had also insisted on bringing fresh herbs, because she said people would appreciate adding them to the prepared meals that started out just fine and then slowly turned to torture by blandness as the days wore on.

She took two apples she had brought out of her pockets as she sat down next to the rough-looking men at the table. They had the mildly psychotic look of people who had been there for a while. “Mind if I sit here?” she said.

I could see that the men initially were having a hard time processing that a woman was sitting at their table. She probably smelled heavenly to them – not only because she was a girl, but because she had come from outside, and was actually clean now. With four minutes of shower time a week, people started to get pretty rank after a while.

They began by staring at her, and then it was as if their brains, totally inactive for the past long months in the part of the mind dedicated to chasing girls, suddenly came to life. It was like watching a powerless robot get a new battery. They sat up straight. Their pupils dilated. They smiled. But these men did not act like the geeks who were here for research, stuttering and fumbling with their forks. They were the kind of men who could tap into a wealth of charm, and power over women and other men, and years of confidence that had built up inside of them with all of their easy experiences seducing women. They were manly men, and they were not afraid of a woman sitting next to them.

They smelled an opportunity.

I looked at Heidi's bare fingers, and another sliver of jealousy and suspicion – the exact quality of which was unknown to me – pierced my chest.

She had left her wedding ring behind, tucked into a velvet pouch in the safe we had left with relatives for the duration of our stay here. I knew, when I saw her taking it off, that it was because when her fingers got even slightly cold, the ring slipped off. She had lost it several times in the snow, or around the house, where she had hunted for it for several days before finding the dark corner it had rolled to.

It made sense not to take it with her, and I knew that as I had watched her remove it from her finger. But there had been something symbolic about her doing that, and it had bothered me.

As usual, even though I knew better, I had been unable to keep my mouth shut. At times like these, it was as if my mouth was controlled by some other person.

“What, no wedding ring?” I had blurted, trying to make it sound like I was only joking around – but inside I could feel the knife of my own insecurity twisting slowly.

I had expected her to react differently – to explain her reasoning in a calm voice, the voice that she used for things that she simply did, and which had only cold rationality behind them. This was how she did things like removing her wedding ring so it wouldn't get lost in the cold. She didn't get caught up in any kind of sentimentality, or sensitivity for my feelings: it was practical and that was that. I had been braced for her even, calm voice, with just the slightest hit of admonishment in it – it made me feel so ridiculous when I said things like this. Especially because I knew the answer already, and I just couldn't control myself, or stop myself from saying stupid things, taking the symbolic nature of the things she did too far.

But to my surprise, instead of her usual rational reaction – and the one I expected - she had gotten a little bit flustered. “Oh...oh that...well, you know, I wouldn't want to lose it, so I can't wear it...” She stumbled around a lot, looking for the right words. She acted like she was trying to cover something up.

Or had that been my imagination?

I had looked at her, tucking the ring away, almost dropping it, straining to find an answer to my question, and I had let my imagination run wild. She was taking it off so that no one would know she was married – she knew there would be all kinds of virile, young men around, on the Coast Guard ships coping up the ice, working on the hydraulic lifts on the station, repairing the generators...men who were so different from me, her bookish, nerdy husband.

Then I snapped back to reality.

“Why don't you just wear it on a chain on your neck?” I had suggested.

She had stood there, with the velvet pouch in one hand, and the ring pressed between her fingers in the other, blinking. Her face wore the kind of expression that a person wears when they are about to do something they really wanted to do, and another person had foiled their plans without knowing it.

Or had I been imagining things?

She had hesitated, and her mouth made a few shapes before she finally allowed it to form the word okay, but to me it seemed like she did so begrudgingly.

She had found an old gold chain, and slipped it through the ring.

“It's really heavy,” she had said. She let it drop against her chest with a soft thunk.

Later in the evening she had complained that it was always falling forward when she leaned forward and hitting her when she stood up again.

She had tucked it into her shirt.

But somehow, before we had left on the plane, she had removed the chain without telling me, and tucked it away in the velvet pouch.

Now, I knew she didn't have a wedding ring anywhere on her person, but I was too chickenshit to say anything to her. I would look too desperate, too overprotective. What was a ring, anyway, besides a barbaric, antiquated symbol of ownership/

But now, as I looked at her bare finger, and the big, burly man next to her who was reaching out for the apple she held in her ringless hand, I wished she still had her ring.

I also wished she was not calling herself Heidi Weiss.

She was Heidi Simpson. My wife.

My hot wife, who had no wedding ring on, and who was the only woman on an Antarctic research rig that this particular season was full of roughneck workers, there to ensure that the new station and all the repairs to the adjoining old pods did not come apart in the long winter.

Everyone in the room seemed to be acting like I wasn't there. There was nowhere for me to sit, except across from the threesome – Heidi had sat down in between the two men.

If I did sit there, I would look like man trying to chaperone his wife.

I stood there looking like an idiot, unsure of what to do.

"I'm Heidi," Heidi said, as the man palmed the apple seductively in his hand, letting his fingers brush against her palm as he removed it.

I waited for the rest of the sentence: "And this is my husband Sam."

But she didn't say it. At least not before the man smiled at her, his eyes wandering all over her body – I could see he was trying to guess what might be hidden beneath the bulky clothing – and said:

"I know who you are."

My stomach flopped.

The man to her right took the apple in her other hand, and rubbed it on his shirt. "I'm Rick," he said. "That's Doug. Don't mind him. He doesn't have manners." He was dark-skinned, with a mop of black hair on his head. His thick arms pressed tightly on his sleeves as well.

He bit into the apple.

"Mmmm. Thanks for that."

I could feel my stomach turning somersaults, some of which were mysteriously traveling to my balls, and I could also feel my cheeks flushing. I hated guys like this. They were everything I wasn't, and they had tormented me all through high school. In college I had been blissfully segregated from them, and after marrying Heidi and surrounding myself with my research and my job, I had begun to feel like they were out of my life forever.

On my last trip to the pole, they had been here, of course, but we had all just walked around each other, like two kind of animal in the same cage. With Heidi here, I could see they were going to be back in my sphere again, and I felt emasculated just standing next to them.

My wife certainly wasn't doing anything to console me.

I pointed behind me. "I think I forgot my..thing for the..."

Heidi wasn't listening. I backed away, motioning and mumbling like an idiot. I had to get out of there before anyone noticed how awkward I was being.

But just as I thought I had made an escape and salvaged my dignity, Doug turned around and looked at me.

"Hey, thanks, guy," he said, and he held up the apple.

But his expression was not one of friendly thanks. It was more like amusement.

I'm really enjoying your wife's fruit, his expression said.
I tried to look cool as I waved and said, idiotically: “Yeah. Yep.” And backed into the hallway.

I retreated to the room and began to unpack. I threw things childishly onto the bed.

I was humiliated already, and there were still months and months of this.
What was Heidi doing?

But there was something else going on inside of me.

My mind wandered, and before I knew it was sitting on the bed, daydreaming about Heidi and the support staff, Heidi and the warehouse men. Heidi moaning in their beds, saying oh yes, oh yes, and telling them how much she liked being fucked by a real man. Grasping their thick biceps in one hand, and their thick cocks in the other.

I could almost actually hear her voice as she howled in pleasure.

“Your cock is so big,” she would tell them.

My cock in real life – a slightly less-than average-sized cock – was starting to get hard.

I pictured Heidi entering the kitchen, enjoying her secret affair with each of the muscled men we had met. She would put her hand on their members as she passed, feeling the huge, hardening cock on her palm, smiling in satisfaction as she ate her breakfast ration and thought about how she would eat that thick cock later.

I shook my head. Only two days in and I was starting to lose it already.

Heidi appeared in the doorway, calling out a cheerful goodbye to someone down the hall.

“Spacing out?” she said, and it took me a moment to realize she was talking to me.

I was incredibly horny.

She walked past me and I reached out to touch her thigh. She smiled to appease me, the way she often did – but also to shut me down. She wasn't interested.

“Nice new friends you're making,” I said. I wasn't sure what my tone meant. I was trying to make a joke, trying to goad her into my fantasy. But I also sounded pouty.

She smiled, as if she didn't hear that in my voice. But when she spoke she sounded annoyed. “Yeah. They seem nice.” she unfolded a sweater.

I touched her knee again, and she smiled, but it was tense and less patient than the smile before.

“I’m going to go set up my station,” she said tensely.

“Oh,” I said quickly, and without thinking. “Is one of your new friends going to help you out with that?”

She looked down at me, and now her expression was different than any other I had seen before. It looked almost mean, before it dissolved into her playful smile. She patted me on the head, as if we were both just making all kinds of jokes. “Yes!” she said. “All three of those big, handsome men are going to help lil’ old me set up my station, because I just don’t know what I would do without them.”

she was imitating the accent of a Southern belle from a B-grade movie, and she was exaggerating everything she said, and she was smiling like this was some fun joke between us, but part of her tone was serious.

Wasn’t it?

I laughed.

“Okay, okay,” I said, by way of admitting that I sounded like silly, jealous husband.

But I was only acting that part, because I didn’t think I was so silly.

I wasn’t sure she was entirely joking.

And she was the only woman in this station, and those men were looking at her like she was the last piece of fruit on the planet.

She trounced out of the room, waving her fingers at me as she did.

“Toodaloo!” she called.

Jokes, but not jokes.

I closed my eyes, wondering what I had gotten myself into.

I had trouble concentrating on work in the field the next day. I felt sure I was starting to lose it. I tried to reason with myself: I was probably overworked; the dry climate was making my brain dry up; the cabin fever had already set in and I was going insane.

There was more to it than that, though, because if I didn’t try to steer my thoughts in one direction or another, I found myself fantasizing about the very thing I was telling myself I was worried about my wife doing.

I went through motions of taking measurements mechanically and without thinking about it much, while in my mind I played out scenes between my wife and the warehouse crew. They would be at the station together, alone, for much of the day. Heidi would stretch out on the couch, holding a book but without really reading it. Jim would walk through the room and she would admire his muscles over the top of her novel. She would say something to him as he walked back through the room, and he would stop, sit on the edge of the couch, and look at her long legs while he sipped a coffee.

In my fantasy, everyone was wearing summer clothes, and not the baggy, unwashed gear they actually wore.

I thought with a perverse but intense pleasure of Heidi sliding her hand underneath Jim's shirt, which had to be rank with the scent of his body odor, while she stood close to his chiseled chest and inhaled his scent. Her fingers would savor the feel of his firm muscles, and she would close her eyes and wish she had a man like that for her own – a man whose chest was firm and strong, thick and taut, and not flabby with middle age...

One thing would lead to another, and soon they would be in his bedroom. Perhaps he would offer her a book to read, and she would follow him all too willingly, knowing he wanted to show her more than just his book. He would take her hand and guide it to the place between his legs where his cock was hard beneath his pants, and she would raise her eyebrows in a pleased surprise.

"Fuck!" I said, loudly enough that Nigel looked over at me with a concerned expression.

I had been so caught up in my reverie that I had mislabeled a measurement and had them all mixed up now. I needed to start over.

I shook my head dismissively at Nigel, and went back to work, trying very hard to banish the images I had created in my mind of Jim and Heidi. If I kept screwing up I would never get back before the evening was over.

Who was I kidding? I reasoned with myself. It was too dry, too dark, too annoying for anyone to want to do anything like that. Heidi was probably taking advantage of her day off to read in her room and sleep – she loved that. The warehouse guys almost certainly had a ton of work.

And my wife was not going to jump on some big, strong, younger man just because she was bored.

My thoughts wandered back to Heidi's face, a few nights before, her eyes following Jim and Doug as they walked away from the canteen. Her eyes so obviously at the level of their asses, her mouth turned up in the slightest smile. Making no effort, really, to cover up what she was doing.

The cold pain of knowing that everyone at the table was watching her too flooded my veins again. Everyone looking from me to Heidi, wondering what such a glorious creature with such glossy blonde hair and full, red lips was doing with a wimp like me. And then everyone looking where she was looking, and thinking to themselves: Oh. So that's what it is.

I refocused my attention on what I was doing, so I wouldn't screw up again. But the thoughts kept coming back. The way she smiled and started making jokes whenever they came in to the station. Jim's huge, dirty hand on her breasts...

I realized that I had lost track of what I was doing again.

By wrenching as much concentration as I possibly could, I managed to stay focused and get some of my readings by 10pm. Nigel was glowering in the corner, because he had to accompany me back to the living pods, and I had stalled him for over an hour saying I was nearly done. I abandoned the final measurements, which meant I would probably have to scrap everything I had done that day, but Nigel seemed ready to eat me for dinner if I didn't go.

I had to get control of myself, I thought, as we trudged to the vehicle.

I was dog-tired, but I took longer than Nigel in the locker rooms next to the rec room and gym, where we removed our outerwear. Nigel was long gone in a record five minutes, and he didn't say so much as goodbye.

I was distracted, and I'm not sure how long I was in the changing room, peeling off my many layers, unzipping and unclasping and trying to tidy my things, when I heard my wife's voice.

At first, I was sure I was hallucinating.

Then there it was again: her high, lilting laugh.

And a deep rumble. A male voice.

I froze.

What was she doing up so late?

The voices seemed to be coming from the gym.

I looked around, unsure of what to do.

I'm not sure where I got the idea: He

Heidi, after all, had probably just been unable to sleep, or waiting up for me, and had gone to work out. It wasn't an unusual activity for her, she had occasional bouts of insomnia, and in this environment it was easy to lose your sense of time.

She had probably run into to someone there, and they were just talking, Like people do. What were they supposed to do? Ignore each other? I fought with jealousy, anger, and curiosity, until...curiosity won. I stood up and tucked myself away in a shower stall.

But the voices traveled past the changing room, and to the rec room.

I stood in the shower stall and stared up at the ceiling.

What was I doing?

My rational mind told me to put away my gear, go to the rec room, act surprised to see my wife, have a nice chat, and go to bed.

But the animal part of my brain made me do something else: I crept toward the rec room. I slipped behind a small row of lockers that had been intended for the gym but, in a not-very-reassuring engineering fiasco, could not be maneuvered through the door. They were made of the diamond-shaped grating that you often see in automotive stores. A person could remain very hidden behind them, but have a great view of what was in front of him.

I was relieved to see that Heidi was still clothed. At that moment I felt foolish for all of my fantasies and suspicions. I still wanted to entertain them, though. I moved closer quietly, half-relieved and half-disappointed, hoping both that this is all there was to see, and that I would get a chance to see something else.

Heidi was wearing a very low-cut, tight-fitting shirt. It was not her usual attire, and it was pretty obvious she had chosen it deliberately: it was not warm, and Heidi was always complaining of the cold.

Also – were my eyes deceiving me, or was she wearing red lipstick?

What was she doing wearing red lipstick at 10pm in the research station at the end of the world?

She looked fantastic. I could imagine what she looked like to the men who had been trapped here already for months.

It looked like whatever they were doing, they were planning to stay in the rec room.

I moved closer, so I could hear what they were saying. Doug had something on the table, and he was showing it to her, pointing at parts of it as she nodded with interest.

Whatever he was showing her, it was almost a forgone conclusion that Heidi was not actually interested in it. But she was doing the same thing she had once done with me – faking her enthusiasm. She twirled a piece of her hair. She had let it out her usual bun and combed it carefully until it shone.

She had purchased a no-water shampoo to bring with her. It appeared she was making good use of it.

“You want a beer?” Jim asked in the general direction of Doug and Heidi, heading to the kitchenette to get one before either could even answer.

“What?” Heidi exclaimed. “You guys have beer?”

Doug smiled. “There's a lot of perks to working the warehouse,” he said.

Heidi didn't even like beer, but she bit her lip as though he had promised her a new car. “That sounds heavenly,” she breathed.

Jim appeared, along with the sound of caps being removed from bottles.

He did it with his bare hands.

“I thought you weren't supposed to drink while on duty,” Heidi said. But she said it like she was sharing some kind of secret with them. She said it like it was naughty. Like someone had just shown her a pair of fuzzy handcuffs.

I wanted, now, desperately, to burst out from behind the locker and break the whole thing up. Heidi was taking things too far in real life. I had imagined her doing these things, but those were fantasies. This was different.

But I really couldn't do that, could I?

I wouldn't do that.

I was too much of a wimp.

There was nothing I could do.

I was forced to watch whatever it was that Heidi was going to do play out.

I bit my lip and prayed silently that Heidi would turn back into her reserved, chaste self. But it was almost as if I were watching another woman as I watched her. The way she moved, her flirtatiousness, her sexy outfit.

She took the beer and brought it to her mouth, but she rubbed it lightly on her lips, while looking straight at Doug, before taking a sip.

But the way she took this sip: she sucked on the bottle.

Not a come-hither look. Not a look of interest.

A fuck-me look.

Inside of me, something crumpled a little. Not only because my wife was cheating on me right before my very eyes, but because she had never given me a look like that before.

My mind started reeling, and I began to feel sick and infuriated at the same time. Why in the hell had Heidi married me, if she had wanted a man like this?

Was it precisely because of that? Because she wanted a nice stable husband to support her, while she had her fun with “real” men?

The realization that Heidi might have been cuckolding me all along began to creep into my mind. Maybe this was all our marriage had ever been to her: a means to an end, and the end was her desires. Her desires for men with huge muscles who worked in oil and dirt and could pick her up with one hand.

I wanted to smash something, to yell, to scream, but there was no way I could do that.

I watched instead.

Now Jim edged a little closer to her. He reached out and touched her left hand.

She didn't pull back, or try to stop him.

“How come you don't have your ring on?” he said.

Heidi shrugged. “I don't really like it so much, to be honest,” she said.

Her voice was seductive. It sounded like an audio clip from a porno. It was the same tone that a girl with her hand on her hip might say, I just don't know what is the matter with my pipes.

The pain of what she had said felt like a knife in my gut. She had squealed with delight when I gave her that ring.

Had she been lying? Was she lying now?

The two of them were circling in like vultures, in ever-closer circles. Jim and Doug, Doug and Jim. Doug was moving closer, without sitting down, but his eyes were glued to the scene unfolding in front of him.

“Why's that?” Jim drawled, still talking about the ring. “Seems nice to me.”

He was stroking her finger lightly.

Doug sat down behind her. Very, very close behind her.

It was the sort of distance that any one knew was closer than a normal person would sit on a couch. So when Heidi didn't react, it was an invitation. An invitation to do whatever it was he was planning to do by sitting so close.

She shrugged again to answer Jim's question.

Jim took the bottle from her, took a sip of the beer, and set it on the table. At almost the same time, Doug reached out and pushed her hair away from her neck.

Heidi did not miss a beat. That is to say, she didn't blush, she didn't look behind her, she didn't act slightly embarrassed that she was letting two men touch her at the same time while she talked about why she wasn't wearing a wedding ring.

She didn't look conflicted at all. She just smiled.

Doug moved in first, kissing her on the neck.

My mouth fell open in surprise, and I was frozen in place. I couldn't even breathe. The pain that was twisting around inside of me made my eyes water, but I was also getting hard beneath my six layers of ill-fitting clothing.

It was my wife's reaction that was doing this to me: she let her mouth open in a wide smile, and she fluttered her eyes a little.

She didn't even seem surprised in the least.

Jim grinned. He could see that she was not going to protest whatever the plan was, and he lifted a finger to her chin.

“What are you up for, pretty lady?”

The expression on my wife's face was utterly alien to me. She sort of twisted her jaw, in a challenging kind of way, and smiled.

Who was this woman?

“Whatever you're up for,” she said. “I do it all.”

My veins were bursting out of my head, but they were also bursting out of the skin on my cock. Heidi certainly did not do it all. Heidi didn't do a lot of things, and she did some things only if really, really drunk. One thing Heidi never did was give me the look she was giving Jim: a look like she wanted him to think of the dirtiest possible thing he could do, a look that said she wouldn't even bat an eye when he tried it.

And it was also turning me on, as much as it was bewildering and hurting me.

Because while Heidi did not do it all for me (and that stung to the core), I really wanted to see what she would do.

Her red-lipsticked mouth was talking so dirty I thought my ears would burn off, and now I wanted to see what would happen next.

I mean, I didn't.

But I guess I had no choice.

Jim stood up. He took his shirt off first, and Heidi watched him while Doug stroked her neck, kissing her shoulder, his hands wandering all over her body. He found the bottom of her shirt and began to slide it up.

She held up her hands so that he could get it over her head. She was definitely not resisting at this point.

Was she actually doing this?

I closed and opened my eyes several times trying to make sure I was awake. Maybe I was hallucinating. Maybe I had fallen asleep bent over my ice samples and I was now freezing to death, and my final thoughts were going to be a fantasy about my wife fucking tow burly men at once.

Maybe this was what they were doing, and I was freezing to death on the ice.

I opened my eyes. The flavorless, scentless world of the station did not help much to determine if I was dreaming or not. But I could hear my own breathing, and feel my own fingernails digging into my palm.

I looked at the carpet. Too much detail for a dream, I decided.

Jim was unbuckling his pants. I forgot all about my uncertainty and began to watch them again.

Heidi leaned back onto Doug. She did it naturally, as if she did it all the time. He held her in his huge man-hands and stroked her arms.

She extended her hands up to his face and slipped her fingers into his mouth. He closed his mouth around them and began to suck on them, while her eyes rolled back in her head in pleasure.

Meanwhile, Jim was pulling her pants off. They were tights, and so they unrolled like the casing of a sausage. But my wife was not a sausage: she was a thick, beautiful woman, and now she was unclothed and lying in the arms of one man while the other got ready to pleasure her.

Jim used his thick hands to push her legs apart. He lowered his head.

Doug looked on, and cradled Heidi's head so that she could look down at Jim and see what he was doing to her as well. They both watched as Jim made slow rounds over Heidi's thighs and her stomach.

I think some part of me still believed that this scene was going to be interrupted. Not by me, perhaps – but maybe by someone else. Or my wife's good conscience.

But Jim moved lower, and no one seemed to be having any crisis of conscience.

His fingers were now on her pussy, working through her curly hair to the prize. He pulled open her outer lips delicately, like he was unwrapping a Christmas candy and didn't want to tear the foil. Then he moved toward her with his mouth.

Heidi let out a squeal as his tongue made contact with her clit. I could see from where I was that her cunt was already glistening with her moisture, and swollen to a hard little knob.

This was so different than she ever was for me. I always had to work so hard to get her turned on, and even by the time I pushed inside her she seemed only partially wet, partially interested.

She was wet and ready for them already.

And they were going to have their way.

The realization that not only was this not a dream, but that it was not going to end before these men fucked my wife, hit me hard in the groin. It hurt, and it also made my cock throb with a desire to watch it unfold.

Jim's head covered Heidi, and she twisted in Doug's arms, unable to stay still as Jim pleasured her.

Doug pressed his hands more firmly onto her soft arms. He held her still and kissed her earlobe, whispering something into her ear that made her smile, then pant, then bite her lip, then say: Yes, over and over again.

And then she started to arch her back, and her legs began to move around wildly. I had never seen a performance like this in all of the times I had tried desperately to bring her to orgasm with my tongue.

Just minutes into Jim's treatment, she was flailing wildly and panting and squealing in delight. She moaned, and started to scream, and Doug placed his hand in her mouth and held her still while Jim finished her off. When she came her back lifted off the couch and I saw her teeth sink into Doug's hand.

My cock was so hard now that it was pulsing painfully with each beat of my heart, which was racing.

I had to free myself. I moved my hand down to my pants and tried to unhook the fastener that kept it tight around my waist. I was holding myself up with one hand, though, and only my left hand free. I felt frustration building up as I realized it would take a long time to get myself undone.

And after that, I would only have my clumsy left hand to touch myself with. But the scene in front of me paused for nothing.

Jim was reaching out and lifting Heidi to a sitting position. His hand was guiding her body by the back of her neck. He was stroking his huge cock with one hand and suspending her with the other.

Her face was flushed, and she had an erotic smile on her lips.

Another expression that was new to me.

"Did you like that?" Jim said.

Heidi nodded, but surprised me by saying: "I want some more, though."

Jim smiled, still stroking his cock. Doug smiled malevolently. He seemed to have something in mind for “some more.”

“Oh yeah?” Jim growled. “Show me then. Show me how much you want me to fuck you.”

I wanted to bang my hands on the grate and scream now.

But I didn't.

Jim pushed her head forward, but she seemed to bend that way most willingly. Doug pulled her feet underneath and back behind her at the same time, so that her ass was pointed toward him. They did this in an almost choreographed way.

Even though my wife was a bigger girl, she looked small and delicate in the hands of these two dirty, rough giants. Their skin was darkened as though still somehow tanned, and looked rough and hardened next to Heidi's soft, supple curves. They were dirty, and Heidi was clean.

Something about the juxtaposition made my cock ache even more. I licked my lips – but my mouth was dry and so was my tongue.

I watched in horror and delight as Doug slipped a finger into Heidi, who was not at all dry, but very, very wet. He stroked her lightly. She opened her mouth for Jim, her eyes still fixed on him.

And then, to my shock, she opened her mouth wide and just swallowed him whole.

Heidi had never, ever, done that. The most I could get her to do was lick me a little, and suck the tip of my cock. She did it with disinterest, certainly never looking me in the eye while she did it.

Jim's cock was twice the size of mine – thicker, longer – and she just took the whole thing into her mouth, like she did it all the time.

Jim tipped his head back and seethed through his teeth. “Oh, fuck,” he said.

I stared in horror at the sight: Heidi's red lipstick highlighting her lips, spread wide, wide open, and Jim's brown-pink cock stretching them apart even further, buried all the way to his balls in Heidi's cherry-red mouth.

And then my eyes fell on her throat, where I could actually see the bulge of his cock moving inside of her. He started to thrust his hips, and she she bobbed her head obediently. The bulge under her skin moved up and down, and she just kept right on going.

My eyes flicked to Doug, and another jolt went through me as I saw what he was doing: he had gotten his finger wet in her pussy and now he was slowly sliding into her. I squinted.

Did I have this right?

Was he slowly sliding his finger into her ass?

I couldn't see very well, but the slowness of his motions as he began to push and pull inside of her revealed the inevitable truth: if he had had his fingers in her sopping-wet pussy they would not have met so much resistance.

Heidi did not moan or cry out. Instead, she tipped her ass up more by arching her back, like an invitation, Doug looked down at her ass with new interest, clearly pleased that she was offering him some more.

“You like that, huh?”

At that moment Heidi pulled away from Jim's cock to catch her breath. Saliva trailed from his swollen member to her mouth, and her lipstick was smeared all over her chin and cheek. Her mouth was gushing saliva and sticky mucous. She reached up a hand to take Jim's cock in it and stroke him as she turned with a smile to Doug.

“I like that.” She watched him as he inserted two fingers. She closed her eyes and moaned, but she pushed her ass back toward him. Doug smiled. Jim placed his hand on Heidi's head and pushed her back onto his cock. Into her mouth went the big slab of meat, all the way down, deep into her throat. Doug's eyes watched it, and I could see his cock was thumping around in his pants, like a big, twitching club. He moved his hand back and forth in Heidi's ass, and she made sounds like it hurt her and she liked it. She whimpered and moaned. But all the while she kept sucking on Jim's cock, and pushing her ass onto Doug's hand.

Doug pulled out his fingers, and pushed his underwear down. His big, thick snake of a cock sprang forward.

My eyes widened. In spite of my problems, I had to stare in appreciation. Doug's cock was too heavy and thick to stand out straight. He had to lift it. He teased her with the tip of his cock, dipping lightly into her pussy and rubbing her clit. Jim pulled out of her mouth for a moment so that she could catch her breath. She gasped.

As she was released from Jim's throat-fucking, what did she take the time to do?

“Put it in my ass,” she moaned.

But Jim smiled more than Doug did. He looked down at her.

“I think I better stretch you out first, sweetheart. Doug has the biggest cock on the continent.”

Everyone gave a slight appreciative laugh for the fact that this was, undoubtedly, a fact. Even me.

Jim continued: “Why don't you see if you can get it all in that mouth of yours while I break you in?”

Rage was filling my head – both of my heads. Rage and heat. What in the hell was wrong with Heidi? Is this really what she wanted? Why wasn't she putting up any resistance to these two beasts using her like a fuck toy?

She must want it, rational voice said plainly.

You must want it, animal voice said, cruelly. But you can't have it.

By then Heidi's mouth was open in a gasp, because Jim and Doug had traded places, and Jim – who not small by any accounts except in comparison to the ridiculous cock that Doug had – was already sliding himself into her ass.

But she was gasping in a way that looked more like a porn star, than like a wife who would never let me touch her asshole. Her moan was muffled as Doug lifted his cock for her, and pushed her head down onto him.

She got most of his cock into her mouth, but it was too big even for my apparently talented cock-sucking wife. Still, she gave it her all, opening and opening, the bulge of his dick moving further and further down her throat. For a few minutes there was silence, and only the sounds of Heidi's holes being pumped. I could hear sticky saliva and mucous, surrounding and lubricating the passage of those huge cocks into my wife's holes. Jim began to move back and forth slowly, and she whimpered a little with her mouth full of cock.

Doug lifted her head up and pulled himself out of her. His cock was soaked with her saliva, and she lapped at it, licking the tip.

Jim chose that moment to push deep inside of her, and she screamed. “Oh god!” she said. “Oh, no, oh no, I can't take it! It's so big!”

But her voice meant: I fucking love it, it's so big, fuck me harder.

I watched, mortified, as they went down her throat and into her ass again, enjoying themselves immensely, filling up nearly every hole of my wife with their huge cocks.

It was almost as if they read my mind. Doug pulled his cock from her mouth and breathed heavily. “Gotta wait a minute, sweetheart. You're gonna make me come, and I want to fill your pussy up.”

I wondered why this was, but I thought I knew: something about filling my wife's pussy up was more humiliating for me. They were claiming her, filling up her fertile hole. Replacing me, emasculating me even more. Heidi was trying to lick the tip of his cock. She wanted to taste his precum: you could tell by the way she snapping at it like a hungry animal.

Doug pushed her back, and Jim sat down at that very moment. Jim pulled Heidi with him, so that she sat down on his cock. Then he lay down, taking her with him, her back pressed against his chest.

Doug knelt on what little was left of the sofa, and he stood over her.

“Spread your legs open.”

Heidi obeyed, but she twisted her head and moaned and squealed. “Oh no, it's too big, I can't have both of your huge cocks inside of me!”

She did not, however, make any real moves to get herself out of this predicament.

Jim's arms tightened around her. “Lie nice and still, just let uncle Doug here do the work. We're gonna fill you up with so much cum you're going to overflow.”

Fate seemed to want me to suffer: from where I was I had an excellent view of the whole scene. The graphic details of it. I could see each enormous cock spreading open Heidi's holes while she began to squeal, at first a low, tinny squeak and then a scream. And then I could see them: Jim, deep inside of her ass, which was opened up around it, pink and faintly swollen, his balls getting slicked up with Heidi's wetness; Doug, his thick, dark snake of a cock moving in and out of her pussy. The two cocks next to each other, stretching out my wife's holes much, much wider than I had ever done or even imagined. And Heidi's voice, moaning and mewling away. First she was saying oh no, it's too much, and now she was panting and grasping Doug's ass to get more of him inside of her.

I was transfixed; I couldn't look away. The scene seemed to go on forever. Again, I started weighing the consequences of bursting from behind the locker. But what would happen if I did that now? My wife would probably still be filled up by these two beasts, and they would know I had stood here watching until this moment.

Not to mention they would probably kick my ass. Especially if I stopped them from blowing their loads.

Doug started tensing, and Heidi let out a howl and kicked her legs. “Oh fuck!” she screamed. “Oh fuck, I'm coming so hard!”

And indeed, even more creamy, wet moisture seemed to splash out of her.

Doug was next, arching his back and letting out a groan. I stared in disbelief as Heidi actually pulled him in deeper, looking up at his face and smiling invitingly. "That's it," she purred like a kitten, still panting from her own orgasm. "Fill me up with all that hot cum."

There was a moment that they all seemed to pause, as Doug blew his load into her. She licked her smeared lips, still sticky with his precum, and smiled.

"That's one load," Doug said, pulling out of her, holding her legs open. It was almost as if he knew I was there, and wanted to torture me. His white cum dripped out of her pussy, along with her own wet cum.

Jim moved quickly, and turned her around, bending her over the couch. He played with her gaping ass for a bit, admiring his own handiwork: her hole was stretched and red, and the sight of it made my cock twitch in a spasm of jealousy, rage, and eroticism. I began to stroke myself with even really thinking about it. I was furious and I was cold with anger, but I wanted to relieve myself because my cock was also so hard it hurt.

Jim gave the hole he had made one final fingering, and then he pushed himself into her pussy. I could hear the wet sloshing of her cum-filled hole, as Doug pounded away at her until he came. I was grateful that Jim made so much noise as he came, and that they were all panting like horses at the end of a race, or someone would surely have heard my own panting and sticky stroking from behind the lockers.

Jim withdrew, and Heidi just stayed where she was, bent over, the two loads of cum dripping from inside of her pussy.

I stared in disbelief, still shaking from my own orgasm.

I watched as they returned to their beers. Lightheartedly. As though nothing had happened. As though they hadn't just spoiled my wife with their sticky cum.

My pants were wet and I was getting uncomfortable in the locker.

Jim set his beer down. "Heidi, do you want to do something naughty for me?"

Heidi laughed and took a sip of her beer. "I thought I already did."

"This is better," he said. "It would really turn me on."

Heidi looked at him.

"You want to turn me on again, don't you?"

Now my wife seemed hypnotized. She grinned, and moved her head in a barely perceptible nod.

Jim leaned in and whispered something in her ear.

Doug laughed out loud.

Heidi smiled, her mouth open wide in shock. “Oh my god, really?”

I was dying to know what it was.

“Can you do it?” he said. “I'd really like it if you'd do it.”

Doug leaned forward, suddenly animated. “So would I,” he said. He took a small electronic item out of his pants. “Here. Here you go, you can actually film it with this.”

Heidi took the item, feigning shock. But her eyes were lit up with the challenge.

“Okay,” she said cheerfully. “I'll see what I can do.”

I leaned my head against the set of lockers and looked down into the semi-darkness, trying to quietly jerk myself off as the three of them enjoyed the rest of their beer. Heidi claimed to be tired, and they all agreed they needed to get to bed.

They left, thankfully, through the door on the opposite end of the room.

I was glad to see them go, so that I could properly jerk myself off, without being heard as I banged my head backward and spilled my cum all over my pants.

But I wondered what it was that Heidi had promised Jim.

“You're late.”

Heidi's voice was sweet, friendly. I began to peel off my clothing in the dark.

“I had a lot of measurements to take,” I said.

Then I added,

“Sorry to wake you up.”

I heard her move in the darkness. She was in the lower bunk. She yawned as she said, “It's okay. What time is it?”

For a moment I wondered if I had imagined everything I had just seen.

Heidi's voice was so adorable, and she was curled up in my bed, waiting for me.

Maybe I just had cabin fever. Maybe I was actually losing it, and I had imagined the whole thing.

It was actually not too hard, standing in the dark in that room, to believe that I was, in fact, going crazy. The air in that place is so dry you feel like your brain has shriveled up, and the darkness is not helpful for your sanity, no matter how many realistic settings they put on the lamps. And then there was the bias inside of me: I didn't want my wife to have done what she just did. Not really. I had enjoyed watching it, but most of me wanted it to be as much of a fantasy as the things I thought about while I jerked off.

I went to my bed, feigning to not know that she was there.

“What are you doing here?” I said, trying to sound surprised.

And then I was surprised, because Heidi reached down, and found my cock with her hand.

“Oh..” she said. “Nothing.”

It was not “nothing,” and my cock was twitching to life again, to my own surprise. But the images of my wife, with her mouth wrapped around the enormous cock of the enormous warehouse guys, fueled my hard-on. In the dark, the images were all I could see.

My hand moved underneath the shirt she was wearing, and looked for her mouth with my own in the dark.

An ice-cold sensation filled my body when I tasted her mouth: the scent of alcohol and hops filled my nostrils. It was unmistakeable, here where nothing smelled like anything at all.

You could still be imagining things, my brain offered helpfully.

I rubbed my thumb over her breast, and I felt her lips turn into a smile.

I moved my hand down, sliding over her fully belly, in between her underwear and long pants – no one was crazy enough to sleep in anything but long underwear here. She seemed to be welcoming my touch.

I stopped over-thinking things, and started to focus on what I wanted: to have sex with my wife. It had been a long time, and now she was ready for me.

Do you care that she only wants to have sex with you now that she got her fill of real men? my brain pondered, switching tacks on me.

I willed myself to shut up.

But do you care? She's only doing you a favor, now that she got what she wanted from real men who can satisfy her...

Heidi squirmed away from me suddenly and sat up on her elbows. “Honey,” she whispered. “Can you do something for me?”

I moved my hand further into her pants, searching for her soft flesh.

“Anything,” I said, trying to sound like Casanova but coming across as creepy. Why couldn't I be smooth? It never worked for me.

She reached over and turned on a light. "I want to be able to see you," she said. I looked at her face. She was smiling so prettily, and she looked unusually interested.

It had been a long time since she had looked at me like that.

Nearly everything that had happened wasn't necessarily erased from my mind, but it was definitely pushed to the back now. No matter what I had imagined or not imagined, my wife was looking at me with interest, and wanted to watch me do something to her...

She slid her long underwear off, and I looked down at her legs. I hadn't seen them (with the exception of the scene I had just witnessed) in a long time. I moved my hand along her thigh and between her legs.

She surprised me by finding my head with her fingers, and pushing my head down to her navel. I kissed her. Then I felt the pressure of her hand moving my head down, down to between her legs.

She rarely did this – she didn't seem to like it very much. I knew it was probably because I was bad at it: she seemed to get impatient as I moved my tongue around, searching for whatever most turned her on.

I started to pull her lips open, and move my mouth to her pussy – it was wet, and I was just processing the fact that I could smell the sour scent of cum and her own sweet juices, mixed together...when she looked down at me. She was propped up on her elbows.

"I've been a little bit bad," she said.

The words seared through me, and I felt like I might collapse with the pain of them. I didn't know what to do. I hovered over her messy cunt, my cock painfully hard, my feelings rising and falling like an ocean.

So I hadn't imagined it, I thought.

I looked up at Heidi's face. She had a small smirk on her lips, and she did not look apologetic.

She didn't know I had been hiding in the locker, did she?

But she did know that I would be able to smell another man's cum in her pussy.

She surely knew I would be able to taste it.

And she surely knew that I couldn't ignore those things, in conjunction with what she just said.

I felt her hand on the back of my head.

"I've been very, very bad. And now I'm all dirty. And I want you to clean me up."

I realized, as I let her push my head into her thighs, and I opened my mouth to work my tongue into her hole, that something had just changed in our relationship. My tongue first encountered the sweet taste of her own cum, and then she pushed on my head, indicating that I should go all the way in. "Clean it up," she said.

I obeyed. I realized as I did, that this is what I wanted. It was turning me on. My cock was so hard again that it was throbbing between my legs.

My tongue found the thick cream of Jim and Doug. It was bitter and sour, but now Heidi was pressing her hips up into my mouth, and I couldn't let her down.

I lapped it up, savoring the taste of my humiliation. As I did, I remembered in detail the sight of Jim and Doug stretching her open with both of their cocks, making her moan and scream, filling her up.

That was not for me anymore: I couldn't please her like that.

The only thing I was good for was cleaning up this mess.

I would have to do my best at the job, so I pressed my lips to her outer lips to make a seal, and I sucked the cum out of her. The stale liquid filled my mouth, and I gagged a little. The humiliation washed over me, and I looked up at Heidi.

She was looking straight at me, enjoying her power, enjoying my humiliation.

"That's it," she said. "Swallow it up."

And that's when I realized what it was that Jim had asked her to do. That's when I realized that she was filming the whole thing, and Jim and Doug would not only have the pleasure of fucking my wife again, but they would do it while they watched me clean up their cum from the last time.

I closed my eyes, and swallowed.

"Now make me come," she said, and leaned back on the bed.

So I found her clit with my cum-stained mouth, and licked away. She came faster than she ever had before, probably because the sight of me being humiliated had turned her on. Probably because she knew she was going to please Jim with her little video. When she came, moisture gushed from inside of her, and covered my face. There was still a faint scent of cum inside of her.

She pushed me away. I sat back on my knees, looking at her hopefully. My cock was aching now.

She looked down at my cock and rolled her eyes.

“If you want to jerk yourself off,” she said, “do it quietly.”

And then she turned over and covered herself with the comforter. “Go up there,” she said, motioning at the bunk above. “I’m too tired to move.”

So I did, and then I jerked myself off as quietly as possible, to make sure I didn’t disturb her.

In the morning, Heidi woke up and put on her clothes. She smiled at me, as if nothing had happened, and asked if I was coming to the canteen.

I knew Jim and Doug would be there. I told her to give me a minute, and she left, saying she was really hungry.

I stared at the ceiling and thought about what it would feel like to sit in the canteen with Doug and Jim, knowing they had not only fucked my wife, but taken over my relationship with her. Knowing that sometimes soon they would be watching me eat their cum from her pussy, submitting to them through her.

But instead of feeling really bad about that possibility, I found my mind wandering to another fantasy. In it, they would make me watch it with them, and Heidi would hold her camera in her hand so they could see me, and she would laugh as she watched...

It was technically morning. Even though I always had a morning erection, I was surprised to look down and see that my cock was hard, after everything that had happened that night.

When I finally arrived at the canteen, only Rick and Han were there, morosely eating porridge. Han was an unusually tall man who worked in atmospheric research and only spoke to explain how we were all going to die within twenty years. Han ignored me as usual.

Rick looked up as I walked into the room, however. He brought a cup of coffee to his lips, and I felt certain I saw his mouth turn up in a smile. A cruel smile, one of knowing a secret. A bully’s smile.

What had happened? I wondered. Had my wife come down here already and shown them the video, first thing in the morning? Over breakfast?

I made myself a bowl of the bland porridge.

Don’t be ridiculous, I told myself. But my stomach was twisting again, and I was too afraid to look Rick in the eyes.

He tossed his head back to take a final swig of coffee, and then grunted. He heaved himself up from the table, and stomped away.

I finished my porridge with stinging cheeks and a turning stomach. My mind went to dark places, thinking that perhaps they were down in the rec room right now, watching the video and laughing at me.

But when I headed down to the docking bay, all was quiet, and the radios crackled with the usual voices of everyday work: the workers were all at work, and my wife was in her workspace, bent over a ream of paper with her incomprehensible data on it.

I started to get dressed.

Several days went by as though nothing had transpired between Doug, Jim, and my wife. As the taste of the other men's cum began to fade from my memory and my mouth, and as the days wore on in their monotony, I started to doubt that any of it had even happened. It was a curious condition of being isolated in the silence, the scentlessness, and the dark: everything took on the quality of a dream.

Heidi wasn't acting strangely at all. Wouldn't she act strangely, if she had fucked two guys and then humiliated me by making me lick their cum from her pussy?

And the men – well, I could always find a way to suspect them of laughing at me, but what was new about that? They were big, strong men, and I was a scrawny geek who would probably freeze to death in two hours here if they didn't know how to run the place. This kind of man never had any respect for me. Nothing new about that.

By the third day after the incident, I think I had actually convinced myself I had imagined the whole thing. I was having lucid dreams and fantasies, I was starting to crack up.

Then, one night when I returned to our room, I found Heidi sleeping on the lower bunk. She did not stir when I came in the room. I touched her hair and her face, but she seemed sound asleep. It was unusual, but I didn't think much of it. I changed into my clothes and climbed up to the top bunk.

I was just starting to drift off to sleep when I felt the movement of Heidi's body underneath me and felt the vibrations of her alarm buzzing through the bed frame. She turned the alarm off, yawned, and sat up.

I opened my eyes, and I was about to sit up and ask her what she was doing, when she turned the light on.

She must not have known I was there, I thought.

I pulled the thick comforter over my head. I wanted to see what she was up to. I could hide and follow her if she left.

Now my imagination was running wild again. Maybe I hadn't imagined anything at all.

But I heard footsteps from underneath the covers. Big thuds, the footsteps of large men. Quality of it that she had her big smile on. She was flirtatious. "Hey-ye," she cooed.

I heard a sound; the sound of lips touching together.

I felt a knife of pain in my stomach.

What was going on? Did she know I was here, or did she really not?

"You got it?" I heard a male voice say.

"Do you wanna go somewhere else?" The same voice. She must have shook her head.

Well, at least someone was considerate of me.

"He'll be working until late, probably all night," Heidi said.

So she didn't know I was here?

Or maybe she did, and she wanted me to hide, or she wanted to see what I would do? Maybe she wanted me to watch. Maybe she wanted me to interfere.

I had no idea. But my cock was already getting hard.

I was such a pussy. Jump up, I told myself. Jump up and tell this asshole to get away from your wife!

I pushed a bit of the comforter up so I could see who was there. Of course. Captain America Jim. The room was filled by his presence, his hard muscles and his hungry stare for my wife. I tried to move my hands or my arms, tried to will myself to open my mouth and say something. Almost anything would do, I knew, and the two of them would scatter.

He would at least try to fuck my wife somewhere else.

If I could just will myself to sit up, throw the covers off, and say...anything. But instead, I remained frozen.

Jim moved his hand to Heidi's neck, and began to stroke the back of her nape. "I don't believe you got it," he said.

"Oh you don't?" Heidi purred. Her voice was seductive and I felt the bed shift as she lay down on it. I couldn't see her but I imagined she was stretching out with her feline grace. I

"Let's see it." Jim's voice.

Everyone was so amused. They had a grin in their voices. All of it at my expense.

“First things first,” Heidi said, and her voice was dripping with honey.

“What will you do for me?”

I heard Jim give a grunt of approval. Then I felt the shifting of the bed beneath me again.

Now they were out of sight. I wanted to see what was happening beneath me.

There was enough shifting and grunting from below,, as the two of them tried to get comfortable on the bunk bed to do whatever it was they were doing, that I felt I could go unnoticed if I turned over and tried to peek through the crack between the mattress and the slatted frame. The mattresses were thin and lightweight, in spite of their incredible comfort, so it was easy to pull it up a little and gain a better view of what was directly below me.

My eyes widened, and my cock throbbed.

Heidi still had her shirt on, and beneath it I could see Jim's hands moving like snakes, grasping her full breasts, pinching her nipples, rubbing his rough, strong hands all over her soft body. Heidi's eyes were half-closed and her lips were parted in pleasure.

Jim's hands were extended above his head, though, because his mouth was between Heidi's legs. She held her thighs wide open, and I could see from the movement of his head that he was licking her clit. She was smiling, and I could see her muscles already tensing up. He was going to make her come in no time at all. Not like me, who took almost half an hour if I wasn't sucking another man's cum from her pussy.

I could hear her moisture now, as Jim's tongue made a sticky sound as he sucked on her, or licked her hardened knob. She lifted her hips and moaned, and then she opened her mouth and contorted her face. “Oh god,” she said. “That's so good. Oh god, you really know how to do that.” She was mewling like an animal.

Then she shrieked, and turned to bury her face in the pillow.

Jim sat up, crouching between her spread legs. Now I could see her pussy, dripping wet and engorged. I could actually see her flesh throbbing, and a trickle of her own cum gushing from her hole.

“Now show me,” Jim said. His voice was a hungry snarl.

I could not take my eyes from my wife's pussy. I had always believed that a woman coming like that was an urban legend.

So I didn't see her as she took out her notebook, and placed it on her abdomen. She had pulled her shirt up to expose her tits, and she placed the notebook just under them.

"I've been a little bit bad," I heard Heidi's voice say.

I squinted to see the image on her stomach.

But I knew what it was.

She had filmed the whole thing.

Jim had taken out his enormous cock, and he held it in his hand, stroking it slowly. I could hear a light laugh come from him.

And on the screen: me, bent over and sucking cum out of my wife's pussy.

Sucking his cum out of her pussy.

Because he had told her to do it.

I could feel my face getting hot, and my limbs tingled with a desire to put a stop to what I was seeing, but I was immobilized by my own fear.

My cock ached.

The video seemed to go on longer than I remembered the actual event taking place.

That's it, swallow it up...

Jim laughed again. "Oh fuck, he's really going for it, isn't he?"

My wife smiled wickedly.

Her thighs were still spread, and she was moving her hips again, welcoming Jim's big cock inside of her.

But he waited, watching the entire humiliating video, right up to when Heidi's told me to jerk off quietly.

Then the screen went blank.

Heidi slid the notebook from her abdomen and grinned.

"Was I good girl?" she purred at Jim.

"Very good," he said.

"Can I have my prize then?" she asked. Her mouth was open and she moved her hips up toward him. She placed her pussy near the tip of his cock. She moved herself around so that the fat end of his enormous dick touched her clit.

Jim placed two hands on either side of her, and in one easy jerk, pulled her body toward himself and her pussy sheathed his cock. He went in easily, but my wife gasped anyway.

“Oh fuck, your cock feel so good,” she said, in a breathy whisper. “Fuck me deeper.”

Jim pushed her down to the bed and fell on top of her.

“Hold those legs open for me. I like it when you spread your legs.”

My wife obeyed, and her white skin shone against his dark, dirty body. He thrust deep inside of her, and she moaned.

“Deeper,” she begged him.

“You gonna take it?” he chided her. “Can you take all that cock?”

His cock was so big. I wondered how she would do it.

“But she said nothing, just closed her eyes and whimpered

The whole bed shook as Jim began to pound himself into my wife. With each thrust she gasped and howled, and I imagined her pussy stretching open, ripping open, his cock going into her so deep that his cum would burst from her mouth. Her legs flopped open and she grasped a pillow, bringing it to her face to howl into it as he pounded and pounded away at her. Her legs flailed as she screamed into the pillow, and I knew she was having another orgasm.

Jim grunted as he drilled deeper and harder into her for his final thrusts, while she lay floppy beneath him, spent from her own orgasm. And then I saw his back arch as he spilled all of his hot cum into her pussy, filling her up. He seemed to go on for a long time like that, growling as his seed spilled into her.

Then he pulled out, and sat back on his heels.

I had a nice view of her this way: her pussy gaping wide, engorged, and his white cum oozing from her pink flesh, dripping onto the sheets.

“It's so good to be fucked by a real man,” Heidi gasped.

He slapped her on the thigh, playfully.

“Any time,” he rumbled. “I gotta run, big day tomorrow.”

He slipped his shirt over his head.

“You got another plan for hubby?” he asked, leaning in for a kiss.

For some reason, this conspiratorial talk was more painful than any visceral thing I had just seen Jim do to my wife. Was I so unsatisfactory to her that she had no other option than to humiliate me for her own pleasure?

My cock was throbbing painfully, and I wanted desperately to make myself come, but I didn't know when my chance would be. I couldn't let Heidi know I was here now, and humiliate myself even more.

Could I?

Jim left the room after kissing my wife, who giggled and thanked him again for a great time.

I let the comforter fall down around me so that I was in the dark. I was hot, my cock ached, and I wanted to shift my position.

I remained there, thinking about what I should do, until it was too late: I heard the light snore that Heidi made when she slept on her back.

But surely she had known I was there all along. Surely she knew I had been watching her: watching her laugh at my humiliation with Jim, watching Jim pleasure her, watching Jim fill her up.

And now she was asleep without an apparent care in the world, and I was left in the top bunk on a thin mattress to roll over and jerk myself off.

I filled my mind with the image of Jim making her come with his expert tongue. But in my mind I was also imagining the next things my wife would think of for me, during the long winter, trapped in the station with my wife and her manly lovers...

WATCHING MY WIFE GET LUMBERJACKED

“I knew this was going to happen,” Julia muttered. She flipped her phone open again and moved it in an arc around the car.

I resisted the urge to tell her, again, that there was no point to doing that.

There was no signal. Because we were in the middle of nowhere.

In front of us, and behind us, thick pines formed a wall of green on either side of the road. That was all there was. Not even power lines. Just trees, a road, and nothing at all in either direction.

We hadn't seen another car for hours.

We sat in silence again for a few more minutes.

I was feeling like an ass because something was wrong with the car, and I had no idea what it was. I had propped the hood up, and now it was just a matter of waiting for someone to come along and offer to help us. Or give us a lift to some quadrant of civilization where there was cellphone service. Julia was irritated because we'd had a long fight about whether or not it was worth it to get out and walk in the direction we had been heading, in the hopes of seeing a gas station.

To be honest, the thought of doing that freaked me out. The whole place was starting to freak me out, especially now that the car had stopped. At least we were in the Yukon, and not some backwoods part of, say, Louisiana or Kentucky, where mole-people might crawl out of the woods like in a movie.

No, the mole-people here were likely to be Canadians, and everyone knew they were friendly and normal. Right?

We were off the cellphone grid, apparently, which was terrifying enough.

The millions of acres of forest that surrounded us had turned from eerily quiet to eerily full of sounds – snapping branches, bird calls, squawking hawks, and the incessant buzz of enormous horseflies. I felt pretty sure that all the wildlife in the area, including wolves and bears, was going to come watch us out of curiosity. Right before chasing us down and eating us for lunch.

Julia had rolled her eyes when I said that I thought we should just wait for someone to come along. She had huffed and folded her arms across her chest.

She didn't say it out loud, but I could tell she was thinking it: you are so pathetic.

Now it was getting dark, and I was starting to get worried. It was almost impossible to believe that no one at all had passed either way on this stretch of highway, except for a truck, heading the other direction, about two hours ago. We hadn't waved it over because we hadn't known how screwed we were at the time.

Julia sighed again.

"I have to pee," she declared, putting her hand on the car door.

I scowled at the tangled green forest. I also had to pee, but I was planning on barely getting out of the car to do it. The horseflies were enormous.

"Just go right by the side of the car," I advised.

Julia got out without saying anything, rolling her eyes again. She started to push her way into the tress that began almost right at the edge of the road, and then seemed to think better of it. She didn't move back toward the car, though, just to prove a point. She dropped her pants, and, looking right at me to indicate how annoyed she was, she squatted to pee.

Even though there was absolutely no one in sight, I still felt like she should attempt to be discreet.

That's ridiculous, I told myself, trying not to act like a dumb, jealous husband. Especially when there was nothing ahead, and nothing -

I looked in the rear-view mirror at that moment, and my heart leaped. A huge truck filled the mirror. How had we not heard it coming?

Then, my thought immediately went to my wife, who had her shapely ass bared on the side of the car. And the fact that the driver of the truck could easily see her.

I looked at Julia. She had turned to the truck, but she hadn't moved. She must have been mid-stream. A protective anger flushed my cheeks. "Julia!" I hissed.

The truck was slowing, I could tell by the groaning sound behind us.

And then I heard it: a vulgar whistle.

Then just for confirmation, a catcall. "Nice ass, baby!"

Fear filled me. I hated this kind of situation. I felt like I should defend Julia's honor, but in reality I was afraid to do much of anything. Usually the kind of guys who said things like that out the window were twice as big as me and reminded me of rabid dogs.

I looked over at Julia, expecting her to get embarrassed or indignant.

Instead, she grinned, hopped to her feet, and pulled her pants up with no great hurry. Whoever was in the truck had a nice view of everything from the waist down for a full second or two. Plenty of time for someone to take everything in: Julia's creamy thighs and round curves, her triangle of springy brown hair.

The truck moved slowly forward as soon as Julia buttoned her pants, and then stopped in front of us. Julia stayed where she was, putting a hand to her forehead as if she were blocking out the sun, except that it was late at night and the sun was skimming the horizon.

“Julia!” I hissed again. “What are you doing?!”

What was she doing? She was wearing a tight black top that dipped low to show her ample breasts, and which also revealed a strip of her thick but taut waist, just above the tight jeans that clung to her round ass perfectly. She had a hand on one hip and was cocked to one side almost seductively.

“Julia!” I said again.

“I'm just trying to get us a ride,” she snapped, without looking toward me.

“And it seems to be working. Just go with it.”

I raised my eyebrows. This wasn't like her at all.

But, secretly, I was relieved to see someone -anyone – on this road. And though I hated to admit it, we probably did stand a better chance of getting picked up because of Julia's tight jeans.

I looked at the truck. It was an enormous rig, with huge logs tied to the back of it.

Both doors opened, and on each side, two solid chunks of muscled men in jeans and plaid shirts dropped to the ground.

They started to walk toward us. I cringed as I remembered their crude whistle.

The driver was squinting at me through the glass. Probably wondering, what sort of man would let his wife show her ass to a passing truck? And next he was going to wonder, what kind of man lets two lumberjacks catcall at his wife and doesn't say anything to them?

Because the way this guy was scowling, with his scruffy face twisted into a fierce stare, and his thick jaw set and sort of pulsing the way manly men do, I was definitely not going to say anything. Then there was the fact that his jeans were tight around his tree-trunk thighs, and his shirt was tight where his tree-branch arms bulged out, thick and made entirely of muscle. He looked like an advertisement for manly men.

I heard Julia laugh flirtatiously. “Hiya,” she said. Then she shrugged.

“When you gotta go, you gotta go,” she told them.

The man who had popped out of the passenger's side was walking toward her quickly. His eyes were moving up and down her body, largely focusing on her cleavage. “No bother at all,” he said, with a firm, smooth voice and slight smile.

The driver, without asking me anything, disappeared under the hood of the car. I squirmed in discomfort. I hated talking about cars, and now I felt doubly emasculated. Triply. I had no idea what was going on with the car, and when I stood next to that man I was going to look like a flabby sapling. And, they had the upper hand because they had just whistled at my wife, who was swinging her hips back and forth lightly instead of getting pissed off.

Julia pushed her hair out of her face, and placed her hand on her neck. Then she started to move her fingers back and forth along the collar of her shirt, just over her two pillowy breasts.

It was so clichéd.

“You guys know anything about cars?” she purred. “We've been here for hours.”

She was really hamming it up. She moved her body from side to side.

Watching her, I felt a strange kind of shift, like I wasn't even looking at my own wife, but watching a movie instead.

It felt like it was going to turn into a porno. I remember thinking that.

I had no idea how right I was. At the time, it just had that cheesy feel: my wife, shrugging and looking helpless and touching her lips.

I decided I needed to step out of the car. I tried being as manly as possible as I approached the scowling man who was looking down at the content under the hood.

I put my hands on hips, hoping to look like John Wayne. As I did it I realized it probably looked sort of sissy, the way I did it.

The man was even bigger when I stood next to him. He towered over me, and his arms bulged with thick muscles.

“Hey,” I said, trying to sound casual.

In the corner of my eye, I could see Julia still twisting back and forth in a girlish, flirty gesture. The other man was standing very close to her now, and saying something in his deep voice. Julia was tossing her head back and laughing, as if he were telling her the funniest story she had ever heard.

But I needed to keep my eyes on the guy in front of the car right now.

“Uh...” I mumbled. “I'm not sure, seems like maybe alternator.”

I had no idea what it was, but I figured I had to say something.

“Smell burning?” he growled, and I looked at him, confused.

“Huh?”

“Did you smell burning, before it stopped?”

“Uh...not really...”

Impatiently, he pushed me out of the way, and sat down in the driver's seat. He tried to start the car, then went to the front and started wiggling a few things around.

He stood up to his full height and looked down at me.

I felt like such an ass. And the whole time, Julia had been giggling and telling stories to the rugged man from the passenger's seat.

“You got a real problem here,” he bellowed at me.

“I have...CAA,” I stammered. “I just don't - “

“Cellphone ain't gonna work out here. CAA gonna take a few days to get out this way,” the other man said, without taking his eyes off my wife.

They both looked at me like I was an idiot.

“We got a buddy, got a truck he can tow you with. Get you to a garage. You pay us cash, we can do the work.”

I had no idea what to do. I also had no cash.

But certainly, I thought, there would be an ATM wherever there was a mechanic.

Julia sighed.

“You guys can't give us a ride to some place we could stay, could you?” She twisted her hips back and forth again. She was batting her eyelashes, and she returned her hand to the collar of her shirt, where she stroked her chest lightly, as if she were caressing herself.

There was a dangerous exchange of looks between the two men. And then a small smile at the edges of both of their mouths.

“Sure thing,” the one talking to Julia said. “In fact, we have a camp not too far up the road. You can stay there tonight and we'll get you all fixed up and on the road in a couple days.”

“Julia,” I said. “Can I talk to you for a minute?”

Julia shot me a look, and the tow men grinned at each other. The driver dropped the hood of my car.

I walked to the back of the car, and Julia rolled her eyes for the benefit of the man she was talking to, and then grudgingly came back to talk to me. "I don't know if this is such a good idea," I said in a low voice.

The two men moved toward each other and, smiling, began to talk in low mumbles, while the stared openly at the two of us talking.

"Got another plan?" Julia said, condescension in her voice. "We're in the middle of nowhere. It's almost midnight. You do whatever you want, but I'm not sleeping in this car." She turned on her heel and opened the back door.

"I'm in," she said cheerfully, swinging a duffel bag over her shoulder.

Both men still had their eyes locked on me. Their look was one of men who had just beat someone at a game. The each gave a little laugh, and turned back toward the truck.

So what could I do?

We arrived at a small encampment of trailers at nearly one on the morning. Because it was the height of summer, it was still a little light, like late afternoon.

The lumberjacks seemed tired, and all of the flirtatiousness had died down on the ride here. Julia had started to fall asleep just before we arrived. Roy, the driver, showed us to an empty trailer, and waved us inside. He had a semi-professional air. "You guys can sleep here, and have Lester go and get your car tomorrow morning."

Julia thanked him with simple courtesy and no funny business, no swaying of her hips.

I started to think maybe I had overreacted when the lumberjacks had shown up.

We climbed into bed without saying much. I decided not to confront Julia, as I had been planning to during the whole ride, about her lurid behavior on the side of the road.

I looked at the ceiling for a while, and then I started to get horny thinking about Julia, laughing with the passenger, Curtis, and staring at his muscled chest and arms.

Julia surprised me by rolling over when I started to stroke her back. I had been expecting her to tell me she was too tired. But she turned to me instead, and welcomed my body toward her.

When I tried to kiss her, though, she responded by turning her cheek, moaning softly as though she were just so overcome by passion that she had no time for it. But I was still fumbling with the small nightie she was wearing. It was trapped under her weight and refusing to pull up so that I could get my hand underneath it.

She impatiently pushed my hand away, and pushed her own panties down, wriggling out them and at the same time disposing of mine. The move was quick and almost seemed practiced. But one thing was clear: she was impatient.

I started to pepper her with kisses, and I noticed she was staring at the ceiling. Her eyes had a distant, far-away look.

I knew what it was. I knew that she was imagining Roy, or Curtis, moving his hands over her body and ripping her underwear off of her body. I knew she was imagining what it would be like to feel a real man hold her down and push his gigantic cock inside of her.

I didn't care.

In fact, the idea that she was picturing one of those dirty lumberjacks was turning me on. And so what if she was? Wasn't I imagining the same thing, and getting off on it? As I moved down to her thighs, I could smell that she was already wet. When I found her with my mouth, she opened her legs compliantly. I looked up, and found she was still staring at the ceiling.

Her pussy was wet, and when I found her clit it was hard and swollen. She sucked in her breath as I moved my tongue over it, and twisted in pleasure. The fact that I could tell she was imagining something else only made me harder. I pictured Roy, the way I imagined that she would, straddling her open thighs, guiding his cock to her opening as she moaned and begged him to fuck her. I imagined another man's cock, sliding into her and sliding out slick and wet with her sweet, honey-flavored juices.

Her abdomen tightened, and I sensed she was going to come. I pushed my tongue against her clit in circles, fumbling a little like I always did, but she pushed herself into my mouth for more. She started to move her hips to guide herself where she wanted me, and so I let her rub herself against my taut tongue. When she came, she let out a high-pitched squeal, and her legs shuddered around me.

I sat up, and knelt to look at her, her hair slightly damp with sweat near her scalp. Her eyes were closed now. I pushed my cock inside of her. She was wetter than she had been for a very long, since the beginning of our marriage. But she was done, and now she lay a little limp, letting me inside of her but clearly just to end what we were doing. She made complacent sounds as moved back and forth inside of her, but I knew that it was show of good sportsmanship. I came quickly, and she let me pant on top of her for a moment before pushing me off and turning on her side.

“That was nice,” she said, as though very sleepy.

I stared at the ceiling, and it was a long time before I could get to sleep. I wondered which of the lumberjacks she pictured while I pleased her.

The next morning, when I woke up, Julia still sleeping contentedly on her side. I rolled over to spoon her, and started to slide my hand up her nightgown, hoping to get just a little more.

She gave me a perfunctory smile, and pushed my hand away. “We have to get going,” she said.

I found my jeans and put on my shirt.

Julia waited until I was dressed, and then plodded into the bathroom and shut the door.

When she came out, she was dressed in the same outfit, and it looked even more revealing somehow. More of her skin was showing at the midriff, and the shirt somehow seemed to reveal more cleavage.

“Do you have any other clothes?” I said, not meaning to sound fatherly, but realizing that I did as the words left my mouth.

She just flitted her eyes at the ceiling and sighed. Then she walked past me and through the door.

When she got to the landing of the steel steps, she raised her arms and stretched. The shirt slid appealingly up her waist, showing her full but flat stomach to whoever might have been out there. Then she trotted down the steps. I heard her say, “Hey, good morning.”

A male voice answered. “Morning.”

I pushed the door open. Roy was standing by his truck with a cup of coffee in his hand. He had his eyes right on Julia as she stepped down and crunched across the gravel.

Curtis appeared from behind the truck.

“Lester got your car. Gonna take about an hour.”

I nodded. I tried to act as coolly as they were, but I knew I was failing. It didn't help that Julia walked over to Roy with an air of familiarity, and took a cup of coffee that seemed to materialize from nowhere, as if he was just waiting for her.

“It's about seven hundred bucks,” Curtis said coolly. He looked amused. “Cash,” he added.

I looked at Julia, who was looking at Roy with doe eyes over her cup of coffee. The two were smiling and flirting like lovebirds.

She wasn't going to help me out.

“Well,” I said. “The thing is, I have to get some cash.”

Curtis looked at me. He was unmoved.

“Is there...a cash machine or something, close by?” I said after an uncomfortable silence. I noticed that the other lumberjacks were coming out of their trailers and looking at the four of us. I knew that better put, they were looking at one of us – Julia – but I tried not to let myself get flustered. There was a silence.

“There's no ATM machine,” Roy explained, and he moved closer to my wife. His eyes were going up and down her body slowly, pausing on his favorite parts. “For miles. You'll have to just go get the money, and come back.”

I hurried to thank him, but Curtis shot me a look that said I hadn't heard it all yet.

“Gotta leave some collateral,” Curtis chuckled. “Something you'd definitely come back for.”

I saw a slight smile turn up the corners of Julia's mouth. She knew what they were thinking, and she didn't mind being left as “collateral” at all. She looked at me, in case I was stupid and needed an explanation. “I think they'd like me to stay while you do that.”

I shook my head in disbelief. “What?! No, there's no way I'm leaving you here-”

“What's the matter, Will?” Roy shot at me. His expression was taunting me now. “Don't think we're gentlemen?”

I knew they weren't gentlemen.

Julia laughed. “Oh my god,” she scoffed. “Honey, it's fine. I actually don't want to spend that much time in the car. I've got a book. It seems fair – they did a lot of work on the car.”

Roy looked at her and smiled.

Curtis walked toward the door and placed a hand on my shoulder on the way out. His hand was enormous, heavy. “Don't worry, Will buddy. We'll take real good care of your wife.”

He squeezed me, and his hand nearly crushed my collarbone. I did my best not to grimace.

The message was clear. I couldn't win.

The two of them looked at me, amused, waiting for my response.

"I..." I began. I looked at Julia for help, but she was waving at Lester, who was crossing the gravel driveway.

Any one of them was too large for me to do anything but get my ass kicked, but the three of them were terrifying as a group. My face was burning. I could feel my heart knocking at my chest.

"How...how far is the..."

"Just up the road," Lester offered. "Course, round here that's a good three hours out."

There was a round of light laughter from the whole group.

"Which...way?" I mumbled. I was getting increasingly agitated.

I waved Julia over to the car and told her I thought she just jump in with me. What would they do? Hunt us down? There had to be something we could do besides leave her here.

"What if they have...I don't know, some kind of plans...to do something to you?"

"Don't be ridiculous," Julia seethed, rolling her eyes.

"I am serious," I said. I knew I was sounding a little bit desperate, and I tried to calm my voice. But it was no good: I was starting to whine. I could already tell I was losing my way with her. "I think this is a really bad idea," I complained.

I knew Julia didn't think it was a bad idea. I knew Julia was enjoying every second of attention this camp of lumberjacks was giving her.

I looked at her. She was distracted, looking around the camp at where her gorgeous lumberjacks had gone. She kept returning her eyes to me, but it was clear that her thoughts were elsewhere.

I could see I wasn't going to convince her to go. And she wouldn't actually do anything with these lumberjacks, would she?

But would they take no for an answer?

I looked at her. Was she standing a little more seductively somehow?

"God," she said, rolling her eyes. "They went and got the car, fixed it, they're hardly charging you anything, they're going to work. They're just fine, and so am I. Just get going."

“Fine,” I said. “I think it's an awful idea, but if you really want me to do it-”
“We don't have any other choice,” she said.

I tried to make a joke. “Okay, well...don't sleep with all the lumberjacks while I'm gone.” I sat down in the car. I waited for her laughter, some kind of recognition of my joke.

But Julia's eyes did not follow me. She had spotted one of them, emerging from his trailer. Roy. She was looking at him, and barely seemed to know what she was saying as she murmured, “No, I won't then.” She barely got the words out before she started to walk away from the car.

“Hey,” I snapped. “Can I get a kiss?”

She scurried back quickly, her eyes still on Roy, and kissed me briefly and half-heartedly. “Sure. Love you, honey.”

She looked down at me then, and must have seen that I was still pouting.

“Don't you trust me, honey?”

She batted her eyes seductively. I couldn't tell if she was making a joke or not.

“Of course,” I said, meekly.

I did, didn't I?

As I pulled out of the compound, I glanced in the mirror. The last sight I saw – of Julia skipping toward Roy – did not reassure me.

The “nearest town” was actually only about two hours away, and I drove as quickly as I could. I only lost time stopping at a gas station, convinced they would have an ATM.

But after I finally located a small grocery store, entered and gathered up the cash, I came out to find that my tires were flat.

I stared at the sight.

Of course I knew that someone had done it to me.

I realized, at that moment, that I had no way of calling Julia. In my hurry, I hadn't even charged the cell phone, but it wouldn't work anyway.

It took me five more hours to find a person who would loan me a cellphone, wait for CAA, get towed to the only place around that would do tires, and then receive this condemnation:

“Don't have your kind of tires. Gotta order them.”

My stomach flipped.

“How long will that take?”

“Oh, you're in luck, get 'em by this evening.”

I started acting like a jerk, yelling about bad customer service. Lucky for me, the mechanic turned to his computer screen and ignored me. I paid in advance for the work and stormed out of the office.

I was lucky enough to find a motel a few depressing strip malls down from the mechanic. The town had a stagnant air, like no one really lived there. Everything was in place to feed and house temporary, summer workers, and no one cared how the buildings had been scattered around.

I fumed in my motel room, thinking of Julia. What was she doing right now? I imagined All of the lumberjacks laughing inwardly as she looked down the road to see if I was coming.

Was she worried at all, though? Or had she even noticed?

True to my expectations, the car was not ready at 9am as I had hoped. The delivery of tires rolled in at 2pm, and the mechanic claimed to have several cars ahead of me.

I paced in the office. I walked to a convenience store and almost bought cigarettes. I looked all over the small town for a phone book, hoping to somehow find a telephone number to call the compound, but as soon as I found the phone book – torn, wrinkled with dried water – I realized I had no idea what to look for. “Sexy Lumberjack Camp?”

I was disgusted with myself and imagining horrible things. What if they were psychopaths, and tried to murder her?

But more awful than that, I imagined Julia sitting on the porch, talking to Roy. I imagined them inviting her to come eat lunch with them. Asking about her husband. What did he do, was he interesting enough for her, was he good in bed, did he have a cock like this?

I rolled my eyes at myself. I was getting carried away. I would be back there soon enough and everything would be fine. We'd be on our way by tomorrow morning and the whole thing would be over.

I asked the mechanic if I could give him some kind of tip to change my tires early. He laughed under his breath, but took $100 from me. By four, my crazy thoughts and I were in the car, speeding excessively down the empty highway toward the encampment, imagining all kinds of scenarios with my wife and the burly lumberjacks.

When I tore into the gravel lot that the trailers were loosely organized around, I saw no signs of life. I got out of the car and looked around.

The place almost seemed abandoned, except for all of the trucks that were scattered around nearby.

Every trailer had a light on in it.

I went first to the one Julia and I had stayed in. It was empty.

I looked at the bed.

Julia's black shirt and jeans were folded neatly on it.

What did that mean? I wondered.

“Julia?” I called.

For some reason, I didn't want to shout her name too much. A lot of crazy thoughts were going through my head, and I decided to sneak into the next building: the place where I knew, by the faint scent of food, there was a kitchen and a common area.

I entered quietly, and turned the corner into a hallway.

I could see shadows moving in the big room that served as a living area.

The sounds of what was happening: sticky slapping, light grunting, quiet moans, skin on skin – hit me first, but my brain refused to process them until I peeked out from behind the corner and saw what I saw.

Julia was seated on Lester's lap. His chest was bare, and dirt was caked to his arms where his shirt had once ended. His muscles were flexed and enormous, and he held my wife in his big, dirty hands.

I opened my eyes wider, unable to process what I was seeing.

Julia was naked, and her big tits were bouncing up and down as she lifted her body up and then plunged down.

Right onto Lester's thick, pink cock.

She was really doing it.

I stared at Lester's cock. There it was, glistening with my wife's creamy pussy juices, making a sticky crinkle as it went in and out of her. It was bare: no condom for Julia.

She moaned and squealed, making all kinds of noises that I had never heard her make.

Lester had his hands on her hips and was lifting her up and down as he pleased, moving faster now, using her body like a pleasure glove, stroking himself off with my wife's pussy.

I was still in shock about what I was even seeing. I had fantasized about it, true, but I had never actually thought she would go through with it. Not really.

Painful and pleasurable forces competed with each other, traveling from my heart through my torso to my cock. I felt like I couldn't breathe, but my cock was starting to ache as it filled up quickly and throbbed with need. "Oh, oh, oh, ooooohhhhh!" Julia cried. Lester pulled her down onto his cock, so that he was embedded so far inside her it looked like his balls might get swallowed up by her pussy.

I started to feel sick from all of the sensations twisting inside of me.

And then, to my horror, Lester slapped her on the ass and gave her some instructions. They moved to the floor, which seemed strange to me, but only for a moment. My wife straddled Lester, and she slid back onto his cock, sitting atop him for a moment. I had a good view now of her ass.

Then a shadow came into the room, and my knees went a little weak. I slid to the floor. I saw Roy, naked now, with a huge erect member in his hand. He moved behind them, and as he did, Lester gathered my wife's hair in his hands and pulled her down toward him. He held her skin close to his sweaty, dirty chest, and Julia moaned.

I couldn't really hear his voice, but I heard Julia say she couldn't do it, it was too big.

"You can take it, baby," Roy growled. "Just like last night, we'll start off slow."

I cringed. What they must have done last night.

"I can't," Julia mewled, but her voice was more seductive than protesting.

"Oh no, it's too big. You're both too big."

She kept moving on top of Lester's cock, however, so it was clear that she still wanted to get some pleasure from the lumberjack inside of her.

I watched as Roy fell to his knees. Between his legs I could see his hands as he pried open my wife's legs and pulled her asscheeks apart.

Now I could see her pussy, stretched open and filled by Lester's big cock.

And then Roy's even larger member...headed toward...was he really going to push his big, dark cock into my wife's ass?

I leaned against the wall and started to push my hand into my own pants. I knew I was powerless to stop what was happening here: for one thing, Julia was not stopping it, she was enjoying it. And for another, there was no way I was going to try and take down four lumberjacks, who would probably just laugh at me, right as they were trying to fuck a woman.

My woman. A shudder ripped through me.

Still, it was also so hot.

The tip of Roy's cock was at her dark eyelet now, and he rubbed against her as she twisted and ceased her pumping of Lester's cock. Roy pushed her asscheeks even further apart, and I could now see everything very clearly. Julia whimpered and whined a little as he edged his cock into her. Her feet twisted as the big, black cock slid inch by inch into her ass. I imagined how it must feel to have two rock-hard cocks rubbing against each other with only the thinnest membrane of skin between them, pulling you apart, filling you up.

Julia's moans and squeals answered for me.

And then Roy began to fuck her. He started slow, but he worked it up to a fast, pounding rhythm pretty quickly. Julia punctuated each of his hard thrusts with a gasp or a moan, and I heard Lester begin to groan beneath them.

"That's it, Jules baby, take it all. What are you gonna say when I fuck all this cum into you?"

"Oooooohhhhhh," Julia moaned. "Oh, oh, thank you."

I saw Lester's cock pulsing with his orgasm, and his feet kicking straight as his cum burst inside of one of my wife's stuffed holes. White cream gushed out from the edges of Julia's tightly stretched pussy.

Roy pumped harder now, his balls slapping against Lester's, the sounds of his cock in Julia's ass wet and sticky. Cum was dripping down to Lester's balls now from Julia's pussy, as Lester's hard-on died down a little and the cum was fucked out of her by Jerome's thrusts.

Julia squealed like she was coming, and Roy grasped her hair, lifting her head and pulling hard on her hair to steady himself as he thrust harder.

"Here it comes," Roy whispered. "What do you say?"

"I want an ass full of cum," Julia begged. "I want a big load of cum in my ass."

"Good girl," he breathed.

And then he gave her what she was asking for.

It was only at that point that I remembered that Curtis was still there, sitting in an armchair and enjoying the scene. Now he moved. He stood up, and I could see the enormous bulge in his pants, so I knew there was only more to come.

This was how I lost track of Roy: watching Curtis as he walked around my wife, who raised herself to her knees obediently and waited as he circled her, deciding which hole to put his thick cock into. Jules' ass was dripping cum, and so was her pussy. She tossed her hair and watched Roy as he circled her, inviting him to do whatever he liked.

I could not believe what I was seeing, and I was so absorbed by the scene and my disbelief was so disorienting, that I didn't see or think about Roy. Until I felt a hand on my shoulder. It was a big paw of a hand, and it squeezed my flesh like a vice.

It sent ice water running through my veins. I knew it was him, then.

A combination of terror and humiliation surged through me, and I closed my eyes.

"Look who's back," Roy rumbled in my ear. "I see you got an eyeful. Now be a good boy, and do what I say. We don't want to make a scene, here, do we?"

I wasn't entirely sure what that meant, but it was true enough: I hadn't ought much through because of my shock, but I knew I didn't want to confront anyone about what I had just scene, least of all my wife. I think I had been hoping to sneak away.

Now Curtis was looking over Julia's naked, poised body, directly at the two of us. He grinned.

He had known I was there, also. I burned with humiliation.

Curtis took out a piece of fabric, and, nodding slightly at Roy, put it over Julia's eyes.

'Oh," Julia purred. I could hear the smile in her voice. "My," she said, as if she were some kind of Southern Belle. "What do you have planned for me?" She sounded coy and slutty.

My cock was really starting to hurt from the build-up. Watching these men take my wife had made me harder than ever before, and now I needed some kind of release.

Roy gestured for me, with one hand, to stand up.

Not knowing what else to do, I complied.

I saw Curtis smile his smile of domination and amusement. He put his fingers in Julia's hair while she oohed and aaahed.

Roy pressed his fingertips against my back, right on my spine. The message was pretty clear: he could snap me in two if I didn't do what he had asked me to. I stumbled forward, wanting to turn around and leave, but also wanting to – just a little – do what he had told me to. Even though it was humiliating as hell.

I wondered if Julia knew what was happening. She had a blind fold over her eyes, and Curtis's hands were in her hair. He was pushing and pulling her head up and down, pumping her open mouth over his huge cock. I listened to the slurping and gagging as I stood behind her and looked down at her bare ass.

The top of her ass was sticky with a few dribbles of cum. Okay, I thought. I would start there. I looked at her asshole – stretched open, it was pulsing closed and squeezing the white, creamy cum Curtis had filled her up with. And below her red, gaping hole, her shredded pussy, more white cum seeping from it and onto her thighs.

I felt another insistent push on my spine. Get it all cleaned up, Roy had said. And then you can get your reward.

The fingers pushed down gently on my shoulder. I felt my knees bending, and soon I was on them. I saw Curtis smile as he watched the scene: the husband on the ground, on his knees, ready to lick up the sum of four other men just to get a sloppy leftover from his own wife.

The slurping continued as Curtis crushed Julia's face over his cock.

Now, from where I was on my knees, it seemed easiest to start with her thighs, where cum was dripping down each of them. Almost to her knees. I began there.

Julia moaned a little when I began, but with her mouth full of cock it was a strange sound. The cum was dirty, salty, and I almost gagged. But I had to keep going if I wanted to get any real release. My cock was splitting open, and I wanted my reward.

My mouth started to fill with more and more of the sour liquid as I went further up her legs. I placed my hands on either leg and spread them a little. I could smell the scent of all the men who had been there already, filling her up.

I felt Roy's fingers prod me gently on the head. Pushing me toward my wife's pussy.

I dove in, searching out her clit with my tongue. I tried to focus on giving her pleasure, and not on the humiliation I was experiencing. And definitely not on the taste of lumberjack cum that was filling my mouth.

Her clit was fat and swollen from so much pounding and so many orgasms – I had heard every one, and the memory of their sounds filled my mind and made my cock even harder than it already was. If that was even possible.

“Suck it all out,” I heard Roy breathed behind me. “Get it all cleaned up.”

I clumsily pressed my lips together and tried to suck the hot liquid out of her, but all I succeeded in doing was making a noise that amused Curtis. I heard him chuckle. Julia's body was rocking gently back and forth as she serviced him, sucking and gagging on his cock while she mewled a little from what I was doing to her.

Did she know it was me? Did she care? Or was she just so entranced by her orgy of cock that she didn't know or care who it was that was sucking cum from her pussy?

I tried again, because the ache in my cock reminded me of how much I wanted to feel her mouth – or whatever they would let me have, around my cock. Would she let me put it all the way in, all the way to the base, the way she had let these lumberjacks throatfuck her? Or would she deny me, as she always had before? Why would she suck on my cock like it was a popsicle, and pull away when I came, but let these men spray their cum directly into her throat?

I finally managed to create enough suction to fill my mouth with cum. The taste was awful, but I fought back the desire to gag. “That's it,” Roy whispered. “Now swallow.”

I did, thinking of Julia and how I was going to grasp her hair and push her mouth down to the base of my cock. She would swallow my cum, and so it was worth it.

“Not done yet,” Roy snarled. “Still so messy.”

But I was actually looking forward to the next part. Julia's stretched asshole was still gaping enough to run my tongue easily around the rim, and as I did it, I imagined how it would feel. It made my cock even harder, and I was satisfied as I heard Julia howl in pleasure. I dipped my tongue in, where it was sour and creamy, and licked up whatever I could into my mouth. I was licking like a dog at a water bowl, my cheeks burning with humiliation, and my cock bursting with need.

I looked up at Curtis, who was watching me with amusement, a half-grin on his face. I accidentally met his eyes, and his amused look made me even more humiliated.

“You missed a spot,” he pointed with his free hand – the one that was not using my wife's head as a fuck toy – at her cum-stained ass.

I had to stand and crouch down, awkwardly, adding to the humiliation, in order to lick the cum on Julia's ass. It was partially dried, so I had to really lick to get it off.

I stood up.

Roy patted my on the shoulder. "Atta boy," he said.

Roy pointed to Curtis. "She's all cleaned up for you, man."

Curtis pulled Julia from his cock by the hair. She was panting, and she gasped as she got her first easy breaths in a while. Strings of spit stretched like glue from Curtis's cock to her mouth, and she was smiling. She kept her mouth open, ready for more. Her tongue moved out like she would lick at whatever was nearby.

"Don't worry, darlin'," Curtis told her. Then he moved around to where I had been kneeling, cleaning her up.

He pushed me toward her head.

I fumbled with my pants, suddenly nervous. Maybe she would recognize me as she took me in her mouth. And surely Roy and Curtis, with their huge cocks, would look at me and laugh at my size.

But I needed to get some kind of release. I had no choice.

"Oh!" Julia shouted, breaking up my reverie. Curtis had pushed his thick cock into her pussy, and she was loving it. "Oh, it's so big!" She started to rock back and forth. Her muscles tensed – she was going to come yet again, and so quickly, all from Curtis's gigantic cock. I looked at him. He placed two thumbs in her gaping asshole and stretched it open, looking down at it as he pulled it apart. HE was still fucking her as he did this. Then he opened his mouth, and let a glob of spit fall right into her ass.

Roy gestured at Julia's panting, mewling mouth. "Go on then, if you want it, now's the time." He chuckled. "You earned it."

I let my pants fall to the ground and inexpertly pushed my underwear down. Now I was facing Curtis, but he seemed focused on Julia's asshole, and not on me.

He gave a brief look at me as I guided my cock to Julia's open mouth. He made a kind of disdainful snort, and smiled.

For some reason, this only made me even more ready to burst.

I grabbed Julia's hair, and she let me fill her mouth up with my cock. All the way, all the way to base.

Of course, I thought. It couldn't be a problem for her. I remembered the sight of Roy's enormous, almost supernatural dick in her throat, and how I could see the bulge moving in her neck as he pounded his cum into her. He probably just sprayed it right into her stomach.

My cock barely made it to her throat. But it still felt impossibly good.

Pathetically, I was so close to coming, that I knew I was going to burst before Curtis finished with his own plans. I watched his cock moving in and out of her, getting stickier and wetter with her pussy juices again. Around my cock, I felt the vibrations of her moaning and squealing, as her orgasm built up.

I felt myself go past the point of no return. I must have only been inside of her mouth for a minute. Roy snorted, laughing, I am sure, at how quickly I came. Probably he knew that this was the kind of blowjob I never got.

Julia let my cum fill her mouth, and then she pulled her own head away so that she could squeal and moan as Curtis made her come with his big, fat cock.

I stood, helpless and humiliated, with the cum I had cleaned up drying on my cheeks and around my mouth. I watched as Julia's cum burst around Curtis's cock, splattering it with her own pleasure. The sticky sound that he had been creating in her pussy turned to juicy sloshing.

His thumbs were still stretching her ass open, pulling it apart to keep the gap supple.

I saw his plan. Now that his cock was wet, and Julia was twisting with her orgasm, he was going to fill her ass up again.

I started to pull my pants up over my hips, but Roy gave me a fierce look. I dropped them, and stood there for my final humiliation. My own limp cock, a tiny stain of cum on my pants, my wife's howling right in front of me.

While I watched her take it the ass and enjoy it, and while Roy watched me take all of this because I was too much of a wimp to do anything else.

Curtis withdrew his cock from Julia's pussy. She was still squealing and writhing from her orgasm, and so it was almost as if she didn't even notice as he slowly pushed into her ass.

But she said, "Oh!" and it was different his time. Still, she said it like she was enjoying it.

Was my cock getting hard again?

I stared, not caring how humiliating it was, at Curtis's cock, fat and pink, moving in and out of Julia's ass. Her asshole was stretched open so wide.

She stopped moaning, and started emitting a very high-pitched sound, like a hum, as Curtis packed it into her.

Slam, slam, slam, he began to pound her fiercely now. Julia gripped the table and bit her lip.

I heard Curtis give a shout, and then he pulled Julia's hip toward him, burying his cock deep, deep inside of her. I knew he was man enough to have another huge load for her. That her ass, which I had just spent so much time cleaning up, was all filled up again.

I hadn't noticed, but Roy had his cock in his hand, and he pushed me out of the way now, His hand was jerking up and down, and he was almost there. He moved in front of Julia, and started to fiddle with the blindfold.

I reacted quickly, and without thinking: I jumped back into the shadows, and hid behind a door. I didn't want Julia to see that I was the small cock she had just taken into her mouth, even if she suspected it was me. She looked up at Roy, submissive and compliant, and opened her mouth. She licked her lips and waved her tongue in the air to catch as much of the rain of cum that fell from his cock as she could.

I didn't know what else to do, but I knew I didn't want to see how this wrapped up. I certainly didn't want any more humiliation at the hands of Roy and Curtis. I slipped into the short hallway, and into the freezing night. Back to the trailer Julia and I were sharing.

CUCKOLDED IN NEW ORLEANS: MY WIFE GOES BACK TO BLACK

I was in New Orleans once, a long before I went with my wife. It was long before the hurricane, and I didn't remember the city all that well.

I had gone on a spring break trip with some guys I wasn't even that great of friends with. At the time I lived in a big, dilapidated house with cheap rent and a constantly shuffling cast of roommates. One of the jock roommate's buddies had ditched the trip at the last minute, and I had happened to be standing in the doorway of the kitchen, eating a sandwich, when they got the news.

They were drunk at the time, and they slapped me on the back and told me I could be his understudy.

These guys were "cool" guys from college, who had pretty, giggling girls traipsing in and out of their rooms all the time. I knew they were destined to ultimately be used car salesmen and burnouts, but I couldn't help wanting to have what they had – an ability to walk into a restaurant, make a girl laugh in thirty seconds by eating her french fries. I wanted pretty girls sitting in a circle around me, watching me do a stupid stunt and batting their eyes at me.

So I went to New Orleans. The guys never sobered up, so they never seemed to realize I didn't fit in with their crowd. I did my best to look like I belonged, but the girls that flocked to them ignored me. The guys seemed to forget I was even there.

Long story short, my only memories of New Orleans are of Bourbon Street between 11pm and 4am, terrible music blaring into the street, plastic cups littered all over the ground. I followed my drunk roommate and his buddies, in case they forgot to give me a ride back to school. I gave apologetic looks to the smashed, trashy girls they had just insulted or felt up.

My wife was originally from New Orleans, but we had never gone back there as a couple. Her parents had moved away temporarily, and she said it made her too depressed to see it after Katrina. But an aunt of hers passed away, and she wanted to go back for the funeral. I wasn't really looking forward to it – my image of New Orleans was ruined by my experiences there with the Spring Break jocks.

But a funeral is a funeral. What can you do?

It was early July. The heat was unbearable; I was soaked through my shirt and near passing out just standing in front of the airport, waiting for a car she had ordered. There was also this deeply humidified, swampy smell that was choking me.

Laurie, however, seemed unperturbed by the heat, even though she had been living in Chicago for the past ten years. She had been her usual self on the plane, but since she had stepped off, she had acquired a completely different air about her. I had a hard time putting my finger on it. She was just more...Southern. She was standing differently, still and not breaking a sweat at all, waiting for the cab with a superhuman patience.

"Lawad," I said, meaning to imitate a New Orleans accent and getting only a cross side-eyed look from Laurie. "How long is this car gonna take?"

Laurie turned to me without turning her body and looked me up and down.

"You sound like Foghorn Leghorn," she snipped. She turned back to where she was staring out at nothing in particular. "Everything takes longer here."

She wasn't kidding. I had ordered a bottle of water at an airport cafe and it had actually taken five minutes for the girl at the counter to get the water and ring me up. Just because she had moved so slowly. And unapologetic ally.

I gestured at the line of cabs picking up passengers about 100 feet from us. I did it weakly, because the heat had by now sucked away my will to live.

"Why don't we just get a cab?"

"Shitty air conditioning," she said. She was still looking out at the drab airport surrounds. "Go wait inside if you're too hot."

It's important to interject here that this is not my wife's usual personality. She wasn't usually so bossy.

It was hot. Not weather-hot; hot-hot.

I refrained, however, from making this comment, because Laurie did not seem to be going for my jokes right now.

It was unnerving how different she seemed, but it was also fun. If I hadn't been so irritated by how hot it was outside, I would have enjoyed just watching her. Men, who were obviously from New Orleans, passed us, and looked directly at her. They seemed to sense that she belonged somehow.

They gave her the head nod, and she gave it back.

Then they looked her up and down.

There's nothing like watching other men watching your wife to make you remember how hot she is.

As I was thinking about all of this, a group of black men passed us and turned around after they did, looking right at Laurie's ass. Laurie turned to them, and I was expecting her usual dark look, the one she reserved for cat-callers in Chicago. Instead she smiled. One of the men said something like, "Mmmmhmmmmmm," and sucked on his lower lip. "Lookin' fine," he added.

Laurie made this strange face, one I had never seen before. It was...what was it? Flirtatious? Whatever it was, it was a completely different reaction. "I watched the two men disappear and turned back to her. "What was that all about?"

"When in Rome," she said, casually, without looking at me.

The interaction was disturbing me and turning me on, but I was too hot to think much about it. I sighed. I was going to die on this sidewalk.

Just as I started to despair, a black car pulled up and rescued us from the heat. I collapsed in the air conditioning. I felt like I was hardening, like melted jello put back in the fridge.

I looked out the window at the city, which even five years later seemed to have had a disaster take place a month ago. New Orleans seemed to be falling apart in every way, melting and crumbling into the ground, being eaten by mold and decay. It was like this before, I remembered. It wasn't a place that people moved to. The trendy stores, the clean, lighted signs, the bland comforts of box stores and chain restaurants and coffee shops that you see spouting up practically everywhere else—nowhere to be found.

The car disappeared into a maze of one-way streets and the houses began to get larger. It felt like we were going back in time. We stopped in front of an enormous white house with a huge porch and second-floor balcony held aloft by thick columns. The shutters were black. Enormous trees obscured the house and the yard.

I let out a low whistle.

Laurie ignored me and paid the cabbie. They had an unintelligible conversation. Was it me, or was my wife's accent getting stronger?

The heat clawed at me from outside, so I let the door half-close while I waited for them to finish. They were laughing and yelling by the time the conversation finished, and I still had no idea what they had said.

The cab drove off with a friendly honk, and I looked at Laurie, who was looking at the house.

"Friendly town," I said.

“Ebony Fest is in town,” she said. “I forgot about that.”

“What?”

“Ebony Fest. Essence Fest. It's a music festival.” She began walking to through the gate of the enormous house, as if she didn't think I needed any more explanation about that.

At the time, I didn't.

I followed, wheeling my luggage, which caught on every crack in the unearthed sidewalk. I saw that my wife was carrying hers, and followed suit.

We were staying at her aunt's house, which had now been left to a cousin. The home had been in the family for centuries, the cousin informed me within five seconds. I was just thankful it had air conditioning.

“You must be tired after that flight,” her cousin said. “Come on and nehmnuh hadya porch nanya en henthuh sweet tea.”

I frowned and looked to Laurie to translate for me, but she just looked into a mirror in the hallway and dabbed some sweat from her brow.

Something about her was really getting strange. The way she dabbed at her forehead. There was something about the motion of her wrist, the delicate way she did it. She didn't do things like that.

I noticed that she did it with a handkerchief, which she put back in her purse.

I stopped myself from saying anything about the handkerchief, even though a joke about the South occurred to me, since she had cut me down to size at the airport and in the cab. But she was beginning to unnerve me.

I followed Laurie to the porch, stepping hard on my desire to protest the idea of “sweet tea,” which Laurie had always assured me was disgusting.

Also, I had no desire to go back into that heat. Ann, the cousin, must have seen my dismay, because she announced suddenly that there were misters and a fan that would keep me cool.

At least I think that's what she said.

Laurie waved impatiently in my direction and called me something I couldn't understand, which elicited a laugh from Ann and only made me more annoyed by my wife's new personality.

I sat there for about five minutes before I felt like I would die from heat stroke. I watched Laurie. Everything seemed different about her: the way she sipped her tea. She was doing everything at about half the speed she would normally do it. And she seemed oblivious to my discomfort.

My wife's sudden southernness was putting me in a foul mood. She hated sugar, so I had no idea what she was doing sitting on a porch and drinking sweet tea. I also couldn't understand fifty percent of what she was saying.

"Excuse me," I said, doing my best not to sound like I was pouting. "I have to get inside."

Both of them laughed, as if sharing some kind of joke. Laurie put her hand on my arm, which was the friendliest gesture she had made since we'd arrived. But then she called me a Yankee, so it felt like a wash.

Upstairs, I sighed and gave myself an a good talking-to within my own mind. What the hell was I getting so mad about? It wasn't as if I didn't know she was from New Orleans. It also wasn't as if she was doing anything that I could specifically find irritating, if I was being fair.

What was it?

I felt left out, like she was blowing me off somehow. It was strange, because it was almost as if she had turned into another person as soon as the air hit her on the jetway. The dank, overheated swamp-air.

I decided I was being a baby because I was hungry and tired. I hated traveling.

I sat on the edge of the bed, frowning at myself in the mirror. I was hungry but I had too much pride to go back downstairs and get some food.

So I fell back on the bed and fell asleep, feeling like an ass.

I was disoriented when I woke up,. The room was dark by that time, and I had forgotten where I was. The sharp cackle of a woman laughing woke me up. I sat up on the bed and looked around the room.

More laughter bounced around in the high-ceilinged rooms.

The memories of the day slowly seeped back into my mind, and I went to the bathroom and splashed cold water on my face. The air conditioner was barely able to keep up with the heat, and it was still a little muggy and warm in the room. I had sweat on my back.

Whatever was going on downstairs, there were quite a few people down there. They were all laughing and yelling a little too loudly, like they'd had a lot to drink.

Great, I thought. I knew I didn't know anyone down there: Laurie's friends from New Orleans, she had explained many times, never left the city.

Apparently you either moved away or you stayed there – all the time. I felt a silly rush of irritation that Laurie hadn't come to get me. Now I was going to have to go downstairs, after taking a nap like some kind of princess, and meet people who were three drinks ahead of me and had already begun the evening.

I thought about just staying upstairs.

But my stomach rumbled, and the scent of something cooking was reaching my nostrils.

I put on a clean shirt and went downstairs.

A group of people were sitting on the couch, and they were laughing and speaking in their incomprehensible accents, but when they saw me coming down the stairs, they all fell quiet.

I did not see Laurie anywhere.

Three of the men in the room were very good-looking, very large black gentlemen, and their faces went completely serious. A very exotic-looking black woman with an incredible afro smiled at me, but not with any particular friendliness. A white guy with a baseball cap on dipped a cracker into a dip. No one said anything for an awkward thirty seconds or so.

“You must be Ethan,” the woman finally said.

I thought one of the guys raised his eyebrows, and I felt certain I heard the muffled snort of a laugh.

“Yeah, hi,” I said. Somehow even this short sentence managed to sound awkward. “I’m Laurie’s husband.”

“Lau-rie!” one of the black guys yelled unexpectedly. “Best come in here, get your man. He look white as a ghost come down here find all these black folk on the couch!”

This was accompanied by an appreciative round of laughter from the group. Everyone smiled at me, and the woman waved the guy off and told me not pay attention to him. But their “joke” seemed half serious, and their friendly laughter seemed half at my expense.

I tried to play it off, nodding my head enthusiastically and holding my hands up to try and be funny. Like, you got me.

It didn't play very well; I could see myself as I did it and I looked like a jackass. The group seemed to fold up back into their conversation, leaving me to come down the stairs and begin searching for Laurie.

I was just being paranoid, I told myself. Paranoid, and fairly racist.

I was hungry. I needed a snack.

Laurie was in the kitchen with a glass of wine in her hand, and if her rosy cheeks and loud voice were any indication, it was her third or fourth. She looked up at me as I walked in the room but her mouth kept moving to finish what she was saying to another very attractive black woman. Then she smiled at me and blew me a kiss. “Hey, honey.”

Hey. Stranger and stranger still.

I stood by the counter and surveyed the food. It all looked delicious but I also had no idea what any of it was. I tried a “That was a long nap,” she said. “Hurry up and have a snack. We're going out to dinner.”

I ate something from the table that was so hot I started crying, which amused everyone. It actually ended up being a good thing, because the whole group seemed to enjoy smacking me on the back and telling me how people from up north shouldn't just dive in like that. Laurie's friend, Shanna, the sexy black woman she had been enjoying wine with, stood up as soon as she saw me eat it, located, peeled, and force-fed me a banana. Then she sat back down without comment, as if this kind of thing happened all the time.

The only good to come out of that incident was that the atmosphere eased up a little. I had a few beers and stood around talking. Everyone in the room was a friend from high-school or high school days. I had nothing to contribute to the conversation, so I was able to drink a few beers and try to catch up.

Apparently “Hurry up,” in Cajun meant, we have an hour or so, because no one made any move to leave for quite some time.

And then:

“You know Trey's coming out, Laure?” one of the tall, gorgeous black men said.

The way everyone was saying her name, it sounded like Lowahr.

The two guys on the chairs, who were sitting with their legs spread open to maximize the space they were taking up in the room, snapped their fingers and made a juvenile whooooo-hooo sound.

I looked at my wife. The wine glass she was bringing to her lips stopped in mid-air. I could see color creeping over her cheeks, and her eyes dilated so noticeably that I could see it from across the room. She looked like a girl in middle-school blushing about a teacher she had a crush on. It was that obvious. Even from where I was standing.

She seemed to suddenly realize what she was doing, so she took a sip of wine to cover it up – uselessly- and then set it on the table, trying and failing to look only mildly interested.

I was trying to look unsurprised and uninterested as well, but I was neither of these things. I had never heard of Trey before.

I could feel one of the guy's eyes on me, enjoying the fact that I was so obviously getting broad-sided by this conversation.

“What's he doin now, anyway?” Laurie said.

“Girl,” Shanna began. “He gotem a beyarah nah neerya...” I stopped trying to understand what she was saying. Apparently Trey was doing quite well, whatever all of it meant, because everyone was nodding their heads in approval as she told my wife all about it.

Laurie's eyes lit up. “Really?! That's so great for him!” She seemed genuinely happy.

Maybe, I thought, it was a friendly, brother-and-sister-y kind of of relationship.

“Mmmmmhmmmm,” one of the guys said, smiling. The way he said it burst my bubble.

He looked at me and nodded his head in my direction. “Better watch out, Ethan.”

More general laughter. Laurie shook her head at me when I looked at her questioningly.

“They're just teasing you sweetheart,” she said. For a moment, she seemed like her old self. She reached over and rubbed my arm and batted her eyes at me.

“You know what we should do?” Shanna declared. She put her hand on Laurie's knee. “Let's go on down there to his place. It's good - “

“Shit, girl, I can't eat at no five-star place -”

“Oh he'll hook us up,” Shanna assured him. “Come on now, he'll be so happy to see Laurie. She get us a discount, ain't that right, Laure?”

I understood all of this perfectly. I understood, also, the blush that washed over my wife's face. She was really getting heated up about this guy.

And with that, it seemed to be done.

I grabbed a beer and slammed it to try and keep up with the party, which was suddenly set in motion, Everyone was standing up, the music got turned up, people started dancing.

I had been planning, as the evening wore on and seemed to be getting longer and longer on what Shanna had called, “Nola time,” to excuse myself and go to bed, and fume about Laurie's strange behavior.

But now there seemed to be something else going on.

Now I felt like I needed to go. I knew it was silly, but I didn't know who this Trey character was. The fact that Laurie had never said anything about him was burning at the back of my mind – why hadn't she ever mentioned him? She had at least mentioned nearly everyone here, at some point, in some passing story about her past.

But I knew I had never heard Trey's name. And I knew there was some kind of romance between them in the past.

My wife had told me that she had revealed everything about her past loves and boyfriends.

But there had never been mention of Trey.

The group was slowly stumbling and laughing toward the door. By now almost everything they were saying was unintelligible, either because of their accents or because it referred to places and times I knew nothing about, or partially because they were drunk and yelling.

I found an opportunity as everyone was looking for their shoes or their keys, and grabbed Laurie to pull her aside.

“Who's this Trey guy?” I said. I tried my best to sound like I was making a half-joke, and to be light-hearted. Shanna walked by us and raised her eyebrows, making a face that said, Ooooh, Laurie, now you busted.

Laurie still had glass of wine in her hand. “Oh, god,” she said dismissively, before downing it. “That was such a long time ago...”

“Should you take it easy on the wine?” I said. “And what do you mean - “ Laurie had already turned away, and started yelling drunkenly, “Okay, let's go get us some ETOUFFE!”

Or something like that.

I told myself I was being ridiculous. I sucked it up, and I followed them out the door. Because I was definitely not letting my drunk wife go out on the town in New Orleans, with some mysterious ex boyfriend whose name made her blush – not without me.

Not that I knew what I would do about this guy Trey.

My stomach started to feel like I had swallowed a ball of ice before we even got to the sidewalk. I knew I was in for a night of humiliation. I just didn't know how much.

We were sitting inside a trendy restaurant. It was small and crowded, and seemed to attract a lot of people from out of town as well as locals. We had been waiting in a line outside until Shanna had approached the maitre' d and told him, I supposed, that we knew the infamous Trey.

We were escorted immediately inside, and three bottle of wine were immediately on our table.

The talk immediately turned to how successful Trey was, how generous he was, and how he didn't forget about his friends. How it couldn't happen to a better guy. Stories about Trey and how great he was followed. All the time, Laurie's eyes misted over more and more, and she drifted down memory lane with a faint smile on her lips.

"There he is," Shanna whispered in Laurie's ear. By now Shanna was so drunk that any whispering she did was practically shouting.

I was still trying to pretend to be aloof and disinterested like Laurie, hoping to salvage my dignity a little, but I knew Shanna was talking about Trey and my head almost snapped as I followed her pointing finger.

At first it wasn't immediately obvious where she was pointing. The restaurant was crowded and everyone in it was as boisterous as our group. But through the waving hands and tipped back heads I saw him: the clean white chef's uniform against his ebony skin.

He was a tall man, I could tell because I few people were standing around him and they all looked incredibly short. His skin was extremely dark, almost actually black. My heart sank. Of course he had to look like this: tall, so dark he was black, and unnervingly handsome.

His eyes were on Laurie, even before she turned around.

His eyes were on Laurie and they were all over Laurie. They moved over her body like he was giving her a massage.

I could see the same reaction in him as I did in Laurie back at the house. Except his was much more sexual. He brought his lips together and pressed them tight, and blew off whoever he was talking to, never taking his eyes off Laurie.

He swaggered over to the table.

"Look. At. This," he said. "Little Laurie. All gown up and lookin' fine."

Laurie stood up, and put each of her hands in his outstretched palms, and then twisted herself back and forth so he could look at her. In this really inappropriate way. Like she really wanted him to get an eyeful of her. And he was definitely taking her up on the opportunity.

I cringed. It was pretty embarrassing. Also, I seemed to have completely disappeared as far as anyone at the table was concerned.

I was really starting to feel like an ass, but I had no idea what to do to get things under control.

If I said I was leaving, I would look like a child, for one thing. For another, Laurie probably wouldn't notice or care. And if I stayed, I was going to look like exactly what I was: a wimpy white man whose wife was getting ogled by a bunch of black studs right in front of his face, because I was too much of a pussy to do anything about it.

Trey reached across the table, without taking his eyes off Laurie's body, which he was practically stroking with his gaze, and fist-bumped Anthony. His arm was so long he didn't have to lean at all, but he did, moving closer to Laurie. She didn't move away, but instead let herself be pressed close to his chest. I saw that his shirt was tight around some well-sculpted muscles as well. "Hey man what's up," he said to Anthony. But his attention was all on Laurie.

Laurie gushed. "I can't believe this place is all yours!"

I wondered if she was ever going to introduce me, or if Trey even wondered who the small, withered white guy sitting at this table was.

I knew I should stand up and say, "I'm Ethan. Laurie's husband." But I was stuck to my chair, and I worried that I would be too flustered and look like more of idiot than I already appeared to be. Also, I had a feeling I was five or six inches shorter than the towering mountain of a man in front of me.

Was it better to just act like I was cool with all of this?

But I knew it wouldn't fly. I knew that I was coming across as exactly what I was.

"I don't have time to set wich y'all right now," he was saying, when I came back from my own mind to the scene in front of me, "But I'm coming out later. If you'll be around." He was talking in a low voice, almost directly to Laurie, and by now the two of them had moved closer and closer together. I looked down and saw that they were still holding hands from their first embrace.

I could feel my cheeks getting hot, and I prayed that they were not turning red. I set my jaw so that I would at least look angry and not just like a jackass.

I was so mad at Laurie I could hardly see straight.

There was another feeling, too, and the combination was making me feel a little ill: I was also incredibly turned on. I both wanted to see this all play out, and I was savoring the images my mind was creating of Trey and Laurie together, back in the day, his black skin pressed up against her body with his huge cock inside of her....

But there was also the pain of watching the whole thing unfold in front of me.

But Trey, thankfully, disappeared for the rest of the night.

Laurie was a few seats over, so I couldn't talk to her very easily.

It was probably better that way.

Shanna ordered me a glass of milk, and everyone laughed. But I ended up needing it after I ate my first bite of jambalaya. Which I was annoyed to find to be absolutely delicious, even if it was from Trey's kitchen.

It was almost twelve by the time dinner wrapped up, and I was getting moodier and moodier. I couldn't understand anything that anyone was saying by now, and so I was just sitting with my smart phone, which wasn't actually working, swiping at the screen and pretending to be absorbed in whatever I was seeing.

I wanted to go home, but I knew I couldn't. I knew I would be filled with rage and jealousy, and curiosity, if I went home alone and thought about what Laurie was doing all night with her ex-boyfriend Trey.

So when everyone got up, talking excitedly about how much fun they were about to have, I got up as well.

I felt like a complete outsider. I didn't belong with this group or even know what was going on. Everyone else was in a great mood, and I could barely hide my shitty one.

Laurie came up next to me, and looped her arm through mine at just the moment I felt like I was going to melt down.

"Honey-bunny," she said, using her nickname for when I was in a foul mood. It was so ridiculous it almost always made me laugh. But not tonight. Still, I was grateful she was next to me.

Still, she was looking very hot in her low-cut black dress.

Still, I reminded myself, she was my wife.

I started to feel better. She nudged me and smiled at me, and gave me a quick kiss on the mouth.

“Sweetie, you look exhausted. If you want to go home, just go ahead.”

This sent a surge of anger to my temples, but it also intrigued me. Now she seemed to want me to leave.

Maybe she was planning something with Trey. Trey the gorgeous black man. Maybe she had a thing for him and had never gotten over it.

Maybe she just liked black men and had never gotten over that.

“No,” I said coyly. I wasn't going to give what she wanted, no way. “No, I really want to go out.”

She rolled her eyes a little. “To EbonyFest.” She said it like it was the most ridiculous thing she'd ever heard.

“Yeah. It's music, right? Yeah, no, I want to get out. Paint the town red.”

I was deliberately making myself sound like more of a stuffed-shirt white guy, just to irritate her. I wanted her to have some sense that I knew what she was up to.

She shrugged. “Okay.”

And we all went out into the still-hot night, and began walking downtown.

Laurie's incredulity about me going to Ebony Fest was well-warranted. It was basically the most awkward place for a man like me to be imaginable, especially – but especially while waiting for my wife's gorgeous black ex-boyfriend to show up.

It was all soul music, R&B, jazz, or any other kind of music that white guys have no business dancing to, and everyone was dancing. Which left me two choices: to dance and make an ass of myself, and possibly accidentally hit someone in the face and get he shit kicked out of me. Or to stand in a corner and look like an idiot while my wife hit the dance floor.

All the men – who were all black with the exception of Jay, the very cool white guy from our group, who found himself a girl to dance with and blended right in in five minutes – were black, and all the men were looking at me with either outright hostility or were laughing at me.

The same went for the ladies, who looked me up and down and either burst into laughter with a group of girlfriends or moved closer to their hot, strong, better choice of a man, happy they weren't stuck with me.

It was probably the worst humiliation I had suffered in my life. I tried telling myself I was imagining things, and then I tried telling myself I was being the worst kind of racist, and then I just tried to control the heat that was streaking my face.

To make matters worse, Laurie was out dancing.

I had never seen her dance like that. She was grinding with men, pushing her ass into their crotches, letting them put their hands on her waist and her hips.

I was infuriated. She was acting like she had never even met me, let alone married me.

But there was the other thing: it was also turning me on, watching her. She seemed like another woman. She was sweating and her skin was shining in the lights on the dance floor. Her hair was damp and tangled and she looked like she had just been ravished.

And all of the men around her, looking at her tits, holding her hips, feeling her round ass in their crotch. I wondered if they were as turned on as I was. I wondered if their cocks were hard against her ass. I couldn't believe what she was doing.

Still, I told myself, watching her gyrating on the dance floor, black skin next to hers, dance partners moving in on her and moving out as she moved on to the next guy: this was just the way people were dancing. Everyone (except me, of course) was dancing like this.

I went to the bar to get another drink. It took a long time, because everyone just kept pushing me out of the way and ordering ahead of me.

When I got back to where I had decided to stand, I saw that Laurie was still up to more of the same. I couldn't see anyone else from our group. I wondered if I should just go grab Laurie and make her go home.

And then I saw him.

He was taller than anyone else on the dance floor, so he was easy to spot. Even though he had changed his clothes, from his chef whites to a silky gray shirt and jeans that made him look like a fashion model, his panther-like walk was unmistakable.

Also, his face – handsome, rugged, intense – was burned into my memory already.

He moved with ease through the grinding crowd. He had the stern look and the built physique that made other men move out of his way, while women watched him with lust. Even the hardest-looking guys parted so he could pass.

And he was heading right for Laurie.

Time seemed to slow down. Laurie was dancing with her eyes closed, indifferent to which man she was grinding with. But every now and then she opened her eyes and looked around, before going back to her bump and grind. When she saw Trey, however, the electricity between them was obvious, as if it could actually be seen in the air. Like a magnet between the two of them, the force pushing everyone around them out of the way.

As Trey approached Laurie, the men who were dancing with her backed away.

I took a sip of my drink – it was watered down, and not what I had ordered, and terrible, but I needed to look like I was doing something.

Contemplating how I was going to make some suave mood to break up my wife and her ex-whatever, and not look like an idiot.

For Laurie and Trey, it was as if the entire room had disappeared. Laurie lifted her arms up and just sort of slid into the rhythm of Trey's body. They looked like they had been dancing together for decades. Sweat was glistening on Laurie's skin, and strands of her hair were stuck to her face and her forehead. Her breasts were particularly obvious in that crowd, because she was one of the very few white girls on the dance floor, and her skin stood out in the bright light.

Trey had his hands – his large, muscular hands – all over her. The fact that she was married seemed to either have escaped or not matter.

The fact that they hadn't seen each other in ten years also seemed to not matter.

“Sexual Healing” by Marvin Gaye came on, and I felt all of the conflicting feelings inside of me crash together as though I had hit a brick wall: Trey and Laurie slowed, melting into each other, Laurie's back up against him. For a moment I could imagine how hard his chest must have felt, especially compared to me.

He was bending his neck down, next to her ear.

I wondered what he was saying to her. My cock twitched as I thought of the tantalizing dirty possibilities.

What the hell was I thinking?

Why wasn't I doing anything about what was happening right in front of my own eyes?

Laurie seemed to have completely forgotten she had ever left New Orleans, or married me.

I stared in disbelief as she snaked her body sexily against Trey's black skin. I watched his hands moving all over hips, her stomach, her thighs...I blinked. Did I see this right? Was he actually moving his hands up to cup her breasts?

I squinted.

Like I was in a movie, Anthony appeared in front of me and blocked my view. He held a drink in his hand and pushed it toward me. He yelled something at me, but I couldn't hear over the music. I wanted to see more of my wife with Trey, as much to keep an eye on the situation as to enjoy the show. I nodded at Anthony, even though I had no idea what he said, and he leaned in closer.

"Nah man, I said why ain't you dancin'? You gonna let a brother move in on your old lady like that?"

I didn't say anything, and he laughed in my face.

Then he saw an attractive girl walk by, and his eyes led him away with her without saying goodbye to me.

When I looked out to the dance floor, Trey and my wife were gone.

I slammed the drink, and started to push into the crowd. At first I did so with my apologetic, timid politeness, trying not upset anyone and get my ass kicked.

But as I pushed through the crowd, I started to feel high. I was drunker than I had been in a long time. Waves of intense feeling rolled over me: euphoria, and I started to dance! Anger, and I pushed someone out of the way! I started to get strange and aggravated looks from everyone around me.

What was I doing? I was looking for Laurie.

I turned to a guy standing next to me and told him that. "I'm looking for my wife. She's off fucking some black guy."

I felt like my mouth was a separate person. I wanted to close it, but I couldn't.

I kept moving into the crowd, across the dance floor and to the other side of the club.

By the time I got to the other side, I knew I was going to pass out. I saw Anthony, and Jay. They moved toward me, and the last thing I can remember from that club was both of them laughing and saying, got you buddy.

I sort of remember a cab ride, and puking in the street. I must have had way more than I thought.

And then I blacked out.

When I woke up I was in the room back at the house we staying at. Again, I was horribly disoriented. The events of the night came back to me with each swing of the hammering headache I had. I didn't really know how I had gotten home.

I was still clothed.

And then, right through my torso, a terrible and sexy pain ripped through me: Laurie. Trey.

The images of the two of them on the dance floor filled my head.

I sat up.

I needed some aspirin. Where the hell was Laurie?

I looked at a clock. It was practically 5am.

I stood up and stumbled unsteadily to the door of the room. I crept out, not wanting to wake anyone and suffer the consequences of their ridicule for whatever I had done last night.

Or maybe I knew what I was going to walk into, and I just wanted to sneak up on it. It's hard to know what I was thinking right before this happened.

In the kitchen, I heard a sound coming from the living room off to the side.

The French doors were closed, but I heard it distinctly: a man's voice.

Then a moan. A female moan, high and feline.

My heart began to pound.

I set the glass down, and I moved toward the door, over the creaky floorboards.

I opened the door with some difficulty, trying to keep it from screeching and disturbing whoever was in inside.

But I knew who was inside. I knew it was Laurie. I could tell it was her – her moaning, its breathy quality, was unmistakable. Though it had been a long time since she had made a sound like that for me.

When I opened the door, the first thing I could see were the shadows of their two bodies on the wall. I couldn't believe it, and I didn't know why, but this stung the most: they had taken the time to light candles. For some reason this plunged a knife into my heart, but the pain felt strangely good. I heard another long, breathy moan from Laurie. I stared at the shadows on the wall before pressing on. I tried to figure out how they were positioned. Would they see me if I kept walking in?

Because now that it was all falling down around me, and clear that Laurie was cheating on me – I didn't want to stop it. I wanted to see it.

I heard Laurie's voice – the guttural, moaning, mewling voice that says only things like uuuhhhn and oh oh oh, in a half-broken, half-nasal, howl.

Again. Uuuuuhn ahhh uuuhn oooooooooohhhhh.

I stepped into the room. There was a Chinese room partition blocking of a small entryway, and I was grateful, because it was going to give me the perfect place to watch. I moved close to it and peered through the crack where it folded.

A sharp electrified bolt coursed through me – my stomach went cold and my cock throbbed. The scene in front of me was as hot as it was painful. I blinked.

Laurie was sitting on top of Trey's lap on the couch, and her shirt was still on, and so were her jeans, so they must have just started whatever they had started. But Trey's head was bent over, and her shirt was pulled down to expose her breasts. He was licking them, making big circles on my wife's nipples while he held her with one hand and she tipped her head back in abandon. Her nipples were hard and she mewled again, as if he had his tongue right on her clit.

Then she sat up, and started to take off her shirt.

But she paused.

Was she going to think about her wedding vows now? Perhaps she was going to remember me, and tell Trey that she couldn't do this.

Strangely, as I thought of her doing that, and my lips moved in a silent plea, I also felt disappointment.

Whatever it was that had made her pause, she shook it away, and off came her shirt.

Trey made an appreciative sound, and then he pushed her back on to the couch and leaned over her to unbutton her jeans.

He slid them off.

He stood over her, smiling, and began to unfasten his belt.

I opened my mouth. I wanted to scream, to say something, but I couldn't. Part of it was fear – and the other part was just...well, I wanted to watch this big, muscled, ebony man fuck my wife. I almost couldn't believe my own desire to see that. It didn't matter: either reason held me paralyzed as I watched Trey take off his pants.

Of course. His cock was huge. It hung, only half-hard, way down his thigh. Laurie was looking right at it. The expression her face made me harder. It was actually good to see her hungry for something sexual, even though it wasn't me. In fact, the pain of her sexual appetite retuning as it seemed to be, now that she saw her old flame, now that she saw his huge, black cock – was also pumping blood into my cock. It turned me on.

But Trey moved onto the couch and pulled her legs apart. He dipped his head down, and pulled her up with a jerk.

The sound of Laurie's bawling made it to my ears before I even registered what he was doing with my eyes.

I watched as he pulled apart the pink folds of her pussy with his dark fingers, and then moved his tongue to pleasure her.

Laurie was twisting on the couch, making mewling and purring noises like a cat. She clawed at the pillow beneath her head. I could see every muscle in her body straining against her skin.

“Oh my god,” she moaned in a whisper. “Oh my fucking god. That's just how I like it, oh god I've missed that so much. Oh...fuuuuuuck....”

She held her own thighs by the knees, and open. The big, dark man buried his head in between my wife's legs. His head began to bob up and down as he put the final touches on his pussy-licking, and Laurie's legs wobbled and swung wildly as she tossed her hair around on the pillow and screamed and moaned. “Oh, baby, yes, right there!”

There was something about the way she was doing this that gave me the impression it was not the first time Trey had licked her pussy. The memory of her not telling me about him flitted around in my mind, stinging sharply and beautifully. I pushed my hand into my own pants. My cock was excruciatingly hard by now.

Laurie's screams crescendoed, and she screeched and hollered about how much she loved it just. Like. That! Now she wasn't really trying to be quiet. She seemed to have given herself over to wild abandon. She could probably be heard everywhere in the house. She screamed, and her legs twitched, and I knew she was coming harder than she had in a long time – her chest was heaving and she was moaning lightly. She pushed Trey's face away from her, smiling.

I took my own cock out of my pants. Secretly, or maybe not so secretly, I hoped they weren't finished. And yet I hoped they were.

But they were not. The man stood up to his full, enormous height. His mouth was moving, but his voice was deep and low, and I couldn't hear what he was saying, except for the word fuck.

Laurie, for her part, had flipped over in a sexy, cat-like move, and had her ass turned to him. She kicked her feet up from the edge of the couch playfully. She tossed her hair over her shoulder and looked back at him. She was smiling and opening her mouth and licking her lips. Her heels were still on and she looked like such a sex kitten.

In fact, for a moment she suddenly didn't even look like my wife.

I had to think: was I imagining everything? Maybe I was the one who was delusional, and this hot woman had never married me.

I looked down at my wedding ring on the hand around my cock.

I looked up, and sure enough, on her finger where her hand was braced against the couch, was the diamond that I had bought her.

It seemed so small.

I couldn't believe she hadn't bothered to take it off.

Now I could see Trey's cock clearly, and it was rock solid. A big, long, thick black snake at attention in front of him. And just inches from Laurie's waiting pussy, which she was twisting around seductively in front of him. Her eyes were focused on his cock, I could see, and they widened and she licked her lips appreciatively. She sat up a little, leaning back with her hand reaching backwards to grasp his hard flesh in her hand. She found it and she smiled. "Oh," she exclaimed. "Oh, it's too big!"

Her voice was carrying everywhere, it seemed. Everyone could hear this. My cock throbbed. Something about that was turning me on, too.

The tip of his cock was nearing her fleshy ass now, and he pulled on her hair to press her head and her back up against him – my god, he really was gigantic man, Laurie's head barely came up to his pecs. She still had his cock in her hand, so she pressed her hips forward to give herself room to keep stroking it.

"That's it," I saw his mouth say, and barely heard the deep rumble of his voice. "That's it little girl. Stroke that cock."

"It's so big," Laurie gasped. "It's too big. I can't take it all!"

What a show. She was gasping and breathing heavy, moving her hips up and down, and that voice. It was as if she had a cock in her mouth and a cock in her ass and was begging for someone to fuck her more, as if she was already having an orgasm. She was squeaking and sighing and breathy and pornographic. I rubbed my own cock lightly, wanting to come already, but not wanting to watch the show flaccid and sticky with my own cum. He jerked on her hair and grabbed one of her asscheeks with his enormous hand, pulling her ass towards his cock. Laurie continued to complain that it was too big, but her hand guided him to where he could slip himself right in.

“OH GOD!” Laurie screamed, in a low growl, as he began to enter her. But he was taking his time, and only a few inches of his enormous slab were between her legs already. “Oh!” she squealed. “Oh, it hurts! It's too big for me!”

But her voice, of course, indicated that it was just the right size for her, and her mouth was open in gasp of pleasure.

He released her hair and she fell forward, but she made no move to get away. Instead she pushed herself backwards, sliding onto that enormous cock and moaning as she did.

She turned her head and looked back at it, and I could see that she loved looking at it.

And then the guys echoed my thoughts, and pushed her hair out of the way. “You like that, don't you Laurie baby?”

Now his voice was loud, easy to hear. Laurie moaned, oh yes, and started to push herself back and forth, back and forth. She cried and mewled as she did this, biting her lip and saying over and over how big and thick his cock was, and how she just couldn't take any more.

Then, with her head still turned, she looked directly at the room divider.

My stomach filled with what felt like a cold liquid. I stepped back, trying to decide if there was any way she could see me in the shadows.

No way.

She wasn't looking at me. She couldn't be.

But her eyes didn't look away, and she was still staring, and it seemed as if it was right through the cracks.

How could she know I was here?

Just then, she licked her lips, staring at where she either could or couldn't see me, and said:

“Oh, god. Oh yes! Mike can't do this for me at all. Oh fuck, his cock is so small, I've missed your cock so much!”

Trey was suddenly impatient, unable to wait for Laurie's moaning movements over his cock. He grabbed her hips and began to pump at her furiously. I ripped my eyes away from Laurie's stare to watch the black cock where it entered her – sinking into her skin, then out, then in again.

No condom.

It occurred to me suddenly, and sent another sharp, hot knife of pain and pleasure through me. This big, athletic, black man was about to pump my wife full of his cum.

“Not yet,” Laurie breathed. She pulled herself off of him, and he looked a little bewildered, before he saw what she wanted to do. She opened her mouth and reached out to take him in her mouth.

All the way. She opened her mouth nice and wide and just swallowed his entire cock, all the way to the back of her throat.

Now the room had gone fairly silent, and all I could hear was Trey's heavy breathing, and occasionally his voice saying, “Oh yeah,” in his deep baritone. Mostly, however, I could hear the sticky sound of my wife's throat accommodating a huge black cock.

She slurped on it, and sucked on it, and bobbed her head enthusiastically over it.

I saw Trey's muscles tense, thinking he was going to burst in her mouth and I would see all of his white cum splattering from either side of his cock and onto my wife's face.

But she released him, and she turned around again, spreading her legs and holding her ass open for him. I could see her engorged pussy, and her tight asshole.

And then his big, thick cock in his hand, heading for her pussy.

Bare and full of cum, that he was apparently going to fill her up with, just like she was asking.

“Fill me up with your hot cum,” Laurie murmured, but ever so loudly, just then – as if she were reading my thoughts. “Fill my pussy up with all that hot, hot cum!”

I began to stroke my own cock furiously, almost as furiously as that beast began to thrust his huge stick into Laurie. He lifted a hand and slapped Laurie on the ass, and the smack cracked through the whole house, echoing off the brick exteriors. “Ride that cock!” he growled. I focused in on how that must have sounded throughout the house, how everyone who was there now could hear my squealing wife and the deep rumble of the black landscaper.

And Laurie complied, gyrating her hips in rhythm with his.

I looked back to her face. She was still smiling that evil little smile, looking right at where I was standing.

A cold liquid fear snaked through me again. Did she know where I was?

“Oh, spank me again!” she screamed.

Another slap, and she rolled her eyes in pleasure. She began screaming in breathy pants, in time with the movements of Trey's cock. “Oh!” she kept squealing.

I felt like this went on for an eternity, the sound seeming to amplify with every passing moment, until they seemed to be screaming together through a loudspeaker. I watched his dark skin against Laurie's porcelain ass, watched her open mouth as she made sounds that could be mistaken for agony or ecstasy. I could see the lips of her stretched pussy each time he pulled out, and hear the sticky wetness as he thrust into her.

Laurie came again first, howling and falling onto the back of the couch, biting the material to keep herself from screaming – not that she hadn't already shared her pleasure, and my humiliation, with the whole house.

Trey kept pounding her. He was hitting her ass so hard that couch was scraping across the room inch by inch.

Now Laurie was inert, just taking his hard cock as hard as we would give to her.

And then he came, pulling out to the outer edges of her pussy so that he could watch his own creamy white cum gush from her pussy.

I came as silently as I could as I stared at the creampie in my wife's pussy: the white, frothy cum of another man. I was red with humiliation and fury, but I could not take my eyes away from the scene. Laurie looked behind her. She bit her lip and sucked in her breath. Her own orgasm was still making her pussy pulse, and white milky cum was gushing with each throb, down her legs on the inside of her thighs.

“That was so good, baby,” she said loudly, directing her voice back to her lover, who had pulled his enormous and still-hard cock from her and was watching his cum drip from her engorged pussy. “You really know how to give it to me.”

She turned and crawled to him, and planted her lips passionately on his. His hands moved down, gasping whatever he found of her body: ass, thighs, her round, full breast.

I knew I needed to leave, before I got caught and subjected to even more humiliation than I had already experienced.

I crept back to the bedroom, and lay on the bed, staring at the ceiling. I wondered if Laurie would feel bad, if she would tell me what had happened, or if she would lie to me.

I heard her almost an hour later, opening the door, creeping across the room. I heard the water running for the shower.

I sat up, and went into the bathroom.

She pulled the shower curtain open, and gave me a smile with toothpaste in her mouth.

I knew what was about to come: a lie. Because Laurie never brushed her teeth in the shower.

She smiled sweetly.

“Oh there you are,” she said. “How do you feel? You were passed out all night.”

Her voice was saccharine, or maybe it wasn't. I couldn't tell anymore.

I barely knew my wife at all. In some ways, it hurt. But in other ways, I found it exciting.

I wondered what else she would do. What else I could get her to do.

In the end, after all, my wife was back in the shower, smiling at me.

She let the curtain drop, but I could still see into the shower, where Trey's cum was being washed from her sticky thighs.

But I knew it was still inside of her.

CUCKOLDED ON A PLANE BY THE BLACK BILLIONAIRE (My Wife's Secret Pleasure 1)

I had been imagining things all day, all during the long flight. But I knew something really was up with Jen as soon as we sat down in the sleek black car sent by her company to pick us up from the airport. She sat down next to me, same as always, placing a hand on my thigh. She did it, though, without thinking, almost like a reflex. She then turned and stared out the window all the way to hotel, without saying a word. She had a pleasant, half-smile on her lips, and it was plain to see that she wasn't really looking at anything outside the window. She seemed to be looking through it all, to something, or someone, inside her own mind.

Usually when Jen sees a new place for the first time, she jabbers about it nonstop. She points out each and every little difference she can see: the stops signs are slightly larger, the curbs are really tall, there are stores devoted to crackers, people seem to have a disproportionately large number of sausage dogs. On and on. Whatever it is, she talks about it, pointing out the window like a kid. It's a very charming aspect of her personality, and until this particular trip, I had never once seen it fail to overtake her. It never mattered how tired we were, or how terrible the flight had been. In this case, it was ever stranger: we had never been to Dubai, or for that matter, anywhere in the Middle East. The city was certainly not lacking in exotic details to be pointed out. And Jen's flight, at least, had not been terrible. There was no reason for her silence.

But she just looked out the window and said nothing.

I was left to ponder it on the other side of the large car. I figured, angrily, that she was fantasizing about John Hudson, the tall, debonair black man she had spent so much time with on the plane. I assumed that she was lost in thought thinking about how much more interesting he was, how much richer, how much more attractive.

Lurking in a dark corner of my mind, also, was the thing I had seen on the plane. I didn't want to really think about it, so I tried to keep the image buried. But deep down, I worried about what I had heard and what I had seen, just before I had been ushered out of first class and threatened by an air marshal with prosecution if I got out of my seat again.

I worried because I was pretty sure it was my wife's skin I had seen.

And her skin had been cradled in an enormous black hand, and I was pretty sure that the hand belonged to Mr. Hudson.

It turns out: I had no idea how bad things were. I had no idea that in the car, she was sitting there with her panties soaking up his cum as it dripped out of her. But that wasn't the worst of it. I had no idea that in just a few hours, my life would be turned upside down and inside out. I had no idea that I was going to get an intimate portrait of what happened in first class on the flight that day. In less than an hour I would be watching that man's big, thick cock close up, with my wife's pussy wrapped around it. That I would be listening to my wife's voice, telling him to move the camera closer, so she could see it going in and out of her. She would say this between moans and pants while he pleasured her, his dark snake of a cock slamming into her, his big thighs slapping against her ass.

When we arrived at our hotel, my wife headed off for her meeting immediately, and left me in the hotel room to contemplate the strange desert city: every building glowing with light, sculpted from glass, blinking in the setting sun. It was modern to the point of looking almost absurd. Buildings rose out of the city like spikes of broken glass, a few of them impossibly high. I folded my arms over my chest and squinted into the draining light. My cheeks were flushed, and my pulse was racing. I was still...what?

Furious? Betrayed? Angry?

Turned on?

I wasn't sure, I reminded myself, if she had actually done anything or not. I could have been very wrong about what I had seen. It could have been someone else.

I had no right to be angry about something I wasn't sure about, I tried to tell myself.

"True," I said aloud, to no one.

This explanation satisfied one part of me, the part of me that didn't want what I had seen on the plane to have been my wife with Hudson. Some of the anxiety and anger drained out of me.

But there was something else, left over from our strange flight here. I couldn't put my finger on why I was so ticked off about everything else that I knew had transpired. The well-dressed, polite black gentleman who had offered her a seat in first class had, in fact, saved the day. There was no reason for me to be upset that Jen had accepted his offer. This was, after all,

Jen's business trip and not mine. I would have had to stay behind for several days if he had not gotten us both on the plane by giving her a seat.

A seat next to his.

A first-class seat next to a first-class gentleman, whose muscled torso made light ripples in his very expensive shirt. A first-class seat where she would be sipping champagne the whole flight, laughing loud enough to be heard all the way back in economy. A first-class seat which they called an “apartment,” which closed up like a secret hideaway, a prime place to join the Mile-High club...

And I was mad because she had deboarded with that black stud, and spent another twenty minutes laughing intimately with him, exchanging a phone number, patting his arm – all while I stood there looking like an idiot with her bags in my hands.

Waiting, while my wife flirtatiously said goodbye to the man she had spent so much time on the plane with.

Maybe, I reminded myself. Maybe she had spent so much time on the plane with him.

She claimed to have remembered some work that she needed to do, and then to have fallen asleep. It was possible. It wasn't an improbable story with no possibility of being true.

But then the silent car ride. The distant stare.

The image I had seen on the plane rose up from the corner of my mind again. I tried to push it away. I tried to make excuses for it. I tried to think of the passengers on the plane, racking my brain for a memory of another huge black man who could have had his hands all over a white woman in one of those first-class cabins. There were hundreds of passengers on that flight, I told myself. I had not actually seen anyone's face. It was entirely possible that I had acted like a moronic, jealous husband, and almost burst in on an innocent couple enjoying their private cabin.

I made myself a drink, which I had been informed was an exception made specifically for foreigners in this hotel for foreigners. I was thankful it was there to be made.

I sat down in a plush seat and tried to calm down. I'm an analytical person by nature, and my emotions were getting the best of me. I went through what I had seen, and what had transpired, step by step.

I kept returning to her final exchange with Hudson at the gate. It dug at my chest. Of everything that had happened, this bothered me the most for some reason.

She had probably just exchanged phone numbers with him after the flight to be polite, my sensible mind told me. He had, after all, just given her a first-class ticket on a very expensive flight.

I took another gulp of whiskey to dull the gnawing pain, and sat wondering what to do with myself. In a few minutes I would get on Jen's computer, and discover the whole truth.

But let's back up to how this all began:

The day started off terribly. We were late leaving the house because of forgotten details: the coffee maker, the trash, leaving a container for the house-sitter to water the plants with. All of the hopeless miseries of adulthood. For some reason the officialdom of our lives got under my skin as we were leaving and put me in a sour mood. I glared out the window of the taxi, longing for a time when we traveled carefree, with only one bag, leaving our plants to die because we had never even thought of getting a house-sitter. Coming home to a refrigerator of stinking food and laughing about it, opening a bottle of wine and getting drunk to keep the vacation going. Now everything was meetings, leather briefcases, insurance forms, held mail, silent meals at expensive airport clubs.

We got stuck in traffic, giving Jen just enough time to comment on all of the bureaucratic things she had forgotten, and ponder aloud whether or not she had brought her tan leather pumps. I sighed, looking into the windows of the buildings across from us, with mismatched curtains and young kids just starting off in life. They were probably still sleeping, still naked. They would wake up in an hour and have sex. My mind wandered back to the time in our marriage when we couldn't keep our hands off each other, when we laughed a lot more and everything was exciting. I must have been agreeing to things that Jen was saying without listening to them, because after a few minutes of talking, she got mad and huffed at the window. We were bickering by the time we arrived at the airport, about whose fault it was that we were late. I couldn't even remember how the conversation had started.

But for all of the doldrums in our marriage, Jen is still a great wife. She is sexy and can be very funny from time to time. Most importantly, she never wants to fight for more than fifteen minutes. She also doesn't like to look unseemly.

Jen is a Southern Belle, and she has never lost her lovely drawl or her mannerisms. She is always classy. She stopped me at the airport curb by extending her hand and pressing against my chest.

“Darling,” she drawled. “Let's not go in there like this.”

She patted her hair down and smiled at me. Then she started laughing. We both did. As with all bickering that we do, and which I suspect most people do in their marriages, it was all just so stupid. She pulled me by my tie (which she had made me put on because, she insisted, we were flying business class and I needed to look the part) and kissed me on the lips affectionately. I savored the flirty kiss, the feeling of her hands on me with fun tenderness. She so rarely touched me like that anymore. “Don't pout, honey. Soon we'll be relaxing on this world-class flight...headed to the 130 degree weather...” she was peppering my face with kisses. I smiled and forgot the troubles from the car.

So we were all smiles when approached the check-in counter, and all smiles as the woman clacked away on the keyboard. We paid her no mind as she typed away for what was obviously too much time, even for an airline. We were lost in our own silly conversation, and didn't see her frowning.

It is only in retrospect that I remember (now that I know what my wife is really like, and now that I know what happened) that as I was saying something to Jen, her interest wandered for just a moment. Her eyes were distracted by something (it turns out: somebody) who passed through her field of vision. And I think I saw her bite her lip.

At the time, I thought it was because I was charming her. I was excited to have my wife's interest, to have her twittering and bubbling next to me and grasping my arm to tell me things.

Of course I know better now. I know what Jen's mind was really on when she bit her lip.

However, at the time, she flicked her eyes quickly back to me and smiled again, so these thoughts – the thoughts I have now – never even surfaced in my mind.

Meanwhile, the woman at the check-in counter excused herself and walked hurriedly to another station, where she leaned in to whisper to another terse flight attendant. I followed her with my eyes, turning to see where she was going. It was only then that I began to think about the amount of time it was taking her to check us in, and the fact that it might be a sign of a problem.

“Uhhhh...” I groaned. “Not good.”

It was as I followed her and her officious walk down the counter that I saw Hudson: an athletic man about two heads taller than everyone around him, in a very expensive suit. His suit was the kind of well-tailored, gleaming suit that gives off a sheen of money, even to the untrained eye. His skin was dark and he had the face of a movie actor: stern, chiseled features and an immaculate beard. His eyes captured and held everything they beamed upon with an intense, almost frightening scrutiny. He held his bulk erect with an effortless, athletic grace. He was the kind of man that you cannot not notice, and the kind of man you know your wife, and every other woman in the room, notices. He moved with that smooth, alpha-male calm that attracts everyone to him.

He was the epitome of masculinity, and he was also obviously very rich. I felt a pang of insufficiency as I stared at him, but at that moment, our own attendant returned, with a helper. My attention returned to our unfolding predicament. They clacked away on the keyboard for a few minutes.

“We...have...” the attendant who had joined her began, in a laborious voice, without looking up at us. She hit a few more buttons, and then her eyes snapped up to ours. She smiled, a very saccharine smile. Her eyes cut through us, indicating that she was going to be very no-nonsense about whatever she was about to say next.

“A problem,” she finally declared. “It's out fault and we are willing to compensate you for it, of course, but we've overbooked the flight and your reservation was somehow...I don't understand...” she clicked a few more buttons. “I simply don't understand what happened. We will, naturally, reserve a free flight for you on the next available flight. Or you may attempt to fly standby if you wish, though typically -”

“You don't understand,” my wife interjected. “I can't be a full day late arriving there.”

She was using her very pissed off voice. I sighed, noting that Mr. Gorgeous Black Man was gliding away with no baggage, a cellphone to his ear, probably making a trade worth millions before he relaxed with a martini in a private club that people like us didn't even get to know existed. He glanced in our direction, and my eyes met his. His eyes swept over the scene with disinterest as he walked away, the kind of intimidating, detached glance that men who are more important than you give everything. But I believe now that I saw his eyes linger, for just a second, on Jen's ass.

At the time I dismissed it with only a prickle of irritation.

When my attention came back to the scene unfolding at the counter, my wife's voice had gone to hysterical. Personally, as I understood it, we were getting a good deal, because this was an ultra-expensive flight and free tickets on this airline were worth a ton of money. But I knew better than to interrupt Jen. She was just getting going.

At the end, though, they offered to let us fly standby and use their private club. It was the best they could do.

An hour later, it was pretty obvious that we were not getting on the plane.

The manifest was printing, the departure was imminent.

My wife was pleading with the woman at the counter. "Please," she said.

"Can't you even just ask anyone in economy if they can give up their seat?"

I was leaning against the counter, checking my phone for other flights. But it was a long international flight during a peak season, and everything seemed to be booked or prohibitively expensive.

It looked bad for Jen, and I felt terrible. She had a very important, stressful meeting tomorrow – which was first thing in Dubai time – and if she was late, it would look bad even if she had proof-positive that it wasn't her fault. She was growing more hysterical by the minute.

I helplessly swiped at my phone, trying to look like I was doing something to help. She kept turning to me, her face getting redder, and looking more and more exasperated. My inability to do anything sliced at my heart. I started to get hot under the collar.

Just as her voice reached the fever pitch that indicates she is either going to start crying or throwing things, a cultured, calm voice from behind rumbled over all of ours.

"Excuse me."

The voice was baritone, and it reverberated in such a way that it felt as though we were all shaken by it, like being next to the speakers at a club.

We all turned to the sound, the way any animal would. It was one of those assured, calm, alpha-male voices that people instantly listen to and trust.

It was the good-looking – great looking – guy from the check-in counter.

The huge black man. After all eyes fell on him and his enormous physique, everyone attentive and silent, he smoothed his tie even though he didn't need to.

“I’ve been advised of your predicament by my assistant,” he said. He sounded like Barry White. His eyes were holding us all in a trance, the way that dominating men do. But his eyes were also most fixed on my wife, and he was unapologetically looking at her and her alone – and more intensely than a stranger should.

We all stared at him expectantly, like a pack of dogs who had just been approached by their leader.

“I assume that the airline has accepted responsibility for the mistake that they’ve made, and offered this couple reimbursement in the event that they do not make it on the flight?”

I moved my eyes from the man to my wife to the flight attendant in disbelief.

The open-mouthed air hostess nodded. “Of course, Mr. Hudson.” She was utterly subdued by him.

And she knew him by name.

“Wonderful,” he said, without changing his tone or giving any tonal indication that it was wonderful at all. “My assistant has no need to be in Dubai until tomorrow, and so I suggest the following solution,” he turned to me, and leveled me with his eyes. I fought to maintain eye contact, because he was scaring the bejesus out of me. He was that kind of guy.

“Your wife, who I’ve gathered is the passenger most in need of traveling today...” he let this last bit hang in the air, and while his face did not seem to physically change in any way, it looked like he was appraising me with scorn. Heh, his look seemed to say. She’s the breadwinner?

I wanted desperately to inform Mr. Hudson that we were equally paid for completely different jobs, but instead I just nodded.

“Can take my assistant’s seat. The airline can charge whatever difference there may be between the cost of the seat and the reimbursement they would have provided, to me.”

He looked at the stewardess now, who had her mouth open as if she wanted to say something. Of course we all knew what it was: the seat he had just offered my wife was worth about $15,000. Whatever compensation they were planning to offer us would not be that much. There was a discernible shudder of discomfort in the air.

But Mr. Hudson shook his head lightly, and smiled at the attendant. “I feel certain there is some way to arrange this.” He withdrew a black card from his wallet, which I can only assume was some kind of hyper-fancy credit card. He slid it across the table to her.

Then he looked at my wife. "I insist," he said, before anyone could say anything. "The cost is negligible for me." This was, his voice indicated, exactly what he expected the outcome of his conversation to be, and he knew that no-one would interfere with it.

We all remained where we were, each of us with our mouths open to different degrees, stunned.

"I'll be at the club," he said, addressing the slight attendant. "Please have someone return my card to my assistant."

And then he just turned and walked away.

The stewardess left to find someone to help her with the complicated transaction, and I turned to my wife, who was smiling pleasantly.

"Can you believe that?" she gasped. But her gasp, in retrospect, was a little less blown-away than it probably should have been.

"No," I said plainly. "No. I really can't." I looked at Mr. Hudson, retreating with a slow, professional gait, as though nothing of any importance had transpired here at the counter. He had produced, somehow, a newspaper, like a magic trick, and he was looking at it as he rose on the escalator.

I turned my attention back to Jen. "You're not going to do it, are you?"

My voice sounded a little pathetic at the end.

She looked at me, and a hint of annoyance crossed her face. "What do you mean, I'm not? I have to get to Dubai. If there's no other way, then..."

"Jen," I snapped. I realized that I had no way to finish this sentence. There were so many things I wanted to say, and images and thoughts crowding my mind: Hudson and his hulking black masculinity, the cost of the flight, the way he had let his eyes linger on Jen's ass, the impropriety of giving a first-class ticket to a married woman. But most of all, the stone-cold expression in his eyes. The expression of a calm and patient predator.

"You never get something for nothing," I blurted. I felt like a fool as soon as I said it.

One thing my dear wife Jen really dislikes is when I am paternalistic toward her.

She arched an eyebrow. I waited for the fierce blow of her irritation with my tone to come for me. But instead, an expression I felt was strange at the time, and which I understand so much better now, crossed her face. It was lusty, and competitive, and...odd, on her. I had never seen her looking like that before. Instead of getting annoyed with me, she looked as if I had just challenged her to a dare.

“True...” she said, watching Mr Hudson. Her eyes glinted with what looked like desire. He was on the escalator still, unhurried, disappearing into the upper decks where first-class people waited for planes. He was striking even at a distance. I ground my teeth.

Jen looked back at me. I was probably looking perplexed, or wounded: she seemed so strange.

Then her demeanor changed suddenly, and she hit me playfully on the shoulder and snickered. “I’m joking, pouty-face!” she half-yelled.

I was so relieved to hear her say that, and I so wanted her to be joking about her lusty expression, that I laughed with her.

In the meantime, however, the flight attendant had left the counter and returned with a manager. She apparently was not going to wait to see if we would take Hudson’s offer or not.

The two of them were being noticeably nicer to us now. Fawning, in fact, over our needs.

Well, Jen’s needs. They fluttered and apologized frequently for things taking so long, and smiled, which they had not been doing for the past thirty minutes.

There was an enormous amount of clacking on the computer, and printing of things which were discarded, and whispered pointing at the screen. I stood there, watching it unfold, wondering if there was any way to stop it. So what would happen now? Would I just be left here, standing by the window, watching the plane depart with my wife and Hudson waving at me from the second tier of windows, laughing?

“Okay, here you are Miss Reid,” the attendant finally said, reaching over the counter with a piece of paper.

“Just – I wanted to make sure it’s right on the ticket,” I said, to cover my eagerness.

The three of them looked at me for a moment, and then the stewardess continued.

“This is your boarding pass, you’ll be in this section of the plane, and boarding for first-class will begin shortly. You have the option, of course, to use the club, and you may request that you be notified at the last minute to board the plane to minimize your time aboard if you so choose. Meals are served whenever you request them..."

She droned on and on.

I wasn't sure what to do with myself.

"Mr. Reid!" The attendant was suddenly screaming at me. "It looks like there is one seat available, but it's in Economy. Would you like to take it? We will naturally refund the difference of your seat price."

Economy. To Dubai. Twelve hours.

While my wife was in a first-class cabin with the Idris Elba look-alike billionaire.

Jen was looking at her ticket and was paying absolutely no attention to me whatsoever.

"Great," I said, with a dry throat, doing my best to sound cheerful. "I'll take it."

I felt like being on the plane was better than not being on the plane.

"We'd like to grant you access to the lounge on the plane as well," the attendant said, cheerfully. "As you were originally scheduled for business class." She handed me several pieces of paper, and smiled without feeling. "Thanks," I grumbled.

She gave me an apologetic look, but it seemed to have more behind it. Like that she felt sorry for me, crammed in the back of the plane while my wife would have her own, private compartment, so far away from me.

And so close to Mr. Hudson.

We boarded the plane.

I had been looking forward to flying on Ethiad airline's new and almost unbelievable new jetliner. Even stowed away like a piece of luggage in Economy class (which was not especially economical); and even as concerned as I was about my wife flying first-class with Mr. Hudson, I had to cave in to being impressed with the amazing plane and all of its amenities.

Also, I assured myself, since I would be allowed access to the bar on the second floor, I would be able to see Jen. Probably, we would spend most of our time in the bar together. The flight would "fly" by, and we would be in Dubai in no time, putting Mr. Hudson the billionaire behind us forever. I tried to be upbeat and unaffected as I kissed her goodbye and she climbed the stairs to her own incredible section of the plane. I tried to act as though it was no big deal.

Inwardly, of course, my heart felt like it was being squeezed and my masculinity felt like someone had given it a beating. I wanted to shake myself out of my own skin. I hated feeling jealous, and I hated hating that I felt jealous. I also hated feeling inadequate. My thoughts went in endless negative circles as I sat in my seat and stared at the very near back of the seat in front of me.

As with any flight, it was about two hours before the annoyances of take-off and everything the stewardesses had to do – hand out hot towels, drinks, and a snack – were completed. I hated this part of a flight. I hated it even more now, because I knew that Jen was in a first-class cabin (these were really extraordinary on this flight) and that surely her cabin was located nearby Hudson's. She had received her drinks and her hot towel ages ago. She had probably had time for a nap.

I couldn't help feeling bitter.

Finally, the pilot announced in six languages that we were settling in to our cruising altitude. I sent Jen a text message – because unlike American airlines, they allowed you to use your phone throughout the flight – and asked her if I could meet her at the bar.

I tried to be affectionate and cute. I tried not to reveal my irritation. I actually wrote three versions of the text, deleting and revising them like a teenager.

What is going on? I asked myself. I'm acting like a teenage girl.

I settled on: Wanna hook up at the bar?

I waited, and the minutes ticked by agonizingly slowly. It seemed like an hour, but it was actually only fifteen minutes before Jen responded:

Maybe in an hour or so?

I stared at the phone. A cold knife of some unnameable feeling plunged from my chest to my groin.

Why in an hour or so?!!!! I wanted to scream into the phone. You're having so much fun with Mr Hudson the black stud that you can't meet your fucking husband in the bar? Enjoying first class, Jen, you bitch?!!!!

But I wrote back:

OK.

I then deleted the “O” and sent only “K,” hoping to come across as nonchalant.

I immediately regretted sending anything at all.

I sighed audibly in my seat. The man sitting next to me raised his eyebrows and turned away to the window, annoyed. A baby cried. My feet were already swelling and my legs felt cramped.

Fuck, I thought. There was no point not going up there myself. It was better than being smashed in here with all these people.

I worried as I approached the stairs that the stewardesses wouldn't be aware of my special arrangement, and that I would be stuck downstairs for the whole flight. But to my surprise, as I approached the stairs, the stewardess smiled at me. "Oh, Mr. Reid. Please, go ahead."

I puffed up a little with satisfaction. It's always nice to escape Economy class on a twelve-hour flight. I knew that my fellow passengers were looking back, wondering what magic trick I had pulled to get up there. The bar was located at the back of the plane, and was actually a bit of a disappointment. I had spent a lot of time, since Jen had announced our trip to me, looking at photos of the place on the Internet. As usual, reality was smaller than the pictures, and everything seemed a little less shiny than I had imagined it. The bar was also not teeming with hot, young hipster-people and nubile models, as the airline's advertisements had suggested. Instead, several fat businessmen crouched over their iPads and scowled with a drink in one hand.

But it was better than being crammed in an Economy-class seat. And there was plenty of booze. I stood in front of the bartender and ordered a martini. How civilized.

As the liquid anesthesia of expensive whiskey coated my throat and my mind, I started to relax. Jen was probably just taking advantage of her in-flight meal, or the fact that she could shower, or she was doing work, or taking a nap.

I sat on one of the bench seats, also disappointingly smaller than it looked in pictures, and struck up a conversation with an extremely twitchy man who claimed to be a software designer of world renown.

I nodded politely at all of the unintelligible things he was saying, all the time thinking about Jen.

After an hour, though, there was still no text from Jen. No sign of her in the bar, which was filling up with more people.

I resisted the urge to immediately take out my cell and text her. It had, after all, been exactly sixty minutes. I was angry at myself for falling so easily into a trap of worried thinking, of jealousy and suspicion. What kind of person starts freaking out exactly sixty minutes after someone says they will text you in an hour? Jen was my wife.

But the time dragged on. Bar patrons came and went. I talked to several businessmen, all of them very keen to explain their fortunes and their jobs to me.

After half an hour passed, I finally texted Jen, unable to resist the urge.

Hey. Where are you?

I tried to keep the tone friendly. I stared at the people who were talking at me, counting down the minutes in my own mind, refusing to check my phone more frequently than every five minutes.

Another half an hour passed, glacially, like this.

Nothing.

I ordered drink after drink, and my thoughts became less and less clear and more and more fantastic. Fantasies of Jen, sitting on Hudson's lap, eating a shrimp seductively with a martini in one hand, filled my head. Hudson asked her, What about your husband? She laughed and rolled her eyes. Oh that idiot doesn't know anything. They laughed together.

I needed, I decided, to go see what was going on.

It was a drunken decision, a decision that was completely irrational. I knew all of that as soon as I made it.

But I didn't care.

I turned my attention to the man I was half-listening to. I could probe him about the setup of the plane, so that I could walk around with confidence to where I suspected Jen would be.

"You're in first class?" I asked, when he stopped jabbering to take a sip of his drink.

"Oh, I wish," he said. And then he pointed up toward the end of the plane. There was a very obvious barrier between first and business class.

I took a sip of my drink, trying to be suave. I eyed the barrier.

Hello? I texted.

Another half hour went by. No text from my wife.

I drank several martinis after that, which may have contributed to both my foul mood and my rampant imagination. I summoned more images of Hudson and my wife laughing together in first-class. At this point, I wasn't imagining anything too explicit: I was just angry that she would rather spend time talking up this guy, than to come back here and keep me company. I knew she was flirting. I knew no man could resist Jen. The martinis, while helping my imagination and my indignation along, may also have been what gave me the courage, after the fourth, to proceed unsteadily through business class and very confidently into the first class section.

For some reason, there was no stewardess there blocking my way. I blinked at the unattended barrier, almost wishing that someone had stopped me.

But I barreled on.

First class was an absolutely amazing place, white and black decor with cabins that were, practically, their own apartments: doors went almost to the ceiling, with just enough room to see over the top.

I stood, frozen, for a moment. The hallway was slightly curved, and for a second I was so thrown off balance by the whole situation: my drunkenness, the first-class cabin's opulence, the fact that I was searching for my wife because I thought she was being seduced by a black man – that I just stood there.

I saw a flight attendant look at me, and frown. She turned and hurried the other way, though, so I figured I had a few seconds to look around.

“Jen?” I whispered loudly.

Nothing.

I began to peek over the tops of the cabins. I saw a sandy-colored head, a head of red curls, two head placed together and glowing in the light of TV. A group of people laughing, and then:

White skin. Black skin. A moan. A laugh. A giant black hand on a white shoulder.

But by then two flight attendants and a security officer were heading toward me.

“Sir,” one of the women began.

“I’m just looking for my wife,” I seethed. They began to push me back, away from where I could see what was happening. I tried to jump up and see what was inside. “Jen!” I hissed.

“Sir,” the woman's voice was two seconds from, you're-going-to-jail tone. She leveled me with her eyes. “This area is for first-class passengers and we request that you return to your seat immediately.

“You guys,” I began, ready to begin a whole long story about how this was there fuck-up, but I saw that the security officer had a tag that read, AIR

MARSHAL on it.

I had enough sense left to turn, and head back to the bar. But when I turned around, the air marshal was still following me, and I got the impression that it was time for me to head downstairs.

I sat in my seat, my face flushed and my pulse raging in my arteries. I was actually seeing red, and my ears had begun to ring. I took a deep breath, trying to get control of myself.

I couldn't get the image out of my head: the white skin, the color of Jen's skin...

But that could be any white woman's skin. You only saw a glimpse.

The black hand, enormous, pawing at her like a wild beast...

That could have been any other black man's hand.

I felt sick. I was sure I was going to throw up, but the air marshal was still watching me, so I was afraid to get out of my seat. The man next to me was agitated, and kept looking at me as if I was going to eat him alive. I was sure the blood rushing through my body was turning my face purple.

There were still six hours on this flight.

I closed my eyes and tried to submerge the rage. The images kept floating into my mind. I was enraged and humiliated but...

I noticed something else was happening to me.

I was turned on.

I realized the images weren't just floating into my mind without my permission: I was summoning them. I was elaborating on them.

Because there was nothing wrong with just a fantasy, right? Hudson placing his hands on Jen's ample breasts, his skin dark against hers. Grasping her with this mighty paws, turning her around like a rag-doll, and pummeling her with what was undoubtedly an enormous cock. I pictured Jen's face, her mouth open in passionate pleasure, looking surprised by just how big his cock was, and how much she wanted it.

Under the wary eyes of the air marshal, I got up and went to the restroom. My cock was throbbing so hard I couldn't wait for the rest of the flight to get myself off.

The stewardesses refused to bring me any more alcohol when I finally emerged from the restroom, so I closed my eyes and drifted off to a worried sleep, telling myself enough lies about what I had seen and what I had imagined to almost believe that I had just been silly. Jen probably took a nap, I probably had seen Hudson, but with another woman, and everything was going to be fine. The strange mixture of renewing sobriety, having seen something while drunk, and then the sheer preposterousness of the whole idea, calmed me, and I actually took a nap until the plane landed.

But then the silent car ride.

And then I was left alone, in the hotel room, questioning the plane ride all over again.

I made myself several more drinks and stared out of the window, trying to convince myself that I was imagining everything.

I was fairly drunk again when I decided to get on the Internet and look up Hudson and what he did. This really was my plan.

I took the computer out of my bag and almost had a heart attack: it was Jen's.

It wasn't her work computer, thankfully...but I was confused. I looked down at the bag, blinking at it, unsure of what to do. Did Jen need it? My first concern, as always, was for my wife to be happy and to have what she needed. I must have been so drunk I had failed to notice that I had taken the wrong bag. It was so stupid that they were so similar.

She would have come back if there had been a problem, I thought.

I sat back down and set the computer on the table. I eyed it.

I still wanted to find out about Hudson.

I shook my head, to no one at all. That would be a very mistrustful deed, I advised myself. You would definitely be crossing the line...

But now I sort of wanted to snoop around on her computer.

I couldn't wait to find out about Hudson, either. I was tearing my hair out.

I opened Jen's computer, feeling slightly guilty but slightly justified in breaking her trust by hacking her password. I made a mental note to tell her it was terribly weak, and a promise to only look at the internet.

I perused Hudson's information on the internet for a half hour, reading all about his holdings and companies and wealth, getting more and more furious by the second. I was also getting more and more tempted to look at other things on Jen's computer. I didn't know why. Everything that had happened that day was eating at me in ways I didn't understand.

I minimized the window, and I sat back, trying to resist the urge to keep going, reading more, looking up more information like a pouting, jealous husband.

And then I saw it:

A file, on the desktop. A video file.

Titled:

Hudson Feb 23.

I blinked in disbelief. I rubbed my eyes. I looked around the room.

My heart pounded audibly in my chest.

And then I opened it.

The first thing to reach my mind, which almost completely shut down as the video started playing, was the sound of the plane. It was the background noise that I had been subjected to in Economy, pounding at me with a high-pitched whine. It was the flight we had just been on.

And then, cutting through that sound like a knife:

“I like to film these things,” Jen, in a low, raspy tone. “You're not married, are you?”

The camera was moving all over the place, so I could only see flashes of people, the oval plane windows, a sleek tabletop, a leather chair. Black and white. Black and white décor.

My head was reeling.

I heard a deep laugh, low and full, which only could have come from Hudson. “You really are down-low,” he said. “Nah. You need to turn that thing off. I'm not married but you can understand why I wouldn't want any potential...bribery.”

The camera stopped moving, coming to rest on a table. It was facing the cabin, which was remarkable: white sheets everywhere, sunlight filling a fairly spacious room: spacious enough for Jen to be standing, leaning on a bed. I could only see her -

My chest grew tight. She was in nothing but her panties, it seemed. Her blouse was untucked, and her legs were bare.

I let this sink into me like a poison. Nothing but her bra and panties, Hudson...

Hudson's bulk was to the left of the camera screen. Jen still hadn't turned it off.

She moved her hand along the trim of her blouse, seductively. It disappeared off-camera – the angle was terrible – and I strained to see more, as if I could expand the view by twisting my neck, now, after the fact, far away from where this had ever happened. Her blouse was open, exposing her creamy skin. She was not nervous at all. She had the posture of a practiced prostitute, in fact.

I wanted to scream at the camera. “No,” I felt my mouth saying. Jen, what are you doing?

“Well,” Jen was saying. “I’ll sign any kind of agreement you like, and we can keep your face off camera. But if there’s no film, I’m not doing it.”

I had never heard Jen talk like this. She sounded like a completely different person. She was hot and sensual, while cold and calculating at the same time. She seemed like some kind of seasoned professional in a Hollywood movie.

What in the fuck was going on?

I sat down, partly because my knees were getting weak, and partly because I could see that there were still 30 minutes on this short film. My stomach was flipping around inside of me.

And curiously, through all of the disbelief, there was also attraction: my cock was twitching as I watched my wife behaving like a whore.

Hudson’s laugh again.

“Oh yeah?” he said. I could easily imagine the expression on his face. And I knew exactly what he felt: he loved the challenge she had just thrown down. I could imagine him staring at her with those dark brown eyes, perhaps rubbing his neatly trimmed beard. Looking her up and down.

Jen shrugged. She gave a very seductive smile, and traced her pink tongue over her upper lip. She was looking right at him. She made a kind of clicking sound, one she had never made in front of me. “It’s what I like,” she said. “If I can’t have a video, it’s not worth it to me.”

Another laugh from Hudson.

“I did not expect this,” he commented.

And then he started moving toward her.

“Okay then,” he said. “All right.” His black accent was coming out now. In the airport and the bar he had a very neutral accent. Now it was different.

“Let’s do what the lady likes, then.”

Jen’s hand moved down her shirt. Hudson was blocking the view pixel by pixel as he moved toward her, so I saw one, two, three buttons, flick open, and inch by inch, Jen’s skin sliding out from under her blouse. But then Hudson filled the camera – just the back of him.

Jen had it under control. The video went crazy again, flashing all different parts of the luxurious cabin, before stabilizing with a clear view of both of them.

“We have to be quiet,” Jen laughed, whispering like a vamp. Now her shirt was off, and she was standing in just her bra and panties. She was pushing Hudson's expensive silk shirt away from his enormous shoulders.

I started shaking my head. Could this actually be happening?

Have happened, I soberly reminded myself.

It had already happened.

My mouth started to hang open. I could feel my pulse racing.

I heard my own hoarse whisper, barely audible. Hudson moved toward Jen at that exact moment. He was smiling with malice. He put his hand on Jen's midriff, pulling her toward him. I heard the voice of the stewardess in the background, telling me to leave the first-class cabin.

So I was there; I had been so close.

And so right.

Jen covered her mouth and snorted as the scuffle faded away.

She was laughing at me.

But Hudson was absorbed now in getting what he wanted from Jen. He didn't even seem to have noticed the scuffle outside the cabin door, to have heard my voice, or to care about anything but putting his enormous hands all over my wife. He was unbuckling his belt with one hand, and with the other he reached behind Jen's head and worked his big, strong fingers into her hair. He pulled on her hair to tip her head back, to face his gaze.

Jen responded by opening her mouth lightly, and smiling. She loved it. She gasped in one of those hyper-sexualized, porno gasps, and her mouth broke open in a welcoming smile.

Hudson let his pants fall to the floor.

His cock was pressing against his boxers, and Jen reached down with her hands to find it. Her white hand squeezed his thick cock through the silky material, and she opened her mouth in an even wider, pleased smile.

I rubbed my eyes in disbelief. I could not believe I was seeing this. What's more, I couldn't tear myself away from it.

Something about the fact that it was on the computer screen gave it a fake, fantastical quality. That's why, I reasoned with myself, my cock was getting so hard. Even though I knew this had really happened, even though I had seen Hudson with my own eyes, something about seeing it on the screen made it seem more like something I would fantasize about in my own mind. I often did fantasize about my wife with other men. But sort of nameless, faceless men, who served their purpose quickly while I was in the shower.

This was completely different, and though I didn't want to admit it, it was also turning me on even more that Jen was instigating the encounter and in control of it.

I was getting less and less angry, and more and more turned on. I knew this was silly. I knew that I should be filled with rage and slam the computer shut before I saw any more. I knew I would never be able to get the images I was about to see out of my mind.

But instead of slapping the laptop closed, I unzipped my own pants. Hudson peeled away his boxers, and his thick, long, black cock sprung forward. Jen's hand immediately grasped it, and she gasped again, smiling. Of course she would smile. It was the biggest cock I had ever seen or imagined, even after so many years of watching porn, and Hudson's entire physique was the model of masculinity and perfection: his muscles were huge, veined, enormous. He was like an ebony god. His dick was no exception to his physique: it was hard and seemed almost too large to be real. But there it was. Dark, thick, and in Jen's hand.

My eyes were glued to Jen's hand around Hudson's black cock. She was moving it now, rubbing it back and forth, from base to tip, making a neat little circle over his head like she did with me. I looked at her face. She was staring straight into Hudson's eyes, smiling with her mouth.

"You like that, little girl?" he growled.

Jen wiggled closer to him, flirtatiously. Her voice sounded like a young teenager's when she said: "I love. Black. Cock."

And then I watched in horror as she seemed to crumple, and then before I could figure out what was happening, she slid to her knees.

I closed my eyes. I tried to tell myself again that the best thing to do was not to watch. Did I really want to see my wife suck on this man's enormous black cock?

But curiosity got the better of me, and when I opened my eyes my pulse raced, and all of my blood gushed directly into the tip of my own throbbing cock. Jen had her mouth open and all the way at the base of this man's huge dick. She had just opened up and taken it all in.

Her voice echoed in my mind. I like. Black. Cock.

I never got this kind of action from Jen. I had no idea she could deep throat at all, let alone such an enormous cock. Why would she do this for a stranger? Why would she do it without even being asked or seduced? She just fell to her knees and started in on him, without any effort on his part.

Oh god, now she was bobbing her head back and forth and slurping and gulping, licking and sucking at his cock like it was the greatest thing she had ever put in her mouth. She bestowed so much attention on it I almost forgot that Hudson was even in the room. I just watched her mouth and her lips, working their way all along his shaft, kissing his thick black snake of a dick, licking at him like a kitten, swallowing him whole.

How long did this go on? It seemed like forever. I was dripping precum and slowly stroking myself, staring in disbelief at the screen.

Hudson grabbed her suddenly, and lifted her up by her hair to a standing position. He ripped her panties away, shredding the fine lace with a single jerk. He pushed her forward, so now Jen's face was close to the camera. She smiled again, and turned her head.

She looked right into the camera.

Who was she looking at, I wondered. Herself? Or had she planned to make this for someone? Was I supposed to see it?

Whatever it was she was looking right into its eyes. She smiled, licking her lips.

I could not believe it as I watched her. I could see Hudson behind her, playing now with her ass, her pussy, I didn't know. She closed her eyes and mewled. Then she opened them. "Fuck me," she breathed. "Put that big black cock inside of me and fuck me full of your cum."

I felt like she was looking right at me. I actually felt like she was talking to me, not like she wanted me, but like she wanted me to hear her talk to Hudson.

Suddenly she squinted her eyes and opened her mouth, crying out in agonized pleasure. "Oh!" she squealed. "Oh, oh, oh it's so big! This is just what I wanted!"

She was whispering, to keep it quiet in the cabin of the plane, but she was moaning right into the microphone. "Oh, yes. Oh fuck, your cock feels good," she said. Her voice scraped away at my insides, licking at the inside of my ribs with torturous pain. But my cock was so hard I thought it would split open. The two conflicting feelings made me feel too unsteady to even sit up.

The camera suddenly went berserk, and shots of the ceiling followed, all while Jen moaned and howled quietly underneath the sounds of the camera exchanging hands. "I want you to film it from where you are," her voice said, breathlessly, and almost instantly the camera focused on the image that would be seared into my mind forever: her ass, and below it her sweet pink pussy, penetrated by the astoundingly large cock of one John Hudson. In and out, black against pink and white. Every sound of his uncovered cock moving through her slippery, glistening wet pussy captured over the sound of the plane.

“Make sure you get a good shot of your cock,” Jen moaned. “I want to watch your cock over and over again.”

This sent a shudder of almost guilty pleasure through me, as I imagined Jen sitting alone in a dark room watching this video, over and over again, slipping her fingers into her panties and stroking herself while she imagined how it felt to have Hudson's cock inside of her, and watched it again and again on the screen.

John Hudson, for his part, seemed to be very experienced at fucking someone while holding a camera. He didn't miss a bit, and for several moments there was nothing on screen but the steady pumping of his cock in and out of my wife, and the slippery sounds of her engorged, wet pussy as he slammed in and out of it.

Hudson dropped a hand to her ass and slapped it. A big red mark appeared on Jen's white skin.

Jen moaned.

She was delighted. She made all kinds of cooing, moaning noises.

I sat back in the chair, amazed at the feelings I was having. I was enraged, sure, but I also had a rock-hard cock. I unzipped my pants, mesmerized by the sight of the gigantic black snake plunging into Jen's pussy, a pussy I thought had been all for me. And she was screaming quietly, trying not make too much noise in first-class, tossing her head back in ecstasy.

Hudson slapped her again.

He started pounding her now, really hard.

The camera fell away, and landed on the bed, but in a choice position in which I still had a view of them both, from the side, blocked only partially by a bit of the clean white sheets.

Jen reached out to adjust it, practically winking at the camera as she did so. She seemed to have so much practice filming herself: there was no klutziness, no hesitation. She knew what she wanted and she knew how to get it.

Then Hudson pushed her down, onto the bed, and all I could see was her open, panting mouth, turned up slightly in a pleased smile. And then his cock, in and out as he slapped into her harder and harder. The sound of his thighs slapping into her ass, fast and hard, was all I could hear for a few minutes until Jen opened her mouth and pushed a pillow into it. She thrashed around as she came.

And then she said:

“Don't pull out. I want all that hot cum to fill my pussy!” Her voice was breathy and satisfied.

“Oh, you're gonna get it,” Hudson growled. He slapped her ass. “Take it. Tell me what you want again,”

“I want a pussy full of your cum,” Jen moaned, smiling.

“Say it again,”

“I want you to fill me up with your cum, Mr. Hudson,” she murmured.

And then Hudson's back arched, and his torso stiffened, all of his cut, perfect muscles seizing with an orgasm.

And he pumped his cum right into my wife's cunt.

I had been furiously stroking my own cock, and I came at the same moment. I was too shocked by everything I had seen already to even be surprised when Jen smiled and said, “Oh, fuck, that was so good. Just leave that big cock inside of me for a little bit, will you?” She squirmed in pleasure.

I was panting. I was in a rage. I had also enjoyed watching this whole thing. I was angry. I was sad. I had no idea what to do. My eyes could not have been peeled away from Hudson's still-hard cock, halfway in my wife's pussy, coated in her cum and his white frothy semen.

I was stunned. My wife's pussy was totally filled up with another man's cum.

As I stared at the two of them panting, letting that thought ricochet in my head, Jen reached for the camera, still panting against the bed with Hudson's cock inside of her, and that was all I got.

I don't know how long I sat there in disbelief, with my flaccid cock outside of my pants, my cum dripping all over them.

And I have no idea what compelled me to begin the search on Jen's computer after that time passed. Just a hunch.

Or perhaps a hope? I have no idea now.

And what I found was an entire cache of videos:

Michaels Jan 23; Smith Nov 17; Train Guy Dec 15; Paul Aug 22....

On and on it went. Dozens of videos.

I sat in silence, unable to open any of them. What would I see? And what the fuck was going on? My wife had cuckolded me, over and over, and I had never been the wiser. I really hadn't. And what was this, with keeping the videos? She must watch them herself. But where, and when? Another image of her watching the films she had made of herself, alone in the dark, downstairs in the kitchen, her legs spread open on a barstool...flashed through my mind.

Who was my wife? I really didn't know her any more.

But the most interesting, and perhaps frightening thing about this discovery, was that...

I wasn't as mad as I should have been.

Thinking quickly, suddenly sobered up, I did something that might seem strange. I copied the files.

Not only that, I ran out of space on my USB key and without hesitation, in a zombie-like daze, I went down to the lobby and bought another USB key to copy them all.

I felt like a stranger to myself, operating mechanically. I was focused on only one thing: finding time to watch those films. I hid the USB key and put everything back as it should have been, and then sat, half-dozing, watching the Dubai skyline and musing about when I would have a chance to watch the next video.

And then, when Jen came back from her meeting, I looked up from the bed, where I was sitting with a magazine, and smiled. "Hello honey," I said.

"How was your meeting?"

I couldn't wait to watch my next video.

CUCKOLDED IN VEGAS (My Wife's Secret Pleasure 3)

My wife Jen has a very naughty secret. I discovered it a little while back, after she cuckolded me on a plane to Dubai, with a black billionaire. I didn't know that I was getting cuckolded at the time, of course: I thought I was just imagining things, and playing out a dark fantasy in my own mind.

Acting crazy, getting jealous and turned on by my own secret desires. Desires I had never really let surface in my mind until the situation came up and there was no way not to think about her with another man.

After getting off the plane, though, I discovered that not only had my wife – a sweet, proper, curvy, soccer-mom kind of woman - let the black billionaire fuck her brains out on the plane, and fill her up with his seed. No. Not only that, but my wife Jen has been cuckolding me for a very, very long time.

It doesn't stop there. She keeps a record of her cheating: she videos her encounters with her men. I found her little secret on her computer. Files and files, named and dated. Dozen of video files of my wife, moaning and begging for more with another man's cock inside of her.

At first, like any husband, I was furious and dumbfounded. I watched the first video in disbelief. It was the freshest of her secret pleasures, and I watched it with my mouth open, not knowing what to do: the black billionaire, his enormous cock moving in and out of my wife's pussy, and Jen licking his cock like a lollipop.

It didn't seem like it could be real. It was like watching a fantasy of my own creation, just in great detail.

As I watch more and more of Jen's videos, I remember back to the encounters leading up to her treachery, and how they took place right under my nose, without me knowing. I get more and more turned on. Turned on by the fact that my wife is actually a completely different person, for one thing. It's like being married to another woman now, and there's no denying that the idea infuses me with a new energy.

But I'm also turned on by what a dirty whore she is. The things she says, the things she's willing to do. By seeing another man take her so hard, and fill her up. In fact, I've become addicted to watching these videos. I think about them all the time, and I can't wait to watch the next one. Now I have my own secret pleasure: watching my wife with her big, black studs. Without her knowing that I'm doing it.

The files I copied from her computer are full of tantalizing promises: my friend, the neighbor, names I don't recognize but dates that seem vaguely familiar. I watched her with the man on the plane first, and then I watched her with her boss. I didn't watch everything all at once, because I like to dole my fun out to myself. I like to savor the fantasies I have while I wait to watch the next one. I like to think about all the things I don't know about her, all the things she was doing behind my back. I like to try to figure out what it is that motivated her, and perhaps still does. I like trying to piece the mystery of my wife – who is like a new person to me – together.

One thing that does seem to be a recurring theme is that my wife likes a big black man to take her hard – and she likes to get her pussy filled with his cum. And I like watching that. It's surprising to me, almost as surprising as Jen's behavior.

The third video I watched, a week after watching her get pounded by her boss, had an intriguing title:

Vegas Apr 3.

Why so intriguing?

Jen and I went to Vegas to get married. We returned for an anniversary.

Our wedding date is April 3.

I hadn't noticed the file at first, or I would have watched it before any other.

There were so many names, so many dates. Perhaps my mind read it like a person's last name the first few times I scanned the list.

But it caught my eye as I closed the laptop after watching her with her boss, and then it sort of floated there until it connected with my memory. And ever since then, I've been savoring the anticipation of opening it to find out: Did Jen cuckold me on our wedding day? Or our anniversary? And how in the hell did she do it?

We decided to go to Vegas to get married because we had gotten drunk in some little Italian eatery in a sketchy part of town, where there were a lot of pawn shops and strip clubs. It had been raining and we had a view of the flashing neon lights on the wet pavement. Jen's eyes were damp and round and she was smiling and flirtatious, her hand on my knee, moving down my leg, closer to my hard cock.

“It looks like Vegas out there,” I had said.

"I've always wanted to go to Vegas," Jen had murmured. We were planning a wedding, but getting nowhere. We didn't even have a date.

"We should just get married there," I mused. I was fed up with the wedding, the family nonsense, the brochures and the decisions.

I had been joking, but we were drunk and still very much in love.

Spontaneous and fun.

Jen had laughed and leaned across the table, biting her lip. Her eyes were mischievous and she was so hot when she was like that. "Let's," she had said.

"Let's...what?" I really didn't even think she was talking about Vegas at that point.

"Let's do it," she had whispered.

I was sick of the wedding, but I was desperately in love with Jen and I wanted to get married and have her sealed up and contractually obligated to me. It turned me on to no end. So of course I pounced on this idea.

We were living in LA at the time. We could drive and be there in no time!

The tackiest chapel we could find!

We paid the bill and went back to our shared apartment, which was still littered with samples of fabrics and color swatches from wedding planners.

In a hurry, we tossed things into suitcases and playfully made our escape...

I suddenly snapped back to reality, to the reason I was thinking about all of this:

Vegas. Apr 3.

We packed so quickly, I thought, as I looked at the name of the file on my computer screen. We just threw things into suitcases, we were only there for five minutes.

No, it couldn't have been our honeymoon that Jen had filmed. Surely she couldn't be that...what? Terrible? Mean? She wouldn't have decided to get married in Vegas on a whim, and then, as we were running around and packing, thought to pack a video recorder so that she could film herself with another man on the same night.

Could she?

But by now, I knew that I had no idea what kind of person I really lived with, and so anything was possible. And strangely, I found myself almost hoping that she had done that very thing.

There was no way to find out except to watch it.

I settled into my chair – ready with a box of tissues (and not for crying), comfortably sprawled in front of the screen, to find out what exactly she had done.

I opened the file.

The screen filled with a dim, amber color. I watched, already rapt with attention even though nothing was happening. I watched for several minutes, trying to place the scene (anniversary or honeymoon?) but I could not. There was very little sound, and the camera was pointed at a wall. A hotel-room wall, judging by the art on it, the cream-color, the rich bareness of it.

Beyond that, I couldn't tell a thing.

As I stared at the video, which displayed nothing except the wall, I racked my brains. I tried desperately to remember details of our anniversary and our honeymoon. There was a corner of a picture on the wall, with a red mountain on it – or was it a barn? It was useless, either way. I'm not a man who looks at paintings on hotel room walls. And I wouldn't have he memory for it anyway. Who remembers those kinds of things, and why? Just in case his wife turns out to be a cheating slut who fucks every black stud she can find? Just in case his wife happens to film all of these encounters and he'd like to know what the circumstances were?

I strained to hear some kind of sound, but only the dull static of an air conditioner made its way to the microphone.

That certainly didn't narrow it down.

I squinted. A light was splaying up the wall, in a flower-shape, as though from one of those tea-cup shaped lights that rested against the wall.

I closed my eyes and tried to ransack my own brain for any detail at all from our trips to Vegas.

On our anniversary – our fifth, my mind offered up - we stayed in Vegas for three nights. We went to a show, we had expensive dinners.

I remembered getting very, very drunk. I remembered winning and then losing a lot of money at roulette with Jen, who had laughed and thrown her head back and handed me another drink.

I opened my eyes.

She wouldn't have drugged me, would she?

And then:

Was that on our anniversary, or our wedding night? Or both? What had we done?

Of course we had sex...I remembered carrying her over the threshold, clumsily, making a big joke of it. And before that, in the elevator, when she had turned to me immediately and slipped her hand down my pants, and jumped up so that I had to hold her. I remembered almost falling over.

Or was that our anniversary?

So much time had gone by. I couldn't remember enough details. Everything was a sort of soupy mixture of images and voices.

The screen was still filled by the beige wall as I thought of all these things. A new thought, and a new feeling surged up inside of me: maybe this was just a fluke. Maybe she didn't do anything at all.

I was confused by the feelings I was having, of both disappointment and relief, when I heard a knock at the door that made me jump.

My heart surged to my feet, and I looked around like a crazed rabbit before I realized that the knock came from my computer, and not my own door. I barely had time to register that it was a knock on the hotel room door, before the room displayed on the screen began to move around. Pictures and bedspreads and hotel furniture – was that a naked arm? - splashed across the screen. The sound of someone breathing, a bang, a bright light and then a dimness. I could not make out what was on the screen at first, wherever the camera came to rest. I tipped my head, as though a different perspective would help.

What I was looking at rose to my consciousness at almost the exact same time I heard the door open on the audio.

A deep male voice rumbled, but it was incoherent. He was whispering, the way big men do: not really whispering, not really able to take the bass out of his voice.

I heard: "In here." And a giggle.

Jen's giggle.

All of the sudden what I was looking at came to me with perfect clarity: it was the bathroom.

I squinted, trying desperately to figure out if it was the bathroom of the hotel room from our honeymoon or from our anniversary.

It's a strange place to be, sitting in your office after ten years of marriage, your pants down and your hand around your cock, looking at the details of a beige tile wall to try and figure out if your wife fucked another man on your honeymoon, or your anniversary. Unsure of which you want it to be.

Now my cock was filling up my hand, getting hard as a rock.

While one part of my brain thought about when this had taken place, desire took over another part of my brain. I wanted the couple in the room to move into the bathroom. I found myself watching my wife's secrets with more and more obsession now. I wanted the action to move on, so that I could see some cock inside of her. I hoped she had positioned the camera well.

I heard the smacking, slurping sounds of kissing off-camera.

Then, distinctly: "Shit!"

"Sssshhhhhh!" The ssshhhh was playful, ending with a giggle.

What a little whore Jen was.

"Don't worry about him, he's out for the night." Jen's voice. Coy, playful.

Laughing. Laughing at me? Laughing at the fact that she had somehow gotten me so drunk that I was about to sleep through her having sex with another man in the bathroom of the hotel?

I heard scuffling, probably the two of them smiling and slurping up each others' faces.

Who was this guy?

"I dunno..." the male voice said, after a bit. But it sounded like he did know. Now people moved onto the screen, blocking the camera for a moment with their shadows.

The door closed. Loudly.

Was I actually sleeping in the very next room? It seemed as though I was.

When had this happened?

My mind was playing flashes and images of both vacations, of all the people we had seen and met, while I stared at the screen. It was dark now, the camera blocked by their close bodies. All I could hear was their lips sucking on each other's, little giggles, whispers -

The memory came to me suddenly.

"Hey. Jen? Jen Rogers?"

The roulette table.

"Not anymore!" A laugh.

A tug on my arm. "Honey?"

I turn. A tall, muscular black man looks me up and down. There is a huffy insolence about his expression. A slow smile crawls over his face.

I am drunk, so I stand unsteadily.

"This is my..husband..Dave." Jen's voice.

Her eyes are on the black man.

The smile turns into a bigger one, but in that way that is sort of a sneer.

As I remembered this encounter, a cool feeling began to spread from my chest to my fingertips. I stared, open-mouthed at the images on the screen, struggling to remember which trip, anniversary or honeymoon, had been the one when I had turned around and seen this guy.

They moved away from the camera, and the clear view of the side of his face, and his muscular body, matched my memory.

Which trip?!!!!

Did it matter?

If it was on our honeymoon?

The Jen on the screen had her hair piled loosely on her head, so her hair offered no clue to which Jen she might have been. The light in the bathroom was strange, and so her face offered no clue as to her age in the video. Not that Jen had aged much anyway in five years.

One thing was certain: the Jen in this video, as with all the others, had a healthy appetite for black men. I did not recognize the sexually-charged beast of a woman who was clawing at this guy at all, except that she looked like my wife.

And if this had been our honeymoon?

The question surfaced again, no matter how much I tried to push it down. Did that mean that my wife had been a brazen, cock-chasing cheater right from the start? I mean, right from the very start. If that were true, why had she married me? If all that could satisfy her was a black man's big cock, then why had she married a man like me?

When she had answered the door she had been wearing a white blouse and pajama bottoms. I tried to place them, but I could not.

Now the man had worked his black fingers over the buttons, smoothly, and the blouse was open, exposing Jen's full curves, spilling out of a white lace bra.

Jen looked up at him, a grin on her face. He fingered the fabric of her blouse with his large thumb and forefinger. "Daddy like," he said, in a low voice.

Jen put her hands on his chest, and moved her hands down to push his shirt up over his head.

His dark skin made a clear outline, black against the light beige tiles. His chest was heavily muscled, and his arms were as thick as one of my legs. Jen admired his biceps, letting her eyes wander all over his body. Her face had a particularly sexual expression on it now, and even though she didn't lick her lips, it seemed like she was. I could see on her face how much she wanted to lap up all of his hard, ebony, body. I had already seen her do it now, three times, and I knew that my wife was ravenous for her big bulls. Even as I watched this scene unfold, and I was sucked into it as though the video itself had its mouth around my cock and was blowing me hard, part of my mind was still racing, looking for any clue to which night this had been. Maybe, I thought, this wasn't even Vegas at all.

Or maybe she went to Vegas by herself, on business, and I simply forgot. But the memory of Jen's voice (don't worry about him, he's out for the night) and the words at the bottom of my player (Vegas, Aug 23) reminded me of the nightmare: this was one of our special dates, and it was, indeed Vegas.

And my wife was fucking a black man in the bathroom, while I slept in the bed.

I cringed as Jen's tongue appeared and she began to trace slow, lazy circles all over the man's dark, hairless chest. She flicked her tongue quickly on his nipples, with an expertise that she had never used on me. My own nipples got hard as I watched it.

And all the while, she was smiling. Smiling like a porn star, her mouth open and ready for whatever anyone wanted to put in it. Her tongue flicking in and out of her mouth, ready to lick and titillate whatever she could. All with that same smile.

Her hands were pushing down now, down between his belt and his skin, reaching into his pants to find what she wanted, what she treasured most. Apparently what she treasured above and beyond her marriage vows and her promises: a big, black, cock.

The guy turned his head slightly toward the wall behind him, which backed up to the hotel room. "Girl, you sure he ain't gonna wake up?"

Jen's hands found her prize, and I saw pleasure ripple through him as she moved around down there, massaging whatever she had her hands on. She was still licking him like he was a chocolate ice cream, but she flicked her eyes up long enough to roll them a little.

She shrugged.

It was clear that Jen's craving for a big cock in her pussy was not going to be detained by the little matter of a husband sleeping in the next room. Obviously, her hands were working their magic, because he dropped the matter entirely and yanked her shirt down to her elbows. He grasped a handful of her creamy skin in one hand and kneaded it like dough until her tit burst out of her lacy bra.

“Take your belt off,” Jen breathed. She was speaking softly but not whispering. I could hear every treacherous word that left her mouth. Her stud did as she said.

“Save that for later,” Jen said.

My eyes almost popped out of my head. In every video Jen said or did something I had never heard or imagined her saying or doing before. In all our years of marriage. Even after two bottles of wine.

It was like watching another woman. Except it was my wife.

Now her stud seemed to figure out that he had some kind of permission to have an upper hand, and he licked his own lips. “Oh yeah?” he said. “You gonna need some kind of punishment?”

Jen pushed a pair of silky red short-pajamas down her legs, and shook them off. “I’m a very bad girl,” she said. “I sometimes need a good, hard, spanking. But right now,” her eyes dropped to his crotch, where I was also looking, and where a chunky, large bulge was pressing against his boxers. She slipped her fingers under the fabric. “I need some black cock in my mouth.”

My eyes bulged again, and my won cock flopped in my boxers, filling to bursting.

She pushed his boxers down.

I thought I knew what was coming, and kept my eyes glued to the screen, waiting for Jen to fall to her knees and begin to suck on his cock as I had seen her do with her boss. I was looking forward to watching her wrap her hands around the enormous hunk of black meat and open her mouth for him, to take him deep in her throat and really work on his cock, as I had seen before. The precum was squeezing out of the tip of my cock already, and I was afraid to touch myself yet, because there were still twenty minutes of this little film, and I didn’t want to spoil it – if you know what I mean – before it was over.

Jen held him in her hands for few moments. With both hands she stroked his cock, which was just as long and dark, as thick and meaty, as I had expected. The expression on her face was one I had never seen until I watched her dirty videos: it was a hungry, insatiable look. She just really loved black cocks. She had a look of total absorption on her face as she held him in her hands.

“Mmmmmhmmmm,” he said. “You like you some black cock, little girl?” Jen looked up and smiled again, That same, sexual, hungry smile. The same look she had given her boss, and the billionaire on the plane.

Then:

“You know how to throatfuck?” she said.

He stood back a little, and the look on his face might have mirrored my own. I mean, no one usually expects a nice, classy, Southern Belle like Jen – even if she is in the bathroom getting ready to swallow some cock while her husband is sleeping in the next room – to say a thing like that.

But he recovered quickly, and a new kind of smile appeared on his face. “If that's what you want,” he said, “definitely can do.”

“That's what I want,” Jen said. “I want to feel your cock all the way down my throat.” She walked her fingers up his chest. “But don't you dare come yet. I want your cock in every. Single. Hole.”

What in the hell?! My mind was getting totally blown. Jen never did this kind of thing with me – ever! Our dirtiest sex, and dirtiest talk – like I said, when we'd had a few bottles of wine – happened on all fours. In a bed.

Sometimes she would grudgingly lick my cock.

It was almost as if every video somehow got more and more depraved, even though I was watching them in no particular order.

I was on the edge of my seat now.

Jen moved very expertly to the floor, getting on her knees but at the same time turning herself and her big bull so that his tight, black ass was facing the camera, along with his tree trunk legs. I was just wondering what Jen's idea was with this. In the two videos I'd already watched, she seemed like an expert at her craft. She always had the camera in the right place at the right time, to give herself (and me) a perfect view of her exploits. Now it seemed like I wasn't going to get to see anything but this guy's ass.

Then it became clear. As the enormous man tried to lower himself to get his cock all the way into her waiting, open mouth, he had to open his legs.

Now I had a view of something I absolutely could not believe.

My eyes widened.

My cock started to scream at me for release.

Jen's throat was the only thing I could really see, ending at her jaw. Her face disappeared behind two low-hanging, enormous balls.

Her throat was full, stretched open visibly with a bulge. And as this guy moved his hips back and forth, shoving his cock in and out of her very compliant mouth and throat, the bulge moved visibly as well. I could actually see this gigantic cock moving in her throat.

I stared, transfixed, my cock ready to burst without me even touching it, listening to the sounds of Jen's throat gurgling, sticky and wet as he pummeled her face and her throat. Watching as the bulge of his big, thick cock moved up and down her creamy white throat. Her hands were along her sides. She was really just opening up wide for him and letting him have his way with her face, like she was a blow-up doll. I could even hear a slap as he rammed his thighs into her face, shoving himself as deep as he could go into her. I watched as she just opened wider and wider and swallowed it all, taking the whole huge black snake all the way to her chest. His hands held her by the sides of her face and he started to fuck her rhythmically, the bulge in her throat going up and down, up and down.

Suddenly, however, the scene changed rapidly.

He stopped and they both dashed around. I could not understand what they were doing – some kind of weird sexual stunt that I didn't know about at all? - until I heard a thump far away from the camera. The man jumped into the shower stall and pulled the door closed. It was frosted and his dark skin was blatant through the glass against all the other creamy, gray and beige shades of the bathroom. It was almost laughable. It was so obvious there was a black man in the shower.

Jen sat down on the edge of the tub and turned on the water.

And then, unbelievably:

A man entered the room.

I entered the room.

I was wearing a blue shirt, open to the bottom. No pants, no underwear.

My modest cock, shrunken up with sleep and alcohol, glared at me in stark contrast to the big snake of a black cock that had just been down my wife's throat.

I was stumbling drunk, and I held my hand up to the wall above the toilet to pee. I leaned and burped. “Hey babe,” I said. “Whatcha doin?”

The man in the shower was right behind me. I must have been within earshot of his heavy breathing – which I could actually make out on the audio now.

You fucking idiot! I wanted to scream at myself.

Jen was wiping her face, which had been smeared senseless with mascara and spit. Her hair was a mess, and it was also so obvious to anyone (apparently, except me) that she had just been doing something very nasty with her mouth.

She looked at me. "Just taking a bath," she said. She was totally calm.

There was, very obviously, a huge black man in the shower stall, and he had just been fucking her face, and she was sitting there like nothing at all was going on.

I stumbled over to her and kissed her. I put my own mouth right on hers, which probably still had the precum and scent of that stallion on it. She offered me that mouth with a casual smile, and put her hand on my neck.

"I gotta..." I mumbled something. I was pretty tanked, it was obvious.

Humiliation stained my cheeks as I watched myself. I watched Jen's fake smile, her suppressed laughter. She brought a hand to her mouth and stifled her outburst. Her face was covered in spit and her mouth must have tasted like cock, not to mention that that guy was standing in the shower stall.

What an asshole I looked like, with my skinny legs and my tiny cock. The pain of it and the humiliation burned through all the coolness of the surprise.

The door shut.

Jen held up her hand toward the shower door, and she stood up, approaching the camera and the door. I heard the click of the door.

Then she opened the shower stall.

Both of them were laughing dryly into their hands. But their laughter soon turned to molten heat again, and Jen's hands found his still rock-hard cock. She guided him to the counter, leading him by the dick. Then she hopped up onto the counter and lifted her legs.

Like a stripper, or a showgirl. She lifted them up, up, so that they were in a V-shape and spread open for him. She held her own thighs and looked him in the eye. "I want you to fuck me until I come hard all over your cock," she said. "But you better be good and wait to come, because I want you to fill up my ass, and bad boys who fill up my pussy don't get to make me scream with their cock in my ass."

Even this guy had to raise an eyebrow.

My jaw was on the floor. It's true that each video I watched seemed more shocking than the last, but this was incredible. My wife was like a completely, totally different person.

She watched his cock all the way to her pussy, eying it as he moved toward her. "Fuck me like you mean it," she said. "I want to get fucked hard and good.”

Her stud was so happy to comply. He grabbed her ass, his big hands pressing into her white flesh and grasping it until it turned pink. His huge cock went into her and she gasped and wiggled, squealing in delight.

Loudly.

Wasn't she worried I was going to hear her screeching in the next room?

And just like that, the secret of the video came to me: the blue shirt. A shiny, gray/blue material. My eyes tore from the screen and flicked to our wedding picture. Yep. That was the one. The shiny blue shirt I had worn at the silly chapel where we had married.

What I was watching on the screen was, in fact, our wedding night.

The memories started to flood my mind.

Jen and I had returned from an afternoon service at the chapel, laughing and horny as hell. I had been so turned on by the fact that she was my wife now: even though it was a paper, a technicality, something about the idea of her being mine, being mine to fuck whenever I wanted to, her pussy belonging to me, in a contractual sense, just got me hard before the service was even over. I had carried her clumsily over the threshold, and we had fallen into the bed.

Jen had dug her fingernails into my back and screamed so loudly that someone knocked on the door to make sure everything was okay. I had peppered her stomach with kisses and then made her come with my tongue in her sweet pussy. She had ridden on me, sitting on my lap, her breasts smashed against my chest, her skin glistening with sweat...it was all coming back to me now.

And then we had gone out to dinner. I could see the restaurant in my mind.

But mostly I could see Jen.

Jen, who I had thought was all mine.

Jen, who had married me, whose pussy was all mine to fuck, who belonged to me now.

Jen, laughing and saying this was the best day of her life.

I couldn't remember how, but we had gone to the casino after that.

And there he had been: the black guy. An athlete. “Dave, this is...”

What had she said his name was?

Didn't matter.

Then she had placed her hand on his chest, and smiled. “We were old friends in college.”

And I, like an idiot, had let him stand there talking to her while I played roulette. I had been on one of those drunk highs. My wife looked great, I was winning at the tables: it didn't even occur to me that I should be concerned.

What an idiot.

And Jen.

I watched her now on the screen, her legs held up over her head. My eyes went straight to the place on the screen where his black cock was thrashing against the pink folds of her pussy. The same pussy I had eaten out, the same pussy I had come in just hours before. The same pussy I so naively had been elated to believe was mine all mine.

Here she was, on our wedding night, her head against the mirror, her eyes trained on the cock moving in and out of her, her mouth open. “Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!” she was squealing on the video. He pumped into her harder, slapping against her ass.

She arched her back and made a howling sound as she came.

“Oh yeah baby, let me feel that cum all over my cock. Get it nice and wet. Let it drip down there. Get that ass all ready for me.”

He slowed as she twisted with the last of her orgasm, and he gently let her legs, which he had been holding high above his head, drop to the counter. She leaned forward and placed her arms over his neck.

My mind was spinning. I had my cock in my hand but I was so close to coming that I was afraid to move it. I knew there was more: the words Jen had said earlier were still freshly printed on my mind and impossible to ignore: fuck me in every hole.

And at the same time, in the background of my mind, like a play behind a play, I was thinking of the evening as it had unfolded just hours before what was taking place in this video. How my duplicitous wife had urged to have drink after drink. How she had smiled and taken me to the bar. How the black man had disappeared, and she had spoken of him dismissively. An old boyfriend – not even really a boyfriend.

How she must have been making plans with him, right there at the roulette table. Telling this “not even really a boyfriend” to meet her back at the room.

What had she said to him, I wondered? Give me a few hours to get this guy plastered and then come to my room and out your cock in my ass?

And the one thing that nagged, more than anything at all, was the video camera.

Why did she have it?

Did she just take it with her everywhere, in case she got an urge to fuck a black man?

She had never, ever so much as suggested to me that we film something together. I hadn't even known that she had a camera until the flight to Dubai.

These thoughts turned my stomach and sent cold shivers through me, but the images on the screen twisted me in knots of a different kind.

Jen was turning around. She leaned over the counter, so that she was supported by the counter itself. She placed her hands on her ass, and turned it up. Her hands were holding her cheeks away from her sweet hole for him! Looking at my wife, in such a submissive position, giving herself in her darkest, most intimate place, to an old flame who had turned up on our wedding night, I got dizzy. I couldn't tell with what. Pleasure, a deep and dark one. I loved that her tight hole – the place she never let me go – was about to get pulled open and rammed by this hulking black bull. Something about the humiliation of it being our wedding night made it scorching hot. But I was also in disbelief.

The image of myself on the screen, when I had passed through the bathroom like a dottering old fool, clawed inside my chest for a moment. His cock was at her asshole now. I couldn't see what was happening in detail but I had no trouble imagining it from his perspective: the tip of his thick black member snuggled up against the pink ring of her anus, the tension on the end of his shaft as he pushed, pushed, pushed...then heat on the tip of his cock as it sank in, centimeter by centimeter. Still tight, too tight to go in..

Jen moaned and cried out a little.

He didn't stop. He placed a hand against her back so that she would stay where she was.

“Oh, you're gonna get what you asked for, Jen-baby,” he snarled. “Pull that ass open for me. Daddy's been a good boy and now I'm gonna fill your tight ass up with my load.”

Jen inhaled sharply as his cock sunk in deeper.

I allowed myself a squeeze from my own hand. I wanted so much to put my own cock in there, to feel her asshole finally give way, opening up, and then have my cock deep in her hottest, softest flesh while she squirmed in discomfort, giving herself up to me totally.

But instead it was this guy. This guy with the fucking hugest cock I had ever seen.

He thrust hard, suddenly, and Jen groaned and closed her eyes, crying out in agony. Her mouth was open, and she whimpered a little.

“Too big for your little hole?” he said. “Take it. You can take it like a little slut, I know you can.”

But then Jen seemed to relax. I saw him smile.

“There we go, that's it. You just relax and enjoy that cock in your ass. Ima give it to you good and hard, just like you want it.”

Jen bit her lip.

He started to pull his long cock out. I watched it, snaking out of her tight hole as she squirmed and dug her fingernails into her flesh. She moaned.

“Ready? I'm going to fuck your ass full of cum now, babydoll.”

“Oh yeah,” Jen moaned.

“Say it!” he said, suddenly, and from the table next to him produced the belt. He slapped her lightly on the ass.

“Say what?” she said, sassily.

He gave her another slap, and she smiled and whimpered.

“Say, I'm going to ride your cock, Big Daddy”

Jen opened her mouth, but then she just smiled.

He slapped her again.

She shivered in pleasure.

‘I'm going to ride your big, black, hot cock until you fill my ass so full of cum it blows all over the wall,’ Jen said.

I started to stroke myself harder. What a dirty, dirty little whore, I thought. And how was I sleeping through this? What a chump.

Jen put her hands against the mirror, and she began to move herself back and forth, bucking and sweating and groaning as she worked her ass over his cock. He looked down at her, smiling and giving her a slap, just like a jockey to a horse, if she slowed.

Finally, he grabbed her by the hips, unable to take any more, and started to slam himself into her. All the way, all the long inches of his cock. His thick member had to be stretching her to her limits, pulling her apart and shredding her tiny hole, but she looked like she liked it as she held onto the mirror and let him pummel her.

I saw her hand slide down between her own legs, and she fingered herself as he thrust again and again, harder and faster, his skin slapping onto her ass and his big balls flying all around. He was moving so fast against her now that as she yelled it came out as though someone were thumping on her chest, broken into little bursts of yelling. And then he tipped his head back, and groaned loudly, as his seed filled my wife's ass.

I was disappointed that I couldn't see it dripping from her, or splashing against the wall, as she had described it. But my imagination helped me out. My imagination and the views I had on the other videos: white, creamy froth gushing from her stretched, red holes.

She held herself open for him to view what he had done: almost certainly, her ass was gaping wide, dark red and then black in the center, with his white cum bursting out of it as she was racked by final little spasms of her orgasm. Her sphincter squeezing closed in waves. He looked at it and admired his handiwork.

And in the next room, I slept.

Jen stood up, and nimbly found her shorts. She turned and planted a wet kiss on his big lips. "Okay, tiger," she said. "You better go before hubby catches you."

He laughed, low and mean, kissed her again, and left.

Jen moved toward the camera, and the screen went black.

I was spent, and I leaned back in my office chair. As with the previous videos, I was in disbelief.

My eyes rested on my next choice from the list. I would watch it in a week. This was the rule.

I only had so many left to watch.

But I was also thinking of something else.

Jen seemed to take advantage of opportunities.

I wondered if there was a way I could make more of them happen.

CUCKOLDED ON MY DOMINICAN VACATION

On the last morning of our vacation in the Dominican Republic, I was pretty sure that I could already see the change in Heather. She seemed to have a certain glow. A lot of men claim that they can tell when their wives are pregnant, even at the earliest stages. She was sleeping soundly next to me, without any indication of a troubled conscience.

I suppose it was my own fault. I was the one who encouraged her to flirt with another man. If I had never told her about my fantasy...

I didn't mean for her to take it so far.

She was sleeping peacefully, and I knew in my heart that it was already too late: the dance instructor she had gone into a back room with had had her hard and unprotected, and nothing I could do now would change what had surely happened.

She hadn't even taken a shower. I would just be putting my cock where that huge, black stallion had been, too late, in her pussy that was still full of his cum.

"Heather," I whispered.

The images of Estevan's enormous black cock moving in and out of her, stretching her open, making her scream in ecstasy, filled my head. My cock was rock hard. I moved my hand down the length of her body, ready to work my fingers between her legs. What would I find there? Would she still be sticky with his cum? Stretched out?

Heather mumbled something, and pushed my hand away.

"Not now," she said.

She sat up, and plodded to the bathroom. I heard the shower turn on.

This was it. I had been cuckolded hard. And now I was pretty sure my wife was pregnant with another man's baby.

The dance instructor at the all-inclusive resort we went to in the Dominican Republic was named Estevan. He was a tall, black bull whose voice had the quality of a velvet car interior and a glass of B&B, which is to say, a little trashy and a little sexy at the same time. He actually wore a silk shirt with the top button open, and beneath it he had perfectly smooth ebony skin. And it was plain to see that his chest was firm and muscled in that young, effortless way that certain people have.

But come on, I thought. The ladies don't really go for that, do they?

I nudged Heather, and made the face that we make when think someone is a little too “Guido” in our neighborhood: too many gold chains, too much hair shlack. But Heather smiled perfunctorily, and without really taking her eyes off of Estevan, who was smiling charmingly and showing us the first steps of the dance we were learning. A bery basic salsa, he was saying.

“Okay, gwho want to try it now?” he asked the room in his thick accent.

The white suburban vacationers looked mortified.

“You,” Estevan said, and I thought for a moment he was pointing at me.

Maybe he was. My heart fell to my feet and I wanted to make some kind of excuse to leave. But whoever he was pointing at to begin with, my wife was the one who stood up eagerly and pushed past me, jiggling and moving to the beat already.

Estevan's face changed. He actually had the audacity to look her up and down, his eyes settling on her sashaying hips. Just blatantly looking right at her abdomen, her thighs, and what moved between them.

Heather is a big, curvy girl, and she often says she's too fat. But I've noticed that every black man we see takes the same kind of look at her that this guy was taking: a look that was more like his tongue had come out of his mouth and was wrapping itself all around her thick body.

They wasted no time, melting together and starting to swing around in circles that always ended with Heather's soft, full breasts or her perfect thighs or some other part of her body pressed up against Estevan. He had the expression of a wolf, of a man who was very used to getting what he wanted. And more importantly, that what he wanted right now was Heather. It was obscene. The other men looked at me with a mixture of pity and embarrassment. Their wives looked a little shocked. My face burned, but I pretended, idiotically, to be enthralled by the way Heather was elegantly smashing her ass into Estevan's crotch, all perfectly timed, all perfectly coordinated. She laughed and giggled and spun and spun, yelling all kinds of things in Spanish, which she had studied just for this trip.

It was terrible.

And it was hot.

There is another thing that I should mention, and that is that while Heather has always asked me to learn how to dance, there is something that I have been asking her for quite some time. And I should mention that, in exchange for me agreeing to try and learn how to dance, Heather agreed to “try” my idea. She imposed the condition that she had to be the one to pick out the candidate.

I imagine you can guess what it is that I wanted her to do.

I agreed to all of this at the time – it was a long time ago, before we even planned this vacation - for because I didn't honestly think Heather, with her Catholic upbringing and constantly professed love for me, and somewhat prudish tendencies, would ever actually choose anyone and go through with it. It was just a fantasy, and I enjoyed that she agreed to it. The way I figured it, neither of us would ever have to go through with the other's desires.

But by the time we arrived in the Dominican Republic, I had forgotten all of these agreements. She saw an advertisement for the dance lessons, and they were part of the package at the hotel.

“Doesn't that sound like fun?” she squealed.

I was already a little drunk on free drinks, and I was relaxed, and so – yeah, it sounded fun. I agreed to it without the thought of my fantasy even crossing my mind. What else were we going to do at the beach? I had agreed to come here to make her happy. She liked warm weather and drinks with umbrellas, and she had insisted on it until I just gave in. We had decided to start a family, and we wanted to have one last fling beforehand. That's how she had said it, now that I think about it. It has a double meaning now.

Because I had forgotten about the dance lesson/hot wife exchange I had dreamed up, it came as a bit of a shock when, the very evening of our first lesson and our first night on vacation, she told me that she had decided on her man.

She waited until we were back at the room, and then she crawled to me like a cat on the bed. “Honey,” she purred, in her sultriest voice. “I think you'll get what you want soon. I've found the perfect man.”

It took me a few seconds to process what she was saying.

When I did, I felt a little sick, and a little excited. I went cold, but my cock also responded by getting hard as stone. My mouth was dry, and a million thoughts spun through my head.

“Not the dance instructor,” I said. I wanted it to be him and I did not. Also, I could not really believe this conversation was happening.

She smiled. “Gwhy not?” She said, in his accent. She straddled me now, and was pleased to find that my cock was already hard. “You said I could pick out whoever I wanted,” she whined. She moved her hand toward my cock, and smiled mischievously. “And it looks like you like this idea anyway, right?”

What could I do? I liked the idea, and I hated it. I thought of the silk-shirted, bare-chested Estevan, his skin against Heather's, her nipples hard and bouncing up and down while he swayed his hips – not side to side, but back and forth, in and out of her spread legs...

Heather was stroking my cock now, her eyes glazed over with her own thoughts. I wondered if she was imagining the same thing. Maybe she was imagining stroking his cock, which was probably huge and long (he looked half-black, and just had the appearance of a man with a long dick). Maybe she was thinking about his perfectly toned body on top of her, pushing her face down onto the bed and filling her tight pussy with his huge black cock. She certainly wasn't looking at me, but through me. Her hand moved faster and her lips parted. When I pulled her on top of me she was as wet as if I had fingered her and licked her nearly to an orgasm. She moved her hips quickly over me and came before even I did. My mind filled with images of Esteban's mouth lapping at her dark, perfect mound while she threw her head back and screamed like she was right now.

The thought of his tongue, with all those rolled rrr's, flicking in and out of that precious hole, must have been what sent me over the edge. I came with one of those jarring, shuddering orgasms, that make you yell and arch your own back. I plunged into Heather as far as I could and spilled my seed into her. By then she was already bored, tired of the whole thing. She looked at the wall with disinterest, and when I was done, she rolled onto her side and reached out to turn on the TV.

I sat in the bed, panting, the cool pain of her betrayal already flickering inside of me, like a white-hot flame.

Heather wasted no time, given my tacit (and I would say, semi-) approval of her choice, in getting to Estevan. Estevan, for his part, seemed to have already chosen Heather for some kind of conquest. I wondered what she was going to tell him, and whether she would even let him know that the whole thing was my idea. Or perhaps not: perhaps she would let that smug, smooth-chested bastard think that he had seduced my wife and cuckolded me entirely on his own. The fingers of pain squeezed a little, partly in my chest and down in my groin. Heather wore her highest, sexiest heels to the next practice, and she moved her round ass in full, perfect circles as she strutted across the dance floor to greet Estevan. The bright red dress she was wearing was new, and she had seen me look at her with suspicion this morning. It was an absolutely stunning dress: it clung to her body all the way to her knees, where it spilled into a light, smooth-edged flare. It was a tank top so her strong, thin arms were bare and looked somehow longer. The front dipped almost criminally low, exposing her two sweet mounds of almond-olive skin, and then hiding them ever so slightly in folds of fabric that shifted as she moved.

“It's not new,” she said, accusingly. “You've seen it like a million times.” She was putting on earrings, leaning toward the mirror. The dress dipped down and I could see all the way to her navel. Her tits barely hung down, they were so plumped up by the bra she was wearing.

No, I had not seen that dress.

She said nothing to me on the drive to the rehearsal. She did let that dress fall back so that most of her thigh was uncovered. She had put on thigh-high pantyhose, the kind that just magically clung to her legs in a lacy strip at the top. They were the same color as her legs and so the only use for them was to be – as they were – incredibly, incredibly hot.

At dinner, I kept looking over to the band of red lace at the top of her thigh, and all the skin that was encased in the sheer fabric beneath it. I wanted to say that this was all a mistake, and that she shouldn't do anything with Estevan. But something stopped me. Was it the pain of betrayal I was feeling, or the ache in my cock as I imagined her riding atop him on the parquet floor, her blond hair sticking to her back? Or was it just that I was a chickenshit now, now that Heather seemed so in control, so unwilling to listen to me? She was going to have her way, I could see.

It was all my own fault, anyway. I was the one who asked her to do it, originally.

But had I really meant it?

“Do you want to have drinks down by the beach?” I said, meekly.

She turned to me and smiled. Was it a false smile? Sarcastic? I couldn't tell. It looked like a sweet smile, but was it maybe a little too sweet?

“Maybe, darling.”

I had no idea if she really meant that. Was it something she would have said before? I was racking my brains, trying to figure out if she was just being herself, or if she was taunting me now.

We finished dinner in silence. She seemed to be lost in her own thoughts. She walked next to me, her arm in mine, until we entered the building where the lessons were held. She abandoned me as soon as we walked into the dance room: she let go of my arm and started to walk faster, opening her big red mouth in an enormous smile, her throaty Spanish nonsense greetings spilling out of it. I tried for few seconds to keep up with her pace but I looked ridiculous. I slowed, and tried to dribble away into the chairs on the side of the dance floor. But everyone had already seen this: all eyes were on me as I sat down alone, and Esteban and my wife laughed and talked loudly in the corner of the room. Whatever they were saying it was making both of them laugh. I could see Heather's lips next to his ear as she leaned in to whisper something. It didn't look scandalous; all of the other participants had pretty much lost interest in it. It just looked like my wife was being her usual self, right?

I turned to look at Walter, the fat chump with the thin, morose Colombian wife who barely spoke English. But he was just staring at the two of them with his mouth slightly ajar. Heather's head was tossed back and she was giving Estevan a playful slap on the shoulder. Estevan was laughing, too, but his eyes were serious, and they were all over her breasts. Which she had stuffed into that push-up bra that she didn't need.

"Okay," Estevan said, after he put on some music with samba beat. It was lightly playing in the background, and it seemed to me like the two of them – Estevan and Heather – were twitching with it in the same way, conspiratorially. He had Heather's hand in his. Like a pair of dancers, of course, no more sensually than say, a pair of ice skaters. But in his hand all the way across the dance floor, and Heather smiling her big, awful smile. She looked at me and winked.

Did she? Did she do that? I had no idea.

"What we are gonna do now, today, is learn some moves from the saaaaaammmmba," Estevan said. "And luckily we have Heather, who is very good at the samba, so we are just going to dance now, we see how it goes, and then we teach you too."

This guy was grinning a little more than usual, so I wondered what Heather had whispered in his ear. Did he know already that he was going to be holding her breasts in his hands soon?

The two of them moved around on the floor like a pair of new lovers. I hated to admit it but they looked spectacular together. Heather really was a brilliant dancer, and her hot red dress was twirling up, up in all the right places to show off her thighs. Everyone in the room could get a glimpse of her red thigh-high stockings snug on her tight upper thigh. Estevan had his hands on her waist, on her rib cage. He was holding up her leg now, staring at her breasts in her low-cut dress. Heather spun and spun, her mouth open in her sexy, wet smile. Her lips shone, pouty and full and perfect. And as she spun, her eyes remained fixed on me, while Estevan moved his hands all over her body, in front of everyone.

When they finished no one quite knew what to do. The girls clapped, the men stared. I felt certain my face had grown as red as Heather's dress. I felt as though everyone was staring at me as Estevan escorted my lovely wife to me, and then tried to help me move my body to the steps of the samba. He finally left, and Heather leaned in to tell me the details of her plan. It would happen tonight, after class, she said. There was a room in the back of the building. She would say she forgot something and go back there with Estevan to get it.

I wanted to ask her if he knew, what she had told him. I needed to know that he was aware that this was my idea, and that he was not seducing my wife, but the other way around. But he came swinging his hips and dancing smoothly through the crowd, spinning all of the girls. When he got to Heather he danced next to her, watching my pathetic attempt to dance with disdain, barely disguised as a polite, encouraging instructor.

“You don't mind if I take Heather for just one more spin, do you?”

But he didn't wait for me to say yes or no, he just went away with her, leaving me gyrating idiotically in the middle of the dance floor, partnerless, with everyone's eyes on my wife's ass or Estevan's pecs.

It worked out just as she said it would. It seemed, as people trickled away, that everyone knew my wife was about to cuckold me, and some of them felt badly about it. I think they were even trying to stick around to put off the inevitable: Heather spent this time laughing seductively and batting her eyes at Estevan as he played music for her in the corner.

Then the last people left, reluctantly, through the door, and Heather said loudly that she had left something in the back room. Estevan eagerly offered to show her where it was. And, as though I wasn't even there, they skipped away, laughing.

Like a beaten dog, but also stiffening with anticipation and excitement, I hung my head and walked through the dark hallway, following the sounds of their voices. They were jabbering away flirtatiously in Spanish, which Heather had really gotten quite good at.

Had she studied it so hard because she secretly wanted to find herself a Latino black man all along?

Had she been plotting this whole thing?

Heather had left the door open just a crack, and so I stood in the hallway with just enough space to see inside as they moved around in the room.

Estevan was sweet-talking her now, and she was playing it coyly, laughing and pushing him away, but in that way that means go right ahead. There was a lot of whispering. He pushed her hair over one shoulder and fingered the strap of her dress. She smiled, invitingly.

And then he let go of her. For a moment I couldn't see him, and then I saw his torso, blocking the view. And then, to my horror, he shut the door.

I sort of panicked, unsure of why: whether I was afraid that I would not be able to break them up, or just upset that I wouldn't see them. I shook the door handle to check, my heart sinking as I did. Then I shook it more vigorously, so that Heather would know it was locked. And do what, I wondered? She wouldn't come and open it. And not only that, they would hear me. They knew it was me, and now they knew that I was sort of desperate, pathetic. Either because I didn't kick the door down, or because I was about to start begging to be let in just to see what I wanted to see.

Did I want her to stop? Should I bang on the door and tell them to let me in?

I knocked on the door, but I did not say anything. I jiggled the lock again. But I could still hear them, almost as clearly as if they were in the hallway with me. Heather's voice was high and panting, and she laughed. Whatever she said was dismissive. She was dismissing the pounding on the door.

I looked up. The door was old and it had one of those glass windows at the top of it, that opened. It was propped open now.

I hear Heather moaning, and Estevan saying something in a low voice. A giggle – a salacious, wet giggle. She was cooing. I turned left and right, and found an open door. Inside there was, as luck would have it, a step-ladder.

I set it in front of the door: I had to see what was going on. The ladder barely got me up to the window, and I had to stand on tip-toe, ridiculously, to peer into the room. There was a mirror on one side that allowed me to see better what was going on.

I saw Heather's legs first, encased in that red lace band at the top of each thigh. She was still wearing her heels, and she was facing the mirror. Her eyes were closed and she was smiling in ecstasy, squirming a little. Estevan was pushing the dress up, his hands touching every part of her as he did. He slid his big hands over her thin ribcage, and then moved forward slightly as he reached her breasts, dipping into the fabric that held them, stroking her tender skin. She made a low bawling sound, like an animal, and held her arms up so that he could take the whole thing off.

Her underwear was red, her bra was red. She was a ripe, delicious olive pressed into that cherry-red lingerie. She fluttered open her eyes, and they went straight to mine through the mirror. She smiled, and I had no idea what kind of smile it was. If it was cruel, or satisfied, or amused, or all three. She parted her lips. "Si, papi," she murmured. "Besame todo el cuerpo, exactamente asi."

I knew a little Spanish, and that sounded like "kiss me everywhere, just like that."

I was frozen, though, straining over the edge of the glass window. I wanted to shout that they should stop, but there was some fear inside of me that they wouldn't. And another fear that they would. So I stood there, ridiculously, and watched.

Estevan pushed Heather forward, and she bent over obligingly, tilting her ass up for him and tossing her long, silky mane of black hair over her shoulder. Already her hair was damp underneath, and some of it stuck to her neck. She was sweating, and the only thing that could have her sweating was desire. She kept her eyes on me in the window, her enormous, deep brown eyes that looked like the eyes of a doe with a hint of malice. Her pink tongue darted out of her mouth, and licked her lips, while she looked right into the mirror, her gaze reflecting off the glass and up to me, and what must have been a stupefied face, craning over the window ledge. I felt like an adolescent, getting caught peeping.

Now Esteban was parting her from behind with one skilled hand. The other pressed on her lower back so that she arched down and up, her ass turned up to him and everything revealed: her tiny pink hole, her swollen flower that was glistening as if it were an actual flower in the morning, covered in dew. A knife of jealousy cut through me, but at the same time a searing, almost painful lust. That was my wife, wetter than she had ever been before. Esteban's fingers found her easily, and he began to play with her outer lips. Stroking them, teasing them. Heather opened her mouth and let out a high-pitched whine. She bit her lip. Now her eyes were half closed and she began to move her hips and murmur things that I could not hear well. Esteban got his fingers into her, his palm cupping her whole wet pussy and gliding over it. Heather liked this. Oh, she really liked this. She hung her head but arched her back even more, and she pushed herself into his hand to get more of him into her. She jiggled her ass up and down to stroke herself. Esteban just sat there, her whole body squirming on his hand, watching her, pleasuring her without even moving.

I could imagine how that felt, I suppose: this was, after all, a place I had been before. But I had never turned her over like that and fucked her with my hand, sinking my whole hand into her pink, hot flesh and letting her squeal like she was. He was saying something to her now. I didn't really need to know any Spanish to guess at what it was: something dirty, something profane, something that made her smile and open her eyes and turn back to him to watch his hand moving in and out of her.

Now Heather had lost interest in looking up at me. She was rising to an orgasm, and Esteban's hand was getting wetter and wetter as he moved in and out of her. She moaned and begged him to keep going, just like that, oh yes papi. And then she let out a squeal, a sound I have never heard her or any other woman make, and she kicked her feet around and threw her hair in circles.

Now Esteban was talking to her, his hand still moving inside of her while she shifted in discomfort. Her orgasm was still making her tremble, and he was going to go for more.

My arms were aching from pulling myself up to the height of the window, but I could not tear my eyes away. My mouth was dry, and I tried to swallow. Shouldn't I stop him, I was thinking, as he pulled his hand out and stood back, unbuckling his pants while he admired Heather's dripping, engorged flower, its petals swollen and throbbing.

He let his pants fall to the floor, and did not bother to take them off.

His cock was enormous, and it was already erect and ready. He must have been ten inches long, and it was a thick, snake-like barrel of a cock. Heather was looking at it in the mirror: I could see her eyes widen in delight and surprise, and maybe a little hesitation. She murmured something, and Esteban's face, reflected in the mirror, revealed a smile. Then he took his shaft in one hand, and began to rub it over Heather's wet slit, pushing the folds of pink, pulsing skin apart to get at her raw clitoris. When he found the place and moved the tip of his cock over it, she screamed.

He played with her a little like this, enjoying the scene of her tipping her head back and gasping, crying out and begging him to stop, then begging him not to stop. He held her ass in place with one hand, because she was flailing around in such convulsions of ecstasy and she could not hold still, not even to be pleased by him.

He spoke to her and she looked back at him in the mirror. Then she leaned forward, placing her chest on the narrow table, her forehead crammed up against the mirror. She moved her hands back to her full round buttocks, and she pulled them open for him.

The sight of Heather submitting herself so completely, in such a carnal, primal position of utter submission, tore through me and the pain surged to the tip of my cock, which was nearly bursting. I knew I should stop them, I knew I was going to regret this somehow...but I was transfixed.

He slipped into her easily, and I heard her muffled screech and sensual bleating, telling him how big it was and how much she wanted it. He moved slowly, and I had a full view of how his enormous dick was spreading her open, wide, wide, wider, until he was sunk all the way in, all the countless inches of him just slurped up by my wife's hot, wet pussy. He began to move slowly back and forth inside of her, and she dug her fingers into her ass and moaned and whinnied like an animal.

It was almost too much to bear, but then I saw his other hand, which he placed casually on the lowest part of her back and began to move slowly down, and down, until his thumb was making circles over her tight pink asshole.

Heather reacted by pulling her ass further apart for him.

I almost couldn't believe it. She never did this kind of thing.

But then, I was never brave enough to do this kind of thing.

Now he was pushing in to her ass, and I heard Heather's ecstatic, agonized moan. She screamed ay, no but she tilted her ass helpfully up, and pushed herself onto him, and left her hands where they were while he pushed further into her.

Now he began to fuck her in earnest, both his thumb and his cock working together, in unison. Heather squealed and screamed into the desk, and her fingernails made deep divots in her skin. The whole dressing table was shaking now, and she was turning her head from side to side, telling him yes, yes, yes, and don't stop.

And then, just as she seemed to be reaching the crest of her second, explosive orgasm, Estevan ceased his thrusting and pulled slowly out of her, while she collapsed and sobbed, tipping her ass up to beg for more. She sat up on her hands and turned around.

He stood back, and beckoned her with a finger. He said something in a low voice, and Heather smiled and whined in Spanish. Then she turned around, moving toward him. She gave a quick glance up at the window, with a sadistic little smile – or was it? And then she lowered herself to her knees, and looked up at Estevan the dance instructor with her enormous eyes. She placed her hands on his thighs, and he guided his cock to her mouth.

She opened her mouth and licked him, the same wicked smile on her face. She lapped up all of her tart juices like she was eating a Popsicle, smiling and licking and slurping and smiling. She looked up at him and smiled.

He took her head in his hand, and she opened up for him, letting him push himself into her mouth, down to her throat. She struggled to take him all in, and she pulled off, looking down at his cock like it was a delicious meal she simply couldn't finish.

And then it became clear to me what he had asked her to do. That he wanted her to beg him to go back inside of her and finish her off. And that her begging was to be done with her mouth.

I could hardly stand the pain of it, scorching me from my eyes, to my heart, to my cock, watching her open up and take so much of that huge, dark cock in her mouth. Then she smiled, strings of saliva threaded from her wet lips to his cock. She leaned in to flick her tongue around the very tip of him, tasting his precum, no doubt. She licked her lips and went back for more, filling her mouth up, her jaw working away tirelessly.

But it was the eyes, fluttering up at him, meeting his stare without looking away; and the smile, the smile of pleasant subservience, of contented submission, that knifed at me the most. Heather was enjoying this, and she was enjoying it much more than she had ever enjoyed her perfunctory blow-jobs that she gave to me, it always seemed, out of resignation more than anything else.

Estevan watched her, and moved her hair from her face to get a better view of her mouth taking him all in, and her eyes, pleading with him for more. To better see her tongue swirling around on the tip of his cock, lapping up all of his salty white froth.

She was saying por favor, something-something, and I didn't need to be a genius to suppose that it was, please fuck me again or something like that. Estevan said nothing and moved her head down over his shaft, while she smiled – even with her mouth full – and obeyed his ever wish and command. All to get him inside of her again. She really wanted it.

Finally he pulled her up, by her hair, and turned her around. She bent over the table obligingly and made sure to position herself where she could see the mirror. Now her mouth was open and she was pleading with him in Spanish, but her eyes were looking directly at me.

My knuckles were white, and my cock felt as though it were going to split open. A deep physical pain, from holding myself up and grasping the trim of the window so furiously, and a deep psychological pain from being torn between wanting to see all of that big black cock inside of my wife while she screamed like a little whore, and wanting to kick down the door and take her for myself: both of these pains were filling me to the point I thought I was going to actually burn up, right there.

Heather trained her eyes on me, and I watched, shifting my vision between the long, dark cock that was sliding into her again, and her open mouth that was wailing and mewling and begging for more, and her eyes, which she kept fixed on my reflection. Steady, revealing nothing. Cruel, or maybe not. She gasped and screamed and really threw herself around as he moved in and out, slamming into her with a grotesque slapping noise that could be heard even over her screaming.

I had my own hand in my pants now, and I was stroking myself furiously. I imagine this must have looked ridiculous but I didn't care, I didn't care at all. My eyes settled on the shaft of black meat, pressing outward on those soft pink folds and stretching them open. Her pussy swelled up around him, and I could hear the slick, slippery sounds of her moisture, lubricating him, dripping out onto her thighs.

It was only when she came that she took her eyes off me, closing her own eyes and bucking up and down, as if it were just too much. I felt myself burst in my own hand, suddenly embarrassed, suddenly ludicrous standing on this step stool.

But Estevan was not done yet. He was hammering away at Heather while she groaned and cried out, bracing herself against the mirror.

It was only then, and you probably think this is ridiculous, but only then that I realized that he had no condom on, and that he was thrusting away into her and about to spill his seed at her most vulnerable time. That he was going to fill my wife's pussy up with his cum, and I was going to stand out here and watch it.

My dick was still hard in my hand. Heather met my eyes again in the mirror as he pumped his final thrusts into her. His whole, muscular body flexed and he seemed to drain into through his cock, deflating a little as he did. It must have been an enormous load of cum, because it seemed like he was there forever, gasping with his orgasm, filling her up and panting on her back as she squirmed beneath him in pleasure.

As he placed his hands on her back, I lost my balance, and slipped onto the bottom step of the ladder. Weak from my own exertion, I failed to catch my balance and I fell into a heap, with the ladder falling on top of me.

Estevan's voice.

And then Heather, in English, just to be sure that I could understand: Don't worry. It's just my husband. I told you he likes to watch. He's too much of a pussy to do anything like this himself.

And then more Spanish, and laughter.

I lay in a disheveled heap on the floor. There was a cum stain on my pants and my fly was open.

The door opened and Estevan appeared.

He smiled, and sort of tipped an imaginary hat to me, and turned on his heel and went away whistling.

Heather followed him, glancing down at me and smirking. “Really, honey. Such a mess.” She snickered, or made some kind of distasteful, Latin tisking sound. And then she sauntered off in the direction of Estevan. “I’ll be in the car,” she tossed back at me. Her hips were swinging.

Now we're going to this wedding. Everyone agrees my dancing is still not much better. And that Heather has a certain glow about her...

A Dark Wish

Kurt loves hearing about his wife Melody's past exploits. He's always had a fantasy to see her with another man and when he shares his secret, he's surprised to find out it excites her too.

Agreeing to take it slow, they both want to see what happens when Melody starts flirting with Hank, the Jamaican foreman at Kurt's job.

But things speed up when they all end up at the office party and Kurt finds himself unable to put the brakes on his wife's dark wish.

This is an 11,000+ word standalone short story.

You'll love The Hotwife Summer

When Ben and Summer have the chance to spend the summer in Italy, their stale marriage starts to heat up in ways Ben could only have dreamed about. Summer is ready to take his hotwife fantasy all the way, and her choice is a sexy, Italian, Michelin star-studded chef. It's too late to put the brakes on what he's set in motion when Ben discovers the humiliating truth about Summer's choice of man. Summer has a taste for being naughty, and a filthy little plan of her own. Will it be everything he could wish for, or will Ben's cuckold fantasy turn into a nightmare he can't escape?

The Hotwife Tattoo

Greg knew it was going to be complicated when his brother married the wildest, sexiest, and most terrifying girl he had ever been with. The last thing he expected, however, is for his sweet and virtuous wife Sara to get along so well with her. When Sara starts changing her clothes, her habits, and even goes as far as getting a very sexy tattoo, Greg is forced to confront his own insecurities and his real desires. Will Sara be along for the ride, or is the change only skin-deep?

A Dark Place: Cuckolded In Lagos

Lagos is the one place in Africa where you can make anything happen.

Three people are carving out their fortunes in Africa's largest city, but each of them holds a deeper, darker desire. What is the secret desire of the angelic Charlotte, who finds all men's eyes on her after dark in Lagos? What about Andrew, who keeps a secret hunger so buried perhaps he doesn't admit it even to himself? And what could be darker than Clement Ambode's already shadowy "reliability" as an all-purpose contractor in the underbelly of Lagos?

Charlotte, Andrew, and Clement will find themselves in a very dark place when their worlds collide in this ultra-sexy, novella-length cuckold story.
