

The RENAISSANCE
CAYMAN
PROXY

6

An erotic hotwife suspense series by KT Morrison

Contents

1

2

3

4

5

Thanks

Other Books by KT Morrison

1

The Resort e San Piero was not quite what Kate had expected. When they'd travelled through Scarperia e San Piero she was taken with its charm. They were in Tuscany, Florence really, the Mugello Valley. The drive had been beautiful and she'd wished she was in better spirits to receive it.

Nonetheless driving through that ancient Medieval village on this stunning summer day in a little sports car with her handsome lover had given her a real thrill. The resort wasn't terrible, it was just a little small to be considered what she would call a resort. It was really just four great houses all built in a circle around a garden and possibly a pool there somewhere too. The houses were fairly faceless blocks of white stucco under terra cotta tile roofs. The grounds were well-maintained but when she'd gone with Omar to check in, the lobby was very small, a buffet and some dining tables and a big blue recycling bin were adjacent. The place was quiet, not even staff bustled about.

One of the houses was just for the team, the other house was probably a different race team, and the third and fourth houses held individual rooms where Omar had booked one separate from the team for Kate and him. They walked together back into the sunshine as she saw the other vehicles catch up to them coming up the gravel drive and stopping in the lane-way rather than in the parking area.

"The weather is so perfect," Omar said, "I hope it's like this on race day."

Omar got ahead of her and went and stood at the door of one of the trucks. He passed keys around for all the guys, and they were going on in French. Kate went and leaned against the car again and watched them all.

One of them, Mohammed she was pretty sure, was unloading bags, the guys' luggage she figured, mostly cheap gym bag looking things, no one here probably owned a suitcase. Omar slapped the door and walked back to her and the truck pulled around and went back down the drive. The other one followed as well and she watched the trailer with the black racer on board dip down the hill, the sun winking off the spoiler, and then it was gone.

"They've gone to put the gear at the track, and they're going to start getting set up," he said. "Let's get ourselves into the room." He grabbed the bags from the trunk of the M3 and he caught up with the guys that had stayed back to bring in the luggage. They parted ways in the garden the guys from the crew turning right to the residence they'd rented while Kate and Omar turned left and headed to the home that had their room. They went in and down a narrow hall and their room was the first one on the right. Omar unlocked the door and held it open for her and she went in. The suite was nice. It had a high ceiling that angled down to the window. The walls were painted in strange modern geometric designs in primary colours, and the ceiling was a dark stained wood. All the accents were kind of medieval looking, heavy wood furniture, curtain rods and accessories were all black iron with fleur-de-lis finials. The floor had heavy rugs over a terra cotta tile floor. They walked through and checked the place out, Kate opening the window over the bed to let some of that fresh summer air in. The kitchenette was all right, made better by a quaint fireplace set in the corner, but the bathroom was very small. Just a shower stall, no tub at all, but there was a bidet next to the toilet.

Omar put the bags next to the dresser in the sleeping area by the bed.

"Did you want to get cleaned up before we go?"

"Go where?" she asked.

"To the track. We have to set up the car, unpack all the gear."

"Oh," Kate said. She watched him go in the bathroom, heard him peeing in there. She didn't want to go to the track. She thought that the less time she spent with him right now the better it would be for the sake of the team. Omar should know that, should appreciate the fact that she recognized it and was wanting to give him his space.

When he came out she told him, "I don't think I should go, do you?"

"Why not?" he said, coming to her, putting his arms on her shoulders.

"I think the team might like to have your...undivided attention tonight."

He didn't say anything, kept his hands on her shoulders and she watched his face while he thought about it.

"I want you there," he said.

"I'll go sit by the pool. Do what you need to do, and I'll be here waiting for you when you get back. You can take me out, we'll go have some fun, yeah."

"You okay?" he asked her. He put his arms around her, slid them down her back, let them sit at her waist.

She looked in his eyes and nodded.

He wanted a better answer, wanted her to give herself over to him, but frankly she still wasn't very happy about what he'd done. She was okay, but he needed to let her know he was sorry. She was pretty sure he blamed her for the spat.

He kissed her forehead, said he'd be back in four or five hours. He grabbed his things, turned and left the room, off to join up with his crew.

Kate sat down at the edge of the bed. She thought he would have stayed a bit, maybe they could have finished what she'd started in the car. She wondered why he wouldn't want to get himself finished off after she'd had him so close to coming. He had a beautiful young voluptuous woman here who was looking to get him off and he ran away to be with his friends and a car.

*

Kate put the bag they'd packed up on the bed and looked through it. This place had a pool somewhere out back and she wasn't going to miss this beautiful day puttering around this tiny suite. She found the cheap swimsuit they'd bought at an Intermarche in Frontignan. A swimsuit at a supermarket. She pulled the tags off it and got herself undressed. She took it in to the bathroom with her and changed her tampon and then put the suit on. It was a two-piece and it wasn't the best fit, the bottoms were all right but the top had a little trouble covering her up. She worked with it, getting the underwire as low as it would go without revealing the dark of her aureolas. She got it to where she thought she looked presentable and grabbed a towel from the white wooden rack above the bidet.

She remembered seeing magazines and some books or something in the kitchenette out by the fireplace and she went to find something to bring out to the pool with her. There were flyers, and narrow cards with attractions for tourists, there were a few books there as well, paperbacks someone may have left before lined up on a narrow little bookshelf set into the wall between the fireplace and a window that looked out onto a garden. She stood a moment going through the things looking for something that might keep her attention for an hour or two. There was a tall card in between two books that she pulled out when she slid the book, interested in the name on the spine. The card had a picture of a sort of castle on the front. It said Villa del Trebbio—Wine Tasting. She flipped it over and there was a blurb on the history, the Medici family. She put the card down quickly. That was Mitch's thing. If they were here this is what they would do. They would go there, have a fine dinner, do their wine-tasting, Mitch would probably tell her all about this Medici family. She felt a dread come across her, felt like she had broke out in a sweat but she touched a hand to her forehead as she made her way to the door and she was dry as a bone. She felt better in the sunlight. She hadn't brought any sandals or flip-flops and she had just slipped her feet into the canvas sneakers she'd been wearing all day. She walked the stone path through the garden with her laces dragging, looked at the book she had brought, it was whatever she was holding when she had to get the hell out of there. Fucking Davinci Code. She'd already read it. But it was somehow fitting for the locale. A previous guest must have had the same notion and brought it with them.

She passed under a small arbour and came out to the pool area. You must be joking, she thought. It was a regular pool, with a concrete deck set in a lawn. She'd known a kid in the Council who had a pool like this. Same size and everything. She smiled and shook her head. At least there was no one there. She sat herself in a metal lounge on the deck and put her things down next to her. She looked around her, at the empty chairs, the well-manicured but quiet grounds. This was such a strange place.

God, this was all she had to do. All she could do. She didn't have a car, she didn't have money, she was stranded here. The sun felt nice on her though so she lay back in the chair, put her feet up and thought about having a nice nap out here. Her insides weren't feeling so great from her period, and the heat baking her seemed to ease it.

She didn't bring any sunscreen but it was getting later in the day, she'd probably be fine without it, she didn't usually burn. She lay for a while getting sleepy until she heard some voices. Male voices from the stucco block across from the one where she knew Omar's crew had rented. Deep voices, Italian, some laughter, breaking through the silence of the garden. Bottles clinking, then windows being opened, voices louder.

Then there they were, like flies on shit, faces at the windows, two men leaning by the sliding glass door, all watching her. She could hear them, their tone, talking about her, dirty things most likely, laughing. She felt very unsafe. These men were like Omar's crew, ones she wouldn't want to be left alone with. Her bikini felt even smaller than it was, felt like she was far too exposed. She sat up and gathered her things, slipped her feet into the sneakers. She got up and headed through the garden. Heard one of them bold enough to give her a whistle, his mate laughing for him, encouraging him.

In the room, she closed the door behind her and locked it, threw the book and the towel down on a chair. She sat on the edge of the bed and turned the small TV set on. Flicking through with the remote everything she found was in Italian and she clicked it off. There was nothing to do but wait for Omar to come back. She got herself into the middle of the queen size bed, brought her knees up and tried to fall asleep.

*

Omar watched Kate across the club, standing at the bar, lit up in flashes by the pulsing white strobe lights. Her perfect face, her white teeth winking in the intense light as she flirted with his driver, Prospero. The two of them were shoulder to shoulder at the busy bar and they took turns with each other, whispering into an ear, the other one laughing, throwing their heads back; forced into that intimacy by the deafening dance music. He watched Prospero's hands touch her arm while they talked, how he would lean in and entertain her with some thought and she would smile for him, bat those long, sexy lashes for him. She was wearing a black T-shirt, the neck scooped low, and a short black skirt that he'd bought her in Frontignan. She had showered and preened and she looked stunning even in her simple cotton outfit. Prospero was into her, he could tell, that little Spaniard would fuck her behind his back if he wasn't careful.

He watched Prospero with her, wearing his tight jeans and his nice suit jacket, flashing that expensive watch. Prospero had rich parents. He played with his hair a lot as he talked, shaking his long glossy locks out like a girl. Kate was enjoying him, he could see that twinkle in her eye.

How could Mitch ever stand this? Knowing how she fucks, how she loves it, how she takes it and gives it; how could you let her be with another man? How could you stand to even think of her doing those intimate things she did with you to another man? Allow her to enjoy another man's penis inside her, to take one in her anus, enjoy the taste of him coming in her mouth. How could Mitch stand knowing he wasn't enough for her? Even when you thought you had everything she needed, she still wasn't sated. What would it take to satisfy this woman?

Herve was trying to say something but Omar waved him off. Six of the crew had taken up this booth, they'd been here for hours now, the evening had started out so fun. He drained his glass, tipped it back and felt the ice cubes stinging on his lip. He looked for the server, couldn't see her anywhere again. At nine euros for a vodka and soda he was surprised this place didn't have better staff, ones who wouldn't let you sit too long with an empty hand.

He shook his head. The money from Mitch had run out. He put it all in the car, into gear, and now the last of it was spent on this race. There was so much riding on its outcome. He had to meet the right people here or he would be in trouble. The shop was doing better but they'd built that new bay, and what with the new hires his accountant had told him that he was surprisingly less profitable than he was last quarter, even two quarters ago. He had to make an impression this weekend.

Prospero took Kate by the hand and he led her out to the dance floor. She really was perfect. Petite, full figured; he watched her dance with his driver, her hands over her head, the bounce of her chest. His stomach went into a knot watching her. She was having a great time without him. Not a care in the world. Turning her back to Prospero now, pushing that plump bottom out to him, letting him push his hips into her. She could probably feel his cock against her flesh. He had to be hard. She was the sexiest thing he'd ever seen.

Prospero had his hands on her, running them down her sides as he pushed himself into her rump. Kate was watching her Spaniard over her shoulder. Not at her sexiest, she had said in the car this morning. Really, Kate? She should see herself from where he was sitting.

What had she got up to while he was away at the track this evening? She complained when he got back to the resort about some men who'd been watching her at the pool. She went out there and lay in the sun with that body of hers covered with a small bikini, surprised she attracted interest. She loved it, he was sure. Loved the attention. Did she lie to him? Could she have fucked one of them? Fucked him because she was bored, because Omar had to leave her alone while he went to work. Did she fuck all of them? He could see her on the lounge, her bikini pulled off, writhing in a shower of their come, as they stood over her stroking themselves. He slammed his glass down on the table, made Mohamed jump.

“Where the fuck is that server,” he hissed, looking around and over his shoulders.

Then Kate was next to him, squeezing into the booth. He felt her hot and sweaty next to him, worked herself up with another man.

“Having a good time out there?” he asked her.

She smiled at him, didn't answer. He saw her eyes regard him, she had measured his jealousy. And just like that he felt her take control. Now she was the one in charge. He felt small and weak and that he'd disappointed her.

She looked away, back at the dance floor and that made him mad. He grabbed her wrist firmly.

“Hey,” he yelled to her over the music. She didn't look over and he could feel her pulling her arm from his grip.

“I'm talking to you.” The others were watching him now. He was going to ask her where her boyfriend was but the waitress appeared. She looked at Kate, then down at her wrist where he held her tightly. He let her go. Threw his hands up in the air, said to the server, “Oh, where the fuck have you been?”

Kate got up and left the table, he watched her little figure pass over the dance floor, get swallowed up by the throng.

*

Omar was drunk. She'd never seen him drunk before. She didn't know where she was going but she knew that she had to be out of there. Away from that awful energy.

The dance floor was wild, vibrating with the sheer number of people bouncing on the floor. She squeezed her way through, pushing past hot bodies and groping hands. There had to be two hundred people out there all having a good time, getting lost in that thundering bass. The foyer was crowded too, no bouncers here tonight, just an open door, people coming and going as they pleased, some leaving with their drinks in their hand. The streets of Florence were filled with people tonight. A festival had the streets closed off and the tiny neighbourhood they were in was one packed party, everyone enjoying themselves.

She stopped at the open doors standing on the teeming sidewalk unsure of what she should do next. A cigarette seemed like the best idea right now and she went up to two young guys smoking and talking to each other a mile a minute.

“Hey,” she said. She smiled at them and she put her fingers in a V up to her lips acting like she was smoking. “Please,” she said giving them a pleasant, pleading face. She got her cigarette, a race between the two who could get her one first. Second place got his lighter out and he held a flame for her and she got it going after a few puffs. She thanked him and they both were gracious, pleading with her in Italian, waving her back to stay. She walked from them backwards giving them a big thankful smile. She said, “I don't speak Italian,” and she shrugged for them then disappeared into the people on the street.

The festival was loud, people were celebrating something in particular but she couldn't read the banners that were strung across the street. A lot of people were spinning sparklers in their hands and firecrackers were going off. Earlier when they had arrived at the club the sky above the medieval village was lit up with a beautiful fireworks display, bright sparks setting off and colourful trails sizzling down through the night.

There was a parade headed her way, she could see it coming, pushing the crowd apart on this narrow ancient street. Up front were four men out front of a carriage holding beams that supported it across their shoulders. They were dressed like squires or something else from the Middle Ages, tights and skirts and a tunic, and blue and grey squares with a fleur-de-lis embroidered on their chests. There was a papier-mâché figure seated in the elaborate gilded gold litter, dressed in ancient garb, holding one hand up, maybe in greeting, maybe in prayer. Perhaps a Saint, or one of those Medicis. She got up on the curb and watched it pass, ducking under streamers held out by young girls, the streamers attached to the roof of the shoulder carriage. More firecrackers went off and there were more people coming behind the litter, musicians who were part of the procession.

Kate ducked down an alley, between two low medieval stone buildings and made her way through the dark, headed for the people and the busy-ness she could see at the end of the cobblestone alleyway.

She got out to the other side and something made her look back. She swore she could see someone, just a black shape moving along the alley behind her. Was someone following her? She felt slightly alarmed. Like, had she not been quicker, someone could have grabbed her in that dark space and raped her.

Walking through that dangerous alley, cigarette in hand, by herself, brought back a sudden nostalgic rush through her that stopped her in her tracks. Young Kate. Kate on the prowl. Kate at eighteen, nineteen, twenty. Dangerous Kate. Box cutter, cigarettes, and a can of beer. Out every night, having fun, hurting, being hurt, fucking, getting fucked. A lifetime ago.

This night, was this who she would have been if she hadn't met and married Mitch? It wasn't better, just more alive, more dangerous. She could have been raped back there or could have fucked up the bloke who tried. She was in a fight with her stud boyfriend, she was flirting with a handsome Spanish race car driver. This whole world was just one crazy opportunity after another. A chance to discover your passion.

She found herself in a busy marketplace stuffed with stalls, people selling religious items, candles and Saints and whatnot, trinkets, scarves and jewelry, even olive oil and prosciutto. The cigarette was done, she got it down to the filter and she threw it in the gutter.

There were eyes on her again, she could feel them. She saw him, found him, the one thing still in all this late-night bustle. Prospero looking at her, standing in the market. She felt a tingle when he smiled.

She actually blushed. She couldn't believe it. But he'd really taken her by surprise. She lowered her head and smiled, submitting, not like Kate at all. She'd liked hanging with Prospero down at the bar. He was funny, or he seemed funny, his English wasn't great, but his accent was sexy as hell. Slim and elegant, dressed so finely. Was she lying to herself, telling herself that she didn't think of other men when she was with Omar? Maybe she would always think of other men.

When she looked up Prospero was still at the stall but he'd drawn a silk scarf hanging on the stall across his face. Covering himself as if he were spying on her. It made her smile again, bigger.

Kate turned and led him down the busy market. Her hips were working and she could feel his eyes on them, she wanted him to want her. She would stop and run her hand over things in the stall and each time she would see him do the same a few stalls back. But he was getting closer.

There was music getting louder up ahead, that strange Renaissance procession having gone around the village in a circle and now she was going to intersect it again. She wasn't sure at all where she was leading Prospero but she was curious to find out.

A big hand came out of the crowd, spread across her chest and stopped her dead. Her head came up slowly. It was Omar. He wasn't looking at her. His face was grim, looking out over the top of her head at the man who'd been following her. Omar must have wondered what they had been about to do, but she honestly didn't know.

Kate glanced over her shoulder saw Prospero smile and shrug, diminutive but still arrogant, and he turned right and headed out of the market. Nothing had happened, she didn't do anything, she wasn't going to apologize or even feel guilty. She looked at Omar blankly, indignant.

Omar took her wrist and pulled her through the market. Her shoe came off and she left it behind hobbling along on one bare foot now. Fuck him. Nothing happened. She wasn't his. They weren't a couple. She was married for Christ's sake. He pulled her roughly into an alley and threw her back up against a wall.

"Ow, Omar, for fuck's sake."

He put both hands around her neck and he crushed her. Her eyes went wide. She grabbed his wrists but he was so strong his control over her was complete. She couldn't break free, she couldn't swallow, speak or scream. His lips went over hers and he parted them forcefully with his tongue. Just as she faded to black he loosened his grip and her head pounded as the blood found its way back to her brain again.

He held her against the dirty wall with just one hand now. She grabbed his wrist with both her hands trying to ease some of the pressure. He was regarding her slowly, looking in her eyes. He was filled with hate, disgust.

His other hand went up under her skirt and grabbed a handful of her panties. He wrenched them down hard, very hard, taking three times before they tore free. She felt them cut into her, felt her flesh jiggle from his force. His big fingers were prodding and touching between her legs, she felt her tampon being pulled out of her and he threw it aside into the dark of the alley.

She heard his zipper being pulled down and she tried to shake her head, tell him to stop. She felt his cock, half hard, hanging between them, felt it hot against her thigh. She squeezed her legs together. She was shaking her head at him, a tear streamed out of an eye and she blinked it away.

His knee forced in between her legs and they came apart. She could see happy people walking, lit up by the festival lights, just a dozen feet away. His free hand gripped her roughly on her inner thigh just above her knee and he forced her other leg up, then out to the side held against the alley wall.

Her heart was pounding, she could see his chest heaving too. His cock was slapping against her inner thigh. She slid a hand down between them and she squeezed it, saw him tremble at her touch. She helped him find her hole, guided his tip between her legs while he moved his hips with her. He put his other hand over her mouth to silence her. She wasn't going to cry out. She wanted him.

He slammed himself into her hard. She wailed into his hand, blew a bubble from her nose. He strained, forcing himself into her. It burned, it throbbed, it hurt her so badly. She bit at his palm but her teeth couldn't get his flesh. He was punishing her, hurting her on purpose with his size. He wanted to remind her who was in charge here.

She heard wet belching, bubbling from her insides as he forced that big thing inside her. She slid her hands up his arms and over his back. She scratched him as he slid out, wanting him back inside her. She let him fuck her like that, let him regain his pride. She didn't fuck him back, let him do it to her. She explored it, felt the feeling behind it. She was being dominated, being taught a lesson; Omar wouldn't share her with anyone. He wasn't Mitch. He was an animal.

He was done in a minute. He exploded inside her, launching hot stream after stream, filling her up. His face was trembling before her. She wanted him to kiss her but she saw that anger in his face slowly change to shame. She'd like to tell him it was okay, she wanted him, but maybe this was better.

He slid himself out of her and released his hold on her throat. She slumped down the wall until her rump came to rest on her heels. She heaved for air, clutched at her throat, looked away from him.

His cock glistened, dark from her insides and he struggled to get it back in his pants, staining the front of them. He turned and walked out of the alley, left her there in the dirt with his semen leaking out of her. She was stunned. She hadn't been violated, she wanted him. But she still wanted him now. To stay. But he left her. Put his seed in her and dropped her to the dirt and left her to fend for herself.

She put her face in her hands, then smoothed her hair back, shook her head.

The alley darkened again, someone coming back in. Omar, with her shoe. He came to her, stood over her with his hand held out. She looked at him, smiled then took it, and he helped her up and walked her to the car.

Kiley held the Agrix Illinois Regional Sales Award, felt the solid weight of it in her hand—had to be about five pounds—then she hurtled it as hard as she could into the centre of her bookcase on the other side of the room. It exploded through the glass cabinet doors along the top and came apart in a twinkling splash of glass and cheap gold plastic. The square black base shot back at her, wobbling funny on its axis, took one funny bounce, and the corner scooped out a chunk of her flesh on her shin just below her kneecap.

“Ah, fuck,” she yelled and she went down hard. She grabbed the hunk of black plastic—why were those corners so sharp anyway—and she threw it at her desk and it knocked over the lamp and tumbled into her apartment window. The lamp landed on her files and they tipped over, knocking her Jakobsen-Mueller manuals over, each about four inches thick, and they toppled her laptop onto the floor.

She laughed; she was glad. Good. Fuck her computer. She grabbed the top of her lamp and knocked the shade from it, pulled the plug from the wall. Gnarl Barkley blared from her stereo and she knew she only had a few minutes before someone called the cops.

She swung the lamp around her, smashing her pictures on the wall, her shelves, her awards on the shelves stacked neatly between her books; she swung it wildly, cleared the things remaining on her desk right off onto the floor in one swipe. She went on like that, swinging the heavy base of the lamp—naked except for a cotton T-shirt, her hair wet and clinging to her from the shower—smashing the things that felt familiar to her, hurting their friendly faces. She was going to throw them out anyway, why not teach them a lesson about how fragile it all is?

In the end, heaving and out of breath, she pulled the plug on her stereo and the room went quiet. Crazy, indeed. Her feet were bleeding, cut from glass and sharp, smashed bits on the floor. Her shoulder and back ached from her tantrum, already wrecked from her tumble off Jay's gate.

She looked down at the floor and took inventory of her destruction. She was satisfied. She would like to cry but she knew the tears wouldn't come. She had cried all day and frankly smashing everything she owned had seemed to cheer her up a little.

On the floor, right between her feet, she noticed something looking back up at her. The severed porcelain head of a smiling, little orange and cream kitty. She got to her knees on the floor and picked it up and held it out to look at it. It was Fabulous. Literally Fabulous. That was the name of the little kitten she had when she was eight.

Her mom had mailed her this porcelain cat two years ago with a note—Doesn't this remind you of Fabulous? And it really did. But she was so embarrassed to display it she'd hidden it in the glass cupboard of her bookshelves. She wasn't done crying at all. The tears came again and she squeezed Fabulous' head in her hand and held it over her heart, looking up at the ceiling wishing she was home.

"God, shit," she cried out. Then she crawled around on her hands and knees until she found the rest of Fabulous. She'd been broken into five pieces. She gathered them up and went into her bathroom to her jewelry box. She had some Krazy Glue in there she bought when she pulled the gem off of one of her favourite earrings.

She pieced her cat back together, sniffing while she went. She never knew one could feel so homesick. She was so lonely it was overwhelming. She felt so alone. She desperately needed someone to put their arms around her, to squeeze her just a little and let her know everything was going to be all right. She wanted to see her mom, even her brothers. She wanted a tea and a Mars bar. Her mom's shepherd's pie. A pint at the pub. A night out with Kate. She wanted to talk to Mitch.

She left Fabulous to dry on her sink. She looked like she was going to be okay, maybe eight more lives left in her. Kiley went to her desk and picked up her laptop. She opened it and was relieved when the screen came on, showed her a grey Apple. It booted up fine.

She opened her browser, went to her travel folder, opened up her favourite travel site and booked the first flight to Heathrow. If these Jakobsen-Mueller fucks wanted to ask questions about her personal life they could just come to London. She was going home.

*

If she had to hear about the budget one more fucking time Kate was going to hurl. She could hear Omar's deep voice behind her, an octave lower than even the other gravelly men from his team. Talking in French about money. How they were going to pinch here, save there. If she picked up any French this week it would be about being cheap.

The budget was only fifty-thousand euros. She bought luggage last year that cost about that and she just put it on her credit card. No one said a thing. No one being Mitch. Push it away Kate, push it away.

She was sitting outside at a street side café on Viale Dante Alighieri in Scarperia e San Piero. The seating actually on the street, three planters separating them from the one-way traffic. The green painted iron table she was sitting on had a nasty wobble and every time one of the guys would get up to do something a coffee would spill over the edge of a cup. She'd stopped cleaning up. They were all away from the table, huddled behind her, going on in their language. Preparing themselves for this important breakfast meeting. She was enjoying the solitude.

The clanging of a church bell went off like a bomb above her, scared the shit out of her. She spilled her coffee. "Jesus Christ," she said and she wiped the table yet another time. It went off again, clang-clang, loud enough to shake the stone under her feet. She looked up at the old stucco tower across the narrow brick paved street, standing tall in the three-way intersection. It was ten in the morning, was this son of a bitch really going to go on like this ten times? She put her hands over her ears.

This was a big morning for Omar. This get-together over a coffee was a hundred times more important than the race on Saturday. This was entirely the reason he'd come here to Italy. They'd been invited to coffee by Valente Riva-Lucci, some oily tanned executive with pure white hair, who'd called this morning at eight. Omar was electrified; he was nervous, yet aggressive, he told Kate all about the guy, showed her online on his laptop. He was the F3 Euro-something-director, but more importantly he was the President of the Federation of racing jerkoffs. Whatever it was it was very important to Omar, and Omar made Kate come out, he said he needed her to sit with him.

*

The very rational part of Omar, the one that made the best decisions for him so far, told him he had to get away from Kate. He'd laid in bed this morning with her, his head pounding from the alcohol, and he'd been presented with an idea. How much would Mitch pay to get his wife back?

Then he turned to watch her sleep next to him. Her flawless face, troubled but passive, eyes closed, turned to him submissive and sweet. She had one arm up behind her head, sleeping on her forearm. She was bare, one large perfect breast above the sheet, her nipple tightened very slightly. His heart swelled for her. He could never give her up.

He watched her now over Herve's shoulder. Hands over her ears, scared of the big church sounds like a little kid. He'd fallen for her. It hurt him to think of her. She was going to make him crazy.

Kate turned her head and he saw her sweet face in profile while she watched the quiet traffic on the street. He'd had to have her by his side today. He couldn't bear to leave her alone. He wanted to be seen with her too. Wanted Valente Riva-Lucci to meet her, see her, know that this is the kind of woman that falls for Omar.

This was it. This meeting was why he'd spent the last of his money to come here. It was nothing really—it was friendly, just a coffee. But this man was important. And he was the one who called Omar. Nothing would come from today. Nothing tangible. But the intangible was tremendous. This was the first step on a path that would take him where he wanted to go.

Herve stopped mid-sentence and nodded with his chin to something behind Omar. Omar looked around behind him. Across the street, in the blue early morning shade, the doors opened on a pristine Alfa Romeo Spider, maybe a 1966. He saw the pure white hair on the tanned man getting out. They all took their seats.

Omar looked across at Kate. He hoped she understood how huge this was. He thought she did. Her face gave nothing away. She was bland, maybe uncaring. His heart tightened, afraid that she might not be sharing his excitement over this. He wanted that connection with her. He wanted a teammate, a partner. She looked around herself coolly. She was toxic. She was dangerous. He was afraid that he'd fallen in love with her.

3

Prospero had been furious that Omar had neglected to invite him to the meeting with Valente Riva-Lucci. Kate could see that he was still mad. Sitting in the cockpit of that dangerous looking black race car waving his arms around, helmet in hand, long hair shining in the sun. Omar and some of the others still around the car while Prospero complained about something with the car, unhappy about his last lap. Only it wasn't about the car, Kate could tell.

It was Thursday afternoon, two days before the race, and Omar and his crew had the track for a few hours to run some tests and make sure everything had travelled well. Kate sat in the stands, ten rows up, right across from the pit. She could see them all clearly, even make out their voices when the car wasn't around. She was the lone spectator in a stadium that held fifty thousand.

Prospero flung his helmet down on the asphalt, something plastic on it broke, something white, the size of a piece of gum, shot straight up over Omar. Mohammed moved around awkwardly on the other side of the car trying to chase down the helmet which seemed to still be bouncing around back there.

Omar shrugged, stayed cool. Prospero was gesturing now, both hands open, pointing down towards the wheels complaining about the handling or something. Omar spoke over his shoulder to one of his crew standing at a computer, they talked back and forth a bit. Omar went to the front wheels, his hands went over the metal that held the smooth fat tires to the glossy black body. He said something to Herve and he was under the car in a moment with a pouch of tools.

Prospero had missed a great meeting. It has gone well with the man from the Racing Federation. Kate had played her part well. They'd all done their part to charm him, Kate batting her eyes and touching his arm as she talked but kept herself glued to Omar. She put on a great performance, behaving how a man like Valente thought a woman should behave. Omar did his thing, all in French, Kate sat and watched him admiringly looked to see that Valente saw her. It was mean to exclude Prospero if the meeting had been as important as he said it was. It was turning out that Omar could be quite mean.

It was because Omar knew what he wanted and he was going to get it. She admired him out there. Running the team, making them all work together. All those men looked to him, waited for him to lead the way, show them what to do, when to do it. Maybe he just spotted the weak link. And like a pack leader he cut it from the group.

Omar was on cloud nine after the coffee; felt like they'd made more of an impression than he'd even hoped. Another meeting scheduled—dinner really—an invite to Valente's house on Sunday. The fucking man's house, Kate, he said in the car on the way back to the resort. Valente had some Villa here in Tuscany and he'd invited Omar and Kate for a Sunday dinner with his family. She felt good for Omar. She felt that darkness between them lifted a bit. She felt like there was hope again.

Prospero had his helmet handed back to him, put it on, then seemed frustrated that something was broken on it. Herve was out from under the front of the car and Omar was going over it, running his hands over the metal. She could see the car rocking, rolling back then forward, Omar stood and got out of the way with his hands up and open.

That Spanish hothead took off out of the pit faster than he should, fishtailing his way out to the track. It got quiet with the racer gone, she could hear them talking. They were quiet. It was French but she could tell by their tone the men seemed unsure how to proceed. How would they deal with a problem that wasn't mechanical?

She watched the car out there. A blazing black speck cutting through the track like it was on rails. She heard its aggressive insect buzz, felt the dread as it was coming around, getting closer. She knew the crew blamed her. Thought it was her fault there was this friction between their Number One and their driver. Every so often she would catch one looking from the pit. They already didn't like her and she'd confirmed their suspicions hadn't she? Now she saw the blatant contempt in their faces. Even sitting a hundred feet away, virtually harmless.

The Spaniard raced around the track four more times. Kate hunched her shoulders up every time he got close, wincing as he screamed past. The deafening whine from the motor seemed to mimic his anger.

They were calling Prospero in on the radio, their time at the track getting close to an end. She heard him gearing down as he got into the pit lane. The motor's whine got high as the revs went up, the engine working to slow the speed down. He started jerking erratically as he came to a stop making the crew dance a bit, worried about getting bumped. Then he was out, his helmet thrust into Mohamed's chest, and the crew watched him walk off, his hair flowing behind him. He seemed to be a bit of a baby and she really was surprised. Didn't think he would be like that. Spoiled.

She watched Omar and his guys break the gear down. Herve got behind the wheel of the racer and he carefully drove it away.

Omar was watching her. Sun behind her shining in his face. He had his hand up to shield his eyes. He was smiling. He came to her, walking across the pit looking both ways carefully before crossing the track. He went up a short flight of stairs then climbed a barrier and walked through the stadium. He looked slim and fit in his jumpsuit with all the logos, his headset hanging around his neck.

He set himself next to her and they both looked out over the track at the long shadows thrown across as the sun started to get low. He rested his hand on her knee, his palm facing up, inviting her. She put her hand in his, watched her little digits get swallowed up as he weaved his fingers through hers. He squeezed her very gently. She looked at her hand being held, his knuckles big as walnuts, his skin rough and manly against her softness. He lifted her hand to his mouth and brushed his lips against the back of her hand and kissed her very lightly.

The first tender moment they'd had since he'd held her roughly against the alley wall and fucked her. She looked in his quivering eyes, she felt that he was sorry. She figured that was as close as she would get to an apology from a man like Omar.

*

They had really made him search but Brody had found them. He was watching them now from the dark, the two little lovebirds moving around their hotel room like a married couple, playing house. Brody stood hidden in a boxwood shrub, under the canopy of some ornamental tree with wispy burgundy leaves.

The woman had come out of the shower moving into the bedroom from the bathroom with a towel wrapped around her. It was Kate. Her hair was wet, hanging around her neck and over her shoulders.

There was Omar. He came from a room that led off from the hallway. He was on the phone, walking slow, T-shirt, jeans, bare feet. He had his head down, talking calmly, looking at the floor. He paused at the entrance to the bedroom. Kate had a second towel and she was bent at the waist using it to dry her hair. Omar was watching her while he talked.

Brody heard laughing behind him, distant enough not to worry. Indoors, carrying across the garden, men, but he knew he wouldn't be in their line of sight. His hand went over the handle of the hammer just the same.

Omar was done on the phone, next to the bed now putting it on the nightstand. Kate on the bed, sitting at the foot, looking away from him, still drying her hair. Omar's hand went on her shoulder, he was saying something to her. She was looking up to him, submissive, happy. When Omar kissed her she closed her eyes. Then he was gone into the bathroom.

Kate stood, tossed one towel onto the chair in the corner. When she took the towel from her body, stood naked in front of the window, Brody's reflex was to look away. He forced himself to watch. She was combing her hair out in front of the mirror over the dresser. Head tilted to the side, watching herself running a big white plastic comb through it.

Her breasts swayed with her, she was shameless, standing by the window naked like this. When she'd finished he watched her turn, look at her ass over her shoulder, her hand move to cup her cheek and lift it. Admiring herself. She walked to the bed and sat on the edge, her hands clasped between her legs. Then he watched her sit like that almost motionless for more than five minutes. Deep in thought. Sometimes her lips would move like she was talking to herself.

The door to the bathroom opened and light streamed into the hall. Kate came to life again, sitting up straight, waiting for her lover. And there he was, stalking into the room like a predator. Nude, showered, big thing bouncing from leg to leg as he strode in.

She was smiling now. Wanting him. He came to her and held her face between his hands. She was bashful, flirting, looking up. He kissed her, pulled her lips to him. Her eyes closed again and her hands came up to rest on his wrists as he locked his mouth to hers.

It was all very tender. Very passionate. It was heartbreaking. He watched this other man's wife run her hands over her lover's body. She felt every bit of him, going over every surface, and then doing it over again. His arms, chest, over his shoulders, spreading her palms over his stomach, stroking him, pulling on his balls, scratching his thighs.

Omar laid her back, she was flat on the bed, her feet on the floor pushed back by his lips. Then they were talking, a breath away from each other. He caressed her face.

She put her hand on his face now and he lay next to her, both of them on their sides, laying on the bed. They talked for a while, smiling and touching, he would run stray, wet strands of her hair behind her ear. Kate put her head into his neck, was kissing him there and Omar tilted his head up to let her. If he opened his eyes he would be looking right at Brody.

Her kisses went over his chest and down his stomach. Omar's forearm went across his face, blocking him off from Brody. Kate was handling that freakish thing he had between his legs. Stroking him slowly with one hand up against his belly, one small thumb running up the under side. She was kissing the inside of his thighs and he opened them for her. Kate stood between his legs at the edge of the bed and she worked her lips over his sack, kissing his balls. She'd got him hard, that big, brown thing swollen, laying across his stomach.

She took it up in both her hands, stroked it, then she played with his dusky foreskin. She pulled it with her fingertips, watched it in her hand. Then something he said made her laugh out loud, and her eyes closed, her mouth went open, and she threw her head back. When she came back she'd locked him with a tiger's stare. She stroked his cock with one hand, she was saying things to him, dirty things, even though Brody didn't hear a single word. Her hand slowed, her stroking changed to a squeezing, watching his leathery foreskin swallow that huge glans, then peel back, over and over. She bit her lip, sucked it right into her mouth, then frowning, looking angry, her hand blazing on him for a moment. Then her face softened, her mouth spread to a warm smile, she was saying something.

Omar pushed his cock down with a thumb and Kate held her breasts around it, then bounced them softly up and down the sides of his shaft. Her arms scooped her breasts around it, hugging it inside her soft bosom. Her tongue dabbed at the tip of his cock sprouted up between them. Brody watched her suck on that for a long while.

She let it fall back on his belly, talking to him while she pinched his scrotum so his balls were tight in it, looking as big as tomato. She held them and licked them, then slapped them lightly with an open palm, then harder until he stopped her. She was laughing.

She sure did love that other man's cock.

Her tongue went up it, licking him all the way to the tip. Then she was saying something again, standing there between his legs looking down over his body, her hands wringing together over her heart. He sat up and kissed between her breasts. His arms went around her waist and hers went around the back of his head. They embraced like that for a while, him holding her to him, she hugging his head to her. Her hands caressed him.

Omar took her, lay her down on the bed with her head on a white pillow. He was over top of her on his knees and he put his mouth over hers. Her hands came up, touched his shoulders delicately. She broke from him, looking up into his eyes she said something to him. His mouth went back over hers. Brody could see that dark tool of his hanging down between his legs, the head of it touching the back of his calf. Then he had it in his hand and he was putting it into Mitch's wife. They stopped their kissing a minute, she watched his face as he worked it into her. She looked fearful, passionate. Then he slid in deeper, her head went back and she cried out, loud enough he heard it over the crickets chatter all around him in the bushes.

This woman belonged to another man. Was loved by another man. It must be awful to let someone you love hurt you like this; to still love them despite it. To know they are being fucked by another man's horse cock—that they are loving it, that your love would leave you because she was hungry for the touch of another man.

He wanted to look away but he wouldn't. It was painful to watch Kate taking that enormous manhood, riding it and bucking against it, her eyes locked on Omar, her face an erotic snarl, challenging him, begging him to fuck her harder. They went on forever, went on until Brody's feet were sore. She'd yelp out every once in a while, but it didn't slow her down. Her hands were in claws, scratching at his chest, running lines over his shoulders and down his back. She never closed her eyes. Right until she came. Her ecstatic screams grew longer, drew out, suffocating behind the glass. Her head went back, and she let out a long, low sound and her hands clenched his arms, her nails dug deep into his flesh. Her head thrashed from side to side. Omar's hips drove his cock inside her and held it there and Kate rocked her hips against him in circles getting every last drop out of her orgasm. They'd turned the white sheets red with blood.

*

The first people Kiley was going to surprise now that her feet were thankfully back on the soil of Mother England were Kate and Mitch.

Kiley stood at the door of their apartment. She couldn't wait to knock—she was practically bubbling over with excitement—couldn't wait to see their faces. She couldn't wait to have familiar arms put around her and hold her tight. She was tingling, felt like she had ants in her pants, she couldn't stand still.

When Kate had come out of the hospital Kiley had stayed with them for a few weeks and she had a key card that would get her into the building. She had a key to this door as well but she'd thought better on just walking in on them. She knocked twice and waited. She heard sudden abrupt movement inside, behind the door, a table being bumped, wooden leg scraping on wooden floor. "Come on, come on," she whispered, almost hopping up and down in place. She heard heavy footsteps making their way quickly and then the door was open.

She was shocked at what she saw. Mitch standing there in sweat pants and bare feet and a dirty t-shirt. He had bags under his eyes and a full beard. His hair was unkempt and his eyes were wild and frightful.

She was so glad to see him but she was horrified at his state. "Mitch, are you all right?"

"Kiley," he said, his voice was hoarse, a croak.

He stepped into the hall and he put his arms around her and it was exactly what she wanted right now at this moment. She started to cry in his arms, she felt so good to be held but she was also so worried about her friend. "Mitch, what's wrong? What's happened?"

"Oh, Kiley," he said and he held her tighter.

He smelled badly and he also smelled nicely of whisky. "Mitch, come on, let's get you back inside," she said and she escorted him back into the apartment and closed the door behind her. She'd left her bags down in the rental car and she'd come here straight from the airport. She was glad that she hadn't wasted any time.

Kate was on her mind on the plane. Things in her own life had crumbled since she talked to Mitch on Sunday and she hadn't even thought to follow up with him. Was Kate still not home? She figured that by the time she got to London this would all have been sorted out, she couldn't believe this. How could Kate not be here?

"Mitch, mate, is she still not home?"

All he could do was shake his head No and then he dropped himself back onto the couch where he had obviously been sleeping for a while; crumpled blanket pushed down to one end, tissue box and tissues on the coffee table and two empty bottles of Famous Grouse.

She sat next to him on the couch and she put her arms around him, looking at his face intently, she felt for him. She knew what Kate meant to him and she couldn't believe that Kate had done this to him.

"Mitch, tell me what's going on—when was the last you heard from her?"

"Nothing's changed from when I talked to you. She's just gone. No word from her at all. No call, nothing."

Kate was a runner. Always was. When she didn't like something the way it was she could just walk away from it, forget about it. She was never bothered by it either, out of sight out of mind; when she'd moved on, whatever it was she'd been running from almost ceased to exist. She had difficulties with Object Permanence. She'd run from home countless times, never went to class, run out on blokes who would have killed for her they loved her so much. Fuck, probably had killed for her. Kiley would pity anyone who loved her. This broke her heart because she loved Mitch, Mitch was her friend.

She put her arms around him again and she hugged him; then she squeezed him as tight as she could, heard him grunt with her effort, she breathed him in, bad as it was, she breathed him right in and held it.

"We'll find her, I swear it. We'll find her and bring her home."

He sighed, he brushed his eyes, and when she looked she saw that he'd teared up.

"I know where she is."

"You do?"

He nodded.

"Where is she?"

He shook his head, struggling not to lose a handle on his emotions.

“Oh,” Kiley said, she was with a man.

Mitch hooked a hand into the crook of her elbow under his neck. He said, “She’s with Omar.”

She dropped him. “What?”

He nodded again, looking across the darkened room.

“That stupid French piece of shit. That dumb motherfucker,” she said. She couldn’t believe it. She frowned, shook her head. “How did this happen? How do you know?”

“I did it. I made her.”

“How’d you mean? You wanted her—”

“No! No, I mean...I just mean that it’s my fault.”

Kiley put her hand on his back, rubbed it for him. “It’s not your fault, Mitch.”

“She was done with him in Cayman. Done with him. I did this to her. I made her go to him.”

“Mitch, how?”

“Ahh,” he said, in pain, “I was playing with fucking fire, wasn’t I?”

“What did you do?”

He shook his head quite vigorously. He wouldn’t answer. He sat silent and she left her hand on his back, smoothing it over him, across his shoulders. She felt him tremble, felt him quivering. She could see his face straining. “Tell me when you can Mitch. I’ll be here,” she said. He hunched over, and she could feel him sobbing, but he hid himself from her, wouldn’t let her see him cry.

“Mitch, don’t love, you’ll make me cry too,” she said and she put her arms around him again. She hugged him tight, and when his warm hands caressed her forearms it made her feel so good.

After a while she said, “Let’s go to her.”

She could feel he was shaking his head. He didn’t answer.

“Mitch, let’s go. I’ll go with you. I’ve taken time off—”

“I can’t leave right now. I can’t travel at the moment.”

“Can’t travel?”

He pinched the bridge of his nose. “Ahh, yeah. Bit of trouble with my passport. Long story.” Whatever it was it made him chuckle. Not in a great way, more like there was more shit being piled on top of the heap that his life was right now.

“I’ll go,” she said. “We’ll talk about it in the morning. I’ll go and I’ll bring her back. By her fucking hair if I have to.”

Kate's gaze came down from the Cinzano advertisement over the door of the bus and she stepped out into the sunlight in downtown Florence. She hated to ask Omar for money but she couldn't spend another day holed up in the room at the resort. She walked into Scarpieri e San Piero in the morning and took the 302 bus for an hour into the city. Now she was standing, squinting, on Via Roma in the tourist-thick heart of the city.

Omar had given her a bunch of bills and she had to look away, embarrassed for him, she knew all about the budget. Omar was in a great mood this morning. There must have been a burden on him and it had been lifted. Like all that he had to do now was run a good race tomorrow. He'd already accomplished what he'd come for, now all that was left was the easy part. When he'd handed her the bills, laid them out one at a time into her open hand, he told her she should get herself something nice for the lunch on Sunday. Something pretty, he'd said.

Kate felt at home here, home in this part of town. Walking the narrow street between luxury shops in the tall renaissance buildings with their balconies and their shuttered windows. A man in a small carriage with two Americans in it behind him passed, she wasn't even bothered by his horse; this was too fine a day.

Kate poked around a while, browsing, touching and looking, holding things out on their hangers, running the fabric over her skin to find out how it would feel. After an hour she stopped at a café in a plaza and had a cappuccino and a cornetto and watched the people in the street. She loved Italy. She'd never been to Florence before, but Mitch took her to Rome two years ago. Mitch was the greatest tour guide, he'd already been everywhere and he could tell you the history of all the buildings, how things used to be in the space where you were standing; he loved the art and learning about the local customs...

Fuck, she felt that flush come over her again. Touching her palm to her forehead like she had a fever, her breath quivered. She had to get moving—stood up and left the café, walked out into the foot traffic. If she wasn't moving those thoughts that hunted her would find her. They moved slow; but you couldn't sit too long or they would catch up with you.

The doors to a department store—Lanzovitali, in gold Roman letters—shining glass set in polished black marble invited her in, told her that this was her kind of place. The store was air-conditioned, peaceful, filled with her favourite things. It put her at ease and in a few moments, walking the aisles and looking at familiar products her pulse had slowed and her mind was away again, free to ignore anything it didn't want to think about.

After she'd tried a few dresses on, she even felt the happiness return. She got some help from two girls at the counter. No one had come out to ask her if she'd like some help. She felt strangely self-conscious, like they thought she was poor, didn't want to help some trashy Council girl in her cheap cotton shirt. But that was silly, they wouldn't know how much her shirt cost, it looked like any other shirt. And her bag was real. She'd gone to the counter to look at some folded tops there and she left her bag next to her elbow where they could see it. An Hermes Birkin bag in crocodile. Very real. Not counterfeit. She assumed the two girls there would know the difference. It would seem they did—and that perhaps they had ignored her earlier—because they were all over her, showing her things, complimenting her, doing their best in heavily accented English.

They walked through with her, suggesting items, putting them aside for her to try on whether she liked them or not. She ended up in their clean and polished dressing room with nothing she could afford. She put them on anyway watching herself in the mirror, wishing that she hadn't put herself in this position. Who cares if they were ignoring her, thinking she was just tourist trash? Why would she care what those girls thought?

One of them came to the other side of the door, put a pale yellow dress over the top, let it drape over the door. She said something on the other side, but her accent was so strong Kate didn't know what it was.

She tried that one on and loved it. A pale yellow Kenzo dress, so light, so soft and it hung on her figure so well. She wanted it. It was three times what she had, maybe more. She took it off and held it. She really wanted it. Kate squeezed it in her fingers, it was nothing in her hands, it was like it wasn't even there. And then it wasn't.

Her hands worked quickly, rolling it up into a thick long wad, not much bigger than a toilet roll, she got her hands into her purse, searching the bottom. She found a hair elastic, stretched it over the crumpled dress, went around it a few times, pinching it into shape, stopping it from blossoming back open. She stuffed it into a torn open bag of tampons, pushed it into the bottom, let its shape push the sides of the bag out and hold it in place. She kept a tampon aside, left it on the seat, she stuffed the rest of the tampons over top of the dress and then buried it in the bottom of the purse.

She stepped out of the fitting room, she twisted her face, showing them her discomfort. They looked concerned. She held a hand over herself, just below her stomach. She had a tampon in its wrapper in her hand, her bag hanging over her shoulder. She shyly, pretending to be discreet, asked them where the bathroom was using the phrase bagno delle donne, three of the roughly nine words she knew in Italian.

They were instantly sympathetic, one with a hand on her shoulder took her to the edge of her department and pointed over to the other side of the grand store where the bathroom was.

Kate walked briskly out of their sight, crossed the store, moving towards the front doors. Her heart was pounding, a smile broke on her face. What would they do if they caught her? She slowed her pace. Let them come. She'd pulled the tags, there was no device plugged into the expensive dress, one that the sales people would pull off with a special wand. She'd get away with it. Those girls had given her so much to try it would take forever to sort out something was missing. The doors were just steps away. Five glass doors in a bank, separating her from the sun on the street. Ten more steps.

Either side of the doors she could see putty-grey stands, theft prevention devices, looking oddly medical, like x-rays would come out of them. She had nothing to worry about, there were no tags. She stepped through them and touched the door. Technology moved so fast she thought, things getting smaller or faster, better, every year. What if they had tags you couldn't even see? There were probably cameras everywhere, eyes in a security booth on her right now, ready to leap into action. She held her breath and stepped outside. Kept moving. Nothing. She'd done it. She walked quickly now, cutting through the crowds. A laugh came out of her. She really had done it. She hadn't nicked anything in years and it felt wonderful. Her heart was racing.

She worked through the shaded streets, weaving through the people until she came out into a vast plaza, a beautiful Basilica at its centre. She stopped and looked at the ancient building. This was a Mitch spot. She would stand here with Mitch and he would tell her who built it and when.

A hand grabbed her roughly above her elbow and she gasped. She had been pinged after all.

Fuck, she thought. She'd been caught.

She closed her eyes, felt the sun on her face. Were Florentine jails nice? What would she do, how far would she go to keep herself out of one?

"Kate," a man behind her said. Her eyes snapped open. She knew that voice.

*

Kate turned quickly. It was him. Her knees buckled and she collapsed but the man held her up, a hand gripping each arm. He helped her sit down on a stone bench teeming with tourists.

It was Ares. The pretty boy with the pretty cock who made her come the moment he slid it inside her while Omar watched. The one who may have saved Omar's life. The man whose presence had stopped Kate from trying to slash Omar's neck when she met him in that strange apartment five weeks ago. The Fairway Manor.

He stood over her, looked like he was mad at her. The white marble basilica was behind him and he was framed in one of its great bronze doors. She was unsure if she should be happy to see him or not. He had his hands on his hips. She could see the tattoos on both his arms, covering his skin right to his wrists, coming down from under the short sleeves of his black shirt.

"What...are you...doing here?" Her words came out in slow motion.

"Your fun is over," he said. "It's time to go home now."

"What?"

"He's worried about you."

"Omar?"

"Your husband. He's worried sick about you."

"I'm fine," she said. Her mind was racing, none of this was making sense. How would he know she's run away?

He was looking her over, his lips in a snarl; disgust.

"You look the opposite of fine. Look at yourself, see yourself. You're disgusting. It's time to go home."

“Who is my husband?” Ares had to be mistaken. She looked forward to correcting him. Did he think she was someone else?

“Mitch.”

“My Mitch? How...” A weakness went across her shoulders, robbed her of the strength to hold herself upright. She slumped, her face was red hot. “Do you know Mitch?” Even saying the words out loud it made no sense of this, this was ridiculous.

He squat down, got himself face-to-face with her. He put a finger in her face; a father angry with his little girl.

“Listen to me. This shit with Omar is over. Do you understand? Pack up your gear and go home. You're killing your husband.”

He held her gaze, didn't look away, and she was frozen to him. He seemed like someone who was used to making people do what he wanted them to do.

“How is he?” Almost too quiet for him to hear.

“How is he?” Ares was loud, attracting looks from the other people on the bench. “You don't want to know.”

She felt a tear come to her eye, and she looked down and away. He took her chin and pulled her back.

“You don't want me to tell you what you've done to him.”

She couldn't stop the tears now, and she sat sobbing on the circular stone bench surrounded by strangers in the sunlight. She put her hands over her face, so ashamed of herself.

Ares' shoe was kicking at her toes, making her look up.

“You're hearing me, ain't you?” he said, face mean, couldn't give a shit that she was crying.

She nodded.

He turned and walked away and she cried into her hands doing her best not to make a spectacle.

“Hey,” he called out, farther away.

She looked up and saw him turned back to her.

“You only get one warning. Then I make you. You hear me?”

She nodded again, her face red and blubbering.

Last night, just before they'd fallen asleep together, Kiley told Mitch she'd come all this way from Chicago to England to have someone she cared about put their arms around her. Said it felt just as good to her putting her arms around someone she cared about.

10 A.M. now, they'd really slept in. Both in bed with their clothes on, their backs to an open window facing out onto the Duchess of Bedford's Walk below. Mitch could hear Saturday morning traffic out there, pleasant sounds, his friendly neighbourhood out enjoying the summer on its day off.

Kiley's sleep-heavy arm was draped over him, her hand limp on his chest. He took it up in his hand, studied it. Fantasized it was Kate's hand, attached to Kate's warm body behind him, that it was Kate who'd pressed herself into him while he slept. Fantasized what it would be like to turn and see her there, hold her, kiss her, put this all behind them. He looked at the elegant hand, pictured a wedding ring and a diamond on it. This wasn't Kate's hand. Not petite; long and graceful. He was glad to have it just the same. He pressed Kiley's hand to his chest.

Kiley had made him clean up. Made him shave and shower and he was glad she was there to make him do it. He was glad she was there because he didn't want her to see him like that and it felt good to have someone for whom he had to be presentable. Once he'd done it he felt better about everything, felt like with Kiley there he could deal with this; he had help. While he was in the shower she'd made him a grilled cheese sandwich. Made him eat it. When he didn't want to talk anymore she'd sat with him on the couch and watched telly. She came to bed with him and curled behind him with her arm over him and for the first time in days he actually slept.

She was stirring behind him, felt her stretching her legs out, shaking as she pushed her toes right down to the bottom of the bed. Her fingers scratched at his chest.

"You up?" she said into his back.

"Yeah."

"How we doing?" Her head appeared over his shoulder, peering down at him.

"I'm glad you're here," he said.

She watched him for a moment, said, “Yeah, me too.”

She looked around the room, taking in the paintings, the walnut panel walls, the closet door open and some of Kate’s things pulled out. Hoped she wouldn’t know he’d pulled them out to hold them, smell them.

“Mitch, can I ask you something?” She dug the point of her chin into his shoulder, getting his attention. She was looking into his eyes quite seriously.

“What?”

“Have you been working out?”

It made him laugh, cheered him up. He shook her with his laughter.

“Well, have you?” she said, laughing with him, “Let me feel your muscles, mate.” She poked him in the chest and the shoulders with the points of her fingers and when he defended himself she dug claws into his ribs, tickled him.

“Don’t,” he said, laughing.

She threw herself back in the pillows, left him alone now.

“I left all my things in my car,” she said. She was pulling her shirt out from her body, turning her nose up at wearing the clothes that she’d travelled in and had also now slept in.

Mitch rolled over to her, said, “Will you stay with me today?”

She gave him a warm smile that really melted his heart, she rested a hand on his cheek. “Of course, Mitch, anything.”

He put his hand over hers and her face changed, her brow dropped and she looked uncomfortable.

“I have to tell you something.”

“Yeah?”

“You deserve to know the truth. The truth as I know. I can’t keep things from you.”

“What is it?”

“I dated Omar, yeah? But...fuck, I don’t want to stitch Kate up—”

“Just go on already.”

“I wasn’t dating him when we came to Cayman.” She didn’t look away but she crinkled her nose up, like she didn’t want to go on. He rubbed the back of her hand.

She said, “I had dated him a while back, a year and a half ago I think. God, this is terrible...but I don’t want to lie to you. When Omar and I were dating...when we were apart, long distance relationship...he sent me a picture of his privates. You know, we were all over each other back then. I sent it to Kate—I'm sorry, I'm not like that, I've never done that before. I don't know what I was thinking, I was head over heels for that fucker back then, I wasn't thinking straight, I'm so sorry."

"What are you saying?"

"She set up that escapade in Cayman. To sleep with him. I guess...because of that..." she let the obvious hang.

Mitch didn't know what to say. It filled in some of the gaps. He'd wondered about Kiley and Omar, how they weren't close, but he hadn't figured on this. He wasn't surprised now, by Kate's desire or her deception.

"I helped her Mitch, I'm sorry—I called Omar. I don't want this to sound wrong but I was into it—ah, shit, you know...I wanted to be with you. I love Kate, she wanted me to do it with you, so she could be with Omar. I don't know what I was thinking, it sounds so terrible now. It had sounded so exciting on the phone with her. I never could have pictured sitting here with you like this, months later—in this horrible situation. Mate, listen, I was there for fun with you, we had a good time didn't we?"

"Yeah. We did. I know I did."

"Sorry I never told you that. It's been weighing on me."

"It's all right. It might have killed me if you'd told me months ago. I don't care now. Just want her home."

"That's all the lies I know. That's it. I just can't lay with you like this, help you through this, with that on my mind."

"I've been worse to her. She's got nothing on me. It's not Kate's fault she's with him now. I did something horrible too. Something horrible to Kate and she hasn't even realized it."

Kiley's face stretched with anticipation. She was incredulous, he could see her mind racing with the possibilities of what he might have done to her.

"You didn't hurt her?"

"No," he said, "Maybe. I did something crazy and now I'm paying for it."

"Mitch, what did you do?"

"She's fine. She enjoyed every minute of it. I just...I may have fucked with her head. I definitely shouldn't have done it."

"Oh, Mitch," she said, kissed his forehead, "Kate's a big, big girl, I doubt you could hurt her."

“I just did it because I love her so much. And I wanted her to want me like she wanted Omar.”

Kiley pulled his head to her chest and held it. “I’m going to go bring up some of my things.”

“I’ll call for someone to do it,” he said into her neck, “just stay with me.”

“Mitch, you can’t take her back. Please don’t do it, mate. Don’t do that to yourself. She’s going to kill you. I love her but she’s never going to change. Please, Mitch, I can’t see you like this.”

*

Was this a test from Omar? It had to be. How could Omar's friend know Mitch?

But that would be stupid. Omar wasn't that dumb, that he'd use someone to play that part that Kate knew. Knew intimately.

What on fucking earth was going on?

If Ares knew Mitch did he tell her husband what had happened in that apartment? That he and Omar had both fucked her at the same time?

Did Omar go ahead with the blackmail? Doing it now to Mitch, threatening her husband with the video he’d sworn to her that he destroyed? Somehow Mitch had investigated the blackmail, found Omar's friend Ares, now Ares was working for Mitch? That didn’t make sense either. Nothing made sense.

The spell has been broken and when Omar had made love to her tonight, she had suffered under him. His cock had hurt her, the dread robbing her of the pleasure that monstrous size usually gave her.

He'd come inside her then asked her what was wrong. She told him it was nothing, she just wasn't feeling well. He seemed worried by her inaction, her malaise, but he dropped it. He lay with her and fell asleep. She felt his warm seed seep from her, run through her folds. She felt it go cold, seem wetter than it was. Then it dried. She was still awake.

A woman from the bench had helped her to the bathroom back at the basilica. An American tourist, said she was from Michigan, rubbed her back while Kate cried in the ladies room, people coming in and out, looking at the two of them over their shoulder. She'd asked Kate if that man had hurt her. Asked her if that was her boyfriend. She told the woman he'd just given her some bad news. The woman pressed and Kate would just tell her it was about her husband.

When she got herself together she knew there was not much else to do. All she could do was what she knew she had to do.

She turned her iPhone back on again and she called for a car. It picked her up and she rode it back to the resort. She ordered a plane ticket home. Noon on Saturday. She wasn't ready to go but she knew she must.

Kate trembled now at the thought of what she'd done. It had felt so good, so right. In many ways it was one of the greatest weeks of her life. She had never wanted to see the bill. But it was delivered to her today by someone she least expected and she saw the cost would be enormous. What had she thought would happen with Mitch? How did she think this would be for him? Did she just assume she would run off from him and never talk to him again? Like maybe years from now they'd bump in to each other on some street in London, and they would smile as a flood of great memories and bad ones, would wash over them, then they'd pass, move on and get back to their new lives.

That was crazy. She wouldn't have done that. She loved him. Loved him desperately. Maybe she never thought she'd really stay with Omar. She was kidding herself wasn't she? She knew she'd run back to Mitch. He would open his arms to her, hug her, let her back in. She knew she was shit. She knew she was a terrible person.

Ares couldn't tell her what she'd done to him. Deep down she'd always figured she could go back. Mitch would take her. Mitch would allow her transgressions. But she'd hurt him. That was the cost of her fun. One day she would go too far, she knew it. One day, fuck maybe it's tomorrow, she will ruin it for good. She will fuck it up. Hurting Mitch was something separate from her exploring her passion. A tangible, discernible, different thing altogether. She didn't want to hurt him.

She knew she would always disappoint him. She had let him down in so many ways. She was to have a baby with him, she couldn't even do that. She let him down there hadn't she? Fuck. She would have been a shit mum anyway.

Did Mitch finally hate her? She deserved it. She was a whore. A selfish whore. She was a pig.

She wiped her tears from her eyes, sniffled loud in the quiet room. She got up and made her way to the bathroom and locked herself in. She ran the shower hot as she could take it and got inside and sat on the floor of the tiny stall. She let the water run over her and cried it out, hid her sounds in her hands and the running water.

She would tell Omar in the morning that she was leaving.

*

She couldn't be doing this to him. Not now.

Kate said it again, "I just have to go home."

Omar stammered, "But the race...why...you can't..."

What about the lunch tomorrow with Valente? Kate was to be by his side. Valente took to her, Omar liked looking like a couple. Merde, they were a couple.

Kate stood before him, she was dressed, her purse over a forearm, sunglasses up in her hair, a printed ticket in her hand. She'd packed nothing, was going to walk away from him and leave him here with just the clothes on her back. Her face was troubled, worn out, drawn and pale. She didn't want to go. He could see it in her eyes, she could barely hold his gaze. It wasn't Omar she was leaving. It was about the man she would return to.

"Kate," he said and he stepped toward her, tried to put his warm body into her space, but she stepped back from him.

They were standing at the foot of their unmade bed, sunlight streaming in through the window, a beautiful day out there. A perfect day for the race.

"Please, Omar, don't make this hard on me—"

"Hard on you?" He was incredulous. His hands went up onto his head, his fingers locked around his crown, his eyes were bewildered.

"Omar this can't be...it was never meant to—"

"Please, don't leave me," he said. Probably the most honest thing he'd said to a woman in his twenty-five years. She was breaking his heart and he didn't know what it felt like until now.

Her lips trembled, she wanted to say something but she couldn't speak. Her eyes were wet, glistening in the light from the window. He knew she didn't want to go.

Omar grabbed her roughly by her arms and pulled her to him. Kate turned her face, pulling away, she couldn't look at him.

"Omar, don't—"

"I won't let you leave me," he growled.

"This isn't real," she cried out.

"How can you say that?" he hissed at her. What would make her want to destroy him?

Her arms struggled in his grip, she was squirming away from him, lifting her arms and twisting them. He let her arms go, grabbed her shirt at the small of her back and yanked her hard against him, throwing her head back. He grabbed her angrily by the back of her neck and forced her lips to his.

She slapped him across the ear and it made him drop her. He stood a foot from her now, both their faces pinched and angry, their chests heaving as they gasped for breath. His ear rang, blood pounded up the veins in his neck. He had never felt like this in his life. He'd never needed a woman like this before.

"Please," he said. His face softening, his eyes opening, becoming pleading now.

He gambled it all. Asked a question he might not be able to face the answer to. He hoped for an answer that wouldn't crush him, break him in two. "Can you tell me from your heart," he said, thumping his fist on his chest and clutching it there, "tell me that you don't feel something—that you're leaving because you don't want to be with me."

Kate couldn't answer him. Her face was still braced with anger, her chin trembled. He could hear her breathing. He knew she wasn't leaving him, he knew she was going to another man. To her husband. But she belonged with Omar. She belonged to Omar.

"Don't go to him," he said. She held his gaze, her anger softening, becoming sad. It was honour or responsibility or something that was taking her from him. Kate was like Omar—they weren't bound to things like that. This was a moment of weakness in her. He would help her through it.

Omar grabbed her roughly again and pulled her into him, she was rigid but her body pressed against his. He wanted her to feel how good it was when they touched. He ran his hands along her back and lifted her by her cheeks, lifted her onto the tips of her toes. She made a little sound in her throat, and she closed her eyes. He lifted her higher until her lips came to his. She kissed him reluctantly. He pulled her cheeks into his body, pressed his hips into her soft flesh. Her thigh pressed against his hardening member hanging along his leg under his cotton pants. He wanted her to feel it against her, remember what she was giving up, reminding her he had something she needed.

Kate resisted him, he could feel her energy being pulled away from him. He let her down, let her feet touch the floor. She stepped back but he held the fabric of her shirt pinched tightly between his thumb and forefinger. She closed her eyes and he saw her posture change. She let him pull her to him. Her hands came up on his chest and she rested her head on him. Her fingers worked the buttons on the front of his shirt. He watched her.

She undid the shirt, her soft lips pressing and kissing against the bare skin of his chest. She got lower, kissing down his belly. Her fingers undid his belt, pulled the leather out of the buckle, then she got his pants open. Her hands pulled the fly apart, slid the pants down his thighs a bit. His cock was trapped in there, pushed against his leg. She got the pants low enough that it fell free, swinging between his thighs before her.

She took it up in her two small hands and stroked it, lifted it up to her lips. As he got stiffer, her hands pulled his foreskin back, she pressed the big, hot head of his cock against her cheek, swiped it across her lips then along her other cheek. She wouldn't look at him, she was looking away.

"Look at me, Kate," he said, but she just pushed his big organ past her lips, gripped him hard with her fists to swell up the end of him.

Omar bent down and put his hands under her arms and lifted her up, walked her backwards, her heels dragging on the rug. He dropped her on the bed. She still looked away from him.

He kissed her, pushed her back onto the bed while he did. She let him, lay back for him. Then she turned her face from his kisses, rolled over. She got onto her front, lifted herself up on all fours, and he stood up to give her room. She pulled her skirt up for him, pulled it right up to her narrow waist, her big round creamy bottom bent over for him. She hooked a thumb into her panties and slid them down her cheeks.

He smelled her warm Kate smell; why would she do this to him, how could she be so cruel?

She put a hand over her rump, ran it between her cheeks and in between her legs, pulled something from herself and threw it to the side.

She pushed herself back to him, offered herself to him. Her face turned slightly, watching him from the corner of her eye, waiting for him to do something. She took the sunglasses out of her hair and threw them onto the pillow. Again she pushed her sex back at him. Was she just looking at the clock on the stand?

He flung her onto her back, one hand grabbing one hip and heaving her over. Now she saw him.

“Look at me,” he said again. She let her legs fall open for him. He pulled her panties down and off, put a knee up on the bed, and got himself over her. His hand went around her neck, gripped her from the back and pulled her up to kiss him. She closed her eyes and opened her mouth. He struggled to find her tongue. He gripped her neck harder and she whimpered.

She eased, her lips moving with his as her breaths grew lusty. He felt himself harden, his huge cock hanging between them pressed up against the cold back of her thigh. Her hands ran down her own legs, her fingertips caressed the underside of him as they passed. He took it in his hand and brought the head in between her folds, working it up and down, getting it wet from her. Then he plunged it in her.

“Ah, God,” she cried out, and her nails scored tracks along the flesh of his back. He was too urgent to restrain himself, he just drove into her like a piston.

Kate screamed out in ecstasy, urged him to fuck her harder with his big cock. His heart swelled at her returning passion. He swelled hearing her high encouraging voice thrilled by his cock buried inside her.

“Look at me,” he said again, but she was turned, her eyes clamped shut.

He put a hand around her throat and squeezed her hard, he would make her eyes open. He fucked her hard, he knew he was hurting her. He knew she loved it. He wanted her to have this thing she loved he wanted her to feel every inch of it. He gripped her throat until her eyes bulged open. He wanted to see inside her, he wanted her to see into him, to understand his love for her. He wanted her to know there was no way he would let her get on that plane.

*

Mitch felt so alive.

The sun was on his face, there was a wonderful light breeze he felt in his thick wavy hair. They were on a street side restaurant in Knightsbridge, happy people living their sunny lives just an arm's reach from him on the walk. He felt like he'd returned to the surface. And across from him? An angel. She'd saved him. Her super-model face turned up to the sun, her eyebrows peaceful over her tortoiseshell sunglasses. A happy, contented smile on her face.

"You really are the picture of someone happy to be home," he said.

She didn't say anything but she smiled wide until her teeth showed. She leaned forward and took a sip from her straw; spiced gin and a barrel aged tonic, served with lemon and lavender. Maybe they'd get tipsy today and they'd go walk around the V&A.

At some point he'd like to talk to someone, tell them what he's been up to. What he suspects others have been up to. He could talk to Kiley. She would listen, he could tell her about the House and why it's been shuttered. That would be a relief to him.

And she could be his proxy too. Would she go for him? She said she would. He felt she would do it. Go to Kate because he couldn't.

He knew where she was. He knew she'd been delivered a message. All the threats in the world wouldn't budge Kate if she didn't want to move. But her Kiley?

They could give her another day, maybe two, then...

"I don't think I'm going back."

"America?"

"I think I'm staying here."

"Kiley, you love it—"

"I'm not sure they want me back."

"What happened?"

"I've been bad. I've been letting myself off the hook for some of my actions and I think last night and this morning, talking with you, I realized I'm guilty. I thought there were things I could do because I was a girl but...I'm wrong. I did things that were wrong."

"The hot tub?"

"Worse than that Mitch. Worse than that." She laughed then, just a quick one, caught herself and sniffed. She brushed an eye under her sunglass lens. “They’re going to can me. I know it, Mitch. I can live with it. I can be accountable. I just don’t know how bad it will be. Maybe just fired, but who knows, you know?” She shrugged, looked out on the street. “I’m glad to be home. It really seems so wonderfully small and far away now and I’m glad to be sitting with you.”

“Let me deal with them.”

“Be my lawyer? No, Mitch. I’m a big girl. I can take my lumps.”

He reached over and took her hands, said, “I won’t let them give you any lumps.”

Her phone rang.

Mitch could see her eyes lit up in grey-green, filled up with sunlight under her sunglass lenses, look down at her screen. They went wide.

“Mitch...Mitch, God, it’s Kate, love.” She whipped the glasses off and held her phone like it was hot, staring at the screen and she didn’t know what to do. She thrust her phone out to him in a hurry, she blurted, “You—”

He put his hands up and shook his head frantically. He said, “She’s calling you. Answer it. What if my voice scared her off?” He hated sounding so panicked.

Kiley pressed her screen carefully, an action she’d done a hundred thousand times but she was desperate not to somehow fuck this up. Her phone went up into that mane of beautiful hair and she pressed her free hand over her other ear.

“Kate?”

She looked to Mitch and nodded, her eyes were wet and wild.

“Is she okay?” he burst out.

Kiley frowned, shushed him, but she nodded. He thought she nodded.

“Slow down...what...oh, no. Oh, Kate, I...the hospital? But he...Ospedale, what? San Lorenzo. What happened?...Oh, God, I’m sorry, I’m sorry...Kate—”

Kiley looked up at him, her eyes were telling him a horrible story and his heart sank. Kiley held the phone, listening, her eyes stared at him wildly. With her hair pulled back he could see she’d hurt herself, a mark over her brow. He went to her, dragged the heavy metal chair he was sitting on behind him, sat himself next to her.

“Oh, no, no, no,” she whispered, still being told something terrible and he put his arm around her.

“She’s okay?” Mitch asked her.

“Kate, wait...if he’s...no, I can...Kate? Kate?”

Her hand came out with her phone and she closed the call. Mitch squeezed her. “Please, God, Kiley, tell me she’s all right.”

She looked up to him, pushed herself to lean on him and he hugged her. “She’s okay, she’s okay, Mitch. She’s upset...it’s Omar. He’s in the hospital...she said he’s not going to make it.”

Thanks so much for reading, I really hope you enjoyed this novelette despite my cliffhanger ending! But you know I don't normally do that—this was just a great place for this episode to end!

If you like Kate and Mitch, Kiley, and Omar and want to hear more about them, please let me know. Keep in touch, go on and send me an e-mail or get me on twitter. I'd like to hear from you!

If you're a little late to the Cayman Proxy Party and want to catch up, the first Box Set is here>>> The Cayman Proxy: Box One

—KT

PS Please sign up for my mailing list for updates!

<http://eepurl.com/bYsVwH>

Don't forget to follow my Amazon Author Page for updates!

E-mail:

sparrow3dx@gmail.com

Twitter:

@KTMorrison_247

Check out this sexy book trailer for Infidelity!

Other Books by KT Morrison

Losing His Wife series:

Book One

Book Two

Pete and Jess Mapplethorpe have been married for seven years now. They've got two wonderful little boys and an Irish Setter. Everyone that knows them would say they are the nicest couple you'd want to meet.

Well, they might say that Pete can be a bit of a jerk sometimes—but Jess? Regional Grade Three teacher of the year, three years running. Pretty, polite, sensitive, kind and thoughtful...

It must have been black magic that brought them together...

Behind closed doors everyone would be shocked at what goes on. They'd never believe the dirty things that sweet Jess might do or say. Pete doesn't think he has what it takes to please his beautiful wife and they fantasize about larger men taking her and making her happy.

She's just starting to discover herself at thirty-five... She wants to make up for lost time.

They've found a handsome, well-built young man to play along. It's better than they even imagined. Now that they've started will she be able to stop? What if she doesn't want to?

Her husband loves enduring distressing levels of humiliation and she's finding a crazy pleasure now in delivering it...

When their bull loses his job, kind Jess feels responsible and she wants to help. He's got no place to live and they've got a guest room.

How hard would it be to live with the man who satisfies your wife? To see him in your home, using your remote, drinking your beer, playing with your kids. When it's so awful how can it also be so arousing?

Going A Little Too Far

You couldn't picture a sweeter couple than Troy and Emma.

Troy's a former Division One college wrestler. A walking water park at two-sixty-five, with shoulders no woman could get her arms around and a set of abs you could scrub laundry on.

Emma's a sweet little Georgia Peach. Pretty as can be in her proper dresses; she's a good girl from a good family that raised her right.

You couldn't tell by looking at them that they were two straight-up freaks that loved to push each other's kinky buttons.

Emma, with all her book club shyness, loves to be man-handled, loves to be lifted off her feet and dominated. Troy is a monster with a six-hundred-fifty pound deadlift and she's like a feather in his arms.

Troy likes to be humiliated. He knows he doesn't have much 'down there' and he likes his virginal wife to tell him he's no good and she'd have to get what she wanted elsewhere.

Couple of closet freaks.

A summer housewarming party on a scorching hot West Texas day puts a gift in their lap. A big, larger-than-life playtoy for Emma to tease her husband with. He wants her to. She wants to do it. But once it starts, where do you stop? What's going too far?

Measured Next To Her Ex: A Medical Size Comparison Cuckold Fantasy

When Ben Watson went to the new Sexual Performance Clinic across from his office he was just looking to get some help.

But when he showed up on Opening Day the place was so overwhelmed they started doubling up in exam rooms to make sure all the patients were assessed.

Of all the gin joints in all the—

Guess who his exam partner is? Yeah, his honey-pie's ex-boyfriend. He is going to be sitting next to him, knees practically touching, while these nurses assess their size and performance using only their latex hands.

He could leave, get the hell out of there. That would be sensible. But he's kind of curious. A dark part of him wants to know something. Wants to know what his precious girl's ex-lover has between his legs.

He's going to wish he left.

Then, when his obscenely endowed exam mate starts to relate to the nurses the casual but very dirty hook-ups he's been having with an ex, Ben's hands really start sweating.

This is going to be the worst day of Ben's life.

Size Curious Brat

Matt Walsh is on his way home from Harvard. It's Thanksgiving recess and he hasn't been with his sweet Chloe Rose in months. He can't wait to get off the bus and wrap his arms around his baby girl.

Chloe's a perverted little high-schooler with a habit for trouble. She loves her boyfriend Matt and she's been aching for him.

But there's a problem.

Matt's step brother came home early. He's a bully. A domineering man's man who made Matt's life miserable growing up. Now he's a sexy deep-sea welder just getting home from Louisiana after two months at sea and he hasn't even seen a woman in ages.

After a brief, naked encounter in the hallway little Chloe can't get something out of her mind. Matt's stepbrother Moric is built much better than other men and she can't stop thinking about it.

It makes Matt mad but Chloe is just naturally curious. She doesn't think it's a big deal. She's just never seen anything like that before.

Now Moric's got his eyes on his little brother's prize possession. She's not exactly unwilling. Moric is a big powerful stud and Matt is powerless to stop him. Once he starts neither of them could stop him. He could take whatever he wants. It might be better—if Moric would let him—to just join him...

The Cayman Proxy Series:

The Cayman Proxy \(Part One\)

The Cayman Proxy \(Part Two\)

The Cayman Proxy \(Part Three\)

The Cayman Proxy \(Part Four\)

The Cayman Proxy \(Part Five\)

A wealthy British businessman allows his wife to take on a lover. A half-Moroccan French race-car mechanic. So handsome and masculine, so monstrously hung, his presence turns their relationship—their lives—into turmoil.

If you haven't read another book in the series yet your best bet is the collected Box Set. All four books in one revised and edited edition!

The Cayman Proxy \(Box One\)

This box set collects the first four books of The Cayman Proxy hotwife thriller series. 114,000 words, revised and edited.

SUBTERFUGE: Mitchell Sutton's family is one of the wealthiest in London. But Mitch is an outsider, the handsome young son who took his own path. He's in love with a girl from the wrong side of the tracks.

Kate's a troubled Council house girl thrown into a lifestyle she never imagined. But she's more than his dressed up little princess.

He's got just about everything she needs. But she's got a mind full of dark thoughts she can't escape. And there's something Mitch can't give her.

She needs something his money can't buy.

He would do anything for her.

They hit the hot beaches of Grand Cayman, a reunion with an old friend and a handsome stranger. Passion boils in her blood. Can she make this work or will her desires destroy the man she loves?

ALONE: Did Mitch and Kate's fun little foursome put out her fire? Mitch hopes so but Kate feels the embers still glowing. Then a spark, a new idea, darker and dirtier than before and she wants to take Mitch down with her.

Her filthy French mechanic is game to give her more of what she needs. Her closest friend Kiley wants what's best for everyone, but she feels terrible for what Kate is putting Mitch through.

It's getting hotter in Cayman and they've got five days left. They should stop but Kate wants to fan those flames, feel how hot it can get just before it consumes their marriage.

BLACKMAIL: Now the fun begins.

All the cards are on the table and Mitch knows his wife; has seen her for what she truly is.

But he's never loved her more. Loves her despite her darkness. Maybe even because of it.

They're home in London. Things are good. The ugly things that were done in Cayman still fresh in their minds but neither of them is going to talk about it. They just want to get on with it.

Perhaps he doesn't have what it takes between his legs, but he's got it in spades between the ears. He'll use what he's got to drive his wife wild and really give her what no other man ever could. He knows her better than she knows herself.

Kate is under his thumb and she doesn't even know it. Mitch has her walking a narrow rope high above certain destruction, making her do the dirty things she hates that she loves. Doing it to save her husband.

BULLFIGHT: Mitch knows he went too far.

He's pushed his wife Kate to her very limits. It was worth it while it lasted. She trembled at his touch and she didn't even know the depths he'd travelled to bring her to that edge.

But now it's over, he had to put it to a stop. His game was far too dangerous. More dangerous than he could ever have imagined. He saw a side to his wife that scared him.

But the absence of danger has left Kate overwhelmed by a crushing dread. She doesn't think it's really over. She knows her filthy French lover isn't gone forever.

She knows he won't be able to keep his hands off her for long. Maybe she won't wait. Maybe she'll take matters into her own hands.