Subterfuge

House Check

THE TWO BRITISH Airways tickets marked Destination: Grand Cayman had been laying in the flat brass dish in the hall for two days. Kate put them there while she'd been packing so that they wouldn't be misplaced. But so much had been happening in preparation that for the life of her that fact could not be retrieved.

"Are you sure they're not in your pocketbook?" Mitch said from the hallway.

"I checked Mitch, I told you that," she said to the empty bedroom, though she knew he couldn't hear her. Mad at him, but she didn't know why. It was just defensive like throwing up sand in someone's face in a street fight. She'd seen her father do that one time in a parking lot. Grown man, knocked down in a fight with another Dad over a parking space.

She heard Mitch say, They're here, and then knew right away where they were. She could picture them sitting in that brass dish below their wood framed wedding picture. She came out to the hall, Mitch standing there exasperated with her, leaning over the handle of his bag. He smiled and waved two fingers over to the tickets on the teak table.

"It's going to be a rush," he said but she knew they'd have plenty of time.

"All right, all right," she said and picked them up, "Let's go."

She looked around at their beautiful, modern Campden Hill flat. It felt strange, like she was seeing it for the last time. What would they return to? She checked her pockets, did a brief little inventory. Mitch was already headed down the hall, and she took one last look at the little two-bedroom with a patio and manicured garden that cost more than her Dad had made in his entire life and she turned off the light.

They wheeled their bags to the elevator and down to the parking garage without running into anyone. She'd said to Mitch earlier to just call portage but Mitch didn't want small talk with anybody. Didn't want anyone knowing their business. He was being more secretive about this than she thought he needed to be. As far as anyone would see from the outside they were two people going away on vacation. What did he think people would see? How did he see themselves?

It felt like they were sneaking out. As Mitch drove the black Range Rover out into the morning light she imagined he was glad their windows were so deeply tinted.

WHEN KATE HAD GOT the little diamond stud in her nose he'd had to tell his friends she'd just done some travelling in India. People, other wives he knew, didn't do things like that. Didn't bother him in the slightest, but still, she had to keep up appearances. Did she have to give out a signal to everyone like that? Most of them were already talking about her behind the back of their hand.

Something had gotten into her recently. She'd always been aloof, unusual, and very unlike every other woman he'd met in his circle. That was why he loved her though—she was different than them in every way.

There were more than a few things—besides the nose stud—that hinted to him she was tired of playing the part of the proper wife of a former barrister turned Investment House co-owner. And she wasn't like that—it was truly just a role in a movie to her. She didn't even look the part, stood out from the thin prep wives in their slim fitting dresses when at a function. She didn't fit in with them socially either, isolated herself. Waited for Mitch to get home every night. That was fine with him. He didn't fit in with them either even though he'd been raised amongst them.

He watched her walk a step ahead of him as they made their way from business parking to the pod that would transport them to the terminal. His beautiful wife. The person for whom he would do anything. And that wasn't some rote phrase, he knew that. Whatever had made this bond with her he always had felt it had been made unbreakable. It was one of the greatest sources of power in his life. His stability.

She wore a black quilted Barbour jacket, skirt and leggings, and tall black Burberry riding boots with the house check along the cuff. Her beautiful, silky hair was pulled back in a ponytail. She looked gorgeous. She was his dream girl but there was more to it. She wasn't just his pretty doll that he liked to see dressed up.

He'd met her while he was in pupillage and instantly fell for her. They dated quite a while and even Kate didn't know how much he was tortured in that time; the sleepless nights, the twists in his stomach as he tried everything he could to win her over. That was mostly about her looks if he were honest. That was his hormones in overdrive.

Once they were committed he saw something else in her. When he'd won her away from the others, and she'd promised herself to him, that was when they started to grow together; into one another. She took to his mum, who was used to being sort of left out but who was the most important person to him. She'd raised him, with a little help of course, but his mum was an older woman when he was born, and she had nothing but time for him. They spent all their days together when he wasn't in school. Museums, zoos, art galleries; they'd travelled all over Europe before he was eleven. Mitch was the youngest son by far, ten years younger than Derek and the others. Growing up it was just him and his mum, while the men seemed to be in and out of the house, off doing their very important things.

When his mum got sick Kate was there for her when Mitch couldn't be. Went with her to her appointments, sat with her in the park, brushed her hair and did her makeup when she had to go out. When she was in the hospital Kate was there every day. She was there holding her hand when she passed while Mitch was at work.

Mitch held Kate's hand at the funeral. Looked over at her, saw her through the veil. She wasn't just a spouse, or girlfriend at that time, she felt like blood. Family.

His dad and brother, Derek, hadn't been so quick to take her in. At first he hadn't been sure why. Who wouldn't like her? In a fight with his dad, late one drunken summer evening when a party had dwindled, Derek Sutton Sr referred to her as a slapper. It had crushed him that he would think like that.

But she wasn't your typical prep school waif, like most of the others he'd dated. She was petite but full-figured. Built like a woman. Big breasts, narrow waist; voluptuous. She drove him crazy.

They checked themselves in and headed to the Galleries Club Lounge. Mitch got himself a coffee and Kate didn't want anything. She settled into the crook of his arm as they sat and watched planes out on the tarmac. She pat him on his chest, told him, See, plenty of time to spare, closed her eyes and fell asleep.

Her figure, and perhaps sometimes her manner, might have led his father to the insult, but there was a small truth to it. It was probably why it hurt him. It hurt that his Dad could see it in her. She'd had a lot of boyfriends and quite frankly she was ruthless in bed. He'd never encountered anything like it. And, over the last few months, she'd really kicked it into high gear.

THEY BOARDED the plane and took their seats in business class. There were no first class options. Mitch could have arranged for something, had Derek make some calls to get something private, but this was all right. They had their seats together in little pods but facing each other. He looked around at the other passengers as they started to taxi. This was better. Quieter. If he kept this as low key as possible it would be for the best.

Over the last maybe eight months she would bring it up. In the beginning he would think not this shit again. But she was consistent, maybe once a week she would offer. Bringing someone else into their bed. But Kate was all he wanted, he had no real desire to fuck some other girl. He'd told her this so many times. Sure their lovemaking had tapered off somewhat, but it wasn't that he'd lost any sort of desire for her, he was just, at times, overwhelmed with work. He wanted her to know he was faithful and that he hadn't lost any interest in her at all but he thought it would sound funny saying it in those words.

Although of course that would be simplest, sometimes, he had learned, the direct approach was not always best with Kate. He felt like sometimes her feelings were hurt easily. If he'd stated that he wasn't losing interest she might accept it but inside a voice would tell her that he'd said it because that was how he felt. How else would he have known to say it? Sometimes the straight path was indeed the least efficient route through his relationship with Kate.

Then, not too long ago, Kate was back on again. Back on like Old Kate. Kate that would put her hand down your pants in public while she said dirty things in your ear, or stand naked in the hall as you came home and tell you to fuck her. That was really how she got him to agree to this. Not recoiling from him, saying no or acquiescing, but advancing, taking. Instead of demanding this from him, or pouting, she inspired him to want it. Now he did want it. This last while he'd felt like he was twenty-one again. He'd lost a stone, was sleeping better, and he woke up with a smile most mornings.

When she'd told him it was arranged he'd just nodded, eyebrows raised, in agreement. He'd agreed, somewhere along the way there, that it would be fun. He thought of it as an idea, a concept, not something that would ever become a reality. But here it was. And it was intriguing.

Not just some girl. Her best friend. Her Maid of Honour. Kiley Beckett, her almost constant companion since they were nine. She'd been her roommate when Mitch was dating her. He'd never thought of her like that at all. Pushed it out of his head because she was Kate's best mate. But her charm was undeniable. Tall, slender, a great mane of beautiful hair. And she was lovely as a person, he felt warm towards her, felt like he could trust her. She would be perfect.

Kate said that Kiley was into it and that put a tingle into him. The thought that he could do this, that this was a possibility, would have been something unimaginable to a young Mitch. He was not that sort of guy. But he wanted to be. The idea that his wife's friend would agree to this was so flattering too. Had she thought of him before as well? Had she pushed away intimate feelings while they were together? Didn't act because he was her best mate's husband? It was heady thinking.

The arrangement was made quickly, only a few days ago, the opportunity falling into Kate's lap. A small window of time, a place warm and far away. Kiley worked in America now, a sales rep, pharmaceuticals. She was doing well but always busy, they didn't really see her any more. Their schedules overlapped only one week, it could be now or never. But Kiley was seeing someone. And like that it was off. All of Mitch's excitement dashed on the rocks. He hadn't wanted this for himself, but once it was arranged, he had to admit, he was crestfallen when it was cancelled.

The next day, sitting at the kitchen counter, Kate had a new idea. It was quietly presented to him, shy but hopeful. The threesome became maybe a foursome. And how do you feel about that, Mitch? He didn't like it, but he saw what the idea was doing to Kate. She was excited. Kiley called back. It was definitely a foursome. And ever since then he was looking for a way to call it off. But the thought of him and Kate fucking another couple together, of seeing Kate being pleased, her face when she was in ecstasy; despite how his stomach hurt when he thought about it, part of him wanted to see it happen. He almost enjoyed the fear, the worry, the lust.

KATE WANTED to get this done. Needed it. It wasn't easy that was for sure. She wasn't convinced it was a settled deal yet. There was plenty left that could go wrong. She knew that.

She'd thought Mitch would balk at doing a blood test. She thought that would be where it ended, but he didn't. He didn't even ask that much about Kiley's guy friend. The only thing he made her swear was that there were to be no cameras. She got that, the business could be vulnerable.

Mitch was next to her, deep in thought. She saw him looking off with his hand gripping and rubbing his chin. He worked so hard, had so much on his mind. And now she'd given him more to trouble himself over. She wanted this to be fun, she wanted him to have a good time, to open up.

Things had just changed too much recently. Changed for both of them. But really everything in her life was a by-product of Mitch and the things that he made happen or had happen to him. She was along for the ride. That sounds bitter. She wasn't, knew she wasn't. Too grateful for this man in her life and all that he helped her escape from.

She could see out the window, the afternoon sun glinting off the ocean. Surprisingly dark for such a sunny day. Ten hour flight, a double touch, stopping in Nassau, and another hour and a half now meant they must be almost there. She looked over her shoulder saw the little white embarkation cards getting passed around.

Mitch had given up lawyering, worked now with his much older brother Derek, brought into the family's owner-managed Investment House. Their father's really. But a heart attack had brought him down on the twelfth hole at St. Andrews five years ago and Derek ran with it. Had been groomed to. Mitch had come on three years past.

It had twenty-one billion in funds, trusts, and portfolios. Three billion more than when their father was manager. One billion since Mitch had come on board.

She could see the white dashes of rolling waves now through the haze as they descended towards Owen Roberts Airport. She put away her things and eyed Mitch doing the same. They looked at each other, well they were here.

While Mitch was also a co-owner, Derek had started him out as an analyst in compliance and risk management, then half a year under the chief investment officer doing oversight. Learning as he went along. He acted as co-manager now for a year and a half. They better watch out for Mitch though, he was more than he seemed. More than the little brother. He was smarter than Derek for sure, and no one would out-work him. Strategies and schemes. He could look at things and see all the potential outcomes at once, predict a result no one could see. And he was never wrong.

THEY WALKED down the metal stairs rolled into place on rubber wheels, onto the tarmac and crossed to the airport. It was oppressive, like stepping into a sauna in your street clothes. By the time they'd made it to the steeple-roofed terminal their clothing was sticking to them.

Her stomach had flipped as the plane dropped and it never had settled. Just an anxious twist inside her. When they were in the line for passport control Mitch leaned in and kissed the top of her head. She looked up and he said, "Nervous?" He could feel it off her. She put her arm around his waist and squeezed him.

"Just another vacation," she said.

By the time they made it to baggage she was dying from the heat. She'd taken the leggings off in the bathroom in the plane, and her jacket was away into her carry on, but she needed to take her boots off very soon. It was urgent.

They got through handling quite fast and she swapped out the boots for a pair of little Prada ballerinas, leaning against the wall with one hand in the crowded little room.

They got outside, back into that thick tropical air and Mitch pointed out the car that the rental company had sent for them.

The driver, a skinny kid in a Hawaiian shirt, held the door for them and got their bags into the trunk. He told them where the company had left a Jeep for him at the resort and handed him a set of keys. Mitch signed some things for him, putting the clipboard on his knees.

He sat back in the seat and closed his eyes and there he was off again. Working away in his head.

She leaned in to the front and asked the driver if the air conditioning could go up any higher. He laughed before he turned it up, seemed like he was used to pasty Brits who couldn't take this heat.

She sat back with Mitch and used a compact to try and sort out her hair. She was a mess. Could see the unkempt wisps in mutiny from the humidity. Her face was a glossy, damp sheen with no makeup. She closed it up and turned to look at Mitch.

"What is it you're hard at work on?"

"Maybe I'll tell you sometime," smiling but not looking over at her. She moved in and kissed his neck, put her hand on his chest. She ran her hand down his stomach, between his legs and squeezed him through his pants, felt him flinch.

"Hey, it's broad daylight," he said, trying to keep it quiet so the driver wouldn't hear.

She could see the cabbie's eyes in the mirror.

She flopped back into the corner with a laugh. She put her feet up on Mitch's lap and he put his hands on her, rubbing her ankles.

"This is going to be a good time, right?" he said.

She put her head back now and closed her eyes, said, "I think we're going to make you very happy."

THERE WEREN'T any villas available because of the short notice in getting this little trip together but they did manage to get a two-bedroom suite on the top floor. Mitch would have preferred the privacy of a villa but it wasn't likely they would run into any of their friends at the resort anyway.

The suite came with a personal butler, a young, smiling, baby-faced islander who showed them to their rooms. He opened one side of the double doors for them and escorted them through with a gesture. The House Suite was bigger than their flat in London. The entire far side—through the bedrooms, the dining room, the living area—was all a window looking out over the beach across the Caribbean Sea. The place was beautifully appointed, staid and formal but somehow modern--greys and creams, but with splashes of cranberry and turquoise in the pillows, the art, flecks in the upholstery.

He walked them out to their sprawling patio, showed them the bar, the pantry, how to work the plasma screens. Mitch put some money in his hand and told him how he'd like the bar stocked.

When they were alone they went out to the patio and looked down over the pool, out at the sea. He took her hand and watched her as she looked out over the water. This was going to be some week.

He'd gone through a bit of a thing after the miscarriage. He was different after, changed, and his life as it had been just felt so wrong. He didn't want to see those same faces anymore, didn't want to see the sadness for him in their eyes.

The welcome back to the Sutton family had been unexpected. He still wasn't sure what had changed with his brothers. But now he had a new job, a new path. And he and Kate also had an exciting new direction. Who they thought they'd be just wasn't the way it had played out. He didn't want to be that lawyer he was trying to be so he made a change. Kate, he figured, didn't want to be that housewife she thought she wanted to be. This was her change. Crazy as it was he'd be there for her. They could do this together.

KATE WAITED for Mitch while he was on the phone—Derek back in London, she figured. It sounded like business. Can't just put his flip-flops on and relax. That could be a worry. Real life clawing away from home, tearing away the fantasy they were creating here.

She looked down on the pool about ten stories below, saw the shapes of people packing themselves away for the day, their shadows long across the stone tiles in the dwindling daylight. The sun was almost down over the water, the sky lit up before her in pastels and shimmering yellow light.

"You ought to put that thing away while we're here," she said to him as he came out to stand next to her and watch the sun set.

"Yeah, just for emergencies," he said, fiddling with it, putting it back in his pocket. He put his arm around her, held her while they looked out over the sea. "Last time you'll see it, I swear."

"Until."

"Right," he laughed. "Emergencies only now, Kate. Swear it."

"You need the week off."

"I know I do."

Kiley and her male friend were arriving tomorrow. Meeting up in Miami and coming in together first thing in the morning. Kiley was coming in from San Francisco, and her friend was flying from Spain. Everyone eager to get this done.

She figured they'd take tomorrow, let every one get adjusted, rested, and then, not to waste too much time, they'd try this little foursome out that same night. Twenty-four hours away. She figured they better not waste too much time, let some bad feelings get in the way.

KATE SOAKED in the big square tub filled with water so hot it took her a few minutes to sink into it, her skin reddening and stinging as she went. She wanted to be soothed and have that travel filth washed away. She wanted a clean slate to begin right here. This bath was the true start of her vacation. And maybe the start of something more. Her stomach tightened at that thought. Was she crazy? This consumption of her thought had been unshakable. Horniness? Maybe. But something more.

She felt on fire sometimes, or itchy would be more accurate. Like the itch that would come with a nettle's sting—it required scratching and rewarded with pleasure, but wasn't satisfied. Sometimes the urge so strong and undeniable you couldn't stop yourself even though you knew it was no good for you. Knew how much it would hurt later.

Mitch came in with his tumbler of Scotch and placed it next to the sink. He looked at himself in the mirror. She knew how hard he worked and she could see the toll in his face. He was tired, pale; he looked too tired for a guy who was just past thirty.

She watched him brush his teeth, the man she truly did love. In so many ways the greatest thing that had come into her life. She looked at his pale arms, his softening waist and smiled as she thought how much she still loved him. God, did she want a medal for loving a guy who was aging? Was that such a great feat? Maybe it was for her. The old Kate held looks in the highest esteem. The bad Kate, she thought. Her love for Mitch was unshaken though, she knew that. He still did it for her. When he was present in the moment. But he was not often home and they would go weeks without a night out, and sometimes even when he was home she still felt alone because he was so distracted or he was sequestered in his home office.

She watched him brush and rinse, spit out in the sink, touch at his hair. His hair. He had a beautiful thick head of wavy hair. He was wearing it a little longer these days. He should, he had great hair.

"You going to join me?" she asked.

"I'd love to," he said. He pulled his tee off and threw it to the floor then stepped out of his boxers. Kate bobbed and waited, spitting a little spigot of the hot water. She watched as he turned back and finished off the Scotch, his naked body in profile, his flaccid penis sticking out from his dense thatch of pubic hair.

He came to the tub and stepped in slowly with one leg. "How can you stand it in here?" He looked down at her, one leg in, one leg out, "It's too hot."

"Stay there," she said, and bobbed over. She kept his eyes on hers, she wanted him to know what was coming.

"Really?" he said, but she didn't answer, put an arm around his thigh and smiled up at him. She reached up, dripping water, and put her hand over his dick and his balls, seeing them recoil at the sting from the heat. She gave him a wink and tugged on it, pulling it out from his pubic hair.

"Think you can get the other leg in?" she asked, and cleared some room for him, trying to look as sly as possible. She watched him as he took her in, knew he was looking at the water running down her breasts, little streams coming off the tips of her hardened nipples.

He didn't even respond just got both feet in and seated himself on the edge. He was wide-eyed, not even mentioning the temperature now. He wanted this and she wanted to give it to him.

She put her mouth over him and stretched him with her lips, letting it pop out and jiggle before doing it again, feeling it stiffer each time. She circled his scrotum with her thumb and forefinger, gently pulling on him as he got fully hard. She kept it in her mouth, in all the way, pushing on it with her tongue and twisting with her neck. His hands fell to her and he placed them on the back of her neck. She could feel him throbbing now and he pushed into her open mouth with his hips.

"Kate," she heard him say quietly, his hands guiding her away so he could see her face. "God," he said, "I need to fuck you so bad right now."

They stood up and he kissed her, his hands holding her face gently. "I feel like it's been forever," he said.

It had been awhile, she thought, and she felt it now too, needing him inside her. She turned her back to him, keeping his gaze over her shoulder, and lifted her rump for him. Options for penetration in this space were going to be pretty few. He caressed her big, round bottom and squeezed her little waist.

He had to lower his hips awkwardly to get the right angle but she felt the tip of him going into her. He pushed but it slipped out of her, "I'm too tall," he said.

Kate bent right over, putting her elbows on the lip of the tub. Her head was pushed in the corner now but she looked back at him and swayed her hips, "Come on," she said. He slid himself all the way into her and they worked on getting a rhythm. They got it going and she pushed back on him getting as much of him on each thrust as she could.

"Oh, God," she said pushing herself up, her elbows hurting from the pressure. He kept fucking her but she said, "I don't think you're in any more." They slowed and she found him with the tips of her fingers and pushed him inside her again. The position wasn't great and he was thrusting between her thighs a lot. It felt good brushing her labia but she wanted him inside her. She turned to face him and kissed him, finding him with her hand and working it with her fingertips. He was too tall, or she was too short, to do it facing each other, and she concentrated on giving him pleasure with her fingers. He bit his lip and moaned as she worked it over.

Did she feel guilty for her errant desires? Was this about making herself feel better for wanting 'it' from another man? No, she thought, she wanted Mitch to feel this good, wanted him to love her and feel her love for him.

She gripped his tightened balls, almost completely up inside him, and pumped her other hand on him. Short strokes with just her thumb and first two fingers. He didn't stop her. He put his head way back and exhaled hard, "Ah, Kate," he said, "yes." She stroked him faster watching him react.

He groaned and grunted as he came and she watched it stream from him down over her thumb. She kept working him until he squirmed and she laughed as he had to take a seat.

"Whoa," he said, looking exhausted, but he came to her right away, putting himself in the hot water and kissing her, moving her across the tub until her back was against the far side. He lifted her up and put her down, seated at the far edge. His kisses worked the way down her neck and her freckled collar. He kissed her breasts and worked his lips down her stomach until he was between her legs.

She pulled his head into her, made him do the work. He was eager, putting everything he had into pleasing her. She arched her head back and let him push his tongue into her.

She came like that, her hands pulling his head hard between her legs, grinding her hips up against his tongue while some of the dirtiest thoughts she could conjure helped her over the edge.

"SMOKE?" he asked her as she lay in his arms in the tub.

"Yeah" she said. They'd both quit almost four years now but this was their holidays she figured. Mitch left the tub and grabbed his toiletry bag. He had a pack of Silk Cuts in there and he pulled out a cigarette. He said, "We'll share one," and brought it back to the tub with a lighter.

Kate lit the cigarette. She inhaled it deeply and then watched the smoke twirl above her as she slowly exhaled. She missed it but hated it at the same time. She took a few puffs and handed it back to Mitch. He finished the cigarette, holding her close to him in the tub, floating between his legs, puffing smoke out behind her.

Their conversation had died and she was starting to feel a bit sleepy when he moved out from behind her and worked himself to the edge.

"Had you ever thought of other women?" Kate heard herself ask. It emerged from her unwarranted and it surprised her. God, she thought, she just really wanted to get into this.

Mitch clung to the edge for a moment, silently, his back to her. "No," he said, "not really."

She could tell he meant it honestly. Mitch was that sort. What's the word? Dutiful? He could push temptation away.

Ask me, she thought.

"Why would you ask that?"

"Because I didn't think you did."

"I don't. I mean. Not...did you just want to hear me say it?"

"I know, I believe you, I just feel like, I don't know," she paused, "like I want to talk about it." Here it was.

"Why I don't think about other women?"

"No, why—"

"Why you think about other men?" He wasn't sure that's what she meant, puzzled look on his face.

She couldn't answer now that it was here, it felt ugly out in the open after all. She floated, nude but somehow not vulnerable, and looked at a spot on the wall above the fluted, chrome tap.

"Have you," he shook his head, "done something?"

"What? Mitch, Jesus Christ..." she hated herself for loving the chance to be the victim here. "This isn't that kind of talk. How could you think I would cheat on you? I just have feelings that I don't necessarily like but I can't shake them. I just want to talk about that. I want to share something with you." She watched him nod. "This is a good thing to do. This is the darkest part of me."

"Do you wish I looked at other women? Would that make it better? Make it easier?"

"I know you don't. But yeah, it would. Help you, I don't know, understand how I feel."

"Well, I did...enjoy hearing that Kiley would..."

"Share your darkest thoughts with me too, Mitch, please," she said. She watched him struggle with the response. C'mon and say it, she thought.

"I like Kiley and I...I like that you said she was interested in me." That was it, Mitch.

"What do you like about Kiley?" She was being good-natured, getting him to talk.

"I don't know Kate—she's very pretty," he said. Obviously, she thought. But isn't there a dark side to you Mitch, a dirty, filthy, fuck-Kiley-up-the-ass side? Kate was desperate to hear it. Could she be the only one?

"Well, do you want to have nice pleasant sex with her? Shake her hand afterwards?"

"Kate..."

"Mitch, tell me what's in your heart," she said.

"Kate, I'm into it, I just...I don't know..."

"Well, Mitch, I love you, and I want you to go for it. I want you to know when you are with her you can't hurt me. There's nothing you can do wrong. I love you and I want you to know I trust you. And I want you to trust me."

"Well, we'll have to see what happens."

A Foursome

MITCH AND KATE spent the morning just milling about the suite. They hadn't gone out even though it was a beautiful sunny morning out there. They'd both skipped their breakfast, probably too nervous to eat but Kate said they should go out for a brunch when they got there. That was fine with Mitch, he felt like anything he might eat right now would want to come back up or it would sit like a ball in his nerve-tightened stomach. He was finding it hard to breathe.

"What time is it?" Kate said. She was so restless.

"It's twenty past ten." He kept his eyes on his iPad, only wanted to think about the news for a while. He hadn't wanted his mind wandering. She picked up her phone and swiped through it. After a while she said, Seems like their plane was on time, and put it back down on the side table. He watched her draw her knees up and put her arms around them. She looked so nervous. Watching her was making him more anxious so he got up and walked around, trying to make himself busy. Kate went out to the patio and looked over the railing. The parking was underground or out front so she wasn't going to see them coming. There was a soft knock on the door, played out in a little tune. His heart was gripped.

He went to the door, rested his hands on the handle, then opened it. Kiley was there, more beautiful than ever, her face frozen in some bashful sort of smile, looking up at him eyes glistening waiting for Mitch to say something. She held her arms out for him to hug her and he did. Pulled her close to him, hips held away, and patted at her back. He nodded at the unshaved stranger over her shoulder and he nodded back with a smile. Handsome sort of fellow in a black polo shirt buttoned right up.

KILEY WATCHED her best friend in all her life run to her from the patio and through the living area. She still did this quick little skipping hop just like she did when they grew up in the Council. Kate ran to her and put her arms around her, nothing was said. Kiley hugged her hard. She felt her eyes tear up. "Oh God, Kate it's so good to see you love," she said. Her throat was tight, hard to talk. She held her close and rocked her. Kate pushed her back, looked at her, her eyes wet with tears too. Kate couldn't speak either but she was trying to. Kiley pressed her knuckles into her own cheek and stared back at her, her lips trembling. Kate just shook her head, face scrunched up, and put her arms back around her and they felt each other shaking with laughter.

"Hey mate, how are you?" Mitch said, and shook the other guy's hand.

"Ah, shit, everyone. I'm sorry, Omar." She turned, said, "This is Mitch, and this is Kate," putting her hands on each of them as she said it. "And this is Omar." Omar shook their hands and smiled, said it was nice to meet them.

"Oh, you're French then," Mitch said.

"Oui," he said, "but my English is very good. My mother was American, living in Paris."

"That where you're from?"

"No," he said, "I grew up in Marseille but now I live in Frontignan. Just outside there."

"You do any bull-fighting there?" Mitch knew his cities.

"No," he laughed. "I never have."

"They fight bulls there?" Kate asked him.

"Yes, but I leave that to the locals, I think. I like animals," he joked. They all laughed and that was good.

Mitch and Kate walked them in. Kiley had waved off the butler, felt weird about him coming up with them. They wheeled their bags behind them and Mitch and Kate gave them a tour around the suite. The place was truly out of this world. Nothing like she'd seen before. The tall ceilings, and the view that looked out over the brilliant blue of the Caribbean. She looked at her smiling friend. So happy for her, how far she'd come. The two of them had great times together but there had also been a hardness to their childhood.

Mitch and Kate showed them to their big, beautiful bedroom with the stunning view, and they dropped off their bags. Omar followed Mitch into the private bath.

Kiley touched Kate's forearm with a finger, said, "This is crazy you know."

"Yeah, shit, you're not getting cold feet are you?"

She told her that she wasn't. She was good to go. She actually was pretty interested in the idea. Not her first foursome, mind. But this setting, this circumstance? She did worry about seeing her friend in a new way. And naked—sexually naked. That was a pretty freaky thought. She pushed the image away, we'll deal with that when we come to it.

She was worried for Kate. For her relationship with Mitch. Mitch was a real surprise. Buttoned up, borderline stuffed shirt. How had she convinced him to do this?

She watched Kate, happily chatting with Omar now by the window, Mitch had his arm over her shoulder. She was one lucky girl. Look around, Kate she thought. Look at all you've got.

Mitch doted on her, he'd always done that. She'd always thought Mitch was completed by Kate. He seemed like the kind of guy who would fall to pieces if he'd lost her somehow. What had become of these two? They seemed far different than the last time she saw them.

She'd been there for Kate when she'd lost the baby but felt enormously guilty that she'd been so far away in the aftermath. Couldn't be helped, she'd relocated for work and the travel was too much. She kind of knew though that there was more to it. That maybe in some way the inconvenience came too conveniently. That was a lot, during that time. That was a sad, dreadful patch. She was always there for a call or a text, but being truly there was difficult and it wasn't really, honestly, due to travel. Kate and Mitch went through the wringer, had tried again and again, then came the tests, the in vitro. God, the money they spent. But mostly how hard it must have been for them. It was beyond Kiley's ability to help. What could she have said to her?

"Did you want to unpack, freshen up? Or we could get a bite."

“Yeah, we’ll unpack later. We could maybe do with a wash up though, give us a minute.” Omar agreed, and they closed the door.

SO THIS WAS THE GUY. Not what she expected. She’d thought a lot of what was going to come through the door. Why hadn’t she asked Kiley for a picture of his face? Well, whatever, she thought, this was good. She did like what she saw. He had strong dark features, a hard jaw and a sharp nose, black stubble but his hair was a close-cropped sandy brown. And were his eyes navy? He was more handsome than she’d considered. Of course, what did she expect from Kiley? Kiley was a stunner. She hoped it wasn’t all too much for Mitch.

Their golf cart zipped along the path through the resort with an electric whine. It came with the suite, and Mitch was up front behind the little wheel. She looked at Omar’s profile as he talked to Mitch from the passenger side. He had a nice smile.

“It’s so good to see you, Kate. I can’t believe we’re here,” Kiley said, and put her hand on her forearm. Kate put her hand over it and kissed Kiley’s bare shoulder.

“I love you, pet,” she said. She’d missed her so much. They were in constant contact through texts but it had been a year and a half since she’d spent time with her best friend. They’d been quite inseparable since they were both kids. Kiley had been with her through some of the toughest breaks growing up, had seen her at her worst. She thought of Mitch as Kiley’s male counterpart. They were the only two people left in her life that she felt she could trust.

Back in the suite Kate had said they should just order in some room service. It had been excellent last night. Mitch kind of waffled and said they should go out. He didn’t want to spend the whole day in the room. He booked them a place on the patio so they could sit outside. She hoped that’s what it was, not that he’d felt uncomfortable with Kiley and Omar thrust into their living space. That would sort of be like Mitch, too.

Mitch put the golf cart in with a bunch of other carts off to the edge of the parking. They walked along the narrow, wooden boardwalk that took them to the bleached wood pillars and tall glass front of the restaurant. It was such a beautiful day. Blue sky with just the faint white splotches of clouds, a slight breeze.

Kiley and Kate followed along behind Mitch and Omar. Omar wasn't too tall, not short though. He had a muscular build, but slim. He looked good in his linen pants and sneakers. He dressed all right. She liked it. Of course that could be all Kiley, she really knew her way around a man's wardrobe.

The hostess walked them across the stone floor of the busy restaurant, under the rattan ceiling fans and the tall indoor palms, out to the warmth of the sunlight on the patio. She sat them at the edge by the railing, looking out over a small garden, the Caribbean Sea just beyond.

TALKING with Omar was easy enough but Mitch couldn't help looking him over, assessing this guy. He had to force himself to pay attention, to stay in the conversation. He looked at the tanned, healthy, olive skin of his forearms, his big muscular hands, surprisingly clean nails for a mechanic. His fingers were thick but somehow elegant, watching as they twirled the silverware while they waited for the food to come. It was just some sort of primal response. Assessing this rival's health, his mating ability. But if it were truly primal, why wouldn't he put a stop to this? Sink his canines into his scruffy neck. Emerge the victor?

"Oh, really?" Kate said, "Mitch loves race cars."

Easy, he thought, I'm not a ten-year-old. "Yeah, well, a bit. I've been to LeMans twice."

"Huh, yes, that is where I will be one day, maybe." Omar said. Omar had been telling him how he was a Formula 3 mechanic. A number one mechanic on an F3 team.

"How long have you been doing that?"

"Since forever in one way or another. F3 now for a few years. We have a good team, and I run a shop there too." He talked a lot with his big hands. Shrugging for emphasis.

MITCH FIGURED Captain Rod had everything figured out. A Brit living in Grand Cayman, tanned and healthy, long hair thick and greasy from the ocean. Just taking tourists out every day, weather permitting, on his catamaran. Wasn't cheap either. But those bigger tours were packed with a lot of what his Dad would have called riffraff, and who knows how safe they were. The wind whipped at his hair as they sailed out to some special spot described with a wink by the first mate Izzy, a tall, lean black kid dressed only in shorts, his long hair braided with colourful beads. Rod said they were guaranteed to swim with stingrays, maybe even a dolphin, mid-morning Bourbon on his breath.

"How much longer do you think?" Kate said, behind sunglasses, hair pulled back in a ponytail. She rubbed his back and looked out over the waves with him.

"I think it's just up there," he said pointing at a line on the horizon where there were some other boats bunched up along a sandy little cove. Well, looks like they were going to be with the riffraff after all.

Kate jerked her thumb over her shoulder and he saw Omar looking a bit green, leaning into Kiley. Kiley had her arm around him, hair tossing around wildly. Just like Kate she was wearing a big, colourful, over-sized T-shirt that came down to her knees, string of a bikini top visible at her shoulder in the big wide neck of it. No make-up, but she was hot as hell. Sharp jawline, thin neck, long legs tucked up underneath her on a cushioned seat at the back of the catamaran. Omar might be better off up at the front here but that was up to him.

He put his arm around Kate's waist as Rod slid the catamaran in between these other big Tour boats, looked at her excited face. There were rays there.

IZZY SHRUGGED to Kate as an apology, they didn't know other people would be here. But Kate didn't care anyway, she smiled it off and looked to see where Omar was. Mitch was talking to Rod, Rod explaining how to handle a stingray, what to look for, the rules (which Mitch always liked to be aware of), and he was standing there motioning out over the water, Mitch taking it all in.

She saw Omar and Kiley just behind, vaguely listening to the captain, and she went and stood with them.

"They're not dangerous are they?" Kiley said to Kate, leaning over to her.

Kate caught Omar's eye, laughed, said, No we'll be all right, and she took her T-shirt off over her head. She held a while, her head still wrapped up in her tee, hoping he would get a good look at her body in her too-small bikini.

She threw her shirt back with the cooler and watched Omar as he did the same, looked at her then slowly pulled his shirt off and threw it aside, smiling the whole time. He was lean and strong and his skin was beautiful. She looked away, worried about being caught, saw Rod help Mitch down into the water.

Kiley slipped in with Mitch, then Omar, standing next to them in the waist deep clear water. Izzy helped Kate, holding her hand and she felt Omar behind her, his hands on her hips, helping her into the water. The feeling of his hands on her skin felt so wrong, Mitch right there. It really made her shiver, gave her a very unexpected little ache between her hips. And this was just the start, she thought. Imagine how it will feel when she lets him go even farther.

THIS WHOLE THING was Kate's concoction. This trip, this little experiment. Mitch couldn't have conceived this sort of thing, or put it together. How would one have the ability to make this sort of thing happen? He guessed it wasn't that crazy, he knew other people had done it. But still, good for her.

It put his stomach in knots at the anticipation of the love of his life being touched by another man. But it did mean that he would be with Kiley. And that Kiley had already agreed to be with him. The truth was that, he had to face it, he was looking forward to this. To being with Kiley, really. Not the kind to cheat, and he knew he loved Kate completely. He also knew that Kate felt the same. Nothing Kiley did could change how he felt for his wife.

Omar's big hand made an impression into Kate's soft skin and he felt the emotion that produced, held it and examined how it raised his heart rate, how he felt the anger. Something about all this was strangely exciting.

Omar had his shirt off, standing side by side with Kate as she talked to him. Big shoulders, muscular, but not overly so. Very trim, strong, veins that stood out like cords along his arms. He was hairy, but not long wispy hair, Jesus, did he use a clipper on his body hair?

Rod pointed out three stingrays, coming in, leaving the other groups. He said they're always curious, know that people will feed them. They were under the boat, then glided out into the light right amongst them.

"Oh, look at them, do you see them?" Kate said, her voice high and excited, bending over.

"We all see them, Kate," he said, meaning her tits. Jesus, you can't wear a bikini top with a chest like that and bend over in public, Kate. He looked at Omar and he wasn't looking at any stingrays.

Mad at first, watching this guy get a good look down at his wife's perfect breasts. But he felt something else too. Something he hadn't anticipated. It kind of turned him on. Get a good look, Omar. A wave of arousal came over him out of nowhere.

"It's seven years good luck if you kiss a stingray," Izzy said from the boat. Omar got down lower in the water and a larger one came up behind him. It started nibbling at the skin on his back. He lifted himself up a bit, called Kate, and she was able to get down and kiss the stingray on its bright underside.

Mitch looked down at Kiley's ass, perfectly round and upright, petite, her tiny, striped bottoms curling over the cheeks and disappearing down between her legs. Soon, he thought, soon, probably tonight, he could put his hands on her and lift and squeeze that crazy little ass. And she was okay with it. Kate said she wanted it.

Kiley bobbed, excited, as a stingray approached and he watched her open-mouth smile, her super-model profile. He stared at her, just pored over her flawless, smooth skin. Looked at her for the first time with intimate eyes. He'd never let himself see her like this. How far were they going to take this swap thing? What were the rules? If she looked over did he have to pretend he was looking at a stingray? Could he let her know he was looking at her? That he wanted her. He felt weird about that, but at the same time had to tug the front of his shorts and make a bit of an adjustment. Could she catch him looking? It was funny, but it still didn't feel right even though everyone here knew what was going to happen. Still not proper.

Kiley bent over and stroked the top of the passing ray, no rolls or folds in her middle. "Mitch," she said, motioning at the ray, "don't miss your chance." So he bent down and held his hand out and let it pass as he felt the rough skin of its back pass under his palm.

Omar had his hand across Kate's back as they watched another ray pass right below them. And there was that feeling again. Did he get it now? He didn't think of Omar any more. Just of Kate. Of her wanting something and getting it. Getting pleasure. If he pictured her face as he saw it when it was twisted in passion, when she pulled his head into her pussy, driving it in, and he would look up and see her going crazy. Yeah, if he thought of that he got it. He could watch that.

CAPTAIN ROD SAID they had a great day for it. He'd anchored them somewhere, Mitch figured, along the north shore and they were bobbing with the waves, a slightly sulphur smell from the ocean. Izzy had told them it was the underwater vents, fumaroles, said they were active today. Rod said it was perfect because they should have great visibility down there, shouldn't be cloudy at all.

They all donned the snorkelling gear Rod had brought them and Izzy made sure they were all set up, giving them last minute tips and pointing out to them the direction they should go. They all jumped in.

Mitch headed out, followed Izzy's directions and zig-zagged along the shoals. The water was perfectly clear, the coral just about six feet below the surface. He swam through the Bar Jacks and these colourful, very tame fish that came right up to him before darting away. He swam through a hazy warm pulse of water, the vents Izzy had told them about. Then he swam with a sea turtle, followed it, over its shoulder, watching it as it swam looking back at him, not quite sure what he was up to.

Then he came to the end of the reef and he looked out to the depth of the ocean. Saw the ominous darkening beyond. He was at the drop off and the coral here stretched up like elk horns. It looked like a cemetery and it gave him a chill. He stared into that darkness, felt the dread of the unknown.

Something brushed his thigh and he startled, giving off a torrent of bubbles. Kiley swam past him and then jack-knifed over and down the drop off. He watched her long body slip away, still bright against the deepening ocean. He thought, Fuck it, and swam down after her, feeling the pressure in his ears as he sank. He watched her flippers kicking, her toned legs flexing, and dove deeper with her.

OMAR WAS INTO IT. Excited he was going to fuck this little rich girl with the perfect set. He watched her swimming out ahead of him in her tight black bikini, held together on her hips with gold rings. He tailed her, swimming in her wake, watched the split of her ass chew on her suit as she kicked her legs.

She was sexy. Hard to believe this arrangement. Kiley had set it up, gave him a call, said he could get a free vacation. Told him that there might be more. Maybe, you know, she wasn't sure. Then a week later told him what her friend wanted. He was game of course. Kiley told him Kate was a knockout and she was right.

He watched her with the colourful fish, floating above an endless bed of green coral. She saw him looking and smiled at him, tried to smile. He watched her lips stretch around that bulging snorkel end.

KILEY HAD STOPPED, suspended in the deep, dark, navy water, her body shining from the sunlight above. She kicked her legs lightly keeping her from sinking. He caught up to her. She turned, graceful, and swam backwards, snorkel off, smiling at him. Mitch was dying for air but he followed her. She stuck her tongue out at him, then put her hands over her chest. He kicked himself closer, gaining on her. She quickly pulled her top apart, jiggling her perky little breasts. Mitch looked, was shocked, saw her exposed tits floating up off her chest, rosy brown nipples tightened by the water. He exhaled a jet of bubbles from the snorkel as she turned around and kicked away, swimming into the dark.

Mitch laughed at himself, how he didn't see that coming, as he struggled to get to the top. He broke the surface and breathed deeply, coughing up some water. He bobbed in the waves and looked around. No sign of anyone, but he saw the boat back near the beach.

So this was how it was. She was into it, this was no joke. He thought about tonight. What would it be like to put his hand on her, feel her taut flesh? Would she be as wild as Kate? God, would she taste different? What would she look like as he entered her?

WHEN MITCH GOT BACK to the boat the three of them were standing thigh deep in the water, waiting for him.

"Got out a little far?" Kate said. She was wiping the inside of her mask, Omar standing next to her. He wondered if Kate revealed herself to Omar? That was exciting. He was hard as a rock right now and he had to tread water about a dozen feet from them where the water was deeper wishing it to go away.

"Yeah," Kiley said, "we went out past the drop off."

"What was out there?"

"It was dark," she said. "Pretty scary. Wasn't it Mitch?"

He nodded agreement, watching her stand there, hand on hip, holding her gear, the water beading on her tanned, tight skin. Her long, wild hair wet and pushed back, showing her perfect face.

"It was dark, but it wasn't really scary."

"I grabbed his leg out there, you should have seen him jump," she said to Kate.

“Mitch come on up, we’re going to have a bite to eat on the beach here,” Kate said. There was a blanket and a basket, up on the sand, underneath some Sea-grape trees, set up by Izzy.

“Yeah, yeah, I’ll be up in a minute,” he said and put his mask on again and floated back out, hovering over the coral. He still felt hard and he sure didn’t want to stand up in front of them with the tip of his dick pressing out the front of his wet shorts.

KATE LIKED CATCHING Omar’s eye out there. She’d caught him looking. It would have been odd if he hadn’t. He knew what this was about and her swim wear was very revealing. It was nice to feel lusted after.

She watched him drink his beer, his thick-fingered mechanic’s hand making the bottle look small. He wasn’t even really that big of a guy. Smaller than Mitch, shorter, slim-hipped. He was fit, wasn’t he?

Omar talked to Mitch, sounded like something to do with race cars. She watched him talk, listened to his accent, watched the flash of his dark blue eyes.

Izzy came and cleaned up their dishes and collected their bottles. Rod had called from his phone and a local had shown up in a little motorboat with some fresh caught bonefish. He’d split them right there and cooked them and they’d eaten them with a spicy pepper sauce.

Mitch looked happy, sleepy eyed. They would head back now, but it was still early afternoon. They had some time to kill before it was night. They had dinner reservations at six. And then after that? Her heart rate quickened at the thought. This was crazy, right?

MITCH WATCHED a group of kids run by, weaving through the crowds around the pool. Next trip was going to be adults only. Find a place that didn't let families in or make sure to get a villa or a private residence. Kate had booked this one in a flash when everyone's schedule came together. Guess it was short notice and she couldn't find a place that was more adult-oriented. Or maybe it just didn't occur to her. Didn't occur to her, hell. Kids.

Kiley was back up in the suite taking a nap. Too much sun and wine. Omar was out in the pool. Playing volleyball, or water polo or something, with a bunch of twenty-year olds. Boy, he found friends fast. White teeth smiling out there, his French really came out in his trash talking. He might have spoke English well, but when he had to rush to a ball, reach out and knock it back, barely making it, just off the tips of his fingers, he made noises that just sounded French. Funny how a grunt or a one syllable yell could have an accent.

Kate was reading, he looked at her on the white lounge chair next to him, her legs stretched out to get some sun. She had her wet hair combed back spreading across her shoulders. Reading through big, black sunglasses. Her top, God, when did she start wearing bikinis, could barely hold her breasts up. It attracted one's attention that's for sure. A lot of glances over, these kid's dads, those twenty-year olds, and yeah, of course Omar.

Omar was saying something to the twenty-year olds, they were calling him back, he was getting out. Mitch looked over at Kate, thinking he'd get her out of here, maybe go sit at the bar. She was looking out over the top of her sunglasses.

“Kate,” he said to the side of her head but she didn’t hear him. “Hey, Kate.”

She was looking over at Omar getting out of the pool. Omar was standing at the edge, water splashing off him onto the concrete, tan body, white trunks. He felt a little mad about it, but hell, this thing was already under way wasn’t it? This was part of the deal.

“How’s the water?” Kate said to Omar. Not in Kate’s voice. Some other flirty, small-talk Kate.

Omar was drying that close crop of hair on his head with a big, white hotel towel. He said something into the terrycloth but Mitch missed it. Those were some short-shorts this guy was wearing. Real Euro style. Then he saw what Kate had been looking at.

Not a bulge, like something suspended in a pouch, but a clear outline of his enormous cock and his balls mashed down the leg of the trunks. He looked at Kate, yeah, that’s what she was doing, looking right at it.

Omar came up to them stood on the far side of Kate’s lounge, said something about having fun out there, asking what she was drinking. Standing right there next to her, giving her this unavoidable display of his disgusting manhood. Had to be on purpose.

She handed him her drink, fruity-red daiquiri something, and he used her straw. Kate was looking point-blank at this fat thing down his trunk leg. Hip-cocked, pressing it against the fabric for her, knowing she was looking, just a foot and a half from her face.

Fucking drink it in, Kate, he thought as his stomach knotted. He felt like he was going to be sick. Just throw up all over himself in the sunshine in front of all these happy people. Don’t these people have problems? Fuck’s sake. He sat up, seriously fighting back an urge to vomit. His face went red, he could feel his neck go hot. He had to get out of there.

He tossed his e-reader on the lounge and did that, just got the hell out of there. He heard Kate call after him but he kept walking. He looked at his hands, saw them shaking.

KATE FOUND him standing at a bar on the far side of the resort, smoking a cigarette under the tiki roof. This wasn't good. She came up behind him and he half-turned his head at the sound of her flip-flops, but he didn't make eye contact.

He gripped a glass of whisky.

She put her hand on his back, "What are you doing, big guy?"

"It's off Kate, it's off." Not even looking at her. Talking to the bar.

"What the fuck, Mitch..." she said.

"Did you see that?" He was mad.

"What?" Even though she knew.

"C'mon," he said, but she just stared back at him, waiting, eyes hidden behind her big black Ray-bans, not giving anything away. "Kate, I was watching you fucking stare at it. I was watching you."

"His package?" Well, here it was.

"He has a fucking horse cock, Kate." He did at that. She had not missed it.

Mitch said, "There's...I can't, there's just no fucking way," whisky glass tapping out the syllables of the last three words against the wooden bar.

She looked at the bartender's back as he shook a strainer, martini glass in front of some tourist on the other side. Who drinks a martini in this heat? It's the middle of the day for Christ's sake.

"Mitch, we wanted this, we've come so far..." she didn't know how to do this. Thought it would come up but didn't think he'd be so upset. Two middle aged guys came up next to them and ordered some beers.

She got up close to him, "What does it matter how big his dick is?"

"It matters," he said up into the tiki roof. Too loud.

"I love you. This is just fun, it's just sex."

"Not with him, sweetheart," he left her at the bar and headed up some stone steps that led back to the hotel. She caught up with him, and held onto his wrist.

"Please, Mitch, hold on." He turned and looked down at her. She moved to the side for a wide old woman trying to get past them, her grandkids behind her.

"It has to be. C'mon, Mitch. We've come all this way, everything is in line, how will we find another time to—"

"What, you really want that big dick, don't you?"

She looked over the top of her glasses at him. Too loud, Mitch. What was he trying to do, talking like this in public?

“You do, don’t you?”

For fuck’s sake, anyone they swapped with was bound to be bigger. But she couldn’t say that. She wouldn’t say that. “I don’t not want it.”

“Wait, you knew,” he said, and like that he was on to her. Mitch the barrister.

She waited.

“Yeah,” she said.

“You knew he had that?” he said, bobbing his head to get eye contact. He wanted verification.

“Yeah.”

“Holy fuck,” he said and sat himself down on the step. “That’s why you want to fuck him?”

She shrugged, looked out at the hazy ocean, a boat pulling a parasail.

“How did you even know...I mean, you’ve never met him. Did she tell you, Oh, my boyfriend has a huge dick?”

“Yeah.”

“She did? What did you tell her? Did you tell her I have a small dick?”

“Mitch, no.”

“What? I mean, I just...I can’t...”

“Mitch, listen, I love you and you’re more than enough for me. I’m head over heels for you. It’s not that at all—”

“My dick too small to fill up that big wizard’s sleeve?”

Fuck this. Fuck this. “Fuck you, Mitch, that’s really shitty.” She bit her lip and nodded her head, mad now. Slap-slapping a flip-flop on the bottom of her foot with her toes. “Yes, I knew he had a big dick. Yes, that’s why I want to swing with him for fuck’s sake.”

“Yeah, holy shit,” throwing up his arms.

“I don’t want to swap just so I can be with any other guy, yeah? I love you, Mitch. It’s you and me in this. We’re together through thick and thin. That won’t change. But I can’t help it if sometimes—just sometimes Mitch—I want something, I don’t know, a little...more...down there.” That hurt him. That got him. But truth was, she did love him, and there was something she didn’t get from him. But how do you explain that? The need to be filled. Just thinking it seemed so vulgar. “And what does it matter anyway? If we're doing this then you're fucking someone and someone is going to fuck me. There's going to be another dick in me. You were okay with that. Why do you care what shape it is, how big it is? He's uncircumcised too, is that a concern? Why would any of that even matter to you?"

She knew he had a lot more to say. Why it mattered. She had more to say. Nicer things too. She didn't want to fight. But she wasn't going to do this here. Not in front of these people. She told him she'd be back in the room and left him there sitting on the steps.

HE'D BEEN in locker rooms before, he wasn't stupid. This wasn't the first time he'd heard he didn't exactly have the biggest dick. Hell, he'd been told quite directly that he was too small by a girlfriend once. He got shoved naked out of the boy's room one time after football and heard a girl in the crowd say to her friend, He's covering it with one hand.

At thirty-one he'd just sort of not cared anymore. Kate never said a thing. Sure, some positions were pretty hard. But they made do. He thought they did.

This was like a fucking knife in him. Teen years played out all over again. Fuck her for making him feel like that. Made him want to scream out at the stupid tropical night.

He was sitting in the sand somewhere along Seven Mile, he wasn't sure how far, but he'd been walking a good long while. It was dark now but the sky was still lit up in purple, pink-orange where it met the water, couples out strolling, hands held. How many of them had been about to do something disgusting tonight. They all looked so innocent. Goddamnit.

The pragmatist within him said to hear what Kate had said to him. To really listen to her. Did he love Kate? Yes. Most importantly, did he trust Kate? Yes, he did. He felt sure she'd never cheated on him. Knew it. But she's telling him she needed something. Something he couldn't provide.

A little subterfuge in her facilitation, though. For sure. He imagined that would be to spare his feelings. Okay. Do you disregard that she felt she needed something? No, he should listen. But that would fucking require him letting her get fucked by that thing he saw in Omar's trunks. See, this was where he was truly stuck.

She was right though, he'd been okay with a swap before that, and truthfully was pretty excited about getting his hands on Kiley. That was true. So the hurdle was size. But Kate's only interest in a swap was size it sounded like.

That really dug in. Inadequacy. He couldn't do it for her. He felt that scream want to come out again.

He considered why he'd never asked her about this other man in the foursome. He'd not really thought about it, sort of pushed it away. Maybe deep down he never thought about the guy who would put his prick in his wife because he kind of didn't want to face the fact that he might be big. But he could feel a thought, very deep down, toyed with it like the frayed edge of a book corner. Maybe in some sort of way, for Kate's sake, he had hoped it would be big.

MITCH NEVER SHOWED up back at the room. Kate had changed into pyjamas and waited on the couch for him. Now it was completely black out.

She was so worried. The thought of having hurt him was killing her. The way she left him on those stairs. They never fought. Not really. Not like her parents had. But she'd sworn that that was not the way she was going to be. Mitch was so level-headed, so easy-going, they only had bad moods, never any fights.

And it was her selfishness. Her weird desire that had done this. She could give that all up if it meant he wasn't hurt.

God, why had she started this? It was crazy.

But that cock. She'd seen it today, flaccid but so large, tucked down his leg.

She'd already seen it. That wasn't something she was going to tell Mitch now was it. That Kiley had sent her a photo, maybe a year ago. Grainy, cell phone, a picture Omar had sent to Kiley. Disembodied and grotesquely large, erect, reflected in a mirror resting on some bathroom sink. Kate texted, wtf is that? Kiley replied, new boyfriend, a banana, current mood: and a screaming face emoji. Kiley had no way to know that picture would linger with Kate. She couldn't get it out of her mind. Now she wished she'd had. This morning she'd been so ecstatic, all the hurdles cleared for this insane endeavour, they were on their way, then that guy had to show it off.

She heard a chirp and the magnetic lock buzz. She stood up, worried. Mitch came in quietly through the double doors, said Hey.

"Hey," she said back. She stood on one bare leg, the other still bent up on the couch. Just wearing her big shirt, hoping to look as gentle and kind towards him as she felt. She wanted to go to him, hug him, make it better but the thought of him pushing her away made her too fearful.

He scratched his ear with the key card then went to the bar and poured a drink.

"Mitch," she said.

"Hold on," he held up a hand as he poured, then took a sip.

"Kate, we can't lie, yeah?"

"I know," she said. "Please, just come here," she didn't want to cry, wasn't going to, but she hated the feeling that not everything about them was in the right place.

He came over and kissed her and put his arms around her and held her without saying anything. She just squeezed him and felt him breathing.

"I don't want this," she said. "Can we just go home?" And she meant it in that moment, the disgrace she felt, disgust.

"I want to do this," he said.

"I don't Mitch, not any more. I did, I really did, but I just—this whole thing feels so wrong now, it's making me sick."

They sat down across from each other for a while, looking down at the empty glasses on the low table between them. "Something made you put all this together and I don't think that's going to go away."

That was true. She felt that. "I don't want to do something that'll hurt you, Mitch."

"I know. I feel like maybe you had hidden something from me. That you tricked me into this. False pretences and all that. I feel like you left me out of a lot of this. This threesome that became a foursome? It was always going to be a foursome." He was a smart one.

He lifted his empty whisky glass and cocked his arm, looking to hurl it through a glass display case across from them, seemed as if he would, but shook his head and put it back down. Not mad, just frustrated. She took it from him and set it on the table and climbed into his lap.

“That’s the part that I really don’t like,” he said to her, close up. “I get why you want what you want. I don’t like it. I hate it, but I do want it for you. I want this for you because you want it. I don’t know why. But I’m okay with it. Just no more lies.”

She agreed but she didn’t tell him about the picture that Kiley sent and how it made her crazy. She told him that Kiley really was into this, wanted to be with him but she didn’t tell him that she had told Kiley that sometimes she thought Mitch was too small and she wasn’t always satisfied. That the two of them had arranged this little get-together for the sole purpose of Kate’s desire. She didn’t tell him that she asked whatever happened to the guy whose picture she’d sent because Omar and Kiley weren’t really a couple any more. They had split up quite a while ago. She didn’t tell him that Omar was only there specifically because of what she knew was between his legs.

She couldn’t tell him. It would hurt him that she could be so deceitful, and she had that feeling back in her stomach, and she just wanted this done and over so she could stop thinking about it.

MITCH TOOK them out the next morning in the Jeep and they all had breakfast in Rum Point. It was early but the parking was already almost full and the place was getting pretty lively.

The diner was a little yellow-painted bungalow at the edge of the beach, ten tables and packed, everyone there for the coconut bakes and fresh papaya and lime that you couldn't avoid hearing about. It had a thatch roof and a surfboard at the door even though nobody surfed around there, but the rum barrels on the boardwalk out front under the Casaurina trees made the place a bit more authentic.

Omar had left the table before the bill came, before the plates were cleared, and Kiley and Kate were talking to each other, whispering in the noisy little room. He watched them talk, serious faces. He reached across and took Kate's hand and Kiley looked over at him.

"We should get going, we need to get to the port."

"Yeah, let's hit the loo," Kiley said, standing, nodding to Kate.

"One second," he said, and she waited then went off by herself.

"Little rude, Mitch," she said, but kind of smiling at him.

"I'm looking forward to tonight, you know," he said. He wanted to reassure her. "You know, though, that this isn't an open marriage now, yeah? You know that right? This is a bit of fun, but you know it ends here."

"Yeah."

"This is cheating. I know you think we're in this together," he squeezed her hand, "and we are, from here on out--but the way this came about? It's practically cheating. You found a way to get this thing you're looking for and you just figured out a way to do it right in front of me."

"Hey—"

"Kate, I'm in. I feel tricked, but I'm listening to you."

"Mitch—"

"Kiley was bait you used to lure me into a yes. Give you a green light on your desires. And once I sunk my teeth in you hoped I wouldn't let go. You have me in the trap, Kate. Let's see what you can do."

She put her hand over top of his, brushing her fingers over his soft skin, looking into his eyes. God, he loved her.

MITCH HAD slept the entire night with his arm around her holding her tight against him. She'd woken up with a sweaty bar across her shirt where his arm had been.

Seemed like he'd been up all night thinking. He'd figured her out though. She hadn't even seen it that way, but wasn't that what she'd done? Wasn't he right? He made her sound very bad. Maybe she was. She'd been called it before, grabbed roughly or slapped by some bloke stinking of lager that she thought loved her. They just made her feel more right. More righteous. Mitch was making her feel wicked.

Kiley was next to her, sharing the mirror, fixing her hair, they looked at each other in the reflection. Kiley turned, stayed quiet, squeezed her arm and went back out to the restaurant. She took a minute, looking down, avoiding herself, gripped the edge of the sink, exhaled deeply. She would show Mitch what she could do. She left, pushing past two young girls coming in.

The little hallway was crowded now, a bunch of people coming in off the beach. She was pressed up against the wall, painted mural of the sea, grim sailing ships from another time, getting herself through. Omar came out of the doorway ahead of her and turned, said, Hi, his voice very deep, low. He stepped forward to let someone into the Men's behind him, right up next to her now, looking down into her. Light coming in from a small side window getting into his eyes lighting the navy up into a brilliant blue. She put her hand next to his, almost touching it, felt the heat from it. If he'd kissed her right there, she might have gone into the men's room with him and let him do whatever he wanted to her. They stood like that letting the hallway clear, he shrugged his head to the side, and she followed him out to the parking.

Kiley and Mitch were at the Jeep, Mitch was looking in the wheel wells, there was a sign saying to check for iguanas.

“Submarine?” Kiley said.

“Where?” Kate said.

“We have to drive back up to George Town.” Mitch was getting the keys out.

Kate asked him, looking for clarification, “We’re going on a submarine?”

“I have a little trouble with tight spaces,” Omar said.

Kate looked over at Kiley, What does he mean? He ruined this yesterday with his revealing swim trunks, could he not say things like that. Everyone still talking, she realized she was the only one who thought that was dirty.

KILEY SAT in the back of the Jeep and looked at Mitch as he drove. Handsome guy. Kate was up front with him, her right hand over his wrist while he held the gearshift.

Kate told her what happened last night, why they cancelled. She got it. Kate said that he didn’t come back until late and when he did he was okay with it again. Kate had kind of confessed a lot of it to Mitch. But Kate told her this morning that she hadn’t told him everything—she and Omar still had to act like a couple, and don’t say that she had seen a picture of Omar’s penis and had practically special-ordered him. She didn’t get that. Why would Kate still keep things from him? If he doesn’t want lies, don’t lie, and if he can’t truly handle her strange desires then don’t do it for Christ’s sake. Yeah, Omar was hot, she’d been obsessed with him at one time, but the guy could be a real prick too. If Kate missed out on him it just wasn’t the end of the world.

They got to the port and parked. Kiley had said Omar could wait in the Jeep but he said he was fine to get on the little tour sub.

They waited in line for a while before their boat showed up, standing out in the sun. The boat that took them out to the sub wasn’t crowded and the trip out was pretty peaceful, Mitch and Kate leaning over the rail, holding hands. It was nice, she was happy for them. She stayed with Omar, sitting with him as he huddled up in the shade worried he'd get seasick again.

It took forever for the people on the sub to disembark and she was glad they weren't on that trip. For Omar's sake. Wasn't sure to begin with how he'd handle being underwater in a little metal coffin. At least it wasn't going to be crowded. She climbed down the ladder and onto the sub, Mitch holding her hand to steady her as she jumped off the last rung.

She was glad it was back on for her and Mitch too. Kate made him sound kind of underwhelming but she'd always enjoyed spending time with him. He was very dashing, he looked the part of a Prince or something, at home in a tuxedo with a drink in his hand. Like he was out of a Scotch ad. Kate was very lucky.

Back when Kate and Mitch were dating, Kate was also seeing two other blokes. Kiley couldn't keep the stories straight, so Kate gave them nicknames and Mitch was referred to as the one with the little dick. It wasn't mean, she treated it as matter of fact. But that was her husband now.

OMAR SAT bathing in the weird blue light inside the submarine, his back facing a vent that was blowing cold air over his shoulders. Kiley was next to him looking out at the coral and the fish. Same they saw yesterday, but now behind glass.

Omar was looking at Kate and Mitch. The two of them watching out the little round portholes on the other side, holding hands. Kate wore this big, white linen shirt that came down over her ass but he could see her well-toned, bare legs underneath. The shirt glowed brightly in the blue.

She was well-kept. That was for sure. Her perfect white teeth, her glossy hair, manicure, pedicure. He imagined most of her days were spent in gyms, hair salons, nail salons. Expensive to keep a girl like that.

Mitch was whispering something into her ear and she leaned her head on him, put her hand up on his chest. Still holding hands. These two made no sense.

Omar wondered who it was really for. This week together, the four of them like this. Who was the one of the two of them who wanted this more?

Mitch looked like he could be a dog. Of course he'd want to fuck Kiley. But Kiley called Omar.

There was a ping, and he looked to the right, next to the two black operators piloting the sub in their white lapel shirts. A digital sign flashed one-hundred-ft. They were about as deep as they would go.

Kate was the one who wanted it.

He smiled looking at her slim legs and her painted toes. He knew what she looked like under that shirt and he couldn't wait for this to happen. Glad this was back on, wondered what had happened last night. Who got the cold feet?

Kiley hadn't talked to Omar for about six months. She'd called out of the blue. Kiley wasn't interested in getting back together that was pretty obvious. He figured there was only one reason he was here. Kinky that Kiley would have told Kate. Kinky that Kate wanted it for herself. He scratched his beard and watched the two of them. Strange little lovebirds.

"Omar," Kiley said, "there's your shipwreck," pointing out the porthole.

He turned around and looked out into the sea, saw the coral-crusted remains of an old ship, jagged spires out of the white sand. Now this was interesting.

MITCH WASN'T sure if Omar was just showing off or if he really did just want to open the jet ski up. He saw him ripping up ahead, splitting the ocean with a spray of foam, getting farther and farther from him.

Kate had said they should rent jet skis and go out in the afternoon but when they showed up at the dock Kate had changed her mind. All four of them standing in the heat and sun, ready to go, and she convinced Kiley to stay on land with her and go get a massage on the beach. So he was left with Omar and the jet skis. He'd have preferred to stay, go get a massage with the two girls, but Omar was already getting on his jet ski. For some strange reason he didn't want to ruin his fun. This guy who his wife wanted to fuck because he had a big dick, and here was her husband concerned about the guy's feelings.

So now he was out on the water, sitting on a jet ski, watching this hotshot tool around spraying up water in a rooster tail. He felt like he was getting a sunburn sitting out there, checking his arms for redness, and wondered how much time would have to pass before it would be considered all right to call it quits. He checked his watch again, then waved Omar over.

“Think we should pack it in, mate,” he said.

Omar used his big hands to wipe the water off his face, shook them out. He seemed happy, invigorated.

“Yes, they should be done by now, you think?”

“Yeah, they’ve got to be,” he said looking back to shore as if he might be able to see them.

Omar leaned forward, draped his arms over the handlebars, dripping water. “So, Mitch, you do banking in London, stock exchange?”

“Sort of, I run an Investment House.”

“Handling rich people’s money for them?”

Omar nodded, looking out deeper into the sea, the two of them bobbing with the waves.

“Well, you certainly got us the best in wave runners,” he said, looking over the gauges, squinting from the sun.

“Did I?”

He laughed, said “You don’t know how good they are?” He looked at Mitch, squeezing the grips, said, “Supercharged four-stroke, air to water intercooler--you should really open it up out here. You don’t want to find out what she can do?”

“Not much of a thrill-seeker, I guess.”

Omar rubbed his broad chin, “If you don’t know what it can do I suppose you don’t miss out on putting it through its paces,” he made it sound friendly, smiling holding his hands out to his sides. Laissez-faire. Mitch got it, Frenchman. If he fucked his wife better she wouldn’t have to seek you out?

They rode back together and dropped off the machines at the dock, but the girls weren’t out where the massage tables were. Someone there told them they’d gone off along the boardwalk after they were done, so Mitch and Omar walked to the shops and poked around until they found them.

He saw Kate in the back of a little boutique, standing at the counter with her items neatly folded by the cashier who was talking to her, intimately, like they were divulging secrets.

She grabbed his hand and kissed him, said Kiley was still trying things on. Omar went and sat on one of the low leather arm chairs in the fitting area, slumped in it, and picked up a brochure on parasailing. Mitch left Kate to her conversation and sat in the chair next to Omar, watched him adjust himself while he flipped the card over.

“Hi, fellas, how was your jet skiing?” Kiley said, Mitch looking up and seeing her come out of the shuttered dressing room and stand in front of the mirrors.

“Refreshing,” he said, Omar not answering, looking for something else to read through.

She looked sheepish for a moment, scrunched up her nose, said, “Mitch, I hope you don’t mind, Kate made me...”

He put his palms up and stopped her, said, My pleasure, assuming she meant some of the clothing on the counter was hers and Kate was paying.

She turned her back to a tall mirror held in a stand and looked over her shoulder. “What do you think?”

She was standing on her tip-toes, trying on a short, silk tunic coverup with a split neckline. Big bold pattern, silhouettes of emerald palms against a bone background, three quarter sleeve with a lacy trim, showing off her long graceful wrists and hands.

He looked at her firm, beautifully shaped legs, her bare little feet on the polished maple floor. The hem of the pullover coming down to just the tops of her thighs. When she lifted her arms the back of it came up and he could see a flash of her panties, the curve of her cheek.

“Just get it, Kiley, you look stunning.” He felt strangely self-conscious saying that in front of her boyfriend.

Kiley didn’t really seem too close with Omar, they seemed kind of distant. Kiley looked really outstanding in that little top and Omar only managed to raise an eyebrow. It was unusual the way those two got along.

He stood up and went over to the counter and put his hand on the small of Kate’s back. He wasn’t sure if it was alright to pay for Kiley’s things. He wanted to, just wasn’t sure if Omar would like him buying his girlfriend gifts. Maybe that was stupid though. So he showed the girl the pile of clothes, told her to add whatever Kiley had in there, and gave her his card. Hoped nothing in there was for Omar.

Maybe they were going to swap, be intimate with each other’s partners, but it was odd to let another man spend a few thousand on your girlfriend. Unless he figured that Mitch had so much to spend. But still. Pride and all.

If Omar had bought Kate a gift, however small, it would make the other things he was going to do to her unworkable.

On the way back to the Jeep Kate found a seven foot tall plaster pirate with a parrot on its shoulder outside of a liquor store. The pirate had a sign that said Big Black Dick Rum and Kate called Kiley and when she turned Kate grabbed it between the legs and made a funny, snarling face, kicking up one leg behind her. Kiley said let me get a picture, but Kate waved her off, bent over from laughing.

THEY HAD GONE BACK to the room to change before dinner. Kate had contemplated cancelling the reservation, she sure didn't feel like eating. But it was still too early for them to begin anything serious. So she decided they'd go out as planned and she was just going to have a few stiff drinks. Maybe a salad.

The menus were tall stiff folders, handed to them by a pretty black girl in khaki shorts. The pages were thick linen, the carefully crafted descriptions pressed into the paper in black ink. Fresh fruit, fresh fish; what is the proper meal before being taken in front of your husband? Watching your husband fuck your friend? She didn't think she could eat anything.

She looked out over the top of her menu while her companions read. She wondered what tomorrow would be like. What would Mitch think of her? He could hate her. Kiley could too.

That was exciting. These were high stakes.

Omar made his selection, said he'd have the steak, folded up his menu. He smiled at her, caught her looking. His white teeth, berry coloured lips and thick stubble making her want to get this dinner over with and get back. He was going to fuck her once they left here. Right in front of her husband.

She ordered a salad and a double Macallan. Her feet were tapping under the table. She put her hand on Mitch's arm and waited for everyone's dinner to arrive.

THERE WAS no turning back now, Mitch felt that. The brakes were off. He'd taken away the only obstacle left in the way. It was pretty liberating. He felt a little drunk from the wine too. He didn't drink wine often. They all sat sort of looking at each other over their half-eaten plates. No one really knew what to say.

There was a knot of anticipation inside him. It was excitement. Not just for him, but for Kate too. She looked a bit worried, sitting across from him. No one had big smiles. They all looked stone-faced.

Mitch said, Well, I guess that's it. He closed up the bill folder and put his wallet back in his pocket. Why didn't they eat at the resort? It was a bit of a walk back and they hadn't brought the cart. He didn't know if his legs could hold him up.

KILEY WALKED with her arm linked in Kate's. They went in silence along the boardwalk. It was grey and damp, getting dark now. Warm, but there was a wind picking up. The sea was crashing along the beach and it started to bother her, made her want to walk faster.

Mitch walked up ahead and Omar followed behind him a few steps. The two of them on their own. She hugged Kate's arm against her. Kate looked over and smiled weakly, gave her a wide-eyed look. What were they about to do? Kiley knew it was on. Nothing was going to stop them. She hoped this was worth it for Kate. This was just a bit of fun for her. And, well, Omar...he would be fine. It was Kate and Mitch she wondered about.

They made it back to the hotel without saying a word. On the elevator on the way up to the top Mitch let out a little chuckle. Nervous. Kiley looked at him, his reflection across from her, and smiled at him.

KATE SAID, when they got back to the room, that she'd like a minute or two. Kiley told them to all meet back in the living area in twenty minutes. Mitch got himself a drink and Kate asked him to get her one too. They all went into their respective rooms and closed the doors behind them.

She looked at Mitch but he didn't say anything, just bit his lip then took another sip of his drink. She stood between his legs and put her arms around his head, held it against her chest.

Kate told him she was going to have a quick shower and brought her Scotch into the bathroom with her. Mitch sat on the bed and watched her.

She got undressed and got herself into a scalding hot shower with her hair pulled up. She stood there for a good long time, feeling the hot sting on her back. She touched the cold glass to her forehead.

OMAR WAS DYING to get this going. He held the door open for Kiley and she walked out into the common room. Kate was there sitting on one of the big padded wingbacks. Mitch stood over her behind the chair. They got up and moved to the centre of the room when they saw them.

The four of them stood looking at each other. It felt like someone wanted to say something. Omar looked around. No one was looking at each other, maybe Kate was looking at Kiley. Come on guys. He waited, watched them looking around at each other's knees. What were they waiting for? Did someone want to say something?

Omar kissed the back of Kiley's neck and she tilted it for him. He kissed her and bit at her nape. He put his arms around to the front and lifted her shirt slowly for Mitch to see. He watched Mitch look at her being revealed. Watching as he could see the skin of her flat belly, wanting to see more. Kiley lifted her arms and he pulled the shirt over her head. He kissed her shoulder and with a hand at the small of her back he sent her to Mitch. Mitch looked like he didn't know what to do. He let her come to him and put his arms around her back. He looked over at his wife, and she didn't give him anything, just standing there with her hands clasped together, one foot on top of the other one. Kiley stood up on her toes and kissed at him. He was reluctant but he kissed her back.

KILEY KISSED Mitch's stiff mouth, she could feel the tension in him. Felt him wanting to pull away. She backed off, keeping it less intimate. She made sure he was watching and she hooked her thumbs into the band of her panties, she wiggled herself out of them keeping her eyes on him. She stepped out of them and stood in front of him and let him look at her. She could see him swallow.

She looked over and watched Omar cross to Kate and kiss her on her neck. Kate leaned back and let him, touching her fingers along his arm as he put his hand on her waist. Mitch was watching too. She took the bottom of Mitch's shirt and lifted it, kissing him on his chest. He pulled it off and put his arms on her shoulders. She ran her hands over him, feeling his chest and then along his back. She put her hands into his waistband and looked up at him. He was aghast but she could see he wanted it. She pulled them down slowly, lowering them over his dick. It popped out and she saw that it was pretty small. Not the smallest. Small for someone as big as Mitch. She let his pants fall to the floor and put her hands over it, cupping him, holding him.

She looked back at Kate and Omar and she had a brief chill. Omar had Kate's top off now and his lips were on hers. Her breasts were bare. It felt so strange to see her friend like this, naked and intimate. Kate looked over and smiled at her, saw her with her hand on her husband's penis, pulling on it, wanting it to get hard. Kate smiled at her, and closed her eyes as Omar kissed her neck.

KATE FELT the scratch of his beard as he kissed her collar and neck. There was something she wanted to do, she couldn't wait to do. But part of the fun was anticipation, so she let Omar take the lead. Let him squeeze her breasts with his strong hands, felt him run them along her back, and into her panties. He put his hands on her cheeks and squeezed them hard, lifting her up on to her toes. It made her feel wet instantly. She could hear that she was wet. She made a little gasp, and he did it again and bit her lip. She felt him slide her panties down over her hips and she let them fall. She pushed him back and looked at him, biting her own lip now. He took off his shirt and faced her. Her hands traced over his chest, and down his stomach. She slipped her hands under his waistband and felt for his cock. Couldn't wait anymore. She took it in her right hand, her fingers feeling so cold against its heat. It was so big. Much bigger than Mitch when he was hard, but so soft. It was strange to feel one so large yet so pliable. She grabbed his balls with her other hand, held their weight. He was hung like she'd never felt before.

He took her hands away by the wrists, whispered in her ear, Come and see and he sat himself in the wingback, grey light on him from the window. She looked at him sitting in the chair looking up at her knowing what she wanted. Confident smile on his face, and yes, she did want it. She wanted to see him hard, she wanted to see what she had seen in that picture. She wanted to feel that thing in her hands, climb on it, feel it push her apart. She kneeled between his legs and put her hands to his waistband. Her hands were trembling almost uncontrollably. Like she was freezing. The spasms coming in waves. He laughed and she heard him say something to her but it was in French. He helped her, both of them pulling down the satiny shorts, him lifting himself off the seat to get them down. His flaccid cock fell across his thigh. A dark red-brown, uncircumcised, fat thing. She lifted it and stroked it, watching it wriggle in her hand.

MITCH COULDN'T GET HARD. He stood there, felt his teeth chattering. He felt shrunken, shrivelled. Kiley's foreign fingers on him felt vaguely medical. Like a procedure. He saw Kate put her hands down Omar's shorts. So she'd felt it now. Was her heart racing? He could see her trembling.

Kiley sat him down, his dick felt like it had gone back up inside him. She kissed him, licked her fingers, and put her fingers on him again. Slippery, rubbing over his tip. She looked over at Kate and Omar. Mitch could see Kate was between Omar's legs now, he was naked and Kate was staring at the huge cock in her hand. It was disgusting. A sagging, big brown wrinkled thing that squirmed in her grip. So different than what Mitch had. It was like it was a different thing.

Kiley pulled at him while everyone in the room seemed to watch Omar getting bigger and harder, the end of it still flopping around, left and right. Kate stretched him out and draped it over his leg. They watched her pull his scrotum out from under him. She put one of his large balls in her mouth and pulled on it gently. Omar put his head back. Kate licked along the underside of his cock, all the way to the tip, pulled on the end of his foreskin with her lips and looked up at him. She put her hand back on it and stroked him. She couldn't take her eyes off it. He was harder now, and the head of his cock was coming out of his foreskin as she jerked it. Kate pulled his foreskin back and put her mouth over him.

Mitch looked at Kiley. She was staring at Kate. Thought it must be weird for her to see Kate like this too. Or maybe it wasn't. What if this wasn't their first time? He hadn't thought of it before. The two of them as roommates, fucking guys in their bed together. The same bed where Mitch was first with Kate.

Kate had it hard now, her hand barely meeting around it. The engorged head of it looked like a doorknob in her tiny hand. Mitch felt himself begin to stiffen under Kiley's fingers.

Performance

MITCH'S HAND felt tentative in hers, like it was somewhere far away. Kiley walked Mitch into the bedroom, a few steps behind Kate and Omar. There was another one of those awkward silent moments, the four of them naked at the foot of the bed, where no one really knew what to do next. Kate looked at her, then went to the side of the unmade king-size, got on and lay herself back. Kiley climbed up from the bottom, tugging Mitch behind her and he followed, one hand between his legs covering himself.

"Let's watch them go first," she said. Kate had told her that in the bathroom at the busy diner in the morning. She wanted to go first. Have Mitch watch. She sat with him side by side, cross-legged in the cotton nest of bunched up bed sheets. She moved his hand away with hers, slipping under his drawn up bag, felt his constricted member in the cleft of her hand where it met her wrist.

Omar put his knee up on the bed, kissed Kate on the lips. Kate's hands found his outstretched cock, wrapped around it. He pushed her back with kisses along her neck and her chest, and then leaned over and flicked on the table lamp next to the bed, a squat wide-shaded ivory thing that lit them up in a warm yellow light. She could see Kate looking up at Omar, a wet white spot of light in her eyes, admiring him, his firm body, the masculine edges of muscle cast in shadow. He got down on his hands and knees over her, putting his head on her chest, running his tongue down between her splayed breasts, down over her sternum, creasing her belly. He kissed and bit at her there, working his way to the unshaven mound between her legs. Kate instantly inhaled as his tongue found her in there, and she arched her back, hissing between clenched teeth.

KATE PULLED AT HIS HAIR, felt him in her nest, his tongue pushing on her folds, warm and wet, sliding over her. She squeezed her legs together, holding him against her but stopping him. She didn't come all this way for some foreplay, as nice as it was. He looked up at her, his steely eyes framed in her thighs and her wispy patch of hair.

He got up to his knees, looking down, serious. He ran his hands over her bent legs and she saw how large his hands were against her. The touch of his fingers in the soft flesh of her thighs shot through her, feeling it between her legs, aching for it. His cock hung between his thighs, wide as her wrist.

"Do we have any lube?" she said, turning to Kiley, her voice very small in the big room. Kiley left Mitch sitting there, looking at her grimly, while she went to the bathroom to get something. She turned away from him and looked at Omar. She reached down and held his cock. She stroked it, wanting it to be returned to its most turgid state. She sat up a bit and pulled one of the big white pillows behind her to prop her up.

When she'd first touched it, picked it up off his leg, it was like a warm, sticky bag handed to her, feeling something moving inside just under the surface, something menacing stirring, awakening. But it had changed, it was firm now but yielding, the glint of a table lamp rimming the grey lip of the corpulent head stretching itself out now from its furrowed sleeve. She ran her thumb along its chin, a wide cleft, black opening in its heart looking at her. It was like a monument to her sexuality, a throbbing totem in her hand.

She gauged his size with her hands; more than three lengths of her fist along the knuckles, and thick all the way even around the head. Kiley bounced back onto the bed and dropped a little blue tube next to her elbow.

THE LUBE WAS a blue gel and Omar watched Kate squeeze a swirl into her hand the size of a Euro. She rubbed her hands together quickly, then gripped his cock and slowly went up and down his length. He smelled the medicinal mint of the lube. Kate put her hands between her legs, wiping herself off down there. Her face was all business, getting this done.

It turned him on to see this little housewife made so horny by him, by his cock, that she would pay for his vacation if he would fuck her with it. He was really hard right now, felt the ache behind his balls, and he couldn't wait to watch her expression as he put on a show for her, slid himself inside her inch by inch.

She was beautiful on her back, soft but still shapely, her huge tits falling over her arms, big pink nipples, brown at the tips where they were hardened. Kiley was watching and she looked like she was into it, wanted to see what would happen, but Mitch looked like he was trying to find a voice that would stop Omar from putting his cock inside his wife. Omar knew he wouldn't, his sexy little wife owned him, had his tiny dick in her pocket.

HIS COCK LOOKED SO huge pressed up against her. He saw it dark against the white skin of her belly and wondered how it was going to fit inside her, the tip of it nesting in the hollow of her belly button. The feeling of deep dread that had rationalized how wrong this whole evening would be and gave him the agency to stop it was gone and all that was left was a lurid desire to watch what his wife would look like fucked by this swinging mule cock. It sickened him, the prospect so horrible that his jaw was tightened and his temples ached.

She had stroked Omar hard again, her little hand shiny from the lube. The big diamond engagement ring he'd spent half a work day picking out that snowy morning six years ago twinkling in the lamp light. Everything was in place.

She looked up at Kiley and then over at Mitch, and put out her hand for him to hold it. Mitch took it and felt her squeeze him. At least they were in this together. Mitch felt himself harden between Kiley's fingers, swiftly and urgently.

Omar stroked himself and he asked her if she was ready. She watched his hand on his cock and nodded, eyes half-lidded. He brushed his big swollen end against Kate and Mitch could hear the scratching of her pubic hair. He pushed against her gently, not entering, but finding his way and getting some of her dampness on him. Kate bit her lip in fearful anticipation. He gripped it in one hand and rubbed it against her sex in circles and up and down, doing it firmly. Mitch heard wet smacking noises and knew it was about to happen.

He pushed into her again. There was a lot of resistance and Kate made a little-girl gasp. He pulled it back and wet his tip further and slid in again. There was more resistance, and his push slowed but he persisted and she accepted it. There was a soft wet sound as he slid that enormous head past her muscle. Mitch's cock pulsed and a long stream of pre-cum ran over Kiley's thumb and down his erection. Kiley feathered the slippery tip with her finger and thumb. He tried to thrust it into her hand wanting her to grip it but she kept tickling away. More pre-cum poured out. He flexed again and again and it just kept coming. It almost felt like an orgasm but there was frustratingly no release.

"You turned on by seeing your wife get what she wants?" She was stroking him now, whispering in his ear so she wouldn't disturb this sick little sex show.

Omar inched it in slowly, backing up an inch for every half inch gained. Kate squeezed his hand hard, feeling her nails dig into the backs of his fingers. She said, Wait. He paused against her. Mitch looked between their legs and felt a bit sick at the sight of Omar's big wide cock halfway into his wife.

Kate began to grind gently against him and he let her. He stayed motionless and let her work on to him. The slick wet sounds came again as her body began to slowly accept this large, foreign invader.

They both got their hips working in contracted circles and Kate began sighing with each tiny thrust he gave her. She was slowly working her way down his shaft, wet thrust by wet thrust. He pulled back almost all the way out and plunged in again. She accepted it, and he did it again. He propped himself up and pushed himself in deliberately deep. Kate's pubic pad bulged up with his entry and she cried out.

IT FELT SO wrong inside her. Not her husband. Not her husband's size. Too big. Not how this was supposed to feel.

But it felt so good, felt like she'd hoped it would. She had to search for that pleasure somewhere past the strange feeling of being stretched too far.

Like stretched to the limit. She felt like she could tear. Every time he thrust himself inside her, despite the pain, a carnal charge shot through her brain, wanting more and more of him. Every time he withdrew it felt like she was being pulled out with him, turning herself inside out. That was when she feared he was too much, just for a moment, then he thrust himself in again and she felt a tingle from her heart to her fingertips. Wanting to be fucked.

She felt exposed to her husband, naked in a new way. Not like she was on her bare mattress in the apartment in Finsbury Park when he clumsily undressed her and she let him fuck her while she gripped the chipped metal rails of the Charity Shop headboard above her. And not like when he unclasped the hook on the back of her shamelessly white ball gown in the Honeymoon Suite at the Langham and politely acted like he was seeing her for the first time. She felt like she was sharing with him the darkest depths that she travelled. The hidden desires and the abyss of her lust. This was her exposed and she wanted to be seen by him. And instead of pushing through the shame, seeking out only the pleasure in this deplorable act, she embraced it, felt her husband's eyes on her, wanting to make him see her for what she was.

She looked up at Omar, his masculine face snarling at her, the ripple of the muscles of his torso as he fucked her. The veins stood out on him, a network from his shoulders down his strong arms. She clawed at his neck, resisting the pain like a bitch being mounted, then pulled him into her scratching at his back.

AT FIRST IT was really hot. She watched Kate take him deep inside her and the sounds she made filled up the room. It almost sounded fake but she sort of knew it was real. She'd been there before. Kate clawed at his back while they got themselves going, her legs wrapped around his hips. Kiley watched Omar thrusting into her, slow at first, saw the muscles of his back, the flexing cheeks of his rounded rump, and got herself a little turned on from seeing him from this angle. She'd caught a glimpse of themselves once, in a sliver of mirror in a cheap motel in Florida, the same view but she'd turned away, ashamed of the pleasure she saw contorting her face.

Then the more it went on seeing her take it, her heels digging into him, spurring him, telling him how big he felt, slapping at him as he got too deep, getting on her side her legs shaking, arching her back and scratching at the bed, the flipping her over and the yelp she gave when he got back in her, then more frenzied fucking, her gasping, and yipping, the ah, ah, the Fuck me, fuck me—it got quite uncomfortable. She felt very conscious of Mitch in her hand, small but hard as bone. She looked over at him once in the middle of it and saw him watching stone-faced. It was hard to figure what he might be thinking but his body was responding positively.

Now Omar had Kate's legs up, her knees forced into her face, and they could both see he was really in there, see his sack slapping and sticking to her sweaty cheeks. And Kate was out of her mind, taking it and loving it. It was a bit too intense.

Kate's little feet were up in the air over Omar's shoulders, flapping as if broken. Her face was a frozen frown, brow furrowed, mouth agape, a low fried sound bubbling across her vocal cords, undulating with Omar's vigorous thrusts.

KATE GRABBED handfuls of sheets and pulled them over her face as she felt something gargantuan building inside. She inhaled soft, soapy hotel laundry and something else in there; a spicy, leather smell, masculine but dirty. She looked into Omar's eyes, he was gleaming with sweat, she felt every ridge and vein on his big cock, even his retracting foreskin as he thrust himself in and out of her. She twisted her head to the left and right, trying to get a hold of something unhitching within her, something letting go, and something very powerful released, rushing through her from the other side. She felt her hair clinging to her face, could see her breasts pushed out, jiggling, her nipples hard and upright. She could see Mitch watching, could tell that he would be able to see her dirtiness spread wide and skewered, the slap of her flesh as she was pounded. Omar fucked her hard and deep, her legs bent up and her filth exposed and spread for him, her little hole being ruined. The mahogany bed was a stable slab, a monolith, a polished unmoving platform. Nothing to rob his thrusting of its energy as he fucked her towards destruction.

Her orgasm came ruthless and unyielding, she slapped at her belly like she'd been burned, clawed at his thighs as he continued to thrust, she was wild-eyed like a witch being burned at the stake, a cry building within her that started low and quickly went high and loud and encouraging. Urging him to fuck her harder, pounding on his thighs, she squeezed her eyes hard until she saw stars. And then a bliss, a warm comforting glow that spread through her like she'd slipped into a hot bath, her hair stood on end, and she squirmed away from him, getting him out of her. She squeezed her breasts, and clasped her thighs together, gyrating against a phantom invader that continued to fill her and she rode it, gyrating her hips, the longest orgasm she'd ever felt.

KATE LOOKED WORN, her hair wet and clinging to her, her whole body had a clammy sheen. Omar turned her onto her side and she fell over lifeless. He got himself behind her and pulled her apart like frog's legs, her heels touching. He took his cock in his hand and sought out her wet centre. She turned her head and he kissed her. The tip of him found her and he pressed it into her again and she grunted into his mouth, a high squeak.

The light from the bathroom fell across their exposed sexes, Kate's tufted mound split wide and gleaming deep-pink and wet, Omar's thickness buried in there, his balls hanging into the bed sheets.

Her right hand was in his, bracing her from underneath, disappearing inside his big grip as he started to fuck her again. Her other hand scratched at his backside encouraging his thrusts. They were locked in a kiss like that and he was fucking into her hard, his balls swinging against her, slapping his leg.

Mitch felt his heartbeat in his throat, Kate was over the top, snorting through her nose as he fucked her, her lips still locked on his, she made noises like she was talking, saying, Yes over and over, but they were formless sounds that ended in her strained throat, the tendons standing out like thick cords.

Omar roared, his head thrust back and he pulled himself out of her, leaving her puckered and stretched, falling heavily against her leg. He grabbed himself at the base and humped himself into her stomach, his thick thing gliding across her slickened skin. Kate's hips thrust despite his absence as he fucked her smooth belly, her little wedding-ringed hand rubbing his broad underside, pushing him against her. The first stream of semen went up her front and under her breasts, he kept thrusting and spurting on to her, across her belly and up onto her chest and into the sheets. She was groaning too, high and encouraging, squeezing his tip against her, watching her hand on it and seeing the last white surges squirt from him.

Omar had disappeared behind her, spent, and Kate fondled his dwindling erection watching it in her grip. Kiley handed her a t-shirt and she took it, wiped down Omar's cock between her legs, then wiped herself in slow circles, looking down to see if she'd got it all. She lay back, looking exhausted but not unnoticeably content. She looked over at them, Omar's hand gently stroking at her belly, his cock draped over the inside of her thigh. It was their turn now.

IT HADN'T OCCURRED to her what it would be like to have to follow a performance like what she saw Omar give until he had Kate on her side, fucking her from behind, her legs spread, his manhood splitting Kate apart slowly, on full display for Mitch and her.

Now all eyes were on them and she felt the enormous pressure to provide a show--a spotlight on her, a silent expectant crowd, a cleared throat somewhere in the steep horseshoe of a two-tiered concert hall. She suddenly couldn't swallow.

She looked at Mitch, his eyes were wide, a fear of the unknown. They kissed hesitantly, facing each other, sitting cross-legged. She felt his hands cup her shoulders, and the feel of him broke her tension. She kissed him back, putting her fingers to his neck.

It felt good to kiss him. She wanted him to enjoy this, to give him a good time. She stroked him, felt how hard he was. He wasn't much longer than her hand, but he was good and stiff and that turned her on. She held him with her lips while she pulled him onto her, laying back on the bed and spreading her legs for him. She watched as he looked down over her, his hand gripping his erection and slowly sliding it into her. He felt good inside her.

It was intense, she felt a sudden rush, her face flushed and she filled with emotion. She'd stood by her friend as she married this man, she loved him as a friend. Had seen him when he was a little puppy dog in love with Kate, encouraged him over a cup of coffee, gave him the inside scoop on how to win over her best mate. Attended funerals, hospital trips--she cared for him deeply, and she felt her eyes get a bit wet as she felt a warm happiness come over her. She put her arms around him, she held his eyes with hers and watched him gently make love to her.

MITCH LOOKED DOWN AT KILEY, her beautiful face inside a halo of her wicked mane of hair. Her eyes were open, watching him. He was inside her, he felt her gripping him, but he couldn't shake the sweat-dripping show they'd been given. The display of ecstasy that came from his wife that he'd never seen from her before. The idea that another man's organ, the size of it, was what it took to produce that from her. He looked at Kiley, unmoved by his erection inside her, enormously aware at her lack of passion, no display from her of any kind of excitement. She wasn't thrashing or squeaking, bucking, recoiling, or squirming away from him because his manhood was hurting her. She looked back at him, calmly, sweetly.

She was used to the fucking they'd just watched. That would be a normal night for her with her boyfriend. She was used to getting it from a cock that was at least more than twice the size of his. Did she look like Kate when she took it? She sure didn't lay there and mildly receive it like he saw right now, he was sure of that. She held his face with her hands, looking into him, he felt her grinding against him, it felt good to be inside her. But was he even making an impression?

He felt himself withering inside her and he was gripped with a sudden panic. He reached down and squeezed himself at the base trying to plump himself up. But it was too late. He could feel himself buckling and folding against her exterior as he tried to get it back inside her.

The room felt desperately quiet. Kiley sat herself up now, and was trying to stroke him back to hardness, he looked over at Kate, lazily watching, the jangling of Kiley's metal bracelets the only sound in the room. She watched her husband getting jerked by her best friend, him sitting back on his haunches looking back at her. She was absently stroking Omar's flaccid cock as it lay on her leg, pulling it, rolling his thick foreskin between her fingers. Kiley leaned him back, pushing him with her hand and lowered herself to put her mouth over him. He lay back on his elbows and watched her work on it under the cover of her thick mane.

He looked at Kate play with her new favourite thing, feeling so inadequate, overwhelmed by everything he'd seen tonight. He thought of Kate responding to Omar's touch, her gasps as he thrust into her, the ecstasy he gave her. The orgasm he gave her. Something Mitch had never done for her with his penis in his life.

It was over, he couldn't go on. This big adventure was at a close and he was alright with it. He lifted Kiley off him, and she looked at him troubled. She looked like she wanted to go on, didn't want to be stopped, but he knew he was done. He just shook his head at her and then hugged her. She put her arms around him. He looked at Kate and saw that she was asleep.

Shell Shocked

MITCH LAY on his side in the bed and watched Kate's back as she slept, the sun rising and putting a glow of yellow light across her. He watched her bare skin as she breathed. He took the edge of the grey cotton bed sheet and gently pulled it down trying not to wake her. She lay on her side, naked, her legs drawn up, and he looked at the soles of her little feet tucked up under her bottom.

He just wanted to squeeze her, to hold her and make everything better. If anything was even wrong. What he saw last night disgusted him but he couldn't deny that he was aroused by it. Hated himself for that. If what she was doing was wrong, and God, just wasn't it, then shouldn't he stop it? Was he enabling some sort of deviancy, some sort of mental illness? But maybe if she'd got what she'd wanted this would finally be all over.

He put his hand on her waist and felt her move with her breaths. He felt her soft skin and hated that another man had felt it just last night. She breathed in deeply and held it, turned her head up as she woke.

She groaned something, her eyes still closed, and put her hand over his hand. He said, Good morning and she lifted an arm up and put it behind her head, still half asleep. He looked at her big, naked breast exposed to him. He ran his hand up her side and over her breast and underarm wanting to erase all the spots that another man had touched.

She groaned again and he saw her frown, troubled. He saw a little glint of light reflect under her long eyelashes as she very slowly opened them.

She turned over to him, onto her back keeping her legs drawn up, her knees held together.

"How are you feeling?"

"Mm. My pussy is really sore," she said, her dry lips sticking together.

"Really. Is that really a thing?"

"Mm-hm," she said, eyes closed again.

"You seemed all right last night." He watched her left hand come up and rest on her belly just above her thatch of pubic hair.

She opened her heavy eyes and looked at the ceiling, still not quite awake. She looked over at him saw him looking at her, eyes trying to focus. She looked embarrassed.

"I'm all right," she said, and put her hand on his cheek. She kissed him and he kissed her back, said, Why don't you get washed up?

She looked down, and said, Yeah, I probably should. He caressed her face, rubbing his thumb over her cheekbone. "Let me run you a bath," he said.

"See if we have some epsom salts, that can sometimes help."

He thought about what that meant. Like she's taken some real big ones before. A little glimpse into the life of Kate Simon, the Kate before. Fuck me, why did that turn him on? He told her he would have some brought up, got up and into the bathroom and ran the hot water.

"Oh, and an aspirin too," she said from the bed, rolling back onto her side.

KATE GOT up and walked into the bathroom, between the marble counters lined down both sides and to the tub. She turned the water off and checked the temperature. He'd run it well and he'd left a glass jar of epsom salts someone must have brought up. There was a small square tin of aspirin too.

She padded over to the sink and looked at her naked body from mid-thigh up. Looked at herself in the mirror, and grinned wide, then broke into a laugh and covered her mouth. That was fucking crazy.

God, she thought, how fucking hot was that? She couldn't believe that it had been done. That she'd actually managed to get this thing done. She poured some cold water from the tap into a glass. She tapped out an aspirin from the tin and swallowed it. Mitch seemed a little shell-shocked this morning. She wondered how he'd taken it. Could she ask him? She wanted to. He would assume, or want to hear that her crazy little fire had been put out. Maybe it had. She hoped it had.

She put her hand down between her legs and felt herself. She was throbbing but somehow it felt so good too. It felt a bit like she'd been kicked with the toe of a boot or something, a dull ache that practically went up her backside.

She sat on the toilet to pee and it felt like it was hot turpentine coming out of her. She sucked air in through her teeth and gripped the roll of toilet paper, digging her nails into it. It gradually subsided, down to stinging needles at least, and she could get through that.

When she was in the tub she thought of Mitch with Kiley. Seeing her best friend put her husband's cock in her mouth, watch him climb onto her, and put himself inside her. She was okay with that. God, how she loved Kiley. They looked good together fucking, even as awkward as they were.

She put on a heavy white robe and walked out to the kitchen.

KILEY GOT up and looked out the window down to the beach, the shadows of the hotel stretching blue across the sand as the sun came up behind them. She turned and looked at Omar stretched wide out, bare on the bed, his legs bent into a number four. She shook her head at him laying there. That had been something, what she'd seen last night. She'd heard Kate with guys before, they were roommates for years. But seeing it happen was obviously a crazy new level. She'd been prepared for it, and frankly it was a little more than what was expected. She hoped it wasn't too much for Mitch. He was obviously affected by it. Not finishing. I mean, he couldn't think she wasn't attractive could he?

There were a million more likely things going through his head. He'd just seen his wife get the fucking of a lifetime by a bonafide stud. He probably wondered how could he fill up Kiley when he thought Kiley was used to a man like Omar. God what would he think about being with Kate now too, after what he'd seen? But she felt nothing for Omar. Hadn't been with him sexually in almost a year and a half. Had no intention to be with him now either. She had been obsessed with him when they met but it fizzled quickly. She really was just into the novelty of it. The sex was good, but painful really. And ultimately Omar was very aware of his size, and the sex mostly revolved around how great he thought that dick was. He could be an asshole too.

When he stuffed that thing into Kate last night, she did a quick emotion check on herself and was relieved she felt nothing. No jealousy. She had wondered how that might feel when they finally got down to it. She was happy for Kate that she somehow made this all work. Dangerous game though, Kate.

She liked fucking Mitch, but he was so stiff, so self-conscious. She'd hoped it would be better but she was glad she could do it for Kate. And for Mitch too. Didn't know how Kate could manage it though. If she loved Omar she couldn't share him. She wouldn't let Kate touch a man she loved no matter what she felt for Kate.

She picked some panties off the floor and slid them on under her nightshirt. She looked down again at Omar, watched him sleeping. She looked at his bare body. He did look good. She pulled the sheets up over him, covered that obscene manhood, and went to get something to eat.

Mitch was already up, she saw him standing out on the patio with a cup of tea in his hand. He was handsome, distinguished, staring out at the sea in the growing light. She felt a little wave of embarrassment come over her, felt her cheeks flush. She felt inadequate, aware that she'd failed at pleasing him. Such a strange thought but it made her realize she was going to be very uncomfortable when she first spoke to him today. She walked to the kitchen before he might turn and see her.

She ran the Nespresso machine, standing in front of it with her hands on the counter, her back to the kitchen. Listening to it hiss.

She heard Kate come in behind her and say good morning. Her coffee was ready but she just couldn't turn around and face her. She said, Hey, but it sounded maybe too quiet to hear. She felt Kate standing behind her looking at her, waiting for her. Finally she heard the soft sounds of her bare feet walk across the tile and out of the room.

What the fuck was that? Why couldn't she turn around and face her? She hadn't even seen that coming.

She felt a bit sick, took her coffee and sat on the couch in the living area. She could see Kate out there with Mitch now, talking to him. He kissed her, she smiled and laughed about something. She watched them talk a while as she sipped at her coffee. He was so happy with her. Looks like it all worked out for Kate.

When Kate was sixteen she'd turned up at Kiley's door in the Estate. Kiley's mom was the one who'd been there. Her mom had been upset about whatever Kate had told her and Kate never wanted to really say. But she'd run away about a hundred times before. Always in trouble. She'd lived with her best friend as a sister, sharing her room, for almost a year after that. Then she went home to her mum after her Dad had run off and didn't come back. Hard to believe this was Kate Simon on a patio in Cayman, sweet talking her handsome billionaire husband wearing nothing but an expensive terry robe. Then it fucking hit her. Jesus Christ of course it was, wasn't it? This or dead, and that made her smile.

Kate opened Mitch's robe and started kissing his chest. Kiley thought, Oh boy, and made to leave but the thought of going back in with Omar right now this morning was worse. She turned in the couch but couldn't help peeking to the side. She could see Kate kneeling, hidden in his robe, her head with her wet hair over her collar twisting on him. Her hands holding the back of his knees. She saw Mitch from the side, his head back, then quickly thrusting down, chin to his chest. She watched them go like that for a while until he buckled, finishing in his wife's mouth. Kate doing the job Kiley couldn't do.

She turned back and put the television on. One more look over her shoulder and she saw Kate smiling, wiping her mouth, her robe open now, the little dark thatch of her hair between her legs. Mitch looking at her, the love for her in his face. Kate said something to him over her shoulder, waving her fingers as she came back in and went to the kitchen.

KILEY WAS WATCHING the news with the sound turned low, curled up on the couch with her coffee as Kate came back in, tying the belt around her robe. She wanted to say something to Kiley, make sure she was okay, but she wasn't sure how to start. That was a lot for Kiley to take in last night. They'd been roomies and heard each other with men every once in a while over the years. Well, Kiley heard it more than Kate. But while Kate had no feeling seeing Mitch get between Kiley's legs and put himself inside her, maybe Kiley was given a show that was a bit too extreme. X-rated as it were. She felt a bit embarrassed that it was just her and Omar who were vocal, who had really surrendered to it. She thought that Kiley and Mitch would at least have had some success. What had she looked like to them? She hoped it was alright.

She heard the bedroom door open down the hall and bristled. Now she had to face him as well. Omar came into the kitchen with a grin, wearing a pair of faded boxers and a t-shirt. He said good morning to her, his eyes travelling from hers down to her bare feet. She felt strangely naked in front of him, just a loosely tied belt keeping her robe from opening and exposing everything to him. She smiled at him, a little bashful. He put his hand on her cheek, and she leaned into it but couldn't look at him.

"You look beautiful," he said.

She held his wrist, felt a little uncomfortable, a little too intimate being affectionate like that, barely dressed and so close. And Mitch was just out on the patio, he wouldn't want to see this.

She turned her back to him and poured a coffee, then one for him.

"So what happens today?" He leaned on the counter next to her.

"I think we can do whatever we want now," she said. He smiled, still staring. She didn't mean anything.

"Maybe we could just stay on the beach today."

"Yeah, I'd like that," she said, brushing a strand of wet hair back behind her ear.

"Good," he said, energetically, pleased with the news. He went to the fridge and opened it, picked out a carton of half and half. She looked at him, how trim he was, his muscular arms. He walked back and asked her if she'd like cream. She shook her head, but she'd been watching the movement behind his boxers, the swinging against the fabric she could see while he walked.

He took a sip of his coffee, leaning on an elbow on the high counter next to her. Not saying anything, but watching her. It made her so nervous.

"Mitch is just out on the patio," she said.

"He likes to watch, yes?" She felt him touch the corner of her robe where it met her thigh and she flinched. He pulled back a corner, the thick terry snagging on the belt and leaving a narrow gap where her thighs came together. She felt the cold there, damp against her, knowing her mound was exposed.

He brushed her cheek, said, "We can show him many more things now that we're lovers. Make him crazy." She shivered at the thought.

He let his hand slowly fall between her legs, touched her lightly there and she opened up for him. He ran his big finger along her, parting her puckered folds, working her apart easily.

He brought his finger up and touched her lip very softly, and she felt the wet against it. He picked up his coffee, said it again, "Make him crazy," and walked back to his room.

Kate adjusted the front of the robe, covered herself up. Stood there, for a minute, waiting. She didn't know where to go.

Alone

THE BALL HOOKED into the palm trees over by the snack venue and disappeared into the brush without a sound. For fuck's sake, he said out loud.

No one around to hear him, Mitch had gone out on his own. The foursome ahead of him had asked him to join in but he politely declined. Then the ones behind did the same.

He needed alone time. Just a little time away. He'd only been out on a course once this year, just not as much free time as he used to. He thought he'd pretty much given up on golf, noticed his clubs before they'd come here, about a week ago, noticed the film of dust that was on them. He just needed something to do to get away from them all. Get the hell out of that suite.

He told Kate he was going to come out, play a round, see if he could get a tee time. She said he should ask Omar to go along. The fucking nerve. What was that? So he just left without saying anything to anyone, slipped out the door and closed it behind him. He felt free, weightless on the drive here. It was kind of liberating to just go do something, no one knowing where the fuck you were. Even if it was just down the street for nine holes.

He'd skipped the course at the resort and drove down to another course, just in case Kate would send Omar down to catch up with him or something. It was one thing to allow your wife to have a lover, but he wasn't going to be able to be friendly with Omar. Omar was like an object to him. Hopefully to Kate too. Her sexy plaything that was part of their lovemaking. Mitch's and Kate's.

He figured the worst was over, this business with Kate. He'd got himself through it all right he thought. That was horrible though. Kate was on him this morning, going down on him on the balcony while he had his tea. It felt nice to have her back.

Mitch didn't get a cart, wanted to walk around a bit today, shake some of the creaks out. He got down to the bushes where he'd seen the ball go and started poking around underneath them, lifting up the branches with his seven iron. A seven would get him to the green as long as he found his fucking ball.

He heard two voices around the other side of the little cabana where they served cold drinks, even alcoholic ones. A full-figured young girl came around, black vest over a white dress shirt, shorts. A server.

"Looking for this?" she said, smiling, holding out a golf ball in her thumb and forefinger.

"Callaway Seven?" he said, but knew it was his.

She looked at it and handed it to him.

"I didn't get anybody with it did I?"

She walked backwards to her little hut, laughing, said "It went off a few trees like a pinball, but everyone's okay. Care for a drink?"

He did. "I'll be by, just let me play out of here."

He watched her walk around and open a little door to the bar. He threw his ball out into the rough.

He hoped that the big thing Omar had between his legs had exorcised Kate's demon and that things could return to normal. As surprisingly erotic and arousing as he had found it, what he had witnessed had a profound effect on him. Challenged all of his sexual confidence. Moving on from here, being intimate with his wife could feel a little tricky.

He'd never seen Kate like that. Literally, not philosophically. He'd never watched himself penetrate her, had never seen her sex spread by a penis. The first time was last night, and she had been spread wide by a penis so large that she squealed as it went in. He saw another man push it into her hairy mound—something he thought of as his, existentially belonging to him—split her, force her dark lips apart and pull her pink insides out with it as he fucked her.

He walked out to his ball and leaned on his club, waited for the foursome to clear off the green. He couldn't deny though that a part of him felt truly happy for her. Happy that she experienced something that gave her so much pleasure. Maybe he shouldn't have been there to see it. That would have been far worse though, wouldn't it? Intimate, too personal. As disgusting as it was it was better than to be separated from it.

The next time they made love was going to be a big hurdle. He didn't really look forward to it. What if it was a repeat of his performance with Kiley? The mental connection to his intimacy with Kate could be shaken. He'd seen some things that just couldn't be erased. He had to push thoughts like that out of his mind, he knew that. Just considering it could allow it to come in and challenge him at the worst possible time.

He focused on his ball, wiggled, pushed everything away, swung through, felt a satisfying power in his contact with the little Callaway Seven. He watched it arc tall and straight, drop on the green and roll a dozen feet. Just a short little tap to the hole. That's it, keep your head in the game Mitch.

Six years with Kate. Six wonderful, loving years. Deep down under her surface he figured he always knew what was lurking. It was, in many ways, what had attracted him to her. The darkness she held inside, her attraction to destruction.

KATE LOOKED out over the grounds from the patio but she didn't see him out there. He must have gone golfing. Maybe he said bye at the door and no one heard him. She hoped so. He was fine this morning. He seemed like he'd come through okay. He ran her bath, and when she went down on him he came pretty fast. He had seemed light and happy.

She shrugged it off. He'd been fine. He's just gone golfing.

At ten o'clock she'd got dressed and had some breakfast by herself. Kiley was still on the couch out in the main room and Kate listened to the television while she ate. Omar was still in bed. She could go shopping, get herself out of here, spend half a day walking around the boutiques down Seven Mile. She'd like it if she could just go in and sit with Kiley like nothing happened. She might have put Kiley through the wringer last night.

She came out to the patio feeling like the silence in there was feeling a bit too heavy, a bit too obvious.

The last she'd spent time with Kiley was the week after she'd come out of the hospital. Kiley flew in from Chicago and stayed at their place in Campden Hill, living out of her suitcase but sleeping on the couch in Mitch's home office.

They'd stay up late with a bottle of wine and talk about old times. Flick through pictures of themselves in school, just ten years ago but they seemed like different people. They looked like different people.

Kate felt Kiley's arms come around her from behind and hug her, resting her head on her shoulder. She swelled with relief, glad her friend was okay.

"How are you, pet?"

"I'm good," she said.

"Are you sure?"

"I'm just feeling a bit weird this morning."

"You and me both," Kate said, putting her hands up to hold Kiley's slight wrists.

"Sorry, I don't want things to be weird."

"I get it. We'll take our time." She turned around and faced her. She felt a little uncomfortable, face to face, so close. She felt ashamed. Or felt like Kiley was ashamed for her maybe.

Kate took a seat on the edge of a lounge, sat with her hands in her lap. Kiley sat down across from her, shoulders up, hands on the wooden edge, looking out over the Sea.

"Are you still okay with it? Me with Mitch," she said.

"Yeah, of course." Kate looked out over the water with her, waited a minute. "Was I too much?"

Kiley laughed softly, said, "Well, I don't know. It was, you know, great. Intense."

"What do you think Mitch is feeling?"

"I don't know. I can't imagine. I saw you two on the balcony this morning."

"Sorry."

"No, no. I was glad. You two were...you seemed good."

"Do you think he liked it? Me with Omar—in any way?"

"I don't know. I wouldn't." She sat up straight, fluffed up her hair, looked right at her.

"Did he look away?"

She was quiet for a moment. "No, not once actually."

Kate was patient, letting her think about it. "I think he doesn't want to like it."

"But he does?" Kiley sat back crossed her legs. "When it was happening—Kate, it was extreme—I don't know how he could watch it, but he..." she leaned forward and whispered, "he was hard the whole time."

Kate nodded.

"Did you like it? With Omar. I mean, I know what I saw..."

"Yes, I did indeed. I was holding back too. But yes, it was—"

"Overwhelming?"

"Yeah. You're still okay with it?"

"You with Omar? Yeah, right as rain."

"You sure?"

"Just cause you can't stop thinking about him doesn't mean I can't. I don't think I've even touched him since we got here."

"I'm glad."

KILEY WAS FEELING BETTER, glad she'd breached that awkward silence with Kate. Coming into this had been a strange endeavour. Her best friend wanted a particular sexual experience. Wanted Kiley to help her. Talk it out with her. Mitch had a little shortcoming Kate thought. That was fair enough, she considered. Kate had thought of maybe bringing multiple partners into their relationship. For Mitch as well as her. Kiley got that, people did do that. Later when Kate tested the waters, hinted around finding someone they could trust and the like, Kiley picked up on it. Thought about it carefully: is that what Kate was hinting at it? She offered to Kate, days later, asked her Would you trust me? Kate was relieved, said of course she would, and Kiley felt glad for her. Kate asked her about the guy she'd dated previous, the one whose picture she'd sent. Kiley was embarrassed that she'd sent it, had hoped Kate forgot about it. She wasn't the kind of girl who did that with her friends. But she was in a different place at the time, sexually charged by her brief relationship with Omar. And that picture—Omar's size was definitely noteworthy.

Then the ball was rolling, Kate putting plans into action. Now here she was sat in a real mess, she felt like. Seeing her friend like that, and having her husband, Kiley's own good friend, inside her. It worked better as a conversation about a future possibility, and it was frankly quite ugly in practice. She felt for Mitch. Did he like it? Did he hate it? How could a man like it, seeing his wife like that? It felt like a little more than she had bargained for when she offered. Maybe she had pictured something nicer, maybe less pornographic. She'd had one threesome a long time ago, a foursome too, one summer in Spain after college. Those times had been hot, but also...loving. They were tender experiences, everyone involved was gentle, touching, exploring, teasing. High on Molly though.

She looked at her friend, sitting next to her looking up at the overcast sky, broad and blank—she was lost in thought. Her lucky friend, who always got what she wanted. Made it happen for herself. Never afraid of consequences. Her multi-million pound apartment near Notting Hill, Bentley, Range Rover, jewelry, Chanel...and when that wasn't enough? When she wanted to have sex with a well-hung stud—she got that too. She was amazing.

Kate asked her, without turning, still looking out off the balcony, “What if I want to see if Mitch liked it?”

“How'd you mean?”

“Like maybe I want to push him farther.”

Kiley covered her whole face with her hands, spoke through them, “Push him farther than last night?”

Kate didn't answer, just kept watching the sky above the sea. Grey today, dull but warm.

Kiley thought about it a moment. Kate always loved chaos. She acted like she hated it, like she couldn't believe these terrible things always happened to her. But she brought it on herself. “Are you sure you want to do that?”

“No, but I want to know.”

“Just ask him, Kate.”

“Mitch isn't like that, you know how he is. If I asked him he'd say of course not, that's crazy. But if I showed him? Watched him react?”

“But what does it matter?”

“I want him to like it.”

KATE PUT a pale pink caftan with an embroidered collar over her head and shimmied into it. She looked at herself in the long wide mirrored vanity in her bathroom. She turned, checking herself out over her shoulder. The coverup was silky and she could see the dark shapes of her bikini underneath. She put her sunglasses up on her head, picked up her towel and went down the hall.

“Well,” she said, “shall we go?”

Omar was sitting in the wing back chair, the same as last night when she’d helped peel his shorts down and been a breath away from the huge thing she’d been fantasizing about for months. She felt a little shaken seeing him sitting in the same chair, in the same manner, even though he was fully clothed. Although he was wearing those revealing swimming briefs again. Omar clicked the television off and got up, dramatically relieved that they were finally going.

“Well, it’s been a few hours, he can’t be much longer. He’ll be back any minute,” Kiley said, standing at the bar in a long T-shirt, bikini underneath.

“He’ll find us,” Kate said.

Omar picked up his towel as Kiley walked over. Kiley looked down at his skimpy trunks, his bulge large and obvious, just below the bottom of his striped short-sleeve shirt. “It’s not that warm out there. You’re wearing those trunks?”

“It is warm. Not sunny. I’m going into the ocean.”

Kiley looked at him, expressionless. “The sea.”

Omar held his hand up, dismissing her and walked to the door. “It’s all the same water.”

“The ocean is past the sea,” Kiley said.

“All the same water.”

Mitch had been gone for about five hours now. No call, nothing. His phone was in the bedroom. She wasn’t desperate enough to go looking for him, but she did feel a bit of worry creeping around the edges. This wasn’t really like him.

“Let’s go,” Kate said, her mind made up. She wanted to get out of the suite too.

“You sure?” Kiley looked a bit upset, standing there on the edges of her feet, one arm across her, gripping the other elbow.

“I just want to go have some fun, Kiley,” she said.

“Maybe I could stay here and we’ll join up with you.”

“That’s a great idea—stay here and Omar and I can go down together. You and Mitch can catch up when he gets home.”

Kiley stood thinking for a moment, looked at Omar, looked over at Kate, then said, “Naw, I’ll just come along. I’ll leave him a note.”

“You don’t have to love, stay for him. He’d like that.”

Kiley went back to the bar and scrawled out a big note for him on a hotel letterhead pad. “It’s done. Let’s just go,” she said, slapping the pen down on the bar with finality and caught back up with them.

MITCH STOPPED for a cold one in the bar off the lobby before he headed up to the room. He felt a lot better. Looser. He just played the nine one time, then went and had a drink at the bar where his ball had been retrieved.

He’d missed lunch but he figured he’d take them all out for an early dinner, maybe try something new somewhere along Seven Mile. He’d helped himself to some of the peanuts at the bar to help him through.

He got to the suite, walked through and saw that it was empty. He went to the bar and found there was a scrap of paper with Kiley’s very feminine handwriting on it, said: Hey Mitch, we’re all down at the beach, come and join us! Love you.

He poured himself a gin and tonic, even cutting a real lemon, noticed the colour he’d got on his arms at the course today. He took it into the bath with him and ran a hot shower, kicked off his golf clothes and got in with his drink. He put his head under the water and stood like that a good while feeling the water running down him.

After he’d towelled off he put on some shorts and a T-shirt, grabbed a towel and headed back to the kitchen. He called downstairs and arranged for some dinner reservations, told them somewhere really nice, 5 P.M.

He went out to the patio and saw that it had got cloudy. He looked down at the beach and it wasn’t that busy. He got the binoculars and looked around. There were people at the pool, and around the resort, but only a handful of people in the water. He saw them finally, the three of them over by the loungers in the sand, the only ones out there. Kiley was standing and talking with Kate as she sat on the lounge. Omar was next to her in a lounge that was pushed right up next to hers.

Wasn't sure it really looked like it might be worth going down, maybe they'd head up soon anyway. Kiley was counting the fingers on one hand, getting some instructions from Kate. Nodding, laughing, then walking off, the wind blowing her hair right across her face as she walked out of the binoculars.

He took a sip of his drink, looked around the binoculars and saw Kiley crossing the resort. He put them back up and watched Kate and Omar talking.

They looked like two teenage girls, both sitting side by side on their backs, up on their elbows, chatting away, smiling, talking with their hands. They looked a little close and he felt his neck tighten a bit. He didn't like it much.

Kate leaned over really close to him and said something in his ear. Or did she kiss him? She sat back again and looked at him, her pink caftan ruffling in the wind. She put her hand on his hip. He was wearing those little white swimming briefs again. She slid her hand down between his legs, over his bulge, caressed it. She put her hand over it, squeezed it, bigger than her outstretched hand. Mitch felt the sweat on his upper lip.

OMAR LOOKED into Kate's eyes while she spoke to him and he thought she was absolutely out of this world. Glasses up in her hair, her long eyelashes, her flawless skin, shining hair.

"I thought she was never going to get out of here," she said. She had her hand on him rubbing him through his swim trunks.

"She'll be back," he said. "I need to take my time with you."

"So what's your family like? Where do you come from?" Scratching her nails along his length, he could feel himself beginning to push against the fabric.

"I'm named Omar after my grandfather. He came to Paris from Morocco in the fifties and worked at a shipyard. My Dad was also Omar."

"How did he meet your mom?" She was gripping his sack now, squeezing his balls.

“He was an art student at University and she was from America, studying abroad.”

“Did they ever marry?”

“No,” he said, “But they lived together until I was seven.”

“Did she raise you?” He looked down and could see right inside his trunks, the waistband pulled out as he got hard, his cock pushing out in a direction trapped in fabric.

“Yes,” he said. She was looking into the gap at his waistband and she slid her open palm along his belly and put her fingers around his bare cock, squeezed him, released him from the briefs.

“Because she was blonde and pretty and she spoke English she got a good job at Euro Disney—” She pulled his cock out, straight up and flat against his belly, his waistband pinching the underside about halfway. “Disneyland Paris. That was when I think I was eight.”

She ran her fingers up it and over the ruffled skin at the end. She put her finger into his foreskin and circled the tip. She wasn’t looking at him, just watching her finger stretch his foreskin from the inside.

“Did she ever meet anyone else?”

He lifted his knee so some of the swimmers farther down wouldn’t see. “Not when I was at home. She lives with a man now.” She was getting him crazy.

“And you always worked on engines?” Pulling now on his foreskin.

“Yes. Always.” A clear line of fluid spilled out of the folds of his foreskin and onto his belly.

“I love your big hands.” She used two fingers to pull it back from the head and then started tracing the tip of her finger over its swelling edges.

“Do you like the feel of them on you?”

“I love feeling them on me. I like how you make me feel so small.”

He was almost fully hard, up past his belly button. She ran her fingers in circles over his sensitive spot on the underside, just where the head met the shaft and he was engorged, the purple-grey head glistening.

He was breathing fast now.

“You want to fuck me again, don’t you?” she said.

“I’m going to fuck you again,” gently thrusting himself against her fingers.

“What are you going to do to me?”

“You’re going to beg me to keep doing it.”

“You are going to fuck me again. You’re going to fuck me until I beg you to stop.”

She looked at him, smiling, and sat back, grabbed her towel and threw it over him, covering him up.

“Thanks, love,” she said, and Kiley was behind him with a couple of drinks, handing them to her. He bunched the towel up to make sure he was covered and smiled over at Kiley. She sat down next to Kate, giving him a blank look.

He put his head back in the chair and listened to the two girls talk. Felt himself fading away under the towel, felt his balls ache. He thought about what she said and how he couldn’t wait to hold her down and make her beg him to stop.

MITCH WOKE up and noticed Kate wasn't in bed with him at around one thirty in the morning. He felt around at first in case she'd just got herself off to the edge of the king size. Her spot wasn't even warm. He opened his eyes and looked up at the ceiling, wondered where she was.

He'd watched his wife play with Omar's cock from the balcony, pull it out on a public beach in the daytime and tease him. Probably drove Omar crazy too. Put an ache in his balls. Mitch was familiar with that. The crazy Kate he'd met at a bookshop in London. She was so sexy, so obviously sexual he had thought, that he was far too intimidated to even consider talking to her. But Kate caught him looking and worked her way over to him, and he knew she was coming. Like he was being stalked. He was frozen when she spoke to him, stuttered like a schoolboy when he replied. Couldn't believe he was talking to her, really. Felt lucky.

He fell for her hard. She was beautiful, smart, sexy. And dirty. He'd found that out soon enough. That was the Kate he fell in love with that day that he saw down there touching another man. The twenty-one-year-old sexually confident bookshop tigress on the prowl. It killed him that he wasn't her prey this time.

He got up and walked around the bedroom and checked the bathroom but the light wasn't even on. He went out in his boxers and his T-shirt and walked down the hall to the living area. He could hear the television.

He saw Kate laying on the couch with her legs up on it, lit in blue light from the flash of the plasma screen. He watched her for a moment as she lay there awake, watching a Housewives of something.

“Can’t sleep?”

She looked up, startled, not expecting him. “Shit, Mitch—don’t sneak around like that.”

He laughed at her and came into the room, sat at the end of the couch and put her legs up on his lap. “What’s up?”

“I was just laying there with my eyes open and I couldn’t get to sleep. I would’ve turned the TV on in there but I didn’t want to wake you.”

“Why do you watch this shit?”

“I was minding my business out here.”

Mitch held one of her feet and pushed his knuckles gently against the sole. It was absent but still purposeful, he knew what she liked and she would let him know with the flexing of her toes.

“That’s better,” she said.

THERE WAS a presence in the dark hall, looming there, hesitant. Mitch’s heart pounded in a start and he flinched. Kate looked over too.

“Jesus,” Mitch said.

“Didn’t mean to startle you,” Omar said, with a slight wave of his open palms, like he was showing he was unarmed. He smiled then, somewhat amused that he’d given them a start. Kate laughed too and sat up.

Omar said he hoped he wasn’t disturbing them and Mitch watched Kate answer him graciously, gushingly, like a schoolgirl. She invited him to watch TV with them.

Omar looked to the armchair laden with dirty laundry and went to it but Kate stopped him. She scooted herself next to Mitch and patted the sofa next to her where her head had just been laying.

“No, come sit with us,” she said. Mitch watched Omar come sit next to Kate, smiling, her smiling back at him. She sat between them now on the little couch really meant for two. Mitch pushed himself into the corner of the couch to make more room for Kate. He looked at her, just her profile as she chatted politely with Omar almost oblivious to Mitch now. She preened her hair while she talked with him, Mitch could sense her discomfort at her appearance. No makeup, unwashed hair in a ponytail, sitting braless in a tank and pyjama shorts.

They watched TV together like that for a bit, the three of them perched on the couch facing forward, somewhat uncomfortably. As the show wore on their postures began to sag. Kate looked sleepy and Mitch watched her turn and say something to Omar, he looked at her and nodded, lifting his arm putting it around behind her to rest along the back of the couch. She leaned into him and lay sideways against him drawing her feet up and putting the cold little soles of her feet against the outside of Mitch's thigh.

He watched her hand deliberately move up to balance this new position coming to rest on Omar's leg. A hollow dread filled Mitch's belly and something else, maybe a sadness, but it came with a strange prostatic surge, a sexual feeling between his legs. He was going to get hard. He looked at her pale white hand, palm down on Omar's dark leg, closer to his hip than his knee. This was Kate when she was aroused. She would start with Mitch this way sometimes. The casual placement of the hand meant to excite. Not so casual though—she knew what she was doing, he thought. He could feel himself start to stiffen and he plucked at his shorts to make some room, not wanting to be discovered.

They watched TV like that for another few minutes, the pulse hard in his neck, breath shortened, and his erection sitting up straight and hard. He would glance over and look at her pretty profile watching TV, her head nestled into Omar's trunk, just below his chest. Her hand rested on his leg. Was this move working on him too, was he getting hard?

Kate shifted down towards Mitch again, her butt up against his hip. She lowered her head on Omar and he slouched so she could lay against his stomach now. Her head sat just above the waistband of his shorts and her hand came up to rest at the top of his thigh. What was she doing? Mitch hardened painfully.

Kate lifted her top leg and placed her foot in his lap, wanting it to be rubbed. He looked down and the weight of her foot had tightened the fabric of his shorts against his upright cock. The pointy tip looking so small pushing up against the strain. He lifted her foot up and began to work his knuckles over the soles again. She flexed her toes and wiggled her heel in pleasure as he rubbed. The heel of her foot tapped the tip of his dick and she noticed. He looked down and could see a spreading semen stain, dark blue against the sky blue cotton. Her heel touched it again, confirming it. She manipulated him through his shorts with her heel, pressing his dick hard into him and moving herself in circles against it. She looked over her shoulder at him and stopped moving her foot.

“Why are you so hard?”

Omar looked over. Mitch could feel his face flush. He was embarrassed, unable to answer. He struggled to comprehend why she would say that out loud.

“I, uh...” Kate sat up next to him. She was smiling coyly at him, not looking at him, but down at his shorts. She put her hand between his legs and ran her finger up him.

“Did I do that to you?” she said.

Mitch was amazed. This was just not the Kate he thought he knew. She turned to Omar and asked him if he was hard too. Omar chuckled and said he wasn’t, then added, Not yet. Kate leaned into Mitch, hugging him, her head resting on his chest now. Her hand parted the fly front of his boxers and the end of his dick was out. She stroked the sides of it with her thumb and finger.

“Show me yours,” she said, looking at Omar.

Omar looked back blankly at the two of them huddled into the opposite corner of the couch for a moment. With one hand he reached into his shorts and pulled out his cock. It flopped heavily over his waistband, bounced off his thigh and came to rest between his legs cradled by his shorts. Kate gripped Mitch hard now and Mitch could feel semen surge from his tip. Omar sat looking at them with one arm over the back of the couch, the other over the arm, his large flaccid cock confidently presented to them.

“Well, I’m a little sore tonight, but I’d like to see where this could go.”

Omar took his dick in his right hand and began to stroke it. It swung around in his grip, sleepily. Kate pushed Mitch’s shorts down and exposed him to the light. He was so aware of his size like that, the woman he loved sitting next to him while he was aroused but she watched another man stroke his own large organ.

Kate put her hand back on him and started to stroke lightly again. She told Omar she could see he was getting harder and it made more semen flow from Mitch. Kate had to be aware, her pace quickening on him with the added lubrication.

Omar was getting hard. The head of his cock engorged, the careless flopping replaced with a sexual rigidity. Mitch could feel Kate move her left hand down and between her legs. She was mashing her pyjama bottoms into herself and grinding her hips against her finger's movement. He looked down at her chest heaving.

Kate stretched her leg out down the couch and put her foot in Omar's lap and then put her sole along his length.

"You're longer than my foot," she said. She pushed it against his thigh with her sole, arching her toes, pressing them into it just below his glans. She rubbed at him clumsily, pulling back his wrinkled sleeve with her first two toes. Her pace had stopped on Mitch but she still held him. Mitch looked down at his narrow dick looking so small even in her girlish little hand.

Omar took his up in his hand again and started to stroke himself while Kate watched. He asked her, "Do you want to watch me come?" Mitch felt her head nod.

"Do you like it when a man comes a lot?"

"I do." Kate's voice was quiet, maybe embarrassed. She seemed hypnotized watching his hand on his cock. "I take it as a compliment if he comes a lot. I like to get painted." Even Omar was aroused by that. He started earnestly working his cock now, slowly still but with purpose. He was going to come for her.

Painted? She had her own phrase for being come on. She liked being come on, she said. Mitch had never really come on her, he didn't really produce much and it was rarely forceful at all. He didn't make a big show about it when he came. Did she like that sort of thing? Mitch couldn't believe she'd ever considered it.

Kate sat up between them and pulled her shirt up over her head and her big breasts swung around at them. She laid back against the couch and flipped her ponytail back. She caressed her breasts gently now, pushing them together, her pink nipples tightened and erect.

"I want you to come on me. I want to feel you both come all over me."

Omar stood up and pulled his shorts down, Mitch could see that his wife was looking at his cock swinging stiffly between his legs, hard but hanging downwards. It looked as big as Kate's forearm. It was every guy's nightmare. That this thing could exist, be experienced by a woman you love. He pulled his shirt off over his head.

He stood confidently before them, fit, trim, masculine. He knelt on the couch, one foot still on the floor. His cock looked enormous hanging next to her. He started to stroke it and she watched it, held out in front of her, over her chest. Mitch could see his balls swinging even though he was rock hard. Mitch brought himself up to kneel next to Kate too, stroking himself. His dick didn't look much longer than his own fist, his balls pulled up tight with arousal, barely even there. Kate put her hands between his legs and her fingernails gently scratched at his raisin-shrunk scrotum but she wasn't looking at him. Kate was looking down at Omar's long, thick cock, big even in his own masculine hand. Omar was working it, stroking the end half, a little twist, or flourish, to the end of each stroke. Kate's hand came up and cradled his balls. They were big in her grip like two large hard-boiled eggs.

Mitch jerked himself too, it was standing upright, pointing to the ceiling. He tried to look at this through Kate's eyes. Another man's impressive manhood presented to her, thick and heavy-veined, foreskin rolling up over the tip with each stroke. He thought about how she was turned on by it, this ugly scene. He tasted jealousy somewhere deep inside—how she didn't even look at his held out for her.

She pushed her chest out to them, an offering, a surface for them to show her their filth. He wanted to stop, hated himself that he knew he couldn't. He wanted to see her defiled because she wanted it.

"I want to see them together," she said. She took both their organs in her hands and took over for them, jerking them, watching them. "Look at this monster," she said, her Council accent creeping in. Her hand looked very small on Omar, her grip spread wide as she got closer to the base, her fingers couldn't come together. Mitch's not even twice as long as her fist. She squeezed them, pulled them in towards each other until the supple tips mashed into each other. She bit her lip as she held them, assessing them. Omar's plump glans dwarfed him, three or four times bigger, and the sight of it, the revelation presented to his wife made him sick. Her lover and her husband, their ridiculous disparity, obvious for all three of them. Her expression, her lust for it, drove him crazy. This huge, impressive thing had been inside his wife; she had come from it.

"Are you going to make this beautiful thing come for me?" She was gripping just the head of it now, running her fingers around it, squeezing it, sliding her thumb into the channel of his hole.

She looked up at Omar's face for a moment and bit her lower lip. She let them both go and lay back again, reached out for their balls. She arched her back and Mitch could see she was levigating her sex into her heel tucked up underneath her. She was drunk with arousal. She squeezed Omar's balls hard and Omar groaned.

Kate squeezed again, much harder it seemed. She said, "I'm going to squeeze every drop out of these huge balls." Omar doubled in pain, his chest and head leaning over top of her now. He let out a cry that turned to a growl.

"Ah, merde," he said, "Fuck, I'm going to come." He stroked harder and placed his hole right over her nipple. She raised her breast up to it. All three watched him. Watched the plump cock head slide around on her clenched bud. Kate's breaths were coming as rapidly as Omar's. For a moment Mitch thought it might not happen but then Omar made a brief exclamation and he let out a slick sounding stream of cum that skipped off her nipple and flopped across her other breast.

Kate let go of their balls and used her arms to scoop up her breasts and squeeze them together to make it easier for Omar to come on. Mitch was horrified at how overcome Kate was by it all. Omar furiously jerked himself off on her now. He held the back of Kate's head with his left hand and let a stream of come onto her neck just at her jawline. Kate didn't even close her eyes. She gritted her teeth and said, That's it baby, come all over me. And he did. Come swung from the tip of his dick and splashed in spots all along her clavicle and collar. He dropped his dick onto her slippery tits, made them ripple with its weight, and it still was surging from him. His left hand moved to clasp around her neck tightly almost choking her and he gripped his cock just as hard with the other, strangling the last of his come out of it. He let out another growl and a final stream spurt from him and went down her cleavage. Kate was still gyrating herself into her heel, and Mitch thought she might be coming. She just kept saying Yeah over and over while he did it and biting and sucking on her own lips. She was definitely acting like she was the one coming. Mitch was overcome with a dreadful grief at the sight of her covered in Omar's semen, his big cock draped now across her cum-slick breasts, and her ecstatic upturned face.

SHE FELT DISGUSTED, terrible at the thought of what she must look like if she could see herself. But it felt like there was a fire in her belly, she felt like she could come again right now, a third time, with a touch. She could feel the weight of Omar's manhood across her soft breasts, felt it slippery against her skin, wet with his semen. She felt so ashamed that this would turn her on. That this could give her an orgasm. But it did, and that was a fact. It was horrible but now she knew. And now Mitch knew.

Mitch was jerking himself hard like he was almost ready. "Come on, Mitch," she told him. Omar slumped back next to her and she wrapped her hand around his half-hard cock dangling between his legs. She stroked it gently downward, soothing it. She looked down and saw a milky stream come out of him, more drops beading on the couch beneath it. Would those stains come out? How do you explain it to housekeeping? She missed Mitch's orgasm but saw that he had come, spittle flinging from his knuckle. He grunted and tried to push out more onto her and then sat back exhausted. She could tell by his expression that he was having trouble with this. He looked a little horrified but in typical Mitch fashion was keeping it all sewn up inside.

She looked down at herself, at the mess on her chest and felt a little ashamed too. She cupped her breasts, held them up a little against her, asked Omar to pass her her shirt.

When she looked up she saw that Kiley was standing in the hall as well, watching. Kate was a little startled, felt like she'd been caught doing something. But everyone here was an adult, right? It was all okay.

Kiley quietly said, "That was...hot." She stood there, leaning on the wall, she had a little yogurt container in her hand. She was quiet a moment, held up the yogurt, presented it to them, said, "Just a little hungry, came out to get...you know." She turned around and faded into the dark hall.

Evening Out

MITCH TOOK her out in the morning and they had a fantastic breakfast in George Town. The place wasn't on the water but the food really was as great as the reviews they'd read. Then they went and walked around the National Museum. Mitch had wanted to see the new McCoy collection and he loved it. It was pretty colourful but she was dying from the heat. She'd needed to dress up a bit for the restaurant, she didn't have anything brought with her to wear. She bought a little Gucci dress at a shop in West Shore, just outside the resort. It was literally clinging to her right now. It wasn't fifty degrees out when she'd bought it and now she felt it scratching at her skin.

It was humid, oppressive, where you could feel the wet heat in your nose and mouth as you breathed it in. But it was beautiful out, scorching sun coming in through the open Jeep, brilliant blue sky.

Kate touched the hem of the pink dress where it clung to her mid-thigh. Saw the sheen on the skin of her legs. This heat might make her crazy.

She watched Mitch as he drove, the wind coming in the open top and rustling his wavy hair. She'd shown him last night. He didn't squirm away, he didn't break down. He took it. He participated. He was hard. She'd held them together, their cocks, kissed their tips together. Mitch had let her. Anything could have happened last night. She'd shown him how dark she could go. He didn't grab her by her hair and drag her out the door and close it behind her, yelled through it that he never wanted to see her face again. That had happened once in another lifetime. He didn't slap her, call her a whore. He watched her do it as she put herself on display for him, demonstrated who she really was. He didn't jump for joy, but he made the best of it.

When she woke up this morning she felt so ashamed of herself. She stared at the ceiling while she listened to Mitch sleeping, breathing next to her. She held on to the moment, stretched it out, the longer it lasted the longer they were still together, still okay. She dreaded him waking. When he did, he just put his arm around her and pulled her to him. She kissed him and felt something so enormous for him, like something she couldn't contain. She kissed him passionately, felt her eyes well up. He held her, and she pushed herself into him, wanting to feel him against every part of her. They'd slept in like that another hour almost, him holding her lovingly, still dirtied from the night before. She could smell the semen in her creases.

Kate felt her badness building again. She could sometimes go months without it coming, she was like a different person in that time. Clear-minded, productive. She could function like everyone else. Then the darkness would come. But she hoped that it would always come. She loved that feeling, she wanted it. When it arrived she always welcomed it.

KILEY LAY fully spread out on the putty coloured couch in the living area, feeling the chill of the air conditioning on her bare legs. She could see out to the patio past the tips of her toes that Omar was out there. Looked like he was sleeping. She looked up at the high, vaulted ceiling, the fronds of a palm hanging over her. Good old Mitch, she thought. She knew he came from money but that he was a bit of an outsider to the rest of his family. Knew that he'd worked incredibly hard to help build his own thing with his brothers.

When he first started dating Kate he seemed nice enough. He never let on about where he came from. I mean, it was obvious that he was smarter, more mannered maybe, than some of Kate's other consorts. She and Kate both knew he was going places. He kept his treatment of Kate pretty neutral as far as taking her places or giving gifts. Like maybe he didn't want to just buy her love. Or maybe he was really on the outs with the rest of the Suttons back then. Who knows?

She got up and stretched, walked to the window and looked out at that lucky son of a bitch sleeping in the brutal heat out there. That thing between his legs could destroy her friends. It didn't even look like he was breathing.

Maybe he'd died of a heart attack. Kate could have worn him right to death. She had the reputation. She shook away the sudden image of what she'd witnessed last night. That spectacle on the couch. That was something. It was hot, she'd said. But was it? It made her feel a little sick inside thinking of it. She'd been drawn to the sounds, then couldn't believe what she was seeing. It was beyond what she'd anticipated. She stayed because she wanted them to know she saw them, wanted them to know they had been seen, witnessed. Like a message to Kate. But when they turned around she lost her nerve, acquiesced. That was hot she said instead. For Christ's sake.

Kiley went to the fridge in the pantry and got herself a bottle of water, sat back on the couch with her feet up on the lip and sipped at it. She didn't know how Mitch could stand this.

OMAR WOKE with a start and looked around. He was alone on the patio. What was that dream? He felt like he'd been falling, or flying. His legs kicked him awake.

He looked over his shoulder and yawned, saw Kiley in there. Wouldn't come out and sit with him. Too hot, she said. She could stay in an air conditioned room and be anywhere. Back in Chicago or wherever she lived.

She'd become very strange. She maybe wasn't talking to him now. Just one word answers. He saw her in there, drinking her water by herself, playing with her toes. She was chilly like her air conditioning.

He knew he was going to take advantage of everything offered to him here. The food was incredible, the room, the service, everything. He felt like a lion. Like a pampered, groomed stud. And Kate? She took everything he gave her, and looked into him. Her eyes told him she wanted even more. And her husband was practically paying him to do it. He paid his own flight and that was it. Who knew that Kiley had such amazing friends. He hoped they would get back soon, he was getting hungry.

THE TEMPERATURE in the elevator was a relief. He leaned against the back wall of it pretty sure he was fogging it up behind him but the cold felt so good against his back. He saw his reflection and he looked like shit. His eyes were red and tired. At least he was getting a little colour on his face. He looked over at Kate leaning with him, right up against him, and smiled at her. She was lost in thought, staring straight ahead, maybe seeing herself over there. She did not look like shit though.

He thought about how he'd seen her last night with Omar. Was she used to such sexually aggressive boyfriends? Ones that would ask her if she'd like to see them come. She'd said yes as though it weren't absurd. Like that was something often offered. Maybe it was, what did Mitch know. Mitch's sex life before Kate, he imagined, was not even remotely similar. The way she enjoyed being defiled, the way she desired it. Fuck though, it was that crazy energy that he'd fallen for. And as much as the rational part of him was disgusted by seeing her turn her chin up to allow a man to come on her he couldn't deny that even the thought of it right now began to stiffen him.

He looked into the mirrored walls and could see a million of her. Every angle of her face reflected back at him as she looked stone faced straight ahead.

"MITCH, it's fucking oppressive out there. If I go out it's going to be to sleep and get some sun. Last thing I want to do is have to walk around out there." Kate pushed the service cart away from the table, their empty lunch plates piled on it.

She was right. It was too much. But there was that feeling again. Like he didn't want to be cooped up with these people in his home. Not Omar for sure. Kiley was okay.

Omar went outside to the patio and took off his shirt and lay on the lounge. Kiley sat on the couch looking at Mitch strangely.

"Go get your book and come sit outside with me," Kate said. She walked outside and stood on the patio looking out over the railing.

He looked over at Kiley. She was looking back at him, her arms around her legs, an orange in her hand, chin resting on her knees. Mitch asked her if she wanted to go outside with them. She twisted her mouth, said I'll do whatever you're doing. He sat a moment longer watching Kate spread out a towel on the patio.

He got up and said he might as well get his book and went to the bedroom. He splashed some water on his face and grabbed a towel and his reader and went back out. When he got to the living area he could see them all outside. Kiley was sitting in a chair in her over-sized T-shirt, peeling the orange, looking over at Omar. Omar was talking and smiling at Kate who was standing between them. Kate stood naked, right down to her bare feet. She was talking to Omar, waving a brown bottle of suntan oil, laughing about something. She squirted some into her cupped hand and started to rub it over herself, her heavy breasts swinging as she did.

OMAR WATCHED Mitch come out and look at his wife standing there naked. He couldn't figure that guy out. Was he whipped or something? Mitch sat down on the lounge next to Kiley and they both looked at her. It was obvious what Kate wanted. He watched her as she put on a show for all of them. Her petite full figure, as she bent over, her huge tits hanging off her, swinging as she rubbed the oil into her knees. Kate wanted to put on a show and she clearly had an audience. He waited for his invitation, knew it was coming.

She said to them, "No one can see us up here, we should even ourselves out." She turned at the waist and grabbed the white, oiled flesh of her ass to show them what she meant. She got on to her knees and waved the bottle of oil to Omar, asked him if he wouldn't mind. There it was, he knew it was coming.

He didn't even say anything he just stood up and pushed his shorts down and stepped out of them. He took a few steps let them all see it swing and then got down and crawled to her.

KILEY WATCHED her friend laying on her stomach, propped up on her elbows, sort of wag her ass, taunting Omar to come over, service her. Oil my back would you? Yeah, right.

She watched Omar come right to her, no hesitation. Kicked his shorts off, got on all fours and crawled around Kate. Kiley got a good look from this angle, his lopsided sack and that huge thing dangling between his legs from behind. He sat back on his heels, his balls hanging down behind him on to the towel.

Kiley looked over at Mitch but he was surprisingly blank. He was getting inured. Well, she thought Mitch, look lively, we're on deck it seems.

OMAR'S strong hands looked so large on Kate. Reminded him how small she was. He could see her soft flesh yielding to him, rippling under his pressure and glistening in the light. Kate's face was behind her black sunglasses, turned up to the sun. Omar massaged her back, rubbing into the muscles she liked to have rubbed at the small of her waist. He went over her cheeks, down over the back of her legs right down to her heels, then over her feet and she pointed her toes out for him.

Mitch was aware of Kiley turning and watching him but he didn't look over at her. Kate's sweet little body shone in the sun now. Omar's hand came steadily back up her legs, and then in between her thighs. He could see Kate part them for him, the sway of her ass as she did. Omar's middle finger stroked her, spread oil between her folds, up between her cheeks and slowly back down again.

He knew what was expected next. He'd have to disrobe in front of them all in this intense, bright light. Everyone would really see him if they wanted to.

There was no patio above them, no neighbour on this floor, but there was a roof. What if there was a worker up there today? He could see parasails out on the ocean, but didn't people bring binoculars up there? Maybe they didn't. Or some goddamn kid with a drone, shit, he'd seen one flying around a few days ago.

KILEY HAD her hands together sitting on the lounge watching Kate and Omar. Omar had his hand between her legs and she could see Kate bringing her hips off the towel, helping him get in there. Kate put her sunglasses up on her head and got Kiley's attention. She didn't say anything just made a gesture with her eyebrows. Kiley stood up and she pulled her shirt off over her head. She turned and stood over Mitch wearing just a bikini bottom and white berber slippers that came with the room. She said, C'mon, and held her hand out for him, and he took it and stood up. She kicked off the slippers and walked him over to the towels. The heat from the patio was intense, stinging at her feet, she hopped on to the towel holding Mitch's hand.

Mitch took his shirt off and she untied the string of her bottoms and threw them aside. Mitch turned away from her and slipped his shorts off, hiding himself from her and then lay face down. C'mon Mitch, I like you, you can let me see it. She sat down cross legged next to him, her back to Kate and Omar.

She felt Kate's hot hands on her shoulders and it made her jump. She was rubbing the oil onto her back for her. She could smell the coconut. Kate's hands ran across her, down her sides to her waist. Her stomach tightened as she thought of what Kate might be doing. She held her arms close together, her hands covering her breasts and bent away from Kate. Kate's hands went down to her waist, came up again over her shoulders and then down the outside of her arms, and then they were gone. It gave her a chill and her nipples hardened. She looked over her shoulder and saw her sitting up with Omar right next to her, his arm draped over his knee. Kate was squeezing the brown bottle into her hand. Kate put it over next to Kiley where she could use it on Mitch, then picked up Omar's cock and started stroking it.

Kiley got the lotion and rubbed Mitch's back.

MITCH HAD GOT HARD while Kiley rubbed his back. Feeling her foreign hands, not his wife's hands, the heat, the fragrant oil—it all got to him. He was able to sit and turn to her, his erection sticking straight up, let her see it. She rubbed his chest and down his belly and he leaned back so she could touch him. He wanted her to touch him. Her hand felt hot wrapped around it. She said, Do me, and he rubbed oil onto her collar, and she arched her back for him too, letting him pluck at her nipples and run his hand down between her legs and feel her smooth shave down there.

He could see, just over Kiley's shoulder, Kate sitting side to side with Omar, tugging at him clumsily. It looked ridiculously large in her shiny little hand, still spongy. It was off-putting.

Kiley caught him looking and she told him to lay back. She straddled his legs and took his cock in her hand. So small compared to what he'd just seen. She inched up over his hips and guided him into her. She was tight and warm and he closed his eyes and felt himself slide into her. She rocked her hips against him, fucking him. She bent over to kiss him and he felt himself slide out. She kissed him, reached back and guided him in again and sat on it. She rocked and swivelled, holding his gaze but he desperately wanted to see what Kate was doing. He could tell she was up on her knees now. He felt like he might have lost some of his hardness.

He felt the pressure to perform here. He wasn't able to finish last time but thinking about it made it worse. He was definitely losing it. He wasn't sure he was inside her anymore.

Kate bent over him and put her mouth on his and he felt her hand on his chest rubbing him. He opened his eyes and saw her smiling at him. She was on all fours next to him. He could see between her hanging breasts, Omar was getting himself behind her on his knees. He saw that big, oily tool now dangling between her legs, saw it slide against the inside of her thigh before Omar held it and then lined it up and very slowly entered his wife. Kate gasped and he felt her breath on his face. Kate whispered, Oh God, as he got himself into her. Mitch hardened inside Kiley as he watched Kate's face, wishing he was the one who could give her this kind of pleasure. He closed his eyes and felt Kiley grinding him, he was hard as a rock again while he heard Kate panting in his ear.

He looked over, between her swinging breasts, saw her belly jiggle as Omar pounded himself into her. He watched Omar's balls, heavy from the heat, swinging between her legs and slapping against her legs and stomach. He held one of her breasts, pushed it up against her chest and squeezed, felt how hard her nipple was against his palm.

Kate's hand ran down his belly and in between him and Kiley. She raked his skin with her nails and he felt her fingers split into a V around the base of his cock. He slid out of Kiley, running up the front of her folds. Kate wrapped her hand around his dick and then kissed her way down to it.

Kiley sat back on his legs. Omar slowed and was going in and out of her very carefully and Mitch watched Kate's breasts swaying back and forth.

She had him fully in her mouth. The thought that she would do that after he'd just been inside her best friend had him on the edge. Kate was just the worst, but Fuck, she turned him on.

Omar was pulling himself all the way out, and then pushing himself only partway back into her, teasing her, drawing her back to him. He saw Kate, how it frustrated her, pushing herself back onto him, wanting that thing up in her. But Omar pulled back as she pushed, and Kate's mouth came off Mitch, squeezed his balls a little too hard. She arched her back and yelped as Omar stabbed it into her deeply again.

Kiley slid him back inside her and it felt good, the way she worked her hips in circles on him. Kate, sideways to him now, was taking it from Omar hard. He watched her breasts slap together and swing, her flesh bounce as he fucked her with a furious pace. She wasn't gasping, just letting off a long high wail that warbled with his thrusting.

After a long while he slowed again and she slumped, exhausted, Omar still deep inside her. She shone from the oil, and sweat was dripping from her nose, she was panting.

Kiley was still gently, steadily, grinding herself around him. He looked up at her, surprised he'd not noticed her, how beautiful and sexy she looked sitting on him. She was leaning back but looking down at him while she fucked him, her hands behind her on his thighs. He watched the ripple of the muscles in her stretched back mid-section as she worked on him. He squeezed his fingers into her thighs, ran his slick hands along them, felt how fine she felt.

Kate's face was over his again, kissing him, his mouth and then down his neck. He smelled her hair as it greasily clung to his face and felt her being pounded again, rocking into him as Omar fucked her from behind. He put his arms around her, hugged her and held her close to him. She started to let out little yelping gasps.

He heard her in her breaths, say, I'm coming, I'm coming, again and again, he watched her face tighten like she was screaming but no sound came out but a croak somewhere in her throat, the cords stood out in her neck and she stiffened. Mitch crushed her tightly against him, and she dug her nails deep into Mitch's chest until it hurt, then dropped her head on to him and groaned. Mitch was about to come.

KILEY COULD SEE Kate's claws dig into Mitch, raking four jagged lines into his chest as she orgasmed. She could feel how hard Mitch was inside her, he was practically throbbing.

Mitch had his arms around Kate, holding her to him, and her back was heaving with her breaths. It was turning her on. She wanted Mitch to come so bad right now and she could feel he was very close, feeling him pushing himself up into her.

Omar pulled himself out of Kate slowly and Kate rolled off Mitch looking a little pained. She collapsed on her back next to Mitch, her hair still tangled up on him. Mitch's head was right back now and she realized he was about to do it. She got off him, slid herself back and grabbed his hard dick and stroked it. She was going at it fast and hard as she could, her fist wrapped around him tightly, squeezing and jerking, the tip of him just peeking out above her thumb, red and scrunched. She wanted everyone to see, didn't want it to be missed that she made him come, Come for me, Mitch, she said. He let out a sound and a spurt came out of him and landed on his belly, then it was just pouring from him, mixing in with the oil as she kept stroking him. He was very hard in her hand, she laughed out, There we are, Mitch, and then she lay herself on top of him, rubbing her hips against him feeling his slippery semen between them. She held his head with her hands and looked at him, said So, you do like me. He looked away embarrassed but he was laughing.

MITCH LAY there actually feeling quite content, Kiley had made him feel really good.

He held Kiley to him, felt her light lean body against him, slippery. She smiled over him, her hair falling around his face, blocking out the sun. She looked very happy, the two of them looking into each other's eyes under the tent of her long hair.

She got to her knees then sat herself next to him, facing him. She put her sunglasses back on and leaned back on her hands, turning her face up to the sun. Her long shining legs splayed out, her feet by Mitch's head, twisting them and rotating them. Mitch rolled himself onto his side and watched Kate, put his hand on Kiley's ankle.

They were both watching Kate and Omar, them on their knees, Kate kissing Omar around his neck, biting him. She was stroking him very slowly while they kissed, her wrist resting on her hip, her hand working over the wide swollen end as she gently squeezed and slid her open fingers over the head, and it gleamed, practically bursting.

Omar came without warning or making a sound, just a long stream up into the air and it fell across Kiley, her thigh and onto her stomach. Kiley shook, startled when he came on her. He saw her stomach suck in, she held her breath. He could see her stiffen but she didn't jump to wipe it off her. She just wasn't expecting it. She stayed seated that way, tan, gleaming with Omar's semen in running blobs across her tight belly. She looked at her stomach and watched it run down, some pooling in her scrunched up belly button. Mitch could see her crinkle her nose.

Kate was on her hands and knees her lips stretched around the end of Omar's cock, he was coming into her mouth. Omar was grunting and pushing himself into her, his balls pulling up and releasing as he shot into her. Kate was drinking it up, he could hear her breathing hard through her nose. She pulled her head back and looked over at him, a silver thread of semen still connecting her bottom lip to Omar.

Mitch was watching Kiley's face, saw it change, as Kate got down and put her mouth over the semen, sucking it up, and licking it off Kiley's belly. He saw her eyebrows raise right above the sunglasses. Her lips even came apart a little, the start of a gasp. Kate worked her way down, flicking her belly button with her tongue, sucking the semen out, following the trail as it led between the crook of her outstretched legs.

Kiley brought her thighs together and raised her knees, she said, Okay, honey to Kate and put her hands on her shoulders.

Kate just lay back on the towel, a big smile on her face. She stretched, her arms up above her, her hands linked together, her breasts flat like two big white dinner plates.

Kiley got up and quietly excused herself. She picked up the towel she was on and ran back inside with it stuffed between her legs, hopping from the patio heat biting at her feet.

Mitch lay back and put his hands behind his head, the fingers laced together, and looked up at the sky, watched the clouds crawl along up there.

He felt for Kiley. That was pretty extreme.

It felt quite nice to have the sun's heat on his bare body. When he got back he should make a real effort to get more exercise, it'd be nice if he would not feel so self-conscious naked.

Treading Water

IT WAS RAINING when Mitch got up so he sneaked Kate out and they went and had a little private breakfast on the beach near Rum Point. They sat under an awning and looked out over the dark grey line of churning water and the smear of mottled, storm-heavy sky. He held her hand while they ate and they listened to the waves. They were the only ones out there.

He didn't want to take her back yet, so now they were in a plaza on West Bay and he could have spent all day with her like this, walking side by side like they were normal again, poking through shops.

"You looking forward to being back?" she asked him.

He laughed, "Of course I am." He squeezed her hand. "I mean, it's been fun, but..."

The mall wasn't busy despite the rain. There were shoppers out, mostly couples like themselves. They kept walking, slow pace, enjoying the quiet.

"Do you want to go away again next month? I think we should make it happen. Just you and me, we could go somewhere we haven't been, you know. Explore it together," he said, imagining it, wherever it was, very far from here.

"Yeah, it'd be nice." She had stopped him in front of a boutique, looking at a little lace bustier dress on a polished maple mannequin. "Just the two of us."

He walked her into the shop and they looked around a bit but she ended up at the dress in the window, feeling the material.

"You can get away?"

He said, "No, but I will."

Kate turned the mannequin on its swivel and felt the lace trim along the tasteful bustier.

"Does Kiley seem happy to you?"

"How'd you mean?"

"Well, not like, Is she having a good time here, but I mean does she seem like she's a happy person?"

"I think so, she seems all right."

"I worry about her. She works very hard."

"Yeah, she does."

Kate told an associate she wanted to try it on and they found her a size. Mitch put himself in the leather chair and waited for her.

She came out and it was stunning, she knew it was. She turned for him, all the way around, let him get a look at it. He watched her legs work a little dance, flexing and bending, her feet making soft sounds on the glossy floor. Her hands pulled the skirt out to the sides and let it fall. He was so in love with her.

"Do you think Omar is any good for her?" she said.

Definitely not. "I don't know, she doesn't seem very close with him."

"No, she doesn't," she said, fixing the straps, watching herself in a mirror. "I can't believe I've found a little dress like this, that you know," she motioned with her hands, covers my breasts. And it did look fantastic on her, little straps over the shoulders, high-waisted, and very short, just halfway down the thigh. Not the style of dress that should look that good on her shapely figure.

"I think she's good, Kate."

"I worry about her. I feel like she's just treading water sometimes."

"Yeah? She seems like she's got her little business together. I think she does well with it. That's probably not easy."

She turned again, looking at herself, how she looked from behind, smoothing out the front of her dress, standing on her toes.

"I'm going to take it."

She bought some Gucci shoes that she thought might work with it, and then a handbag as well.

KILEY'S LEGS QUIVERED, her toes balled up trying to get a grip on the wet marble tile. Hot water splashed off her, running down her legs and over the shower floor. Goddamnit, it seemed like there might be three people who would want to get her off in this suite, but here she was with a shower head between her legs.

The thought of Kate's mouth running over her, her puckered lips drinking the semen off her, freaked her out. It made her jump out of her skin, crept her right out. But Fuck!, she didn't hate it. It was just too wrong. Way too wrong. Never going to happen.

She thought of Mitch, she thought of making him come on the patio, how good that felt. She put her hand between her legs, opened herself, let the pulse of the water hit her.

Handsome Mitch who was kind and decent and loved his wife and did everything for her. Took care of her. Gave her whatever she wanted. She slid her wet back down the marble until her butt cheeks touched her heels. Oh God. Fuck it—she thought of Omar. Having a bath with him in the room they rented in Sousse, the way his huge dick swung between his legs as he stepped into the tub, looked like it was halfway down his thigh, the time he fucked her in that little Mini they rented and she couldn't get away from him in that tiny space. He fucked her ferociously from behind, her face pressed against the cold side window. They laughed after at the perfect imprint in the condensation, of her open-mouthed expression, he said you could tell she had been coming. She pushed her first two fingers against herself, rubbing herself hard, breathing fast...she thought about Kate's hot oily hand down her back, her fingers on her waist, how it tickled, she thought of her kissing the semen off her and what if she'd let her mouth go down her smooth shaved mound, the hot oil, her soft pouted lips, how would that feel? She came hard, moaning loud and long in the shower, not caring about the echo.

She slid her legs out and slumped against the marble, the shower head throwing water straight up in the air, a mist clinging to her eyelashes. She laughed, five days now into this sexy little trip to Cayman for her friend and that was her first orgasm.

THEY STOOD on the landing between two flights of stairs that ran outside the plaza. The rain was coming down, loud on the cars in the parking. They stood huddled together there, leaning on the railing, outdoors but protected by the overhang.

“Could have brought the umbrella,” he said.

“You hate walking around with it.”

She looked over at him, leaned in and kissed him on his chin and he put his arm around her.

They watched the rain, watched it come down, getting stronger and louder. The hotels, the sea across the street, all dissolving to grey. He could feel her watching him, smiling at him. He looked over at her.

She took him by the front of his raincoat and pulled her into him, her back against the railing. “Kiss me,” she said. He held her and kissed her and she put her arms around him hugging his waist under his coat.

He felt a passion for her and his kisses got deeper and he was aware of their breathing getting rapid. The sounds exhaling in raspy snorts. He wanted to get her out of here. Felt it now. He could take her in the Jeep.

He felt her hands grabbing at his ass, squeezing him and pulling his hips into her. She was doing it all under the coat, no one would probably know if they were to pass. But the kissing may have been a little intense for mid-day at a shopping plaza. Her hand moved between his legs clutching him through his shorts. He had a brief flash of worry, did he feel smaller in her hand now? Did she think about that? He pushed it away, thought how lucky he was right here in this moment with her. He pulled his head back and looked at her, her half-lidded eyes, glazed with passion. He was hard in her grip, and she stroked him, underhanded, looking into his eyes. She kissed him again, working along his neck. She whispered in his ear, “I liked watching you fuck her.”

He froze, didn’t know how to respond. He pulled back and looked from the corner of his eyes, made sure they were alone, he slid his hand down the front of her skirt, and ran his finger through the V of her mound, feeling her wet through her panties. She gasped and squeezed the back of his arm.

She licked her hand then slid it down the front of his pants. He sucked his stomach in, felt her fist pushing into his briefs.

“Did you like fucking that Daddy’s little good girl?” Her mouth just at his ear, whispering.

“She can’t be that good she’s fucking her best friend’s husband.”

“She’s my good little girl now.” He felt her thumb and forefinger circle around him, stroking his tip.

“You’re the bad girl, are you?”

“Tell me I am,” she said, teasing him, working her fingers over him so slowly.

“You are the bad girl.”

“How bad am I?” Their heads pressed together whispering into their ears.

“You’re breaking my heart.”

“Put your fingers in me, Mitch.”

He got his hand into her panties, slid through her coarse hair and he put his two middle fingers inside her. They went right in, he could feel her wetness spreading on his palm, in between his fingers. “Good girls don’t get finger-fucked in a mall in the daylight.”

She moaned. “Why don’t you stop it then?”

“I love you when you’re bad.”

“Ah, say that again.”

“I want you to be so bad you destroy me,” he said feeling her gripping on his fingers, pulling them into her.

“Tell me if she was tighter than me.”

“Kate.”

“Fucking tell me she was tighter.”

“She’s a good girl,” he said, working his fingers in her, stroking her insides, he could hear how wet she was. “I couldn’t believe a little pussy could be so tight.”

He watched her face as she came, turned up, almost in pain. Her gritted teeth so white against the pink of her gums. She squeezed on his dick so hard it hurt. He just held her, let it subside.

When she opened her eyes they were red and tears streamed down her cheeks. She tried to blink them away, she pulled her hand out of his pants and turned her back to him.

“What’s wrong, Kate?”

“Nothing,” she said into the palm trees. He heard her sniff.

“I’m fine,” she said and she held a hand out, a little wave over her shoulder.

He didn't know what to do, stood there with his hand dripping, watching her. He could see her shoulders start to shake like she was crying, but she wasn't making any noise. He looked around, wiped his hand on the side of his shorts, and held her.

She said, "God, I'm fine, I'm sorry. I don't know what's wrong. I don't even know why I'm crying."

He kissed her hair and hugged her. She turned and smiled, tears still coming. He put his lips to her forehead. Her face started to twist again, she laughed but her face flushed red, and she wasn't breathing in. She shook her head from side to side at him, and put her hands up, like surrender. She bent over a bit and pulled her hood up. He picked up her bags and helped her to the Jeep, getting soaked by the driving rain.

THERE IT WAS, back again. Insatiable badness. Like a wave of panic through her. It was Wednesday and they left on Friday. It wasn't over, she wasn't done, but there was no more time. What the fuck was wrong with her?

She looked at Mitch, soaking wet behind the wheel. She put his hand on his leg, laughed at how wet his shorts were, pointed it out to him.

He looked down and nodded. He looked a bit worried. That was a strange display back there. What must he think? She bit her lip and watched him drive. What would it be like to be content? What would it be like to get up in the morning and just go about your day, keep up with your telly, your friends, go to bed and do it over again the next day? She didn't like that either, but being chased by these demons could ruin her.

KILEY TRIED CATCHING up on some work but just couldn't concentrate. She went through some e-mails but didn't respond to any of them. She made a bunch of to-do lists and then felt good about that.

She looked out at the grey sky from the couch, the rain coming in sheets. She threw her iPad down next to her.

Omar walked in from the bedroom, just out of the shower. He walked past her wearing his robe wide open. He was naked and she watched his dick slap against his thighs as he crossed the room. He went to the bar and opened himself a bottle of water.

She watched him take a drink, standing there with his arm on the bar, fully exposed.

“She’s not here you know.”

Smiling at her, white teeth looking whiter in his darkening beard.

“Who?”

“You know. Why don’t you cover that thing up, we all know about it already.”

“If you know, then why do you care?”

He sipped his water. “What is your problem?”

“I don’t have one. I’m fine,” she said.

He looked around, big grin. “I just came out to get a water, and now this... You mean I’m not fine, Kate’s not fine? Is this a game where I get to guess, what do I win?” Eyeing her bare legs. She drew them up, feet on the couch, knees under her chin.

“Just never mind.”

He looked her over, made her uncomfortable.

“She’s a real woman you know. An adult. She can make her own decisions.”

“Mistakes more like.”

“You made a mistake?” He got himself real close to her looking down on her. He took a long sip from the bottle and put the cap on, then threw it on the couch next to her.

He reached down and dropped his flaccid cock over her knees. She backed her face away. He used his hand to bounce it from one knee to the other, said “I remember you begging for it.”

She slapped it away, hard.

“Ow,” he said but he was laughing, soothing it in his hand as he backed off. He laughed at her, said “Or maybe you’re jealous, huh? Did you think you could steal her husband maybe?”

She threw a pillow at him but he knocked it away, and she was mad that it wasn’t hard enough. She got up and grabbed a heavy glass pot with some succulents in it from the table behind the couch, heard him laugh an uh oh behind her.

“Fuck off, asshole,” she said, standing with it over her head, and she meant to throw it.

He was holding his hands up over his head ready to block it, said “Maybe I’m getting close?”

Laughing at her, thinking this was all funny.

“Honest, shut the fuck up or I’ll fuckin’ smash you.”

“Oh no, is it her?” he said, hands still above his head but his finger pointing at her. “You’re in love with Kate?” Taunting her. “You want to go down on your friend, maybe she goes down on you, I can see it,” he was side-stepping, knowing she was going to throw it, “I want to be there, huh, s’il vous plait?”

She threw the heavy glass ball at him as hard as she could, he turned and it hit him in the back with a satisfying thud, throwing soil and bits of plant up in a shower off of him.

It hurt, but he turned and charged her, his face serious. She put her hands up, said No, no, no, sorry but he grabbed her wrists and pushed her into the couch and she hit the back of her head on the hard part of the arm. He loomed over her, pinning her down, holding her arms.

“Why else would you invite me? You are the one that is ruining them. Wants to see them apart. Sucking his little cock, putting her into my hands—how will she go back to him now? How can he take her back?”

The tears came really hard and she felt a wave of heat across her chest and up her neck. Her face contorted and she started to sob, felt the tears rolling down into her ears. He let her up, helping her sit. He put his arm around her and rubbed her back and she leaned into him.

None of that was true but it stabbed her in the heart that someone could say that or even think that. Worried somehow that he would spread that idea around like it was the truth. She shrugged him off and stood up. She picked up the pot and put it on the table. She looked at the dirt on the floor, the broken plant.

“Can you get me a dustpan?”

Date Night

MITCH COULD SEE KILEY COMING. She would have caught his eye even if he hadn't known her. She worked her way through some of the sunbathers laying out on the white-painted loungers fanned around the pool. She was tall, thin, tan—she turned heads. She had that mane of hair down, sunglasses on, wearing her little emerald bikini.

She was looking for a place to put herself down, didn't look like she wanted to be too close to anyone. Mitch just stayed in the shade of the umbrella and watched her with his drink in his hand. White towel draped over her arm, phone and a paperback pinched in her long fingers. Some guy in a chair stopped her to ask her a question and she laughed politely at whatever he said. Mitch could just see his tanned but rounded stomach and his arm held up as if to halt her from getting away from him. She kept walking, hair bouncing and swaying, and Mitch could tell that he'd turned to watch her. Making that guy's day.

She made her way closer, caught him watching her, and put her arms out in a gesture, what are you doing here? He smiled at her as she came over and sat on the other side of the table, across from him, both of them looking out over the people at the pool together.

"How you holding up, mate?" she said.

He looked over at her, couldn't see her eyes behind her sunglasses. He told her he was good.

"I thought I might find you out here."

"Yeah?"

“Just getting some fresh air, yeah?”

He nodded and took a sip of his drink, rolled the ice cubes around in there. He could see her nodding out of the corner of his eye, getting it. He just didn't want to be in there with them right now.

They watched the kids playing in the pool for a little bit. Watched the people come and go. Mitch ordered another drink and got a water for Kiley.

“Yeah, I like it out here. I can think.”

She leaned in like she wanted to say something, but just drummed her nails on the table and sat back again. He looked at her feet held together under the table, sitting on top of her sandals. Didn't want that little thong tan line.

“Looks like we have a date night tonight, just you and me. What did you want to do?” She was leaning back now, the sun had come around and she wasn't in the shade. She had her head back, eyes probably closed behind the glasses.

“How'd you mean?”

“Date night.”

Mitch looked at her sitting there, still sunning herself. “Where will they be?” Completely puzzled.

“I guess they'll be doing their own thing. Ah, shit, Mitch. She didn't talk to you yet?”

“She didn't tell me.”

“Yeah,” she said, her head turned to him now, still back.

“What the fuck is that?”

“Some alone time, I guess.”

“No, I don't think so. No offence, right.”

“Talk to her.”

“Yeah, I will.” His foot was bouncing. “Have you seen her?”

“She wasn't up in the room.”

Mitch sat with her, finished his drink, shaking his head every once in a while. What the fuck is a date night? Why wouldn't she want him there with her?

Kiley was sat up now, she was watching him, he could tell. But she was quiet, seemed a little worried. He told her quietly, It's all right, yeah, then said he'd talk to her later and got up to look for Kate.

MITCH WENT up to the room just in case Kiley was wrong, or had missed her. Kate wasn't there and Omar wasn't either. He headed back down and looked out over the beach chairs but didn't see them. He walked the resort, his head on a swivel, but they weren't around. He ended up on the far side by the bar where he'd had the first argument with her. He went to the balcony there that looked out over the sea. He leaned over it and watched the people out there past the cabanas. He saw two figures out in the waves that could be them.

He walked down the wide stone steps, out in the sand, heading towards the couple. He kicked off his flip flops to walk better, the sand then burning his feet. It was them.

He stood on the beach and watched them together. They were just playing around in the water but it killed him. Kate was laughing, trying to keep away from him, and he was after her. She turned to avoid him but he was ready for that and he grabbed her around the waist and picked her up. Mitch could see his hands pressing into her softness as he tossed her into a wave. She came up mad. Fake mad, like she was going to get him. She pulled up her top as she stood, Mitch saw the brief flash of her nipple. She was saying something to him and he was laughing as he backed away from her. She charged after him, struggling through the hip-deep water. Omar dove under a wave and it crashed against her, then she disappeared under the water too. He saw her head come up next to his, farther out now. Their heads bobbing closer together.

Mitch walked to the water, felt it come up his legs. Omar saw him and said something to Kate. She turned and saw him standing there watching them, she looked guilty. He waved her to come over and walked back up onto the beach.

Kate came up out of the water adjusting that bikini again, her smile gone. She looked so good walking up to him, the jiggle of her chest, her little bare feet in the sand.

"Yeah, Kate, I think I need to talk to you."

"Yeah, what's up?"

"Up here," he said and walked up to the shade between two striped cabanas.

"What's wrong?"

"What the fuck is this date night?"

“You know, we can go out together. Go and have some fun. Take Kiley out for dinner.”

“What’ll you be doing?”

“The same.”

“Yeah, with him, yeah...”

“Well...” she stood in front of him with her hands on her rump, looking up, her chest sticking out at him.

“No, I know of course with him. I mean, what about me? What do you want to do without me?”

“I don’t know.” Sometimes she could be like a frustrating little kid. Just say it.

“Here’s the thing, why doesn’t it bother you that I’ll be alone with Kiley. Why aren’t you driven as crazy as I am?”

“I know her.”

“None of us know your little french boyfriend over there.” He started to feel a little heated.

“Isn’t he? Don’t think I see you two with your hands all over each other out there?”

“We’re just horsing around,” she said, looking back at Omar. He was watching them. “I don’t like seeing you with anyone. I love Kiley. I trust you two. I wouldn’t feel so hot if it were anybody else.”

“Are you saying you understand then? How I feel?”

“Well, yeah but—”

“You’re going to go off and fuck some stranger any way?”

“Well, it’s nothing that hasn’t happened yet already is it? Jesus, you held my hand while he did it.”

“Then why alone, Kate?”

“I don’t know.”

They both looked down at the sand. She was drawing shapes with her toe. Mitch ran his finger along the fabric of the cabana, waiting for her to say something that could explain it to him. Hope there’s no one in this cabana, he realized. It seemed pretty quiet in there, but he and Kate would be too if someone was outside putting on a torrid little show like this.

“I just—I feel a little self-conscious with you watching is all.”

“Mitch—”

“Self-conscious, that’s a laugh. You should see yourself, darling. I wish you could see you as I’ve seen you.”

He could see Omar out in the water, circling, coming in near his mate. Omar looked a little like he was being protective. Like he was making sure Mitch wasn’t hurting her. Back off, asshole.

Kate had her head right down, he could see her dimpled, trembling chin. She reached up and put her arms around him, buried her head in his chest.

“I’m sorry I’m so bad, I hate myself,” she said. She kissed him, put her ear back on his chest. He softened and his arms came around her. “You have to know you have nothing to worry about, right?”

“No I don’t. In fact, I think I have a lot to worry about.”

“How can I make you feel better?”

Omar was out there hovering. He held her tighter, protecting her. “You can’t Kate. I think you’re killing me,” he said.

What if she were to go out alone? There’s nothing Omar could do that was worse than what had already been done, right? Not knowing is what would kill him. The wonder. What was it? What could she possibly not want him to see? The only way: no lies.

He kissed the top of her head, smelled her hair. “You have to tell me everything that happens,” he said.

“I will.”

“I mean it Kate, no secrets. You can be alone but the not knowing would kill me. You have to tell me what happened, yeah?”

“I will. No secrets.”

She kissed him again, bit his lower lip, looked into his eyes. God, he loved her. He watched her turn, and skip back down to the water to play with Omar.

“YOU DON’T KNOW where you’re going to be, Kate?”

“No, not really.”

Kiley knew she was lying to her through that bathroom door, was why she had the door closed, didn’t tell her to come in. Didn’t want to look her in the eyes.

Kiley put her hand on the lever, waited a moment, Kate didn’t say anything more.

“I’m coming in, Kate,” she said, and Kate didn’t reply. Didn’t say no either.

Kiley stepped into the bathroom, felt the heat in there, Kate’s head leaning back in the tub at the end of the long room.

“Don’t you look nice,” Kate said. She’d forgot about that. She was dressed for her night with Mitch. He was taking her out for dinner and she’d really put herself together for him. She felt instantly guilty, like she shouldn’t have gone to so much effort. Did that mean something to Kate? Did she think Kiley was falling for Mitch? The whole thing was crazy. This was all Kate’s fault, so she could think whatever she wanted.

“We’re going to that nice place, the plantation,” she said, feeling like she had to defend herself. She walked down between the mirrored vanities, not too far, giving Kate some privacy still.

“You can tell me where you’re going, Kate. I just want not to worry.”

Kate stayed like she was, reclining in the big tub, floating. Only her head was visible, rested back on the lip, her eyes half closed. “Just a hotel, not around here. I'm going out the other side of the island."

"You don't know where?"

"It doesn't matter, I'll be fine. Omar will be with me."

"He's gone already? He's not in my room."

"Yeah, he's checked in. I'll meet him there."

Kiley watched her floating there, sleepy, distant. She didn't look happy.

"Where are you going for dinner?"

"I'm not. Just meeting him there. I'm not interested in eating."

Kiley nodded, understanding what that meant. "You're going to be all right?"

Kate turned her head, and smiled at her, said "Yeah, I am. I'm good, Kiley. Please show Mitch a good time, will you?"

"Yeah, we're heading out now, I think."

"Make him happy, take his mind off of all this for me."

Kiley nodded and left Kate to her bath, she said, I will, then closed the door behind her.

THERE WAS something sexy about him. A casual confidence, always taking care of business. Capable, that was it. He might not have the biggest thing between his legs but he was one cool customer. He just got on with it. He had the world by the balls, she figured.

He was tall, handsome, and had that killer head of hair, but here he was sat up on the couch, soft and pale looking and she couldn't shake seeing him at his worst these last two nights. Seeing him witness his wife being wrecked, absolutely wrecked by Omar. Seeing the love of his life fucking another man, and she being so in to it. It unnerved Kiley too.

Mitch could definitely endure, it was admirable. He was taking this like a champ. She didn't buy that he was into it. She didn't think this whole escapade was turning him on at all. He got aroused in the moment, but it seemed like it was in spite of himself. He was conflicted. He had an iron chin this guy.

She sat on the big padded hotel arm chair. The room was totally silent, not even the sounds of guests down at the pool. The sun was almost down and the sky was a beautiful painting of soft feathery clouds in orange and magenta. She looked down at her hands folded in her lap, her freshly shaved, shining legs framed in the open slit of her dress. She crossed her legs over for him, even though he wasn't even looking, the soft shuffle of satin breaking the quiet. He stared at the bed. He was a strange one.

She'd put her hair up, parted to one side and five pale frangipani pinned over her ear. She'd laboured over her makeup, dark around her eyes, dark red on her lips. She should have been impossible to ignore.

She crossed her legs over again the other way now, more slowly this time, it was there for him to see if he'd look. She was bare under this long, green, tropical flowered dress. Nothing. She smiled at him as he nursed his cocktail, still staring into the floor. He was a strange one, that's for sure.

"We going to go, Mitch?"

"Yeah, just thinking."

"You all right, mate?" Knew he wasn't.

"Why solo, do you think?"

She stood up, went to him, and held out her hand, towering over him in her heels. "To have fun, Mitch. Let's go have fun."

"What do you think they're going to be doing?" Ignoring her.

Her hand still held out, "They're going to have fun, Mitch, come show me a good time." She helped him up and he put his drink on the table.

He stopped at the door and put his jacket on. She helped him with it, straightened it for him. She looked at him, felt for him, could see he was troubled. "Hey," she said. "Look at me..."

He looked into her eyes, she said, "No, look at me," stepped back and posed for him, one long tanned leg peeking out from the slit in her dress. "Don't ignore me, I want this time with you." The worst thing she could do for him, for herself, even for Kate, was to just be his babysitter for the night. She didn't want to take him out to play while his mommy went and got a real good fucking. That stench would stay with him forever if she didn't shake him out of this. She put her hands on his warm cheeks. "You're a good-looking hunk that's going to take me out to dinner and then we're going to play around all night. We're going to have a good time. A really good time." He bucked up, said Yeah, but she knew he was acting. She'd have to lift his spirits.

"You look good." she said. He did too. If he took some more colour on his skin he'd turn some heads for sure. His suit was beautiful. Navy linen, white open collared shirt, she ran her hands over his chest, adjusted his lapel. "Really good."

He nodded, and put his hand on the small of her back as they left for dinner.

THE CAB KATE was in hurtled down the Bodden Town Road, heading out to the far end of the island, out to the east. The little SUV, yellow with green doors and a little taxi sign on the roof, putting down that rubber hiss, cast a long shadow out in front of them and Kate watched it swish over the long grass along the shoulder.

Before she left, alone in the suite, she watched herself in the mirror. She put the dress Mitch bought her yesterday morning, with the pretty little bustier, sliding it over her bare oiled body. No panties, no bra. Sitting in the cab now, completely naked but for the soft, thin layer of silk.

She did her makeup for the first time since they got here. Perfume, colour on her lips, lotion on her skin, all over. She and Kiley had spent the morning at the salon in the resort. Got her nails done, deep burgundy, and a clear coat on her toes.

All that effort, but in the end when she stood to look at her reflection to see how it all came together, she couldn't face herself. Just watched her feet as she slipped them into the little ballerinas, then she switched off the light, grabbed her purse and left.

"JESUS CHRIST, Mitch, you're bumming me out."

He said Sorry, poking through his lobster, not eating. He'd put back two double Glenlivet's when they got there and he had a rum cocktail brought with his dinner.

They were on the second floor of an old plantation house, on a veranda looking right over the ocean. The place was elegant, and Mitch looked right at home here.

He'd kept looking at his watch. Rose gold yacht-master. Yeah, she noticed. She'd told him to knock it off and he'd almost stopped doing it by the time their food arrived.

The waiter had picked up on their weirdness and hung around making small talk, putting on a show for them. Mitch was polite but anyone at another table would wonder why these two came for a romantic night out right after a funeral.

“You mad at me?”

He looked at her, earnestly, watery-eyed, and told her emphatically No he wasn’t.

“You mad at her?”

“No,” he said. “I’m still trying to figure out if I should be, you know. I want to be but I’m really not. Shouldn’t I be?”

“Nah,” she said, “You know I’m on the inside with her, and I can tell you, right from the source, that you’ve got nothing to worry about.”

He took a sip of his drink, said “Sometimes they just seem kind of close.”

“That’ll wear off, trust me.”

“You’re not worried you’ll lose him?”

Hmm, tough one here. “No,” she said, “Not in the slightest.”

He nodded, swirling the end of the cocktail around the glass. “What if it’s not him that I should worry about, what if when we’re home, she has a taste for this sort of thing...”

“For swapping?” she said.

“Yeah, it’s definitely not for me, I couldn’t—”

“Thanks, Mitch.”

“What?” he said.

“Go on, I’m all right, I know my worth.”

“Oh sorry, you know what I mean. That’s not a lifestyle for me. I’m not that guy.”

“I know that.”

“Yeah, but if I’m not that guy—and I’m not really her type of guy—what’s to say that this sort of thing couldn’t continue.” He rubbed his forehead, said “You know, behind my back.”

Kiley could see his worry. But Kiley knew Kate wouldn’t. Of course, a year ago she would have said this current scenario was also impossible. It was a shock to her when she’d hinted around. Kiley had been into it, but she was a bit incredulous for a week or two. She was used to the idea now, Mitch wasn’t, this was all a fresh slap to him. “Yeah, I get you,” she said. “Kate’s not going to do that, Mitch, from my heart, mate.” She picked up his hand. “Not the Kate I know.”

“You sure you know her? Kate from this weekend?”

“Yeah, it’s a surprise. But I think she surprised herself too. You know, my own feeling, I don’t think she likes this.”

“Yeah, me too. I hope not.”

Mitch leaned back in his chair, pulling at his cheeks with one hand, still thinking. He looked out at the view. Night, but still enough colour in the sky to see the black silhouettes of the palm trees at the foot of the ocean.

He said, “I don’t think she likes this either. I just wish I knew for sure what she wanted from it.”

“You don’t know?” Kiley said, raising one sly eyebrow.

“I don’t think it’s so obvious. I don’t even think she knows. I think,” he looked around, “You know, what she says it is,” motioning with his index fingers a distance roughly as long as Omar, “Is only a piece of the puzzle.”

He could be right. She could see that. Mitch was definitely sexy when he was at work. He was a lot more man than any of the guys she’d dated.

“What do you think?”

She lifted her chin up stretching out her neck, looking around. She’d kicked off her shoes under the table and she lifted up a bare foot and placed it between his legs. “I think you and I should maybe get right to the fucking.”

Mitch looked around, nervous, said her name as an admonishment. At least he was smiling now.

She was pushing her toes into him. “Go on and take it out,” she said, “there’s a tablecloth.”

He stared at her and a big smile came across his face. He shook his head at her. Kiley smiled back, there we are now. He looked at the other tables while he had his hands under the table working at his fly.

He had to sit up straight to get it to stick out of the fly, but she found it with her toes, and started kneading it. She felt him harden, and she worked the ball of her foot along the underside, pushing him against his body.

“Take a look. I had a pedicure this morning.”

He pushed the tablecloth away and looked at her pretty foot rubbing his exposed dick, he was looking at her trimmed nails, freshly painted.

“Mitch, waiter,” she said, her foot stopping abruptly.

He jumped and bunched the tablecloth against himself. He looked around wide-eyed but they were alone. Kiley smiled at him chewing a cocktail straw in the corner of her mouth, leaning back in her chair, one thin arm draped over it.

“Make sure you come into that tablecloth,” she said, “I’d hate to see that beautiful suit ruined.”

He let her play with it a bit more then paid the bill and got her to the Jeep with his suit jacket over his arm to cover his erection pushing against the thin fabric.

KATE HAD the driver stop a block away from the hotel, pulled into the parking for a mini-golf. He asked her if she was all right.

“Yeah, I just need a moment to think,” she said, biting her thumbnail. She looked down the road, saw the sign for the hotel where she was to meet him. Room 7G he texted her, said it was up front, ground level, facing the road.

It was almost dark now, cars coming the other way lighting up the cab with their headlights. Daylight still clinging, orange and warm, shining low on the families coming off the putt-putt and back to their little rentals, taking their kids out for a little dinner then back to the hotel.

She wanted to just give it all up, go home. She could do it. Just ask this guy to take her all the way back to Seven Mile. He wouldn’t care, he was headed back there anyway and she was the one paying. But she knew she wouldn’t. She was going to tell him, in just a few seconds, take her up there, drop her right off at the door. Then she was going to go in that room.

MITCH STRUGGLED to keep the Jeep at the speed limit. People had flashed their lights, raced past him with a honk when they got a chance. Kiley had him entirely inside her mouth and Goddamnit she really knew what she was doing. He’d looked down, he wanted to see what it was she was actually doing, but he could only see her beautiful head of hair with the flowers pinned in it, gently rocking and twisting. He swore it felt better than fucking.

His blinker was signalling left, he didn’t even remember his last turn. He switched it off looking for a place where he could stop. He was going to come, there was no doubt about it, and he didn’t want to be responsible for a vehicle when he did. He caught himself actually quietly grunting with each twist of her mouth. If that was what she was doing down there. What was she doing? He'd never felt anything like it.

He pulled into a parking area under a tall iron archway and looked for a spot. People were milling around and there wasn't much place to hide in the topless Jeep. He kept going, it would be clear to anyone what was happening in there if he happened to slow enough for them to see in. She was squeezing his balls now and he was sure it was about to happen. God not now, please. Then he was on the beach. That couldn't be right could it? They wouldn't just let you drive on the beach would they?

Fuck it. He would come before the cops ever came and told them to move along. He stopped there on the beach in the sand. Could the Jeep get them out of there? He looked up at the stars, a lit up beachfront café off to their right. They wouldn't see. There were people walking along the water, shapes of couples as they took a romantic stroll. They would understand. Just enjoy it Mitch. He felt her hand between his cheeks under his balls pressing into him massaging him there. A lot of force. He swelled in her mouth, he felt the hardest he'd been in forever. Her finger slipping then into his crack and he wasn't going to stop her. Fuck what was proper. She slid a finger inside him, he felt it hook and she was pressing again. Pressing and rubbing and whatever she was doing with her mouth.

Minding his manners he told her he was going to come. She just quickened her pace and stroked his insides harder. He came, the most forceful he could ever remember, his cock stood up straight in her mouth and his anus gripped at her finger with each stream he shot into her. He let out a very embarrassing long low noise but he just couldn't help it.

His head pounded and his heart was racing. Couldn't hear a thing over the pounding blood in his neck. He slumped back into the seat and he could feel Kiley still sucking on him. He looked out over the beach and just enjoyed her pushing on his prostate, squeezing out every drop into her mouth and swallowing it. He was still hard. He felt so satisfied. A little sleepy, but very satisfied. All his problems seemed washed away from the forefront, and he could see the glimmer of an idea on the horizon.

Kiley sat up and looked at him. "That was hot," she said, wiping at her bottom lip.

Mitch covered his face, ashamed at how much he had enjoyed that, but he let her see him smiling.

"Where are we?" she said, looking around.

“I don’t really know,” he said, still slumped in his seat, just taking her in. This was worth it he thought.

He could feel perspective for the first time. Felt like he was up in the sky now looking down at it all. He had the big picture.

He touched her hair and stared at her, half-lidded. “You...” he felt high as a kite, “you are goddamn something.” He touched her chin. Maybe she blushed, he didn’t know, but she liked it, him complimenting her. “The restaurant was only a block from the hotel, but I just had to get off the road. We can’t be far.”

She pulled the rear-view down towards her, checked herself out. “You better get us back. That was just the start.” She clicked the interior light on behind them and put her lipstick on. “Can I talk dirty for a moment?” she said, still looking in the mirror.

He was putting himself away, zipping up his pants. Yeah, he was still hard. He said “All right.”

“That felt really good. Having you come like that. You know, in my mouth that way.” It was unusual to see her shy or bashful. Struggling through a sentence like that. “God, what am I trying to say? I liked giving you pleasure. And by the way you came I feel like I did, you know?” She put her hand on his knee. She looked like she wanted to say more but knew she wasn’t making sense.

“Let’s go back and have some real fun, yeah?”

“That’s what I want,” she said. “You are okay to drive?”

“I’m only on the beach because of what you were doing to me. I’m more sober right now than I have been in years. I feel like I can see more clearly than ever.”

OMAR DID pushups in between the two double beds on the worn blue carpet of the Royal Hyacinth Motel. It was an inexpensive two-storey across from the ocean but it did have its own swimming pool.

He went to the window and pulled a velour drape back, looked out into the lit up parking lot. Nothing yet. A man and a woman were arguing beside a Hyundai on the far side next to the main drag. The man had his arms folded, leaning against the car, and she just kept pointing at him.

He sat down on the bed and flipped the TV on but turned it off again. He went through his messages on his phone but didn't respond to any of them. He threw the phone on the bed and got a bottle of water.

He felt bad for Mitch. He knew girls that liked cock and some that hadn't really cared. Kate really loved cock. That wasn't going to change and Mitch was never going to deliver. He wasn't even average.

Kate was just built for fucking. Five-three, petite with pretty little hands and feet, short-limbed but with the voluptuous build of a woman. Big, perfect shaped heavy breasts, soft-skinned, plump belly and ass. Small and compact, you could fold her up in any position and while she was tight she could eat up everything he could give her with the right stimulation.

He took off his boxers and T-shirt, went through his duffel bag and found his silk robe. He put that on and tied it loosely at the waist. His phone chimed from the bed, frog sound. He went and read the screen, swiped it to respond.

MITCH RAN a hot bath when they got back to the hotel room. He told her he knew what he wanted to do with the time he had alone with her.

"I want to put my hands on every part of you. I want to remember," tapping his temple with one finger, "Record what you feel like. Your hair down to the soles of your feet." He put his arms around her, caressed her and untied the straps of her dress. He let the dress slide down her body to the floor. He stepped back and admired her. God, Mitch, she thought, watching him watch her, you really know what to say. Her nipples hardened.

She stood with her arms to her side, one knee bent and felt really naked. The room hot from the bath, the only sound was the water filling the tub. She felt exposed. He walked around her, fully dressed, and she kept still for him, let him get his look. He stood behind her and took the flowers from her hair. She could hear him undressing behind her.

They got in the tub together, the water oily and fragrant. He was quiet and gentle and he did what he said he was going to do. Touch her all over. He ran his hands down her shoulders, down to her hands, laced his fingers through hers. He kissed at her neck and she lifted her chin for him. He smelled her hair, put his arms around her and held her close to him. Ran his hands down her back and over her rump, then over her hips and down between her thighs.

He turned her around facing the window looking out over the ocean. The room was lit dimly but anyone outside could have seen her. She wanted someone to watch.

He ran his hands down her sides and kneeled behind her, she felt him between her legs so she parted them, lifted her ass for him, let him get in there. She felt his tongue slide over her, felt how wet she was, how much she wanted him to do this. God, he was very good at this. She bent forward, braced herself against the ledge of the window. Mitch ran his hands down her thighs, her knees, over her calves, back up to hold her apart. She gasped.

"I JUST WANT TO—not feel watched. To not feel so self-conscious," Kate said, her back to the hotel door.

"There's more too, isn't there?"

She had knocked on the door, feeling the heat washing up from the cab as it waited, parked right in front of the cheap hotel room. Omar opened it, moved aside wordless so she could come in. She waved to the driver and he'd backed out.

"I just...I want you to do things to me that if my husband watched...he would want to murder you—"

He grabbed her by the neck with one hand and forced her back against the door. He squeezed her and she could feel tremendous pressure behind her eyes. She couldn't breathe.

He began to lift her up the door with just one hand. She didn't think he could be so strong. She grabbed his forearm with both hands to relieve her aching neck. She looked down at him her eyes bulging and scared. He smirked and let her down so her feet touched the floor. He stood staring at her, silent. Just a silhouette with a table lamp behind him the only light in the room. His grip relaxed on her throat and his hand moved to her collar. He pushed her down and told her to get on her knees.

She squatted down in front of him, looking up fearfully. He told her to straighten up, she was sitting with her rump on her heels. She complied and kneeled upright before him feeling the heat from his body curtained by the open ends of his robe.

“Pull your dress open,” he said.

She swallowed and stared back for a moment. She pulled out the front of her dress and exposed her breasts held up and together by her forearms. She felt him look over her as she bared herself. His hand moved slowly over and she closed her eyes fearful of what he might do. She felt his flaccid cock against her collar. He dragged it down the plumped up flesh of her supported breasts and felt it drop in between them. He reached out and grabbed her roughly again by the back of the neck. He pulled her hard into him and her chin dug into the point where his manhood emerged from his body. She felt his long coarse pubic hair against her lips and tickling her nose. Her arms came forward to support her weight and ease the pain in her knees. Her arms wrapped around his hips and her fingers dug into the small of his back just at the crest of his buttocks.

His big grip pulled her head back, grabbing her roughly by the hair. “Open your mouth,” he said.

She opened for him, looking into his eyes as he watched her. He took his huge soft cock and let it sit on her face, then pushed it past her parted lips with his fingers. He stuffed it into her waiting mouth, filled it right up. She pulled her head back, let it fall from her mouth wetly, swinging in front of her face. She said, “No.” She wanted to be taken roughly, not to be humiliated. She wanted him to dominate her, not make a fool of her.

Omar lifted her and pushed her stumbling towards the hotel bed. She didn't fall on it, she put her hands out to steady herself and turned around to stand and face him defiantly.

He strode up to her face to face and hooked two fingers into the bustier. He pulled it down and out hard and she was wrenched forward from the force. She felt the straps tear into the flesh of her back and cut her before they gave way. She looked up to him again, anger tightening her face.

She stood toe to toe with him, her hair dishevelled, and her breasts hanging out the front of her dress, her ruined bustier tattered below them. Her nipples hardened from the chill.

He turned her, made her face away from him. He pulled her skirt up roughly, making her ass jiggle. She felt his huge hand grab and squeeze her ass cheeks, and his finger slide in between her legs and up inside her. She was so wet it was effortless. She gasped and her knees buckled. He bent her forward and she put her hands on the bed. He knelt behind her and she felt his tongue in her backside. Stroking down and in between, she arched her hips and he got his tongue on her clit, mashing it. Then gliding back wide, and probing into her anus again. She squeezed the sheets tight, her grip white and trembling. She didn't breathe. She wanted him so badly right now.

Then he was gone. She looked over her shoulder and saw him walk to the arm chair and drop into it, his heavy manhood bouncing on the seat.

She moved to him and he watched her intently. She knelt between his legs and waited for an instruction. He nodded his chin to his cock and she picked it up and stroked it lightly. Still flaccid, it squirmed and lolled in her small hand.

"Put your baby finger in your mouth," he said. She put it in her mouth and held his gaze. "Now rub the tip," he said.

She retracted his thick foreskin, gently moved her slick pinky around the head of his dick, tickling at the hole. "Push it in," he said.

Inside his penis? She pushed at the hole. "Push it in," he said again.

Her other hand squeezed him hard and plumped up the end, his hole widened and she gently pushed the tip of her finger into his urethra. It gave way and she watched her burgundy painted nail gradually disappear inside him. She was disgusted and so turned on at the same time, she felt wild with frustration, she wanted to scream, she wanted him to fuck her so badly.

She pulled it back out gently, watching the thin skin around his urethra pucker with her. He stiffened in her hand, his big thing getting firmer and firmer, felt the grip of his hole around her finger as he hardened. She pulled her finger out and a steady clear stream flowed from him. She put her mouth over him and drank him up.

He pulled her head back by her hair and looked at her. His expression had changed, his eyes softened, passionate, and he kissed her, his hand still holding her roughly by the hair. He pushed his tongue into her and kissed her like she hadn't been kissed in a very long time. He stood her up, guiding her by the chin, looking into her eyes, and kissed her deeply again. She put her arms around him and he lifted her skirt and grabbed her cheeks again, pulling them apart and up. She felt his finger at her stretched labia, felt his stiff member hanging against her belly, and felt her thighs sliding together with her own wetness flowing from her freely.

Then he was stern again, roughly pushing her towards the bed. She was bent over it again putting one knee up on the bed sheets. His hands gripped her firmly around the crease of her hip. Then she felt him pushing against her. His manhood spreading her painfully, forcefully, and she cried out. But he thrust it into her hard and started fucking her. It felt like she was being turned inside out. She was wet, and slick with his precum, but this was an assault. She cried out again and pulled the bed sheets up, bunching them against her open-mouthed silent scream. She felt tears stream from her squinted eyes.

She did not want him to stop. This was the punishment she wanted. She deserved it for wanting something more than Mitch. She deserved the punishment for hurting the man she loved. It felt so good. She panted with his thrusts now, pulling away from him, wishing it didn't hurt. It felt like he was going to fuck her forever. Then he pulled it out, and she felt so empty.

He flattened her out so she was face down on the bed, her legs together. What was this? He slapped her on the ass, too hard. His hands pulled her cheeks apart and she felt warm liquid. Had he spit in her ass?

Then she felt him pressing his cock into her anus. Oh, no. He pushed into her and split her wide. She screamed out, but fuck, this was what she wanted. Hurt me. Punish me. He fucked her hard and she cried into the bedsheets. She was being ruined.

"Tell me you love it," he said.

"Ow, I love it," she cried out.

"Tell me you need a big dick," he growled.

"I need it. I need a big dick."

"You can't feel your husband, you hate his tiny little dick."

He was plunging into her, it felt like he was all the way inside her.

"I hate his little dick. I can't even feel it," she cried. "I just want your big dick, fuck me, please fuck me."

She was coming, she felt it building, huge, bigger than she could handle. She felt her arms pulled back and folded behind her, he was pushing her into the bed with one hand while he fucked her with that big thing stuffed up her ass.

"I hate his pathetic little dick," she growled as she came, and it shot through her like something that she never had felt before and it kept coming as she felt him sliding in and out of her, and she was still coming. Her bladder let go and she sprayed the sheets.

“Oh, oh ow, ow,” she said, “Please, oh stop.”

He pulled out of her gently. It felt like sandpaper. She started to cry into the sheets, real tears. What the fuck was wrong with her? Why does she want this? She sobbed once, but pulled her hair over her face and buried herself in the bed sheet. She felt his hand across her back.

She lifted her head, said, “I’m fine,” and she smiled at him, “Oh, my God.” She rolled over, put her forearm across her forehead and hid from him. She started laughing.

THE ORGASM he’d given her was slow, took a long while to get there, but he had her quivering most of that time. Standing there in the bath, her legs trembling. She’d come hard, her legs giving way, and she had sat on his face, knocking him back. They’d both had a laugh. She’d squatted with her hands between her legs, touching herself, laughing soundless. He sat against the edge of the tub, smiling, and watched her.

Now she was in the crook of his legs, her back leaning against him, her hair under his mouth and nose. She had her arms around his thighs and he had his hands over her slender shoulders.

He looked at her thin little rounded knees, held together, sticking up out of the water. She really had a perfect body, he thought. Crazy to think he was laying here with her, able to touch her. She looked so out of his league. But here they were. He ran his hands down her arms watching her glimmering flesh yield to him. Couldn’t believe this was real. She moaned with content and put her neck to the side and he rubbed her back, digging his thumbs into her.

He was pleased with himself, that he hadn’t thought of Kate. But of course that was thinking of Kate. He hoped she was having a good time. Hoped she was getting herself good and sorted.

“Is it really better, you know, when it’s bigger?” he said.

“Sometimes,” she said. She rubbed his knees, “sometimes it just doesn’t matter. Yours is fine Mitch. I’ve seen them like yours before.”

“Omar’s not normally big though.”

“No, he’s definitely—he’s a freak. They’re mostly the same size, you ask me. Every so often they’ll be on the bigger side and occasionally you’ll find a really big one or maybe a really small one. Omar’s is...” she laughed unable to explain. “I was obsessed with it that weekend we spent together. I couldn’t keep my hands off it. I even measured it. Sex is a bit tricky though. I didn’t find it all that comfortable.”

“Kate made us hold them together. He was almost twice as long as me.”

“Yeah? I missed that,” felt her chuckle against him. “And how wide it is.”

“Yeah.”

“How long is yours?”

“I guess half of whatever his was. I don’t really know.”

“Would you like me to measure it for you?”

“Absolutely not.” He laughed, shaking her as she lay across him.

He thought of Kate, alone now with Omar, worshipping that big thing between his legs. Craving it. Laughing with him, enjoying him, loving being filled up, coming on it, him coming into her.

He stiffened into Kiley’s back. Feeling his tip sliding against the smooth skin of her back.

Jesus, why was he aroused by that? He should hate her, the whore. But he knew she wasn’t a whore...

OMAR WATCHED her lying on her back, her hands over face. He watched her big tits wobble, flattened and hanging off her chest towards the bed. She sighed, then started laughing again.

It made Omar laugh too and he told her she was crazy.

“Yeah, I probably am.” She sighed again, sat up and wiped tears from her eyes. She played with her face for a bit, like she had an eyelash in her eye or something, and then she sniffed loudly.

She looked over at him as he lay on his side looking up at her, absently pulling on himself, still hard. She looked down at her torn dress, tried to smooth it out, her breasts hanging over the torn fabric. Her back shook with laughter again. “Well, we’re not stopping here,” she said facing the mirror on the dresser at the end of the bed.

Omar reached behind her and unzipped her dress all the way down. She sat hunched over with the big wide V of her open dress showing her bare back. She sat up straight and pulled the whole piss-soaked thing over her head and flung it into the corner. She was totally naked now, leaned back on her hands, shoulders up to her ears, she turned her head to him and said, What else have you got?

He got on his knees and brought her to him, getting her out of the spot where she had relieved herself. They kissed, his hands on her shoulders, while she pulled on his erection with both hands. She told him to get on his hands and knees and he did. She sat back on her haunches and looked at him, said “You really do have a horse’s cock,” looking at it hanging between his legs, the tip touching the crumpled bed sheets. She got behind him, licked the skin of his back. Her hands went in between his legs from behind and grabbed him, started pulling it down, milking him like a farm animal. She used her tongue down his spine, getting down between his cheeks, feeling how warm he was down there. She put one of his balls in her mouth, pulled it and let it fall. She stroked him, pulled on him, his balls rising up on her wrist on the upward stroke. She watched herself jerk him like this, watched his hanging balls get knocked round. She put her mouth between his cheeks, ran her tongue down to his anus and circled him there. She heard him say something, couldn't tell what it was. She stopped stroking him. She didn't want him to come yet. She spread his cheeks and pushed her tongue into him.

HE PUSHED Kiley forward and they both got to their knees. He slid his erection over her cheeks then in between. She bent for him and he slowly slid himself into her anus. She sighed and steadied herself against the lip of the tub.

“That’s it,” she said. “Fuck me.”

He fucked her like that, slowly and steadily, felt her enjoying it, working with him. He felt the muscles of her back, smooth with the oily water. He slid his hands around her front and ran his fingers over the bunched skin of her tight stomach.

She got herself upright and kissed him over her shoulder. He locked his mouth to hers. Her body felt so good under his fingers. The ripple of her ribs, her flat stomach. He ran his hands over her hips and down the V between her legs. She gasped and her head fell forward. He put a finger in her tight insides and let her work on it. He found her clit with his other hand and tuned it, feeding off her responses.

“Fuck me face to face, Mitch.”

He let himself fall out of her, watched her turn and spread her legs wide, present herself, eyes locked on him.

“Fuck me while you look at me,” she said.

He slid it inside her and she moaned like she wanted it. She felt tight on him, he could see that she felt him inside her. He fucked her slowly, watching her body move under her taut skin. It was slow and gentle until it wasn't, their breaths coming faster, their thrusting more urgent.

OMAR LAID her flat on her back and straddled her waist. His cock, about as hard as it could be, pointing out and touching her under her chin. She grabbed him just below the glans, holding him with one hand, and put her puckered lips to him. She ran her tongue over it, pushed into the hole, then bit on him gently, dragging her teeth from his flange to the very tip.

Her fingers barely made it around him, even up near the tip. She licked him all over, up and down. All the way to his balls, and back up to the tip. It smelled like perfume and her ass. She pressed it to her chest, rubbing the underside along her collarbones. She lay back on her elbows and pushed her tits together for him, looked up at him.

He pushed it through them, and she watched the big flared head pop through, the hole coming right at her, then pull back again. She rubbed her tits along the sides, grabbing herself and thrusting against him, pinching her nipples. "Fuck me," she said.

He got off her chest and bent down and kissed her. She kissed him back and put her arms around him. They stayed like that, kissing, and she brought her legs up and wrapped them around him, coaxing him, pulling his hips toward her. He kissed down her body, biting at her, breathing her in.

"Fuck me," she said again. He moved his hand down her body squeezing her flesh, stopping between her legs. She felt his thumb brush against her, find her clit. She ground herself against him. He took himself in his right hand and pushed it into her. Slowly and gently. He was hard as a rock. Harder than she'd ever felt him before. It was uncomfortable, her hole felt so stretched and sore already, it felt like she was tearing. "Yes," she whispered in his ear, and it just kept coming.

He spread her arms out, clasped his fingers through hers, and looked into her eyes. She moved gently against him, swallowing him up as deep as she could take it. She fucked him like that, her hips moving gently and slowly. She felt him flexing inside her, bulging, spreading her wider and releasing. She watched his face as she used him for pleasure. Slowly he worked into her rhythm and he bit his lip as they picked up the pace. He closed his eyes and pushed himself so deep into her she felt him spread her cervix. He let out a growl and she felt him come right up in her belly, stream after stream, and she pulled him close with her arms and dug her nails into his back as she came too.

KILEY FELT him come inside her at the same time he brought her over the edge of another long, powerful orgasm. She had a wave of passion for him. Her heart swelled for Mitch, she breathed it all in deeply, sucking her stomach in, feeling her chest almost burst. She loved him, she thought, her eyes locked on his. She put her hands over his and brought them over her breasts, letting it all out in short little gasps.

She slowly ground her hips against him, felt him subsiding within her. Her sex felt sensitive to the air. Like she wanted to be touched there. She wanted him again and again. She had the crazy thought that she could bear a child for him. For Mitch and for Kate. What a horrible thing to think.

KATE STARED at the ceiling laying in bed next to Omar. She could feel his eyes on her, knew he was looking at her. She followed the path of a long crack in the stucco, traced its haphazard route, saw it disappear under the white dome light.

She turned and looked at him and he smiled at her.

“What do you think about?”

“Pretty terrible things,” she said. She put her hand on his cheek, heard the scratch of his stubble. “This has been a lot...” looking up at the ceiling again, “this has been a difficult week.”

“Did you get what you were looking for?”

“I guess so.”

“You are leaving tomorrow, so if there is...” letting it trail, raising his eyebrows at her.

“Oh no. I don’t think I could take any more.” She turned to him, lay on her side. “I hate to sound vulgar, but you really did fuck my brains out. It’s not that. Not that at all. That way I got more than I even planned.”

“You don’t know what then?”

She put her hand on his cheek again and kissed him lightly. She lay back and thought about being home tomorrow night. Being alone with Mitch in the quiet. It'd be Sunday when they got back. Mitch away to the office again on Monday morning.

"Why are you with him then? His dick is so small—"

"Hey, don't be juvenile. I don't talk about him like that."

"If he doesn't have what you need...how did you ever end up with him? His money?"

She looked at him. "No, that's not it."

"It helps, I would say," shrugging a shoulder.

"No, it doesn't. The money is a result of who he is. I loved him before he made money."

"I thought his family was rich?"

"Yeah," she said. He smiled at her, arrogant, thinking he'd got her. She stayed quiet for a while.

"He loves you like crazy."

"I know. I love him more than anything."

"I mean, to let you do this. Let you lay with me like this. I don't know what to think."

"I think he understands me more than I could ever have thought."

"Understand your needs?"

She looked down between his legs, saw his big wrinkled penis, his balls, all hanging over his leg resting on the bed sheet. She reached out and ran her finger along it.

"Have you ever been with someone as big as this?"

"I've had boyfriends who were big. But no, no one as big as this." She sat up and looked around the room. "I've got to go," she said. She stood up and picked up her ruined dress. "What am I going to wear? How am I going to get back?"

He still lay on his side, propped up on one elbow, watching her. "This is our night." He pat the bed, said, "It's just you and me, come lay with me til morning."

KILEY LOOKED SO good laying naked on the bed. She lay looking at him, making strange shy sort of faces.

Mitch pulled on a pair of sweatpants, said, “What are you doing?”

She pulled a strand of hair over her face, said, “Nothing.”

He came over, put his arms on either side of her and kissed her. She kissed him back, slowly, holding on to his lips.

“Call me some room service,” she said.

“Yeah. Let’s get some steaks.”

She rolled over onto her stomach and said, “With lots of butter.”

Mitch did feel ravenous. He called down to them while Kiley flicked through channels on the plasma. He looked at her beautiful body, put a palm on her bare ass cheek, white next to her tan. Called down and ordered steaks and added some red wine to the order. Kiley was on her elbows watching the TV, her feet up in the air.

Mitch took them in his hands, said, “I never got to your feet.” Her feet were small, beautifully shaped, and manicured. He looked at the scrunched soles and kissed them. “I hope you’re going to put some pants on,” he said and lay down next to her.

She looked at him. “Just throw a sheet over me when he gets here. I’m not entirely sure we’re done for the evening.” He put his arm over her and kissed her again.

When room service came he let them in. Wanted the guy to see her laying in his bed, her tan shoulder peeking out from the wild mane of hair, the curve of her thin back, and the perk of her rump under the sheet. He looked back at her while he paid, smiling. She looked over at them and winked.

SHE WOKE up around three in the morning with a headache. She pushed Omar’s arm back off her waist and slipped out of bed. She looked out the window, watched one lone car drag along the main strip.

She got her dress off the floor, smelled it. At least it was dry. She put it on her but the seams along the side were torn as well as the stitching along the bodice. She wished she’d brought a bra. Her breasts spilled out of the dress if she didn’t pinch the sides in with her arms. She slipped on her velvet flats and looked over at Omar sleeping naked on top of the dirtied bed.

She called a taxi from outside the room, standing in the cold night. Took her three tries to find one that was open, but she leaned against the wall of the motel and a minivan pulled up in just about five minutes.

The driver didn't mention her dress so she felt like she might be okay, but getting through her hotel was a worry. It was about an hour in the cab and she fell asleep for most of it but woke up when they were passing through George Town. Looking out the windows, the lit up empty stores with the well-dressed headless mannequins in the windows.

She paid him, arms clamped to her side, and gave him a good tip when he dropped her off at the brightly lit entrance of the hotel.

The lone female concierge looked up as she crossed the lobby then looked back down at her computer. She made it and pressed the up pointing button between the two elevators. The door opened and there was a husband and wife and their teen sons in there coming up from the parking. She stood, staring, but had to step in when the dad held the door open before it would close on her. She stepped behind them, around their luggage, nodded at them, and leaned against the back. The wife looked over her shoulder, brief eye contact, then slowly down her body. The smeared makeup, the tangled hair, torn dress. She felt ashamed. She felt like a pig.

When she got to the room she slipped in quietly. The room was still and warm, lit by one lamp. She threw her purse down on the side table and went to the bedroom. Kiley and Mitch lay in the bed together the same way she had woken with Omar. Their heads were at the bottom of the bed, the TV still on, and they lay spooning, Mitch with his arm around her waist. Kiley's chin was tucked to her chest, her hand around his hand, both dressed in T-shirt and shorts, a room service tray on the bed with them.

She went to the bathroom and looked at herself in the mirror. She washed her face and then bunched up her dress and threw it in the bin. She picked up Kiley's dress and folded it away, put her shoes together and against the wall, then hung up Mitch's suit.

She stood and watched them sleep for a moment then put on her shorts and tank top and went to sleep out on the couch.

WHEN MITCH WOKE up the sun was out and he was face to face with Kiley who was still sleeping. He looked at her clean healthy face, her perfect skin, saw how sweet she looked when she slept. He kissed her on the forehead and stopped himself from touching her, didn't want to wake her. He sat up in bed, put his feet on the floor, saw how brilliant blue the sky was. Perfect day for travel but he was going to miss the weather. Back to dreary old London. He hoped Kate was all right, hoped she'd enjoyed whatever it was that she didn't want him to see.

He went to the toilet and relieved himself, looking around while he did, seeing the hanging suit, the tidied shoes. He shook himself off and flushed, noticed the bin was stuffed with a mound of fabric, silk and lace fanning out over the lip. He lifted it out, saw it was the dress she'd bought at the boutique, torn and stinking. He balled it up and put it back in the trash. He went out to the room and looked around but it was just Kiley in there.

He found her sleeping on the couch in the living area. Omar wasn't in his room. He looked at her laying there in her cotton top and the little shorts, looking just as sweet as Kiley. What had made her like this?

He sat with her, ran his leg up her thigh, felt a charge just from feeling her soft skin under his palm. Her eyes stirred and he kissed her.

She put her hand on his cheek and looked up at him and said, "Good morning."

He put his arm around her back, caressed her.

She watched him look her over and saw her eyes tremble. She said, “You might want me to wash up first.”

He nodded at her, squeezed her arm. “How’d it go?”

“Can I just not...maybe just not now. I don’t want to think about it.”

“Did you get what you wanted?”

“Yes. I just want to go home.”

He sat and looked her over, wondered what it was that gave her this power over him.

“Is Omar all right?”

“Yeah, I left him at the other hotel. I just wanted to be here.” She held his hand, and pulled it to her chest. She wasn’t looking at him, just off across the room and he let her hold him like that for as long as she wanted.

MITCH WATCHED Kate and Omar from the big window of the beachside diner. Things had changed between those two and he liked it. He knew every bit of Kate’s body and how it communicated. She had cooled. She was ready to go home. He watched her stand and talk to him. Even smile, friendly enough, but there wasn’t any of the flirtatious hair-touching, the cocked head, eyes peeking up through her long, long eyelashes.

The two of them talking in the low morning sun, working something out. He could look at her all day. Her bare sunburned legs below a big faded collared shirt. Buttoned right up now.

They came in and sat themselves across from Mitch and Kiley, Omar sliding into the booth first, up against the window. Mitch had ordered for Kate—tea, toast, and a soft-boiled. Like every morning. She nodded to him, mouthed the word Thanks.

“Everyone looking forward to getting back to the grind?” Kiley asked, eating her breakfast. She was next to Mitch, holding a fork out over her plate, wearing a bright green tank over a long patterned skirt.

“I know I’ll have a busy week. I’ve got a lot of catching up to do—this one made me turn my phone off the whole time,” Mitch said, smiling over at Kate.

“I’ve seen him checking it, don’t let him tell you he’s fallen out of the loop,” Kate said.

Kiley looked at Mitch, said, "I'm in Norway in a few days for a conference that's going to be a real snoozer."

"Remember what I told you," Mitch said and laughed with her. Kate watched them, frowning.

Omar said, "I have some exciting ideas I wanted to put together for my team. Some recent changes may have injected new blood into our garage. I can't wait to get back home."

Kate looked over at Omar, then back across at Mitch and Kiley. She had nothing to add.

KATE WATCHED HER FRESH-FACED, longtime friend as she flirted with her husband. Sitting there eating, batting her eyes at him, her slim bare arms and her beautiful hair. This was new, this feeling. She loved Kiley, trusted her, but she didn't like how cozy they looked together. They really made a good-looking couple.

She let it happen, enjoyed the discomfort it put in her. She had some fences to mend with Mitch and she was going to show him a good time when they got home. This was fuel for her fire. Kiley would be a distant memory in no time.

She felt Omar next to her, he was turned to her, trying to get her attention. She looked over at him, his handsome face and flashing eyes framed by a beautiful sea under a brilliant morning sky. He wasn't saying anything, just smiling at her strangely. He was hunched over his plate, one elbow on the table. She looked down in his lap at his other hand down there. He was holding up a leg of his satiny shorts and the end of his cock hung out of it onto the bench.

She shook her head at him, still looking at it. She was done though, for sure. She was sore, too sore to consider one more go around, even just a little final quickie before getting on the plane. She wanted to resist but she was so attracted to that thing. So aroused by it. She watched Mitch and Kiley talking business and moved her hand down between his legs, searching for it. She gripped it, squeezing it and running her thumb over the top of the head under the thick foreskin.

Her heart raced, she felt a surge within her, wanting more. She thought of Omar aroused at the table, his huge cock with no place to hide. It would reach the table, she was sure of it. She squeezed him, gave it a little good-bye, and tugged his short leg over it.

She folded her hands together on the edge of the table, took a breath and tried to compose herself. Kiley was watching her from across the table. Had she seen that, figured out what she was doing? She felt embarrassed.

She excused herself and went to the ladies room, crossed the diner and closed herself in. She gripped the edges of the sink, saw her face flushed in the mirror. She ran the tap and splashed cold water onto her face. Pressed the cold back of her hands into her cheeks, struggled to get herself together.

OMAR LOOKED QUICKLY over his shoulder at the mostly empty diner before he stepped quickly into the women's washroom. Kate looked over at him, startled. She said Hey, or something and backed away from the sink.

He stalked over to her and put his hands on her shoulders. He said, "This is your last time." She glanced at the door. She was beautiful, even without makeup. He wanted her.

"Omar, I—" but he interrupted her, putting his mouth over hers and kissing her. He started on her buttons, feeling himself start to harden, straining the front of his shorts. She put her hands on his chest and pushed herself away, looking into his eyes.

They stared at each other in the hazy light coming from the window in the tiny two stall bathroom. Finally, Kate said, "Someone could come in," looking over at the door. Omar moved to her putting his hands to her waist inside her opened denim shirt. He kissed her again, moved his hands up to her big breasts still in a plaid bikini top. He felt her nipples harden and she started to get into it now. He pulled himself out of his shorts and let it hang between them half-hard. He kissed her again, putting both hands around her neck. Her hands were on him, between his legs, milking him, pulling his cock downward and squeezing, fingernails scratching his scrotum, getting him harder.

She broke away, whispered In here, and backed herself into an open stall, pulling him along by his cock. He closed the stall door behind him and bolted it and she sat down on the toilet seat. She reached behind her and untied the top, pulling it away, letting her breasts fall free.

He put his cock in her face and she looked at it, put both hands on it and started stroking him. She told him she was too sore and put it in her mouth, struggled with it, but she kept her hands moving and it felt really good. He let her go a good while, he knew he wasn't going to fuck her. He slid her denim shirt off her shoulders when he felt like he was getting close. He leaned back and pushed his hips toward her and she knew he was going to come. She worked him hard, both hands twisting and stroking, suction noises echoed off the walls of the bathroom as her lips lost their grip on the rim of his big glans, air being sucked in. He felt it building and he pulled the front of his shorts down, let his balls swing.

He put his hand on her ponytail, gripped it, and he pulled her head back so he could come in her face. She kept stroking with one hand and grabbed his balls with the other. She pursed her lips, squinted her eyes, and she held her breath as the first stream landed across her cheek. She squeezed him and pulled on him and he choked as he spurted again and again, splashing her on the chin and neck, on her forehead, then across her collar and her chest. He collapsed back against the stall door, catching his breath.

She didn't say anything, just started pulling on toilet paper, bunching it up in her hands, her tits swinging, his seed running down them. She wiped herself off, throwing clumps of paper on to the floor, trying to keep his semen from getting on her clothes.

"You're amazing," he said, hitching his shorts up, his dick slinging a string of come along the metal wall of the stall. She watched it run down, didn't say anything, just sat there with a ball of cheap coarse paper in her fingers.

"So what becomes of us now?" he said.

"Becomes of us? Nothing," shaking her head, "we go home now."

"I have to see you again."

"We can't do that. It's not like that, you knew that."

"Aren't you flattered?" he watched her not answer, just frown at him, trying to understand this. "Aren't you going to think of me?"

"You can't be attached to me," she said, "I mean, we—it was just sex, remember?"

"Just sex, yes. I want you to think of me. To remember me."

"I will," she said. She looked at him, trying to read his face. Trying to understand where this was coming from.

"I'll remember you, Kate."

“I’ll remember you too,” she said, hands behind her back tying her top back up under the denim shirt. He looked at his dry, smeared semen, dull against the shine of her sweaty clavicle.

“I have something to remember you by.”

“You do?” she said, buttoning up now, looking down. He took his phone out of his pocket. He told her to hold on as he flicked through menus.

“Ah,” he said and turned it to her.

He watched her face, knew what she would see. Could tell what part she was looking at by her expression, her horror, her fear. Knew now she was watching herself stretched out, face down on a bed, lit in yellow by a table lamp. Not a badly shot video. Very sexy. Knew she could see him from behind, straddled over her legs.

KATE PUT her hand over her mouth and watched the little movie in his grip. Saw herself being fucked in the ass. Saw them in bed together, the camera filming from behind Omar but over his shoulder. Saw the brief flash-flash of his cock as he pounded it into her, sinking it deep in between her bouncing ass cheeks.

He tapped the volume button, she heard the clicking sound, and then her rising tinny voice crying out. I hate his little dick. I can’t even feel it, I just want your big dick, fuck me, please fuck me.

She pushed it away, sick. What the fuck was this? She reeled, went to stand up, but the space was tight, Omar so close. She didn’t have the strength to push him away right now. She steadied herself, wobbly legs, and sat back down.

“Why did you film that?” she asked, her voice very quiet. But she knew.

“I wanted something to have,” watching the video himself, smiling as his face was lit up by the screen, “Something to always remember.” He put the phone back in his pocket. “You know, I will have this forever.”

“Why would you do that?”

“Did you want a copy?”

“Christ, no, what are you saying? Why did you film that?”

“I don’t think Kiley would want one. What about Mitch?”

She stared at him. Rage and fear and sudden helplessness all at once. She could feel her lips tremble as she struggled not to say something that would set him off.

“What do you think?” leaning now casually against the wall.

“I think,” she stopped, she was racing, “I think this is a little crazy.” She held her palms up to him, Hey let’s just slow down here.

“Is it really that crazy? I just filmed our lovemaking. I thought you might like a copy as well. This was all for you, all of this,” spinning his forefinger in a circle, the foursome, “I have something that you and Mitch could enjoy later when we are all apart. What do you think?”

“I think this is more than crazy. I think this is criminal. You can’t be serious. This is blackmail, you could go to jail for this, you know that, yeah?”

“Threats,” he shrugged, light-hearted, “You know that that wouldn’t happen. I would be proud of what we had to enter into evidence. I think a lot of people would like to see what I have on my phone,” he patted his back pocket. “What would the police say when they saw the video, what would they think of you? Little slut, they’d say.”

She stood up, mad, grabbed at his pocket, pulling at his shorts. He laughed and grabbed her wrists holding her arms down. She tried biting his shoulder but he blocked her, holding her own arms up in the way. She struggled with him, tried to knee him in the balls, but she couldn’t. He pushed her back down on to the toilet, his big palm spread across her chest.

He smiled at her, said “It’s in the cloud anyway,” looking up at the ceiling, “even if you could get it from me.” She knew it was.

“What do you want from me?” she said. “Do you want money?”

“What can you offer me?” he pondered, putting his finger to his bottom lip.

“What do you—do we even know Mitch would care?”

“He would care. I’m not sure he was really okay with any of this to begin with. I’m not sure you’ve gotten away with this unharmed. Even without the video. Just wait til you’re back in your cozy little home, the two of you alone. Just the two of you alone, no sunshine, no friends, no tropical drinks or holidays...but you will remember what you did. Mitch will remember all the things he watched me do to you. Imagine if he could see the things he missed. See the things you begged me to do to you.”

“I’m going to tell him all of it anyway.”

“Telling him is not the same as seeing it. Seeing how it happened. It shows all the little details you may have left out. Hearing you beg for me.

And what about his investors? Would they be as confident with a man with a little dick, his pretty but unsatisfied wife begging for another man's big cock?"

OMAR CAME BACK and sat at the table across from Mitch and Kiley. He started eating, said, "She'll be right out, she's just cleaning her face."

Kiley looked at the two of them, frowned, got up and went into the bathroom.

"It's done, yeah?" Mitch said.

Omar nodded but didn't look up.

"Good, mate," Mitch said and took a sip of his orange juice with a splash of Smirnoff from his flask. It was done.

A few thousand quid to this meathead every month, and he'd get to watch Kate squirm all year long. Hiding money from him, struggling to come up with ways to disguise payments to her big-dicked tryst. Omar would send her pictures of himself, maybe a video where he was jerking that thing, he'd demand photos and videos of her, Kate touching herself. A year of punishment. She'd love it. She might like her dicks big but Mitch knew something maybe she didn't. Mitch knew what he could provide. He could punish her, torment her. That was what she wanted, that was where she lived. That was what made his wife wet. The threat of destruction. Mitch could keep her on the edge of her seat. Build her a volcano where she could sit and dangle her feet over the fire, feel the heat from the chaos and death below her. That was what she truly craved.

Kate liked telling lies, now she'll have one all for herself, all year long. She came out of the bathroom, Kiley was rubbing her back.

Mitch stood up, threw some bills down to cover the bill and the tip. "My treat," he said smiling at them all. The whole week was his treat. Kate was pale-faced, sick with dread.

"What's wrong?" He asked her.

"I don't think she's feeling very well," Kiley said, still rubbing her back, big round circles that made Kate sway as she stood.

Kate said, "Let's just go."

Mitch put his sunglasses on as they walked out into the sunshine, "Yeah, we've got a plane to catch."

Blackmail

Down In The Tube

OMAR WANTED another five thousand euros. Kate had sold a Birkin bag on ebay last month and mailed the cash to him in a manila envelope. She would do it again. Mitch wouldn't notice any purse she had, and he definitely wouldn't notice a purse that she didn't have.

She stood in the fitting room at the little boutique called The Blakely Shop on a very narrow cobblestone path in Knightsbridge. She felt the cold dense weight of the polished marble under her feet, standing staring at herself in the mirror, sealed into the polished wood stall with brass locks. Standing in her bra and panties, a quilted leather jacket hanging from her hands, looking at herself, down at her knees for too long now.

Getting the money was easy, the amounts he asked for were very small. Very manageable for her. She wondered if he didn't realize what he could get away with. He held her life in his big, strong hand. It was the discovery she worried about. Like if Mitch somehow found out she was selling her purses and jewelry for cheap. He'd ask her why. A flush of embarrassment came over her. She pictured herself, caught off guard, stuttering her way through an answer in a way that he would know that was trouble. She'd done this to herself. Humiliated herself. It killed her to think that Mitch could find out what she'd done, how she'd brought them both to the brink of ruin. He would hate her.

"Can I find you another size, Kate?" From outside, the associate being helpful, but wondering what was taking so long.

“I’ll be right out,” she said, throwing the jacket onto the bench. She took one last look at herself in the big mirror, standing almost bare, shook her head at herself and got dressed.

She went out to the counter, bought a few items, and on impulse had them add a handbag on display behind the pretty girl cashing her out that she knew she could sell online very easily. They put everything folded away in flat boxes for her, into tall paper bags with twine handles, and she walked down the narrow path headed for the subway.

When she’d got home from Cayman with Mitch three months ago she was a wreck. She’d just shown her true, horrible self to the man she loved. That was ultimately, she thought, what it had all been about. To show him who she was, what she wanted. She’d anticipated how that would feel coming home. The two of them alone together with the truth. She wanted that, as hard as it would be. She knew she didn’t want to live the rest of her life bottled up, denying herself, lying to herself and to her husband. To grow old, die unfulfilled. She was prepared to defend herself, to mend fences if she wasn’t tossed out of her husband’s life for good. But instead of moving forward with Mitch, instead of building something new and honest with him, something potentially wonderful, she came home unable to speak, just looking at him made her tear up, almost break down. She’d spent almost four days inside, laying in bed crying while Mitch was at work. Wishing she’d been more careful. But it was too late, she’d ruined them. Mitch saw her, how fragile she was in those first few days, and instead of turning away from her, letting her suffer like she deserved—for all he knew she was just filled with regret—he consoled her. Came to her and held her, let her cry into him.

They never talked about what had happened. The things he saw her do, or the night she had alone with Omar where there were things he wasn’t meant to see. And Mitch loved her as he did before. Fuck, maybe even more. He saw her for what she was and still loved her. It would have been perfect if there wasn’t this enormous looming storm on the horizon. How long could she keep it at bay, how long could she keep Omar happy without her husband knowing? And how long would Omar be reasonable? How long until he realized he could ask for and get millions from them. Then Mitch would know and whatever illusion he had about her would be dispelled. It was one thing to be private little freaks, a loving couple experimenting with other people in some distant tropical locale, but in Mitch's world this could break you. End you.

She walked into a place called The Black Bull on a whim. Just stepped into the dark, wood panelled narrow little pub in out of the sunlight on the street. She sat down at a booth, pushing her bags in ahead of her, and ordered a black coffee and a double Jameson's. She checked her watch, it was just past twelve o'clock and the place was empty except for one elderly man sitting with his back to her at the bar. Yeah, she'd been drinking more but it was okay.

Omar liked to watch her, that was his thing. He'd get her on Skype maybe once a week at night. She'd have her laptop in the bathroom with her, locked up, Mitch just outside the door fast asleep. He'd make her take her clothes off for him, encouraging her, telling her what to do, his voice a mechanical echo heard through an earbud in one ear. She would talk quietly, whispering in the bathroom, the fan on so Mitch might not hear her. He made her play with herself, and she would come for him while he took his cock out and stroked it, watching her. Then he'd make her watch him come, say dirty things to her, then his hand got big in the camera and he'd switch it off and he was gone.

He'd asked for dirty things too, weird things like her worn underwear. He'd mailed her a pair of white thong strap panties last month, and she wore them for a few days then mailed them in a ziploc like he'd asked. It was strange but humiliating. Omar didn't seem like the type, a panty-sniffer. She knew it was so that she could feel that thong between her cheeks for days, thinking about him; knew that they were white so that they wouldn't be after a few days and that she would feel ashamed seeing her soiled panties slide into a ziploc for someone else to see. And it was humiliating. Yeah, she thought about him a lot wearing those tight little pants wedged inside her, thought about the consequences of her actions, and when she'd dropped the soiled cotton wad into the baggie her hands were shaking.

What would everyone that she knew think if that video ever got out? What would Mitch think seeing her like that? What about Derek, what would he say to Mitch? What could he say. It could really ruin their business. The humiliation. The wife of one of the owners worshipping some other man's cock, begging for it. Humiliating her husband, saying his dick was so small she hated it, couldn't feel it. Mitch would never recover. How could he look any one in the face again. She would be cast out finally. Thrown out in the cold blue light like she deserved.

It would be in the papers. That's for sure. It was tasty enough, lurid enough. Mitch wasn't some well known person at all, but the Investment House was big and they had name brand clients. It was scandalous enough for the news without a doubt. And the story came with a video so x-rated they would love to say how they couldn't even discuss the contents of the video. A surefire way for everyone to seek it out, to find out what could be so terrible. She thought of the highlights everyone would see: her inserting her pinky finger into his penis, being peed on, her cheeks pushed apart and her ass fucked while she came, milking him with her hands while her tongue was in his anus. Was there more?

She'd put the whisky back right away, nursed the hot coffee. She looked around but the bartender was gone somewhere so she threw down some bills, twice the amount she figured, grabbed her bags and headed for the subway again. Just a few stops to where she'd parked the car, then drive home and she felt like she was done for the day. Just go home and lie down for a bit. Think a little.

She felt the spice of the whisky in her nose, made her feel a little tighter, a little more put together. She skipped down the steps to the train, paid her fare, and got down to the platform. She wished it wasn't quite so busy, just wanting some space right now, some quiet. She felt a headache looming.

She felt her phone vibrate against her stomach, tucked into the big square pocket of her pullover. She pulled it out and checked the screen as the train rushed in, felt the wash of air buffet her face and toss her hair. It was Omar, and there was an attachment. She felt a horrible little tingle. Some new assignment. She swiped it, waited for it to open. There it was, like some unseeing life form from the bottom of the ocean, long and threateningly wide, foreskin peeling back a bit from the tip, opening but askew, off to the side.

FRONTEC MOTORSPORT WAS A LOW BUNGALOW, a service station in the fifties now transformed into a high end auto boutique, the old brick facade still recognizable under the fresh yellow painted stucco, car logos and racing flags. Race tuning street cars and high end performance parts were the mainstay of the business, but the small F3 team was the passion that kept Omar excited. The rest was income and paperwork, but building and racing was what it was all about.

He looked out the bathroom window, through hazy grey dust from old rain, around the parking lot, over the roof of his bright blue M3 parked right up next to the building. No one out there. He looked back in the mirror, holding his phone and waiting to hear it chime, his erection sticking out of his zipped down grey jumpsuit and hanging to rest on the sink.

They had four cars to finish today, three easy little tune-ups, the fourth was going to be harder, re-welding the suspension on some rich kid's murdered Mercedes. But he had two guys on that. Then tonight they would be up very late, pulling the motor out of the F3 and he was redoing an injector. He'd had an idea.

His new investor's cash injection had given them a little bit of a buffer, some room to experiment, but who knew how long it would last. This could all be over tomorrow. His phone chimed, a little chirp like a tree frog from the jungle.

Kate: It's beautiful

This woman telling him his big cock was beautiful had a husband who gave him fifteen thousand euros for his iPhone. Wanted the video he'd shot of him with her, the video the husband told him to take. Omar made it good for him, made her beg for it, violated her, made her say terrible things. He wondered if Mitch had ever watched it.

Omar: I'm going to come for you

Kate: I'm watching

She was playing along, being cute, humouring him. He could make her do just about anything, he knew that. She was worried. Worried but somehow eager. She was placating him here and he knew Mitch didn't want this easy on her.

He enjoyed tormenting her. Thinking of this cock-hungry, spoiled slut turned on and horrified at the same time made him harder. She was nasty; if she wasn't so expensive to keep he would have wanted to steal her away. But she loved Mitch, and she sure loved money.

In the end it worked out better for him. He got to tease her, make her strip, make her watch him jerk himself off. He got to see her pretty face when she came, her legs spread in front of the webcam her hand moving so fast on herself it was just a pale video smudge. And Mitch was paying, Omar was making money. He'd get some from Kate too, token stuff, cash in the mail that he would spend on clothes or dinners.

Omar: Take off your panties

He stroked himself, bringing back his full hardness, and waited. Whoever had been in the bathroom before had left a terrible smell but he couldn't open the window. He waited, flattened out the corner of a picture of a girl, bare breasted holding a wrench, torn from a magazine and stuck on the wall.

Kate: I can't, I'm on the subway

When he'd got back from Cayman and gone to his apartment he'd had this unshakeable feeling that someone had been in there. Nothing was disturbed, everything was the way it should be, he just felt it. It was a few days before he'd gone into his cloud account looking for an invoice he'd stored and realized the video that should be there wasn't there. He hadn't checked before—really blackmailing them was not something he would do—but he stared at the empty folder the video should be in and felt a little concerned. He looked around his empty apartment and considered how scary the thought was that Mitch was the kind of guy who could get something like that done. Unless of course it was done through the phone he'd given him. So he checked his log and saw that he'd deleted the file, permanently trashed it from this very computer, roughly the time he was in the air over the middle of the Atlantic.

Omar: take them off now

That was the only hitch. After that the cash came, and some instructions about what he should demand, what he should say. He forgot about it, the intrusion, put it away. Better to just give them what they want. Let them see he had nothing to hide, he was on Mitch's side. He wasn't really the kind of man who could take money through threats anyway. Mitch could keep his cloak and dagger stuff, Omar was into his plan, wasn't going to be a problem, just keep the money coming.

Kate: everyone will see me

He pictured her on a crowded train, panicking, having to slide her panties down without anyone seeing. If it was very busy she could get away with it. He smiled.

Omar: take them off and send me a picture. I want to see your pussy

SHE WANTED TO ARGUE, plead for some leniency. Let me get somewhere private. But they'd done this dirty little thing before. She knew that the point of it was to humiliate herself, that was what he wanted more than to see what her pussy looked like right now at this moment. This was an exercise in shame and he was enjoying it. Her heart was racing too.

She put her phone in her lap and looked around. The train wasn't that busy, people in seats, a few empty spots, no one had to stand. She couldn't do this without being noticed.

She'd tried to drag the conversation out with Omar, wait until she was at a stop, duck out and handle this in the ladies' room, but there wasn't time.

She fiddled with her waist, trying to look like someone whose belt was too tight, uncomfortable. She fussed with herself looking around gauging people's reactions. No one looked bothered.

She slid her hand down her waistband and felt for the thin edge of her panties as they crossed over her hip, found it and pulled it up. She couldn't break it. She kept her eyes up, watching for the other passengers. She crossed her other hand over, hidden behind her big purse sitting in her lap, and slipped it into her skirt. She used two hands to try and tear the string of her panties. She tried her best not to grimace but the fabric was too strong and her arms started to shake with effort, she felt the fabric cutting into the flesh of her fingers. Her phone vibrated in her lap.

Omar: Let me see it

Why couldn't he have called while she was in the fitting room at the store. It was like he knew.

Kate: I'm doing it, hold on

She looked through her purse, trying to imitate someone who'd misplaced something important. She frowned and looked around, trying to remember, putting on a show for the people that weren't really paying attention anyway. She looked briskly through her shopping bags, still unable to find this imaginary thing, then stood up and checked the pocket of her knit cashmere top, smoothing her hands over her skirt. She sat back down, flipping the back of her short skirt up so that her bare cheeks came down on the cold of the subway seat. She could feel her panties, pulled up at the hip, wedged between her cheeks.

Her frustrated movements caught someone's eye, could see him in her periphery, middle-aged guy, Persian, glasses. He was looking over. She picked up her phone and flicked through it, tried to look boring again.

Kate: they're coming down now

She put her right hand behind her slowly, slid it under her skirt. She hooked her thumb through the waistband and slid it over towards the middle of her cheek. She carefully lifted herself off the seat and started to pull them down, felt them pulling out of her creases and across the soft flesh of her ass and thighs. She put herself down, felt the cold of the dirty seat against her bare ass. Her panties were pulled down to the tops of her thighs. She looked around once more, leaned over and looked into her bags, put her thumbs into the sides of her panties again and slid them down smoothly and swiftly. She felt them slide over her knees and down her calves, and once hidden behind her tall paper shoppers with the tissue tufted out the top, she peeled them over her Gucci horsebit loafers. She tucked them into a bag, dropped them in under the pastel tissue and sat up, keeping her head down; like if she didn't look up and see people staring then she'd got away with it. She looked up at the adverts, didn't see any faces opened towards her.

Kate: they're off

Omar: show me

She fiddled with her phone a bit, putting it off. She looked up again, saw no one was looking and she slowly brought her legs apart. Her skirt was short enough that the young couple across from her could see her pussy if they were to look. She leaned forward to look in her bag again, saw her flash was on and the camera was ready. She put her hand up her skirt between her legs and touched at the screen hoping to get the button. She heard the shutter sound off and closed up her legs. Sat back up looking around, no one watching her but the Persian man again. Did he see?

She looked at her screen, swiped through the menu to find the picture. Not the best, the flash lighting up her thighs an electric white, but you could see the focus was on her mound, just above the plastic subway seat, clear enough to see individual strands of her pubic hair. Proof.

She sent it off and waited.

She got a call on Skype and accepted, knowing what to expect. Opening it up and seeing his point of view, the unsteady camera filming his right hand wrapped around his huge cock, stroking it. She watched him work it, watched the thick foreskin bunch up then roll back. She squinted a little, felt a little nauseous as she could tell he was close, waiting to see his semen spurt from him any second now. But she didn't look away, saw it as it happened, a clear spray at first, in all directions, then milky streams into the sink, onto the mirror, the camera jostled so much it was hard to see after that. Final shot of his big hand choking it right up at the end his glans dark and full from the pressure, milking out a final drop beaded at the tip.

Frosted Windows

BY ONE O'CLOCK in the afternoon Derek Sutton had one of his most important clients, Jahangir Dehghan, an Iraqi natural gas guy, cash heavy but still safely diversified in their fund, back at ease. The panic came early in the morning, concerns over changes in the Euro's stability. Fucking Germany. The last thing they needed right now was someone pulling out their four hundred and fifty-eight million pound investment. Not now. Any time would be bad, but please, not now. He put his polished, handmade wholecut Oxfords up on his desk and allowed himself a breath, allowed himself to enjoy a slight moment of relaxation leaned back in his chair. Crisis averted. It was a conspicuous display, one meant for the dozen other executives outside who could see through the glass sheets of his office that looked out over the Square Mile.

He saw his family staring back between his shoes from inside their silver frame. He closed his feet up, shutting off their exigent faces smiling at him. From the frying pan to the fire. The dread was back and he put himself upright again.

He saw her out of the corner of his eye walking across the floor, head bobbing along above the short, smoked glass cubicles that ran along the floor outside his office. His brother's hot little wife. Couldn't actually ever really remember seeing her here in the offices before, though he figured he must have. She just looked out of place.

She turned heads in some inky knitted top hanging off her shoulders like a cape—she couldn't hide her large chest. Sunglasses on indoors. A lacy, sheer skirt that ended too high, showing off her short but shapely legs. Bare even though it wasn't really Spring yet. She looked like a very expensive little hooker.

She turned unexpectedly, caught him looking, and lifted her hand, gave him an expressionless contracted wave. He nodded his head at her through the glass and smiled weakly.

"HOW DO you do that thing? Make the windows go..." she said, motioning with her hand like a slow screen being lowered down in front of her face.

Kate was standing in the doorway of his office, the glass door closing slowly behind her. She'd walked in unannounced, just opening the door stepping in, throwing her purse onto his couch and addressing him.

Mitch looked up at her, sitting at his huge modern desk, paperwork spread out. He smiled, genuinely pleased at the surprise. He picked up a tiny flat remote and touched a button. The entire glass wall of his office went a frosted white in an instant.

"This locks, yeah?" she said, thumb pointing at his door.

He pressed another button and the door clicked to lock. He shook his head. I mean, it had to be obvious to everyone seated out in the office. Or would they think they were going to argue? He didn't know which he'd prefer them to believe.

"Well, isn't this a surprise," he said, throwing a folder of printouts onto his desk, into the clutter. He leaned back in his chair and put his hands behind his head. "What can I do for you, Mrs Sutton?"

"I'd like to say something really sexy here, Mitch, some clever but dirty little play on words, but I don't think I have that kind of time." She walked over to him, but he stayed leaning back.

"Oh, what's got into you?"

"I can work with that one—it's what I want to get in me that's brought me here."

"Good one, Kate." He said looking at her through half closed eyes.

She sat herself on the corner of his clear acrylic desk, just a transparent slab on heavy industrial looking wood and metal trestle. She touched her fingers along the hem of her short, lacy skirt. "Can I show you something?"

“I can’t wait,” he said.

She pulled the skirt up slowly, over her bare thighs. The sun wasn’t out, but the grey sky behind him, out beyond the floor to ceiling windowed wall of his office, lit her up bright and shadowless. Her skirt inched up over her mound and he could see she wasn’t wearing any panties. The skirt came right up to her hipbones and he saw between her legs spread wide by the sharp table corner that she was wet. She was swollen and aroused, beads of her own wetness on her tufted hair.

Mitch felt a little light-headed in the moment, so aroused by his dirty wife.

“How has this happened?” he said, sitting forward, but he thought he knew.

“I was out shopping and I was thinking about this, coming to see you, and the more I thought about it, the more I liked it...”

Mitch doubted it. Some little online encounter with Omar more likely. That excited him too. Her sexy, hung lover turning her on while, as far as she knew, threatening to destroy her life. Mitch’s life too. Forcing her to be bad, making her be a dirty little whore against her will. Bending to her lover’s demands to save the life of her husband. Now turning to him after some hot little exchange made her so wet the inside of her thighs shone.

Mitch wheeled his chair between her legs, ran his hands up her thighs and watched her quiver. She closed her eyes and put her head back, waiting for him to relieve her.

“Can you do this without making a sound?” he asked her. She nodded and put both her hands over her mouth.

“There’s about a dozen people just the other side of that glass who know exactly why you’re here.”

“Please,” she said, lifting a palm up so he could hear her, “Just do it.”

He made her anticipate it another moment, then lowered himself to her, felt how hot and full her flesh was down there, felt her dampness on his cheeks, smelled her scent in his nose. She was full, and wet and coppery.

He slid a finger inside her, felt her part for it, accept it. She hunched forward, hands still clasped over her mouth, and he felt her wrists across the top of his head. She pushed her hips to him, wanting him deeper, and he felt her start to tremble when he put two fingers inside her. She was panting through her nose, shaking enough that he could hear a tremulous vibration from his coffee cup on the tabletop. He felt himself hard, trapped, pushing against the front of his woollen pants, as he gave his wife everything he could. She started to sob as she got close, struggling to keep quiet, then she came for him, squeaking quietly into her palms.

"JESUS CHRIST," he said, standing up now between her legs. Kate could see he was hard, his pleated pants showing the tip of his erection pressing out at an angle.

He started to take his jacket off and she stopped him.

"Fuck me in your suit," she said, and pressed her fingertip against the end of his cock. He kissed her, taking her face up in his hands. She unzipped him, pulled him out of his boxers, felt how slippery he was already.

When she stroked him, just using her thumb and finger, his breath quavered and she felt his weight against her. He was so close already.

She pulled back, looked up at him, said, "Fuck me." She arched her back, pushing her mound out to him, her legs spread by the table corner, the tips of her toes on the floor. He slid it into her and it felt so good to have him inside her. She sighed for him, let him hear that she wanted it.

She put her hands inside his jacket, around him, scratching at his back as he slowly fucked her. He'd been going to the gym four days a week since they'd got back from Cayman. He wasn't muscular yet, not noticeably bigger. But she could tell, if you were familiar with him you might think he just looked better. More masculine. She ran her hands over him, could feel that he was harder, stronger under the soft cotton of his tailored shirt. She felt the movements under his skin as he thrust himself into her.

"Oh God, Mitch," she whispered in his ear, "I'm going to come." He pushed himself in her as far as he could and she worked on it, found the spot that would take her over the edge. She came again, biting her lip, her arm around his neck, pulling his head against her, the coffee cup rattling behind them.

He thrust into her again, making her squirm, and she tightened on him, felt how hard he was. It tickled her, was uncomfortable, but she knew he was close, she said, "Let me see you come."

He pulled himself out and she watched him come, watched it spurting from him and into her pubic hair. He grunted, holding in the noises he wanted to make, pushing his cock against her, sliding it through her tuft.

“Oh my God, Kate,” he said and kissed her again, leaning on the table. She put her hands to his cheeks and started laughing.

“I don't know what came over me,” she said.

“I did, you just watched,” he said, laughing too, she could see how happy he felt.

“I really need something,...” she said, moving her hand in circles like she was wiping herself. He looked down between her legs, and she liked him looking. Seeing the mess down there, their evidence. She smiled up at him. He sighed, walked over to his gym bag on the couch, her purse thrown up against it. He had his palm pressed into his pants, just above his softening cock, trying to keep the two from touching. He pulled a towel out from the bag, and tossed it to her.

She wiped herself with his towel, smelled the fresh laundry smell from it, liked him seeing her like this, dirty, sexual, in love with him. He watched her clean herself and slowly the dread crept over her again, the smile on her face diminishing. He came to her took an end of the towel and squeezed his dick in it, wiped himself, then zipped back up.

“I love you,” she said, feeling so tender towards him.

“I love you too,” he said, “What's wrong?”

“Nothing at all,” she said and stood to kiss him. “You make me very happy.”

She went to his couch and sat down, crossed her legs. Mitch sat in his chair, examined the front of his trousers, wiped at them. He laced his fingers together and looked at her. So handsome, her husband, sitting in his powerful throne, grey expanse of sky behind him, the City of London moving around below it. She could cry if she thought about it. What she'd done to him. The danger he was in. Sitting there so unsuspecting, a mammoth weight dangling over his head, the rope ready to snap, and she couldn't even yell to him to watch out. She pushed it out, away, exhaled heavily.

“You sure you're alright, Kate?”

“Mitch, I couldn't be better,” she said, forced a smile, got away with it. “You home for dinner tonight?”

He looked at his screen a moment, said “Yes, I will.”

“Can I make you something?”

“I think I'd like to take you out,” he said, picking up the remote.

“Hold on,” she said. She stood up and found her balled up panties in her purse, she kicked her loafers off and slid herself into them, letting him watch her do it.

He smiled at her and clicked the button, the window was clear again, people bustling about just feet away from them. His secretary's back to her, signing for a package, the delivery man looking right at her. She was standing there in her bare feet. She shook her head at him, “Asshole.” She put her feet into the shoes, anyone watching would have had their suspicions confirmed. He laughed behind her.

She walked up to him, leaned over him, one hand on his desk. “You're like a dirty little teenager, wanting everyone to know you just had a shag in here.”

“You do too, you know it.”

“Yeah, but still,” she said, looking at his desk, “You should clean that corner up, no need to be vulgar.”

He looked at the dried smear they'd left there, wiped it with his suit sleeve. She grabbed her purse and went to the door. “See you tonight.”

“Love you,” he said.

Box Within A Box

MITCH'S SECRETARY, Maureen Mehrotra, twenty-five, and three years out of York St. John's business school, watched Kate's figure work its way down the floor and to the elevators. Mitch saw Maureen's eyes follow her along then look down at the blank briefcase-sized cardboard box with the two big, bright green shipping labels. She picked it up, felt it wasn't too heavy. Mitch was expecting it. He waved her in, catching her eye through the glass.

"Thanks, Maureen," he said, "Just on my desk, please."

Maureen had been with him since he got here, worked with him even when he was just doing Compliance. She was quick and smart, and she wanted more than what she had there. She was taking courses at night and Mitch helped her out when he could. She put the big box on his desk, cleared the space for it.

"Can I get you anything else, Mr Sutton?"

He told her he was alright and let her show herself back out without saying anything. He got a sharp little blade from a bowl on his desk and slit the tape open on the box and peeled the flaps back. A box within a box. The one inside pale blue, glossy, adorned with a layered cloth ribbon in navy blue. He lifted the lid off and looked inside at what he'd purchased, pushing aside the silk to uncover it. He closed it up and took his notebook from his pocket.

He buzzed Maureen back in, asked her to tape it back up, told her someone was coming to get it. He found the page he was looking for in the tiny, worn leather notebook. Dialed the number into his personal iPhone.

"I need you to swing by here later today, pick something up...yeah, it'll be here, ask my secretary...a box...no...I need you to take it for me, put it somewhere...I'll be out, right...yes, I have an idea...alright then, call me when you've got it..."

He hung up, saw Derek coming in, waving off Maureen. Derek dropped himself in Mitch's couch, undid the button on his jacket.

"Finished your little quickie?"

"I have no idea what you're talking about."

"I can smell her in here," he said, putting his arms over the back of the couch.

"Well she was just here, Derek," he said, picking up the folder he'd been working on.

"I can smell her insides."

Mitch looked up at him, "Don't be so vulgar."

"Don't be so coy and I won't have to."

"It's not coy when I refuse to answer questions you don't deserve an answer to." He threw the folder back down, and undid his cufflinks. "And please don't forget you're talking about my wife."

"You're not going to ask me about Jahangir?"

"Well, you're here in my office and not splashed across the sidewalk thirty floors below your window so I'm going to venture all is right again with Iranian Natural Gas."

"All is right again."

"I knew you'd do it, he can't back out any way. Just rattling your cage."

"What makes you think that?"

Mitch looked at him for a moment. "I'm going to the gym."

"Before you go: Brian brought me a folder, you invested in a Formula race team?"

"It's a tiny investment. It's a shop too, retail, repair and the like..." he said, standing up.

"But why?"

"Just curious. I have an idea."

"It's not even that much money though." Derek said standing up.

"Because it's an experiment."

"I've liked your experiments before, but they made sense. This is stupid."

Mitch picked up his bag off the couch, bumped Derek with his shoulder.

“Why don’t you just mind your fucking business,” he said, quiet and up close. He turned and left, went to the gym and didn’t look back.

A LIST of her crimes presented before a magistrate: The defendant was dissatisfied with the size of her kind and loving husband's slightly below average penis. She tried tricking her husband into a threesome, offering to bring other girls into their bed so that it would open the door to bringing another man on too, eventually. When her husband never took the bait she found a way to trick her best friend into a threesome hoping that her husband would feel safe with someone he knew and liked, and anticipated that he couldn't resist her. The defendant wanted her best friend's ex-boyfriend's big cock. She manipulated her friend into asking that ex-boyfriend into coming along, bringing his large penis with him. She did that regardless of how difficult it would be for her innocent friend. She tricked her husband into that threesome and when she figured he was hooked, finally aroused by the prospect, she took it all away. She let it sit for days and then teased it back, now attached with the object of her desire, Exhibit A. Holding up a print of that photo of Omar's tremendous organ. Gasps from the jury.

That your honour is just a brief outline of the efforts made by the defendant to essentially cheat on her husband to solely have intercourse with a man with an impressively large penis. She did this, went to this Machiavellian effort, because she is a reprobate, a disgusting whore.

Kate clicked the key fob and the lights flashed on her silver Bentley Continental, lighting the low underground ceiling in two amber flashes. She dumped herself in and slammed the door up behind her.

She put both hands over her face and leaned forward until she felt her forehead touch the polished wood steering wheel. She willed it to come, brought it from herself hoping to feel it cleanse her. It rolled over her like a storm, her face filled with blood, tightened and carved. The tears streamed from her, and then she could feel the sobs, embraced them. She heaved and cried, filled the car up with her sounds of grief. She moaned, said No, no as much as she could, through her running nose. It felt so good, just giving in, letting herself be overcome. She cried it all out, cried herself exhausted alone in her car, fifty feet underground. She hugged the wheel.

When it was done, when she felt dried out and swollen and psychogenically empty, she leaned herself back into the leather.

This couldn't go on. She needed to end it. She needed a plan.

FOUR DAYS A WEEK now Mitch was going down to the gym and lifting weights. Heavy lifting with a personal trainer, it had made him stronger, more aggressive. Not some twenty-four hour fitness joint, some glass and steel juice bar with yoga classes. This was a hole in the wall, a brick and peeling plaster joint, no one here wore yoga pants. His personal trainer wasn't some pretty boy with abs and nice hair, he had a neck like Mitch's thigh and looked like he could flip a Beetle.

The changes, though not readily apparent yet, gave him an amazing feeling. It was something he would analyze—considering the changes to his thinking patterns, his desires, his decisions—as all the work he was doing boosted his testosterone. He was the same Mitch, but he was careful to notice when he was thinking too rashly. Don't let this newfound masculinity make you make a mistake, become too reactionary. Like telling your brother to mind his own fucking business when he had a legitimate question. He had to watch that. Mind your own business. What Mitch invested in was literally Derek's business. It didn't even make sense.

He got himself under the bar in the squat rack. Two hundred and eighty pounds, ten more pounds than last week. Not exactly Hercules, but definitely better than last year's Mitch. He broke it out and walked a step. He squat easy and deep, five reps.

He'd made a few mistakes recently. Not snapping at anyone, that was new, just generally bad decisions. Things he would have never tripped up on before. This thing with Omar. How fucking crazy does one have to be to pretend to blackmail your wife? And to give up honest-to-goodness blackmail material to a stranger just to make it all seem authentic. What an absurd action for him to have taken. Far too risky. However...

He fucked his wife in his office today. He'd used another man like a device to arouse her to an inescapable intensity, and she had come with Mitch's dick stuck inside her. He had done that to her. He had pleased her.

She didn't know it but Mitch was the one who had her on this erotic razor's edge, he was her sexual dynamite, tickling her little pussy from the shadows. He was fucking right to do it. It was the little unpredictable sexual tantrums she'd pull, the ones like today, that made him know that pretending to blackmail her was the greatest idea he'd ever had.

But still, he'd made himself vulnerable, exposed himself to Omar, a relative wild card. Sure he'd bought the phone from him, destroyed it. He'd had Omar's computer scrubbed and scoured. It was gone. That video didn't exist at all any more. It only existed in a seedy, derelict theatre playing on one screen only: in his mind's eye. He watched it once. His hands shook as he destroyed the phone. Tore it to pieces and spread its guts across the beach in Cayman.

But what if? Omar was really an unknown. He'd figured he was a rather simple mechanic who wouldn't have the ambition to try and really blackmail Mitch. But what if he still had a copy somehow, what if he had friends who would have the nerve. Some seedy Eurotrash who was good with computers, pulling that video back to life off some dusty server in North Carolina. He was smart enough to get Mitch to invest in his little garage, his racing team. He wanted that instead of cash. That had surprised him. Pretty bold, pretty smart.

And what about new videos. What had happened today, what had set Kate off? What about what he might record in the future? He had to be more careful moving forward. This business was far too risky. But there was still something he wanted to see, something special. Something already in motion and he wasn't ready to stop just yet.

He finished his squat then moved on to power cleans. He hit the shower and stood under the hot water, worked something out, something Kate would love. Worked out how he was going to do it to her. She'd hate it too. That's why she'd love it. His little Kate. He loved doing this for her. Really giving it to her like she wanted. No other man could do that for her. He was her fucking God.

THE LAST THREE months had been the worst of her life. She was sleepless, worn-out, hungover in the mornings. She was taking Ambien again, too much of it. Her back always ached, her head always ached, her jaw was sore from clenching it all the time. She was under a constant vague dread. And a defined worry; a cause and a consequence easily measured. All the blame was hers and hers alone. Her pussy was a live wire though. She'd left her poor husband raw on a few occasions. The one saving grace: her cherished Mitch was loving this.

She drove the Bentley through the quiet Campden Hill streets, under the budding cherry trees that reached out from the sidewalk. She flashed her key card at the black box, heard the buzzer and watched the wrought iron gates slowly open wide for her. She pulled in, driving between the long brick walls with medieval looking black claws embedded in their spine that funnelled her to the gatehouse.

She thought of Derek as he'd watched her this morning. He was an odd bird. There was no love lost between them, but his fate was in her hands as well. He had a family. He had children. Her own niece and nephews. She'd really fucked it all up. Derek's eyes on her this afternoon were like a condemnation. He didn't like her in his territory. If he only knew how right he'd been about her. She knew that he'd never have guessed the damage she could bring to his life. Derek had always seen her for what she was. Mitch couldn't see it. How could his own brother look into her eyes and know her so deeply?

She waved at Greg, the skinny Somalian guard sitting in the doorway and he waved as she passed. The gate house had been an actual home some fifty years ago, an impressive red brick hulk with a slate roof and an enormous blackened chimney.

She crossed the grounds and pulled up in front of the low metal awning at the entrance to the lobby of their apartment. She got out and pulled her bags out of the rear seat. She went into the building, an award winning design in glass and steel and reclaimed brick, and met the porter as he was coming out.

"Hi, Dan," she said to the young, snaggletoothed man in his black uniform, "Would you mind parking it for me, I'm just exhausted." He told her Of course he would and she gave him the key and headed to the elevators.

She needed a plan. She needed a way out. She needed a big score. No more five thousand quid purses sold for cheap on the internet. She had to figure out a big payment. Enough money to make Omar pay attention. Enough money that it wiped sex from his mind. So much that he'd tuck that thing back in his pants, leave her alone; just go away and never be seen again.

She had absolutely no idea how to do it. How to get a lot of money. Mitch handled everything and he was a secretive bugger too. She'd have to go through his things. His papers, his computer; find something, some way to shake out enough money to make this go away. A million pounds. Millions of pounds.

She stepped out of the glossy wood and smoked mirror elevator into the carpeted hall and walked down to their door. She opened it with her key and stepped in, dropped her bags and leaned back against the door, so relieved to be in her home.

If all else failed she knew there was another option.

KILEY HAD FLOWN in from Chicago, landed in Denver then a little hop over to Grand Junction Regional. This was her weekend off, spending it now driving a rented Subaru down a twisting mountain road, crunching rubber through the snow. Client retention, keeping the notable Dr Jay Shaker, heart surgeon, writing his scripts for Agrix and some of the other fine products of Jakobsen-Mueller. Keeping him happy.

Jay wrote the most scripts in her database; he was a popular and prolific heart-guy, great reputation, office in UC Medical Center. He was nice too, easy to work with, no-nonsense, very little hand-holding. He even read the literature and when he called, which was rare, he had legitimate questions.

Problem was, even though he must be pushing fifty, he was one of those fitness types. Had her run a 5k with him last summer, a little team he put together with some of the folks in his office. They raised a few grand for charity, her office contributed of course. She was no runner, but she put on a brave face, thought It's only five kilometres. She finished but she felt a little embarrassed that her lithe, slim, little frame was exposed to him as quite deceptively non-athletic.

Last week he says, You're coming out to Colorado? Think I'm there then, come by my place a bunch of us go skiing. It was an opportunity, friendships were the goddamn lifeblood of her little empire. She cleared 75k last year in salary, plus four quarterly bonuses and an annual that knocked her socks off. Agrix and its companion meds were top of the line, low competition, and nobody could out-hustle her, especially since the other products were inferior. The market was always fickle though, and forging bonds with doctors insured her against future changes. So here she was, lost on the Grand Mesa, skis strapped to her roof, wondering if she was going to repeat her last dubious physical performance.

She'd picked up the rental car at the airport and drove into Grand Junction, instructions from the girl at the counter about where she could rent skis. Checkers Ski & Cycle was a century old building, maybe older. Looked like it was built for a Western then painted with black and white checkers with a huge adirondack chair sitting out front, in the cold, made out of old skis. The young guy there was helpful, some cute blond kid with miniature dreadlocks, probably high as a kite. He helped fit her feet to some short boots, rented her some skis and she bought a bunch of clothing. She was a complete newbie to this sort of thing.

As she got closer to where she thought he was supposed to live it was obvious that the car's GPS was betraying her. The road she'd been following narrowed to the point she figured it was impassable, unmaintained. She looked at his written instructions, printed off from his email, checked it with the screen in the Subaru. Something wasn't right.

She called him from the car.

"Yeah, I know where you are, that's not really a road anymore," he said. "Hang tight, you're not far, I'll come escort you."

She felt stupid and she hated that he was coming to rescue her. He said he was already out in his truck though, like it was no big deal. She sat in the car, listened to the radio. She should have just followed the written instructions rather than plug his address into the stupid navigation. He showed up in about ten minutes, driving up in a burgundy Chevy pickup, four square bales of hay in the back.

"Can't trust those things around here," he said through the open window when she blamed it on the car. "Stay with me, I'll get us back," he said, arm hanging out, smiling for her.

She closed the window up, turned the heat higher and followed him back down the road she'd come up. They hit a funny three-way intersection, jogged through it, then a right turn almost immediately through it. She never would have figured that out. They passed what might have been a little Main Street, couple of frontier buildings, pickup trucks parked along the street, then a few minutes down another road where there was nothing but tall, snow covered pine trees right up close to the road. He was signalling up ahead, turning into a driveway and she followed him in.

This must have been his place, temporary little arrow-shaped sign stuck in the plowed snow said, Shaker Ski Challenge. It was a long meandering driveway, much like the road, tree-lined and hilly. They came to a clearing off on one side, trees giving way to a big open field, cedar rail fence and wire closing it in. There were horses out in the snow, trotting in the cold, running the field like they were following his truck. Up ahead he pulled into a little plowed area, green and yellow tractor parked under an open sided garage, a gate into the horse's paddock. She pulled up next to his truck and got out. He came over to her, took her hands, and kissed the air next to a cheek.

"So glad you could make it," he said.

"Now that I'm here."

"It happens a lot, that's why I always send out that e-mail."

"I thought it'd be easier just letting the navigation tell me where I'd find you."

"These mountain roads get tricky, some of em are private, won't even show up. Don't worry, I'd say about forty percent of my guests do the same thing." He opened the gate of the pickup, slid a bale out.

The horses were up at the fence, six of them, hanging their heads over. One bold one snorting and nodding, pushing the others, stomping a foot. Kiley went to them, pet them. Jay threw a bale over, went back for another.

"I didn't know you had horses," Kiley said.

"They're not mine. They were Tess' idea. They're hers, I guess. They grew on me, I look forward to seeing them but I don't ride them."

"Does Tess still come here too?" Jay had gone through a divorce about two and a half years ago. He never seemed to be put out by it, seemed to her like it had been pretty amicable. Jay and Tess had grown up kids off in college now and he made it seem like he and his wife split so they could go off and do their own things. Like they were friends but that the romance was gone, they'd grown apart.

"Yeah, she comes up to visit her babies. She rides them. She's mostly here in the summer," he said, slapping a horse on the rump. "Neither of us had the heart to take this place away from the other, so we split it."

She watched him throw the last of the hay over, leaning on the fence to watch them eat. She picked hay off the back of his fleece vest when he came to stand with her. They stood a moment and watched them. He pushed his worn out ball cap up off his face, asked her if she was ready for a workout today. She lied and told him she was.

SHE WALKED across the plowed section past her rental, a step behind Jay. Jay introduced her to two guys pulled up next to them in the driveway, windows of the charcoal grey Cayenne powered down. Two doctors, not from Chicago, Jay went to school with them at Duke. Stylish and fit, looking good in their expensive down jackets and polarized sunglasses.

Guy in the driver seat pointed a finger at her, put the hammer down, shot her with it. “Hey,” he said, “Pharm rep.” Not a question, a statement. It felt oddly like an insult. He didn’t mean it as one, but it pointed out he didn’t think she was a doctor. Too pretty, probably—she must be selling drugs. Everybody these days putting labels on people, summing them up. Everybody so smart. She shot him back and winked. Maybe he was a nice guy.

She listened to them make small talk, stuff about snow, trails, wax and waxless. She had a meeting in Denver on Monday morning, all day thing, shaking hands with a lot of execs from Jakobsen-Mueller, then Tuesday through Friday she was at the PharmExpo at the Colorado Convention Center. Most of that material would be over her head. She was no chemist but attending did give her a better understanding of the products. Every little bit helped. She had a hotel booked for tonight, a Holiday Inn back in Grand Junction. She hadn’t even checked in yet, coming straight here from the plane after she picked up her ski gear.

Jay slapped their roof, and they drove off headed to the house. She and Jay got in their vehicles and she followed him up the hilly drive sliding between the tall, snow covered pines. The drive opened up around a bend revealing a huge, beautiful log home, high above them on a ridge, behind that was Mt Garfield and a pale, pastel chalk line of cliffs drawn under an enormous cold, clear blue sky.

Some of the other skiers were already there and she parked the Subaru between two almost identical silver Volvo SUVs both with ski racks. Jay introduced her to some of the people standing and chatting at the stone foot of the monolithic home. She was polite and gracious, giving everyone her smile, her bag over a shoulder and her hand holding her just-purchased ski gear in the checkered shopper. They were nice people, older, professionals. Medical or tech, a lot of women there too and she felt comfortable with that.

Jay brought her in, showed her his place. Walked her through, under the ceilings that had to be fifteen feet tall, the open living area with the chalet roof that just went up and up, a stone column thrust in the centre, a roaring fire in its root. She knew the place would be nice, but this was something else.

“This place is incredible. I see why you two worked it out.”

“I like it in the spring and winter, she goes for the summer and fall. We don’t cross paths and we’re all happy. I want it for my kids too.”

“They come up? Use it?”

“Not as much as they say they’re going to.”

He walked her down a wide circular stone staircase that went down a level from the main floor. Not a basement, the room still tall and a window that looked out onto a tiered deck, an outdoor fire, and manicured shrubs below that beautiful mountain view.

There was a water tank out there, it looked like. Like half of one, the top of it cut off. A huge metal water tank with long trussed legs, once green, now rusted, faded block letters that said Bronx. It looked like something on a New York City rooftop in an old movie. There was a cedar deck built around it up high near the top, different levels, seats and an umbrella, folded up. There was a ridge behind it, rocky and steep, bracing it. Running up the ridge was a huge stone fireplace, a blazing fire in the rocky cavern at its bottom.

“What is that?”

He laughed, said “That’s the hot tub.”

“It is?”

“Yeah, it’s an old water reservoir and we had it cut down, brought here. Then that fire heats it up, pipes that run to it. No motor or anything, no pump, just convection. Moves the water to the tub above.”

“Yeah, it takes forever to heat up. I got that fire going around six this morning. It’ll just be ready when we get back. Six or seven hours.”

“Six or seven hours of skiing? You’ve got to be joking.”

“Don’t worry, it’s fun. We’ve got meals out on the trails, a hot chocolate station. It’s not a race,” he said. Then added, “Well not really, but I’m sure some of us will be racing. You can come back here any time, not every one finishes, some just do a half day.”

“I’ll finish,” she said. Wondered why she said that.

They walked through a family room, huge brown leather couches and rustic wooden slabs of furniture, wrought iron accents, all facing a blank, black television. This floor was quiet, no one moving around down here. He showed her down a hall, and held a door open for her.

“You can get yourself dressed in here,” he said. “Just come on up when you’re ready.”

“Thanks, I’ll just be a minute.”

He lingered, still leaning on the black handle of the door. “You know, you can use this room if you like. I mean, stay here. I know you have a hotel room probably, but I just mean it might be a late night, you’ll be tired. I have lots of space here and if you don’t want to drive all the way back to Grand Junction—”

“Thanks, but I should get back tonight. I’ve got a lot to get ready for the conference—”

He put his palms up, gave her a nod, said “It’s here if you want to use it.”

He closed the door behind him and left her to it. It was a nice little guest room but windowless. The wall behind the bed was honey-stained log and then stone down to the floor. The bed was a double, very high, but soft and pillowy under a quilt covered in stitch-work bears. She threw her stuff onto the bed and went through the shopping bags.

She pulled out the items she’d bought at the ski shop, tore the tags off. She undressed and squeezed herself into the tight, black stretchy pants. There was a mirror on a dresser and she saw herself in it. Was this what people wore? She just took the blonde kid’s word for it. She put on an uncomfortable shirt, then a zip up fleece which felt instantly warm. Then a slim, bright green shell with a black racing stripe down the sleeve. That was going to be the fastest thing about her. This whole kit, including the ski rental, had cost her just over a thousand dollars, all put on her expense account.

She stood in front of the mirror and looked at how tight it all was. She turned and looked at her ass, the jacket short and slim, the curves of her cheeks revealed, hiding nothing. If that fucking kid made her look stupid...

She grabbed the boots and went back upstairs. Everyone was getting themselves together out by the cars, putting their skis on, laughing, talking. She watched them a moment, standing with her back to the roaring fire, letting it warm her before she had to go back out in the cold.

Everyone out there was wearing this same tight gear and she was relieved. She went outside, the heat trapped in the fabric pulled instantly away by the chill. She got her skis off the roof and put them on the ground. She tried stepping in like the kid at Checkers had showed her, but she couldn't get it to lock.

A short, slender woman, late forties helped her. She held the ski and used her other hand to help her lock the boots in place.

"Thank you," she said. "They're rentals," hoping that would mean something.

"You're not in the ski club are you? I don't think I've seen you before." The woman had a pleasant face, the beginnings of wrinkles coming along where she would smile.

"No, I'm from Chicago." How could she be in the ski club, doesn't know how to put skis on.

The woman nodded at her, maybe smirking. "So you're a friend of Jay's. And how do you know him?"

"Oh, we work together I guess. He's a customer of mine."

The woman looked at her, looked down at her slim figure and legs. She felt a little like she was being measured.

"Are you a nurse or something?"

"No, I'm in sales. I sell heart—"

"Ah," she said. Hearing enough. "I like the way you talk...that accent."

"Yes, I grew up in London. I've only been here in the States for two years now." Kiley used that accent like a sales weapon. The cheapest thing she felt she did was play it up. She could drop it completely if she wanted, or make herself sound like some wild, foul-mouthed chav. For her doctors she put it on: Public School English, spoke eloquently, properly. Not the way she was raised, that's for sure. She created a character for them, and they remembered her for it. And that was the point. To be remembered. She was the proper little British girl, always well-dressed, handwritten Thank you notes on real paper, she was their Lady Grantham or whomever from that Downton show. That was the extent of her deceit in her practice, the rest of her success was in forging relationships.

“Are you staying near here?”

Kiley realized she was being investigated. It just hit her. “Oh no, I have a convention this week in Denver. I’m staying in Grand Junction tonight.” She added, “I have a room there. The Holiday Inn.” Maybe that was going too far. But she wanted this woman to know there was no hany-panky going on, as they say. Her profession had a reputation, relatively unfounded too. She had associates who she knew out-sold her and she wouldn’t consider them attractive at all. She was always at odds with how pretty pharmaceutical sales reps were perceived. Especially since she looked like she was one of the ones who earned that reputation, and nothing could be further from the truth. And Jay had to be twenty years older than her. Almost her father’s age.

Some doctor’s wives acted like these pharm companies only hired sorority girls and Hooter’s waitresses. Like all it took for success was a pretty face or a big rack, that a doctor would fall for that shit. Kiley was pretty and it helped, but she fucking hustled. And she cared too. She forged honest relationships with doctors, a lot of them women. But this idea of some sort of corporate prostitution always bubbled just under the surface. There were doctors who didn’t get it, of course. Dinosaurs. Misogynist pricks who put their hands on you and you had to sort of take it, be polite and find a way to get his hand off your ass with a smile on your face, keep that friendship at all costs.

“Well, have fun today,” the woman said, and slid away from her, over to her group of friends. She looked away, didn’t want to see if there was any whispering, women looking over their shoulders at her.

It was time to make friends. She wasn’t going to ski alone out there today. She worked her way over to the finger-pointing hotshot from the Porsche. She got herself next to him, getting the hang of the skiing thing, not doing too badly she figured.

“Hey,” he said again, looking pleased to see her. “First time on skis?”

“Shit, I thought I was doing well.” This guy was full of accidental insults. What if this wasn’t her first time, what if she had a bone disease or something. Or maybe he was a genuine sleuth.

“We have a trophy for drop-outs too, the one’s who can’t hang,” he said. Stupid smile, her own reflection in his sunglasses. Did this guy think that worked on girls, being a shithead? You know what, it might for a fit doctor who drives a Porsche. This was turning out to be some day. It made her look forward to the boring convention.

She laughed for the guy, touched his arm. This was business and this was Jay's friend.

Water Tower

THE FIRST HOUR WAS FUN. The first hour felt good to her. Got her heart going, the blood pumping, stretching her body out, feeling what it could do. It was a beautiful day for them to be out, couldn't be better. Blue sky, so deep and dark it bordered on navy. No haze to it, not a cloud in the sky, the sun was bright, the snow clean and lit up a painfully brilliant white. Everyone was in good spirits, enjoying the effort, the breathtaking scenery. She'd dropped finger-gun, slipped away and put herself in with another group. A mix of men and women, friendly, middle-age types.

The second hour was alright too, but that was where she started to think that you couldn't possibly do this for six more hours. This same thing? But we're barely even started. She stayed with her middle-age gang and liked their pace.

Back pain started in the third hour, not sharp and dreadful, just an ache. She'd stop every ten minutes, and bend over, try and stretch it out. At the end of the third hour everyone bunched up on the trail where there was a pickup truck parked. The gate was open and a local club member was giving out bottles of water, he had fruit and some of those expensive fitness bars. She grabbed an orange and a water and one of the bars.

She dropped her friends in the fourth hour, let them get up ahead and she settled in with a new group. They were alright, not as funny maybe, but weren't interested in setting too much of a pace and she liked that. The end of the fourth hour was nice, someone had built a little hut out of palette boards, a bar with a little roof and awning. Same guy from the last station was there, older guy with a white Santa Claus beard, and he was serving up all sorts of different hot chocolates. She had two of those, amaretto and then a tiramisu flavoured one.

The group seemed a lot smaller in the fifth hour. All the hotshots were showing off far up ahead so you couldn't even see them. Her new group packed it in at the hot chocolate stop. She found it so hard not to join them. Her back couldn't be relieved now. Her shoulders were on fire, her triceps quivered from using the poles. Legs were holding up on the bright side. Her helpful friend showed up behind her, had brought some other ladies with her. They were nice for a while but they asked too many questions. They would stop when she stopped to stretch or catch her breath.

How far were they going to travel? What was the point of this? Who would like skiing so much they would do it this long?

The remaining skiers, about half of what started, stopped on the trail again. The man with the white beard was there and she couldn't be happier to see him. He had picnic baskets with bread and really great cheese, fruits, nuts, cookies, platters with cold meat, more hot chocolate. She grabbed a plate and stuffed herself. Then got herself alone and lay in a snowbank and looked up at the sky. Everything hurt. Her waist, her stomach, back. Everything. Even her fingers were sore, felt like they'd all been twisted sideways by using those poles for so long.

Jay sat down next to her in the snow. "You going to make it?"

"I said I would."

"You're doing good."

"Thanks." She sat up, she felt so groggy, if she closed her eyes it felt like she was falling backwards.

"If you can outlast these guys," he said, pointing with five fingers at the skiers, who were, like her, laying out in the snow, "there's a trophy and a prize. It goes to the last person to drop out. You just have to get closer to finishing than these guys."

"Oh, I think someone tried to explain that to me. I didn't get it. If I come all this way, almost make it—I'd rather finish than get a trophy for nearly making it."

He laughed, grabbed her shoulder and squeezed her, "That's my girl. Come on."

He helped her up, and she felt a little wobbly. Her detective friends were packing it in. She figured she'd be better off going alone now anyway, needing all her concentration, all her resolve.

“Do you know that woman?”

“Who,” he said, “Carol?” He nodded to the woman who helped her lock into her bindings this morning. “She’s a friend of Tess’, she’s from the Ski Club. She’s nice. Were you skiing with her?”

“Yes, she helped me this morning. I like her.”

“You can do this, right?” He said, giving her a pep talk. He looked no worse for wear. His face was bright and happy, his posture unaffected. Pretty impressive for any age.

“Body’s weak, mind’s strong,” she said getting her poles, tapping her temple.

“Your body’s definitely not weak,” he said. “We’re just at altitude. It’s supposed to be harder.”

“Yes, it’s the altitude that’s getting me.” Was that a body compliment? He wasn’t the type to do that. She was slim and fit looking, people just assumed she was athletic.

“Well, this’ll be the home stretch now, I’ll see you back at the house.” He swished off looking lively. He had a strong build. She could see the muscles in his legs working under his tight black leggings. Not bad for a guy his age at all.

SHE SHOOK her head as another one passed her. Another wide waisted nerd with grey in his beard. She was getting smoked by guys twenty, thirty years older than her.

But she was going to finish. She was determined. Her new boots were doing her in, her ankles felt swollen and wrenched. Her back hadn't got any worse in the last hour but it hadn't gotten any better. She had just come to accept it. She didn't even know any more why she was struggling to finish. Jay wouldn't care. Or maybe she thought he would care? It's not like he would jump to some generic drug if she'd had a hot chocolate back there and got in the white-beard's pickup and gone back to the house.

He'd respect her tenacity. Might not even be something he'd acknowledge right away, not something he would be conscious of. He'd just have a better consideration of her. She was the type to gut it out, push through, do what she had to. She didn't win but she didn't quit and that would mean something, right? That had to count for something.

She was all alone on the trail now but she knew there were people somewhere behind her. She wasn't going to be last. The sun was low now, below the tree-line. It turned the pines into black shapes with soft, blue pastel snow cradled in their boughs. She had to be close. This must be just over six hours out here. The last two hills she'd crested crushed her when there was no house in sight. But it would be soon. Soon she'd come around a corner, maybe over a hill and it would be finally over. And when it was she'd be happy and gracious and not let anyone know how much pain she was in.

Instead of seeing the end she heard it. Faint at first. She stopped skiing for a moment and listened. Loud music. Not far. She started up again elated that it was the end. She couldn't believe it. Why would he ask her to come here and do this? Why would he think that someone who doesn't ski would be able to do this? The tendons in her hips were what hurt the most. Each step forward now was excruciating, and it was about half of what her normal stride was just, oh six hours ago. It was like an electric cord up the centre of her thigh shooting bolts of lightning into her hips.

She was done and as she turned the last corner, hearing the music clearly, the lyrics, she wondered if she could have gone any further. Someone spotted her and people got themselves to what looked like a little makeshift finish line just as the trail opened up into Jay's yard. She was so happy to see that beautiful house. As she got to them they spun noisemakers and clasped her on the back. She smiled for them all and stood tall on her skis not letting them know she thought she might not not make it. Someone handed her a beer and she skied off to the side and leaned on a retaining wall and stabbed the bindings with a pole, sure that this would absolutely be the last time she would take a ski off because she was never going to put one on again.

She put the beer on the wall under a shrub and left it there. She wanted food. She wanted wine. She wanted to sit down and she wanted to be dry, and she wanted to be warm.

Jay found her and put an arm around her. "So proud of you," he said.

"I'm just glad there's so many doctors here," she said clutching her chest.

He laughed and put his hand on her back, said “Why don't you go in and get changed, have a shower if you want, there's food, there's people in the hot tub, there's music. Promise me you won't go yet.”

A shower was a fantastic idea. Hot shower, hot as Kate would make it. Steam-fogging-up-a-mirror-hot. Then she was going to eat, and she was going to sleep. She couldn't stay here, though.

She picked her skis up and brought them to her Subaru. She had nowhere near enough energy to get them onto the roof rack. The car was unlocked and she just threw them into the hatch and closed it up. She made her way into the house, making little pleasant exchanges with people in the living area, hanging out in the kitchen, wine glasses in hand. She felt an occasional pat on the back.

She made it to the bedroom and closed the door behind her. She pulled her jacket off and the fleece and threw them on the bed. Her back and shoulders ached so bad the pain shot up into her neck and she winced taking the clothes off. She peeled the pants off and then looked at her feet. She was shocked—sure she'd find enormous welts, blisters on her feet or heel, but there was nothing. She felt the pain, but they just looked a little red. She sat on a chair next to the bed and rubbed her feet for a minute. She really had to get out of here. She was ready to pass out. She just wanted to close her eyes. She fell asleep in the chair until her head fell back and she woke herself with a start, actually said something out loud answering a question no one asked her. She stood up and felt dizzy and she made her way to the bed and lay face down on it only wearing her panties and a watch. Just closed her eyes a minute.

When she woke up and looked at her watch it had been an hour and a half that she was out. “Ah, shit,” she said. She got to her feet in agony and went to the ensuite bathroom and ran a hot shower. She took the panties off and it occurred to her she probably wasn't supposed to wear those under the lycra. She looked at her ass in the mirror and saw painful looking grooves dug into her flesh from the elastic.

She stood in the hot shower for as long as she could, but she kept thinking she needed to get back up to the party. She wanted to stand there for an hour. She dried herself off and put on a warm sweater and a pair of black yoga pants, then slowly, painfully made her way back up the circular staircase and to the party.

There were noticeably less people now, but everyone seemed real loose after they'd had a few drinks in them. The music was loud and people shouted to be heard over it. Public Image Limited. Her father's music. A wave of sentimentality came over her, made her feel good. These people could be alright.

"Hey," she heard, turned and saw him. Pointing a middle finger at her while he gripped an imported bottle of beer. The guy from the Porsche. His cat's eye sunglasses were off now and he didn't have a little expensive fleece beanie on and it made him seem a lot more pleasant.

"So glad you could make it today," he shouted at her, close. "Jay was hoping you'd show up."

"He was?"

"Yeah, I had lunch with him last week, he was pretty stoked that you might come."

He was glossy and happy, beer soaked. She realized he was saying things she probably wasn't meant to hear. She realized too, that his Pharm Rep label that morning wasn't an indictment, he was just putting a face to a name.

"Where can I get a glass of wine?"

"Oh shit, let me get you one," chivalrous when he hadn't seemed the type. Maybe he just needed a few drinks in him, turn him into a normal person.

She made her way to the buffet table just under the stone half wall that divided the vaulted living area from the kitchen. She'd missed the most of it, everything picked through. There was enough for her to eat, but she somehow found it suddenly unappetizing, scraps of food on bare plates. She buttered a roll and ate that, felt a warm blood sugar surge and closed her eyes to it. Felt it raise the hair on the back of her neck. She was brought her glass of wine but Porsche was escorted away by his friend, a helpful arm around his neck, before he could say anything more. She figured maybe someone was on to his loose lips, wanted him quiet. She hoped Jay didn't have feelings for her. That would be very awkward. She'd be flattered, but the last thing she wanted to do was negotiate some puppy love minefield with one of her best customers.

The first glass of wine went right back, and she poured herself another. She worked her way through the people still left, joining in their small groups, being gracious and friendly, putting on a show for them, for Jay.

People dropped out, saying their goodbyes, heading home, waving from the door. Soon she found herself sitting by the fire in an armchair next to Jay talking over the coffee table to two close friends.

She sat with them a while, enjoyed listening to them talk, earnest things about surgeries, new techniques, old times, biking, skiing. She felt very sleepy, and she realized the wine had hit her hard. She felt a little legless, but she chose to enjoy it, feel it. It had numbed her, she could feel the tension in her muscles, the ache in her knees and her hips, but it felt cottony, far away. She thought about another glass. Would love one. But could she stay here? Would that be alright? Not with Jay, but with her. The thought of being behind the wheel for an hour and change was daunting. She should probably stay. It was the smart thing to do. She forced herself up and poured another glass.

Half way through that one she realized she couldn't stay here. She had to go. It was just Jay and two friends left, an oncologist and her husband. It was time to leave. She definitely didn't want to be the last to leave. That could be as unseemly as staying and keeping it professional, just sleeping and leaving first thing in the morning. No one would believe that. She had to be witnessed leaving. Everybody loved their dirty fantasies, projected them onto others whenever they could. Of course, they would say, she was there when we left, he says she went back to her hotel but, wink-wink, blowjob face, tongue stabbing in cheek.

"I should really get myself together. Get going." Kiley stood up.

"Gosh, you have to drive? How far are you going?" The oncologist was concerned.

"She's staying in Grand Junction," Jay said.

"Couldn't she just stay here, Jay? It's late, she looks exhausted—"

Kiley said, "It's not too far, I'll be all right."

"I offered, she's more than welcome to use a guest room," Jay said.

Kiley waffled. The thought of walking downstairs, packing her things up, getting in the car, did she put her skis in there, driving all the way back, checking in to the hotel, bringing her bags to the room. Fuck. "I have a lot to get ready for the week, conference in Denver," she said. If someone forced her right now, she would stay.

She excused herself from them, was gracious and friendly, and went down to the room. She grabbed all the fleecy things and the spandex, soaked with her sweat still. She tucked them into her bag, cleaned up the torn tags, tidied the bed where she'd laid on it, closed the light, the door. Stage one complete. She stopped in the TV room there, looked out at the water tower hot tub, lit up from below with halogen floods. She'd missed that, and she really could have done with some hot water therapy.

When she got to the main floor Jay was in the kitchen by himself, tidying up. He said, "I'm making some coffee for you, come and sit before you go."

"Did they leave?"

She sat on a stool at the enormous emerald tiled island in the centre of the kitchen. She leaned heavily on her elbows, said "I really could do with a cup of coffee. Thank you."

He poured her a cup when it was ready, sat with her and had one as well. He talked with her about the day, about the house, how long he'd been there, what his kids did when they were here. It was nice. This was what she wanted. Aimed for. Making that relationship, a real connection with her customers. When she admitted she hadn't really eaten, he jumped up, appalled. He opened the fridge, said he would make her something. She told him, Please don't go to the trouble. But he was firm, she wasn't leaving til he'd made her dinner. She was fucking starving. Had dreamed of the drive-thru on the way home, a Big Mac devoured on her hotel bed, a hot bath.

"I have steaks...I'm cooking you a steak," he said, holding a slab covered in wax butcher's paper.

She gave in easily told him how she liked them when he asked. He looked very happy to do this for her. She watched him sear two steaks in butter in an iron pan, then put them in the oven to finish them. He made them a salad while they baked, she watched his elegant hands, literally surgeon's hands, gracefully slice up vegetables. His hands looked strong, long fingered and manicured.

She smiled at him while he talked and put on a show for her. Look at this guy, she thought. She'd never really seen him like this before, it was very different. It was nice in a way, but he was hitting on a girl who was twenty years younger than him. Isn't that one of his daughters' age? How typically mid-life crisis. He was better than this. He was a catch times ten for the right girl. Some little fitness hottie in her late thirties; she tried to think of anyone she knew but couldn't come up with one.

How great would it have been to catch a young Jay. A young and handsome Jay in Med School. She wasn't interested in having a man take care of her though, she did well on her own. But why couldn't she land a Jay or a Mitch. They were always too old or too taken. Where was she when she was twenty that she didn't find her soul mate. Jay was married when he was twenty. Guess he and Tess weren't really soul mates if they weren't still together though. That could have been her. Forty, divorced, probably no career, her youth gone. Kiley had no regrets, she loved her independence. She loved who she was.

The steak was perfect. Medium-rare and buttery, a New York strip. She instantly felt better with it in her. She ate the salad and when he poured her a glass of red wine she didn't stop him.

He dressed well, looked good sitting and talking to her, swirling wine around his goblet. He was fit and handsome, black T-shirt, black cashmere cardigan and a steel Rolex. His tortoiseshell glasses were off, laying on the counter, and he looked better without them.

When he asked her about the hot tub she told him she'd fallen asleep in her room and really missed most of the festivities. He laughed at her.

"It's still hot, you know," he said.

She turned and looked out the window at it, fire still roaring in the stone column. She couldn't. "I'd really love to, but I feel like I should get on the road."

"It's up to you," he said.

She stood up and walked to the window with her wine, looked out at that inviting oddity spewing steam into the night.

"At least come out and take a look at it," he said sliding the glass door from the kitchen and stepping out onto the deck.

She put her glass down, went out with him and he walked her over to the base of the water tower.

"You have to climb the ladder?"

"Yeah, it's a real water tower," he said.

"You love physical challenges don't you?"

She let him climb up first, felt it would be weird to have him looking up her butt crack climbing up the ladder underneath her. They got to the deck and looked into the tub. Steam was practically bellowing from the surface. It was lit up by little white lanterns strung across the deck above their heads. It had started to snow and the moon was out, it was just a strange, magical little space he'd created here.

She said Wow for him, let him know she really was impressed. She said again she wished she could get in. She really would love to, everything ached under her clothes and this was just so inviting.

"I can't," she said, "I haven't any swimwear." Then prepared herself for something perky, like We don't wear suits around here.

But he didn't, just said, "I might find you one inside, maybe Tess' room or—"

She stopped him, said That was alright. She couldn't wear another woman's suit no matter how much she'd like to get in there. She stood and looked into the tub. You must be able to fit twenty people in it. It's not like they were going to have their bare knees pressed up against each other.

"Just go in with your underwear, I don't care..."

She scrunched her nose up at him, made a face. She didn't know why that was weird, but she didn't want to sit in there in her cotton underwear even if they were pretty clean.

"I'll tell you what, he smiled at her putting his palms up in surrender, You may stay, I'd like you to—you've been drinking and you're exhausted, and these mountain roads—or you can go, you can get in the tub, I think you'd really like to. Or not get in the tub. I know you feel like it's maybe unprofessional. I'm getting in the tub before I go to bed, whatever you may decide, so I'm going inside to put on some trunks, and I'm going to come out and relax here with some wine before I hit the hay. I can see you off, or you can already be in the tub and I'll have no way to know what you're wearing in there, and I don't care." He turned, stepped towards the ladder.

He stopped, said, "I hope you'll be in the tub—because you shouldn't be driving and you know it. And you know I'm not a creep, right?"

"I know," she said to him, watching him climb back down the ladder.

He was desperate to get her in there and she was desperate to find a reason that it would be okay to get in there. It was just going to happen.

She walked to the railing, saw him crossing the stone patio to the deck.

"Hey," she said.

"Yeah?"

"Can you bring my wine up?"

She walked back to the tub and put her hands over the warm steam. She was being silly—nothing was going to happen and they were the only ones there. She kicked her flats off and threw her socks next to them. She put a foot in the water. She was going to go in.

She took the sweater off and her shirt, lay them on a bench. She rolled the tights down and stood there in the cold in her panties and little bra. She didn't want to go in with them. She wanted them to be dry when she got out. She looked around even though they were in the middle of nowhere. She unhooked the bra and got her panties off and hid them inside her wool sweater. She quick-stepped to the edge of the tub, found the little metal steps welded into it, and lowered herself into the scalding water. It was the best decision in her life. She didn't want to get her hair wet, but there was no way around it, so she just let it happen, lowering herself into the heat right up to her chin. Goddamnit, why had she ever fought this?

She felt all that tension being soothed away. She lay back in the water and floated. She looked up at the stars, the moon lighting up the night above the mountain view. Big fat snowflakes wandered across the deck and she put her tongue out to catch one.

Jay showed up behind her holding a fresh wine bottle and two clean glasses. He was bare-legged under a cotton terry robe. She didn't like it, too Playboy mansion all of a sudden.

"Where'd you come from?"

"The other way. Can't climb a ladder with a wine bottle." He put a glass next to her on the deck, squatted next to it and poured her some more red wine. She watched him pour, worried when she could see his legs under the robe that maybe she would see his balls tumble out of there. What would she do if he peeled himself out of that robe in front of her and he was naked, a splitting hard-on standing upright between his legs?

He crossed to the other side and threw his robe off onto the deck. He was wearing trunks. He was fit too. It was strange to see him like this. She always saw him in Dockers and a dress shirt, maybe a lab coat, scrubs. She knew he was fit, saw him in his sports gear at the marathon, his spandex today. But now she saw his bare skin. His naked torso. It felt too intimate, not something work associates should share. But it was just a hot tub, practically a small swimming pool. It would be better if they weren't alone.

She watched him get in the tub without the walk-down stairs. He sat on the lip and she saw his tight midsection bunch up. He was muscular, but lean and trim, hardly an ounce of fat on him. He lowered himself in with his strong corded arms trying not to make a face from the searing heat.

They talked and he was courteous, staying over on his side of the tub. He never got too personal, ask her if she was seeing anyone. He acted like he wanted this professional too and she was glad for that. He talked about his kids, Tess, his plans for the clinic. He let her talk a bit about Jakobsen-Mueller and she stopped herself, told him she'd said enough already to put the trip on her expense account.

She had reached back and turned for her wine glass and felt her bare tit come up out of the water, and her eyes went wide. She drank and talked and wondered if he'd seen that. She saw her sexy little self from his angle. Her bare shoulders, her smooth skin, lifting an arm and he would see her petite little breast, the ski slope curve, her nicely shaped nipple, stiff but not hard, coming up out of the tub, hot water dripping from the tip. What did he think of that?

It was innocent the first time, truly accidental, but she did it again. Each time she took a drink she showed him her pretty little breast, hoped he wouldn't look away, hoped he'd see it, appreciate it. Hoped he would feel guilty for looking at this poor girl who didn't realize her titty was visible. He'd feel dirty for watching a young girl he knew unknowingly reveal herself. It put her in charge. He felt either paternal or avuncular or he was a lech who wanted to get in her pants. Whichever way, letting him see a bare breast put her in a position of power.

She'd had too much to drink and now she was the one crossing lines here.

WHEN KILEY WOKE up in the morning her head pounded. Throbbing with her heartbeat up the back of her neck and down her collar. She felt paralyzed. She briefly wondered where she was, looking up at the honey stained wood strip ceiling. Then she remembered. She was in Jay's guest room in the big tall bed. She forced herself to roll over get herself onto her elbow. She had a dread about last night and she struggled to recall, staring holes into the navajo rug. What the fuck?

She remembered letting him see her breast. Accidental, right? Was that it? She felt so horrible there had to be more. She remembered letting him see it like she didn't know that he could. Doing it maybe twenty times. But he had to know she knew. Fuck me. She sat up, felt so nauseous and sore, she struggled not to throw up. What else did she do?

She slowly looked around behind her in the bed, what if Jay was laying next to her, sleeping naked face down. No, she was alone.

She remembered realizing she was drunk when she was in the tub—was Jay drunk too? She could see him get out of the tub, dry off. He brought her a clean towel. And then he left her...she was naked, how did she get out of the tub? She grabbed at herself—how was she dressed? She was wearing her panties, but no bra. Her clothes were balled up on the floor, thrown into a corner. Oh, no. Did he have to help her out of the tub?

She put her hands between her legs and touched herself. She didn't think she'd had sex. What did she do? He wouldn't have left her on the deck alone, drunk, she could fall, drown. Jesus fucking Christ, she was so fucking stupid.

Clothes balled up on the floor was a Kiley thing. He looked like a folder. If he brought her to bed, he wouldn't have just thrown her clothes on the floor like that. She did that, so she came to the room dressed. She must have dressed on the deck. Did he have to help her? Did he escort her to this room?

She got up and got herself to the bathroom, leaning on the wall to get there, holding the door jamb. She got on her knees and flipped the toilet seat up. The sound was like a gunshot next to her ear. She slumped to one butt cheek and put her hands on the bowl. It wasn't going to happen so easy, and she put a finger in her throat and that set it off. She coughed wine and steak and greens into the bowl, flushing to keep that stuff on its trip out of her. Bye bye. She flushed again, and hugged the bowl. She had Advil in her bag. She dragged herself back there, pulled the bag onto the bed and rummaged, hunched over and painful. She took two of them dry, choked them down, she lay back on the bed. She felt so stupid. And something more profound. She felt alone. Desperately alone.

Don't fall asleep. She knew she had to be out of here. Gone. She struggled off the bed and pulled those crumpled clothes back on. She grabbed her things, she looked at the bed, but she knew she couldn't tidy it. She closed the room, padded on bare feet through the house, her shoes dangling from her fingertips. She dropped her bag at the front door and walked in to the kitchen, her shoulders aching, held up to her ears. She had her hands tucked into the arms of her sweater, went through drawers looking for paper and a pen. She left him a note, big friendly handwriting, saying thanks and she had so much to do, thanks so much again, great hospitality, kept it light, kept it cool.

She grabbed her bag and slipped the shoes on, wondered where her socks were, and got herself into the Subaru. Her skis and poles were in there, and she didn't care about anything more after that, she just started up the car and got out of there, headed down that drive, six-thirty on a sunny Sunday morning, not a cloud in the sky.

KATE HAD Mitch's files open on his desk, their bank account open on the computer screen when she heard him come home through the front door a lot earlier than she expected.

She heard him in the front hall, hanging his coat up, dropping his keys on the table, while she frantically closed up windows on his computer. Shit, shit, shit. He'd gone in to work on a Sunday, said he wanted to do research on something, leaving just before lunch. She had lunch alone on the patio, it was sunny and not too cold for Spring and she wanted to take advantage. Alone with her thoughts the dread came. She had an almost full-fledged panic attack that left her on her hands and knees, her fingers digging into the blue and white diamond pattern on their flat woven carpet. She took a Xanax with a red wine and sat herself at the dining room table, taking deep, deep breaths, forcing herself to calm. That was when she realized she was alone, she could try and find some money. Find out where she could get it from.

She'd come in here and lost track of the time. She'd lost track of even what day of the week it was. Expected Mitch home at his regular time—sometime in the evening. She scrambled, rushing to close everything up, doing it as quietly as she could. Her heart was racing, pounding in her chest. How could she even explain what she was doing? She heard him moving around in the kitchen, heard his phone ring. He was probably looking for her. How was she even going to explain being in his office? She could go out on the patio. Mitch had a door from this room that led outside. She backed toward it, looking over where she'd been. She thought it looked alright, but she didn't really remember what it looked like when she'd started. She rushed back and closed the little filing cabinet built into his bookcase that had their personal records as she heard him in the hall right outside the door. She hopped herself out to the patio sure she'd been spotted, hearing the door open behind her. She tucked herself against the wall, didn't want to run because getting caught running would look too guilty. She took out her phone and flipped through it trying to make herself look like she was busy.

He didn't come out. She heard him sit down in his chair, heard him talking. Who was he talking to? Was he on his phone? She put her phone away and listened but he was too quiet.

Her brief foray into espionage was a wash. She didn't go in with the best expectations anyway. She'd hoped something would jump out at her, something obvious. There was nothing. They had far less cash than she'd even thought. Lots of investments, lots of little sums, nothing that screamed out to her as the answer to all her problems. Most of the financial stuff was over her head. Mitch handled all of that, and she never asked questions. Where was their money? Must be tied up in the business; she couldn't even guess.

KATE LISTENED to Mitch while she stood outside on the patio where he couldn't see her. She'd heard a name. Heard it and frowned, puzzled, worked herself closer to the doorway, just enough so that she wasn't visible. He'd said Kiley. Why would Kiley call him? She struggled to hear him over the gentle but incessant sounds of Sunday evening in Campden Hill.

"Slow down, Kiley...yes, I got that part, I was wondering why you'd think that he'd have...right, right,..." she heard Mitch say. He sounded concerned. It sounded like his counsel was needed. It killed her not to know. His voice got quiet, she could barely hear him. He sounded soothing. Was Kiley upset? She tingled. Had she talked to Omar? Kate's heart thundered in her chest, her blood pounded in her ears, making it even harder to hear. She leaned against the brick and got herself as close to the edge as she could.

“No darling, listen, it’s alright...I wish I could...time will put it in perspective, honestly...right...these things happen all the time...yes, well things like it, and to good people too. It’s hard now but a year from now everything will be alright...you’ll only cringe a little bit when you think about it.” It sounded like he had her perked up a bit. What were they talking about?

Mitch was talking too quietly for her to hear now. She could hear his calm tone, serious and measured. Kind, helpful Mitch. She listened a bit longer, but it sounded like he’d turned away, maybe he was across the room. She gave up. She turned and tip toed across the patio, peeked in the other window of his office, saw that he was turned facing his bookshelves, his back to her as he sat in his office chair. She hopped across the view from the window and got herself to the end of the patio and slipped back into the living area, closed the french door very quietly behind her. She went to the kitchen and opened the fridge, then closed it loud enough for him to hear. She did the same with the cutlery drawer. Then she crossed over to his office door and pushed it open wider. He was still on the phone and he smiled at Kate gave her a wave.

She stepped down into his office and looked around, made sure she’d not left anything out of place.

“Were you talking to Kiley?”

He looked up at her from his leather chair, said “Yeah, she wanted some advice.”

“Why wouldn’t she call me?”

“Oh, I don’t know. It was work related, I guess. To do with her business...”

She put her hands on his desk, looked around at his things. “Were you able to help her?”

“I hope so.”

“Is she alright?”

“Yeah, she is. Just a little upset,” he said, sorting through Friday’s mail.

“Well, what is it?”

“Huh? Uh, just an ethics issue.”

“Should I call her?”

“You can. She’s alright, Kate.”

“Tell me what happened.”

He put the mail down and thought about it. He said, “She had a bit too much to drink at a work thing...she’s worried about what people might think.”

“What did she do?”

He picked the mail up again, cutting the bulk into smaller organized piles. “She doesn’t remember.” He handed her a padded manila envelope, letter size but thick. “Here’s one for you,” he said and handed it to her.

She took the envelope from him, said “Poor thing.”

“Did that say Frontignan on it?”

She felt a shock set off inside her, a quiver in her belly, a weakness that felt like she might let it go in her pants. She turned and stepped away, walked towards his door. She lifted the envelope, her hand shaking, looked at it, saw that it did have a return address in Frontignan. She looked it over puzzled, giving Mitch a show, she flipped it over and looked at the other side and she said No as disinterestedly as she could make it sound. She kept her legs walking to the door, praying that she could make it.

MITCH HAD CAUGHT HER. She felt it now, everything closing in. He was far too smart to let this go. Kate knew he’d be sitting in his office, could picture him leaning back in his chair, quiet, his hands behind his head, perfectly still; Mitch at work, his brain going a thousand clicks a second, his body frozen, braced against his raging mind.

Shit, though, he’d never arrive at the crazy predicament she was actually in. But he would think maybe, she was still somehow seeing Omar. What could she tell him?

He was quiet during dinner. She felt stupid and obvious, making overtly friendly small talk. It made her feel guilty, and she knew he could tell she felt guilty. She couldn’t stop herself. Everything she said to him across the table seemed to come out wrong and she kept telling herself to just Shut up.

When she’d escaped Mitch’s office, got out of there before he asked to see the envelope, she went straight to her bathroom and locked herself in. Her heart was pounding, it had taken everything she had not to run down the hall—to try and walk a calm straight line when she could picture him mad, looming behind her in the hall, grabbing it and witnessing her lie. She went to the vanity and looked at the padded yellow envelope. Crude handwriting on the top left, no name but an address in Frontignan, France, 34110. Her hands had trembled. She struggled with the flap, pushing a finger into it and tearing it open in her urgency. Something small, metal, clanged on the tile floor once, and landed on the bathmat quietly. She got down on her knees. A key. A black plastic fob with a rusted ring on it, the key itself not a blade but a metal circle like a car lighter. She pictured it opening a locker in a bus station or something. She pulled the envelope down and looked in it. There was just a plain white card in it, some precise instructions typewritten into its surface.

Mitch was closed up in his office now for about an hour after dinner, leaving her on the couch to just watch TV by herself. She didn't even know what was on, she'd just been staring through the plasma. She couldn't do this any more. It had to stop. She had to stop it. She couldn't take one more minute of this fear for Mitch.

Her phone vibrated on the coffee table. She picked it up and looked at the screen. A message from Omar. She got up, headed to the bedroom, her legs felt weak. She passed Mitch's closed door, wished she could just go in and sit with him instead of the awful thing she knew she was going to do. She made it to the bedroom and flicked the lights on. She picked up her laptop from her nightstand and locked herself in the bathroom.

She left the lights on the dim part of the slider but turned on the fan and a little shaded lamp on the vanity. Their Master Bath was a big room, there was a long vanity lit up by spots recessed in the ceiling, set in a indent in the wall that was all mirror. She had a separate area with a little table she could sit at and put on her makeup. It was set apart from the facilities and she went in there and sat on the rug and put her back against the wall. She opened the laptop up and got Skype open and waited. The call came in, she saw it flash. It was Omar under a different Omar username. When it opened the little video square was black. She put in an earbud and could tell there was no sound.

Kate: No sound?

She could see the square was black, but he was sitting there in shadow, the top of the frame on the left side she could tell there was a lighter spot there, a painted wall. A shape moved, a black silhouette against a black field.

Omar: not at home

She undid her blouse while she watched the screen. Unbuttoned it and took it off. This felt very different. He was usually saying very dirty things to her, telling her what to do, how to pose as she undressed. This felt very mysterious.

Kate: You put a return address on the envelope. Mitch saw it.

Omar: You love the danger don't you

She watched the figure move, could see it typing. She sat there on her floor in her bra and a pair of tights, knowing now what she would do to end this.

Kate: Leave Mitch out of it

Omar: take your bra off

Kate: I'm serious. I'll do anything, but we have to leave Mitch out, that's the only rule

The figure sat motionless. Thinking.

Omar: I make the rules.

Kate undid her bra, unclasped it and let her heavy breasts fall. She rubbed them, easing out the creases her bra gave her. She let him look, let him have what he wanted. She saw the frame within the frame, the window that showed her as Omar saw her, she looked at her hands coddling her own breasts for him. She was shameless.

Kate: Please, we don't taunt Mitch

Omar: I'm taunting you

Kate: Find another way Omar

Omar: your pants

She stood and put her laptop on her mahogany makeup table, angled the camera so it would get her. She pulled her slippers off with her toes and peeled the leggings down just below her ass cheeks, the tight waist pinching into the flesh of her thighs. She slapped her own bare ass hard, watched it jiggle in the little square of her laptop. She knew what he always asked for, she didn't mind giving it to him. She kneaded her cheeks with her hands, lifting and dropping them for him. He would normally be stroking that thing of his by now, squeezing it and pulling it for her to see, watching him over her shoulder. This felt odd, like no one was there watching her. She squeezed herself out of the tights, bending right over and sliding them down with her thumbs, letting him see her hairy sex from behind. She stepped out of them and parted her legs, slapping at her ass again for him. It was hard to know what to do if she couldn't see him, how hard he was, how he was working it. She backed right up to the camera, filled the frame with her ass, and dug her fingers deep into her flesh. She saw her wedding ring and her big diamond. Wished it would prompt some sympathy. Knew he was a freak though, it probably just got him harder. She swayed her ass for him and pulled her cheeks up and apart, stretched her labia up to the camera for him. Nothing.

Kate: what's the key for?

She stood and waited, her hand covering her hairy front, demure now for some reason.

Omar: I'm coming to London to fuck you

Oh shit, she thought. That's not good. She didn't think she would have the chance to do what she had to do. She felt a little weak at the thought that an opportunity was imminent.

Kate: when?

Omar: look happy for me

Kate: I am. I can't wait to get that cock inside me

Playing it up for him. Giving him what he wanted to hear.

Omar: Wednesday afternoon. You'll come and see me

Kate: ok

Omar: not a question, you'll come and see me and I'm going to fuck you the way I know you need it

Kate: yes

Omar: the key is for a gift that I want you to have Kate: thank you. Where will I meet you?

Omar: you'll know when you need to know

He was being more elusive tonight. Mysterious and perplexing. He was usually so straightforward. Demanding. She picked her notebook up and carried it back to the wall and sat down with her back against it again. Completely naked except for her rings and a single leather bracelet. She put the laptop on the floor between her legs and drew her heels right up so that they were touching her cheeks, her little painted toes lifted up off the floor. She slid the computer around and flexed the lid; Omar liked to see her pussy and he liked to watch her face too, watch it change, and she got it all in the shot. She watched the black square as she ran her two middle fingers gently against herself. She was so dry. Usually watching Omar had her a little damp. She closed her eyes and tried to make it happen. She stroked and pinched her folds, opened herself a little for Omar. She tried to think of better times. Of Omar on the beach when she had pulled that big thing out in the daylight and got him rock hard with her fingertips. Or that first night when she held Mitch's hand and they watched that fat grey head push into her. She stayed with that one. Mitch holding her as she got what she craved. What she needed. How Mitch watched her getting fucked, watched her ride that massive thing, watched her come. She was wet now, it was working. She could hear her flesh squishing under her fingers, she slipped a finger inside just a little and gasped, she bit her lip. She thought of Mitch again, how he granted Kate's greatest wish even though it must have been torture for him. Her hand buzzed over her swollen wet button, and her legs quivered. She was aware, very unconsciously, like a pea under a mattress, of a polished gem of an idea. Paying him back. Doing what needed to be done. The greatest obscenity yet. So deep and dark. Doing the awful deed to save the life of the man she loved. She wailed as she came, her black thoughts streaming tears from her eyes.

KATE WATCHED the glossy chestnut stud, prancing and high stepping, his enormous black cock swinging and slapping itself in its belly. She watched it rear up and mount the female while two men held her in place. She looked away and kept walking.

She heard the horses braying behind her, the shouts of the men. She couldn't tell if they were encouraging them or trying to stop them. She kept walking making her way to the metal door painted a deep Hunter green.

Kate had followed the instructions that came in the envelope. She'd left at about six in the morning slipping out of bed and leaving the apartment while Mitch was still sleeping. She drove the Bentley out to the west end of London, came here to this racetrack, quiet and lonely on a grey Tuesday morning. She parked where she'd been told to, the lot almost empty and walked the path reading as she went. She'd encountered those men with the horses as she'd come out from a low brick passage into a garden area that opened out to a small paddock lined with tall wrought iron fencing.

She made it past the horse ring got to the door saw that someone had scratched a little x into the door up near the top as it said there would on the little stiff card in her hand. This was the door.

She opened it and walked through into a long wooden hall lined with stables. The smell of horses hit her. Deep, sweaty farm smell from the past, she covered her nose for a moment.

She walked along between the horses looking out at her from behind their gates. Heard the clinking of their bridles as they watched her pass. She crossed through, made it to the far end where the stable ended in a low room stretching out to her left and right. She looked at the card and then counted the doors across from her and opened the one that was third from the left.

She was in an empty locker room, dark and low ceilinged. She turned the light but on and called out softly but she was alone in there. The walls were red brick and lined with photos of men with their horses, some new, lots in black and white, there were crops and bridles that had some meaning she supposed, and championship jerseys and ribbons framed in glass. She walked along running her finger along the metal lockers looking for a number 60. She found it and fished the little key out of her pocket. She slid it in and wiggled it to turn it and it opened. The locker had only one thing in it. A pretty blue box wrapped in a big silk ribbon. It was on the shelf leaning sideways on an angle. She took it out it, was big but not heavy. She turned and put it on the bench behind her. She sat next to it, looked at it for a moment. She pulled the top off, the ribbon only wrapped around the lid and put it aside. She pushed the soft silk aside trying to find what was under there. She felt leather under her fingertips. It was a horse bridle. She took it out of the box and held it up stretched between her hands like a jumble of leather straps. It was very finely made, the leather soft and buttery, deep caramel brown, buckles and rings in shining brass. She was instantly transported back to unpleasant grey weekends on her Uncle's farm. Sixteen weekends over two summers when she was nine and ten. Two summers buried deep in her memory where she wouldn't see them.

She put the bridle down, straightened it out trying to see its natural shape. She saw that it wasn't a bridle at all now. She looked in the box. Another white card. More instructions typed into its stiff surface.

The Fairway House

KATE DIDN'T like the neighbourhood that the Fairway House was in. She drove past the manor twice, going slow, trying to look in the front doors just seeing the reflection of the Bentley slide along, warbling, distorted. It was a nice looking place, brass doors, a faded burgundy awning that went right out to the edge of the street, shaded on either side by two old, gnarled oak trees. Behind the trees were glimpses of an ancient Victorian manor, charcoal painted brick and heavy black casing with lots of little edges and details. But when you completed a circle around the place, going around counterclockwise, there were loading bays, lorries being unloaded, open boxes of fish on ice, gruff men from far away places with cigarettes dangling from a lip, faceless little offices, an Indian takeaway, a check casher, and two cellphone shops both with Arabic writing.

The sun was shining and the streets bright and active. Such a funny time to embark on some twisted little escapade. The situation, the leather straps pinching her flesh, her body completely bare under her trench coat, seemed like something to do under the cover of night. She pulled into a space just past the entrance and watched the place in the rearview for a moment. There was no one coming or going and she was just wasting time. She squeezed the polished wood steering wheel, wishing this all to go away.

She stepped out of the Bentley and stood a moment, frozen by her bright reflection in the driver side window. Standing there in a honey Burberry, mid-length, completely bare underneath except for the leather straps and brass rings crossing over her. She could feel the fresh cool air stirring, felt it between her legs chilling her damp creases. She took her leather kidskin gloves out of her pocket and watched herself put them on, her face expressionless. She had her hair down and she put on her big, black sunglasses as she headed to the Manor.

Eight degrees out and each step brought a chill under her coat that she felt against her bare skin as it jiggled with each step in her riding boots. She walked up the carpeted steps under the awning and stepped into the Manor quickly.

The lobby was dark, poorly lit but clean and polished. Not too cramped but not grand in any way. The floor was black and white marble tiles, checkerboard, blood red carpet in the centre and then running up the wooden staircase to her left that went to a balcony overhead. The place was empty and quiet, but you could tell there was activity behind the wood panelled walls around her. She put her hand on the black wooden ball that started up the handrail and looked around. She wished there were another way.

She slowly walked up the stairs, each time her foot went down on one of the low carpeted steps she struggled with the notion that she could just run back down. Just get back in the car and start driving. She wouldn't die. She wouldn't kill. But it would all be over. And Mitch would be philosophically dead, killed, split apart and ruined by his disgusting wife. At the top of the stairs she had a new resolve. There was no running away. She could do this. Do it for Mitch.

Somewhere in the building a baby cried. Something heavy was dropped somewhere else. She took the key out of her pocket and looked at it again. Simple little key you'd see anywhere, tarnished ring holding onto a plastic fob, a red rounded diamond, gold print said 2F, faded so it was almost gone. She dropped it back in her pocket, felt it rattle against something else in there, the rattle setting off an intense dread at what she must do.

She was gripped with fear, walking along the hall, her boots clapping on the threadbare carpet stretched over stone. What would it be like to be alone with him again. Face to face hidden away in some room where no one knew they were. Could she do it?

SHE STOOD in front of 2F her feet frozen to the floor with the weight of her intent. The door was painted black, six raised panels down it. The dim little gas lamps in the hall looked like they were from a different time with their single amber filament bulbs too weak to push away the shadows in the black stained wooden hall. Someone was yelling in a deep voice on another floor. Something in Farsi.

She slid the key into the lock and turned it. She pushed the door open with a high, barely perceptible creak and quietly stepped into a vestibule. The little room was dark, lit up only by the daylight coming into the apartment that she couldn't see yet, opening up beyond an elaborate archway but off to the right. She stood there listening but there was nothing to hear. Nothing close, just the sounds of a normal workday in London from outside the windows.

The furniture was ornate, over-done and Gothic. A gilded table and padded chair with elaborate carved finials, a mirror with a frame more than a foot thick, a potted palm sprouting from a huge metal urn.

She put her hand back in her pocket, felt the object's weight. She wrapped her hand around the handle, felt the dead, cold metal of it. She had every reason to do this. Every reason not to do it. If she could even manage it. He was strong, he could overpower her, do anything to her, would he kill her if she'd only hurt him?

It would be easier to just give in, let it happen, let him consume her. Let him continue to harass her, abuse her, let him today to just fuck her, defile her, let him do it again and again, today and any other day for as long as he wanted this to go on. Make her suffer because she was a dirty whore who deserved it. Had earned it. But not Mitch. He had nothing to do with this. He was her angel, her saviour, and she couldn't bring him harm, she couldn't let this happen to him. For Mitch, she could do this.

She felt her hand sweating, squeaking against the tight leather glove as she gripped the handle of the knife. She took it out of her pocket, looked at it glow in the dark, drawing the daylight to its stainless blade. She thought to bring a knife from her kitchen, a sturdy butcher's blade, razor sharp and black handled. She pictured herself on a witness stand in some impossible future unable to claim self-defence when she had the foresight to bring a blade with her. She bought this heavy, cheap hunting knife from a table on the street at a market far from home. This could be the knife of her attacker, somehow used against him. Fifteen quid to purchase Mitch's freedom, a real bargain. She put the blade behind her back, gripped it again, firmly, letting it find some comfort in the shape of her grip. She'd used a knife on a man before. Not to kill. But she'd slashed him good, sent him packing. She took a step to the arch, a step to her doom. She breathed in and stepped through to the other side, into the cold daylight of the apartment.

Omar was there seated in a high-back, padded Victorian chair. He was a dark silhouette, the sky of London a hazy bright gauze behind gently rustling ivory lace beyond him. He wasn't alone.

KATE FELT like she was floating, the toes of her boots coming up off the floor, the weight of all she had to do taken away from her. She was flooded with relief, she didn't know if she could have done it, but with two men she knew it was futile. She felt the relief of surrender, of giving in, like a hunted animal turning its neck to a predator succumbing in trade for a quick and painless end. She felt her arm with the knife come down, without her approval, and her hand let the blade go, she heard it drop softly into the soil of the little palm tree. She stood a moment longer before them, motionless, they hadn't noticed. She stepped forward, felt the emotions coming, the enormous action she had been prepared to take, what might happen now, and she felt her eyes rim with tears, and her face went flush. But she kept walking, the sounds of her boot heels on the floor huge in the room.

"There she is," Omar said. "I didn't know it could take so long to walk from the car up one flight of stairs."

The man next to him sat as Omar did, one leg crossed over the other, both of them watching her walk across the floor to them. She struggled to keep herself together, felt one tear roll down her cheek and brushed it away with the back of her gloved hand. She stopped a body's length from them.

"Who's he?" she said.

The man stood up, took a step and held out his hand to her. He was young, younger than Kate and Omar. He was boyishly handsome with a thick head of hair, the back and sides cut very short. He was wearing a three piece suit, glen check plaid, and some polished brown brogues.

"This is my American friend, call him Ares," Omar said.

"Pleased to meet you," he said in some American accent, Southern, or Texan, or something. He shook her hand gently, just once, and sat back down, smiling at her. The whole thing felt very weird, like she was here for a business meeting, or to sign some papers. Was she mistaken about why she'd been summoned here?

"I've told Ares everything about you," Omar said. She was troubled by that, bit her bottom lip, and looked up at the ceiling. What did that mean? Does someone else know about the video, had he seen it, how she'd enjoyed being violated. The things she said about the man she loved. Was this one more person who could ruin her life? Mitch's life?

"What did you tell him?"

Omar looked at her, waited, watched her shift as she stood, uncomfortable with the leather straps squeezing her. "I told him how you love cock. How you fuck like a devil."

This was about sex. It was nothing more. She resigned herself to what was going to happen now. They were going to fuck her, humiliate her. But she could do that.

"Come and sit," he said, patting his thigh once. Omar was wearing a suit too. Just a jacket and pants and a collared shirt buttoned up but without a tie. She went to him, sat on his left thigh facing into the two of them. She kept her legs together, her hands in her pockets. Omar put his hand on the small of her back supporting her. He wiped her cheek.

"Hey, look at me. Smile for us."

She was able to smile for them, smiling at her ridiculous situation, smiling at how outrageous her whole life had become. She smiled because it felt inevitable, once again she'd done herself in. It didn't matter what luck she'd landed in, Mitch's pot of gold, the love he had for her, she could undo it all.

She watched Omar's strong hand work one of the big black buttons out of its hole at the top of her Sandringham, then the one below it, pulling it away from the belt tied around her waist. He pulled the lapel across exposing her breast. She felt her nipple tighten in the cold. He pulled her breast out of the jacket let it hang over the cotton gabardine, Ares watched, his face blank but intent on what he was seeing.

Omar untied her belt, shaking her body as he pulled the knot apart. She looked down and away at the floor but she could feel him staring into her.

She had so much to say to Omar. She wanted to plead with him. She couldn't live like this, she just couldn't. She wanted him to know that. How he was killing her. If she could make him see. But not with this other man there watching her. Omar did the other two buttons, working them out slowly, taking his time. She looked over at him, looked in his eyes. He looked so unfeeling.

He carefully pulled one side of her coat open for Ares, then the other, presenting her to him. She sat there, exposed, her breasts hanging over the tight leather straps, and her flesh bunched and pinched where they crossed at her thighs. Ares smiled and reached out and put his hand on the middle of her thigh, squeezing her there, checking her firmness.

She turned and looked at Omar again. "Why are you doing this," she said, quietly not meant for the other man to hear.

He kissed her lips softly, with care. "I do this because I know you want it."

"How can you be so cold? Why do you hate me?"

He smiled at her, said "How can you think I hate you after all I do for you."

"Please Omar, you could ruin us. How could you do that?"

"It is you that made this. You're here with me now, making sure it won't happen. You're the one who is in charge."

"Please Omar, I just wanted to have some fun with you, I don't want all this. What have I ever done to you? I can't live like this. You're killing me."

"You did this. You brought this danger into your life. Not me. Do not blame me."

He kissed her again, her face felt hot, her nose swelled so she couldn't breathe through it, she felt a tear in her eyelash. She wasn't going to cry though. She wouldn't let him see that.

"You can go after this. We're done after today," he said, whispered into her ear.

She looked at him, kissed him back, he put his hand to her face, held her. She bit at his tongue while she felt her thighs being gently brought apart. She stopped and watched as she was spread and Ares looked between her legs. She bit her lip again, and she and Omar watched him reach between her legs and touch her there, part her with his first knuckle.

"What a perfect little pussy," he said. She could feel she was wet already, felt that he had disturbed her folds, felt the cold against where she was damp.

“STAND up and show us your outfit,” he said.

She got off his lap and stepped out in front of them. She took her coat off slowly, feeling their eyes on her. She threw it off to the side and stood in front of them unafraid. She was wearing just the fine harness and a pair of box calf riding boots that came up to her knee, a strap at the top and across her foot held with brass buckles.

Omar signalled for her to turn for them and she did, moving herself in a slow circle, the sound of her boots shuffling on the floor. She stopped so they could see her from behind. Ares stood and came behind her, looking at her body, assessing her. He was tall and slim and he smelled like lemons and cloves. She turned to watch him over her shoulder. He slapped at her flank, grabbing her flesh where her ass met the top of her thigh. She gasped.

“What a beautiful body you’ve got,” he said in her ear.

“Thank you.”

She felt his hands on her shoulders, felt them move up to her collar, she shivered as they went to her neck and through her hair. Her nipples stood straight out. He tied her hair back for her, put it in a ponytail.

“He thinks you’re a fine little animal,” Omar said.

“I’d pay a fortune for her at auction,” Ares said as he sat back down.

Omar patted his thigh, drawing her back to him. She sat on his leg again. She looked at both of them nervously. Omar stroked her hair. She felt very conscious of her hunched posture, tried straightening herself up.

Ares stood up in front of her, put his hands in his pockets.

“Take it out. Why don’t we see what he’s got for you,” Omar said.

She hesitated, then reached out and pulled the little fly down and put her hand inside his pants. She felt him in there, through the thin leather glove, already hot and hard. She pulled it out and looked at it.

“Well, what do you think?”

“Do you like what I’ve brought you?”

“I do.” It was a very good looking dick. Big and smooth, almost veinless, uncircumcised, but the neat foreskin folded up behind a plump smooth skinned glans. Not as long as Omar and definitely not as wide, it was very large, just not fearsome.

“Tell him.”

“You have a great cock.”

“Put it in your mouth,” Ares said looking down on her.

She took it up in her hand and put her mouth over him. She was gentle with it, trying to please him. She pulled his balls out while she slowly sucked him, played with them, felt they were shaved smooth. They were small, pulled tight up against him. She tasted him dribble into her mouth, felt how hard she’d made him. She gripped his cock with both her gloved hands and sucked him gently, pulling his foreskin over with her lips then pushing it back again. He started gently thrusting into her mouth, between her hands, and she tasted another little stream from him. She looked up at him, stroking him with one hand, pushing her tongue against his tip. He watched her, his breaths heavy. He took both her wrists in his hands and she worked him using just her mouth, twisting her neck and bobbing on him. She could see the edges of indigo lines, tattoos on his wrists crawling out from under the french cuffs of his shirt.

Omar reached out, and guided her back to him. She got herself between his legs, walking on her knees. He watched her as she undid his fly. She put her hand in his opened pants and found him in there, soft but heavy, and brought it out. She let it hang from his fly, drooping down to the chair. She had missed this thing. She ran a leather covered finger along it, watched it move underneath the wrinkled skin, wanting to grow.

She put her hands in his, put their fingers together and ran her tongue down the top of his cock from the middle down to the big covered tip. She took him up in her mouth, and pulled it, stretched it. Felt him begin to stiffen in her mouth. She sucked on him, he filled her mouth but he was still so soft. Ares stood above her, to her left, and she could tell he was stroking himself.

She took her gloves off slowly, one finger at a time. Then picked Omar's cock up again, ran her bare fingers over it. She was familiar with it, knew what he liked. She pulled his hood back, traced a finger along the rim of it and across the tip. She could feel him swelling in the grip of her other hand. She jerked it gently now, hard enough not to flop around too much, still teasing him with her other finger. She put her fingers in the fly and scooped out one big ball at a time, letting them hang down to the chair.

"Christ," Ares said, over her shoulder.

Kate looked up at him, said "You thought you were going to be the one with the big dick?"

OMAR STROKED his cock while he watched Kate suck on his balls. Her eyes were closed as she did it, putting one ball in and pulling back as far as she could then letting it slowly pull out and fall off a pouted lip. Now she was pushing them together with her fingers forcing them both into her mouth. It hurt but he loved it, wasn't going to stop her.

He didn't think Ares—if that was his real name, sounded made up—liked having Kate point out he had the smaller dick. She didn't notice him bristle.

He nodded to him to sit down and he did. Omar took Kate's hand and guided it over to him. She caught on and felt around til she got his cock in her grip and stroked him too. She ran her tongue up Omar and pushed his hand away, pulling him down and trying to get her lips around it, stuffing it in her little mouth. She had them both so hard now.

"Tell him about your husband's dick," he said.

Kate just kept sucking on him, pretending she didn't hear.

He pulled his dick out of her mouth, said "Kate, tell him about your husband's dick."

She wiped her mouth with the back of her hand, looked down, her brow furrowed, worried.

"It's not very big," she said, very quietly.

"Is that why you're here?"

"Yes," she said.

"Tell him."

Kate looked over at Ares. She rubbed her arm, said, “His penis is pretty small—”

“And what do you like?”

“I like these ones.”

“You like big cocks, yes?”

“Are you recording this again,” she said.

He smiled at her. “Just tell the truth, Kate.”

“I like big cocks.”

“What about them?”

She was quiet a moment, thinking. He felt a little bad for her briefly. Almost wanted to let her off the hook. She said, “The way they hang, touching them, feeling them inside me when they’re hard.”

Ares rubbed his forehead, took her hand and put it back on his cock. Kate sucked her bottom lip in, stroked him, watched his cock in her hand.

Omar said, “Show him how small your husband is.”

She didn’t know what he wanted. “On him?”

“Show him.”

She gripped the base of Ares cock, studied it. She moved her hand up his shaft a little bit more, leaving a length she thought looked like Mitch. She spread her thumb and forefinger along the end of Ares cock, said, “About that, but not thick like you are.”

“You poor thing,” Ares said.

“He makes up for it in many other ways,” she said, and smiled at him feeling pretty confident.

Omar looked at Kate and rubbed his thumb against his fingertips, making the sign for Money.

She sat back with her ass on her heels, put her hands together in her lap. She didn’t want to participate. This was silly. Not sexy.

Omar moved swiftly next to her, down on one knee. He pulled her head back sharply by her ponytail and she cried out and grasped at her hair.

“We’re going to give you what you want today. Tell me what you want.”

“I want you to fuck me with those big cocks,” she said, gritting her teeth.

He bit at her neck and she felt his hand moving down her belly in between her legs. She sucked her lips in between her teeth and shut her eyes. She felt his long, thick finger slide along her crease.

“We’re going to give you the fucking of a lifetime. Something you’ll always remember.”

“Give it to me, then,” she said.

OMAR WALKED her to the couch leading her with her small hand hidden inside his grip. He sat her down on the couch, some ornate Victorian thing with tapered legs and upholstered in a stiff tapestry of horses and hounds and foxes. Ares knelt in front of her and grabbed her thighs roughly, squeezing them, hurting her. She didn’t make a sound. He pulled her rump down the couch to the edge, pulling her mound toward him, her back slid down, her chin touched her chest. She had the urge to bring her thighs together but he was in the way, looking at her, examining her pussy. She put her thumbnail in her mouth and swayed her hips for him. She had the urge now, she felt it pushing her forward. Something inside had a hand at the small of her back pushing her forward, curious to see where this would go.

He pinched her hard down there, pushing her flesh together, squeezing her labia out. He ran his other hand over the ruffled dark meat, she was slick already. He loosened his grip on her, enough to slip a finger on the other hand past her folds. She clenched her cheeks together, pushed herself towards him. She felt his long finger slip nicely inside her. She wanted him to fuck her. She was eager to find out what he would feel like. How would that pretty boy cock feel sliding deep inside. She bet it wouldn’t hurt her, that big and perfectly proportioned cock would fill her up all the way and not ask too much of her tight little pussy.

Omar took her other arm by the wrist, bringing it to his cock laying between his legs on the seat of the couch. She lifted it, stroked his foreskin over the head, felt it writhe in her hand. Ares had his head between her legs, pushing his tongue inside her, running it up and over her clit. She put her hand between her legs and pulled herself wide for him with her first two fingers. He raised himself up and looked at her, his face shining with her wetness. She told him what she wanted with her eyes.

He took his big thing and rubbed it on her, through her hair. He tapped it against her, slapping at her dark, engorged flesh. She could smell herself. She looked at his beautiful cock in his hand, sticking out of the fly of his grey suit. The head was a plump and cheery rosy pink.

He pushed it inside her slowly, it felt thicker than she thought. He eased it back, then slid it in again deeper. She trembled. She looked down between her legs, watched it go into her. She used her middle two fingers to find her sweet spot, playing through her furrowed wet flesh. She watched that big smooth cock disappear inside her, felt it push her apart.

She looked at her hand, her wedding ring and diamond reflecting the daylight. She put her head back as he sunk himself all the way, heard her wet insides being separated, felt his hip bones push her thighs apart. He pumped himself into her twice, all the way out then deep inside again. She shuddered, her legs trembled, and she came. It happened so swiftly, the pleasure was absolute and then it rose her up high into the sky like a raft on a wave and she went over the top. She gasped and dropped Omar's cock, put her hand over her mouth. That had never happened before. She looked at Ares who'd stopped for a moment, her eyes were wide. Ares was incredulous, She didn't just come did she? She shook her head because she was embarrassed. Ashamed that a stranger could insert his big tool inside her on a sunny weekday, her husband at work, and make her come almost instantly.

Ares resumed his thrusts, making her quiver. She was still sensitive from her orgasm. She rode it out and soon a warm pleasure prevailed, spreading from her sex into her heart and down her arms and legs. She closed her eyes and let it happen, fucking him back, moving her hips into his, conceding her interior to every inch he had.

She looked into his eyes while he fucked her. His hair had fallen out of its carefully combed rake, and hung down over his forehead. She wondered how old he was. His skin was taut but still youthful. She felt his arms through the suit jacket, felt the bulging muscles under the fabric. She unbuttoned his vest and slid her hands up under his dress shirt, untucking it from his pants. His stomach was rock hard, she could feel the ridges of muscles moving there, flexing as he thrust himself into her. She closed her eyes and put her head back, feeling his fit young body move under her palms, felt his perfect cock reaching in deep and gently spreading her.

She felt Omar's cock being put into her hand. She stroked it, looked up at him. He pulled her by her wrists, sitting her up. Ares had slid out of her, and she felt his absence. Her stomach fluttered, wanting to be filled again, that pleasure to return and put her over the top another time. Omar sat back in the corner of the sofa with his legs apart, pulled her towards him. She kneeled and put his cock in her mouth with one hand, thrusting her ass out for Ares. She felt him slide in to her, all the way to the hilt. She exhaled, snorting out her nose, her mouth completely filled with the end of Omar's huge half hard cock.

She worked him into her as best she could, squeezing the base of his cock with one hand. She gently squeezed his large balls with her other hand while Ares fucked her.

She felt Omar get harder between her lips until her jaw ached from trying to keep her teeth off him. She felt his big hands take her upper arms and pull them back behind her. He brought his legs together enough that she wouldn't impale herself on him, and she leaned towards the couch. She felt him bend her arms, bringing her hands together at the small of her back like she was being apprehended. She felt her nipples grazing the seat of the couch with Ares' thrusts.

Omar was doing something behind her back, working on something. She heard a metallic click, and she felt him release her. But her arms were pinned behind her. Like he had put a lock through the rings of the bracelets and the ring at the back of the harness.

She was alarmed but she didn't resist. They could do anything to her. She wanted them to. She felt herself being pulled upright by her straps. Ares pulled her to him, his big cock still buried inside her. She was on her knees, and Ares' arms came around her, his hands filling themselves with her breasts, lifting them, caressing them, feeling their weight. She turned over her shoulder to kiss him but he wouldn't. Omar came to her on his knees and she kissed him. She felt his strong hands on her waist, felt the power of his grip even in his lightest touch. She hated him but she missed him. She missed this feeling. He handled her. He fucked her. He made her wet. Omar was kissing her back, biting at her tongue and squeezing her ass and her hips while Ares slowly fucked her from behind. She could feel Omar's hard tool touching the inside of her thigh. She wanted it inside her. Wanted to feel that pain that she loved.

A Reflection

HE PUSHED it sticking upright for her with his thumb. She had him so hard, he was at his most impressive, the width at the base broader than his own thumb. He admired his tool, it was hard as steel right now, ridged and burlled, his veins stood out on it, the skin shone it was stretched so tight. He wanted her to see it, he knew how much she loved it. Her eyes were lowered to it, she looked intoxicated.

He had himself slumped into the corner of the couch, his hips and waist flat against the seat, his cock sticking straight up, ready for her to mount herself to him. Ares helped her get to her knees, spread over his thighs. He tapped her belly with his cock, pushed and slid the underside against her wooly mound.

Ares held her harness by a short handle strap and he let her lean forward, supporting her with it. She got her hips up past Omar's and calibrated her wet gap to his cock. She moaned in his ear as she found it, her hot little hole sucked at his tip, pulling him into her. The moan turned to a yelp as she sunk herself lower onto it and his wide flared glans pierced her.

Her mouth found his, bit his lips and his chin as she controlled his painful intrusion. She threw her head back, sounded out in pain as she accepted his widest girth. She lunged forward, her breasts squashed between them, she plunged her tongue into his mouth and he sucked it in. She looked into his eyes, told him she loved how big it was.

There weren't too many girls like Kate he thought. She was stunning to look at and she knew how to fuck. Some girls had turned him down when they'd seen what was between his legs, laughed, said No way. Most complained, or were awkward about it, or had just wanted to see what it was like. Kate was one of three that took it all. Took him right to his balls. Didn't mind her cervix being bumped. She was deep and tight, and when she was warmed up her canal stretched itself long for him letting him sink ten thick inches inside her. She was a gift; beautiful, sexy, dirty, deep. She was put on this earth for him.

He watched her, eyes closed, head tilted back, sitting up braced by Ares, swivelling her hips with him buried inside her. She was sighing and gasping, high and squeaky.

He put his hands on her, felt her moving under her soft flesh, she thrust her breasts out for him, arched her back, still fucking him. He put his hands on them, squeezed them, watched their softness give in, melt between his fingers. Kate was getting what she wanted from him, she was doing all the work, and she was loving it.

He caressed her, dug his fingers into her waist, her belly. Felt her orgasm brewing within her, felt her trembling under his touch. It was time.

He nodded to Ares. Ares stepped to her side, wrapped his hand around her neck. He guided her to his cock pointing up at her, touching her shoulder. She put her lips over it, took him as deep as she could go. Omar thrust gently against her, giving her more to to work on and he could hear her moan around the thing stretching her mouth.

Ares pulled it from her and she watched him, spit hanging from his cock and tacked to her full, pouted lips. Ares pushed her forward so that her chest pressed into Omar. She looked over her shoulder, watching him. Omar put his arms around her, held her to him. Ares got behind her. She was on her knees on the couch straddling Omar, his cock deep inside her, bent right over now. Ares put his hand on her ass, ran his thumb down her crack spread wide, and circled her anus with it.

Kate flinched, he felt her jump, she said "Oh my God, please, please don't..."

SHE KNEW this was what she wanted the minute she threw her coat on the floor and kneeled between them and felt their long, thick cocks hard in her little fists. She knew she wanted them both inside her, she wanted them to tear her in two, stab her deep and ruin her. Tear her apart.

She struggled with Omar, putting on a show. She bit at him, turned and hissed over her shoulder at Ares, “Please, it will hurt—”

She didn’t close herself to them, she didn’t rise up off of Omar stuffed inside her. She tilted herself to Ares, presented him with her tight little hole. She fell forward onto Omar’s chest, her face buried in his neck, his stubble scratching her soft cheek. She felt the head of Ares’ cock pushing against her, probing at her anus. She said it again, Don’t.

He pushed it into her, she felt his head spread her sphincter and slide up in her. Felt the flange of it ripple against her tightness. She yelped, and cried into Omar. His hands grabbed her, brutally squeezing her waist just above her hips. He squeezed her into him, pinning her, immobilizing her, his fingers sinking deeply into the soft flesh of her rump. She cried out again, told him to stop. Ares slid himself in deeper and the pain was enormous. Omar’s thick cock, the thickest thing she had ever seen, was deep inside her, and she could feel Ares sliding in, both of them so hard she could feel them grinding into each other inside her, tearing at the membrane that separated her passages down there. She screamed out in pain, high and sharp. She wanted to be heard. Her yell was sexual, animal. She didn’t want help to come, she wanted to proclaim to everyone the depths of her dark pleasures.

Her arms battled the restraints and she wriggled, but she was pinned, both of them so strong, and she was skewered by their huge cocks inside her. She couldn’t get away from them even if she wanted. She felt the pleasure come then, knowing that she was free, absolved. She had to surrender to these two well-hung muscular men, it was beyond her control. Ares got himself deeper, and she cried out again. Ares’ thumbs dug deep into the biggest part of her cheeks, the tips digging into her muscles. He peeled her wide, spreading her crack out flat. He pulled out a bit and pushed himself in deeper. Air escaped from her, belched around his thick cock. She bit Omar’s neck and he growled at her, pulled away. Ares slid deep inside her, she felt it pulse and flex inside her pumping his lubricant into her, greasing her so she could accept his size.

“Push it all the way in,” she said, her voice strained, her throat bent, twisted and pushed into Omar’s collar. Ares did it. It felt like he did, getting himself right up into her, she could feel how hard they both were, driven out of their minds by the little slut that she was, opening her legs for them, letting them do the things that were forbidden. She could feel the heads of their cocks, engorged, round and hard, like two big knots buried in her guts. She could feel them move inside her as they both began to gently find a way to thrust.

“Fuck me,” she said.

They were slow and easy, knowing how precarious this was, knowing how large they were and how they’d stretched her. One wrong move and she could be destroyed. It hurt so much, and they felt so wrong inside her, too large, too deep. Her membranes splitting and aching, and the unnatural feeling of a large object, two of them, imbedded inside her, perversely deep into her guts.

She saw movement through her squinted eyes, across the room and down from the couch. Knew what it was, a mirror, knew from the movement in sync with the thrusts she felt inside her. She saw herself in the tall, narrow standing mirror, with the elaborate dark wooden trim. Saw herself bent over, her white thighs drawn up, knees on the couch, her dirty sex exposed and lanced. Her face was pushed into Omar, she saw herself, bleary-eyed and messed, her sweaty hair in her face. Saw her arms bound behind her back. She could see Ares’ rump flexing through his tight suit pants, driving himself carefully inside her. She felt him and Omar too, mostly keeping himself still, letting her impale herself on him while Ares did his work. She squeezed on Omar, ground her hips gently, trying to find a rhythm with Ares. One errant thrust and she could be punctured. He worked with her, felt her wanting to move and he followed her lead. She started to moan as she got it, feeling Omar so hard inside her.

“Touch me,” she said to Omar.

Omar slid a hand from her hip, down in between them, she felt his hand turn and the tip of his finger curl up into her ruptured pussy, her creases spread wide, her clit swollen and thrust forward. She cried out when he touched it.

That was how the dirtiest, most incredible orgasm of her life began. She watched it happen in the mirror, saw herself bent on a couch like a whore, spread out to save her husband. Two men, dirty, mean, deep inside her, their tremendous manhood too much for her to bear. She ground into them, she squeezed them. She felt her insides gripping Omar's thickness, clutching at him, she heard him groan into her ear. She gasped, milking him with her insides, she clamped down on Ares. She was tearing she knew it, giving them resistance, something for their size to fight against. She cried out, but she had them too hot to stop now. She'd turned them into animals, taken away their compassion. She'd presented them with her insides, shown she wanted it, and now they both were working to fill her up with their seed, to plant their hot, thick loads deep inside her. She wanted to feel that, to feel them pulse and flex within her, to feel their hot jets set off inside, spraying her walls, coating her with their semen. She cried out again, loud. She cried and moaned like she was being murdered. Ares covered her mouth, put his hand over her lips and her nose and pulled her head back painfully. She started to come, knew it was going to be too much for her right away. Ares was so hard inside her, wrestling with her as she struggled to breathe around his hands. She moaned, and grunted, spitting into his hand, exploding air through his clamped fingers. Tears were squinted from her eyes and ran down her cheeks. She fucked them recklessly, throwing everyone's thrusts off. Ares stabbed into her awkwardly, punching into her bowels, she yelped and bucked against them, still coming, bringing her closer to something far too gargantuan for her to contain. Omar growled in her ear again, his fingers rubbing her exposed sex furiously. It wouldn't end, wave after wave, and no matter how hard she thrust herself against them, how deep she got them it wouldn't stop, it kept rising and swelling within her, pushing her against a wall, squeezing the air out of her, the life out of her. She cried into Ares hand, she bit at his fingers. She needed to breathe. He parted for her and she inhaled deeply, she saw something on the horizon, reached for it, stretching. She screamed out, loud, warbling with her own thrusts. They let her, let her scream and gasp for air, let her yelp, let her succumb, find that high wall and pull herself over, tumble across to the other side and fall into infinite darkness.

In the darkness, floating off somewhere, high and distant, way up in the deepest part of her mind, she felt Ares coming inside her. She was aware from outside of her body that he was injecting his seed deeply into her ass. She was happy for him, glad to see his release, to hear him roar over and over, squeezing her hips and driving into her, to know that she had done well for him. He came forever and she smiled somewhere, maybe in another room. She felt him slide that big beautiful thing out of her and it felt like it had been replaced by a cherry popsicle. Cold air, a breeze, up inside her asshole. She felt Omar turn her over, pull her off of his cock, and she played dead, laughing inside at him, heard Ares as he asked Omar if she was alright. Omar laid her out on the couch and she was shocked at how lifeless she looked. Her arms and legs rubbery. She watched Omar from above lay her flat on her back, her arms twisted up and locked behind her, her shoulders up to her ears, her head stuffed to one side against the back of the couch. He pulled her sleeping legs apart, she giggled how one leg bent out at a weird angle, the heel of her boot catching on the edge of a rug. She watched him slide that monstrous pipe inside her. Watched his foreskin peel back as he pushed that ridiculous head into her. She wondered how that must feel. She saw that girl get fucked, how good it looked, how strangely quiet the room had got. Her big tits swung with his thrusts, going in circles up to her neck and back around, her lifeless body getting stabbed over and over by that huge weapon. She saw him collapse over her and she was vaguely aware of feeling wet inside, like someone had knocked over a pitcher of milk—who's going to clean this up, Kate?—and she felt a little queasy like she'd just watched some gory video, maybe like war-time Croatia, of a twisted man fucking a corpse.

SHE OPENED HER EYES, tried to focus, saw nothing but a blurry geometric pattern. The floorcloth, Persian, antique, Sherlock Holmes' office. She blinked, trying to get herself together. Her hands were still locked at the small of her back. Her shoulders ached, her neck felt strained. She was face down on the floor at the foot of the couch. She could hear and feel footsteps on the parquet floor. Two men behind her, dress shoes. She rolled to her side, looked over her shoulder at them. Omar and Ares, zipping up, adjusting, preening hair in the mirror. They were leaving.

“Where are you going?”

“I have things to do in London,” Omar said, still watching the mirror.

Kate struggled to turn herself over, but she couldn’t get on her back with her arms bent up. She tried to sit but couldn’t, she felt too weak. She heard it, and felt it, a bubbling between her legs. Semen surging out of her folds and running down between her cheeks. She felt a slippery puddle already thickly pooled under her rump.

“Ow, oh—“ she said. She felt torn wide between her legs, her tailbone throbbing. No sympathy from them.

Omar turned and stood over her. He watched her struggle on the floor, dirty and in pain. “I wish I had a camera right now,” he said.

Ares came and stood next to him, put his hand up politely liked he hated interrupting them.

“I’ve got to run,” he said, “It was very nice meeting you, Kate.” Then he turned and he was gone, out the door, down the hall.

“Can you unlock me, please. My shoulders are killing me.”

“I would, but I don’t have a key for that lock.”

“Please, Omar.”

He squat down next to her, he touched her cheek, but she turned it from him. His hand went down her body, caressed her breast, and stroked a nipple.

“I’m sorry,” he said.

“Omar, please, it hurts. It’s over now. Just let me go.”

He laughed, said “I thought you believed me.”

Kate stiffened. She looked for him, where he’d moved to, wanting to see his face. He was standing at the archway, ready to leave. The sun was coming in the window, lower now, and he was lit up, handsome, sparkling eyes.

“Omar, it’s over,” she said. She heard the tremble in her own voice.

“Kate, this will never be over. I’m going to destroy you. I’m going to turn your insides out, make you beg for me, and you’re going to pay me to do it. You’re going to tell yourself you’ll do it to save your husband, save your marriage. But we both know you do it because you love every filthy inch of it.”

She held it in. Looked at him, knew what she had to do. Not today, but she would do it. Knew she would do it. She watched him smile, arrogant piece of shit, and he stepped over and picked up her coat and walked away with it.

“I’ll talk to you soon, Kate.”

She could endure, she could take anything and smile. He couldn’t ruin her. But he didn’t know what she would do to save her husband. He was going to find out.

She heard the door close behind him as he left.

A Video

MITCH WATCHED THE VIDEO AGAIN. He watched Kate laying on the floor of the little apartment in the Fairway Manor with her hands shackled behind her back. The leather harness he'd had made dug into her beautiful flesh, her breasts spilling off her chest over her arms. She lay like that for a quarter of an hour and he watched it in real time. He could see her breathing, her eyes blinking. Finally she stirred, knowing precisely the moment she would do it, he'd seen this video so many times.

She rolled to her side, completely naked but for the straps, riding boots, and leather bracers locking her arms behind her to a brass ring looped in the harness. She got herself to her knees with tremendous effort, stayed like that for a moment with her forehead pressed into the floor. Finally, she leaned herself against the couch and got a leg out in front of her, was able to stand. She walked herself to the vestibule, leaned against the wall, slid her back down braced against it and squat down next to a potted palm. She stood again, her legs shoulder width apart, her breasts swinging gently as she struggled with something behind her back. The leather straps that were buckled around her thighs, crossing her hips, were pulled into her, creasing her flesh as she pulled at them behind her back. Then he saw them give way, first the left then the right, the leather straps falling free, swinging the brass buckles against her thigh. She put her head back, and the straps over her shoulders cut in. She struggled this time, a much greater effort to free them. Then they let loose, making her breasts jump. Straps still wrapped over her shoulders now but loose.

She backed herself to the couch and dropped something on to the seat. A shining blade, a dull green metal handle. A combat knife with a long steel edge that shone in the daylight filling up the room through the lace curtains.

The first time he'd seen this revealed to him he struggled to understand what he was looking at. Where did she find a knife? Where did the knife come from?

Mitch had carefully planned this afternoon for her. He had rented the apartment for a year just to get this done. Paying a year's worth in full to one of Jahangir's nephews who lived in Iran and rarely used the place any way. He'd arranged for all parties involved to arrive there at the same time and to engage in the heinous act he wanted to commit to film for himself. He had five HD cameras installed in the apartment, placed very carefully so that no sinful moment would be missed.

Did Omar leave her a knife? Was Mitch's instruction to leave her shackled and naked in the apartment too coarse for him? He'd said to leave her purse, make sure she had her phone, her car keys. But had Omar felt for her? After what those two had done to her that was unlikely. Omar had been a willing partner of Mitch's in this. So Mitch had rewind the video in all the cameras. Watched them all over from the beginning.

It hadn't been easy to spot the first time, but once he'd seen it it was very apparent, very obvious. Kate at the archway, passing into the room, standing before the two men wearing only a tight harness under a raincoat. Then a flash, or more a dull glint as she put her hands in her pocket. Something reflecting light, something shining, metal, behind her back—winking, then gone.

She'd brought the knife.

He reeled the first time he'd realized it. Sitting in the dark of his office, one in the morning. He'd witnessed the events unfold live, sitting in the parking garage at work behind the tinted glass of the Range Rover. He'd seen it as it happened, two handsome and obscenely endowed men take his wife. His neck tight, his breaths short and difficult. It wasn't until the middle of the night that this revelation came to him after careful observation. He was frozen when it was revealed to him. His skin crawled at the thought. She brought a knife, a truly deadly blade, to meet Omar. Her intention was clear. Mitch could try and come up with an explanation, rationalize that action in some other way. But it was plain. Clear.

Kate had been prepared to kill for him.

He'd cried that night. Cried for the first time he felt like. He didn't cry when his mum died and he couldn't think of another time where it might have happened. What the fuck had he done to her? How could he have been so cruel to bring her to this? The thought of what could have transpired gripped him, choked him.

Mitch came home early that day he'd arranged for those men to meet her. Kate was already there, wearing a t-shirt and sweatpants. Moving around the kitchen, shuffling, quiet. He'd asked her how her day was, getting off on it. She smiled, wan and thin. Her hair clung to her face, tied back in a rough knot. She ate on the couch that night, wordless. She couldn't sit up straight, had to lay sideways on the couch, her feet drawn up. They watched TV together; mostly he watched her. Watched her pretty face as she looked at the screen through eyes barely held open. She'd kissed him and went to bed, eight-thirty at night. He'd played the video over and over, locked in his office trying to solve the mystery of this knife.

Mitch was sitting now in his office, just like that night a month ago when he'd arranged for his wife to be horribly violated, the apartment quiet, Kate gone to bed. He let the video play. Kate had dropped the knife to the couch then knelt on the floor, her arms still locked behind her at the wrist. A severed strap hung from the ring behind her. The harness was practically gone from her, flayed straps laying over her legs and shoulders. She got herself on to her back, brought her knees to her chest. With effort she brought her tethered arms over her rump, kicking one leg through at a time, getting her arms to the front of her. She got up and moved the blade to the edge of the seat and put her knee on the handle, put her full weight against it pressing it right down through the cushions. He watched her carefully sawing through one of the leather bracelets, her breasts swinging around as she did it. It took a long time, but once she had the one off she was done; quickly and deftly she unbuckled the other bracer, pulled the straps off her and threw them around the apartment.

She sat herself down on the couch wearing only the saddle brown riding boots and put her hands over her face. He saw her shoulders heave, her body jiggle as she sobbed. He turned the volume to zero. Shut out the sound of her crying before it picked him up and had him crying too. His eyes rimmed with tears as he watched her. He'd gone too far.

He turned the video off and leaned back. Knew what was left to see. Kate would get up eventually, having cried herself out but looking determined. She would pull down the drapes. Cut them with that hunting knife. She moved the blade well. She would shear them into wide strips, tie them around herself, then cinch it all around her waist with a velvet rope from the curtains. She would grab her purse and leave the room, closing the door quietly behind her.

When he had planned this little daytime tryst for her he'd wondered how she would get out of there. That was to be an extra thrill for her. Something dangerous for her to enjoy. Keep her on the edge of her seat he'd thought. How would she get out? Would she call Mitch? He didn't think so, didn't know what she would do. The excitement was in the unknown—but what she did turned out to be terrifying.

He swiped the mouse, brought his screen back to life. He opened the video again, could feel his hand trembling as he did. He slid the arrow along the timer to 12:47 and let it play. He felt heartsick as he watched it, easing down the front of his sweats. He got hard in his hand as he looked at Kate's face. Watched her mournful pleasure as the man he'd arranged for her slid himself inside her. Watched her face as she came almost instantly when he did. He watched her hand cover her mouth as she was so ashamed of herself. He slid it back and started it over, froze it on that instant when she seemed to come face to face with who she was. He stared at the frozen image, her furrowed brow, her damp eyes, her pretty little hand clasped over her mouth. He finished onto his belly as he quivered, his eyes seized on that image, completely consumed with an enormous love for his wife.

KATE HEARD Mitch come into the bedroom behind her. Her eyes moved to the clock. Two-thirty. She just couldn't sleep anymore. She'd run out of Ambien but couldn't be assed to get some more yet.

She felt him get into the bed behind her and she lay there listening to him take off his watch, adjust his pillow and roll over to her. Mitch got close behind her, as close as he could without touching her. Her eyes were open, looking at nothing.

It had been four full weeks since she'd last heard from Omar. The last contact was the day after he and his friend had fucked her in that strange apartment.

He'd Skyped her, she picked her phone up and almost burst into tears seeing his name there. She knew what she had to do, what Omar was going to make her do. She opened the call and he was there. He was fully dressed, looking good in jeans and a white t-shirt, but his demeanor had changed. He wasn't bold, he wasn't confident and arrogant. He didn't have his cock in his hand. He was quiet and honest. He said that they were done after all. He kept it brief. Said he changed his mind, that she was free. He said she wouldn't hear from him again. It seemed too good to be true. For one whole day she felt that tension ease. Then as days passed it crept back. She didn't believe him. Didn't believe that she wouldn't hear from him again. Every call that came through her phone tightened her, constricted her until she felt she couldn't breathe. He'd said it was over in the apartment too, hadn't he? Then after they'd dirtied her he laughed and took it back, left her bound with leather, naked on the floor.

But it was a month now and she hadn't heard a thing. She liked it better when he was blackmailing her. At least she felt alive then. Engaged, an active agent in saving Mitch from a horrible, humiliating destruction. Now it was like she was sentenced to death and was just waiting for someone to come to the door and tell her that this was the day they were going to put her on the platform, pull that lever and let the noose snap her neck. Would today be the day? No. Maybe tomorrow, though. We'll let you know.

All the life had been sucked from her. Her arms were heavy, her legs heavy. She didn't want to do anything anymore.

TODAY SHE SHOULD GO OUT, do some errands. She looked at her fingernails, chipped, the polish coming away around the edges. She should make an appointment, maybe. Try not to drink a bottle of wine today before Mitch was even home from work.

She made them breakfast, tea, toast, and a soft boiled egg that ended up as hard boiled as she stared at the stainless backsplash and lost track of the time.

Mitch came from the bedroom, buttoning up his suit jacket. He looked good. He wasn't going to the gym as much, but he'd lost weight and it made his face even more handsome. She let him kiss the top of her head, leaned into him. He put his arm around her and squeezed her but he didn't say anything.

They sat at the counter and had their breakfast. Keeping quiet even though they weren't occupied with newspapers or devices, just sitting alone in the quiet kitchen. The sun was only starting to come up.

Mitch put his hand out and held hers. He didn't say anything, kept eating, he just wanted to touch her. He'd really doted on her this last while. Like he'd sensed something tremendous had happened to her. He never asked her but he was there for her supporting her through this even though he didn't know what it was. Could he even imagine?

She'd been ruined. That day in the apartment was dangerous sex. Unprotected sex. When the pain wasn't gone in a few days, she very reluctantly went to her gynaecologist. Her gyno seemed troubled by her but didn't say anything that seemed judgmental. She had tears and bruising but it wasn't as serious as it felt. Some hydrocortisone helped and she felt a bit better in a week. Somehow Mitch never managed to prompt her in that time. Which was good because she hadn't got her test results back yet. Those came back fine and it lifted her spirits a little. Intimacy right now seemed like a dot on the horizon. It was getting bigger though and perhaps soon she'd be her old self again.

"Kate, let's go away," he said, sounding loud in the quiet kitchen.

"Yeah."

"I'm serious, book it today. Anywhere you want to go, love. We'll do it."

"Where would we go?" she said.

Mitch took her hand, said, "Doesn't matter. Just some time together. Out of here."

Kate looked up, he was staring right at her, so close, and their eyes locked. Mitch knew her completely. She could feel it, tears coming, her eyes welling. She wanted to speak but she needed a moment or it would come out badly, a quavering voice that would only encourage more tears. His thumb rubbed over the back of her hand.

She nodded.

"I mean it, Kate. Book it today while I'm at work. Whatever you want. I'll give up my schedule. Let's take two weeks."

She looked at him while she tried to keep herself together. How could she ever get things back to the way they were? How could she erase the danger she'd put the man she loved in? Could she even go away with him, with this enormous weight over her. This wasn't some depression that he thought she might be in. Not some mood swing, this was honest-to-goodness destruction.

"I'll think about it," she managed.

They finished breakfast without saying anything else. He got his things together then and told her he was going. He stopped at the door and looked at her. He took the dozen steps back to the kitchen and held her. She felt him squeeze her close to him and it felt so good. She put her arms around him and kissed him.

"I'll see you tonight," he said.

MITCH WAS in the Range Rover stuck on Bayswater, early morning traffic jammed up where the eastbound lane jogged around The Long Water at Kensington Gardens. He stared out at the crews maintaining the lush green grass there.

He didn't know how he was going to get himself out of this awful thing he'd created between him and the woman he loved. He'd really dug a hole for himself, but now he felt like he'd just thrown Kate in that hole and was burying her. He'd really hurt her. He'd gone too far. He was sure of it. That passion of hers had become depression. He'd torn her flesh away to pluck at an exposed nerve. That wasn't his intention.

Did he want revenge for what she'd done to him in Cayman? Was that what it was? He didn't think so. He knew it wasn't. It was genuine. He wanted to please her, to make her crazy—to be the one that turned her on. He didn't hate her. Didn't think she was a whore. He didn't want retribution. He wasn't trying to punish. He wanted to dominate her. Give it to her like she wanted it. Be the man. Be the man with the big dick for once. Who knew what women wanted and knew how to give it to them.

And that's what he'd done though wasn't it? For a little while at least. For three months he had her on a knife's edge and he could make her eyes roll back in her head with only a touch. That was why he'd done it. He was sure of it. He never wanted to hurt her. Not one little bit of him wanted that.

He'd taken Omar away from her. He had to. That little game was far too dangerous. Could she have done it? Could she have tried to kill him? He'd never thought of it. He was crazy not to. Anyone could kill with the right motivation. He'd never asked Omar to be too demanding but maybe the weight of the potential fallout was too much for her to bear. Why hadn't he thought of it? Where would they be if she'd tried to sink a blade in him. Or if she'd done it. Killed him. He supposed without a second thought he'd have Omar's body in concrete in the Channel somewhere and the poor residents of Fairway Manor would be looking for new accommodations after the place burned to the ground.

How did his mundane normal life become this? How did he go from successful business man helping grow a Fund, to the kind of guy who had to really consider how he'd cover up a murder after he'd put his wife over the edge by pretending to blackmail her. It was ludicrous.

Someone honked behind him and he realized everyone had moved on without him. He gunned it to catch up with them but they were just bunched up a bit further along around the corner.

Sleeping with his wife's friend while his wife slept with the dick of her dreams in a tropical getaway had been an insane proposition. That endeavour belonged to Kate. But he'd really upped the ante hadn't he? Right now he longed for the simple strangeness of finding his way around Kiley's beautiful body while his stomach twisted watching his wife have orgasm after orgasm around her lover's enormous cock. Those were the good old days. Fuck me, he thought. He'd really done it.

THE FIVE BEDROOM mansion on Oakwood in Holland Park had cost Derek six million pounds when he'd bought it seven years ago. Andrew and Callum were toddlers back then, and Margaret was an eager little partner, slim and lively and full of positivity.

That was a different time back then. Things seemed simpler then. He was in charge and little brother Mitch was never to be seen, away at school off trying to be a lawyer on his own.

Those days seemed relatively risk-free. Sure the economy, the nature of his business all made for a rocky ride. They had a team over at the House that minimized their risks, edged out their competitors by a hair, gave them a salable fund. It was enough of an edge that they were a hot prospect for a good long while.

He sat up, looked around the empty guest room decorated like it was right out of a Country Homes magazine. Grey light was coming in through the tall window, he could see the putty coloured sky swirling past the glass, a huge living culture in shades of grey and ochre. It was going to rain.

Mitch brought a wholly unexpected risk with him. Derek could never have foreseen how aggressive his little brother could be. He relished the bumps in profit, and the additions to the roster though. Three years in now he was able to see the difference since Mitch came on. The change in the House. The change in him. He'd done some crazy things. He wondered if he could ever get it back to the way it was.

He got himself into the master bedroom, heard Margaret downstairs moving around, kid's voices asking questions already, only quarter after six in the morning. Derek got himself into the shower and gave himself a quick going over then dressed himself for work.

Mitch almost singlehandedly boosted their fund in two years by eighteen percent. He'd almost doubled his own personal assets. Sometimes he wondered if it was all real. There had to be some trick. He'd tried a few tricks of his own too and he'd got away with them.

The kitchen, a masterpiece his wife had designed in white tile and reclaimed lumber, was somehow alive with activity and yet had no pulse. Margaret's back was to him, her shoulders slumped inside her floral satin robe. Steam came up around her as she made the children breakfast. The children were talking, Callum telling his brother all about how Chelsea sucked this year or something. Commotion, but it seemed distant and far away, like he was watching from another room rather than standing amongst them.

He poured himself a coffee and turned to Margaret's back. Part of him wanted to reach out, put his hand on her waist. He pictured her turning to him, her pale thin face kissing him as she closed her eyes. She wouldn't though. That was a long time ago. He wouldn't put his hand on her because he knew he wouldn't like the reality.

He sat across from Callum and Andrew and read the paper. He didn't eat in the mornings anymore. He listened to the two of them argue about football while he kept his eyes down trying to comprehend a main page story about Cameron's days at Brasenose but it was useless. He ran his finger under the lines as he read but there was too much pulling him away. He folded up the paper and finished his coffee. He looked at this pastiche before him. Margaret's back turned to him, the cold grey sky painted past her beyond the white framed cottage windows. Callum and Andrew, one standing, one sitting, in their school's grey wool jumpers. He looked at them all, thinking If they only knew the things he'd done for them. No one had said a thing to him. He was a ghost in his own home, haunting his family.

He put the cup down, and went to the garage and started his car.

KATE HAD FALLEN asleep on the couch in her bathrobe and was woken up by her iPhone vibrating on the table. In her sleepy stupor she scrambled to grab it before anyone noticed even though she was alone. Her heart pounded like it did when she was being blackmailed. She picked it up and before she looked at the screen she knew it wouldn't be Omar.

She turned it, saw it was Mitch. She didn't answer. Something told her it was about booking a trip. She didn't want to talk about it. She'd like to go away but right now thinking of where, and how and when, and all the bits that went with traveling seemed like a mountain to her. She dismissed his call.

When would she hear from Omar again? She knew it wasn't over. She knew that he would be back sometime. Back to get something from her, torment her. That animal that had ruined her life. She'd opened the door, invited the vampire into their home. She'd been blind to him. Bringing him into their quiet happy life. So she could do what? Touch that big dick. Suck it, feel it inside her, fuck it in front of her husband so Mitch could see her for what she truly was. Why did she want Mitch to know that?

Well, what else did she have now anyway. No family, no friends. Just her happy, loving Mitch. So what if he knew what she was really like—it hadn't really changed anything. What did she think it would change?

She had thought that every day was the same after their plans for a family together came apart. What was she going to do with her days? She'd wake up, shop, preen, eat. Every day like that forever? It wasn't torture but after a while it could wear on you—she didn't know how long could she keep it up. She was twenty-seven. She was approaching thirty, then beyond that? She'd be some weathered housewife doing the same old, same old. If she could show Mitch how she fantasized, her deepest darkest thoughts, her passions...that thought had excited her. She couldn't help who she was and she trusted Mitch. It was dangerous--what kind of man could face his wife's true sexual nature? Not a weak man, one who would sit by and let it happen, that wasn't what she wanted. Mitch was strong. He loved her, he wanted her to have the things she desired. However tortuous they may be for him. She loved him so much.

She picked up her phone and looked at the screen. She swiped it, then flicked through folders and folders, finding a file buried deep in her phone. She pressed play. She watched Omar's manhood, huge in the foreground, bob eye to eye with the camera then slump to the side over Omar's thigh as he had sat himself in front of a laptop so he could make her watch him. She watched his hand wrap around it and stroke it, watched it get firmer in his grip. It was a beautiful, big thing. She watched expressionless as he got going faster, and faster, his balls swinging and going up and down. Even his balls were over-sized. She watched it right to the end, her blank face never changing. She watched him erupt over his belly and chest, and pour over his hand, then the screen went black when it was over.

MAUREEN SLIPPED out of the flat without her parents noticing. She'd skipped breakfast and got dressed right after her shower. She'd heard them in the kitchen and she'd froze in the hall. Her bag was on the table by the door and she picked it up, slung it over her shoulder and got out. She closed the door behind her without making any noise. They'd been confronting her more and more about what she was doing with her life. Wanting to know what her plans were for the future. She didn't even know what to tell them any more. She didn't know. She was doing her CISI Level Four because she felt like that was what she was supposed to do. If you were a business admin student with good grades and you got a job at a great Investment House you took advantage. Was she going to be a trader? She guessed so; what else was she going to do at this point?

She made it out of the building and down the front steps of their ten story building in Hounslow. She put her earbuds in and headed for the bus stop.

Her parents put her through her school. Paid for her and for her four brothers to go to uni while working with her uncle around the clock at their takeaways. They had a right to know what she was going to do. They had a right to know when she was going to move out. They wanted her married and making babies like her brothers were doing but she didn't see that happening soon. She was saving money, paying for her own schooling now too, but she had no husband prospects. She might have been in love but marrying her man could prove tricky.

She was aware of the car following her before she saw it. She had music in her ear but she could see the lane next to the sidewalk was empty of traffic, cars were going past in the next lane over. The cars seemed aggressive, like they were roaring past an obstruction. She kept walking and could see a black car shape crawling along next to the sidewalk out of the corner of her eye. She moved away from the edge of the roadway and kept walking. Now the car got alongside her and she realized whoever it was driving was interested in her. She wasn't unattractive, she knew that, but she was dressed for work in worsted wool and had her hair back in a tight professional bun; this kind of attention seemed unwarranted. She chanced a look over. It was a glossy black sedan, four doors, maybe an Audi, tinted windows. She took her earbuds out and put her head down. She walked more determinedly, she could see the bus stop up ahead, four figures there already waiting. She didn't shake the car though, it kept pace with her. She felt a little mad, enough now that she looked into the passenger window, challenging the driver.

She felt stupid when it hit her. She knew the car. She absolutely knew the car. She looked around quickly and walked to the curb. The car came to a stop for her. She opened the door and got in hastily even though no one around here knew who she was.

"I wondered who the hell was following me," she said.

"Come here," Derek said and he leaned in for a kiss.

She was shocked at his passion, so early in the morning. She kissed him back, putting her hand on his neck and breathing him in.

Sometimes when she kissed him she could get a flash of the picture on his desk, the one of him and his wife and his kids on holiday somewhere tropical. She knew that if she squinted hard enough, scrunching her face right up she could push that image away.

"What are you doing here?" she asked him when she managed to pull away.

"I just couldn't stop thinking about you this morning, I had to see you."

She kissed him again. He got his hands back on the wheel when he heard a honk behind him and he got them moving.

"We can't be seen together, Derek. We can't go in to work like this."

"I know Maureen, I just wanted to spend some time with you. I needed you..."

She knew what he meant. He'd let her know his feelings for her about half a year ago, working late one night with four other executives and their secretaries. He got her alone in a hall and let her know how he felt about her. She already knew it, she'd been flirting with him since before last Christmas. Not so much flirting as flattering him and responding to his very mild advances, letting him know it was okay. He moved slow and that made it hot. Sometimes maybe a bit tortuous, her wondering if they'd ever make it happen. Sometimes she'd like to think he would just come out and kiss her, push her up against a filing cabinet and put his soft lips over hers. But now they were a couple she liked the way it had played out. She forgot about all that worry that he didn't like her, that he just flirted with everybody and it didn't mean any thing when he did it with her. Derek wasn't like that, she thought. He wasn't some hound dog who put his hand on every pretty girl's knee. His feelings for her were genuine. Crazy but genuine. He was married with kids. He was fifteen years older than her. She didn't care.

They were together in his expensive German sedan, she felt warm in his leather seats heated by the sun. That's what was important. Derek pulled down the first side street and she told him to pull in somewhere. The first opening he saw he took it and they were in the parking lot of an Anglican church, empty but for three cars. She climbed into the back seat while he parked. He left it running and climbed back with her, no one could see in past the black tint. He pulled her to him, on his knees between her legs. She locked her legs around him. He kissed down her chest, unbuttoning her cotton dress shirt as he went. She pulled her skirt up for him and he gave up on the shirt, diving his head between her legs and biting with his lips between her legs over her panties. She got her shirt open while he did it, unhooked her bra.

"Shit," he said, "I don't have a condom."

"Just pull out," she said.

He undid his pants and let them drop, pulled his shorts down so his cock stuck out and he pushed it into her. Not how she thought she might spend her morning. She pulled his face to hers and kissed him while he fucked her, holding her panties to the side to give him access. Right now she should be on the bus, earbuds on, forty minutes out from work. But here she was safe and warm, her lover inside her, making out like high-schoolers, but in the backseat of a car that probably cost as much as her parents flat.

"What the fuck is happening?" she said.

"What?" he asked, and stopped.

"The seats, they're—"

"Massage seats, they're—"

"Don't stop keep going..."

He pounded into her, he grunted and groaned, and she loved every moment of it. Her handsome successful man driving into her, her head thrown back with pleasure while his fancy car seats massaged her back.

“Ah shit, oh no,” he burst out.

He pulled himself out and she saw he was already coming, spurting his thick seed onto her mound and splashing the turned up inside of her skirt.

“Oh, no, I came a little inside you,” he said. He seemed worried, not that she could get pregnant but that she might be mad at him.

“It’s okay,” she told him and she pulled him back to her, pulled his mouth to hers, and hugged him tight. She could feel his throbbing erection still hard between her legs, felt his wet seed running between her legs and out of her. She put her hand down between them and grabbed him; felt him still rock hard.

“Do it to me again,” she said, “you feel so good. Make me come.” He slid back inside her and was less urgent now. He was like steel inside her and she clamped on him and closed her eyes, got him angled so he was touching her in all the right spots. She wondered how her parents would take this news. Fucking her rich, married boss in his backseat. Going to work and sitting all day in their dirty sexual evidence. They would not like this at all.

MITCH PARKED the Range Rover in his reserved spot next to Derek’s Audi, armed it with the press of a button and made his way through the underground to the elevators. He arrived in perfect time as the gold-hued aluminum doors set in their concrete bank slid open and a woman in a wool suit stepped out and brushed past him. He got in the elevator cab and turned to watch her walk quickly through the parking, her heels echoing off the concrete. Had she been crying? He pressed the gold lozenge on the panel with the number thirty engraved on it in a bold serifless font. A pleasant and pretty voice above him confirmed the number he pressed. The doors slid quietly on rubber rollers across the sill and closed off the scene, then he was gently lifted and carried up and on his way.

The cab flooded with daylight as it emerged from the underground into the centre of the building. Three walls in crystal clear lucite and he could see the cavernous atrium rising up eighty feet through the centre of the complex. The elevator hissed and the voice told him they were stopping on the ground floor. The interior of the elevator was shaded now under the blossom of one of the honey-locusts growing in curved marble banks that swerved through the atrium's foundation. When the doors opened he saw Maureen standing there waiting to step on, her hands held together in front of her, both hands looped through the handles of her knock-off purse.

"Good morning, Maureen," he said.

She looked surprised to see him, then smiled and wished him a good morning as well before stepping into the car. They rose up slowly through the atrium and Mitch asked her how school was going.

"Very well," she said.

He imagined she was doing well. She was very smart, the kind that did her homework and excelled at testing. Not necessarily having a complete understanding of the subject, not some complex knowledge that pierced through the material like tendrils, expanding and anchoring, but smart enough to know what was going to be asked of them and for that he knew her grades were near perfect.

"I saw your father the other day," he said. Mitch knew where the Mehrotra's had their restaurants and he made sure to pick up some takeaway at least once a month. He would drive the extra forty minutes in traffic just to make that contact with them, he wasn't even sure why he thought that was important.

"You did?"

"Yeah, at the restaurant, you know they're both really proud of you—"

Her reaction wasn't what he'd expected. Her neck craned back and her face frowned, her eyes narrowing as if to comprehend something difficult. He looked over his shoulder when he realized it wasn't him that was confounding her, it was something in the atrium.

They were up high now looking down over the centre of the atrium through the transparent sides of the elevator. They could see the people below, coming into work from the street and up from the parking. The shops along the edges were closed and shuttered still, but there were two cafes open and there were lines already formed. There were two sets of stairs, tiered concrete slabs painted white with steel railings, and they ran up both sides for the first four floors. Mitch saw it then, what had attracted her attention. A man was running down the steps, his feet pumping as he hustled past people coming up, bumping them. It was Derek. He could see his suit jacket flapping, buttoned still at the front, his lock of hair bouncing as he descended.

Then they were cut off from the atrium as the cab slid behind the steel beams of the complex's structure. Mitch and Maureen both turned and they were now looking out at the morning sky over the City of London, puzzled frowns on their faces. They rode the rest of the way in a perplexed silence. The elevator stopped on the thirtieth floor and the doors opened onto an iron catwalk that ran along the glass side of the building. They stepped off together, Mitch extending an arm to usher her out ahead of him. She smiled and lowered her head as she passed.

They could see ahead of them where the catwalk emerged into the wide v-shaped entrance of the Investment House that there was some sort of commotion. The faces and figures he was used to seeing as they moved swiftly around the offices were there but frozen in inaction. A dozen foreign figures at the centre and all faces turned blankly towards them. Eight uniformed police officers and a handful of superiors with them in cheap grey suits.

Maureen looked up to Mitch but he kept his eyes forward, wouldn't know what to say to her. He kept his stride and walked into the fray. A petite black woman recognized him and she stepped from the officers and showed him her badge.

KATE WALKED AS QUIETLY as she could through their apartment at two in the morning, fully clothed but for her bare feet. She walked on the balls of her feet trying to make as little noise as she could. Mitch was still sleeping in bed. She'd never fallen asleep, had laid there since ten until she knew what she had to do. She just couldn't take this anymore.

She'd watched Mitch sleep, he was troubled. Not the optimistic fellow he had been at breakfast when he wanted to run away somewhere nice with her. He felt like she'd let him down, didn't he? She knew that dealing with depressed people had a breaking point. A point where you just didn't care any more how bad they felt. She felt like she'd disappointed him not booking a trip and that maybe he was tired of her shit. She didn't deserve him. He was anxious at dinner like he had something terrible to say but he was putting off broaching it. She thought she knew what it was and she couldn't face this.

There was nothing in her that could enjoy time away right now. Something dark and menacing still loomed over her and it needed to be confronted. Maybe she'd never be right in the head again but she knew what the first step to recovery was now. She just had to put that foot forward. And that was what she was doing, putting herself into motion. She stepped out of their apartment and slipped her shoes on and headed for the elevator.

KILEY HADN'T HEARD from Jay at all for a month now so when she saw that there was a message from him she worried. She still had no recollection of what had happened that evening after she skied all day and then drank way too much, sitting naked with him in a hot tub. He was fully clothed of course, not drunk, and who the hell knows what happened. She worried about it sometimes. But a month later it had faded a bit and the constant dread she lived under had waned. Now it was back. A message from Jay. Please, please be just something about work.

She crossed over the old iron bridge on North LaSalle Boulevard, radio turned off, the cabin filled with that rubber over metal grate hiss. She turned on to Kinzie then looked like a hawk for his side street. She did not want to mess up the directions again. Once was bad enough, you did it twice and people would think you were a flake. She didn't need to endure another ounce of embarrassment with her best customer, that was for sure.

His place was a condo in an old mansion somewhere along here in Chicago's Gold Coast. She was flooded with horrible thoughts on why he would have her meet him at his residence. Did he want to terminate the business relationship? Not make a scene in a public place. Possible. Another one: while she was sure she hadn't had sex that night in the hot tub it wasn't completely impossible that something else hadn't occurred. Something horrible. What if she'd done something awful that night? Blown him in the hot tub because he was responsible for a big chunk of her commissions and she was just so gosh darn thankful. That really wasn't likely. But who the fuck knew. She drank so much she couldn't even remember. She did recall accidentally exposing herself to him. Her little titties coming up out of the water. Then doing it again a bunch of times, letting him see them again and again, for who knows what reason. What if when she had passed that blood alcohol level that keeps you sane, she stood up and gave him a real show and asked him what he thought of them, shaking the pretty things in his face. Then likely throwing up red wine into the hot tub. She cringed and gripped the wheel. She grimaced and shook her head. Why did she drink too much? How could she have been so foolish?

She found the place, a red brick Gothic behemoth with modern windows and a steel and glass atrium. She had memorized his instructions this time, knew where to go when she got there. She found the narrow private parking lot and pulled in past the guard who didn't even lift his head. She saw Jay's Audi parked where he said it would be and he owned a second spot right next to it and she pulled into that. She sat a minute and looked at the numbers on the spaces, re-read his instruction. Yes, she was satisfied, this was the right spot. She sat and collected herself a moment, thought about a few different scenarios and how she might handle them. She shook her head, wished things were different, then got out and locked up her Mercedes and headed to his door.

His place had street access, but it was behind a tall iron gate and she had to buzz him. She pressed the button set into a black and gold metal box, part modern, part old world. There was no answer through the speaker, but a mechanical buzz and the sound of metal teeth scissoring away. She pulled the gate open before it stopped. Jay wasn't giving anything away.

What if she had done something untoward in the tub? Like she had seduced him. God, what if she had sucked his cock in there? So very unlikely...but what if she was being summoned to the private abode of Jay Shaker, heart surgeon, for a follow up? What if he thought she'd be available whenever his fifty year old balls needed emptying. She had to completely give up drinking. She would think about it.

Kiley climbed the eight steps up to his glossy black front door. So glossy she could see her reflection coming up to nervously knock on it. She dressed professionally for the appointment. All business. Navy skirt in wool, bam, right down to her knees. Flats and tights, an ironed white shirt under a blue suit jacket that went with the skirt. She wasn't here to fool around. She left her hair though—left it wild, didn't pull it back. That mane of hair was her trademark.

SHE ALWAYS LIKED the way Jay dressed. He answered the door wearing faded jeans and leather moccasins, a grey t-shirt and a charcoal shawl collared cashmere cardigan. He looked very casual but successful, there was something a little arrogant in how nicely he dressed down. You had to be successful and also slim and fit to dress so finely around the house.

“Hi, Kiley,” he said, “come on in,” and he held the door wide for her and let her walk in. His apartment was beautiful, polished wood floors, walls in exposed brick and plain white dividers, stairs and rails were black iron. She stepped in to the vestibule and turned to him somewhat nervously.

She could feel it in her expression and she lowered her brow consciously trying to appear more confident.

“How are you, Jay?”

“I’m good, I’m good,” he said, “come on in, take your shoes off.” She watched him walk down into the sunken living area. She kicked her shoes off and walked down to him.

“Can I get you anything? Let me pour you a drink. Something from the bar?”

Ouch, Jay. “No nothing for me.”

“How about a water? Can I get you a LaCroix?”

“Sure.”

She sat down in the leather couch while he went to the bar. She could see him pour her a drink from a can and then pour himself a whisky. Her hands were sweating.

“So how have you been?” he asked her as he walked back.

She took the drink from him and held it in her lap. “I’ve been really good Jay, really busy.”

“Yeah, I haven’t heard from you in while.”

He had called the office and left a message a few days after she’d returned from his place in Colorado. Someone had left a post-it note on the edge of her desk saying that Jay had called. She’d looked at it, how it hung there precariously, one sticky corner gripping the desk. Not a lot of purchase she thought. It would be plausible that a breeze could take it from there and blow it into a corner where she could miss it. So she left it there and pretended that it had been blown away, that she had never seen it. A day later she absently took it and put it in the garbage. Still acting on the premise that she had never seen it, like it had been blown from her desk and never seen. She was putting off the contact, and got away with it for almost a month now.

“I’ve been traveling a lot,” she lied.

“Ah,” he said. He sipped his whisky and she watched him while she took a sip from her water. They were quiet a moment and she looked around in the silence and admired his place. He had beautiful artwork on the walls, tall oil paintings, real life scenes, slice-of-life sort of things that didn’t seem to have meaning, just people on a street, a woman sunbathing...she was going to ask him about them, make some small talk but he cleared his throat. She turned to him. He was preparing to say something and she felt a chill come over her shoulders, dreading what it could be.

"I haven't seen you or heard from you since skiing. I wanted to know if everything was okay...since..."

He couldn't finish and it made her head pound. Something had happened and she didn't know what it was. She wanted to get out right now. Just leap from this couch and avoid this whole situation all together, explode out that far wall and leave a Kiley-shape cut out of the wall like in the cartoons. "Since?" she repeated, her voice sounding far away even from her.

"Well...the hot tub..." he said.

She shifted in her seat, leaned forward and put her glass down on a coaster on the coffee table that looked like it was made from old railway ties then covered in thick honey. "What happened?" she said, her voice so quiet again.

"What do you mean?"

She felt her cheeks go flush, they felt electric hot under her eyes. She was so embarrassed. Something happened and she didn't remember, now he was talking about it and she was going to have to reveal that she was also so drunk at the time of this unknown incident that she could not recall it. "I...uh...I don't remember." God, what did she do? She felt instantly overwhelmed, felt like she could curl up and die. She asked him, "Oh no, what did I do?" Her hands were shaking.

He looked aghast, "No, no," he said, "you didn't do anything. No it's okay," he said. He put his hand out and held hers to stop them from shaking. She could feel he felt uncomfortable about it, touching her like that. He pulled his hand away awkwardly.

"I, uh, shit I guess then I could have got away without ever saying anything," he said laughing, trying to lighten the mood. Then his face went serious again. "No," he said, but stopped.

"Well, what happened then?" she asked him nervously.

He sat forward with his hands together and talked but didn't face her, told his story to the room. "Well, you fell asleep... or, well, I guess you passed out," he corrected himself sheepishly. "And I had to get you out of the tub, but you didn't have a top on. Or bottoms, it turned out. Nothing happened you know. I mean, I just got you out of the tub. I dried you and I put your clothes on you. I hope that's okay, when you weren't there in the morning and I hadn't heard from you I was worried that you--that it was a violation."

"Oh no, no, I'm sorry, I'm the one that's sorry, worried bout violating something... That's it?"

"So I helped you to your room and left you—"

"That's it?"

"Yeah. What did you think?"

"When I couldn't remember I made up all sorts...that's why I haven't been around. I thought I'd done something."

He chuckled. "You'd done something? When you hadn't been in touch I made up all sorts of reasons too. Like you had a team of lawyers lining up for an attack or something."

"Jay, c'mon."

"Your thoughts can get away from you when you're afraid--tell me what you thought might have happened."

She smiled, "Um, no."

"See. You thought some crazy things too."

She sat back in the couch and felt an enormous weight lifted from her. She didn't realize how it had been affecting her until she gave it up. All that worry.

"Jay, I'm sorry I got like that. It was a long day and I'm not used to that much activity."

"It's nothing really. I've helped a lot of friends out of hot tubs and other things. They've even, believe it or not, had to help me out of a few tubs too."

"I know, it's just that we work together. I didn't think it was very professional. You know... for you to see me like that."

"You didn't have a lampshade on your head or anything. You just passed out. One second you were talking and then," he snapped his fingers, "then you were out."

This part wasn't making her feel any better but in the grand scheme of things--all the possibilities she'd wondered--this was very low on the outrageous scale. It was kind of sweet in a way. Almost sexy. They'd known each other quite a while and got along very well. They were friends. She was there at his place as a friend really. She wondered what she looked like being helped out. What did he think when he saw her naked and vulnerable like that?

He looked more relaxed now too. This was a weight off his shoulders as well. She shouldn't have avoided him. For the sake of them both. This could have been over a long time ago.

"So what's the worst? You saw me naked, right." He looked very embarrassed. They were both slumped in the deep leather couch, relieved that they had each let the other one off the hook.

"And you didn't, you know...you helped me. I appreciate that. It's a...I don't know, it's a noble thing."

"Not really."

"Why, did you sneak a peak?"

"No."

"See, noble."

"I guess," he smiled.

Jay really was a good guy. Definitely one of the good ones considering the string of assholes that had come through her life. Handsome, successful, driven, noble, fit, caring. What else would you ask for? Her mother would always ask her when she'd visit why she wasn't with a good man. As pretty as you are, she would add. God, what would she have thought of Omar?

"I think most men would have taken advantage in some way."

"I don't know about that."

"The men I've known. Few are like you. Do you think I'm attractive?" She turned her head in the couch to look at him.

"What? Of course," he said raising his eyebrows.

"But you did the right thing."

"You're a good friend. You mean something to me," he said.

He was one of the good guys. Maybe one of the best she'd known and she wasn't doing anything about it.

"All this time we've been together you've always been the most professional, most straightforward easy-going guy, you've never made me feel funny or uncomfortable, or..." she lost her train of thought, "and they all do eventually." And it was true. Jay was the only one who'd kept a clean record with her now that she thought about it.

"You never come on to me, make a pass at me--even when I'm passed out and naked in your hot tub."

"Well, you're kind of out of my league," he said.

What was she waiting for? He was perfect. There was not a thing you could say against him and he'd always been there right in front of her. Kate would go for it. She always did. And look at her now. Look how everything worked out for her. Everything fell into place and she always came out on top. Because she was unafraid to make things happen

“Wait, I’m what?”

He didn’t answer her.

“Jay, I’m not out of your league at all. I might be younger than you but...you...”

She was leaning in to kiss him before she even realized she was doing it. She didn’t stop herself. Jay kissed her back but he was rigid and afraid. He kept his hands to his sides while she got to her knees next to him and kept her mouth on his. His hands came up between them and he put them on her hips. He kept her from climbing onto him but he didn’t push her away.

She kissed him passionately and she ran her hands over him trying to put him at ease. She wanted him to know this was okay. She wanted him to touch her. Her hand went between his legs and she grabbed him there. She could feel he was hard.

“Kiley. Wait,” he said as he pulled back.

She looked at him, both of them trembling but he couldn’t say any more.

She put her mouth back over his and her hand went quickly into his waistband and she put it around his throbbing erection. She stroked it inside his jeans and he was instantly slippery, he was gushing, filling her hand and seeping between her fingers. He made a whimper in his throat and his hands came up to her chest now. She wanted him inside her so badly. Her hand flicked and twisted around the end of his cock.

“Oh, God,” he sputtered and his body clenched underneath her. He was coming in her hand, spurting his seed all over the inside of his jeans. She laughed and stroked him, proud of her effect.

“Oh, God, stop.” he said. He sat forward and pulled away from her. Her hand came out of his pants dripping with his semen. He was embarrassed but he was also really mad.

“Get out,” he said, looking away from her hunched over.

“Jay it’s okay, it—”

“Just get out!” he yelled at her. She recoiled.

“Jay,” she said and reached out for him with her clean hand.

“Kiley get out,” he turned and made eye contact, made sure she knew he was serious.

She stood up. She didn’t know what to do, she didn’t want to leave but she couldn’t stay. She started to cry and Jay turned away from her. He was doubled over on the couch. She suddenly hated him. She made her way quickly into the hall and put her shoes on. Tears were streaming down her face now, she could feel them warm on her cheeks, dripping off the point of her chin. She grabbed her purse and her keys and as she closed the door behind her she started to sob. Her face was contorted and red and she covered it with one hand as she made her way past his gate and back to her car.

MITCH WOKE up at seven-thirty alone in bed. He got in the shower and got dressed and was only alarmed when he came out to the kitchen and Kate wasn’t there. He was alone in the apartment. She hadn’t left a note anywhere he could find. He went out to the patio but she wasn’t there either. He tried to remember if there was something she had to do today. She hadn’t said a thing last night. It was Saturday and they usually did a few things together even though they hadn’t anything specific planned today. Seven-thirty was a bit early for her to head out for errands.

He made breakfast and sat alone at the counter and ate by himself. He went through his e-mails on his phone. Nothing from Derek. He wasn’t sure what to expect there. And there was nothing from Kate. Not an e-mail, a text, nothing. Where could she have gone so early in the morning?

He left it—pushed it away. He had bigger things to worry about today. He got his things together, prepared himself in his office, got his papers in his bag and went out to the hall to get his keys. The Rover was gone. He picked up the keys to the Bentley. He looked at himself in the mirror and adjusted his tie. His face had never looked older he thought. He wondered if he was getting sick. He ran his hand through his hair and tried to make himself look a little more presentable. He had to meet with his lawyer.

LA GALAXIE WAS RUNDOWN but at night you couldn't really tell. It was down in a little industrial enclave on Rue des Trimarans, and if you drove around the block all you'd see were Marinas. Boats with tarps over them, some old and in need of repair and some new, waiting to be put in the water. They were stacked sometimes one on top of another on rails, right up at the edge of the street so you'd miss the view of the water.

If you walked through the parking and past the chain link fence and around the curve where there were residences hiding behind concrete walls and painted metal gates, it was only a minute or two before you'd be at the Étang de Thau. It was a salty lagoon that led out to the Mediterranean, and the first year he moved here Omar worked part time nearby with an oyster operation. He'd tweak cars during the day then four hours at night he'd fix young huître de Bouziques to gnarly ropes with a mixture of cement he'd prepared by hand. The oysters matured on the rope and someone else took care of all that, bringing them up and getting them to market. He'd slop cement from a white pail and let his mind wander with a cigarette hanging off his lips.

That seemed so long ago, but it really was only maybe six summers past. A lot had changed since then but he was the same kid. Hard work had made some improvement for him. But the greatest change? One hundred percent chance. Being in the right place at the right time. Being there and keeping your head together too. You had to know what to do with those chances when they came. He'd turned an invite for a crazy threesome with a millionaire's wife into an investment in his young business. You had to know what to do when the time was right.

He was always surprised at the group of people brave enough to pass the doors of the club. The outside was peeling stucco, no windows at all, and a half wall of cracked, dated tiles. The sign was old and faded, from another time, and the treble clef painted on the metal was done by a very shaky, untalented hand. But the people you'd find in there were fun, mostly middle-aged Lake people who lived nearby and had a little bit of money but not much style.

You'd also—at the right time of year—find young people who couldn't discover much else to do in Frontignan that appealed to them. There were a few hostels in the area and in the summers there were students and twenty-year olds making their way around Europe. They'd stay here in the Lanquedoc because it was cheap and it was right between Spain and the popular parts of France and they were either coming from one or going to the other.

Omar had his eyes on one right now. She was blonde and pretty despite her big nose. She was here with her friend, a dark haired girl who was short but also not too bad looking. The blonde was on to him though, and she was flirting, moving around the dance floor, but always looking at him when he found her; then she'd smile and look away.

Omar danced in the big group, probably way too many people for what the building was made for but it was the middle of summer and everyone was in the mood. His back was sore and his fingers ached from wrenching all day long. Frontec Motorsports was booming these days. The advertising and sponsorships were paying off. It was crazy today. He did bookkeeping all morning, then with his whole crew busy he tuned up some accountant's Audi TT all by himself.

He was off tomorrow, a half day, then it was some race work on the F3 and then packing their gear for travel. The team had a race in Italy next weekend. But none of that was really work he thought. So tonight was party time. Time to celebrate before he had to start it all over again. They were booked solid for the next four weeks. Advertising was bringing in wealthy customers from Nîmes to Toulouse. If he felt more confident he'd do a few more new hires. But it was best to take these things slow. He was still recovering from the new bay he'd had built.

Mitch had settled up with him for services rendered. Even though those services went un-rendered. He'd fucked his wife for him, with some other guy in an apartment in London, both of them going in at the same time. But there was supposed to be a lot more. Mitch had called him however, said Thanks it was done he'd got what he wanted and no hard feelings, here's everything you were promised. There was capital already in the business and then a delivery from UPS, a satchel of cash that he signed for. And that was it, no mention of why it was over.

He missed it. He missed Kate, genuinely. There was something about her he was drawn to. Something dark and dirty, but it felt...comfortable. It wasn't to be, though. She was with a man who could afford her.

Had they gone too far with her he wondered? He did what he was instructed that day in London. The two of them putting their very large organs inside her at the same time. She took it, she hated them for doing it but you could tell she loved the act. He felt a touch too mean with her. Mitch wanted it, and he didn't mind delivering. Did Mitch hate his wife? That had become a worry after the day in the apartment with that other guy Mitch had arranged. Was this going to get darker? What if she turned up dead? He worried about her after that day before Mitch called it off. Was she hurt by them? They were both big, and they were inside her all the way. Did Mitch have to call it off because she'd been hurt?

He felt someone brushing up against his back while he danced. They were pushing their backside against him, and he knew who it was without having to look. He put his hands behind him and she grabbed them in hers and pulled him against her while she pushed herself into him. The music flashed and the music was loud, too loud. Not the best quality system, but it made up for it in volume and everyone here was drunk on Muscat anyway and they all loved it. He turned and danced face to face with her getting up right close and they could look in each other's eyes.

The little blonde girl with the big nose put his hands on her sides and she was very slim. He could feel her moving under his hands, her hips swaying with his to the music. She looked deep in his eyes and it was unnerving but he wasn't going to look away. She was quirky and unusual, beautiful despite her features. He wanted to get to know her.

He got her off the dance floor and they went to the bar and he ordered drinks for both of them. She still danced next to him and she had her hand slid into his back pocket. Omar was slimmer now in the last little while.

He'd lost weight from working so much. He didn't get to the gym as often but he looked better because he still had muscle, you just got to see it better now. He knew he looked good. He'd let his hair grow out on top, it was light and wavy and he had a summer tan.

He asked her her name and she told him it was Gracja. She was Polish and her French was not very good. Enough to communicate but it was clumsy. She called her friend over and introduced her as Katarzyna. Her French was a bit better but they'd both been drinking.

"What are you doing in Frontignan?" he asked them, yelling over the music.

"We're going to Spain for a month."

"How old are you?"

Katarzyna leaned next to Gracja and said something in her ear, her hand held up to block her mouth. They both laughed too hard at whatever it was. Gracja said "We're twenty," finally.

"Twenty-one," Katarzyna corrected her.

"We're backpacking," Gracja said, shrugging an imaginary bag up over her shoulders. They'd stumbled on a middle ground of English. They were making more sense to each other that way.

"Yeah, we're staying at a hostel on ZA La Peyrade. It's shit," she said and they both laughed and touched their heads together.

"What do you do in Poland?"

"We went to Nazarenes together," Katarzyna said.

"It's a Private School," Gracja told him.

"The world is full of rich girls," he said.

"We're not rich girls," they said together but he could tell they were.

"Did you wear uniforms?"

"Yes, we had little..." Gracja struggled for the English, said, "sweaters?"

"And skirts, too," Katarzyna said, sashaying like she had a short skirt.

Omar laughed at her and she stood next to him and wrapped her hands around his upper arm and squeezed him like she was trying to strangle him. Omar looked at Gracja, saw her face still smiling and drunk. They were both into him it seemed. Omar hadn't anticipated it but he was excited by the proposition.

"It's so loud, we should go somewhere nice. Somewhere we can talk."

"Do you live around here?" Katarzyna asked.

Gracja said, “Yes, and do you have more wine?”

HE GOT the two girls into his bright blue M3 and they went right to the stereo, fighting over it and he hadn’t even turned the ignition yet. He fired it up and revved it, made the straight six roar but those two didn’t care, they just turned the knob and messed with his presets. They were arguing with each other in Polish and he accelerated out of the parking lot, making them jostle around and yell. They buckled up.

He took them out of the township, raced them down the sandy rural roads to his place. He showed off the twin turbos and the handling but they genuinely didn’t care. Didn’t care about the twenty-inch rims, the sport tuned suspension, nothing--Katarzyna said she liked the leather in here but that was it. Mostly they talked to each other, friendly but somehow in an aggressive heated sort of way.

He was on Chemin des Moulieres, and slowing down to turn into his place. They didn’t even care about the sheep that were right up at the gate alongside the narrow little road. Most girls would comment on that, want him to stop to pet them or at least say awww.

He pulled into the gravel lot of his little compound. He had an apartment in this complex of three bungalows that were built right up against each other in the middle of a community of farm houses. They were shoddy cheap stucco, plain and rectangular with terra cotta roofs and pale blue wooden shutters you could close up over the windows. Someone had built enclosed passages between them and turned the houses into six separate apartments that could share some amenities.

There were always a lot of cars parked in the big lot, lining up against the concrete block walls that separated them from the neighbouring home. More than there should be for the number of people living there. He pulled in and shut it down.

“You live here?” Gracja asked, noticing they’d stopped.

“Yes, just this one on the end,” and he pointed to a honey-stained oak door up a few stairs and across a flagstone patio. Gracja got out and she helped Katarzyna out of the two-door, holding her hand and pulling her out until they both stumbled away. They couldn’t stop laughing. He crossed the parking lot with them and got his keys. His neighbour or a friend of his neighbour had a Range Rover parked along the wall under a cypress tree that was there since this afternoon. He wondered which one of those deadbeats could afford a car as nice as his. He got them up to the patio and while he got the door open Katarzyna sat down on the stone railing that ran around the patio.

“What’s wrong with her?”

Gracja hopped over to him, said quietly, “She has to pee.”

“I have a bathroom,” he said, and shook his head.

He opened the door and ushered them in, and Katarzyna went right to the bathroom down the hall. His place was small, just a living area that blended into an open L-shaped kitchen that was plain but tidy. He had a bedroom and one bathroom and not much furniture. Gracja asked him where his stereo was. He pointed over at a stereo setup his iPhone would plug into. Gracja plugged her phone into it and scrolled through her menus until he heard some Electronic beat come on. She left it low, but she danced to it and he watched her.

He went to the kitchen and saw the wine he had was shit. But he had lots of little Cokes so he mixed them Kalimotxo and brought it out to the living area. Gracja was looking through his stuff hanging on the walls and she was dancing a bit, swaying her hips. He gave her the drink and she liked it.

She was slender and shapely. Not too tall but taller than her friend, and she had a nice narrow waist. He sat down and let her know he was watching her. She put a show on then for him, her face beaming but she was half-lidded. She was pretty in the way that her confidence and positive energy made up for some odd features. She was sexy.

She kicked her shoes off while she danced for him and she went around in circles letting him look her all over. Then she walked into his bedroom.

He followed after her and found her next to his bed dancing and looking at the things on his shelves. He came up behind her and she swayed her hips against him. She put her arms up over her head and he put his arms around her waist. She kissed him over her shoulder and he kissed her back and let his hands come up over her breasts. Katarzyna came in and bounced on the bed, rolled over onto her belly and watched them dance, holding herself up on her elbows.

Gracja said something to her in their language and she agreed, acted relieved. Gracja pulled her cotton top out from the waist of her dress, untucked it. Omar took it and pulled it over her head and Katarzyna laughed. He kissed her and she let him, holding her hands together between them up on his chest. He undid her bra at the back and then she took it off for him, threw it to the side and let him look at her. She had small breasts and hard tight nipples, he admired her confidence. Some girls would have been embarrassed by them and hid them but she liked herself and Omar liked that. He put his hands over them admiringly let her know he liked them. She undid her skirt that was tied behind her back and she let it fall to the floor. He took off his shirt and they both said something foreign that seemed they really liked what they saw.

“Are you just going to watch?” he asked Katarzyna.

She smiled and then sat up on the edge of the bed. She didn’t engage though, just watched them kiss and swung her legs against the side of his bed. Gracja’s hands went across his wide chest and down the muscles at his waist. She ran them over him, really taking him in. He could feel himself starting to stiffen in his pants knowing that she was enjoying his body so much. Her hands went around his waist while his tongue pushed into her mouth and she squeezed his rump, her breaths getting quicker. Her right hand slipped around and came up the inside of his thigh. She stopped kissing when she felt him. He kept at it, letting her find time to understand what she had in her hand. She said something in Polish to her friend. He stepped away and let her look while she squeezed what he had between his legs.

SHE LOOKED UP AT HIM, incredulous and amused. She was caught in that moment when she thought she might be still mistaken and when the realization has sunk in.

“What is that?”

Omar didn’t answer her just kept her eye contact.

“That’s not—” She squeezed it then smoothed her hand over his pants searching for something else, something she was used to. She said something to Katarzyna, and then they talked back and forth a bit and Katarzyna leaned forward to get a look at her hand on his bulge. Her face showed shock and then she laughed. She said something that sounded like she wanted her friend to take it out.

Gracja undid his pants and pulled the zipper down. She put her hand in there and she laughed when she found it. She pulled it out and showed it to Katarzyna and then they both were laughing. Katarzyna rolled over on her back and looked at it upside down. She unbuttoned her dress and swayed her hips while she did. Omar pushed his pants right down and stepped out of them. He pulled his socks off while Gracja watched his half aroused cock swing and sway between his legs. He got up on the bed and straddled Katarzyna who had her top off now. She covered her face, avoiding his thing hanging over her. Gracja climbed up on the bed too and came to his side and started kissing him.

Katarzyna put her hand on him and her eyes were crossed as she watched it in her grip. His hands went over Gracja's tight body, one hand could cover both cheeks of her ass almost completely she was so small. Her hand came down and they were both stroking him clumsily.

Katarzyna said something in Polish again and Gracja agreed. She asked him in French if Katarzyna could get a picture of it. He nodded his head, said they could if they wanted. He stood up again and watched Katarzyna as she went back out to the living area to find her purse. She had a soft little body, youthful but it jiggled a lot when she walked. It was sexy too. Gracja sat on the edge of the bed and she jerked him a little bit. He leaned over and pushed her back by kissing her. She lay on the bed and put her tongue in his mouth while she kept stroking him, the tip of his cock grazing her belly.

Katarzyna bounced back in with her phone and she was watching where she was going through her screen. Gracja put her hands up to cover her face, she didn't want to be on film.

"I'm not getting you in it," she told her in English.

Omar stood up again so they could see it and they were both on his bed shoulder to shoulder looking at him through the phone.

Katarzyna said, "It's so gross," in French but he wasn't sure what she meant. They took the picture then they knelt on the bed while she got it to come up on the screen then they both laughed. Omar knelt on the bed and took the phone from her and put it on his end table. He made out with them both, all of them on their knees, their hands going all over each other. He saw the girls were touching each other too and he was relieved, sometimes in a threesome you'd find girls who were kind of uptight and it usually caused problems down the road. If they were into each other too, even if only for the night, this would be fun.

He let them kiss while he went to his side table and took a condom out of the drawer. These two weren't pretty, well-cared for millionaire housewives. They were probably all right, couple of Catholic school girls with rich parents, but you never knew. They watched him struggle to put the condom on. He ordered them online and they were the biggest he could find. When he was ready the two of them laughed again, everything a big joke between them. It was like he wasn't even here, they were so much into themselves. Katarzyna didn't want to go first and Gracja was reluctant but let her friend hide behind her and push her forward.

Omar took her thighs in his strong grip and yanked her hard and she yelped. Katarzyna thought that was funny too. Gracja fell back on the bed and her legs shot out awkwardly to the sides, still bent. But her thighs were apart and her shaved sex was exposed. She looked serious now and he leaned himself over her between her legs and put his mouth to hers. They kissed and her arm went around his neck. He could feel her other hand on his chest, it was surprisingly tender. He enjoyed his kiss with her.

GRACJA'S HAND went around his cock while they kissed and she pulled the head between her legs. He pushed forward gently and she gasped into his mouth as he started to spread her wide. Katarzyna was stroking Gracja's hair and watching her face while she was being penetrated. He was gentle with her, and he reared up so he could watch her face as she took it. Every woman he'd been with had never had one larger and he loved to watch their faces as they discovered what it was like. Those first moments were the best, the most satisfying. Their faces were honest, they didn't act for him. It was feminine and introspective, they were thinking very much about how they felt. And he loved to watch that. Sometimes they asked him to stop and that was okay too. Sometimes they were silly like these two were. Beautiful Kate ate it up and begged for more.

Gracja was taking it all right. She had closed her eyes but he liked it better when they were open. She squeezed his arms tightly as he got deeper. Katarzyna laughed at her friend. Laughed at her taking this huge cock. Katarzyna was next and he might not be so gentle with her.

Gracja was shallow and he could feel himself bumping into her cervix and she squirmed. He gave her just enough that they could find a rhythm with each other and soon he was thrusting and she was gasping with it, enjoying it. Katarzyna put her mouth over her friend and they kissed while he fucked her. He watched them, feeling himself get harder while he was inside her. They kissed each other well, they were very passionate. He put his hand over Katarzyna's soft tanned back and he ran it down over her ass and slid a finger right inside her. She was hot and wet and her little muscles squeezed and kissed his finger. It turned him on and he wanted to be inside her to feel what she could do to him.

He pulled out of Gracja and moved her friend into his place between her legs. Katarzyna was over Gracja like they were making love in the missionary position. He watched them kiss each other deeply and seriously. Gracja's arms came around her friends neck, and then they were making out like they forgot he was there. He stood next to the bed and got himself behind Katarzyna. He grabbed her ass in his hands and spread her wide. He could see her dark brown twists of flesh puckered and open, saw her pink insides. He sunk himself into it, felt how hot she was in there. She cried out and Gracja consoled her. He thrust himself into her again, and it made her yelp, but she was taking him and she wanted more. He slowed, he went gentle and gave her just a little bit and she arched her back and worked herself easily against his thrusts. She made strange noises while he fucked her. Gracja took her breasts in her mouth while they did it and Katarzyna would cry out a different vowel sound with each thrust.

Katarzyna got uncomfortable and she wriggled away from Omar with her hand pressed between her legs. Gracja still lay on her back and she put her arms out for him to come to her again. He got himself over her and he brought her knees up to her chest. Katarzyna got behind him and he felt her grab his cock from behind and put it into her friend's wet entrance. She squeezed his balls gently as he slid back inside her and he felt like he could go off but he held it together. He went into her gently and Katarzyna was still back there. She was playing with his balls and he could feel her breath on his thighs. He went very slow so she could work. She was using her tongue on her friend, licking at where he was stretching her wide, and down her cheeks and into her anus. Gracja was going crazy. He could feel her hot little sex clamping on him, squeezing him tightly. He put himself in a bit deeper and let her work on it. She was rocking against him, grinding fiercely into him and her face scrunched up almost as if she were hurting and then she tightened up, she held still and she wasn't breathing. Then she collapsed happy, and she gasped as she caught her breath. He slid himself out of her and Katarzyna came to her and held her face in her hands and she was whispering to her in Polish. She brushed her sweaty hair off her forehead for her and then kissed her.

WHEN OMAR WOKE up he was dying of thirst. The bedroom was lit up by the bright but grey morning. He could see the sky out there, it was pasty and humid looking. He was in bed under the duvet with the two girls. They were all on their sides facing the window and Gracja was nestled in against him. He looked at her while she slept. She was so young and her skin was flawless and youthful. Her dirty blond hair was tucked behind her ear and he could study her profile while she was sleeping. Her nose was large but well-shaped and she had a beautiful jaw and neck. She looked very peaceful. Katarzyna was behind him, he could feel her soft skin against his bare back and his ass.

He climbed over Gracja and got himself out of bed without waking either of them although Katarzyna stirred after he was gone. She swallowed up the space he left and got in next to her friend. Omar went to the bathroom and relieved himself, peeing against the edge to keep the noise to a minimum. Those two girls last night were fun, but they seemed so young, so juvenile. It was hot but it was empty and dispassionate. He'd done that so many times before, fucked some girls he brought home. He wanted a woman again. A woman in his life to love and to share with. Someone sexy and dirty but who he could spend time with doing the other things too. He rolled his eyes at his own thoughts. He knew who he meant. He shook his thing off, cleaned it with some toilet paper and went to the kitchen.

He brought a glass of water back into the room with him and he drank it while he watched the two friends sleep. They were two little girl-heads on a pillow with messy, dirty morning hair tangled with each other, two lumps under his pale blue duvet. Katarzyna's foot was out of the cover and he ran a finger over it and felt her toes. She didn't even wake.

He went back out to the living area and got his laptop to wake up. He went through his itinerary for the next week. He'd prepared everything he could think of for the race coming up in Italy, but there was no harm in thinking the whole thing through right from the beginning again. He went through all his notes and thought he would double check with his trailer. The team was going to trailer their race car themselves. It wasn't that far and he'd made arrangements with one of the auto part sales reps he knew to borrow a flatbed trailer that could haul the car. He called him on the cordless while he walked around the apartment. He looked out the front window at the gravel car park. That Range Rover was still there, shining black and glossy and looking as out of place as his M3 did. He got a hold of the guy and he was assured everything was still a 'go'. Omar could send his guy with a truck to pick it up tomorrow morning. He hung up and heard someone moving down his hall. The sound of bare feet on his floor.

He went back to the bedroom and saw only one shape under the covers. He slipped in behind them and got next to her bare body. She was laying on her side and he spooned himself behind her and took his soft penis in his hand and gently brushed it between her legs. He could feel her dry and shrivelled sex scratch along the top of his head.

She moaned and brought her arm up over her head and face, covered herself and moaned in pain. He laughed and let his cock go so he could run a hand along her side, up her hip and over her waist. She moaned and fake-cried like she was hurting.

She turned and it was Gracja, she couldn't even open her eyes. She covered her forehead with her hand and rubbed her brow.

"Head is pounding," she managed to say.

He kissed her forehead and she groaned again. She moved into him and put her soft cheek against his shoulder. He rubbed her neck, dug his fingers into her where it met her collar and she whimpered thankfully. He heard the damp sound of bare feet in the hall again and he looked to the door. Katarzyna was in the doorway, completely naked, peering away into the apartment like she was looking for Omar or she couldn't remember where she was. She looked his place over, her posture kind of sheepish, her arms crossed over loosely under her breasts. She turned and looked startled when she saw him back in bed. She covered herself up, smiling, and got under the covers next to him.

“What are you covering up for, I saw everything last night,” he said and he lifted the covers and looked at her body.

“That was night,” she said, and he saw her blush. She looked good in the morning. She’d rinsed with mouthwash and her breath was fresh, and there was a sparkle in her eye. She was happy and in the mood.

He looked in her blue eyes and she stared back at him. He smiled at her and ran his hand up her leg. Her breasts were very petite, the nipples not much different colour than her flesh. She had a thin turquoise necklace on and he saw that she had a tiny gemstone in her navel that he hadn’t noticed last night. He kissed her and she opened her mouth and he took her tongue into his. He ran his hand through her hair and held her head. Her hands were moving over him now and she felt warm and soft. She found his cock and she worked it with her hand and got him harder.

“This was...it hurt...” she didn’t know how to let him know what she meant. “It’s very big,” she said. He pulled her on top of him as he rolled over and she lay on his chest and kissed him some more. He felt his erection hard enough now to enter her and it was between her legs already, somewhere over the bottom of her ass cheek. He ran his hand down and pushed the tip between her legs and she tilted herself to it. He entered her slowly and she gasped. She was wet and she felt so hot inside.

“What?”

“Hot inside,” he said, and she laughed.

Gracja groaned and she pulled the duvet over her head and all that was showing was a crown of her dirty blonde hair.

He wanted to be gentle with her this morning, he knew he was rough last night but she had seemed a bit annoying. Being juvenile and silly, and it was distracting him. But she was sweet and sexy this morning and he wanted to make love like a man and woman would. He let her find a way onto him that was comfortable but he could tell she was grimacing while he kissed her. He put both hands over her soft cheeks and pulled them wide and put himself inside her a little deeper. She didn’t like it, she just wanted to kiss and she wouldn’t move with him, wouldn’t fuck him.

So he kissed with her, let his hands explore her back and her rump and down her thighs. She felt good and soft under his calloused hands. He was still part way inside her but he let her figure out what she wanted down there, she might be sore this morning.

“I had a good time last night,” he told her.

She nodded and looked in his eyes, he could feel her gently squeezing his cock, flexing on him while she swayed on his body.

“You two are lovers?” he asked her.

Her eyes went wide and she looked very embarrassed. She couldn’t even utter the answer, she bit her lips and shook her head. Don’t talk about it, it seemed like she was communicating. If that was their first time together last night then this day might be a bit uncomfortable for them. They were more than just friends now.

“Are you sore?”

She nodded her head. He slid himself out of her and she seemed relieved. He kissed down her chest and her breasts, down her belly, and ran his tongue through her belly button and over the piercing. She shimmied up him, she seemed eager to have him do what he was intending. She got her hips over him and he was between her legs now and his tongue worked through her hot, bitter flesh. She smelled dirty, like he had been fucking her all night. She smelled like faded perfume, and sweat, and condoms; it got his heart racing. She gripped the headboard while he worked her and he felt the bed tremble when he ran his tongue up her very front, over her hard little button. He kept at it, getting aroused listening to her gasps, feeling her thighs shake around his ears. Gracja groaned while they shook her with their movements. He wondered if these two would be alright as friends after what had happened last night.

She came finally, she barked out and she shook and she squeezed him between her thighs. He let up, let her get away. She moved down until her thighs were over his chest and she smiled at him, still looking lusty. She turned herself around, got on all fours and she put her mouth over one of his balls. Her knees came over his shoulders and he got his tongue between her legs again. She trembled again as he touched her with his tongue. She used her hand on him, stroking his foreskin over his glans using her fingertips and it was making him crazy. She ran her tongue over his balls, taking one in her mouth at a time and pulling on them. The smell of her and her heat and wetness in his mouth was driving him crazy. He couldn’t hold on anymore, he wanted to come. He stopped what he was doing and felt her mouth on him. She ran her tongue down the underside and over his balls again while her hand stroked his skin over his glans. He came hard, he could hear the spurt of it as it launched between them. She laughed down there, and he felt himself shooting his hot liquid on to her chest and his belly, making it slippery between them. She stroked him firmly until he stopped.

She kissed his balls and then got herself around to lay against him again, her head rested on his chest. She was covered in his semen.

He put his arm around her and he thought about how well everything had been going. He felt content. They both slept in for another hour and a half.

GRACJA SAT on a metal stool in his kitchen. She looked like she was still in pain. Omar had given her two Advil when he got up but she still wasn't much better. He felt for her. She was in pain and you could see she had shame from what they had done last night. Partly the things he'd done to her but probably, he guessed, she might remember what she had done with her friend. In daylight the weight of their actions would be naked and heavy.

Katarzyna made toast for them but Omar skipped breakfast and Gracja couldn't eat. She'd spent some time in the bathroom this morning too, most likely being sick. She looked very pretty and vulnerable, and for some reason it made him feel like laughing at her. In a good way, to laugh and put her arms around her.

"Did you call a cab?" Gracja asked her friend. Katarzyna was standing behind her by the fridge and she was eating.

"He said he'd take us back," she said. Omar was going to go into the garage and he offered to take them to La Peyrade when he went.

Gracja said something to her friend in Polish, she sounded irritated.

Katarzyna said to Omar, "She just wants to go now."

Omar was on the laptop and he was trying to work out his budget for their trip to Italy. This whole thing could cost him fifty-thousand euros.

"Fine, call a cab," he said. They could go if they couldn't wait.

"Sorry," Gracja said, "I'm just tired. I want to be back in bed." She still couldn't open her eyes past a squint.

Omar picked up his cordless and called them a cab. "Fine," he said, "Taxi is coming."

Gracja said something to her in their language and they argued a bit. Gracja was resigned; she had no fight in her. It looked like she might cry now.

"Can you cancel," Katarzyna asked him. "We don't need to pay for a taxi."

He closed his laptop, purposefully gentle, trying not to lose his temper. "Christ," he said, and he called them back and canceled. Gracja heaved herself off the stool and shuffled towards his bedroom.

"No," he said and he picked up his car keys. "Let's get you out of here," he said. He could figure out his expenses when he got back from the garage.

MITCH WAS DEVASTATED. He didn't know what to do. Kate was gone yesterday morning and he hadn't seen her all day. Now it was thirty hours later and there was still no sign of her. No word from her at all. She hadn't even sent a text. He'd sent dozens. He'd left her messages. As the day wore on the more desperate his messages had become. He needed her. He wanted so badly to hear her voice, to see her face. He wanted her to walk through that door right now and throw her keys on the table. Act like everything was okay. He wouldn't ask a thing. If only she'd walk through that door. Please Kate.

Nothing. He went to the kitchen and opened the fridge. There was nothing in there that he wanted. He had not eaten all day, nor last night, but he just couldn't bring himself to make something.

What was she doing right now?

He felt like she'd run off. He didn't know why. She'd left of her own accord in the dark of night so that was a sign that she'd done this on her own. It didn't mean she was safe though. What if some harm had come to her? He went back to the couch and sat himself in it, sitting in the darkened room, midday sun blotted by curtains. He had a bottle of whisky and a glass on the low coffee table. He poured himself another. It was having no effect on him. His mind was racing, revving itself too high in the red zone to get pulled down by a stupor.

What if she'd responded to someone else's call? What if the dreaded Omar had resurfaced. What if Omar couldn't help himself and called her. He could picture that dumb mechanic, drunk on wine and horny. Calling her and seducing her. Would she fall for that? Wouldn't she hate the man that had hurt her so much? Blackmailed her and threatened her husband's destruction. He knew that Omar had a talent that appealed to Kate, and an enormous piece of equipment that definitely got the job done for his wife. But wasn't that old news to her? Wasn't she over that? Omar and the other man had really done a number on her. He saw that she was sore those days after. So sore she couldn't sit straight. He watched her try to hide it and it made him feel so guilty. He was the one who hurt her. He had those men do that to her. He thought she wanted it. He knew she did. But it was wrong and now he was paying for it.

What if she'd somehow discovered that he was responsible. Snooping through his things and seeing something. God, the video. What if she'd seen that? What would she think of him? He put his drink down and exhaled heavily. This was what he got for his crimes. This was his punishment.

He stood and went to the window and looked out. It was midday in London, grey but bright. He went on to the patio and stood in the fresh air. He stretched until he felt he could pass out. He was hungry, slightly drunk and had no sleep. He sat on the chair for a minute.

Another possibility came to him. It was remote, but terrible. Could Kate have gone to Frontignan to confront him? Could she still have such awful feelings for Omar that she still wished him harm even though Mitch had called it off. Was she wanting revenge? Or maybe she still worried about what he could do with that terrible video and she wanted peace of mind. Surely she wouldn't harm him now, would she? Shit.

Should he call Omar, should he warn him...

OMAR TOOK the girls to their hostel right next to La Canal du Rhône à Sète. The place looked nice. He didn't know why they'd called it shit. He had the feeling they were spoiled little girls when they were at home. It wasn't a big place but it was right on a small bay that came off the river and there was a terrace that looked out over the water. If you looked southeast you wouldn't see the tanker trucks parked next to the place behind ten foot chain link. Not everybody went to Cayman.

There were a lot of young people out front all staying at the hostel. They sat on the front steps and smoked while he pulled up to the entrance. He set the girls off with a kiss on the cheek and headed out to his garage. He watched Katarzyna help Gracja into the building, getting smaller in the rearview.

He got himself satisfied with the job the crew had done preparing for the race. He checked that all the tools had been loaded in their wheeled carriers, he checked their paperwork, and emailed the organizers for a final confirmation. He called the hotels they were staying at and confirmed that there had been no changes. Everything was as it should be. He stood in the dark bays of Frontec Motorsport and looked at the sexy shape of his open wheel racer hidden under a grey cloth.

He'd come a long way this year. He'd done some crazy things and they'd paid off. The race in Italy was a great invitation. Expensive for his crew to make it out there, but there were more opportunities to be had and he intended to be in the right place at the right time once again. He checked their supply trailer one more time, then closed everything up and locked the doors, got in the M3 and headed home. He stopped on the way in Poussan and grabbed a slice of wood-fired pizza and a Brio at Café Beau Séjour.

When he got back home he parked next to the black Range Rover with the British plates. The apartments seemed quiet today especially with all these vehicles here. Usually there was something going on. Someone out in the yard on the patio or there were a group of guys that would get together and drink and kick a ball around. He joined in with them one Saturday maybe a year ago. Did they even still do that? They maybe had grown out of it. He got into his apartment and went to the bathroom. He was going to go to bed early tonight. They had a lot to prepare in the morning and they had to get the car sorted out with its transport trailer. Herve would pick that up using the Toyota with the Frontec logo they used as the shop vehicle. He could go and get that done while the rest of them got their convoy together. Once he got back they'd load up the race car and they were off to Italy. The president of the F3Euro race association was going to be in Florence. He would be at the race and if Omar and the team did well he could meet him; he could plant a seed for the future. He didn't want to do F3 forever. He loved it but he was twenty-five and he wanted to be in Formula One by the time he was thirty

When he walked back into the kitchen, still zipping himself up, he gasped. There was someone in there. It was so quick he didn't recognize them. He walked around the corner and they were right there, just a few feet away. It scared the shit out of him. An intruder in your home so close to you, so unexpected...

Short, hair pulled back, black sunglasses, long black coat, hands in pockets. He was stunned. It was Kate. But she wasn't smiling. She looked like she had bad news.

All he could manage was, "Whats wrong?" For some reason he thought she had bad news about Kiley. Like they were all friends or something. She didn't answer him.

Then he felt sheepish for some reason. He thought of her fondly but she wouldn't know that. She could hate him. She didn't know his real feelings. She saw the man in front of her who blackmailed her. Who left her naked with her hands chained behind her. Left her alone in an apartment with no way to get out. Who had fucked her with another man. The two of them stuffing both her tight little holes while she struggled. Though her struggle was for show he knew that. Mitch wasn't paying him to hurt her just to put on a show. Why would she come here?

"How are you?" he asked her. He meant it too. He missed her. He wanted to know that she was all right.

She chuckled a little making him feel stupid for his question. Like he was familiar with her. Her friend. But wasn't he? He did care for her.

He tried, "I've missed you."

"Have you?" she asked him.

"I think about you all the time."

"You do, do you?" she said.

"I do," he said.

"Do you think about raping me? About making me jerk off for you? Do you think about destroying my husband with your video? The night you humiliated me?"

He wanted to come clean, lay it all on the table. He wouldn't betray Mitch. He couldn't do that. He needed that money. Didn't need trouble from him. And there was a chance that this was another opportunity standing here in his kitchen in size five leather boots. He put his hand on her. He touched her neck and he touched her cheek.

"I think a lot about the things I shouldn't have done to you. I think I ruined a good thing. I wanted all those things, I did. I can't lie about that. I loved watching you touch yourself and I loved what we did to you that afternoon in the apartment. I know you wanted it too. I know it."

She didn't answer but he could see her jaw moving under the black frames of her glasses. She was so beautiful. He meant everything he was saying. He did have regrets but he loved those dirty moments he'd had with Kate. He loved them because he knew she loved them. She might have thought she was doing it to stop Omar from releasing that dirty video but he could tell she was getting something from it for herself. Getting off on it. Like his blackmail gave her a chance to be the dirty whore she wanted to be.

"I regret making the video. I regret doing that to you. I just didn't want you to go. To not be in my life any more. I'm not the kind of guy who blackmails people. Blackmails them for money. I'm really not like that. I don't have the video, I swear it. I haven't had it this whole time. It was gone the day after I showed it to you in the bathroom in Cayman."

She tilted her head to him. She was studying him from behind those black lenses. He ran a thumb over her cheek. Her skin was so soft under his rough touch.

He could feel all the things he admired about her come rushing over him suddenly. He truly did feel for her. And seeing her standing in front of him in his own kitchen, in his life in France, he felt something more. He might love her.

“Kate, please listen. I know I did terrible things but I didn't do them for the reasons you're thinking. I can't even explain why I did it. My emotions are so complicated. More complicated for me to even understand. But please you have to know one thing: I would never have released that video. Never in a million years would I do that to you. I never once even considered it. You were never in danger. Everything I did was for the contact we had. The dirty things we did. That was what I wanted. The whole time it was all about you.”

She inhaled very deeply. She seemed troubled. Wasn't she relieved? That was what he wanted. To relieve her of all the badness he'd caused. He put his other hand on her shoulder. He moved closer but she wouldn't embrace him. She kept her hands deep in her pockets. He pulled her closer to him and she let him. He put his arms around her but it was like she wasn't even there.

She shrugged him off.

“I am sorry,” he said, and he meant it.

SHE COULD KILL him right now. She could let him embrace her and he would never see it coming. She could ask him to take his cock out and then cut it off before he could stop her. She wouldn't do any of those things. Whatever she thought had drawn her to this shitty little town in the south of France she'd come to understand that it wasn't to harm Omar. Sitting out front of his apartment watching him with those two young girls, staggering in, up late, then limping out, she had to face herself. Confront this craziness. He was a human being, not some villain. She couldn't kill him. She wasn't crazy. Not that crazy.

She came for a confrontation. Could it escalate? Could she still be driven to take the knife from her pocket and slash it across his neck? She could.

The things he said to her—it was more than she could have hoped. She pictured him arrogant when she fantasized about this moment. This masculine force with folded arms laughing at her. His strong body and his big hands, that beard that grew the moment he put the razor down, that incredible proof of manhood between his legs; he would dismiss her, be rough with her, she was dirt to him.

She couldn't have hoped for this. An apology. It was heartfelt. She hadn't anticipated it. How could this be the same man that filmed himself fucking her and doing disgusting things to her so he could blackmail her? He tricked her into saying awful things about her husband's small penis. He shoved her in the bathroom in Cayman. He and his friend had both penetrated her at the same time. Made her do it.

Yet she believed him. Believed what he had just told her. He did it because he was crazy. She could relate to that. They were both the same in many ways.

He did it because he wanted her in his life.

She took her sunglasses off and put them on the counter. She wanted him to see her face. See the face of the person he'd ruined. He looked in her eyes and she felt for him. He was serious. There was a passion between them. They were both terrible people weren't they? They shared a badness.

He stepped into her and she was trapped against the counter. His eyes were a piercing blue in the light from the front windows. He was handsome and so masculine. She touched her forehead to his chest. His arms went around her and it felt so good. She felt enormous relief. It was over. Truly over. All that she had suffered felt like it lifted from her and floated to the ceiling. Her eyes rimmed with tears. She was so happy.

He lifted her chin with a bent finger and he kissed her. How could she let him, she hated him? She kissed him back and she sucked his tongue into her mouth. Her arms went around his waist and she pulled them closer together.

She felt a hunger between her legs. A desire to be fed. She felt it start in her sex and she welcomed it as it rushed through her. She'd missed that dark feeling. Only, she realized it wasn't so dark this time. Somehow this felt honest. It felt right. She melted into his arms, felt the strength of his large hands, the power his grip had over her flesh. She hadn't had a thing between her legs, up inside her, in a month. She ached for it. She ached for Omar. Not to be taken roughly. Not to be humiliated in front of her husband. She wanted him to make love to her. She wanted to run her hands over his back as he entered her. She wanted to kiss him and look him in the eye when he put himself inside her.

She pulled herself up him. Put her arms around his neck and she wrapped her thighs around his waist. He walked her out of the kitchen like that, their mouths fused together, she was lost in it. He laid her on her back. She was in his bedroom, laying under him as he looked down at her.

“I’ve thought about this a thousand times,” he said. “I can’t believe you’re here with me.” He took his t-shirt off and put his mouth back over hers. She couldn’t believe she was here with him either. She ran her hands all over him. She felt his muscle, his strong body. His hands worked her trench coat open. She ran her hands to his front, ran them over his tight stomach. He had lost weight and he felt like magic under her fingertips. She slid her hands under the waist of his jeans felt the heat of his body there. She wanted him released, she wanted to feel that thing she loved again. His beard scratched at her soft skin as he kissed down her neck and between her breasts. He unhooked the clasp of the front closure and her breasts heaved out. His mouth went over each of them and her nipples clenched tight and erect. She unbuttoned his jeans and unzipped them. His cock and his balls spilled out and she hefted them and squeezed it while he kissed at her chest. She felt his hands moving up her legs and lifting her skirt, moving under her panties. She arched her back and he pulled them down.

She could smell his cock. She smelled those other girl’s pussies from it. She smelled condoms and dried semen. He hadn’t showered after fucking all night. She was laying in the dirtied bed where he’d fucked those two little sluts and she didn’t care. She just wanted him right now. He was hard in her hand. She missed his size. The biggest most beautiful cock she’d ever seen. She slid herself up the bed and guided him between her legs. His mouth came up and went over hers again and he pushed himself inside her. She gasped into his mouth. It hurt again. It was like starting all over. He was very gentle with her. They kissed and felt each other and their movement eased him inside her.

They made love slow and quietly. The only sound in the room was the soft wet squishing of her sex being parted. It felt incredible to be filled up again. Soon she had him coated with her wetness and he was almost all the way inside her.

She wrapped her legs around him and scratched at his back. She wanted more. She wanted him deeper, she wanted him faster, and she wanted him harder. He gave it to her. Gave it the way she wanted, giving her almost every thick inch until she felt it coming. She told him.

She said, “You’re going to make me come, don’t stop.”

He thrust harder and deeper and he sent her over the top, she cried out as it washed over her and she clawed at his back. She felt him inside her, his huge thing flexing and throbbing. Then he came inside her deep and strong. She felt him going off, splashing her insides with his seed.

“Ah, Omar, I love when you come inside me,” she whispered to him. It made him groan as he buckled and he was still coming. He put a hand around her neck and looked in her eyes. She could feel how wet she was from his seed, she could feel it still surging from him. His handsome face was clenched and he was trembling. His strong arms felt so good under her fingers and she held them tightly while she watched his face as he came. Finally he was done, empty, and he lowered himself to her. He kissed her neck and she closed her eyes and exposed it to him, let him kiss and bite her.

“I’ve dreamed you would come to me. I can’t believe you’re here.”

“I can’t believe I’m here either,” she said. She bit her lip as they stared into one another. Her chin trembled. What was she doing here?

Then he was Omar again. The Omar she expected. He slid his cock out of her, said, “We know why you’re here.”

She quivered under him, she felt so small below him. He was a man. A man how she dreamed. Masculine, confident, arrogant. He kissed down her chest, between her breasts and across her soft belly. His hands ran down her thighs and over her knees. He gripped her small ankles tightly and pushed her knees up to her shoulders, her mound exposed to him. He thrust his face between her legs and she felt his wide tongue spread her folds. He ran it back down between her cheeks. She gasped.

She let him do it. She wished he saw her as more than this, more than a dirty fuck. His tongue slipped past her anus, she felt it warm and wet slipping inside her. Twelve hours on the road, sitting in her car overnight, eating shitty food and drinking shitty coffee, and she didn’t care that he’d buried his face inside her. She loved it, felt herself on the edge again—she could come from this horrible act. She did, her jaw unlocked, her mouth open, grinding her hole into his tongue, her pussy completely untouched.

She cried out and clenched her eyes wishing she could just be like everyone else.

KILEY WATCHED the traffic on Hyde Park through her apartment window. She wanted to take all her things, everything she owned, and hurl it out and down thirty flights to the street below. Her laptop, her wardrobe, every knick-knack her mom had mailed her since she moved to Chicago. Watch it all explode on the asphalt, one item after another. Then what would she do? Go somewhere else. Be someone else.

She had no family here, no friends. No one. All she had was work. But she'd fucked that up hadn't she?

She'd misread that one. She wasn't even attracted to Jay. She had no idea why she would do what she did. Jay meant something to her, that part was true. And from there her feelings got very confused. This was trouble. She somehow made her drunken hot tub escapade worse. She hadn't even been drinking. She wondered if she was a fuck up. She was good at her job, up until last night at least. She was earnest, she meant well. She thought she was smart but maybe she wasn't. Maybe she wasn't at all how she saw herself.

Everyone told her she was beautiful but she wasn't in a relationship. Hadn't been in one since she'd come to Chicago. And before that there was nothing to mention. Nothing that meant anything to her. And it was obvious she meant nothing to other people. She was just a pretty face that men fell over themselves to fuck—then they moved on. There was something wrong with her.

She sat down in her leather chair in front of her laptop and she started to cry. Once it came there was no stopping it. She let it happen, let it cleanse her. She grabbed the leg of the table and squeezed it. She wondered if she'd be strong enough to lift it up and get it out the window if she really, truly lost it.

There was a knock at the door.

Shit, she thought. Ten in the morning on a Sunday, who would call on her? She got up and made her way to the door. She dried her face on the inside of her sweatshirt then looked through the peephole. A delivery. No one had called up. There was a young man outside and he was holding an arrangement of flowers. He knocked again. She was in some sweats and her bare feet, but she opened the door anyway.

“Delivery, ma’am. Flowers for Kiley Beckett,” he said. He was a shy kid, not much younger than she was though.

Her phone rang behind her, she heard it vibrate on the glass top of her desk. She thanked him and signed for it. She gave him ten bucks from a dish she kept by the door for when she ordered food in. She locked the door and put the arrangement on her desk and picked up her phone.

“Hello?”

“Hi, Kiley, it’s Mitch.”

“Mitch, my God, I’m so happy to hear your voice right now.”

“Really? What is it? Is everything all right?” He sounded worried.

“No really, Mitch. Just—it’s good to hear from a friend. It’s been...it’s been a rough night.”

“You okay?”

“Yeah, hold on,” she took the card from the arrangement. It was in a pale creamy envelope. It was a beautiful bouquet. Daisies, chrysanthemums, carnations, and more, beautifully done in a hand turned wooden vase. She read the card, No hard feelings? -Jay.

What the fuck did that mean?

“Sorry, Mitch, I just need a minute...”

“Kiley, really quick, have you heard from Kate?”

“Hold on,” she said and she sat down. No hard feelings. Was hard a play on words? Like he didn’t have ‘hard’ feelings for her? Or was it straightforward? Who writes No hard feelings after yelling at a girl for giving them a handjob? Was he mad?

“Kiley?”

“Sorry, Mitch, just got some strange news.”

“Kiley, have you heard from Kate at all?”

“Not for a while now. Maybe two weeks ago. Wait, I texted with her last week.” At least Jay had made contact right?

“No, I was wondering if you’d heard from her today. Or yesterday.”

“No, love. No. What’s wrong?”

“She’s missing.”

“How’d you mean?”

“Like she’s walked out on me. She hasn’t told me where she’s gone. I woke up and she wasn’t there.”

“Were you fighting?”

“We don’t fight.”

“Why would she do it do you think?”

“I don’t know. Or maybe I do, I don’t know. Maybe I’ll tell you sometime.”

She read the note again, flipped it over to see if there might be something on the other side. How did he have her home address? Why not just send them to her office tomorrow when she was at work? Of course, he wouldn’t want anyone there to see that he’d sent them. “She’ll turn up. That’s Kate. She can just do things like that.”

“Not to me, Kiley.”

“Really Mitch?”

“Not like this.”

“Just because she’s never done something like this to you before doesn’t mean she’s not the kind to do it. I love her but she can sometimes only think of herself.”

“Yeah.”

“Yeah.”

He was quiet for a moment.

“How’s your work? Everything work out alright with the—”

“No, not at all as it turns out. Just found out last night, and I’ve made it worse.”

“Oh, dear. What happened?”

“I think we both have things we don’t want to talk about right now.”

“Yeah.”

“Let’s talk about better things.”

“Agreed. I wish there were better things right now. Kiley, is there anything I can do to help you?”

“No.”

“If you ever need a thing—I mean anything—you have to call me, right? Any thing, any time, I’d love to hear from you.”

“Thank you, Mitch. Just stay on the line with me a while.”

THEY BOTH LAY naked in his bed, under the duvet. Kate was sleeping next to him, laying on her belly. He watched her sleep, laying beside her with his hands behind his head.

She must have been out there all night. Sitting in the Range Rover watching him come and go. He wasted his time fucking those two backpackers when he could have been with this little demon. Someone he cared for. He wondered if she'd watched them. Could she have gone to the windows, stood there in the dark watching him fuck those girls? She could have. She probably got off on it too.

His phone chirped its frog sound. He reached down to his pants bunched on the floor and took it out from his pocket. He didn't recognize the number. Kate stirred as he answered, she turned to him and put her warm arm over his belly.

"Allo?"

"Omar?"

"Oui."

"Omar, it's Mitch."

His heart jumped. He pictured Mitch standing outside his door, maybe two goons with him. Looking for his wife.

"How are you?" he asked. He looked down at Kate and she was smiling at him.

"Not great. It's why I'm calling."

"Oh?" he said. Kate's hand went down his belly and over his manhood. He bristled, his breath caught in his throat. "Is something wrong?" He was testing the waters.

"Have you heard from Kate at all?"

"No," he said. He had to keep his answers brief, devoid of information. He didn't want to ruin this spell Kate was under. He didn't want her to be brought back to reality. She had a husband who loved her. Who was looking for her. Mitch was distraught, Omar could hear it in his voice and could hear he was trying to hide it. "Why?"

"She's just...she's been missing. Not long. It's...it's just not like her."

He looked down and saw her, the shape of her. Hunched between his legs, a soft cotton ghost under his duvet. She was moving under it, pleasuring him. She was kissing his cock and his balls while he talked to her worried husband.

"How long?"

"Just a day. Almost two days now."

He pulled the cover away and watched her. Her small hand cradled his stiffening cock, held it up on his belly while she sucked on his balls. He watched her beautiful pouted lips go around one and then suck it into her mouth and gently pull on it. Her pretty face was such a contrast to his big ugly manhood. His long pubic hair scratched at her perfect skin.

“That’s not too long,” he said trying to be supportive but not give anything away to Kate. She ran her tongue up his cock right to the tip and he tried not to gasp into her husband’s ear. “It’s probably okay,” Omar managed. He wasn’t even making sense.

“Yeah, it is. I just want to know where she is. Know she’s all right.”

Mitch’s wife had taken the end of his big rubbery cock in her mouth. She was sucking on him and he was getting hard. He watched her pull his foreskin gently with her teeth. Her eyes locked on his.

“I’ll let you know if...you know, if—”

Kate rolled his foreskin back with her fingers and sucked on his glans. He was more engorged now, the head of his cock plump. It yielded to her lips as she sucked on it. He could feel her tongue pushing into his urethra inside her mouth. She still held his gaze.

“Uh, Omar...if you see her or if you hear from her, please let me know. Let me know she’s okay...”

“Yes,” he said.

Kate had his full attention. Her mouth was stretched over the end of his hard cock. She stroked him with one hand and she was holding his balls in her other hand, squeezing them hard.

“And Omar—I don’t know...be careful with her.”

He whispered into the phone, “Careful?”

She was going to make him come. He was going to come in her mouth while he talked to her husband. He felt dizzy.

“Yeah, mate. I don’t know how to say it—watch your back with her, if you—”

“I will,” he said, and he had to close it off. He hung up and dropped his phone. He watched Kate milking him with her lips. Her small hand clutched around his fat organ. She was squeezing his balls too hard. She held his eyes. Her flawless face was lit up by the afternoon light coming through the window behind him. Her breaths were short and lusty, her enthusiasm was pulling him closer and closer. She made encouraging noises in her throat, yeahs, and uh-huhs. She wanted him to come in her mouth. She was so incredible.

He roared out as he erupted, and she stroked him furiously and drank his semen. She never took his eyes from his. He lost control. He was on the very edge of blacking out. He fell back on the bed and closed his eyes. There was no one like her.

Her hand loosened its tight grip on his testicles and she still held him in her mouth, still sucking him. He groaned and sat up. She let it fall from her mouth and slap on to his belly. She ran her hand along the underside of it. The way he was hunched the tip came up to his sternum. She smoothed it with her hand, her wedding rings glinting in the light. She was admiring his size. He loved how she loved his cock. Her hand nursed his big injured balls and then she smiled.

“Come here,” he said.

“I hope I didn’t interrupt your call,” she said.

He helped her up from between his legs until she lay on his chest, her head over his. He caressed her soft skin, felt her back and her rump and her thighs. He stared into her and she didn’t look away. What was it she wanted? Why was she here? He felt something huge for her. Looking into her eyes quickened his pulse.

“I’m taking you out,” he said.

“You are?”

“That would be nice.” She put her head down on his chest. He played with her hair. This was the dirtiest he’d seen her. She was always so clean and manicured, she practically shone. Her hair was dull and greasy in his hand, he could smell her scalp. He preferred it. This was how she truly was. She was dirty. She was an animal. The greatest, dirtiest thrill he’d get from her was unwrapping her pretty covers. Taking off those expensive silks, her Chanel and Gucci, her soft leathers, and seeing what was underneath. She was clean and perfumed, gleaming, but when you looked in her panties she was a woman. She didn’t groom down there. She was a princess to everyone until you were ready to fuck her. Then you saw her animal parts. Her thatch of fur that smelled from her own dampness. Long dark hair that you had to part to find her dusky, furred lips. He hugged her tightly to him.

“Come on,” he said. “Let’s not think about anything. We’ll go have some fun somewhere. Let’s get out of here. Don’t think about it, let’s just do it.”

OMAR DROVE them inland from Frontignan in his BMW for almost an hour. The sun was going down and they stayed mostly in silence, Kate looking out the window at the pastoral landscape until the light had faded and all she could see was the flash of long grass at the shoulder of the dirt roads.

It was fully dark when they got to where they were going. The dirt road that had been virtually empty for the last half hour was suddenly slowed to a halt, jammed with traffic. She could see up ahead there was a man with a reflective vest on and he seemed to be directing the traffic.

“This it?” She asked him.

He told her this was it. It was a local festival he’d told her; a market, dancing, drinking, even a bullfight. The scruffy man in the vest shoved a baton off to his left when they got to him. Omar drove onto the shoulder and into a grassy field filled with banged up country looking vehicles. Muddy cars, little pick-ups with shoddy caps over the beds; and country folk were milling about, getting themselves together, already drinking.

He parked and they got out and he took her hand to walk her through the grass. He headed off on a different angle than the flow of people, and she asked him where he was taking her.

“Come and see,” he said.

They walked into the tree line, and through the bushes she could see something lit up on the other side. She had a hard time understanding what she was looking at. There was a tall iron fence in the bushes and on the other side she could see a stone sculpture. Something ancient looking.

“What is it?”

He crouched down to her level and pointed through to the other side, drawing with his finger what he was describing. “See it? That’s the face of a lion. This is a Roman city on the other side. That was a bathhouse and the water flowed from the lion’s mouth.”

She peered through, saw it take shape now her mind had a reference. She could see it. A low stone wall and the head of a lion. The low wall must have been the edge of the pool.

“How old is it?”

He shrugged his shoulders. “Before Christ,” he said. She looked past the lion and could see the walls of an ancient place, columns beyond the walls, then a rocky cliff at the back.

“That is amazing,” she said.

He pulled her gently to him, held her against his side. She put an arm around his waist.

“Come on, let’s get to the party,” he said.

He walked her through the field and she could see in the distance where they were going. The music was loud even this far from the fair. She could see there was a ferris wheel, some other rusted ride that spun people in cups around and around in circles. There were hundreds of people down there. The place was lit up with tall poles and countless strings of bare incandescent bulbs. There was more but it was obscured by tall pine trees and hills and rocks.

Omar bought them tickets and a woman next to the chipped little hut where you paid grabbed her wrist and stamped her hand with the rough, red silhouette of a cartoon bull. It was lowered, ready to charge with a puff coming from its nostrils. Omar took her around her waist and they walked in together. She looked up at him as they passed through the crowds. He was so handsome, more so even amongst this crowd of seedy country people. She looked at the gentle light the way it lit up his face, his thick scruffy beard. The lights from the flashing merry-go-round danced in his beautiful, dark eyes. She couldn’t believe she was here with him. This was so wrong.

Every section of the fair that they passed had its own pounding soundtrack blaring from a deafening klaxon. One moment it was Celine Dion, then it was some American rock from the Fifties. The lights, the sound, the people—being with Omar—it was so overwhelming. She felt like she was outside her body, enjoying watching herself make the biggest mistake of her life.

Being here in the country made her anxious. These were rough people and they would walk cattle or goats right along the main paths and she would feel a panic wash over her. Flashes of poor teeth, black eyes, vacant and uncaring, laughter and foreign shouting. She pushed herself into Omar and he held her as they walked along corralled goats, past judges with clipboards trying to gauge the finest specimens. Her expensive shoes squished in manure and soft earth. She felt like she might pass out. She put a hand on Omar and he could see she wasn't well. He walked her to the side and looked in her eyes. She looked away, feeling suddenly too raw to deal with herself, what she had done to end up here. They were off to the edge of an intersection, two pathways where competing flows of traffic met, and they tried to sort themselves out. They were off to the side though, out of the way and somehow quiet now they were out of the throng. Omar took her by her hips and lifted her up onto the rail of a fence that lined the path. She looked down at him and she managed a smile. He put his arms around her waist and she pulled his head into her. They were underneath an enormous oak tree, with low long branches that went over the paths. She looked up into it and breathed deeply, watched a lost red balloon with a long thin ribbon bob, trapped up in the canopy of the tree.

There was a commotion on the street, everyone's attention had been captured, and some started a cheer. They were looking down the path that led behind her back. She turned to see what was the fuss. There was a truck inching along, squeezing between the people who could barely get out of the way. It was an ancient but well cared for pick up truck. Maybe a Citroen or something, it was painted a soft glossy yellow. Standing in the back was a man and next to him a very pretty young teenage girl holding an enormous bouquet of flowers. They were both waving to the crowd, the man very stoically, proudly, while the girl waved and shook her arm like a kid does with a big smile on her face.

"The matador?"

"Torero," Omar said.

"Torero," she repeated, liking the way it sounded as she watched the truck creep along past them, the two figures floating above the whistling and cheering crowd. The torero was dressed head to toe in a strawberry milkshake pink. He was beautiful. Tall and slim, olive skinned, with a pencil thin moustache. She felt like she was sitting here in a different time. His tights hugged him like skin, leaving nothing to the imagination, and he had a perfect rump, round and flexed under the hem of his short jacket with the rosy ruffles. He had one leg up, his foot on the shallow lip of the truck bed under the back window; he reminded her a bit of Napoleon. The little girl had a colourful gown on, in her free hand she was waving a tiny flag of Portugal.

They watched the truck pass, swallowed up by the crowd, until it disappeared down the other side under the tall trees.

“Come, let’s get a drink,” Omar said, and he helped her down off the fence.

THEY DANCED SLOWLY, their bodies pressed very tightly together under an ancient Roman archway lit up beyond the trees. She was drunk on Muscat. They had danced for an hour, some fast, but now slow and it felt good to press herself into his strong, masculine body. She looked up and kissed him, bit at his lip. She held him tighter and put her ear against his chest. The dance area was just a grassy square roped off with long elaborate ribbons in two shades of blue. There were lots of couples out there with them but she felt quite alone with him. They’d had one and a half bottles of something the man they bought it from called Rivesaltes, trying to enthusiastically communicate with Kate how great the product was but he spoke no English. Omar said it was a grenache. It was spicy but very sweet and you could tell it was a very strong wine. She felt like she was floating through the grass with Omar. She didn’t ever want to go home.

His big hands felt warm and strong on her back and she started to get that urge pulling at her, she just felt so fine. She looked up into his eyes and he smiled at her. She kissed him again.

There was an announcement through the speaker. The emcee was a short heavy woman in a frilly gown and she was letting everyone know something. There was movement in the dance area, people getting themselves together. The people watching the dancers, sitting around the edges at picnic tables and drinking started to stand and talk.

“It’s time for the bull,” Omar said.

“It is,” Kate agreed, and she ran a hand from his waist over his rump and inside his thigh. She felt him bristle as she came up and squeezed him through his pant leg. Omar looked around but there weren’t any spectators now, too much commotion. He put his mouth over hers and kissed her deeply. She ran her hand over his bulge, felt it a bit firmer under her fingers.

He squeezed her arms and pulled his lips from her. He said, “Kate, I can’t hide it in these pants.”

She smiled at him and bit her lip feeling very devilish. She looked down and she could see it through the fabric. He was wearing a pair of snug khaki work pants and a tight black T-shirt. That tremendous thing he had between his legs was clearly pushing out the fabric, making itself known to everyone down one leg of his pants.

She left it, and closed her eyes and kissed him again. She could feel his slight hardness against her soft belly. She could kiss him for another hour.

“Let’s go watch the bull,” he said. She was going any where he was going so she put her hand in his back pocket and let him escort her out of the dance.

They followed the crowd and soon they got to a makeshift bull ring. There was collapsible stadium seating in a circle around some fence posts and boards arranged to keep the bull in. They were still stuck in the crowd, waiting for their chance to get into this pieced together little stadium. There was a tall cutout in wood of a bull, like her stamp, but it had to be fifteen feet tall. It was lit up by five flaming torches planted into the ground around its feet. It looked like the bouquet that the young girl had carried next to the torero was thrown there too. They walked around it and Omar took her hand and led her away from the entrance, off to the side and under the scaffolding that held up the stadium benches. They ducked under and made their way along until they had to crouch, then he squeezed through under a bench and he was in the stadium. Flashbacks of teenage groping, of skipping school with two boys, drinking pints of Newcastle under the steps to the football stadium and touching bare bodies and kissing. He turned and held his hand to her. She took it and he pulled her through to the other side. They were inside the seating now, feet from the edge of the ring. The place was packed and lit up bright by tall poles with rows and rows of high powered white lighting. The place was smoky and hazy even though it was outside. Omar took her hand again and they made their way to stand right at the edge.

They were at ground level, they would be eye to eye with the bulls and the toreros in the ring. Her heart raced. There was a torero out there now and he was bowing to the crowd. He wasn't the shapely Portuguese one, the one everyone was here to see, but he was still striking. Dressed in the same tight garb, this one in the three colours of the French flag. He seemed popular with the locals. Omar squeezed Kate close to him and then got her right in front of him so she was face to face with the action. Someone released the bull and the French torero didn't see it happen. He bowed and turned and did it again a little to his left, he couldn't see the bull charging from behind. Kate yelled out, she couldn't hear her own voice over the cheers of the others. She felt Omar's hands tighten on her shoulders and she grimaced. But the torero spun at the last second, like he'd known all along. She couldn't help but cheer for him.

They watched the man out there as he studied the bull, waving his cape for it and dancing around it. She couldn't believe how thrilling it was. She was horrified to think how it was going to end but she was powerless to change this ancient cultural practice right now so she was going to succumb to it. Embrace the horror of it.

She folded her arm behind her while she watched, Omar was up against her back, his chin above the top of her head. She felt him with her hand. Ran it over his stomach and over his belt then between his legs. He moved his bulge into her hand now, wanting it to be touched this time. She squeezed it through the fabric, felt his wonderful size in her little grip.

The Frenchman continued to dance with the bull. The crowd roared with him and there were French flags everywhere, big ones and small ones that people fluttered in their drunken hands. The torero dodged another close one and the crowd went wild. Kate had never seen a bullfight before. Was this part of it? Was it supposed to be so close?

Omar's hands were moving behind her, in between them, doing something back there. Then his big hands grasped her cheeks over her short skirt and he squeezed them tightly and lifted her. She felt instantly aroused, instantly and desperately sexual. Her mouth fell open and she gasped at the feel of his hands on her. She felt for him again, her hand searched to find it. He'd unzipped it and pulled it out and her fingers gripped his hot bare cock.

It was gummy, half-hard and she squeezed it and stroked it while everyone yelled and screamed all around them.

THE BULL CHARGED the torero and missed again, now coming lunging headlong in their direction. She jumped as the animal barrelled into the barricade just a dozen feet from them. She stroked Omar while she watched, her eyes wide and frightful as the bull's powerful front legs had penetrated the barrier and it reared up, towered over them all, and snorted loud and wet. It was so close, so large and fearsome, lit up by those intense white lights. It roared as it struggled to free its legs and men standing down to their left pounded on it with their fists. It shook the heavy barrier like it was nothing and she could feel the ground trembling under her feet. It freed itself and turned, looking to kill the man with the cape. He stood in the centre of the ring, facing it down. Kate quivered with fear from being so close to something so large and so deadly. Omar was getting harder in her hand, he was so big she could barely hide it, knew someone would see it past her narrow waist. She didn't care. She wanted someone to see.

The bull charged again, barrelled at him and they were close close enough they could see the muscles ripple on the animal's back. She'd just been so very close to it, saw its impressive size and she couldn't imagine how someone could stand and face something like that. And then something awful happened.

The torero exploded, his cape and hat flew up in the air and his body was sent spinning. He flew threw the air three hundred and sixty degrees sideways, lying flat like the blades of a helicopter. He crumpled on the ground in a cloud of dust and Kate screamed. Omar wrapped his arms around her as they watched.

The torero was writhing in pain, holding his right leg. He was face down but he had arched his back and Kate and Omar could see his face contorted in agony. The bull had turned now and was ready to charge but two other brightly dressed men got in its way and it was distracted.

Kate watched as someone ran to the Frenchman on the ground and helped him up. His tight costume was crimson all up the front. He was gushing blood from a pulpy mess in the middle of his thigh that glistened in the flood lights. People cheered for him and Kate covered her mouth with her hand as she watched him come right up next to them and out of the ring to their right. His eyes were glazed and he was in shock. She smelled the blood as he passed, so close she could have touched him.

Omar was hard in her hand. She felt him thrusting himself into her grip, wanting more from her. His arms were still around her and she realized his fingers were unbuttoning her shirt. She let him do it. She wanted to be bare right now. To fuck him, to feel that big, bull cock of his part her flesh.

The show went on as quickly as the gore had been cleared. She hadn't seen what they'd done with the first bull, but the ring was empty and the lights flashed in all sorts of frenzied patterns and someone yelled at the top of their lungs through the klaxon in French. They were announcing the next fighter.

She squeezed and stroked Omar. He had her shirt open now and he untucked it so it would hang. His hand slipped inside and he caressed her body. She wanted it so bad right now. She wanted to leave and get to the car, get him to fuck her from behind like an animal in the backseat. Fog up the windows with their heat. But she was frozen to this spot. She wanted to see what would happen.

The next bullfighter appeared in the ring. He wasn't tall and thin this one, he was fit and shapely but he was shorter and thicker. He had enormous calves and a thick waist. He was hairy too, unshaven like Omar, and it was a striking contrast to the soft feminine colours and fabrics he'd squeezed that male body into. The bulge in his white tights looked like a fat one.

She could feel eyes on her, felt like she was being watched. She really didn't care. There were two young women, country girls watching her. They could see her hand stroking Omar's big cock. She knew they'd never seen anything like that. Maybe just on their farm animals. They were watching, disgusted expressions on their faces, but they weren't looking away. She wanted them to see it. Wanted them to know what kind of cock she was taking. What kind of man she was fucking. She wished they could see that big thing come, how strong he launched his seed. Omar was all man and everything about him showed it. She was proud to be with him.

OMAR UNDID her bra and her breasts fell free. They were under her shirt but it was unbuttoned and hanging open. Her nipples tightened, she felt so exposed. There were men watching, looking over at them. But she was an attractive girl at a bullfight, they would be looking even if they didn't know what she was up to with Omar. Maybe they couldn't see her nipples.

Omar's hand was on the back of her thigh and he ran it under her skirt and in between her legs. She smiled and bit her lip while she watched the bull. She felt him pulling her panties down. Felt the waistband tugging at her flesh as it made its way over the curve of her rump. He pulled them right down over her thighs but still hidden under her short skirt.

The stocky torero worked the bull. He was intense. His movements weren't as fluid as the first one, he seemed tentative at times. Not fearful, but intimidated. He would use the cape to lure the bull to one side and he did it well, but his face showed worry. After what happened to the first man she wasn't sure she was ready to see more.

She felt Omar's hand under her skirt. He was kneading the flesh of her rump, spreading her cheeks. She wanted him to hurry. Knew he would touch her. She could feel how wet she was already. Omar was in for a surprise.

His middle finger teased between her legs. She felt it glide over her wet furled lips. The tip of his finger made it all the way to her front and he teased at her hardened button. She leaned forward and exposed herself to him. Gave him more room to play.

She felt his thick finger slide back to her entrance. She was hot and wet, she wanted him to slide it right in her. The tip tickled back past her lips and then it plunged deep into her anus. It wasn't what she was expecting. She sucked her lips into her mouth and she closed her eyes. Omar held her closer to him. They looked like they were hugging. A boyfriend hugging his girlfriend while she watched the awful bullfight. But he had a long thick finger buried inside her and his other hand was around the front now, sliding under her skirt as well. She hoped they couldn't see this standing next to her, but she wanted it to happen even if they could. They could always look away. The fingers of his other hand found her hot flesh and he parted her. A finger ran along her sex and she trembled. The he slid it inside her.

She stroked his cock behind her. It was clumsy and awkward because it was hidden between them. Her arm hurt to bend like that, it made her shoulder ache. He was so hard now, her hand couldn't close around his head. Suddenly he was slippery in her hand. His lubricant streamed from him and she could quicken her pace on him, flicking her wrist, having her grip spread by his fat glans. She had to have it inside her. She put one foot up on the rung of the barricade. It looked like an old farm gate repurposed to hold off the bulls. She looked around. Those two girls were watching her but she wasn't sure what they could see. There were more people around them now, crowding them a bit against the fence. He could fuck her here. His cock was long enough to penetrate her while they stood and watched the action. She lifted herself up on to the barricade, her other leg on the next rung up. Omar leaned into her and supported her. She turned her head and watched that no one saw her push his cock down, between her legs and under her skirt.

She could feel it between her soft thighs now, could feel how hot it was. He used his hips to run it along her, getting the top of it wet from her sex. She reached under her skirt from the front and felt the tip of him. He was hard and so slippery, wet from her and from his own excitement.

Kate tilted her hips and opened herself up to him. She pushed the underside of his large cock head forcing it to part her. She loved the feeling when that flared bell parted her, pushed her folds back and spread her opening. She loved the feel of his smooth slippery glans as it slipped against her velvety interior. She closed her eyes as he leaned into her and the first third of his member pried her open and made its way into her body.

When the torero stumbled while the bull charged him it became clear that the bull was getting the better of him. The bull hadn't touched him as it passed, it looked like he'd lost his footing. One leg went out wide and it looked like he might do the splits before he caught himself and stumbled away.

He was taking long strides as he recovered, his worried face looking over his shoulder at the bull. It was turning itself to come at him again. It was like the huge animal knew that it had almost got him that time, that it had him on the heels and he could take him. It trotted around in a circle looking confident and frightening. When it got its front half pointed in his direction again it dropped its head and charged. The sweaty muscles of its back glistening under the electric white light. The crowd roared and Kate felt almost like they were cheering the animal now, respecting its obvious abilities.

The torero swept it away but you could see he had given up mentally. He didn't want to be there any more and the bull lunged past him, bucking and snorting. Instead of turning this time it kept its charge and drove itself into the barricade across from Kate and Omar on the other side. Maybe it saw something or someone it didn't like on the other side of the barrier, but for whatever reason it launched itself into the barricade at full speed.

Kate saw plywood splinter over there and two big sections of metal gate like the one she had her feet on right now were tossed up in the air like they were weightless. The crowd on the other side screamed as the bull came through. She could see an older man get tossed up in the air. His face was angry not pained, he was an old farmer, dark hair with silver stripes at the side. He was short and thick and had spent many years in the sun and as he came back down it looked like he took a swing at the bull with a right hand. He went down out of sight and she could see some of the men hitting the bull with their fists but mostly everyone had run away. She could see the bull get clear of the seating. It was moving a whole section of four-tiered scaffolding with the benches across it to the side as its enormous muscular body passed. People had stopped screaming and they filled in the space the bull had just been in. They were looking over the back of the stadium seating to see what was happening. Kate was clenched. The bull was loose. She could feel her muscles tighten up on Omar's cock. He'd stopped thrusting, stopped moving at all. She could feel his hands gripping her, his big thing pushing her apart, her clamping on him, almost sucking him inside her. Then someone was clapping and the rest of the people gathered on the the benches, standing and looking down over the backs of them to the field behind, began clapping as well. Applause turned to cheering and loud whistles. People returned to their seats and then as quickly as it begun the cheering turned to boos. They were rejecting the torero. He wasn't in the centre now, he'd moved off to the side and was leaving the ring. He kept his head down and chatted calmly to one of his assistants as he left the barricade amid the boos.

WHEN IT WAS time for the torero champion to come out, the one from Portugal, the place shook with the anticipation. Drunken cheers, fists pumped in the air, and people grabbed the barriers and shook them viciously until Kate thought they might come down.

The bars slapped against her bare breasts, hurt them, and she looked angrily to the side to the drunken farmer next to her. His big knuckled hands were wrapped around the metal, the back of his hands laced with thick ropy veins. She cursed him and held her breasts , moved them from harm. Omar gently pushed himself deeper into her. She pulled her lips into her mouth and sucked them. She could feel every detail of him, could feel his foreskin pulling away and bunching up inside her as he moved it slightly in and out of her. Teasing her with it, making his movement look like two companions hugging and embracing, not like she was being penetrated. She forced her expression back to normal, tried not to give away how good he felt inside her.

The torero emerged finally and the place exploded. The sound system had been turned too loud and the woman emcee's voice blared aggressively from the klaxon. Kate covered her ears. Before she had even announced him, music drowned her out, someone cranking it over the same sound system she was trying to announce from. The torero bowed deep to the crowd, turned and did it again, going around clockwise, bowing in ten minute intervals so that everyone understood his appreciation.

Omar was deep inside her, deep as he could be while they both stood. She could feel her breasts out in the open could feel her hard nipples graze against the bare metal bars with each little thrust Omar gave her. She could feel his warm body against her back, could feel his weight pushing her forward each time he pushed it into her. She let herself gasp with each one, her little sounds disappearing in the din. She could sense the older men on her left watching her. She let them, let them get their thrill.

Now the torero was ready and he nodded to an assistant. Before anyone was prepared, the biggest bull she'd ever seen detonated from the stall across the ring. Omar slid himself deeper inside her as she watched the animal pound across the dirt of the ring throwing up clumps of earth. Omar fucked her gently while she watched, everyone's attention was on the ring. They were free now, free to move and give in to the pleasure. The torero moved with the bull as it charged, she could see him study it, calmly surveying it every time it lunged past him. The bull was pure fury and he was unaffected, he moved with it it controlled it, made it do the things he wanted it to.

The men next to her were talking and laughing their faces not turned to the action at all now. They were watching her get fucked. She let her shirt come open, let them see her breasts peek out, her hard nipples visible to them from where they stood.

The Portuguese kept the bull at bay, he was completely in control despite how ferocious the animal might seem to Kate. He was unafraid and he directed every movement with the bull, and the crowd was on the edge of its seat. He was a master and he moved the bull like a puppet.

Omar pushed into her hard, she could feel him getting urgent, could feel him very hard inside her. His hand came around and cupped her breast. She felt his rough palm against her soft sensitive nipple, felt him squeeze her. Omar slapped the hand away at the same time that she realized the grip was too small. There was a laugh next to her, it was the old farmer and he was laughing with his friend about what he'd done.

The bull charged again and it seemed like he might have bumped the torero because the crowd gasped. Kate had a good vantage and she saw that the bull hadn't touched him. She saw the handsome face under the black winged hat out there smile as he knew the crowd thought the bull might have the better of him. He turned as the bull circled around him. She could see the sword behind his back now, his grip adjust on the handle, preparing the blade. She didn't want to see this, she didn't think he needed to do this, he'd shown everyone he was better did he have to kill it now too?

Her hands were sweaty and she gripped the fat metal tubing of the barricade. She could feel her breasts swinging heavily as Omar fucked her more urgently now. The bull trotted and surveyed the torero almost knowing this next charge had higher stakes, like it knew he had something hidden behind his back ready to pierce its flesh and end its life.

Omar picked up the pace, he was fucking her more deftly now, swiveling his hips as he pushed into her, it was rocking her body and her breasts were out and swaying with his movements. A flash went off and she could see a hand holding out a camera trying to get a picture of her bare breasts. It went off again and she spread her arms and let her breasts show. A hand grabbed a breast roughly again and Omar swatted it away.

The bull charged and she could see it framed above the torero, he had his hand behind his back holding the long blade and he held the rod with the red velvet drape out taunting the bull as it thundered towards him. He pivoted and drove the bull down using its own momentum to slow it down, forcing it into the ground. He moved it in a circle and then in one deft horrible motion he took the blade hidden behind the cape and drove in behind the bull's head and down between its shoulder blades. She cried out, horrified that he could end something that was so full of life.

She felt her eyes tear up, witnessing the end of something so beautiful. One moment ago it was vigorous and full of life and in the next a man plunged something through it and ended it. She shivered, overwhelmed by emotion and pleasure at the same time, feeling so good at the same time her heart swelled with pain. She could cry out in passion right now or burst into tears.

Another man came out and handed the torero another blade. She could see the bull was still alive, could see by its nose that it was still breathing, she heard it moan and her head fell forward in despair. Omar was making her feel so good, she had felt herself right at that edge. He had her on the blade of a huge orgasm but now its head had been pushed underwater, its fire extinguished. She felt his thrusts inside her but they felt far away and oddly painful. She let him fuck her, get himself to come. Hands that weren't Omar touched her again and she pushed them away, she felt angry now. She grabbed the edges of her shirt and pulled them across her, covered herself up.

The torero raised the blade above his head and these heathens clamored and yelled urging him to finish the bull. She heard a woman shouting behind her, piercing above the cacophony. She looked away, knew he was going to finish the animal and she couldn't bear to see it. Omar had stopped, and she felt him sliding out of her. His arms came around her and held her.

The crowd cheered and she knew the man had killed the animal. Omar was pulled away from her and his cock slid out of her wetly. She turned and saw him accosted by a heavyset farm woman yelling at him, thrusting a finger at him, pushing it into his chest. She was dirty and poorly bred and she was very mad. Omar had his hands up and it looked like he might be smiling, his cock hung out of his fly and it glistened from her insides. The two men who were next to her who had touched her were laughing. Omar was mad now too and he was yelling back at her in French. He unbuttoned his pants so he could get his erection back in there, then he zipped it up, yelling back at her the whole time. She slapped him hard across his cheek and after the surprise left his face he laughed and smiled.

A younger woman grabbed Kate roughly by the arm and she started to feel a bit afraid. People were looking over now to see what was happening. Someone yanked her hard and she almost fell over. A woman's hand grabbed her wrist. Kate wrenched it away and she threw a fist into the crowd, hitting someone in the lips. She thought it might be one of the farm girls who'd been watching earlier.

"Fuck off," she yelled. She looked past one of the men who were getting in the way trying to keep the two girls separated but they were also laughing, enjoying this. She eyeballed the girl, saw her back there, her hand over her bloodied mouth. Kate pulled her panties up and turned back to Omar.

Omar pushed the big woman back, carefully, not striking her but just creating space between them. Someone took a picture and a few people were laughing in the crowd. Kate covered her face. Omar took her wrist and pulled her to him. He walked her out of the crowd. Some woman yelled in her ear as she passed. She imagined they were calling her a whore but she didn't really know what they were saying. She put her head down and let Omar guide her out of the angry crowd with his hand on the small of her back.

KATE WAS STILL mad when they made it out to the midway. She wasn't going to shy away from a fight. They were in the wrong, she knew that, but that bitch should never put her hands on her. She looked over at Omar and he was watching behind them a big smile plastered on his face.

The aisles of the midway were mostly empty, and the workers were packing up the games and closing down the rides. They stumbled through the grass, and Omar steadied her. They had to watch their step, the path was littered with bottles and trash.

“That fucking cunt,” Kate said when they finally stopped. No one was following them and Omar leaned against a carnival game now and she could see he was looking her up and down, his white teeth smiling behind his full lips.

“What?”

“You handle yourself well,” he said.

“I know.” She shook her hand, felt her knuckles throbbing. She held it out and saw she was covered in blood. Bright red splashes up the back of her hand and thick rivulets along her fingers and dripping from the tips.

“Fuck,” she said. The skin of the knuckle on her middle finger was scalped right back and hanging by a stitch. “I think I cut my knuckle on that girl’s teeth,” she said.

A goat ran past behind her and it made her jump. It seemed to come out of nowhere even though it had a brass bell around its neck on a leather strap. Then behind the goat half a dozen or more pigs barrelled past and she squeezed next to Omar to get away from them. She hated them, hated their smell and the noises they made. More came after those and she pushed back to get away from them and fell through a tarp that separated one carnival game from the other. She landed in the dirt, squeezed between the two hastily constructed games.

It smelled like farms and cigarettes and urine and it made her want to retch thinking of this dirty place. Omar loomed in the gap, he wasn’t making a sound but he held his hand out to her and lifted her up to stand out in the air again. She was huffing and her heart was pounding. No one came after the animals, no owner, no farmer missing them trying to corral them. Probably some drunk louts let them out to have a laugh. One more lone pig ran past them squealing trying to catch up with its mates and she hugged herself into Omar.

“Jesus Christ,” she said, “this place is my worst fucking nightmare.” She bent over trying to compose herself, her hands on her knees.

Omar put his hand on her back and she could feel him laughing through the feel of his palm on her. She stood up and saw him struggle to keep a smile from his face. His lips were trembling.

“Fucking go ahead.”

He put his hands over his face and she could see him try to control his laughter, letting it go but trying to be polite, respectful of her feelings. She watched his shoulders shake as he kept the giggling quiet and breathy through his nose. She shook her head at him and a smile broke out on her own face. She shook her hand again, and looked at the fresh blood streaming from the wound. She started to laugh too and he put his arms around her.

“Hold on,” he said.

He leaned over the counter of the carnival game and yelled in French over to a guy who was packing up the ride that was next to this one. He had paper money between his fingers and was showing it to the guy. He was young, black jeans and black t-shirt, long stringy hair under his black ball cap. He was expressionless but nodded amicably a cigarette bouncing between his lips. He opened a grubby plastic cooler behind the counter and pulled ice from it, wrapped it in a dirty handkerchief he had back there.

Omar said something else and the kid looked around and found a half bottle of wine. He took the money from Omar and gave him the ice and the wine. He counted it and glanced at Kate, looked her up and down and winked at her. He went back and got the cooler and brought it over to them, he pulled out some cans of beer that were in there, then held the lid open for her. The ice had mostly melted, it was water with the rounded remains of ice floating in it.

She thanked him and then put her hand inside, swished it around and tried to wipe some of the blood off with her other hand. It felt so good to numb the throbbing even though the wet cold stung her skin.

Two men came up behind them, so drunk they could barely stand. They were drawn by the cans of beer. Omar and the kid in black both told them to fuck off and waved them away with the back of their hands. The one closest to Kate looked her up and down weaving while he did, his face sullen and sunken his drunk eyes dead to the world. She told him to fuck off too in her best French.

He grumbled something to them, his face mean but powerless and his friend pulled him away. It just made him more aggressive, but he was all bluster and soon they were both headed down the grassy aisle hunched over with their hands in the pockets of their dirty polyester pants.

Kate and the two men laughed when they were gone and Omar talked briefly to him in French before he got back to work. Kate got her hand out of the cooler and looked at it. It wasn't bleeding any more so she dumped the ice out of the handkerchief and rinsed it out in the ice water, squeezed it dry and wrapped her hand around the knuckles with it. Omar tied a knot for her in her palm and she squeezed it, made a fist around it. He held up the wine looked at it with a light bulb behind it, uncorked it and smelled it. He shrugged and took a swig from the bottle and handed it to Kate and she did the same.

Omar held his right hand out for her and she took it with her uninjured hand and he walked her down the grassy aisle. The noise from the bullfight behind them got louder. The crowds were letting out and people were streaming back into the midway. They looked back and could see hundreds of people coming back into the fair.

"Come on," Omar said, and he led her behind the darkened merry-go-round and they walked quickly through the bushes there and into the dark. They stood and watched the people shouting and banging things as they passed on the other side of the trees. They were all heading back to their cars it looked like but none of them seemed sober enough to drive right now.

Omar pulled her away and she turned to follow him deeper into the woods. He held her hand as they ducked under branches and squeezed around big old gnarled tree trunks until they came to a section of tall iron fencing. Omar passed the bottle through the bars onto the other side. He said, "This way, Kate," and he climbed up, sitting across the top now steadying himself with one hand. He held his other out to help her up. The fence was only about six feet tall, but the bars formed points along the top. She pulled herself up without his help and she straddled the top bar sitting face to face with him. She watched Omar lift himself down, his muscular arms bulging as he struggled to keep himself safely away from being snagged on the points. He got underneath her put his hands up to help her down. She turned and lowered her rump to him, his head practically going under her skirt. She could hear him laughing between her legs. He lifted her away from the fence and she was laughing now too as he carried her on his shoulders and she struggled not to lean too far and bring them both to the ground. "Omar," she hissed and she slapped at his shoulders. He let her down and she stood in front of him looking up into his smiling face. He kissed her forehead and she closed her eyes.

"Come, let's take a walk," he said and he bent and picked up their bottle. He uncorked it and handed it to her and she took a long drink from it.

They walked together and Omar held her hand. It was dark but they could see where they were going very clearly. Away from the artificial light of the fair she was amazed how much the almost full moon lit up the night. She could see the ancient stone path they walked on washed in royal blue, she could see columns climbing up into the night that lined the walkway, the black bushes against the rocky hills that went up high on either side of them. Ahead there was the remains of a temple. Three lone Corinthian columns holding up the broken quarter of what was once a beautiful marble temple roof. Now it was a blackened clump of rock held up in the night sky. You had to look carefully to see the beautiful details that still remained on it. They stopped underneath it and she looked up at its black silhouette against the indigo night. He put the bottle down on the ground and stood with her looking up at the ancient pediment.

"Can you imagine what it was like here two thousand years ago?" she said.

"I think it wasn't much different."

"You don't?"

"Well they didn't have cars," he laughed.

"Or iPhones."

"But they were just like us. They loved, they had families, they had fights. They had this city, politics, armies, culture. You know they even had dams and aqueducts. That must have seemed like they were from the future to the Gauls back then. Technology like no one had ever seen..." he didn't continue, he put his hands on her waist and lifted her up to sit on a broad stone altar under the ruined columns. She was face to face with him.

"Imagine all the human dramas that have been played out here. All the loves lost, all the love found, they were just like us..." he kissed her on the lips and she breathed him in. She bit at his lower lip and ran her hands over his back. He was hot, she felt his heat coming through his damp shirt. She pulled it up with her fingers then peeled it off him. She put her mouth back over his and he leaned into her guiding her back until she was flat on the altar. He unbuttoned her shirt and slid his hands under the material to unhook her bra. She used her toes to pry her flats off and she heard them fall to the stone. He kissed down her neck and her chest and put his mouth over her nipple. She arched her back and pulled her shirt open, then got herself right out of it while he kissed her chest and her belly. She lay back again, the cold stone stinging her back.

He stood up and unbuttoned his pants and pushed them right down and stepped out of them. He was beautiful in the moonlight. She could tell he was looking down at her, admiring her, and there was something odd about his body language. Something telling in the slump of his wide shoulders, the submissive tilt of his neck. He wasn't going to fuck her like a whore, he wasn't going to do his dirty things. She could see all that in the way he carried his masculine body. The moonlight rimmed his shoulders and collar and his broad chest, she couldn't make out his face very well, his eyes black shapes under his strong brow. But she could read him, read the emotion from him.

His hands went to her waist and unbuttoned her skirt. She watched him do it. She softly covered his hands with her own, felt them while they worked the button out and undid the short zipper. She lifted herself up so he could slide the skirt and her panties down her thighs.

He climbed up on the altar and got himself over her, the two of them completely naked now. She pulled him down to her and kissed him.

They made love, him on top of her, mouths locked on each other, two soft figures writhing on ancient stone in the moonlight, their hips grinding into each other, feeling the other one move and responding. She was forced wide by Omar's over-sized organ, painfully spread, but so wrought with pleasure the wounding became part of the rapture. How enormous he was between his legs was only part of who Omar was to her now, but it was the object of his sexuality. It was proof to her of his passion, and the pain it delivered was pleasure. She wanted to be hurt by him, that was the sacrifice to be with a man like him. It came with a wounding.

She gave in to him, surrendered her insides to him, relaxed her grip on it and let it all go. She could accommodate him better when she didn't try to fuck him. He was so big that any sort of squeezing on him became resistance that his girth would fight against, and he was so hard right now that his size would punish any dissent. So she gave herself up, let him pummel her soft insides with his unbelievable manhood hard as steel.

They went on, mouths locked, his fingers clasped through hers, sweating and heaving in the night air for more than half an hour. After a long while her body had accepted him and she worked with him now, her hips bucking against his rather than retreating, wanting him deeper, even though he was painfully hard, taking him all the way, looking into his eyes while he made love to her, her hand moving on to his neck, her eyes wet with tears. She came when he did.

When he erupted inside her, the wet feeling of his discharge, the roar he gave as it spewed from him and filled her up put her over the edge. She cried out once high and sharp and thrust her head back as he continued to drive into her while she could feel his hot seed still spurting from him. She pulled him deeper with her legs, encouraged his hips to sink his beautiful cock deeper inside her while he filled her right up with his boiling nectar. She scratched at his back while he collapsed on her groaning, suspending himself over her on his elbows while he panted in her ear. She was gasping too, covered in sweat, her own glossy sheen and Omar's too, dripping from him and running off her. He was so incredible. She pulled him closer to her, running her hands over his slippery back, feeling his muscle under the skin as he gulped air. He kissed her wetly and she pulled his tongue into her mouth. She winced as he carefully pulled his cock out of her and rolled off to lay by her side.

She looked up at the almost perfectly round moon in the deep blue night. They were enveloped on all sides by steep hills and the bushes that crested them reached up into the night like black hands trying to shield them from the rest of the world. Protecting them from the outside while they did what they needed to do with each other.

Her chest still heaved, trying to recover from their astounding exercise in passion. She could feel his semen dripping from her and she closed her thighs up and turned her hips to him, felt his warm body against her knees. He was watching her, laying on his back with his head turned to the side, gazing at her through half open eyes.

"You are incredible," she told him.

He turned to her and they both looked into each others eyes laying on their side on the ancient altar. He brushed a strand of sweaty hair from her face and rested his hand on her neck.

"Come away with me."

She closed her eyes.

“Come with me to Italy.”

Kate put her hand up on his wrist, but didn't answer. When she opened her eyes a while later he was still watching her, she could see the moonlight reflected in his eye. She put her hand on his cheek, felt the roughness of his beard. He was so handsome. So masculine.

She sat up and turned from him, let her legs hang off the edge of the stone altar. She breathed deep and stared into the ancient ruins. Omar put his big hand on her back and she closed her eyes and enjoyed the warmth, the strength of his touch on her skin. She looked over her shoulder at him. His lean and muscular body dim in the night, his muscular edges lit up bright by the moon, the big dark shape between his legs hanging down and resting on the timeworn stone. He was looking at her, his expression uneasy as he watched her. He was a magnificent specimen, troubled like her, he'd done terrible things to her. But it was because he loved her wasn't it? He wanted her so bad he didn't know what to do to keep her. She wanted him too.

Her hands gripped her knees as she struggled to comprehend this enormous decision. This was a turning point, a pivot in her life, appropriately made in the ruins of this Roman temple. She looked at her hands clutching her bare knees. Her right hand bruised and aching, the skin of her knuckle peeled back, the flesh raw and sore from the lightest breeze. There was dried blood between her fingers. Evidence of her night of drunken passions. Her left hand, clean and uninjured, a sparkling diamond glinting in the night from the shine of the moon.

This very long format story isn't like my other work. At times it is funny but it is emotionally intense and dives deep into the suffering, pain, humiliation, and loss of a cuckold husband and his wife. Their marriage—their family—is brutally put to the test when the wife, out of compassion, allows their bull to move into the house. It is not an easy read.

Pete and Jess Mapplethorpe have been married for seven years now. They've got two wonderful little boys and an Irish Setter. Everyone that knows them would say they are the nicest couple you'd want to meet.

Well, they might say that Pete can be a bit of a jerk sometimes—but Jess? Regional Grade Three teacher of the year, three years running. Pretty, polite, sensitive, kind and thoughtful...

It must have been black magic that brought them together...

Behind closed doors everyone would be shocked at what goes on. They'd never believe the dirty things that sweet Jess might do or say. Pete doesn't think he has what it takes to please his beautiful wife and they fantasize about larger men taking her and making her happy.

She's just starting to discover herself at thirty-five... She wants to make up for lost time. They've found a handsome, well-built young man to play along. It's better than they even imagined. Now that they've started will she be able to stop? What if she doesn't want to?
