Kate suffered under Omar's blackmail. She doesn't know that it was her husband Mitch's idea. That he was the one who was really blackmailing her. Getting her to reluctantly do the dirty things he knew she wanted to.

Mitch's stakes were too high, Kate worried too much about the consequences and how her dirty sex tape could destroy her husband's life. How her dark desires could humiliate him publicly.

She snuck off to the south of France to confront Omar. To make him pay with his life. She didn't find what she expected. He wasn't arrogant, he wasn't rough. He apologized.

Before she could stop herself she was in his arms, in his bed, taking that thing of his that she loved. And after a romantic, passionate evening he urged her to run away with him to Italy...

Mitch's Investment House appears to have been shuttered during some sort of police investigation...

Kiley misunderstood the feelings of her best customer, heart surgeon Jay Shaker. While at his home she made an advance. It turned out to be unwelcome and now she fears repercussions at work...

Omar slid the white cotton cover off her very slowly, revealing glossy, sexy curves that shone in the dim light of the garage bay.

“Wow, she is beautiful,” Kate said.

He pulled the sheet right off and folded it up and put it on a rolling cart behind him. The ultralight, eleven-hundred pound race car was up and ratcheted securely in place on the borrowed trailer, and the two of them stood on either side of it.

The big aluminum rolling door of the bay was pulled right up. It was night time and they were alone in Frontec. It was dark out, the entrance lit up by an amber sodium light high up on a pole out front, up in the canopy of an old oak tree. There was the soft summer sound coming into the garage that Omar loved. The rustling leaves, the constant countryside chirping of the cigales. A pink flamingo had landed out front when they arrived and they watched it for a moment before they came in as it reared up from the salty puddle in the grass next to the shop and it awkwardly took flight, its neck undulating as it tried to pick up speed.

They were in the racing bay, the floor here painted a shiny, dove grey that gleamed with the lone two lights he had on, two bar fluorescents hidden high up in the girders that supported the roof.

He pulled the harness out of the way from off the seat, he said, “Here, come have a seat in it.”

“Really?” she said bashfully and ran a strand of hair behind her ear. She looked beautiful, even dressed down in regular cotton clothes and unwashed hair. Her skin was soft and smooth, flawless, and her eyes glinted in the dark. She was wearing faded denim pants that came down just below her knees, some canvas sneakers and a blue and white striped top with big, over-sized sleeves she had rolled up to her elbows. She somehow looked very French. They’d gone out to pick her up some items this afternoon, some things for her new start. She wasn’t wearing her usual jewelry just the diamond stud in her nose. And she hadn’t taken off her wedding ring yet.

“Yeah, come on,” he said and he held his hand to help her sit in the tight cockpit. He squat down low next to the car so he was face to face with her and rested his elbows along the edge. He pressed a button behind the display box and it lit up like a computer screen.

“It’s like a video game,” she said. “You’re not going to ask me to drive it, are you?” she said, looking horrified.

“Oh, no,” he said. “Don’t worry. It’s not easy to operate.”

“Can you start it up?”

“Not really, we usually have it hooked up to computers, and we monitor it, then there’s a crank at the back, a starter motor that one of us fires up for the driver.” He showed her the controls, showed her how you would use the paddles to shift it.

“Is it really fast?”

“Of course,” he smiled. “It’s a Honda motor,” he said, “two-point four litre, air aspirated. Monocoque, all carbon fibre. It goes like crazy.” He could have gone on forever about it, how it worked, but he knew not to talk too long to girls about cars. Though he really wanted Kate to appreciate this. He wanted her to see his passion. To maybe somehow share it.

“Who drives it?”

“We have a driver from Spain. He’ll come along with us tomorrow.”

“It really looks like the batmobile or something, innit.” She ran her hands along the sleek black sides of the racer, feeling the vents in the carbon fibre that did give it a somewhat fearsome, intimidating profile.

Kate struggled to stand herself up and he held her hand and helped her, then lifted her at the waist as she stepped out of the race car. She walked along the trailer ahead of him and he admired her figure, her little waist and wide hips, her fine wrists.

He couldn't believe she made this choice. He couldn't believe she was here with him. She had turned her back on her handsome husband and his millions of pounds. He was an all right guy, a little weak between the sheets and his sexy wife here liked it a way he couldn't deliver. So she turned her back on him, gave him up and all his money to be with Omar. The things Omar did to her were worth more than his money. And she was head over heels with the thing he had between his legs.

She hopped down off the trailer, her chest giving up a hefty jiggle, and she walked on, adjusting her bra as she went. She looked at the convoy they had lined up for tomorrow, the vehicles packed with computers and tools they would need for the race next Saturday.

She made her choice to come away with him. He told her that he'd blackmailed her to force her to stay in his life. Not the truth. He didn't care about her in his life at first really. It was only when Mitch called it off and she was gone that he missed her. She believed she was with a man that blackmailed her with a horrible video of their very dirty coupling. Made her send him money and do other dirty things online with him. He'd tormented her. He invited her to a room in London and when she got there he had a horrible surprise for her: another man. And they were there to fuck her. And still she'd chosen to be with him. Took his apology and let him sweep her off her feet. His feelings for her were genuine. He wanted her desperately to be in his life. But still, he wouldn't betray Mitch. He wouldn't tell Kate the truth. There were still opportunities here to be had and he didn't want to burn a bridge. Sure he was running away with the man's wife but he wasn't going to do anything with her that he hadn't done already. Nothing he hadn't done to her right in front of her husband while he watched.

How would she feel if she found out her husband loved her so much he paid Omar to pretend to blackmail her. Or hated her so much he did it. Omar still really couldn't figure Mitch out. Or Kate. The way those two were with each other was so strange. They loved each other but Mitch allowed such bad behaviour from her and then he turned and did terrible things back to her. What would Kate think if Omar told her that Mitch had given him a good deal of money to turn up in London and along with some other guy they both penetrated her at the same time? Omar in the front, Ares in her anus. Wouldn't she hate him?

Who the fuck knew with these two? Maybe she'd love him more. She thought it was Omar's idea, that he had arranged that atrocity, and here she had run away with him. He shook his head. Maybe Mitch really did know what he was doing when it came to his crazy wife. Maybe he knew what she wanted.

Kate passed through to the service bay where customer's cars were parked, in various stages of performance improvements. Her hands came up behind her head and she untied her hair and shook it loose, her hips swayed as she walked and Omar started paying attention. He saw her tuck her elbows into the baggy body of her striped top and her arms went into it and pushed it up over her head. She dropped the top onto a drill press as she walked between a Skyline and a black Maserati from the eighties. She traced a finger along the Italian roadster and he watched the soft skin of her back as her left hand came up between her shoulder blades and with little struggle she unhooked the snap of her bra. He could see her breasts drop free and swing from behind. Omar couldn't wait to feel those perfect soft womanly things, to watch them sway while he fucked her.

"What's this one?" she asked as she turned to him, pointing over her shoulder at a 1965 Ferrari.

"You like that one?"

"Yeah," she said and she unbuttoned her pants while she used her toes to pull her sneakers off by the heels. She peeled the pants down and stepped out of them. No panties.

"It's a sixty-five Ferrari 275. It's a real classic."

"It looks expensive."

"It is. Very," he said, watching her. She stood there in his dirty garage that stank of oil and grease and men. She looked incredibly out of place. Her soft beautiful body, perfect feminine form. She stepped towards the Ferrari in her bare feet.

"One and a half million probably," he said.

"Wow," she said and she turned and sat on it very gently, her soft thighs and bottom flattening against it. "It's probably pretty delicate too." She had her hand between her legs, her fingers running through her thatch of hair. She spread them slightly for him. "You're going to have to fuck me very gently on it then, aren't you?"

Kate had listened to him talk about the car. She was paying attention, but she was watching his hands. His big fingers, his broad palms, the thick veins that crossed over the backs of them. They were big and strong and it turned her on. She liked watching them move over the things he was passionate about. She liked the shape of his body as he bent and showed her how things work. His wide back stretching his T-shirt, his narrow waist, his jeans clinging to his hips; it all brought out her badness. She felt it come but it was different now. The edge had been taken from it.

It was bad when she was with Mitch because she thought about other men, but when she was with Omar she didn't think about other men. But wasn't she still with Mitch? Isn't this still bad? She pushed that thought away, couldn't bear for a second to even think of Mitch.

So she took her clothes off and walked around naked in the garage, letting him see her woman flesh against all this hard, dirty metal and filth. Omar watched her as she put herself on the hood of this expensive car. She watched him smile at her, he embraced her badness. His hand was between his legs and he was handling himself, a fiendish grin below half-lidded eyes.

“The man who owns this is very dangerous, I think.”

“Is he?”

“I’m holding it here as a favour. For insurance. It’s not just money at stake, he might kill us if we cave the hood in.”

“Well, you better be very slow and delicate with me then, yeah?”

He came to her and she spread her legs wider so he could get close. He stood over her, then brushed her hair back, touched her chin, slowly moved in to touch his lips to hers.

It made her insides tingle, being naked on the hood of this car while he took control of her with his mouth, still fully clothed. He parted his lips and let them brush over hers, softly moving them over her cheek and then down her neck while she lifted her head and let him explore. He kissed her collar and her chest very lightly, coming back up the other side of her neck. She moaned unexpectedly, taking herself by surprise and she opened her eyes wide at her own sudden interruption. She looked into his eyes as his lips went back over hers and she put her hands up to his face to keep him from wandering again. He parted her lips with his tongue and she took it into her, teased him back with her own tongue, sucked him deeper into her.

His hands came to her bare waist and it made her gasp. His touch tickled her, she felt so sensitive. He kept his mouth on hers and they kissed a good long while, their heads very slowly twisting against one another while they softly explored each other with their tongues.

She put her palms on his thighs, moved them up higher. She found it with her right hand, hard, bulging out the fabric of his jeans. She carefully undid the button of his pants while they kissed, then undid the zipper. She slid his pants and his boxers down, pulled his bottom lip with her mouth as she broke away. His cock was hard, hanging down and out toward her. She reached out and held it, caressed it.

“Is he a gangster?”

“Honestly, I think he might be a terrorist.”

“He might behead us.”

“Probably.”

She leaned forward very careful, mindful of her weight on the car, and she put her mouth over him, her lips pushing his foreskin back. He was hard but not rigid, still filling up her mouth and forcing her wide to accept it. He didn't push it ever, he'd always let her find her way around it when she went down on him. She cradled his balls, lifted them up and felt them settle in her cupped hand. She gently craned forward on him, forced him deeper into her mouth than she'd ever taken him. She felt her jaw open wide as it touched the back of her throat. She clenched her eyes shut and pushed further. She felt his glans stretch her throat out, felt her neck spread and that was all she could take. She knew he was too large to do this with but she was curious. Omar groaned and she felt his legs trembling. She pulled herself back and let his cock fall into her waiting hand, stroking him instantly. He was wet from her mouth and her hand slid on him easily. She was careful not to shift her weight on the Ferrari while she went up and down the end of him.

He pulled his shirt over his head and tossed it away, stood over her naked. Her sexy French mechanic. He put butterflies in her stomach standing over her in his masculine domain. His v-shaped silhouette, the cars and tires, machinery and tools surrounding him. His big hands were his tools of trade, and they went to her shoulders and guided her back. She lay herself carefully on the hood, listening for any protest from the old Italian car. She lay there, felt the cold against her back, felt it hardening her nipples. Omar looked her over, admiring her and she spread her legs for him, exposed herself to him.

He lowered himself over her so that he was face to face with her. She thought he was going to kiss her, she prepared herself, but he just supported himself over her. She felt his manhood on her, felt its weight and its heat against her belly. It was the only thing touching her. She saw in his face what he wanted.

She was laying carefully on the hood, her weight spread out on it, mostly supported on her heels on the concrete floor. Omar's only contact on the car his two big hands spread wide on either side of her over her shoulders. She took his cock in both her hands and she guided it between her legs. He lowered his hips and gently pushed himself into her with her help.

She moaned out, it felt so good. She wondered if she would ever get used to his size. She hoped not. There was something exciting, something electric every time he parted her, pried her open with that plump head, the pleasurable discomfort, the feel of its smooth surface, the foreskin peeling back off it as he pushed through.

She closed her eyes and gave every thought to the feeling between her legs, his hard cock, wet, pulsing, sinking deep inside her. The only contact with his body. When she opened her eyes she saw him staring into her watching her expression as he gave her pleasure.

Now he was pulling out, doing it as slowly as he had put it in. Her heart quickened, she didn't know how long she could take this dreadfully slow pace. She fought back the urge to thrust against him, to lock her heels around the small of his back and force him deep and hard inside her. She forced patience on herself, she breathed slowly, tried pacing it with his gentle motion. She held his eyes, let him torture her with this. In he went, slow, then dragged it back out again. She concentrated on that isolated contact. She could put her hands on his chest, claw at him, but she didn't. Her heart pounded in her chest, she wanted to explode on him, to buck against him, grind against him. Fuck, this was her idea. Laying on this museum piece to tease him, force him to behave a way she didn't even want.

Slowly in, slowly out again, she gasped as he went. They were barely moving, just his cock pushing in and pulling out. She sucked her lower lip into her mouth and she put her hands over her breasts. She couldn't help it anymore, she could go crazy if he didn't fuck her, she squeezed on him, gripped him with her insides. She could sense him trembling now too, could feel that his arms were shaking. His mouth opened and he squinted his eyes as she played back with him. He lowered his face to hers and she put her mouth over his and searched for his tongue. Then he was away again, smiling, sinking into her even more slowly now.

"Oh, fuck, Omar," she said.

"We have to be so careful," he said.

"I know," she said, looking in his eyes.

She kept her grip on him, let him do all the work as she lay flat on the hood. But she milked him with her muscles near her opening, squeezing and encouraging. He kept at it and she tried to remain calm, but eventually every time he pushed it into her she felt a tingle that went up her neck and across her scalp. She felt her heart pounding again. She'd lost what little control she'd managed until now. She felt like she might explode, or come apart at the seams. She was suddenly aware of her breaths, how they were coming in gasps.

"Please," she whispered.

He was on the verge of losing his resolve to. She could see it in his face, tell from the sweat on his skin, his breaths. He dipped his head again, tempting her to kiss him. She fell for it, moving to pull his lips to hers but he pulled away just as he entered her a little more deeply this time.

She put both her hands up on his chest, felt the tremble in his muscle as he struggled to be delicate with her. He quivered at her touch.

"Fuck me," she said, sliding her hands from his chest along his sides to squeeze at his waist, to pull him, urge him into her deeper. "I don't want it gentle."

She felt the heat from his body as he lowered himself, pushed deeper, came to touch her now, his hard belly against her soft flesh.

"Oh, God," she whispered into his ear. He went deeper and she squealed out. It drove him, he withdrew and gave a deep thrust and she pushed her hips against it wanting him to shove it in as deeply as it would go.

They heard a crumple from the hood, a hollow metallic complaint. Her eyes went wide and she saw his do the same. They stopped moving. She pulled her lips in and bit them, but a smile crept across her face gradually, pulling them up over her teeth. She raised her eyebrows up very high and put her arms around the back of Omar's neck, said, "Uh-oh."

"Put your legs around me," he said. She pulled herself off the car with her arms, hugging herself to him, then brought her legs around his waist and squeezed herself against him with one foot wrapped around the other ankle.

"Oh, shit," she whimpered, feeling his cock pulled deeply inside her now. He pushed himself off the hood with his hands while she clung to him. He cupped his hands under her cheeks to support her and they turned sideways to get a look at the hood of the Ferrari. It didn't look damaged. He bent a little trying to see if the light reflected differently off the smooth red metal, gave away any sign of a dent or a dip they'd put in it.

"It's fine," he said, looking back at her.

She lifted her head to regard the car and he watched her. She inhaled then licked her lips and spit on the hood of the Ferrari. She could feel him laughing, his stomach shaking as he did, his cock sliding deeper into her.

“What are you doing?” he asked, his face frowning, puzzled.

“Fucking terrorist, yeah?” She put her lips over his again and pulled him closer to her, her arms tightening around his neck.

He broke away, looked in her eyes, their foreheads touching, he said, “You’re crazy, aren’t you?”

“Yeah,” she said, completely convinced. They were both laughing now.

Omar hugged her closer to him, trying to get out of his pants that were around his ankles. He had to lean himself back against a concrete pillar. Kate bit at his neck while she felt him kick his legs out of the pants. It felt so good, his struggle making his cock move in and out of her in unexpected ways.

“Unh, that feels so good,” she told him.

He got his legs free and walked her a few steps across the garage floor until she felt her back press up against the cold aluminum siding and instantly he was driving into her. She thrust her head back in ecstasy so hard she hit it on the metal and saw stars briefly. She put a hand up on her head and clutched it, “Ah, shit,” she said, rubbing where she’d knocked it. Omar continued to drive deeply into her. She was braced against the solid metal wall and each aggressive thrust he gave her buried that huge thing inside her, felt like her organs were being displaced, “Oh, my God, fuck me, that’s it,” she growled into his ear. He gave it to her harder and her nails raked across his back. She yelped out with each painful thrust, her voice echoing off the high metal walls like a chamber hall. “Fuck me!” she repeated.

He stopped, purposely trying to drive her mad. He kissed at her neck and his big hands went over her breasts. She put her hands over his wrists and she fucked him. He kept himself rigid for her and she bucked against him, feeling that huge cock grind against all her perfect spots. “Oh, God,” she said, “don’t move, I’m going to come.” He arched back and she felt him flex himself inside her, felt it swell even larger. His arms came back too, and he had her pinned to the wall with just his hips and his manhood.

“Oh, Omar,” she said and she put her palms up against his open hands. She bounced on him, swivelling and tilting and she felt it coming. She wrapped her hands around his thumbs, squeezed them tightly, used them like handles to lever her hips against him. Even his thumbs were big. His thumb was as big as her husband’s manhood she thought. That ruined it.

She pushed that thought away, felt her orgasm moving from her, getting fainter.

“No,” she gasped. She let his thumbs go and her hands lashed out to the sides looking for purchase, something to brace against so she could get that pleasure back, get herself over the edge. Her right hand found a metal utility box and she gripped it.

Her ears flooded with an enormous and shocking hydraulic sound. She opened her eyes and saw a car above them to the left coming down very slowly between two massive blue painted beams. Omar laughed. She’d pressed a button on the box and it operated some sort of hoist the car was on.

It was gone, that orgasm fading away just leaving her with the pounding in her ears and in her chest. The car came down next to them almost to the ground and Omar pressed the button to stop it. He walked with her still attached to his hips, his cock still buried in her, and came to the side of the car. It was some sort of Mercedes with big wheels, and it sat on these yellow arms that held it by the undercarriage. The yellow arms were attached to the two metal beams that ran up into the roof, that held the hydraulics. He sat her on a yellow arm and she steadied herself with a hand on the car’s tire.

He kissed her and she whimpered as he slowly slid himself out of her. He lifted her down so her feet were on the floor and then turned her around so the yellow arm was across her hips. She bent herself over it, exposed herself to him.

She felt pressure between her legs back there, then surprise at his big blunt end pushing into her anus. She gasped out. He spread her, sunk himself halfway up inside her, and her head came right back, her eyes rolling up with it. He was gentle with her, but he was so wet from fucking her, he was sliding in and out of her fairly easily. She heard him groan out now behind her, loving her tightness on him. She let herself fall forward, let her head hang down and surrendered herself to his invasion. She felt him moving in and out of her, stretching her back there, felt the different kind of pleasure. She looked down at her bare feet, held together, her knees slightly bent. She looked at the chipped polish on her toes, heard the rattle of a chain draped over the arm next to her clinking in harmony with his groans and thrusts. She started too, joined in with squeaky little yelps every time he pushed it into her. She put her hands out to steady herself, brace herself against his thrusts as she felt them get a little more forceful. They rested on a motor set in a stand in front of her, her fingers moving over the rough dirty edges trying to get a grip. Her other hand rested on the stand her fingers went around the handle of a long heavy ratchet.

Only three days ago there was a quite distinct possibility—it wasn't impossible—she could have taken this ratchet and smashed him over the head with it. Kept smashing his head and face until he was dead. Now here she was bent over a hoist in his garage taking his huge cock up her bottom and loving it. She was going to come from it.

She squeezed the hard metal things under her fingers, felt herself getting closer. Her squeaks got higher and louder, his grunts coming quicker. The chain's rattle was a constant now, the links jangling and beating against her knee.

"Yes, yes, yes," she cried out as she felt it come back to her, bigger now than even the first time. She cried out with his thrusts as she came, pulled so hard with her hands she moved the engine closer to her. Her eyes rolled back again, and she let out a long low animal sound as she rode out the enormous pleasure washing over her. She felt his cock slide right out of her and he dropped it on her back, felt it bounce there, then he thrust it between her soft cheeks.

A thick manly finger went up inside her and she cried out, her eyes were shocked open, wide and staring. A whole new wave crashed over her, threatening to pull her out to sea and drown her, make her disappear forever, her body never to be found. She yelled out louder than before, she wanted him to know his effect, wanted him to know the incredible victory he'd just won.

"Oh, God, Omar, Omar," she said, and still he slid that big thing between her jiggling cheeks and still that big finger worked its magic inside her. She let go with her hands and her body fell forward, she was draped across the metal bar looking at her dirty feet, feeling the grit on her soles. Finally he stopped, she heard him roar out, felt him splash his seed across her back hot and wet, felt it land in her hair, and run down her back and across her neck, saw it dripping from the points of her shoulders. He collapsed on her, she felt his warm heavy weight on her back. He lifted her from the hoist and he lowered her to the concrete floor and lay next to her, shoulder to shoulder.

She lay on the floor, sore between her legs, looked at the grease on her hands, the black smears on her flesh. She felt his semen on her, in her hair, felt the grit on her back, on her feet. She felt so alive and so dirty. She could feel the pulse in her neck, could feel the blood pumping life through her, the warm night breeze coming in through the open bay. She watched Omar laying next to her, heaving for breath, his beautiful body shining with sweat.

Mitch would give anything to know where she was, to know what she was doing right now. He just wanted to hear from her at the very least, he wanted to know she was safe. What had he done to her to deserve this?

He was looking off the edge of the apartment balcony, standing in the indigo light of nighttime, moonlit London. Cars hissed along Bedford's Walk, quiet rubber sounds trailing in the wake of wandering headlights. Laughter drifted up as a group of well-heeled pedestrians walked under the oak tree canopy, tipsy, and exuberant. Other happy lives so close to him but they seemed so very far away, out of reach, he was a million miles from them.

Kate was his little girl and she was breaking his heart. When he stood on the altar and he'd taken her hand and said, I do, it was the greatest day in his life. A companion was all he wanted. The rest of his life could fuck right off. He'd give it all up to be with her. But what had become of her? She wasn't the same person any more. Not his bad little Kate whom he'd tamed, got on the tracks, groomed and perfumed, not now. That girl would never leave him without saying a word, let him suffer like this. Didn't he give her everything that she'd wanted? He picked her up and saved her from that struggle, blessed her life with his own successes. Beyond those surface things, those trappings, his feelings for her went to his soul. She'd proven herself so many times, proven to him that they were meant to be.

He'd love to go down onto that street, walk with that group, disappear with them around the corner headed off to some pub or some club. Have fun, be normal. Feel the fresh air, the company of strangers. Get away from his problems. He needed her now more than ever. He had real disasters on the horizon, things she didn't even know about. He needed her next to him. He could go out but he might miss her call. Might miss her walking in that door.

Mitch went back into the apartment, slid the glass door behind him, choked out the sounds of other people's lives. Shut himself in to the theatre of his own personal tragedy. Props arranged around the stage: two empty whisky bottles, an open laptop urgently awaiting a sign of life, paperwork strewn about, notes from his lawyers, his briefcase upended into the corner of the messy couch, papers folded and crumpled, cigarettes in an ashtray...

Kate had been so grateful, so devoted to him. And it wasn't his money. He knew it wasn't his money. It was his love. No one would believe that if he told them. One look at her... She enjoyed—really enjoyed—the money, but she wasn't a gold digger. She was crafty he'd discovered, but her craft dealt with physical pleasures not with financial rewards. She could always trick some bloke into buying her something. But she'd found a bloke with money whom she could trick into letting her explore herself with other men. A man who had grown, ashamedly, to enjoy it. How could she do this to him—leave her perfect man? What more could he fucking do for her?

Kate needed help. That was what it came down to. She was the same Kate she always was but she'd got herself in trouble. She'd lost her way. It was his own damn fault. He broke her with his ridiculous blackmail game. He had to save her.

It was possible that she hadn't left him. It was possible that she was trying to save him. She was doing her own part to protect their family of two. She might not have left him at all, she could be out doing something terrible in an effort to save Mitch.

There were no options left. He righted his briefcase, dumped it so that it was empty then put it on the coffee table. He fished out a tiny, worn leather notebook from a pocket on the topside of the case. He flicked through it, found the number he was looking for and dialled it into his personal iPhone.

He hated to do it, but he needed help.

Maureen Mehrotra was sitting on the bed in the Chelsea Suite at the Baglioni wearing a blindfold and nothing else. The room was very quiet and she'd become aware of her own breathing. She wanted to get up and blow her nose but she knew he was going to come through that door any minute. She wanted to be seen sitting on the bed like this. She'd spent a little time perfecting the pose in the mirror and she didn't want him to miss it.

He would come in to the room through the door from the hall and the light would fall across her in the darkened room and light up her brown skin. She was on her knees in the centre of the king size bed and she had mussed the sheets artfully so she wouldn't seem plopped on to the striped, flat duvet. The second she heard the door she would arch her back and thrust out her chest, put her shoulders back. For now she had let herself relax, slump, get lost in the darkness of the blindfold. She could hear her heart beating now. Louder than her breathing. Pounding from anticipation and something else. Worry.

Derek had assured her on the phone that this investigation or whatever it was, was just a misunderstanding. That Mitch and he would deal with it and they would be back up and running in ten days tops. He said she should just enjoy her time off. The rest of the staff was in the dark. Even more than she. At least she got the benefit of talking to Derek; the benefit of his encouraging words. She couldn't even put her friends at ease. Had to keep this news to herself. If she even believed it. That was the problem. She couldn't shake the image of him running down those stairs in the atrium of the building. She and Mitch had been in the elevator together, watching him. He looked scared.

She'd come to the Baglioni dressed the part. Wearing her best suit, her best knock-off bag over her shoulder. She'd picked up the key at the counter from the concierge. Her heart pounding, thinking they'd ping her for what she was. The mistress of some wealthy man, some poor, misguided secretary taking it from her boss while he stepped out on his wife. That's what she was. She hated it, but she knew Derek loved her. She knew this was for real.

Then she'd explored the room. Felt what it would be like to be Derek's wife. Felt his luxury. She walked the black, marble tile floor, touched the soft fabrics, closed the velvet drapes, got herself a glass of water in a crystal glass, dumped it out into a hammered copper sink. She took her clothes off in the high-ceilinged room that felt like it belonged in a palace. It made her feel so special, so prized, so valuable. And when she stood and looked at her bare body in the tall standing mirror she'd never felt so sexual in her whole life. She had a beautiful, successful man who would go to these lengths just to touch her, kiss her, make love to her.

She heard the door click and she straightened. She sniffed one last time before her lover entered the room, cleared her throat quietly. She arched her back and thrust her bare breasts forward for him. Her blindfold lit up and while she couldn't see, she was aware of the light washing warmly over her naked skin, could tell that he had entered the room, his shadow crossing the fabric around her eyes, then the light was gone. He shut the door quietly.

Her nipples tightened with exhilaration. The thought that he might witness that, that he was watching her arousal spread got her more excited and she started to tremble. Was he watching her dark brown nipples harden, stretch from her body? Did it arouse him? Did he like to see the effect he had on her?

She could tell that he had moved close to her. The sound dampened on her right side. She waited to be touched.

His breath was warm on her neck and she lifted her chin, turned her head up for him. She felt his light kisses along the long tendons of her neck. She wanted to speak, wanted to hear his voice, but she knew he didn't like that.

His hands touched her, made her jump as they went over her shoulders and down the outside of her arms. They went across her middle and she felt her belly tremble. He explored her thighs, touching down to her knees. She tilted her hips, spread her legs slightly, ached for him to touch her there but he didn't. He was gone. Walking around the bed maybe.

She turned her head, tried to peek under the edge of the blindfold, but she couldn't see a thing. She felt him then, kneeling on the bed behind her. She turned her head, gave him her profile, hoped that he would take her lips with his.

His hands caressed her rump. They were warm and smooth and they went over the tops of her curved bottom around her hips and then under to the soft flesh of her cheeks. His right hand came in between and she moaned for him. Let him know that she wanted it. His fingers felt so good working through her, she could feel that she was wet, could hear the soft damp sounds as his fingers folded through her hot sex.

"Oh, Derek," she whispered.

"Have you seen my brother," he whispered to her.

"No," she whispered back. His finger found her centre and when she thought he might enter her, he didn't. Plunging past and out to the front where he went over her button, it made her tingle and gasp.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes, I'd tell you."

"Have you heard from him?"

"Ah, mmm, Derek, I haven't talked to him since Friday morning when he was—ahh—mmm, with the police."

His finger stroked her and his other hand caressed her bottom, explored her thighs. He paused a moment, and she thought he might stop. Then his finger slid itself inside her, gently parting her hot wet folds, and she sucked her lips into her mouth.

“What did he say to you?”

“Ah, he didn’t say anything. He went off with the detective, mmm, then the manager sent us home. I’ve only heard from you since—”

“What do you think he’s done?”

“I don’t know. He hasn’t sone anything, Derek, has he? I thought you said we—”

His free hand guided her forward and she bent for him. She got her hands out and lifted her rump to him, pushing her chest into the bed sheets. Her sex was open to him, lifted, her cheeks spread.

“Everything is fine. I’d just like to know what my brother is up to.”

Maureen couldn’t shake the feeling that everything was not fine. What had Mitch done? Did her Derek do something? If he had, it wouldn’t be likely that he’d have the nerve to meet his mistress in a hotel and make love to her. She heard his zipper being drawn down. She was excited. She couldn’t wait to feel him breach her, she loved that feeling. Loved that initial penetration, feeling how hard he was, how urgent he felt, how much he desired to be inside her.

His tip prodded at her sex. She felt it part her folds, his glans pushing into her.

“What do you think he could have done?” he asked her, and he slid himself into her all at once, painfully deep, it made her cry out.

“I don’t know Derek, ow.”

“Tell me,” he said as he began to ease himself in and out of her, slowly, deeply.

“Mm—he seems honest, Derek.”

His hand slapped at her haunch, a loud crack in the quiet room.

“Ah, oh, Derek, mmm... I don’t know.” He was persistent and steady, drawing himself all the way out and then plunging himself back in all the way until she felt his hips pad into her bottom.

He drew himself out, his tip clinging to her wet lips, whispered, “Could you find out?”

“What do you want me to do?”

He thrust himself inside her, hurt her, made her holler. He pounded her, her face pushing into the bed and she gripped handfuls of sheets and closed her eyes. He thrust hard, ten times, then slowed, stopped. His hand caressed her back.

“You tell me what you can do. Think about what you can do for us.”

She felt his cock fall out of her. His hands worked over her flesh and she liked to think of him above her, looking down at her liking what he saw and coddling her pretty soft flesh. He took his cock in his hand and she felt him probing again, felt his tip stroking her sex, sliding up a little high, then pushing forward. She opened her eyes. She’d never had a boy back there.

“Derek?” she said. She wasn’t going to tell him to stop. He was just a bit thicker than her other boyfriends had been. She wasn’t sure she could do this. “Be careful—”

He slid himself in regardless. She moaned a long low sound. It felt better than she’d expected. He pushed her apart with his girth and she liked the stretch she felt. “Oh, Derek.”

“And what do you think of that little slut wife of his?”

“Kate?” she asked, feeling very distant, very removed from the conversation.

“Kate,” he said. He drew himself out and pushed in again, deeper this time.

“I don’t know. She seems a bit, ah, o-odd...”

“I always wondered why he married that slag.” He got a rhythm going, short strokes, not too deep, shallow and steady.

“Ah, he loves her. He really loves her.”

“He does doesn’t he?”

“She’s the centre of his universe.”

“If I want to get Mitch I should go through Kate shouldn’t I?”

“Ah, oh—he would do anything for her...”

“Yes, he would. I get it. I’m sure she gives him a great shagging.”

“I think they get a little—f-freaky.”

“I think they do too. Freakier than us?” he said and slapped her across her rump.

“No, Derek.”

“I think they do. Much freakier. You know that little slut couldn’t carry a baby,” he said and he was getting quicker, deeper.

“N-no.”

He picked up the pace, pounding her now, said, “She’s taken so many different cocks, so many loads up her dirty snatch that her womb is polluted.”

“Oh, Derek.”

“She couldn’t give my little brother a child.”

“Mmm, he’s, ah, she’s everything to him.”

He thrust into her urgently, she knew he was going to come. She wanted him to, wanted to feel him let loose inside her. She wondered if maybe, for someone who didn’t like Kate, he sure seemed to consider her a lot.

He roared out, erupted inside her. She felt him splashing and squirting into her body and she loved it, she moaned out his name and he squeezed her waist, buried himself deep into her.

If he wanted someone to be the centre of his universe she would do anything, everything, to prove herself to him.

Tuesday morning, bright and early, Kate and Omar stopped at a cafe in Frontignan and picked up coffee for everyone. They’d left the apartment at 6A.M. in his M3 to meet the convoy at the garage. Kate was nervous. She was going away with Omar but he wasn’t alone. It was not going to be just the two of them traveling through France to Italy. She wasn’t sure what to expect from these guys he worked with.

When they pulled into the parking area at Frontec, she saw his race crew was already there, standing around in the low morning light, laughing and smoking. She wondered how they were going to receive the news that she was coming along.

“So, come on, you can come and meet them,” Omar said, cranking the hand brake and smiling at her under his sunglasses. She gave him a brave face and nodded as he got out and went around to the trunk. She undid the seatbelt and watched them, they were shouting a greeting to him, talking loudly in French. Some had noticed her in there and she could see two of them, looking in to the car at who had come with him. Kate adjusted her top, straightened it, as she opened the door to get out. She was wearing the exact same thing as yesterday but she'd got a clean bra and had put on some panties.

Omar brought the coffees out of the trunk in a cardboard box that the cafe had given him. The men were putting their hands in the box and pulling out the tall, steaming paper cups. She walked to the group putting her sunglasses up on her head, she watched each of them in turn raise their faces and watch her come to them. Omar was talking to them in French, probably explaining the situation. They were listening but their faces were all turned to her. It made her feel uncomfortable. They were expressionless, she could feel all their eyes moving over her, looking at every part of her. One at the back turned to spit in the grass.

Omar would be explaining that he was bringing Kate along—little whore, they would all think—that he was now coming along in a second car, not traveling with them, that he had booked a second room at the resort where they were staying. They would think she was an interloper, a distraction from what they had to do. She knew she was too. This was probably a big mistake. But every time in the last three days that she had caught her reflection in the mirror and asked herself what on fucking earth she was doing, mirror-Kate turned away and didn't answer her. Of course it was tragically wrong, of course she was out of her mind, but something about it felt so good.

The slightest jostle could break this spell, wake her up and make her confront herself. She knew if she stopped her mind from racing just one moment and considered Mitch, what her absence might do to him, she would run right back to him. So she kept moving, exploring. Every minute she spent with Omar was a curiosity being sated, passions being teased; right now it had her on fire and she wanted just a bit more heat. She could stand it a bit more yet.

Omar turned and introduced her to them in English. She was a bit overwhelmed, some shook her hand, others nodded. There was an Herve, a Mohammed, Bertrand maybe, she heard them all but had forgotten them right away. There was a lot of masculine energy in the group, they were hairy and strong, their eyes regarded her strangely and none of them spoke her language. And these guys didn't work for Omar, weren't employees at Frontec, they were equals in many ways to Omar when it came to the team, though he was number one on the crew. Would they see her intrusion as a weakness in Omar?

Omar had his back to her now and was in French again. He was going over details with them, she heard a lot of numbers being said, those she recognized. Probably budgets or maybe Highway numbers, she wasn't sure. Could be anything. Most Likely money, he'd been talking about the budget a lot.

She looked down at her sneakered feet, the cheap canvas shoes standing in the gravel. She played with a stone with her toes, her arms folded under her breasts. They were still going on in French, some of the other guys giving their opinion now. She slipped away from him and went back to the BMW. She opened the door and got her coffee from the holder, leaned against the car and sipped it while she watched them plan their day.

She heard the motorcycle before she saw it. A loud one, bright red, the rider slung low over it as it sped down the quiet street, coming in fast off the highway. He leaned into the corner, getting too low she thought, and he whipped around it and came right into the parking lot. One of the race crew stepped away and challenged him, like he was going to wrestle rider and bike together. The bike went right to him, stopping with the wheel right between his legs. He grabbed the bike by the handlebars as the rider jumped off. The rest of the group were laughing now.

The rider took his helmet off and she saw it was a guy. With his slight build she couldn't be sure. He had a tan complexion and long dark hair. She realized he must be the driver. He clasped hands with some of the guys and with Omar and they were all talking amongst themselves in their language. The man who challenged him wheeled his bike into the garage for him.

Omar was walking backwards toward her now and she got off the door and went around to the passenger side.

"Hey, so we are ready?" he asked her.

"Yeah," she said and she opened the door.

They got in and closed the doors and he fired up the car he loved, revved it for the crew.

"You think they're mad?"

"Who?"

"The crew. Mad I'm coming."

"No, why?"

"None of them are bringing anyone. Why are you bringing me?"

"Fuck them. You have to come with me. This might be our only chance. I can't cancel the race and I can't let you get away. This is the way it has to be, no?”

“Yeah,” she said, settled back into the leather.

The crew loaded into the two trucks with tools and parts and the pickup with the trailer, black race car on the trailer hooked on the back. They got themselves onto the road, all three trucks ahead of them. Kate had both hands wrapped around the hot coffee, looking up at the fat back tires and big wide spoiler of the fearsome race car as it loomed above.

On Monday Kiley went to work like nothing had happened. The day was uneventful and she made four sales calls, went to lunch with an eye surgeon from Chicago General and put most of what happened on the weekend out of her mind. On Monday night she stayed in and ordered Chinese food, closed the blinds and pretended the outside world wasn't there.

On Tuesday morning there was a message on her desk to talk to Anne Stevenson from Human Resources. She knew it was trouble. She sat down at her desk and tried to make herself busy and avoid what she had been summoned to do. She felt like her face was flush, she felt like she was blazing red, and she knew it was big trouble whatever it was. She got herself to the bathroom and splashed some cold water on her face and looked at her reflection in the mirror. She looked terrified. She straightened the collar on her shirt, tucked in and buttoned her jacket. She went in her purse and got some makeup on her face and tried to look presentable. She took three deep breaths and tried to slow her heart rate down. When she thought she was ready she got her things together and went to the fourth floor where Human Resources was located.

The office was non-descript. Small and cheaply appointed, it reminded her of a doctor's waiting room. She went to the counter and talked to the young guy who was sitting there with a headset on. She told him who she was and he told her that they were expecting her and to just have a seat for a moment. She sat down on one of the tweed covered metal chairs, heard it squeak under her and she tried to sort through some magazines and see if there was something to pretend to flip through. Something that could at least make her look like she wasn't so frightened. There was nothing for her to read and she put her hands together and leaned forward and touched her forehead to her thumbs.

"Kiley?" she heard someone say and she looked up. It was Anne Stevenson, the same woman that had hired her three years ago. She was a pleasant looking woman but also very professional and could appear intimidating at times with her stern brow and her sharp nose. Kiley smiled and lifted her eyebrows and got up and walked to her but Anne turned and Kiley followed her down the hall where she was escorted to a small meeting room. There were two other people already seated at the oval table. One she didn't know and the other was a man she recognized from the legal department. She forgot his name, she thought it might be Mark. He had dark hair parted to the side and a face that looked like it perhaps had never laughed.

“Have a seat, Kiley,” Anne said. Kiley sat down at the table across from the three of them and put her hands together and tried to look as pleasant as she could. Anne introduced the other two sitting at the table to her. The one she didn't recognize was another executive from HR and the lawyer was Martin something. Not Mark.

She nodded to them afraid to actually speak, afraid they would hear the tremble she knew would be in her voice. She had no idea what this could be but whatever it was it seemed like it was going to be huge. What had Jay done?

Anne didn't tell her what the other two people at the table were sitting there for, she just began her speech.

“Kiley, you are familiar of course with Jay Shaker. He is a surgeon and he is a customer of yours. We spoke with him yesterday. We met with him. He has canceled his account with you. He wants to remain at the company but he requested a different representative to deal with. While he has made no allegations against you, when pressed at the meeting he did allude to some indiscretions on your part. We are meeting with you to make sure that there is no basis for what he is saying. While we have to take seriously his claim we understand that he has made no specific complaint. Our legal department has suggested that we suspend you for two weeks while we investigate the matter.

Kiley could feel herself go white. Felt her life drain from her. She felt very lightheaded and she struggled to maintain her composure. This job was everything to her, it was all that she had. Without this job she couldn't even be in America anymore. She knew they must know that. How could anyone do this to her? But she felt like there was nothing she could say. She wasn't the kind of person to defend herself—to lie about her actions. She was guilty, her intent was no harm but her actions still were not right. She had thought about that, what she had done and what it could mean to someone else. She knew that if she had been a man and done that to a female doctor the consequences would be enormous. But she was just a girl who had made a mistake, she wasn't some predator. She thought she felt something for Jay. She thought that he mattered to her. She thought that she mattered to him. She couldn't have been more wrong because now he had destroyed her. That man that had everything took away all that she had. But that didn't change the fact that there was no argument that she could make. Nothing she could say in her defence. She had done something wrong and now they were going to make her pay for it. Pay far more than what it should cost.

"I don't know what to say," she started but she could hear the tremble in her voice and it shut her up.

Martin, the lawyer, spoke. He said, "Kiley there is no reason for you to say anything at this point, I think it is best if you go home for the day and we will be in touch."

"You don't want to hear my explanation or my version of what he might have said?"

Martin said, "No, it is not us that will be doing the review you should go home and someone else will be in touch with you to talk to you about what has happened. You might want to seek your own representation before that meeting but I do not think that we should discuss the matter further here other than the details of your suspension. Do you have any questions about the suspension?"

"No," she said, it was very quiet and Martin asked her to repeat it and she said, No, again louder. She looked down at her hands on the conference table and saw them shaking. She looked up at the faces across from her and saw three people that would not reach out and put their hands over hers and try to make her feel better. These were three professional and unfriendly faces.

"So I should just go home then?" she said.

Anne said, "Yes, Kiley you should just go home, someone will be in touch. If there's nothing to worry about then you don't need to be worried." Kiley thought it was meant to reassure her but she knew that something had happened and it was her fault. She just couldn't believe that it was so bad that Jay would make this happen. She stood up and looked at them hoping someone would say something before she left but they only looked at her blankly.

She thought back to the day that she last sat in this room. It was the day that she filled out her paperwork for her employment and she remembered what a great day that was. How much hope she had for the future and how proud she was to have made such a change in her life. She didn't come from a place that produced people who made it this far. Who made it out of their Council and got to America and sign paperwork for a job that paid her a lot of money and gave her a lot of responsibility. That was a great day and she had phoned her mom and she called her brothers and she could hear how happy their voices were. She could hear the joy from them and hear how proud they were through the phone. How had it come to this? She was not that kind of person. She never got in trouble. She was good, she was kind, and she was caring. She did her job well. How did someone so diligent end up in front of these three uncaring faces?

She turned her back to them and left the room, stubbing her toe on the chair as she stumbled out. She walked down the hall to the elevators and had to support herself to stop from falling. She was dizzy, she was overwhelmed, and she couldn't believe this was happening to her. She pressed the down arrow and put her hand up on the aluminum plate to steady herself. She looked at her hand spread out on the metal, the streak that her fingerprints had left there from her sweaty palms. She was trembling, she could feel it in her jaw, she could hear her teeth chattering against each other.

What was she going to do? If there was an investigation would it not turn out the truth? Jay seemed like the kind of guy who if pressed would tell them everything—his version of the things that happened. She got drunk in his hot tub. She was naked and then to top it all off she went to his apartment and she ended up putting her hands down his pants and kissing him when maybe he didn't want her to do that. But how would she know that he didn't want her to if she didn't try. She wasn't some gold-digger who was after his money, who just went after him because he was some rich doctor. She could've done that at any point at any time during the last few years with him, why would she do it now? She didn't think of him that way. How could he think she was like that? What the fuck was wrong with Jay? Her hand spread on the elevator, clenched into a fist and she punched the array of buttons.

Brody Dixon kicked down over sixty-five front doors when he was a Ranger serving in Iraq. Probably wouldn't need to today since he made a copy of Omar's key the last time he had to get in to the apartment.

That time five months ago he was instructed to be discreet. Today's visit was a matter of urgency. Today's mission was time-sensitive. He looked through the windows of the Range Rover parked outside of Omar's apartment. They were liquid black and he just saw himself in them. He got all he needed from that vehicle already anyway he figured, didn't need to gain access. Too much trouble.

It was one-thirty in the afternoon on a workday but Omar's neighbours were out on the patio drinking beer. They were eyeballing him. Six twenty-year old men, unshaven, track pants, and undershirts. He made his way up to the front door, hoping the key worked.

He got to the door put his gloved hand on the handle and cranked the key. He shoved his bodyweight against it in case the key didn't work, perhaps he could still just muscle his way through. It unlocked and he was in the apartment in a second, the door closed behind him letting his eyes get adjusted to the dim room.

He had no time to arrange for a pistol since he got to France this morning but he didn't think he'd need one. This was pretty straightforward. He'd stopped at a hardware store in Montpellier and bought a hammer and he pulled it out from the small of his back where it was tucked into his waistband.

The apartment was perfectly still, perfectly quiet. He unhinged his jaw and took another moment to listen. No sounds from anywhere in the apartment. He could hear the guys out on the patio laughing and arguing drunkenly, shouting, slurring their French. He stepped to the bedroom and pushed the door open with the hammer. It was empty. He went and checked the bathroom and then the other room and felt the place was clear.

Brody went to the back of the apartment, wanted to start there and work clockwise through the sparse place, find some evidence of her. So in the bathroom he tipped over the waste basket with the hammer and then used the claw to sort through the items spilled on the linoleum. The last time he was here he took photos of everything before he moved it so he could get it back in place when he was done but he was free to mess about today, it might be good for this Lothario to know someone had been here. He pulled out four filled up condoms—he'd been busy—an empty toothbrush package, someone had bought a new one. He looked up at the sink. There were no toothbrushes. The rest of the stuff was just dirty trash, so he went back to the sink, curious now. No toothbrushes, no toiletries of any kind. He went right to the bedroom and checked the dresser. Underwear and sock drawer looked empty. Unless he only had two pairs of underwear in service. Had they taken off? Did they know he might be coming?

In the kitchen he found some empty shopping bags. He dumped them out looking into the living area as he did. The computer was gone. The bags gave up some paper receipts onto the kitchen counter and he looked through them. Women's clothing, pants and shirts and lingerie, women's toiletries, toothbrush, toothpaste, feminine products.

Her Rover was out front but the M3 was gone. None of the items purchased and brought home in these bags are here, Omar's things packed up as well. They didn't want to make this easy for him, did they?

When the elevator doors opened and Kiley stepped out into the underground parking she remembered she left her keys in her desk. She thought a moment if she could just leave and come back later when they were closed. Sneak upstairs and grab her keys when no one else was there. It was stupid. Her apartment key was there, everything; what she going to do, sit in a Denny's for eight hours and wait until the coast was clear? She looked up through the concrete ceiling, imagining all the people bustling up there on the fifth floor she might run into. She started to cry. A little bit, one stream from her left eye, but she brushed it away and sniffed. She stabbed her finger for the elevator and waited for it to come back down.

She rode it up readying herself to meet her colleagues. Did any of them know of this yet? Some might. No, some of them definitely would. God, how could she face them?

The doors slid open onto the sales floor and she strode as confidently as she could making her way straight for her office. She could feel the bounce of her hair and it gave her strength, it made her feel a little less meek.

She got into her office without running into anyone and she went around to her desk. Everything on her desk was as she left it. She looked at her computer screen, her calendar left open in a window there, all her pending appointments in the next two weeks. What would happen to those? Who would take care of her customers? What would her customers think when they were met with some surrogate? She felt so ashamed. Another tear streamed down her cheek and she flicked it away with her finger and sniffled again. What would everyone think of her absence?

She opened the top drawer of her desk and grabbed her keys. She looked at them, the leather fob with the Mercedes logo. She would have to give up that car. She loved that car. It had meant so much to her when she qualified for the lease. That was a really big day. Just a stupid car that cost her too much but it stood for something bigger.

“Going out for lunch?” Ida asked her.

Kiley looked up, startled, saw her standing in the doorway with a pen and notepad in her hand. Ida was a secretary from the other end of the sales floor and she would take lunch orders this time of day if Kiley was in the office.

Kiley looked to the keys in her own hand. She said, “No, no, I am...” Then she realized she wouldn't be placing a lunch order with her friend. Most likely never again. She put her keys in her pocket.

She said, “No, just not hungry,” her voice got quieter as she tried not to let it break. “Thanks though, Ida,” she said, and picked up some things from her desk she didn't even need, just trying to look busy.

“Are you okay?” Ida asked her.

“Oh yeah, I think. Yeah, just going to go out for a bit, you know.”

Ida stepped into her office as another tear started.

“Kiley, what's wrong?”

“Oh, nothing, it's nothing really,” and she tried to get past her, she just wanted to be gone.

Ida held her arm, she said, “Kiley, are you crying?”

“No, don't be silly,” she said as fresh tears went down both cheeks and she lowered her head and pulled her arm from Ida. She was sobbing as she left, loud enough for her to hear. This was how rumours started. And once this one caught fire how would Ida's report to the others about what she saw paint everyone's opinion?

Did her leaving in a blubbering mess mean she was guilty or would they all think she was a victim? Hard to say, she thought as she ran down the stairs to the parking, crying as she went. Her tears came with laughter at that ridiculous thought. She was crying and laughing as she made her way to her silver C-class. It still could go either way: She was pretty, so she was a slut and deserved it, but she was also a genuinely nice person so she could've been taken advantage of. It could be pretty evenly split.

She was laughing through her tears as she slammed herself into the car. She beat on the horn five or six times and shouted out to the interior as she did it, yelling along with her vehicle as she cried. She might have gone completely mad.

In the afternoon, somewhere along the A8 near Cagnes-sur-Mer, Kate had to pee so badly that she couldn't even think straight. Omar thought it was funny and he had been saying he would pull off soon. It had to be now or there was going to be an accident. She kept her eyes to the side of the road not even enjoying the scenery anymore. She was checking pictograms looking for an Aire-de-service as Omar called it.

“Oi, there,” she said to him when she read the sign as they passed it.

Omar didn't say anything, face blank as if he hadn't heard her. He headed straight, one arm draped over the top of the steering wheel.

“Omar?”

He went past it.

“Jesus, Omar, I have to pee, I'm not joking!”

He swerved at the last moment, driving across the lines, coming very near the guard rail that split the exit from the highway.

“You asshole,” she laughed at him, watched him smiling, his eyes still on the road.

He drove into the rest area, a big Total gas station on one side and a huge Autogrill right next to it. He pulled up to the main building to let her out and told her to find him at the gas station when she was done. She grabbed her purse and got out.

The Autogrill looked like three Swiss chalets mashed together with their tall peaked A-frame roofs and Tudor stylings. It was an absolutely beautiful summer day out and the place was packed.

She went in and was desperate to find the loo. She saw an arrow and followed it, looking in at the café as she passed. They stopped at a McDrive about two hours ago but she really would have loved a cappuccino and a cornetto right about now.

The bathrooms were down a long busy hall, she smiled at the attendant as she went in, absolutely bursting. She closed herself in the stall and got herself on the bowl just in time.

This was such an odd experience. Everything seemed so new and exciting, even if it wasn't ideal. She loved being with Omar, even just sitting in the car with him. She didn't know how it was going to work out once they were in Florence and his guy friends were about. The whole thing gave her a funny, hard feeling in the pit of her stomach, made her nervous. She loved it.

“Oh, no, fuck,” she said as she cleaned up. She saw that her period had come. Her shoulders slumped. Three days early.

“Shit,” she said, going through her purse and looking for a tampon. The fucking timing was unreal. She got herself together, threw the wrapper into her purse and grabbed some coins from the bottom of her bag. She washed up then dropped the coins in the basket for the attendant as she left. She squeezed through the crowds to get back, cutting through the shop and walking down the aisles of provolone and olive oil and preserved meats, to come out on the other side, back into the crowd by the café.

She thought to go in and stopped herself. There was no more cash in her wallet. She'd given the last of the coins to the attendant. She didn't have enough money to even buy a coffee and a pastry. It felt a little scary. She could use a card but she wouldn't. She didn't want to exist right now. She felt like someone else. And if she swiped that card she would be Kate Sutton again, and her loving husband would see where she was, pinpoint her on a map. She thought of him watching his computer waiting for a sign from her, refreshing his screen, looking for something that would tell him where she was. She felt her hands start to shake.

She turned from the café, that knot in her stomach tightening. She got out in the sunlight in the fresh air and she looked frantically for Omar. Just needed to see him right now. She saw the bright blue roof crawling along the crowded parking and she walked out quickly to meet him. She jumped in the car when he stopped for her.

“You okay now?” he asked her.

“Yeah,” she said. She swiped at her face and felt a tear, wet on her hand. She sniffled, embarrassed, surprised, and she put her seatbelt on, avoiding Omar.

“What's wrong, what happened?”

“Nothing,” she said. “I'm fine. I'm fine.”

They weren't moving, sitting at a standstill in the busy parking. He wasn't looking away from her.

She looked over, said, “What?”

She felt urgent that things get moving, she couldn't be still right now.

“Nothing, let's just go.”

She turned to him, she didn't know what to say to get him going. “I just... My period came early,” she said. “I'm... I'm disappointed is all.”

Someone honked behind them and he got them going in first gear.

“Oh,” he said.

She felt better already, felt better moving away.

“That's not a problem, is it?” he said.

“I'm not really at my sexiest am I?” she said as he got them up to speed, getting back on the highway.

“I think you are. I don't think this news has... affected me at all.”

“Well, we'll have to see how I feel,” she said quietly, looking out the window, catching a glimpse of the sea.

She watched the palm trees pass, the tall grass, it was a clear blue sky, one or two comically puffy clouds out there. She took a deep breath. She was okay.

She looked back to him and she reminded him, “There are lots of other things we can do to be intimate.”

“Yes, there are,” he said.

She put her left hand down and rested it on his thigh.

“Do you mean right now?” he asked, and she looked over at him and she smiled.

“It could be right now.” She moved her hand up and down his thigh. “Call me crazy,” she said, “but you don't strike me as the kind of guy who has never gotten a blowjob while he's driving before.”

He just smiled, chewing gum, and didn't answer. She undid her belt and shifted a bit in her seat. They were doing more than 120km an hour, racing along the highway. They weren't in public, closed in the little BMW, but somehow she felt like she was on display, visible to the taller vehicles they were rushing past. That was exciting.

She put her hand between his legs felt his huge thing behind his cotton pants. She reached up a little bit higher felt his flat stomach and then undid his fly with both hands. She reached in and felt him warm and soft and hairy and she pulled his penis out and let it hang from his fly and rest on the leather of his car seat. She admired it, turned her head slightly and watched her fingers running on it. It was soft, not hard at all, big and thick and wrinkled. She put her hand around it and she gently shook it, watched the floppy end wobble at the edge of her fist. She gave it a few strokes and looked at it in her hand.

“Lift your elbow,” she asked him, and he did, giving her room and she bent down putting her head between his legs.

“You just keep your eyes on the road, yeah?” she said into his lap as she took up his soft thing in her hand and pushed it past her lips. She worked it around in her mouth, kind of enjoying the soft feel of it. She sucked on his foreskin and she ran her tongue under it, trying to touch his glans. She heard him moan above her, a low animal sound against the loud hiss of the outside rushing past. She squeezed the base, plumping him up a bit so she could bob her head on him, stroke him with her lips.

“Ah, fuck,” she heard him say, and he shifted lower in his seat. He was getting harder as she pulled on it, trying to get as much of him outside of his fly as she could. She stroked him quickly with her hand, he was slippery from her mouth. She could hear that he liked that. She got her mouth around him again. He was bigger and harder now, and she had to open wider for him. She could really suck on him now, moving her head up and down on him. He got hard very swiftly, filling her mouth up with his size until she couldn’t open her teeth wide enough to get down his shaft. She got a hand on it, wrapped her fingers around him and worked it up and down with the motion of her head. God, he was so big her head was up at his chest, someone could see her if they slowed.

She could taste his semen in her mouth, knew he must be getting close. She pumped him harder, twisted her head with each stroke. She could feel his body stiffening and she knew she had him. She kept herself still and sucked on his fat head, and jerked him quickly with her hand. She couldn’t wait for him to erupt in her mouth, to feel him release himself inside her, to taste him. She liked his semen—he smelled like bleach but he tasted like olives and honey.

There was honking outside but she pushed it away. He was so close. She could feel his body moving around like he was doing something above her. The car swerved a bit, the honking persisted, and she felt distracted. She stopped her stroking and pulled her mouth off him, trying to cover his cock up with her hands while she looked out the window. They had caught up with the convoy, one of the crew, the one she thought might be Bertrand, had his head and arm out the window. He was beating the side of the truck they were in, and cheering encouragement, his dirty black hair whipping around him. She could see Herve trying to see as well, looking over his shoulder.

“Fucking hell, Omar,” she said and she dropped him, recoiling, getting herself out of their sight. He was laughing, but he got off the gas and he fell behind the convoy, finally tucking in behind the trailer again. She got back in the seat and did up her seatbelt.

“You’re a fucking asshole,” she said. She wasn’t laughing, she didn’t think it was funny at all. “No, really—that was really stupid, yeah.”

“Hey, come on,” he said, his voice low and deep, trying to calm her. “It was just funny—”

“No, it wasn’t. Not for me.”

She could see him shake his head from the corner of her eye.

“Isn’t that the kind of thing you like?” he asked her.

She didn’t answer. That was not the kind of thing she liked. To be made fun of. How could he think that was the same? How dare he even address the things she liked and didn’t like.

He made gestures to himself in the driver’s seat, moving his big hands on the steering wheel, like he was arguing a point in his head. He looked mad, incredulous that she would be mad at him. She knew he was now blaming her period on this rather than himself. His cock was sagging between his legs, still aroused but coming down to touch the leather again.

“You’re not going to put that thing away?” she said.

“You’re not going to finish what you started?”

“You’re going to have to wait until we’re at the resort for that now aren’t you?”

“That car there?” the mechanic asked him. Brody felt like he was being purposely difficult. His English was terrible and Brody knew almost no French.

Brody looked out slowly through the plate glass front window of Frontec Motorsports at his little shitty rented Renault he had picked up at the airport in Montpellier. “What? No. That’s a rental.”

The guy’s expression didn’t change, looking at him blankly, his eyes half-lidded, cigarette smoke spinning up past his eyes in a spiral. Brody said, "I have an Audi, I wanted it to, you know, go faster. You know, big wheels, exhaust..." He used his English with a bit of a French accent like that might help him get it.

The big dumb mechanic just looked down at the messy counter, his fat dirty hands spread wide across it on either side of a dog eared desk calendar. Every day had something scribbled on it.

"You know, it very... busy," he said, not dismissive, but not helpful.

"Hey, is Omar in?" Brody asked him.

The mechanic at least raised his eyebrows this time. He said, "Uh, non, he is...away...race"

"Ah, oh yeah, nice. Where's that?"

"Mugello," he said.

"I'll call in next week then," Brody said and he turned away from him, left him standing at the counter wondering what that was all about. He went and got in the Renault.

He looked into the bays, they were packed, and there were more cars in the parking probably waiting to be seen to. There were mechanics in there, fucking off, smoking and talking, taking it easy while the boss was away.

He started up the rental, put on his sunglasses and headed for the highway.

Kiley watched the happy people of Chicago strut along the sidewalk from behind the dirty window of the A-Line bus. They were stuck in the nighttime traffic, inching along, giving her a voyeur's wet dream; sitting behind glass watching with envy all these people you imagined had more than you did. They had more, they gave more. But Kiley was empty. She was done.

Her eyes wanted to close, but she wouldn't let them. She forced them open, she deserved this punishment. She walked this afternoon to the Fox and Hound which was not far from her apartment, somewhere along Hyde Park. She'd never been in it before, she just knew the sign. It reminded her of home. She probably left her apartment, absently headed to the pub, under some subconscious spell to ease some of her homesickness.

It looked like home but she soon found it wasn't really like home at all. Not the same people. Different voices. Chicago was her home until it wasn't. Today was that day. She felt out of place. So she had a few Newcastles at the bar and two guys bought her about sixty dollars of Jameson's and tried to cheer her up. But when she wasn't having it they rolled their eyes and moved on. Now she was sitting on this bus going God knows where.

She watched a young couple ahead, past the bench seat in front of her, sitting holding hands and looking at each other and smiling. She felt herself being watched—another man sitting on the opposite side was looking at her. Witness to her jealousy and her profound unhappiness. Did she look unfulfilled? Could you see that in a person? What must she look like right now?

She tried to see her reflection in the dirty bus glass. Could see her mane of hair looking a little ragged, a few stray tendrils. She ran her hands over them, tried to smooth them down but it didn't work. She must look a sullen mess.

She was wearing tight black denim capris with a rolled up cuff, her black loafers were scuffed and dirty—she didn't remember how they got that way. She probably looked to them all as defeated as she felt.

She stood up and pressed the tab that ran along the top of the window, let the bus driver know she wanted off. She wanted to walk the rest of the way. Get some fresh air. The demons were catching up with her in here.

She got down on the step in the middle of the bus and stepped off onto the street when the doors opened. She felt a little woozy and she leaned on a parked car for a moment to steady herself. The street was alive with activity, people out doing great things. Having fun with their friends, going on dates, having dinner, maybe some dancing. Fuck them all.

She stuffed her hands into the pockets of her black sweatshirt and merged in with these people who had better things to do. Her hand still ached from punching the elevator.

She walked a while with her head down only looking up when she came to cross streets looking for a sign. She found it finally and turned right, walking down a quiet street, residential, where the trees came over the sidewalk and you walked under their dark canopy.

No hard feelings, his note had said. He knew what he was going to do. He knew he was going to cancel his account with her. Had he no idea how that would sound to the people she knew? Didn't he know the trouble that could come? And then to tell them—off the record of course—that there was some indiscretion. People would think the worst.

But good. When they ask her she should tell them the truth. See how he likes it. He came in her hand in about fifteen seconds. He's a terrible kisser. His prick wasn't anything to brag about. Make them write all that down. If she were as big a piece of shit as Jay was she should tell them he started it. That he seduced her. Got her to take her clothes off in the hot tub, plied her with wine, invited her to his home on a Saturday night, made a move on her. He said, she said. If she wanted to she could ruin him. If she wanted to make a scene, wanted to lie to everyone, she could turn this around on him. Make him the one who suffers.

She stopped at the iron gate. She didn't know at what point she had decided to come here. Was it on the main street, the bus, the bar? Was it sitting home alone crying in her darkened apartment this afternoon? Did she get herself those stiff drinks to prepare herself for what she knew she desperately wanted to do?

She looked at the black box with the gold buttons. She could buzz him. He might answer maybe but she knew there was no way he'd let her in. She could see his lights on past the glass panels on either side of the big, glossy, black door. She could see movement in them, shadows made on the wall beyond that black door. He was home.

She was feeling fit. Thanks, Jay. Fit enough to get up his stupid gate. What was he so afraid of, hiding behind this iron barrier? It was only about six feet tall really. She put her hands up on the crossbar and pulled herself up. She put her foot out on the brick column that held the hinges of the gate and pushed herself up high enough to swing a leg over top.

Her momentum was a bit more than she expected and she tumbled right over and fell six feet and landed in a heap on the patio on the other side.

“Ah, fuck,” she moaned, laying on the flagstone. She didn't want to move, she thought she might have broken her collarbone. She sat up slowly, her eyes shut tight, her face scrunched up.

“Ahh,” she hissed and she ran her hand along her collar expecting to feel a jagged bone poking through the skin, maybe right through her sweatshirt. But she was fine. She lifted her shoulder, she could move it, she could rotate it. She was okay. There was blood on her hand though. She was bleeding somewhere.

She patted around. It was her forehead, her temple, just over her right eye. She pressed the fabric of her sweatshirt against it. Thank God it was black.

She got to her feet, saw that she had also torn the right knee of her pants. But still, she was all right. She was young, she would bounce right back. She walked to his front door a little unsteady, but she held her hand out and ran her fingertips along the boxwood shrubs and that helped her from falling over.

When she got to the door she didn't even hesitate. She pulled the sleeve of her sweatshirt over her fist and she pounded on the door. Not too hard, she didn't want to scare him off, so she held back as much as she could. As much as she could, considering how mad she really was. She saw the shadow move on the wall across from the door and knew he was coming. She stepped back and let him come.

His face appeared in the window and she watched his expression change from puzzlement to shock, saw that he wanted to get away from there, not deal with her, but she was going to make him answer to her. She said, "Jay, open the door." He stared back at her, his mouth slightly open, he looked worried.

"Jay, just open the door."

His shoulders slumped and he said, "Kiley I don't think you should be here."

"Jay, what are you afraid of, open the door."

"Kiley, what happened to your head?"

"Open the door you fucking coward. Afraid of a little girl?"

"You're bleeding."

"Do you have any idea what you have done?"

"I'm sorry Kiley, I have to protect myself."

"Protect yourself from what, Jay? Protect yourself from me? Little old me?"

"I have to follow a protocol, it's only to—"

"Well, you really got me. Now I've got nothing. I'll have to go back to England. I just want to understand why you would do this. You have everything and I have nothing. I have no one, no family. And you took the one thing in my life away because of why, Jay?"

“Why do you have to go back to England?” He opened the door only slightly, just enough that his face appeared in the crack between the door and the jamb. He kept it braced with his knee so he could close it quickly if she were to lunge at him.

“They want to understand why you cancelled on them. Cancelled on me. You told them I did something. Did you think they would ignore that? Do you think they're that stupid? Of course they want to know what exactly it is you're not telling them. They're going to make me pay for it.”

“I didn't want that, Kiley. I didn't want to tell them anything.”

“Well, you've made them think something happened. I don't know what you said but they know that I did something that wasn't right.”

“Just don't tell them anything. I will take back whatever I said.”

“It's too late Jay, it's too late for that.” She hadn't wanted it to happen but she felt it begin. She was going to cry. When she got here she felt pretty strong—she was quite sure that she could give him a piece of her mind and get away with this without embarrassing herself. But it wasn't going to happen. Her face struggled not to contort and that made it worse. Her eyes went wet with tears and she squinted, futilely struggling to stop it from happening, but that made them spill over her lids and roll down her cheeks. The feeling of the wet on her face broke her down. Her body shuddered as she felt herself begin to sob; she tried to push it away.

He could see it happen to her and she could see his face get upset, worried. She hoped he knew what a horrible thing he had done. He had ruined her.

“Kiley, I'm sorry. I thought I had to do it. I'm... I'm getting back together with Tess. I'm trying to. We might make it work, we've been talking. But I thought that anything that you might say could ruin it. Any allegation.”

“Jay, who do you think I am? What kind of person do you think I am. Why would I have said anything?”

“I don't know, Kiley, do you know how many times I've been sued? It's all the time. I mean literally all the time I'm dealing with it.”

“Why do you keep thinking I'm after your money?” she sobbed. “Why do you keep thinking that I want you in court? Why are you so afraid? How does your mind work?”

“Kiley, I...”

“You have dark thoughts for a guy who always wants everyone to think how great he is. You did this to me, I can't even explain how huge this is for me—you did it all because of some imaginary complaint? Worried that I would say something? You're the good guy right? Good old Jay? By the book, going to protect himself. You're a fucking asshole. You are, yeah. You know that? I was no harm.” She had to wipe her face again, the tears were rolling down her cheeks but she was keeping it going, she wasn't going to run away from him.

“Kiley, I'm sorry, I swear I'll call them, I'll take it back. I can't work with you, but I'm sorry, I said too much. I was mad and they pressed me...”

“Yeah, it's done Jay. You've left it so I can't recover. You protected yourself. I don't know what you're so afraid of. What kind of man can't just call me and talk to me. All that shit about being my friend, yeah? What happened to that?”

“God, Kiley, please... I know I should have stopped. I wanted to, I do like you, I should have done something to stop you I just didn't know how.”

“You did, but you didn't do it. If you could have used words, told me, I would have stopped. If you had let me know I wouldn't have gone on.”

“I couldn't...”

“Come on, Jay, you didn't really want me to stop. Face it, Mr Nice Guy. You just felt guilty once you came in my hand.”

“Kiley...” She heard his foot scrape on the brick, venturing out now, feeling braver.

“Stay in your house Jay, don't come out and don't touch me. I don't need you to make me feel better, I want you to know what you've done. That's all. You're a real good guy Jay. Real swell fella. I hope Tess takes you back, maybe you can fool her too, you selfish prick.” She turned on her heels, she felt good. She didn't lose it. She told him well. She saw it in his face, she knew he'd heard her, had fucked her up good.

She heaved a little as she got to the gate. One brief big sob, one big hoarse gasp for air. So now what? So now he knew. It didn't change anything. All that she's accomplished in the last few years have been washed away by one careless act. On her part, but he overreacted. She'd let him know, but with that over what was left? Where would she go from here?

She pulled on the gate but it just rattled. Oh, shit. She pushed but it didn't give. She shook it, it was definitely locked. She looked back at his door. It was closed and the lights were off now. She looked up at the crossbar of the gate. Her shoulder, her knee, and her forehead ached. She may have wrenched her back too, she would know in the morning.

She looked back at Jay's door again. How stupid was she going to look when she asked Jay to buzz her out of here?
