

Black and Blue

An Interracial Cuckold Tale

ROB MATTHEWS

BLACK AND BLUE
An Interracial Cuckold Tale

Rob Matthews

Fanny Press
PO Box 70515
Seattle, WA 98127

For more information go to: www.fannypress.com

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

This is a work of fiction. Names, characters, places, brands, media, and incidents are either the product of the author's imagination or are used fictitiously.

Cover design by Sabrina Sun

Black and Blue
Copyright © 2017 by Rob Matthews

ISBN: 978-1-60381-750-9 (Trade Paper)
ISBN: 978-1-60381-749-3 (eBook)

Produced in the United States of America

Chapter One

Kelly's white sleeveless t-shirt, short black skirt, and thin stockings didn't offer much protection against the East Anglian wind. It being a typical winter's evening in Cambridge, the temperature was four degrees. The alleyway they were standing in was a wind tunnel with plastic bags and empty Coke bottles blowing past them. Kelly eyed Jodie's leopard skin leggings enviously and regretted not bringing her coat, but she was never sure if she could trust the cloak room in this place. Putting her hand on Jodie's shoulder, she stood on tiptoes. There were at least thirty people in the queue ahead of them. Suddenly, she felt anxious. 'Are you sure you want to wait?' she asked Jodie. 'We could just go to the pub.'

Jodie pursed her lips. 'How much money have you got?'

Kelly's shoulders sagged. 'A couple of quid. I forgot to raid Edward's wallet.'

'Might get half a pint between us.' Jodie waved the vouchers in Kelly's face. 'It's free drinks all night in here.' Kelly did like the idea of free drinks. Jodie took a drag of her cigarette and held up the glowing end. 'Warm your hands on that,' she said. Kelly didn't laugh. 'It's not just the cold, is it, lovely?' said Jodie, dropping her cigarette on the ground. 'Come here.' Jodie put her arms around Kelly and hugged her tight. Kelly was reassured by the feel of Jodie's soft warm body against hers. Jodie kissed Kelly on the cheek and said, 'I'll look after you.'

A young man in the queue was pretending not to look at them. 'Don't worry, darling,' Jodie called out to him. 'We love each other, but not as much as we love cock.' Even in the dark alleyway, Kelly saw him blush as he turned away.

'Jodie!' said Kelly, shaking her head reprovably but giggling at the same time.

'Definitely a virgin,' whispered Jodie in Kelly's ear.

'Probably a student,' said Kelly.

'Same thing, isn't it?'

They both laughed, and Kelly felt calmer. The queue started to move and soon they were in the club.

'You find somewhere to sit down,' said Jodie. 'I'll get the drinks in. What do you want?'

'Smirnoff and lemonade.'

While Jodie went to the bar, Kelly made her way through the crowd. The club was a converted warehouse, with each of the old storage areas now a dance floor surrounded by chairs and tables. She found a table next to a space where about twenty people were dancing and sat down, glad to be in a room heated by bodies. The lights were flashing in time to the music, but they weren't swirling so she didn't feel disoriented. The music had an insistent beat, but wasn't too loud. This place was all right. People came here to have a drink and dance with their friends. Guys would look at her because she was an attractive woman with long, blonde hair and blue eyes. But if any of them came over, she'd raise her left hand, show her wedding ring, and they'd get the message. She kept telling herself this until Jodie came back, holding two pints of beer.

Kelly raised her eyebrows. 'It turns out the vouchers are only for crappy drinks,' said Jodie.

Kelly took a sip from one of the glasses and made a face. 'It's half water.'

Jodie drank half of her pint. 'It's fucking gnat's piss. We're going to need ten of these to get any sort of buzz.'

'We'll spend the whole night peeing.'

Jodie slumped down in her chair. 'Free drinks, my arse.'

'If it sounds too good to be true'

Looking resolute, Jodie sat up. 'We'll have to do it the traditional way.'

Kelly felt anxious again. 'No, Jodie, it's mainly students in here. They don't have any money.'

'Some of them have rich daddies. And it's a couple of months since I last had a student. I wouldn't mind bagging another one. They think they're so smart, but they've got no idea what to do in bed. I love their look of fear when I make them go down on me.'

Kelly took another sip of the beer. It still didn't taste of anything, but she tried nodding appreciatively. 'Actually, this stuff's not bad. It'll do me.'

Jodie reached under the table, found Kelly's hand and squeezed it. 'What's bothering you?'

'I'm married,' said Kelly, through clenched teeth.

'You think it would piss Edward off?'

'No, I think it would turn him on.'

Jodie nodded understandingly.

‘I’m done with all that shit,’ said Kelly, decisively.

Jodie gave Kelly’s hand another squeeze. ‘Don’t worry, lovely. I was only joking about getting someone into bed. Nothing’s going to happen. We’ll have a few drinks and disappear into the night like a couple of Cinderellas.’

Kelly was still unsure.

‘Trust me,’ said Jodie, looking into Kelly’s eyes and holding her hand more tightly. ‘Imagine how fucking good that Smirnoff and lemonade will taste.’

Kelly found herself saying, ‘Okay.’

‘Good girl,’ said Jodie. ‘Ring.’

‘Do I have to?’

Jodie nodded. Kelly unscrewed the ring from her finger and put it in her purse.

‘What about them?’ asked Jodie, indicating two young guys on the dance floor.

Kelly shook her head. ‘They were lucky to get in. They’ll never get served at the bar.’

‘Those two then,’ said Jodie, more assertively.

Kelly followed Jodie’s gaze and saw two men sitting at a table. The younger one was wearing stonewashed jeans, a dark green t-shirt, and a black leather jacket. The older one had a blue collarless shirt, dark trousers, and tan-colored tactical boots. ‘No way,’ said Kelly. ‘One’s in his forties.’

Jodie smacked Kelly’s arm with the back of her hand. ‘There’s no pleasing you. Too young. Too old. You know what guys in their forties have? Jobs. You know what people with jobs have?’

‘And also, they’re ... black.’

Jodie turned on Kelly with sudden anger in her eyes. ‘So?’

Kelly gave a small conciliatory shake of her head. ‘How long have you known me, Jodie? When have you ever seen me with a black guy?’

‘Racist.’

‘I’m not racist. It’s just not my thing. I’ve nothing against guys with goatees, but I don’t want them in my bed.’

The anger had faded from Jodie’s eyes and she smiled. ‘How many times do I have to tell you, lovely? No one’s talking about your bed. We only want a few drinks.’

Kelly nodded and reluctantly joined Jodie in a routine they'd used a hundred times before. Grabbing Jodie's arm, Kelly pointed at the two men. Jodie acted like she hadn't noticed them before. She waited until the younger one caught her eye, then she lowered her gaze shyly. Kelly flashed a smile at the older one. He held her look for a few seconds, then stood up and walked toward them. He was tall and well-built, but what most struck Kelly was the way he walked. He didn't swagger, but there was a confidence about him as he approached. He looked like a man who was used to being in control. Jodie was obviously impressed too, for she gave a little moan of desire from the back of her throat.

'Can I buy you ladies a drink?' the man asked in an American accent.

'That'll be lovely,' said Jodie, with a warm smile. 'Two double vodkas and lemonade.'

He beckoned to his friend. The younger one came over but mumbled, 'I'll help him with the drinks.' They both went to the bar.

'Aw, he's shy,' said Jodie, when they were out of earshot. 'I'll have him, if that's okay.'

'What do you mean, you'll have him?' demanded Kelly, trying to fight a rising panic. 'What happened to disappearing like a couple of Cinderellas?'

Jodie grinned mischievously. 'We'll see how things play out.'

Kelly clenched her fists, but didn't say anything. She told herself she'd have one drink, say she was going to the toilet, and sneak out the door. If Jodie wanted to come with her, all well and good. If not, Jodie could fend for herself.

The men came back with a beer, a Coke, and two vodkas and lemonade. Kelly drank half of hers straight down and waited for it to take effect. The older man made the introductions. 'This is my friend, Anthony. My name's Trayvon—Tray to my friends.'

'Can I have a tea, Tray?' asked Jodie, trying to keep a straight face.

'I don't think you can get tea here,' said Anthony.

Tray gave Anthony a fatherly pat on the shoulder. 'That might have been a joke.'

'It's hard to tell with Jodie,' said Kelly.

'So, you're Jodie,' said Tray. 'And you're ...?'

'Kelly.' She smiled at them. The vodka was soaking into her brain and she felt more relaxed. Despite what she'd said about black guys not being her thing, she had to admit they were two good-looking men. They were both clean-shaven and had buzz-cut hair. Anthony was almost bald, with just a shadow covering his dome. It seemed that Jodie was right: he was shy. He spent a lot of time staring at the table. But when he did look up, he had a cheeky grin. Kelly thought he looked sweet. Tray's hair was a quarter of an inch long. He had prominent eyebrows, deep brown eyes, a strong, thick nose and full, sensuous lips. She realized she'd been looking at him for too long when he smiled back at her.

'Where are you guys from?' asked Kelly, to cover the moment of embarrassment.

'We're from the States,' replied Tray.

'No shit,' said Kelly, with a smile. 'What part?'

'Rapid City, South Dakota,' said Tray. Kelly nodded and tried to look like she knew the place well, but Tray obviously wasn't convinced because he added, 'It's near Mount Rushmore.'

'You know, all the guys' faces on the mountain,' said Kelly to Jodie, who still looked blank.

'Are you from this town?' asked Tray. He had a deep, soothing voice. Kelly couldn't imagine ever getting tired of hearing it.

'I am,' said Jodie. 'Kelly's from Liverpool.'

It was Anthony's turn to look blank. Tray told him, 'It's where the Beatles are from.'

Kelly rolled her eyes. 'One or two other people, as well.'

'What brought you to Cambridge?' Tray asked her.

Kelly felt her stomach tighten and her breathing quicken. 'I fancied a change of scene,' she said, quickly. Tray seemed to realize he shouldn't probe any further. 'What about you?' she asked.

'We're with the Air Force at Mildenhall,' said Tray.

'Are you pilots?' asked Jodie. 'Are you going to take us for a spin in your plane?'

Tray shook his head. 'We're ground pounders. The best we can do is show you our tool kits.'

Jodie looked at Kelly, and they both laughed. 'That might be the best offer we get tonight,' said Jodie.

Tray took a sip of his Coke. 'Please tell me half of that's Bacardi,' said Kelly.

Tray smiled thinly. 'Just Coke.'

‘Are you a Muslim?’ she asked.

‘No,’ said Tray. He looked at the floor for a moment, then said, ‘I’m driving.’

‘What sort of car have you got?’ asked Jodie.

‘It’s a convertible.’

‘You can still take us for a spin, then,’ said Jodie.

Kelly tried to give Jodie a warning look, but Jodie ignored her. Kelly finished her drink. Tray pointed at her glass, and without thinking, she nodded. ‘Same again?’ he said to Jodie.

‘Go for it,’ Jodie replied.

Tray got up and went off to the bar. Jodie turned to Anthony. ‘Do you want to dance?’

He looked a bit scared. ‘I’m not very good,’ he told the table.

‘I’ll lead.’ Jodie held out her hand and took Anthony onto the dance floor.

Kelly watched them. She’d always assumed—arrogantly, now that she thought about it—that she was prettier than Jodie. Jodie’s face was too square. But her long, curly black hair got her noticed and her smile said she liked to have fun. Jodie sometimes worried that she was too fat, but men seemed to like her curvy body and she never had any trouble attracting them. Anthony was actually a pretty good dancer. When the music slowed, Jodie put her arms around his neck. By the time Tray came back from the bar, Jodie and Anthony were kissing.

‘It looks like they’re having a good time,’ said Tray.

‘Jodie doesn’t mess about,’ agreed Kelly.

‘What about you?’

‘I mess about a lot.’ She tried for an enigmatic smile and immediately asked herself what she was doing.

‘I mean, do you want to dance?’

Kelly felt her breathing quicken again and tried to think of an excuse. ‘We don’t want to lose our table.’

‘We’ll stay close.’

He held out his hand. She felt like an ex-smoker being offered a cigarette. Part of her was saying, What harm will it do—just one time? But another part was insisting, It could be enough to get you hooked again. Nevertheless, she took his hand and stood up. The slow song was still playing and he took her in his arms. She breathed in a cologne she’d never smelt before and felt stronger arms than she was used to around her. She allowed herself to give in to the moment and rested her head on his broad chest. She would have to make sure things didn't go any further, but she could do that after the song had finished. This was all that was going to happen tonight, so she might as well enjoy it.

She wasn't sure how long she spent dancing with him. When they went back to their seats, Jodie and Anthony were sitting down and there were more drinks on the table. Kelly felt warm after her dance, and so drank quickly.

'Anthony says the car's outside. Why don't we all go for a ride?'

Had Jodie waited until Kelly finished her drink before making her suggestion?

When the other three stood up, Kelly knew what she had to do. She would say, That sounds great, but I've got to go. Nice meeting you both. Enjoy the rest of your time in England. Then she would shake hands with Tray and Anthony before walking out of the club.

But, somehow, she didn't do any of that. Instead, she stood up and followed them.

Chapter Two

At the back of the club, there was a small parking lot where a group of smokers had gathered in the light of the single street lamp. A man and woman were making out against the wall. There was also a man who didn't seem to be doing anything except watching. Kelly was glad to be with Tray and Anthony. No one would bother her while she was with two military men.

They got into the car. Sitting up front beside Tray, Kelly looked in the mirror and saw Jodie and Anthony in the back seat. Jodie's body language couldn't have been clearer. Her legs were spread invitingly, and she was gazing into Anthony's eyes with parted lips. Anthony was trying to act cool, but obviously couldn't believe his luck.

Kelly's head was spinning a little. She had three double vodkas inside her, which wasn't excessive, but they were affecting her more than normal. Maybe she hadn't eaten enough before they'd gone out. But she was feeling less anxious than she'd expected. She was in control. It was only a ride in a car. There was no doubt what Jodie and Anthony were going to do. That was up to Jodie: she was old enough to look after herself. But Kelly needed to find a way of getting herself home. They'd drop Jodie and Anthony off and then she'd ask Tray to take her back. She leaned against the headrest and closed her eyes just for a second.

The next thing she remembered was Tray shaking her gently. 'Kelly, are you coming in?'

She opened her eyes and asked, thickly, 'Are we home?'

'Yes,' said Tray. 'This is where we live.'

Everyone else had already gotten out of the car, and Kelly didn't see that she had much choice but to follow them. They were in a row of houses that all looked the same. The only difference between them was the number on the front door. They went into Number Twenty-Three. It was a small, basic house with a living room and kitchen on the ground floor. As they went through the front door, Kelly looked into the kitchen and was surprised not to see three days' worth of dishes piled up in the sink. Wasn't this a house where two guys lived on their own? They went through to the den, which was more clearly a boys' room. It was still clean, but there was a couch facing the TV and a games console on the floor. An old tea chest stood in for a coffee table.

‘You ladies sit down,’ said Tray. ‘I’ll bring some chairs in from the other room.’

Tray and Anthony went out. Anthony came back a moment later with a bottle of tequila and three glasses. Tray brought in two wooden chairs. Anthony poured the drinks, then knelt down and took a pack containing tobacco and cigarette papers out of his pocket. ‘I thought we should relax a bit more,’ he said. He put a paper on the tea chest. There was a small brown lump in the pack, which he heated over the flame of his lighter and then crumbled onto the paper. After covering it with tobacco, he rolled the joint and sealed it with deft moves of his fingers and tongue. He lit it and passed it to Jodie, whose lungs were hardened by twenty cigarettes a day. She took a long drag, held the smoke for ten seconds, then exhaled with a sigh. She passed the joint to Kelly, who hadn’t smoked anything in over a year. Kelly managed to take a mouthful of smoke down without coughing. When she offered the joint to Tray, he shook his head. Anthony took it from her.

As the joint was passed around, Kelly took three more drags. Feeling tired, lightheaded, and a bit sick, she was reminded why she’d never liked this stuff.

When the joint was so short there wasn’t room for both fingers and lips around it, Anthony stubbed it out. Jodie stood up and held out her hand to Anthony, who took it and followed her out of the room without another word. ‘And then there were two,’ said Tray, in that deep voice of his. He sat on the couch where Jodie had been sitting.

Kelly took a sip of her drink. Offering Tray the glass, she said, ‘You’ve been good all night. You’re not driving now.’

When she heard herself say that, she wondered again what she was doing. Wasn’t the plan that he’d drive her home? But he shook his head again.

Her right middle finger was sore and she rubbed it. ‘Are you okay?’ asked Tray.

‘Burnt myself on the joint.’

‘You want me to kiss it better?’

‘You have healing lips?’

Tray grinned. ‘Oh yes. It’s a gift. One kiss from my lips, the lame can see and the blind can walk.’

‘Shouldn’t that be the other way ’round?’

‘Yes, it should. It’s not a great gift. Shall I have a go on your hand anyway?’ He took her right hand in his and kissed the red mark on her finger.

His lips felt soft and warm. Even though he only kissed her finger, her whole body responded in a way that frightened her.

She found herself falling into patterns of behavior that were all too familiar, running her eyes down his body and back up to his face. She gave him a smile that showed she liked what she saw. She looked into his eyes and held the smile for a few seconds, then lowered her gaze and bit the corner of her lip.

She stopped and looked away, telling herself she had a choice. She was shaking with desire for Tray, but she didn’t have to give in to her body’s demands. She could say, ‘Take me home, please.’ And she was still sure he would. But it wasn’t only her body: her mind also worked against her, asking her to picture what it would be like to watch Tray undressing. It had been eight months since she’d last seen a man taking off his clothes for the first time. Her mind wouldn’t stop taunting her—reminding her how much she loved that moment. Would the man have a hairy chest, tattoos, moles, or freckles? Would he be toned or flabby? Would his cock be long and thin or short and thick? Maybe she’d hit the jackpot and get one that was long and thick. Whatever she found, exploring a man’s body for the first time gave her the same delicious anticipation as unwrapping a Christmas present.

She also wanted to hear those little noises of surprise and wonder that men always made when they first uncovered her body. She often hated her breasts for the attention they attracted. But in bed with a man, she enjoyed the cry of ‘Wow!’ or ‘Holy crap!’ when he saw her tits. Some guys said they preferred small boobs. Others said they were leg men who weren’t interested in breasts at all. But Kelly had never known a man whose mouth didn’t fall open with delight at the first sight of her 42Ds.

And then she’d discover what he did to excite a woman. Would he spend a long time on foreplay or would he be desperate to get inside her as quickly as possible? Would he try words of love or dirty talk? Or maybe he’d shut up during sex. That would be a change.

Tray cut in on the thoughts racing through her mind. ‘Would you like to see my room? I can show you my tropical fish.’

That’s a line I haven’t heard before, thought Kelly. She stood up and followed him without any more thought. She felt as if she was bowing to the inevitable.

The upstairs landing was four square feet with three doors leading off it. 'Bathroom,' said Tray, pointing to the door nearest the stairs. Kelly could hear Jodie's voice from behind the next door. Kelly couldn't hear the words but the tone suggested that Jodie was taking charge and issuing instructions. Tray opened the third door. The tropical fish were in a tank on top of the dresser. He pointed at them vaguely. Taking a quick look, she made the obligatory cry of, 'Nemo!' when she saw the clownfish. But she wasn't too surprised to learn that Tray's focus was not on fish.

She lay down on the bed. She expected him to lie next to her, but instead, he stood in the middle of the room and started taking his clothes off. Lifting her head, she watched as he unbuttoned his shirt. She held her breath as she saw his torso for the first time. He was in good shape. It wasn't a gym rat's body, but rather the body of a man who did manual work every day. His pecs and biceps were well developed, but they didn't bulge impossibly and they weren't covered with stringy veins. His skin was a warm brown and his chest and arms were covered with a fuzz of short black curls. Taking off his trousers, he revealed white boxer shorts. His thighs were strong and covered with longer hairs. There was no doubt his body was better than Edward's. As soon as that thought crossed her mind, a different voice in her head said, Yes, Edward. Remember him? Your husband? So, what are you doing in another man's bedroom, watching him undress?

She wished that voice had spoken up earlier, before she'd come upstairs. She could tell Tray to stop, put his clothes back on, and drive her home. But he might get angry. He'd definitely want to know why. And she didn't want to admit that she'd pretended to be single to get free drinks out of him. So instead, she decided to try something she used to do when she was a child. Her head was already on the pillow so all she had to do was close her eyes and breathe heavily.

'Kelly,' said Tray, softly. 'Kelly, are you asleep?' She didn't say anything. He paused for a moment, then added, 'People aren't usually this bored when I take my clothes off.'

Still, she said nothing. After a minute, Tray chuckled and said, 'Oh, man.' He switched the light out and lay down beside her. Kelly kept her eyes shut but was alert to anything he might do. Would he take advantage of a sleeping woman? And what could she do if he did? He was obviously a strong guy, so she couldn't

She heard a quiet snore from the pillow beside her.

Her first reaction was surprise. She couldn't think of any other man who would do this. Edward would at least have taken the opportunity to look down her t-shirt.

Her next feeling was one of gratitude toward Tray. He could have done anything and he'd chosen to leave her alone. Even so, it didn't seem like a good idea to stay there. She thought it possible that he'd make a more concerted effort to seduce her in the morning.

Kelly knew what she had to do. The first thing was to get out of bed. She was on the side nearest the wall, so she'd have to climb over Tray. But if he was in a deep enough sleep, that should be possible. It was a pity he hadn't been drinking. Experience had taught her that you could bounce all over a man in a drunken stupor without waking him up. Jodie should have finished with Anthony by now, so Kelly would go into his room and get her. They could let themselves out of the house and go home. But where were they? Kelly had been asleep in the car and Jodie had been too busy with Anthony to notice what route they'd taken. They could walk to the nearest crossroads, see a street sign, and call a taxi. Though they only had a couple of pounds between them, the driver might take pity on two girls out in the middle of the night. Failing that, there'd been times in the past when taxi drivers had let them off the fare if they flashed their boobs.

It was a plan, and she'd put it into effect almost immediately. She just needed to close her eyes for a second and gather her strength.

'Good morning,' said a voice from somewhere.

She woke up and immediately started shaking. She was facing a wall she didn't recognize. Where was she? Why was she here?

'Did you sleep well?' asked the same voice.

She rolled over in bed, saw the fish tank on the other side of the room, and remembered where she was. Tray was standing by the door, wearing a blue uniform. There were two strips on the front of his blouse that read ROBINSON and U.S. AIR FORCE. 'I have to go to work,' he said.

'It's Saturday,' mumbled Kelly.

'It's not a regular nine to five. I've got time to take you home, if you want.'

She nodded and sat up. She was still wearing her white t-shirt. Pretending to scratch her shoulders, she found her bra was in place. Her skirt and stockings were on. When she squeezed her legs together, she felt her panties. Not even her shoes had been taken off. She looked at Tray and said, 'Thank you.'

'What for?'

'Just thank you. Where's Jodie?'

'Still in Anthony's room, I guess.'

Kelly stood up and followed Tray into the landing. She opened the door of the other bedroom and saw Jodie lying on the bed, a duvet covering the lower half of her body. Her right arm was crooked behind her head, showing the purple rose tattoo on the inside of her forearm. It also gave them a good view of her breasts. 'You shouldn't be looking,' said Kelly to Tray.

Anthony was sleeping next to Jodie. His body was nice, but not as good as Tray's. He'd had less time to work on it. 'You probably shouldn't be looking at Anthony,' replied Tray. 'They look peaceful, so why not leave them? Anthony's not working today. He'll make sure she gets home.'

'I'm not going without her,' said Kelly. She went into the room and shook Jodie. 'Come on, lovely, it's time to go.'

'Fuck off,' moaned Jodie and rolled over in bed.

Kelly kept on shaking her. 'When we get home, you can sleep as much as you want.' Kelly lifted the duvet cautiously. As she'd suspected, Jodie was naked. 'Could you give us a minute?' Kelly asked Tray.

'I'll wait for you downstairs. It'll have to be quick, though.'

Jodie's clothes were in a pile by the bed. Kelly helped Jodie into her blouse and got her to stand up, step into her skirt, and put her shoes on. Picking up the rest of Jodie's clothes, she said, 'Come on. Let's go.'

'Just a sec.' Jodie leaned over the bed and kissed the sleeping Anthony on the forehead. 'Thanks for a good night, darling.'

Tray was waiting at the front door. Going outside, they got into the car. The sun was coming up, but it was still cold. Kelly looked at the clock in the car and groaned, 'It's six o'clock. It's still the middle of the night.'

Tray laughed ruefully. 'Believe me, I'd much rather still be in bed. But I start work at seven.'

They drove back into town. Once Kelly knew where they were, she gave Tray directions. She wondered if she should get him to drop them a few streets from their apartment, but decided that wasn't necessary. He'd had every opportunity to indulge any psychotic tendencies, and he hadn't taken them. Stopping the car outside their building, he wrote a number on a piece of paper and handed it to her. 'If you'd like another drink—or a place to pass out—sometime.'

She took the piece of paper and put it in her purse. Leaning across, she kissed him on the cheek.

Jodie had fallen asleep in the back. Kelly helped her out of the car and marched her up the drive, stopping to wave goodbye as Tray drove off.

Once they were in Jodie's bedroom, Jodie took off her clothes and got into bed, naked. Kelly kicked off her shoes and lay on the bed next to her. Soon, they were both asleep.

Chapter Three

They slept for an hour. Kelly woke up when Jodie turned over in bed. 'Hello, lovely,' said Jodie, in a throaty growl.

'I'm mad at you,' said Kelly.

Jodie woke up a bit more and raised her eyebrows. 'What the fuck have I done?'

'You know what you did. You said you'd look after me and we ended up back at some guys' house.'

Jodie nodded. 'Yeah, you're right. I'm sorry.' Jodie rolled onto her front and pulled the blankets away to expose her naked ass. 'We know what happens to bad girls.' Kelly spanked Jodie twice. When Jodie turned back onto her side, she was smiling happily rather than looking chastened. 'So, what do you think of black cock?' she asked.

Kelly did her best to look outraged. 'What sort of question is that to ask a married woman?'

Jodie gave Kelly a skeptical look. 'You spent the night in Tray's room and nothing happened? What were you doing, playing Scrabble?'

'It was late. We were in a bed. What do you think we were doing?'

'Fucking.'

'No. Sleeping.'

Jodie looked surprised. 'So, you're not joking? Nothing at all?'

'Pretty much. We went up to his room. He took his clothes off.'

Jodie's eyes widened. 'What's his body like?'

'The guy's in shape.'

'And ...?'

'Let me check something.'

Kelly got up from the bed and left the room. She opened the door of the other bedroom and looked inside. There was nobody there. On her way back to Jodie's room, she stopped off in the kitchenette to take a bottle of Coke out of the fridge. 'I need water and caffeine. I can't be arsed to make coffee.' She drank from the bottle and handed it to Jodie. 'I wanted to check Edward's not back.'

'He won't be home for a couple of hours.'

'Sometimes they knock off early if they're not busy.'

'So you watched Tray take his clothes off. You liked his body and you still decided not to fuck him?'

'That's right,' said Kelly, proudly.

Jodie shook her head in disbelief and perhaps a touch of awe. ‘A few months ago, he wouldn’t have stood a chance. You’d have been riding his dick until dawn.’

Kelly smiled smugly. ‘That was the old me.’

‘The poor guy must have gone to bed with a wicked hard-on,’ said Jodie, giggling.

‘If he did, he kept quiet about it. A real man can control his urges.’

Jodie shook her head again. ‘Look at you, all grown up, staying faithful to your man. It was only about three days after you declared your love for Edward that I came back and found you on the bathroom floor with Preston.’

‘You weren’t supposed to be home so early,’ said Kelly.

Jodie gave Kelly a knowing look. ‘And I’m pretty sure it wasn’t your cunt he was enjoying.’

‘Jodie,’ said Kelly, seriously, ‘keep quiet about that. Edward thinks I’m still a virgin back there. I’ve told him that’s going to be his treat when we’ve been together five years.’

Jodie snorted. ‘Your asshole’s been visited so often, it’s listed on Trip Advisor.’

Kelly thought about spanking Jodie again, but just said, ‘There are some things my husband doesn’t need to know. And that’s the key word here—husband.’ Kelly raised her left hand and was about to point to her ring when she realized she hadn’t put it back on. ‘Yes, I cheated on Edward when we first got together, because ... well, it’s what I did.’

‘We both did,’ admitted Jodie. Then she added, ‘I still do.’

‘I thought Edward was just another guy passing through my bedroom on his way somewhere else. But he kept coming back and I started thinking maybe he was the one for me. I had to try something scary—a relationship.’

Jodie shook her head. ‘You’ll never catch me going down that road again.’

Kelly saw the sadness in Jodie’s eyes and hugged her. ‘Not all guys are like Gary,’ said Kelly.

‘I know,’ said Jodie. ‘Edward’s a nice guy.’

‘That’s why I married him. And that’s why I’m going to stay faithful to him. You could put me in a room with the most gorgeous fellas in the world, all bollock naked, and we’d talk about the weather.’

‘Don’t you ever miss going with other guys?’

Kelly tried to stop her mind from traveling back to how much she loved being with a man for the first time. ‘Sometimes,’ she admitted. ‘But it’s worth it to be with Edward.’

Maybe Kelly didn’t sound convincing, because Jodie gave her an accusing look and asked her, ‘You didn’t turn Tray down because he’s black?’

‘No! I told you, it’s because—’

‘Because you know what they say,’ Jodie broke in with a mischievous look, ‘Once you go black Are you worried that if you get a taste of big black cock, your husband’s little white willy won’t satisfy you again?’

Kelly pulled the blankets away and gave Jodie another hard slap across her buttocks.

‘Sorry,’ said Jodie, but spoiled the apology by grinning.

‘Speaking of black cock,’ said Kelly, ‘what did you and Anthony get up to?’

Jodie laughed. ‘He was adorable. Can you keep a secret?’

Kelly’s eyes hardened. ‘I’ve spent my whole life keeping secrets.’

Jodie gave her a quick hug and then said in a conspiratorial whisper, ‘It was his first time.’

Kelly gasped. ‘A real live virgin!’

Jodie smiled wickedly. ‘Not anymore, he isn’t!’

‘You slut!’

‘It’s the same old story. A boy goes off to join the Army and comes back a man.’

‘They’re in the Air Force, not the Army.’

‘Whatever.’

‘You did say you wanted to teach someone the art of love.’

Jodie smiled affectionately. ‘It was only his first lesson, so we started slowly. We sat on his bed and kissed for a long time. I think he’d done that before. He seemed to know what he was doing. I was rubbing my leg against his, putting my hand up his shirt, and’ she trailed off.

‘Tell me,’ said Kelly.

‘He froze and his eyes kind of disappeared inside his head.’

Kelly’s mouth fell open. ‘You think he ...?’

‘Yup, I’m pretty sure he came.’

Kelly grimaced. ‘Uh-oh.’

‘That’s what I thought. Guys sometimes get very sensitive when that happens. He could have gone off in a sulk or started crying, and I’d have spent the rest of the fucking night telling him it was okay, it happens to everyone, blah blah blah. But he just went on kissing me.’

‘At his age, he can probably get it up again fairly quickly.’

‘Very quickly. There was an impressive bulge in his pants before too long. But he was still shy and kept asking, “Is it okay to touch your butt? Can I see your titties?”’

‘Titties?’

Jodie shrugged. ‘If that’s what he wants to call them. I said, “Darling, do what you want. I’ll soon let you know if you do anything I don’t like.” That made him a bit more confident. He took off my blouse and bra. He said, “You’ve got big titties.”’

‘Nothing gets past him,’ said Kelly, looking at Jodie’s 38Ds.

‘He lay me down on the bed and stroked them. He put his lips around my left nipple and sucked. I said, “Don’t be afraid to use your teeth.” He bit me so gently, it was more like being kissed. I said, “You can do better than that, darling.” That was my mistake. He moved on to the right one and nearly bit my fucking nipple off. I screamed, but he probably thought it was ecstasy.’

‘He’ll learn.’

‘He’d better learn quickly. I had to slap him on the shoulder a couple of times to get him to stop.’

‘Is it still sore?’ asked Kelly, taking Jodie’s right nipple between her finger and thumb and twisting it.

Jodie winced, but then giggled. ‘Of course it’s still sore, you cunt.’

‘Sorry,’ said Kelly, twisting it again.

‘Ouch,’ said Jodie, but she was still laughing. ‘You’ve got to let me do that to you now.’

‘Fair enough,’ said Kelly. She sat up and took off her t-shirt, then pulled the left cup of her bra until her breast popped out. Jodie looked Kelly in the eye as she twisted Kelly’s nipple. Kelly enjoyed the mixture of pleasure and pain, but what she loved most was the way Jodie’s eyes shone when they were fooling around like this.

‘Then what did he do?’ asked Kelly.

‘It’s more what I did. I asked him to call me names.’

Kelly nodded. ‘Your favorite.’

‘One of my favorites,’ said Jodie, with a knowing smile. ‘Unfortunately, he got confused. He thought I meant, “Say my name,” and started going, “Jodie, oh Jodie.” ’

‘At least he got your name right.’

‘It might have been more of a turn-on if he’d got it wrong.’ Jodie bit her lip. ‘Imagine if he’d said “Kelly” by mistake.’

‘He was thinking it,’ said Kelly, in a matter-of-fact voice. ‘Guys who have met both of us are always thinking of me when they’re fucking you.’

Jodie slapped Kelly on the upper arm. ‘Bitch.’

‘Slut,’ responded Kelly, kissing the top of Jodie’s head.

‘Anyway,’ continued Jodie. ‘He stood up and took his shirt off. A bit too skinny for me—’

‘I saw him this morning. He looked okay.’

‘With a bit of luck, he’ll fill out. He turned his back as he was pulling down his trousers, so I couldn’t see if he had to wipe cum off his cock.’

‘And how was his cock?’

Jodie smiled. ‘Not huge, lengthwise—six inches maybe. But it was bloody thick. I could only just get my hand around it.’

‘And your lips?’

‘I had to open wide, but I managed it.’

‘Did it taste ... you know ... different?’

Jodie frowned as if thinking back over all the cocks she’d tasted. ‘Not much different from any other, I’d say.’

‘Did he cum in your mouth?’

‘No, he wanted my cunt.’

‘Please tell me he used something.’

Jodie paused and looked away. ‘I can’t remember.’

‘Oh, Jodie!’ said Kelly, in an exasperated voice.

‘I know, but it always slows things down, getting it out of the packet and putting it on.’

‘You know what really slows things down? Having a kid. That’ll slow you down for the next twenty years.’

‘You haven’t always been careful,’ retorted Jodie.

Kelly felt a mixture of sadness and anger. ‘I know, but ... I’m pretty sure I can’t get pregnant. I think everything that happened fucked me up down there.’

Jodie gave her another hug. There was an awkward pause. ‘Well, come on,’ said Kelly. ‘A black guy wanted your cunt. You can’t leave the story there.’

Jodie looked relieved. ‘Okay, well, I wasn’t going to stay on my back. The missionary position’s no good for inexperienced guys. They can never find their way. So, I got on my hands and knees—’

‘The door was open in front of him. All he had to do was go in.’

‘Exactly. And he did well. He got in first time and started fucking me from behind. I didn’t feel much at first. He was doing those wimpy one-inch thrusts that guys do when they’re scared of cumming. I suppose I should have let him concentrate, but I told him to smack my bum. He gave it this gentle little tap at first, and I had to tell him, “Go for it, Anthony! My arse thinks you’re a pussy.”’

‘Huh?’ queried Kelly.

‘I know,’ admitted Jodie. ‘I was a bit drunk. But it did the trick. He started laying into me properly. I’m surprised you didn’t hear.’

‘I’m sure we were asleep by then.’

Jodie rolled over to show Kelly her buttocks. ‘Did he leave any marks?’

‘Not really. Your cheeks are a bit pink, but that’s more because of me.’

Jodie turned back to face Kelly again. ‘The first time didn’t last long.’

‘No surprise.’

‘Afterwards, we had a bit of a cuddle. He didn’t say much. I think he was worried he’d say something stupid and break the spell.’

‘He was hoping to get asked back for another go.’

Jodie smiled dreamily. ‘Oh, he was ready for another go after twenty minutes. As you say, at that age’

‘So you got fucked twice? Lucky bitch.’ Jodie didn’t say anything, but held up three fingers. ‘Wow!’ said Kelly, impressed.

‘I soon felt something poking into my thigh. Before I knew it, I was back on my hands and knees. I told him my hair hated him, as well. He got the message and started pulling it. This time, he gave me a pretty good fucking from behind. Once he got into his stride, he did a good job.’

‘And the third time?’

‘He lay on his back with his dick pointed at the ceiling, and I climbed on. His balls were pretty much empty by then, so there was no danger of him cumming too soon. I could focus on me. I rubbed my clit while I was riding him and had a pretty good cum. His eyes were out on stalks as he watched. He'd never met a girl like me before.'

'Never seen such a slut,' said Kelly.

'Bitch,' replied Jodie, with a smile.

'Whore.'

'Slag.'

Kelly couldn't think of anything else to call her. They both laughed. 'So, is it true what they say?' asked Kelly. 'Are you never going back?'

Jodie snorted again. 'What they say is bollocks. I had a good time with a black lad last night, but that's not going to stop me going after the next hot white guy I meet.'

'Are you going to see Anthony again?'

Jodie considered for a moment. 'Yes, probably ... yes, definitely. There are still some things I can teach him. I'll turn him into a sex god and then release him back into the wild. Women all over the world will be raising a glass to his unknown teacher.'

'Tray gave me their number, so you can call him any time you want.'

'Let me have it. I want to see if he's around tomorrow.'

'You're keen.'

'Are you going to see Tray again?'

Kelly shook her head. 'No.' She rolled onto her back and stared at the ceiling. 'I'd better not,' she added, a little sadly.

'And you said you weren't into black guys,' said Jodie, in a gently teasing voice.

'Not black guys,' insisted Kelly. 'Just this one guy.' She shook herself. 'And I don't really like him. It was the vodka goggles.' Sitting up, she said, 'Anyway, I'm going to bed. Maybe I can convince Edward I've been in all night. Tell him that if he asks, will you, lovely?'

'Why not tell him the truth?'

Kelly sighed. 'Because he'd want to know every detail. Do you know how many times I've had to tell him about Preston?'

'I was thinking, if your husband's turned on by you with other men, why don't you just—?'

'No,' said Kelly, firmly. 'That's not what marriage is about.'

'Up to you.'

'So where was I last night?'

'Tucked up all alone in your own bed like a good girl.'

Kelly kissed Jodie on the lips. 'Well done. And that's exactly what I'm going to do now.'

'Okay. Can you do one thing before you go?'

'What's that?'

'Could you twist my nipple again?'

'Kinky bitch,' said Kelly with a grin. She grabbed Jodie's right nipple and twisted it hard.

Jodie gasped and said, 'Thank you. Do you want me to return the favor?'

'Go on, then,' said Kelly and offered her breast to Jodie again.

Jodie took hold of Kelly's left nipple and turned it sixty degrees. 'Some might say this is cheating on your husband,' said Jodie, slyly.

Kelly shook her head. 'We're only playing. If I ate your pussy every night, there might be an issue. But what we do is no more serious than tickling.'

'I suppose,' said Jodie, then waggled her eyebrows at Kelly. 'But if you want to try eating my pussy ... see if you like it—'

'In your dreams. Anyway, your pussy's seen enough action for the time being. Give the poor thing a rest before you see Anthony again.'

Kelly kissed Jodie again and went into her own room. She took off her clothes and put them in the laundry basket. Before she got into bed, she remembered to take the ring out of her purse and put it back on her finger. Fooling around with Jodie had made her wet. She put two fingers inside her cunt to moisten them and then rubbed her clit. At first, she kept her thoughts faithful. She thought about Edward and what he might do to her when he came home. As she drifted toward sleep, the images in her head became more confused. She thought of what Anthony had been doing to Jodie. These morphed into scenes of Tray doing things like that to her. She knew it would never happen, but they weren't unpleasant thoughts to have in her head as she went to sleep.

Chapter Four

Edward looked at his watch. Twenty minutes to go. Taking off his face mask, he drained his can of Coke. Even in winter, the huge kilns made the factory unbearably hot. He felt sorry for the bottle blowers who had to spend all night working in front of the kiln mouths.

The conveyer belt rattled to life again. He put the can down as the first double glazing unit arrived. He checked it over and couldn't see any faults. Smoothing out the sealant with a damp cloth, he put the unit on the trolley. He'd spent the first part of the night putting glass onto the belt. He was spending the second half taking glass off the belt. He had to admit there was plenty of variety in this job. When the trolley was full, he signaled Ahmed to stop the belt and pushed the trolley toward the storage bay. If he took his time, it might be eight o'clock before he got back. It had been a long night and he was tired. At times like this, he always remembered that record his mother used to play and thought Dolly Parton didn't know how lucky she was. Working nine to five was a great way to make a living. Working nights, on the other hand, left him feeling permanently jetlagged.

People were gathering around the clock when he returned with the empty trolley. Dennis, the man who did his job during the day, had arrived and was talking to Ahmed. Edward waved goodbye in their general direction. All the machines were running smoothly, so there was nothing Dennis needed to know. He lined up with the others and fed his card into the clock. The time stamp read 8:06. No one could complain about that.

Stuffing his mask into the pocket of his coat, he coughed five times. Despite the mask, he always left work feeling like microscopic shards of glass were clogging up his lungs. He walked through Cambridge in the cold morning sun. The colleges—long, low buildings in gray stone and red brick—could almost be prisons, with chapel spires doubling as watch towers. Were they keeping the students in or everyone else out?

The streets of Cambridge were never deserted. A group of rowers headed down to the river. Two girls in party dresses had taken off their high heels and ran down the road, laughing hysterically. A guy of about nineteen lurched past, wearing a suit with his tie loosened and his collar undone. Clutching a bottle of red wine, he had the look of a student, staggering back to his college after an all-night party. His crinkle-eyed squint said he was seeing the morning sun before he'd been to bed. But underneath that, Edward noticed, the young man still had the self-satisfied look a lot of students had—the one that said, I belong to the elite; I am one of the best minds of my generation.

Edward hated him, and badly wanted to be like him. For a while, it had seemed inevitable that Edward would end up at Cambridge University. While the other boys in his school had played cricket, he had been in Mister Turner's study, discussing twentieth-century history. They had dissected every detail of why Germany, a country that had produced some of the world's finest intellects, had given credence to such a brutishly anti-intellectual group as the Nazis. Turner had encouraged Edward in his efforts to distil a coherent ideology from Mussolini's speeches. Eventually, they had both concluded there was little more than vaguely socialistic ideas backed up with violence. Edward felt at home in the world of books, academic journals, and discussions of matters that were safely in the past. He didn't like talking about modern politics or religion, because they caused passions to run too high. But history could be explored in a spirit of pure academic curiosity.

Turner had always said that Edward should apply to Cambridge University—mainly because Turner himself had gone there. Edward wondered what his day would be like if he were a student, like the one who had just passed him. He knew exactly where he'd go. The Cambridge University Library was an imposing red-brick building that looked more like the justice ministry of a fascist state than a hall of learning. But there were more than eight-million books and journals inside. Browsing the shelves would be a perfect way to spend his Saturday.

Edward shook the daydream away and told himself he should be happy with his life. However smart that student thought he was, he wouldn't be going home to Kelly. If that guy had a girlfriend, she'd be called Alice, Emily, or some other name that promised dull, vanilla lovemaking. She'd be slim and pretty, but wouldn't be sexy, not the way Kelly was. And she'd have small, posh girl's boobs with pale nipples—quiet, unobtrusive breasts that didn't like to make a fuss. He thought of Kelly's 42Ds with their nipples like ripe raspberries, and his cock stiffened. The first thing he'd do when he got home would be to bury his face in them.

He put his key in the lock and opened the front door. The place where they lived had once been a spacious, semi-detached Victorian house. It had since been divided into five small apartments. He unlocked a second door and went straight into their living room. Three old armchairs were arranged in a semicircle around a large flat-screen television, which looked out of place. A present from Edward's aunt, it was more expensive than anything else in the apartment. One corner of the living room had been turned into a kitchenette with a sink, cooker, and fridge. There were three doors off the living room. They led to the bathroom, Jodie's room, and the room he shared with Kelly.

There was some mail on the back of one of the armchairs, but most of it looked like bills. Edward couldn't face that right now. Looking through the open door of Jodie's room, he saw she was sleeping. He went into the main bedroom, where Kelly, with her back to him, was curled into a ball on the side of the bed nearest the wall. He opened the laundry basket and was hit by the smell of cannabis. He picked up Kelly's t-shirt and sniffed it. There was a mixture of smoke and Kelly's perfume, but Edward thought he also smelt something else.

Taking off his own clothes, he put them into the basket and got into bed, naked. 'All right?' said Kelly, sleepily. She turned around and kissed him.

'How's it going?' he asked.

'I'm a bit tired.'

'Did you have a good evening?'

She wrinkled her nose. 'It was okay. The club was pretty dead. How was work?'

'Same as always. I stink of sealant.'

She kissed his shoulder and breathed in deeply. 'I'm used to it. It reminds me of you.'

'Speaking of smells, Kelly, I'm a bit stoned from opening the dirty clothes basket.'

Edward thought her laugh sounded forced. 'Jodie had a joint. You know what she's like.'

'She hasn't got drugs in the flat, has she?'

'No, this guy gave it to her.'

Edward frowned. 'He was dealing in the club?'

'No, it was when we went outside for some air.'

'It's strong on your clothes.'

'Actually, we were in a car.'

'What car?'

Kelly definitely looked guilty, but she spoke casually. 'This guy who gave her the joint—he's called Anthony—was totally into her. He was there with his mate. We went to sit in their car. Bit stupid, I know, but they were all right.'

'Who was the other one—his mate?'

She shrugged. 'Just a guy.'

'Was he interested in you?'

'He might have been. If he was, he didn't say anything. He certainly didn't get anywhere.' She held up her left hand. 'I had my man-repelling ring on at all times.'

'Did you dance with him?'

She held up both hands in an Okay, you got me gesture. 'One dance. He did buy me a drink.'

'Did he have his arms around you?'

'Well ... yes, but it was only dancing.'

Edward could feel his cock stirring. He moved away from Kelly a little so she wouldn't notice it. 'How did it feel?'

'It was okay. I'd rather have been in your arms.'

'Were you turned on?'

'It was a dance. Anyway, I'm not into black guys.'

Edward's eyes widened. 'They were black?'

'Yes.'

Suddenly, Edward's cock was fully erect. 'So, you danced with a big, black man? Did he kiss you?'

'No.'

'Did you want him to?'

'No.'

'What happened next?'

She shook her head. 'There's nothing to tell, my love.'

'So how did your clothes end up smelling like that?'

'They gave us a lift home, like perfect gentlemen. Anthony fired up the spliff in the car. Tray didn't have any, so he was safe to drive.'

'Your guy was called Tray?'

'He's not my guy. You're my guy.'

'Yes, sorry. Then what happened?'

'They dropped us off and Anthony came in. Then he and Jodie had sex.'

‘What did Tray do?’

She gave another shrug. This time, it was a bit too exaggerated. ‘I didn’t see him again. I assume he went home.’

‘Jodie’s alone in her room now. How did ... Anthony get home?’

Kelly looked guilty again, but her tone became annoyed. ‘I don’t know, Edward. I was asleep. I didn’t take notes on everything he did.’

‘So, going back to the club, how did you feel when you were dancing with Tray?’

‘Nothing, really. It was only a dance. Look, lovely, I promised you, it’s just you and me now.’ Kelly looked into his eyes. ‘You’re my husband. That means you’re the only man who gets to be with me.’

She pulled the quilt away to show him her body—the body he’d been dreaming about on the way home. She often complained her thighs were too big, but he loved their warm softness. The other thing she didn’t like about her body was her round belly. She kept saying she would go on a diet and take more exercise. But he didn’t want her to change something that looked so womanly. She seemed more comfortable with her large breasts now. When they’d first gotten together, there’d been dark talk of a reduction. But now she seemed to enjoy the attention he lavished on them every time they were in bed.

She grabbed his right hand and put it on her left breast. ‘You’re the only one who gets to touch me. And,’ she rolled onto her back and spread her legs, ‘you’re the only one who fucks me.’ He put his finger at the entrance to her cunt and gasped.

‘You’re soaking!’ he said, in a voice strangled with desire. ‘What have you been thinking about?’

‘You!’ she said, and kissed him.

No one kissed the way Kelly did. There was something invasive about the way she pushed her whole tongue into his mouth. It had shocked him the first time. But now he loved the aggression of Kelly’s kiss and the passion it promised.

She reached down and took hold of Edward’s cock. ‘You’re ready, my love,’ she said. ‘Fuck me.’

Edward got on top of her. She was so wet, it was hard to keep his cock inside her. Kelly never just lay there. As he moved inside her, she thrust back, doubling the intensity. This had taken some time to get right, but now they were perfectly synchronized. Despite this, he wanted something else.

‘Talk to me,’ he said. He knew he’d cum too quickly if he stayed inside her, so he slid off. He saw her look of frustration so he put two fingers inside her and moved them in and out.

‘Wouldn’t you rather fuck than talk?’ she asked.

‘I’d rather talk then fuck.’

‘What do you want to talk about?’ asked Kelly in a resigned voice, as if she knew only too well.

‘Tell me what you want the big, black man to do to you.’

She shook her head. ‘I don’t want him to do anything. I haven’t thought about him since he dropped us off.’

Edward persisted, ‘But imagine that black cock. It would be so much bigger than mine.’

‘Maybe. But I want yours.’

‘He’d give you the best fuck of your life.’

‘Sorry, my love. I’m not into black guys.’

Edward was disappointed. But if Kelly couldn’t be persuaded to talk about her and a black man, maybe she’d offer him a consolation prize. ‘Okay, tell me about Preston.’

Kelly started to roll her eyes, but then said quietly, ‘We’ve talked about him a hundred times.’

‘There might be some detail you didn’t mention before.’

She shook her head and sighed. ‘If I was trying to get off drugs, would you make me tell you about all the great times I had while high?’

‘Just one more time, then I’ll never ask you again.’

‘Promise?’

‘I promise. Now, I want to hear everything from the moment you first saw him.’

Kelly sighed again, more loudly this time, but Edward pretended not to notice. ‘It was a few days after we started going out,’ she began. ‘I had to go to this workshop in Shire Hall to help me find a job. It was like being back at school, sitting at a desk with someone at the front banging on. The woman was telling us how we should dress all conservative for interviews. Like I was going to show up in just a thong. My mind soon wandered and so did my eye. There was a guy at the other side of the class who was as bored as me. He had a bit of a David Bowie look going on with his floppy brown hair and blue eyes. He was wearing a purple Fred Perry t-shirt that showed off the tats up each arm. It didn’t take him long to notice me too.’

Looking at each other was more fun than listening to Missy Whatsername. When she told us we could go to the coffee machine, he came up and talked to me. We decided to sack off the rest of the workshop and go for a drink in the pub across the road. Neither of us had much money, so we had half a lager between us. We didn't talk much. We both knew this wasn't about being friends. He lived with his mam and she was at home, so we couldn't go back to his place. But I knew Jodie was out, so going to mine was okay. When we got there, we sat on the sofa. He tried the old trick of seeing if I was ticklish. He soon had me rolling about, laughing. Then it went from playing silly games to pure lust. He kissed me on the lips. I felt his bulge and it was rock hard. I had to unzip and have a look.'

Edward lay on his back so he could use his left hand on Kelly's clit while he put his right around his cock. He knew that if she touched it, he'd cum before the story was over and he didn't want that. He looked at her sideways and asked, 'How big was his cock?'

'It was a good size—maybe seven inches.'

'Bigger than mine.'

She nodded. 'A bit bigger, yes.'

Edward had to take his hand off his cock. He concentrated on rubbing Kelly faster. He wanted her to be as turned on as he was.

She continued, 'I put my lips on it and kissed it. I would have sucked him there on the sofa but he wanted to take it into the bedroom. It was a cold day, so he had to pull down my jeans, leggings, and knickers. He said it was like playing pass the parcel: he didn't know how many layers he had to get through. But he found the prize soon enough and licked my cunt. He was under the quilt, so I did imagine it was you for part of the time.'

'Did he make you cum?' asked Edward.

She held up two fingers.

Edward had to put his hand back on his cock and stroke it gently. 'What did he do next?'

'He took off his jeans. After that, he didn't waste any time. He got on top of me and put his cock inside me. It felt good—enough to fill me up nicely.'

'Did he use a condom?'

'You know he didn't. Most of the guys I went with didn't like them. So they came on me or got me to clamp their dicks between my legs so they could fuck my thighs.'

‘What did he do?’

‘He pulled out and told me to wank him off.’

‘Did he cum over your tits?’

‘No, he never saw my tits. He didn’t seem interested in them. He was all about my cunt.’

‘Where did he cum?’

‘Into my hand.’

‘And then what happened?’

‘We stayed in bed for a while. That was a bit awkward, as we didn’t know each other. Then he asked if he could have a shower, so I took him into the bathroom and showed him where everything was. But he got the horn again and fucked me on the bathroom floor. That was just a quickie. But not quick enough to stop Jodie catching us when she came home early. He was embarrassed, so he put his trousers on and left, without even getting his shower. He didn’t show up for day two of the workshop, and I never saw him again.’

‘He used you for sex.’

‘Or I used him. Depends how you look at it.’

‘Did he know you had a boyfriend?’

‘Yes, I told him about you. He asked me, “What would your boyfriend do if he came in and caught us?” I said you’d wank yourself silly.’

Edward turned onto his front, looked into his wife’s eyes, and said, ‘I wish Preston had been black.’

‘Why?’

‘I love the idea of you with a black man.’

‘Pretend Preston’s black if you want,’ said Kelly.

‘No, keep it real,’ said Edward. ‘Do you ever still think about Preston?’

‘You won’t let me forget him.’

‘Was he better than me?’

‘He was good,’ said Kelly, simply.

‘Do you ever wish you could do something like that again? Pick up some guy and ...?’

She put a finger to his lips. ‘You’ve been working all night, lovely. You need to get some sleep.’

She rolled him onto his side and pushed his hand away so she could take his cock in her hand. She pulled it hard and fast. Edward’s body bucked and he came. She expertly cupped her hands around the end of his cock to catch everything.

The sadness Edward often felt after an orgasm was mixed with guilt. 'I'm sorry,' he said. 'I shouldn't keep asking you about it.'

Kelly smiled thinly. 'Maybe you're as much an addict as I am.' Edward nodded. 'Now, go to sleep.'

Chapter Five

Kelly put her arm around her husband and held him, shushing him if he seemed about to say anything. It took him a long time to go to sleep. He was exhausted but still excited. When his breathing finally deepened, she gave him a gentle squeeze. Removing her arm carefully so as not to wake him, she slipped out of bed.

She went into the living room and turned on the TV, but there was never anything good to watch on a Saturday morning. She had no interest in cooking and couldn't help thinking the cartoons had gotten a lot more stupid since she was a kid. They needed some food for the weekend, so she decided to go into town. Edward had thrown his coat onto one of the armchairs. She took thirty pounds out of his wallet, scribbled a note for him, and went out.

It was a sunny day, but this made Kelly more anxious. She preferred wet days when people put their heads down and walked as quickly as possible. When the sun was shining, people took the time to look around. Kelly was always sure they were looking at her. Edward had told her many times this wasn't true. 'People think about themselves, not you,' he always said. But she still remembered walking down a street in Liverpool and hearing an old man say, 'There's the girl who made trouble for her dad.'

Although she didn't like people looking at her, she enjoyed casting surreptitious glances at other people. She noticed one young couple. The woman was short and slim with a brown ponytail and a pretty face. The man was tall and well-built with short blond hair and deep blue eyes. He was good-looking and also seemed to be a nice guy, carrying four bags of shopping, while the woman had her hands free. Kelly looked at them enviously. She'd be carrying all the shopping herself because her husband was still in bed.

She couldn't complain. Edward was a handsome man with his light-brown hair, which never sat right and his hazel eyes. He would look better if he didn't have black bags under his eyes all the time. And as for his body Heaving glass about all night had given him one or two muscles in his chest and arms. But he lived mainly on Coke and chocolate bars while at the factory, so he was also getting a bit fat, which didn't suit him. She noticed the blond guy had a flat stomach. Maybe he even had a six pack under his jacket. Kelly told herself sternly to stop thinking about things like that. Edward looked the way he did because he worked five nights a week at a job that exhausted him to support her—and Jodie. That was amazing. A man working to support his wife was good. But working to support his wife and her friend? That took a special kind of guy.

But she couldn't help looking again at the young couple. They seemed very much in love. Even carrying a load of shopping, the man stopped and lowered his head to kiss his girlfriend. Kelly reckoned they'd go back to wherever they lived, and before they even put the shopping away, they'd rip each other's clothes off and have wild start-of-relationship sex. And he wouldn't want her to talk about being with another man.

Kelly couldn't deny that her husband was weird. What sort of "man" stopped in the middle of fucking his wife because he'd rather talk about her having sex with someone else? Somewhere along the line, Edward had gotten things in the wrong order. Masturbation was something you did when you couldn't get sex. It wasn't something to choose over screwing your wife.

And while she was on the subject of Edward's shortcomings, why didn't he ask his dad for money? His family lived in a nice big house. When she married Edward, she thought this was the world she was joining. She'd expected a house at least similar to theirs. But instead, she, Jodie, and Edward squeezed themselves into a little apartment. His parents should share the wealth a bit and look after their own. But Edward always said he could support them without asking for handouts—a stupid male pride thing.

No, it isn't! She reminded herself that she admired him for what he was doing. But a little more money would make things easier. She wondered for the hundredth time if she should get a job. It would be nice to buy some food or a pair of jeans without digging into her husband's wallet. But then she thought about the last time she'd applied for a job. It had only been serving behind the counter at a newsagent's, so she didn't know why she'd had to go through an interview. The manager had asked her why she'd moved from Liverpool to Cambridge. And she'd blurted out the whole story. Even though the manager had obviously been uncomfortable, she'd kept going. And after all that, he hadn't even given her the job. She couldn't face anything like that again—not yet, anyway.

She went into the supermarket. Try as she might, she was never a sensible adult when she was food shopping. She knew she should buy things like milk, eggs, and vegetables. But after she'd completed a tour of the store, the only things in her trolley were two pizzas, a large bar of chocolate, and three bottles of wine. She picked up a bunch of bananas to look more respectable, then went to the checkout.

When she came out of the supermarket, she was tired and didn't want to walk home immediately. Looking through the window of Costa Coffee, she saw it was quiet for a Saturday, so she went in and bought a hot chocolate. She picked up a newspaper and took it with her to a table in the corner. She never found papers interesting, but it would give her something to look at and stop her catching anyone's eye.

She was scanning the front page when she became aware of someone standing by her table. A deep voice said, 'Hi.'

Her body tensed. For fuck's sake, why couldn't people leave her alone? Looking up with a forbidding scowl, she saw a man in a long black coat, holding a mug of coffee. It was Tray. She hadn't expected to see him again, so she was surprised. But she realized she was also pleased and changed the scowl to a smile.

'May I join you?' he asked.

She took a second to wonder how Edward would react if he saw her chatting with a black man. But she thought Edward would be asleep for a while yet and would probably text her if he wanted to join her in town. So she nodded and Tray sat down.

'I thought you were working today,' she said.

'Just a couple of hours this morning,' he replied. 'You don't have to work on Saturday, do you?'

'No, I'm in town to do the shopping.'

'What do you do? I can't remember if you said.'

She took a mouthful of chocolate while she wondered if she should make something up to impress him. She couldn't think of anything plausible. 'I don't have a job at the moment.'

'Times are hard. How do you ...?'

Kelly didn't want to go too deeply into how she lived, so she said, 'Jodie and I do okay.' Her right hand crept across her lap to cover her left. She didn't want Tray to see her wedding ring. She knew she should come clean and admit she was married, but she couldn't help thinking that talking to Tray would be less interesting if she did.

Tray nodded. He seemed to have good instincts for when to drop a topic. 'How's Jodie doing this morning?'

'Fine. She likes your mate. She wants to see him again.'

‘I’m sure he wants that too,’ said Tray, with a smile.

Kelly gave him a warning look. ‘Tell him if he hurts her, he’ll get a kicking.’

Tray laughed. ‘Will do.’

‘Have you talked to him?’

‘No. I came to town straight from the base.’

‘You’ve still got your uniform on underneath?’

‘Yes. I’m glad of this coat.’

‘You look good in your uniform. Why don’t you show it off? They say all the nice girls love a sailor. If you’re lucky, maybe all the nasty girls love an airman.’

Tray laughed again. ‘You never know.’ He took a sip of his coffee. ‘But sometimes, people make comments when they see me in uniform. They act like I spend my days bombing Iraqi hospitals. I’d rather they left me alone.’

Kelly nodded. ‘I’m with you there.’

‘What are you up to tonight?’ he asked.

She curled her lip. ‘A quiet night in. It’ll be boring. But we can’t do much else: Edward’s always knackered on a Saturday.’

As soon as she said his name, she silently cursed herself. Did her brain do any filtering of what came out of her mouth?

‘Who’s Edward?’ asked Tray, with a little smile.

‘This guy we share a flat with.’ That was the truth—just maybe not the whole truth. ‘He works every night except Saturday and Sunday, so he’s tired all the time. He works in a glass factory. It’s a hard job. Not as hard as yours maybe, but I wouldn’t want to do it. I don’t think he likes it. Not that I talk to him much, but’

She realized she was talking at high speed and took another mouthful of her drink to shut herself up. Tray looked quietly amused.

‘It won’t be all bad,’ she said, talking normally again. ‘I’ve got a few bottles of wine. I couldn’t make it through Saturday night without booze.’ She realized that sounded bad, so she said, ‘I don’t usually drink except at the weekend.’

He held up his hands. ‘I’m the last person to judge.’

‘You like a drink too?’ she asked, raising her mug in a convivial way.

He looked down at the table and said quietly, ‘A little too much.’

She wasn't sure what to say, so she bit her lip. She looked around the room and saw no one nearby. 'You can talk to me,' she said, then added, 'if you want to, of course.'

He was quiet for a moment and then raised his eyebrows in what she interpreted as a Why not? look. 'It started with my dad,' he said.

Knowing exactly what he meant, she nodded sadly.

'He drank too much and he had anger issues,' continued Tray. 'He used to hit me and my mom.'

'Sorry,' she murmured.

'It wasn't every night.' He sighed and rubbed his chin. 'But in some ways, that made it worse. We were always on edge, wondering if it would be a bad night or not. Maybe he enjoyed keeping us guessing. He liked that we tiptoed round him, trying not to do anything to make him mad. Other times, my mom and I used to hide upstairs, waiting for the fifth hiss.'

Kelly frowned. 'The fifth hiss?'

As he lifted his mug, she saw him shake a little. Hiding her left hand between her knees, she put her right hand on his arm. Tray carried on in a slow, measured tone, as if trying to control his voice. 'If my dad stuck to four cans of beer, we'd normally be okay. He'd watch TV and then go to bed. But if we heard the hiss of him opening a fifth one, we knew we were in trouble. That's when he would come after one or both of us. He hit me because I forgot to take out the trash. And even if I did take it out, he hit me anyway to make sure I remembered in future. He hit me if I got a B. He hit me if I got all As. For talking too much; for sulking in silence. He always found something.'

Kelly squeezed his arm. She wished she could think of the right words, but all she managed was, 'That's shit.'

Tray smiled at her. 'Thank you.' He took a moment to look out the window, then turned back to her with a sorrowful look. 'That's when I made the dumbest decision of my life. I decided if I couldn't beat my dad, I'd join him.'

'What do you mean?'

'One day, I asked him if I could have a beer. I was only fourteen, so there's no way he should have given me one. But he was never going to be a contender for Dad of the Year. I became his drinking buddy. You can guess how my mom felt about that. Her biggest fear was always that I'd end up like him. She sat me down and read me everything the Bible had to say about drunkenness. But not being hit today seemed more important than not going to hell fifty years down the line. My dad loved it. I was on his side now. We were the guys having a beer and my mom was the nagging woman trying to ruin our good time. Even so, he still hit me sometimes. But I found a few beers helped. It hurt, but somehow I didn't mind it so much. It was like my brain couldn't process the pain.

'I told myself it was only a temporary thing, a way of coping with my dad. I thought I'd stop as soon as I left home. But it didn't work out like that. A couple of beers made a bad day at work feel better. And it was the obvious way to celebrate a good day. But after a while, the beers didn't cut it anymore. I needed to top them off with a few shots of whiskey. Pretty soon, I was downing a bottle a night.'

Kelly shook her head. 'I'd never have guessed. You seem so ... in control of everything.'

'It's an act I've worked hard on,' he said, with a wry smile. 'Are you bored yet or do you want me to keep going?'

'Talk as much as you want, lovely,' she said.

He smiled. 'I've never been called that before.'

'Do you say, "honey pie" in America?'

'Usually just "honey." Anyway, I thought joining the military would straighten me out. Big mistake. A bunch of young guys away from home. What are we going to do when we're not working? But my unit commander took me under his wing. He talked to me when I needed it. And kicked my butt when I needed that.'

'The father you never had?'

'Something like that. I've been sober fifteen years, now.'

Kelly nodded. 'Well done.'

She looked into Tray's eyes and saw great strength but also a lot of hurt. She wanted to put her arms around him and

'I'd better get the shopping back home,' she said, picking up the bag.

'My car's outside,' he replied. 'Let me give you a ride.'

'Don't worry.'

'It would be crazy to walk when we have the car.'

'No, I need the exercise. You take care. Have a good day.'

He looked surprised that their talk had ended so abruptly. She left the coffee shop before he could say anything else.

Chapter Six

Edward woke up suddenly with no idea what time it was. He looked at his clock and saw both hands pointing to twelve. It could have been midday or midnight; he wouldn't have been surprised either way. Coughing, he sat up in bed and pulled aside one of the drapes. The sun was shining, which suggested daytime. His head dropped back onto the pillow. He felt drunk and hung over at the same time. Though wanting to go back to sleep, he forced himself to get out of bed. He wasn't working again until Monday night, so he had to reset his body clock for being awake during the day. He put on his bathrobe and went into the living room where Jodie was eating cereal and watching music videos on TV. 'All right?' she said, turning to him with a smile.

'Not bad,' he replied. 'A bit tired.'

'Me too,' she said. 'I'm done in.'

Edward leaned on the back of one of the chairs and said, 'I hear you met someone last night.'

Jodie grinned happily. 'That's right. Anthony. He's a sweet lad.'

'So you've got a new boyfriend?'

She laughed. 'God, no. But I'm seeing him again tomorrow. That'll be good.'

'What are you going to do?'

She gave him a look. 'That's a silly question.'

Edward nodded. 'I suppose so. Is he ... good?'

'Well, did Kelly tell you it was his first time?'

'Your first virgin?'

'First one to admit it. All the other guys acted like they were God's gift before giving me that ten-second shag which every girl craves.'

Edward chuckled quietly. 'So he wasn't so great?'

'I didn't say that. By the third time, he was going at it like a pro.'

'Three times?' said Edward, enviously.

'It's a good thing I'm not going back to their place tonight. I'm sore as a bitch.'

'So ... what attracted you to these guys?'

'For me, it was the walk,' said Jodie. 'When they stood up and came over to us. Tray, in particular, walked like he'd bought the place.'

'Tray was Kelly's guy, right?'

Jodie suddenly seemed flustered. 'No,' she said. 'You're Kelly's guy.'

‘What did you think of Tray?’

‘He was okay, I suppose.’

He asked as casually as possible, ‘Do you think Kelly found him attractive?’

‘Oh, this is my favorite song,’ said Jodie, and turned up the volume on the TV.

The song was half over, so it had taken Jodie some time to realize it was her favorite. Edward went over to the kitchenette. On the way, he saw a note:

Nicked 30 quid out of your wallet, hope that’s OK.
Gone to town to get something for tea. LU. K.

Edward made coffee for Jodie and himself, then went back into the bedroom. He got onto the bed but stayed sitting up so he wouldn’t fall asleep again.

He told himself he didn’t have much time in the apartment without Kelly, so he must do something productive until she came home. He was thinking of writing a paper comparing the ways in which different regimes that called themselves communist had deviated from the ideas of Marx and Engels. He took a couple of books down from the shelf and spent half an hour alternating between a biography of Stalin and an introduction to Marx’s philosophy. But he couldn’t silence a voice in his head that kept repeating the same line over and over, What’s the bloody point? He looked down at the heavy academic books and the notes he’d written. Why was he bothering with this? What were the chances any historical journal would publish a paper written by some guy who worked in a glass factory?

He put the books aside and reached for his laptop. Logging in to his email account, he saw a message from a theater he’d visited five years ago, telling him about their new season of Shakespeare’s history plays. He deleted it. He couldn’t afford to go to the theater these days. He went on to Facebook and immediately regretted it. Everyone he knew seemed to be doing better than him. One of his friends from school was working on the gossip column of a London newspaper. He’d posted a selfie of himself at a party with a couple of famous faces accidentally visible behind him. Most of his friends were at university—some at Cambridge. Same town, different world, Edward reflected sadly. None of them were working nights in a glass factory. But, he told himself, yet again, none of them had Kelly, either.

He thought back over what she'd told him about the night before. She said she'd danced with a black guy. Edward put his head against the wall, closed his eyes, and took a moment to picture it. In his mind, the man became a giant—a huge, muscular man who enveloped Kelly, making her look small in his arms. Edward opened his eyes and shook himself, his head still fuzzy from lack of sleep. He wondered if things had gone further than she'd admitted. Maybe she'd kissed him. Edward remembered the first time Kelly had kissed him. Thirty seconds later, his trousers were around his knees and his dick was in her mouth. Had she done the same thing to Tray? Edward's cock grew hard at the thought.

And something was bothering him about the conversation he'd had with Jodie. She'd talked about going back to their place. But according to Kelly, they'd never been to the guys' place, so how could they go back? Maybe it was just Jodie's slip of the tongue. He could have walked eight yards and asked her, but the idea his wife had been in a black man's home excited him and he preferred to keep the possibility alive.

Perhaps Kelly had a black lover and had gone to meet him. They could be together right now. After checking that the drapes were shut, he put his hand under his bathrobe. As he rubbed his cock, he pictured his wife in bed with a large black man who fucked her hard. He had to stop after a couple of seconds because he was in danger of cumming. It was even more exciting than his go-to fantasy of Kelly with Preston. He didn't know why he was so turned on by the thought of his wife with a black man. He couldn't believe it was simply down to the old stereotype of black guys having big cocks. Maybe it was because there was still a taboo about mixed-race couples. He tried to imagine what his parents would have said if he'd come home with a black woman. They would probably have been fine with it, provided she was well-educated. His father, in particular, had no prejudice against people of a different race or religion: his snobbery was purely academic. His father would have preferred a black girl with a PhD over Kelly, any day.

Edward picked up his laptop again. Over the past months, he'd visited a number of websites devoted to cuckoldry. But now he was looking for something more specific. He typed “interracial cuckold” into the search bar. It seemed he was not the only person interested in this topic. The search returned more than sixteen million results. Edward clicked on a few of the links. Most of the sites offered hundreds of photos and clips of white women with black studs. A lot of the women had long, blonde hair. If Edward half-closed his eyes, he could imagine some of them were Kelly. He watched a thirty-second film of a Kelly lookalike sucking a black cock. If he wanted to see more, he’d have to give the site his credit card details, and something told him that would be a bad idea. So he clicked on another link and was taken to a different kind of site. There were no pictures at all on the home page, just a large block of text. Edward wouldn’t have taken the time to read it if the headline hadn’t caught his eye.

Your wife MUST get
fucked by a black man—
TODAY. You MUST become a cuckold to a black man—
TODAY.

Edward put his hand around his cock again and stroked it gently as he read the article.

After he’d finished, his first instinct was to close the site and delete his browsing history so Kelly wouldn’t know what he’d been looking at. But then he thought, maybe he wanted Kelly to know.

When he heard her key in the front door, he left his laptop on the bed without switching it off or exiting the site. He went to meet her at the door.

‘Hey, lovely,’ she said. ‘Did you get some sleep?’

‘A little bit. Still tired, though.’

Kelly kissed him on the forehead. ‘Go back to bed, if you want. We don’t have anything planned.’

‘No, we’ve got to get up early tomorrow.’

Kelly made a face and groaned quietly. ‘I forgot that was tomorrow.’

‘Oh, come on,’ said Edward. ‘My folks aren’t that bad.’

‘I suppose not,’ she admitted. ‘Where’s Jodie?’

‘She was here. In her room, probably. How was town?’

‘Fine,’ she said, briefly, and went to the kitchenette to put away the shopping.

‘Are you okay?’ he asked.

‘Yes.’

He put his arms around her. ‘Something’s bothering you.’

‘I panicked a bit when I got outside.’

‘I’ve told you, if people look at you, it’s only because you’re beautiful and sexy.’

She nodded. ‘It doesn’t feel like it sometimes.’

‘Did anything else happen?’

‘Of course not,’ she said. ‘I went to the supermarket. What could happen there?’

‘Do you want a cup of tea?’

‘Please. I’ll go and check my emails.’

Edward wondered if he should find some excuse to grab the laptop and shut down the site before she saw it. If she was having an anxious day, maybe this wasn’t the time to let her see a page devoted to interracial cuckoldry. But a big part of him wanted to see how she’d react. If he needed an excuse later, he could say he was writing something about the history of race relations and stumbled on this site by accident.

He watched her go into the bedroom, sit down on the bed, and pick up the laptop. Her eyes widened as she looked at the screen.

Chapter Seven

When Kelly saw a page of words on the computer screen, she assumed it was some boring history site and was about to close it. Then she saw the headline. She read it a couple of times, and her first thought was to ask who these people thought they were, telling her she MUST get fucked by a black man? But she was sufficiently intrigued to read on.

Black men are superior to white men. They're bigger and stronger. They also FUCK better. A black man has a special way of fucking a white woman.

He meets her in a bar. He says, 'Hey, babe, how you doing?' He talks to her. He smiles a lot. He's charming. At some point he asks her, 'Is your white husband not giving you what you need?' He doesn't have to wait for the answer. It's IMPOSSIBLE for a white husband to give a white woman what she needs. He looks her deep in the eyes and says, 'Come back to my place, babe. I'll show you what you're missing.'

When they get back to his place, she finds he's changed. He's not smiling anymore, and his eyes are cold and ruthless. She's scared, but she also feels something move inside her. Everything she's ever been told about what good girls do sounds like a doctrine she doesn't believe anymore. The next thing she notices is how she's not his 'babe' anymore because he says, 'Strip, BITCH! Show me that white body of yours.' This isn't what she's used to hearing. She might even feel a bit of defiance. But when she looks into his eyes, all resistance melts away. She realizes she's in his power. She takes her clothes off and stands in front of him, naked. He looks at her, with no expression on his face. He is still fully clothed. She may feel shy and vulnerable. She might even think about covering herself with her hands. But one look at his face tells her that would be a mistake.

'Come here!' he says. She feels nervous as she walks toward him. She doesn't know what she's let herself in for. Then he pushes her down to her knees and tells her to get his cock out. The first sight of an erect black cock is a turning point in every white woman's life. She realizes she's been settling for second best all her life. Even if her husband is moderately well-endowed, his white peepee could never compete with the sheer animalistic power of a black cock. She's afraid of it, but at the same time, she knows she MUST feel it inside her. As she puts her lips around it, she realizes what being a woman is truly about. Family, education, career—none of that matters a damn. At the core of every woman's being is a primal need to be FUCKED. And if you've never been with a black man, you've NEVER been fucked. White guys are okay for fooling around, but only a black man knows how to fuck.

The sight of his black cock in her white hands makes her realize something else—the beauty of CONTRAST. Sex between two people of the same color is as boring as putting white paint on a white canvas. Only by experiencing black on white can a woman appreciate the sheer beauty of sex.

Then he fucks her. From the first second his cock's inside her, she knows she's being fucked. A black man does not start slow and gradually increase the pace. He fucks her as hard as he can from the very first moment. He has one thing in mind—making it HURT as much as possible. Because he knows that, for her, maximum PAIN and maximum PLEASURE are exactly the same thing.

She feels like it's too much, like she can't take it. At the same time, all she wants to do is keep taking it for the rest of her life.

Black men don't use condoms. The woman doesn't know this until his baby-making load hits her cervix. But she doesn't even care because she's too busy having the CUM of her life.

Black men don't hold or reassure white women after fucking. As soon as he's done, he tells her to fuck off. She gets dressed and staggers out. Her cunt feels like it's on fire. She can't believe what's happened to her. She knows life will never be the same again. This is going to change her relationship with her husband, no question. She might touch his white peepee on his birthday, but the thought of putting it in her mouth is disgusting to her now. And as for letting him fuck her ... sorry, white boy, but that's NEVER going to happen again. There's also a chance she'll have to explain to her husband why she has a black baby inside her. But that's a price worth paying.

What she's thinking above everything else is that she needs to get black-fucked again as soon as she can. She might go straight back to the bar, sit in the same spot, and hope lightning strikes twice.

If you're a white woman reading this, you might be appalled deep down to your liberal soul. But ask yourself one simple question: how wet is your cunt right now?

If you're a white man, maybe you're about ready to join the Klan. But your little white dick is currently very hard, thinking about your girl getting the fuck she needs from a big black cock.

So here is what you MUST do.

If you're a white woman, you must put on your sexiest clothes and go to a bar TONIGHT. Don't wait any longer to satisfy your deepest needs. When you see a black man, get up your courage and go talk to him. Talk about the weather or sports or anything for five minutes. Then ask if you can suck his cock. He'll take you out to his car or into an alleyway. Do NOT worry about your privacy. Anyone who sees you will think you're a whore for black cock, and that's what you are now. If he wants anything else, you should give it to him. But the very LEAST you must do tonight is get a black cock in your mouth.

If you're a white husband, you need to persuade your wife that she NEEDS black cock. If you watch porn together, make sure it's always interracial. Ask her what she thinks of the men with their muscles, their flawless black skin, and their huge cocks. Encourage her to fantasize about them. Reassure her that you understand her need for BLACK COCK and will never stand in her way.

Kelly giggled. The post hadn't been funny, but she wasn't sure how else to react. She thought it was the biggest load of rubbish she'd ever read, with its shouty capitals and conviction that all black men were the same: sexual predators who heartlessly fucked every white girl they met. If that were true, why had Tray left her alone and gone to sleep? Was he the one exception to the rule? And what about Anthony? Jodie had specifically said he'd cuddled her after their first time. Was he the other exception?

She wondered who'd written it. Maybe some black guy who lived in his mother's basement. Perpetually unlucky in love, he had a clear idea of how his life should be. More likely, the writer was a married white man who justified his personal fantasy by presenting it as universal reality.

She re-read the line, “How wet is your cunt right now?” She looked into the living room to check no one could see her and put her hand down the front of her trousers. Her cunt was wet. She had to admit there was part of her that wished Tray had acted a bit more like the archetypal black man described on the site. She took a moment to imagine Tray forcing her onto her knees, and ordering her to suck his cock. She could justify it to Edward—and more importantly, to herself—by saying, ‘I had no choice. He made me do it.’

She immediately felt ashamed of these thoughts. Tray had talked to her as a friend and trusted her with the most personal details about his past. She had no right to make him into something he wasn’t just to turn herself on.

She put the idea out of her head and logged in to her Facebook account.

Chapter Eight

Upon waking the next morning, Kelly immediately felt a weight on her chest. She never liked going to visit Edward's parents. It wasn't that they were overtly rude to her, but Edward's father, Richard, sometimes asked her questions about literature or history. And he always shook his head and gave Edward a patronizing little smile when she mumbled, 'I don't know.' In fairness, his parents hadn't blamed her for the wedding. They assumed Edward was the relationship's dominant partner, so he'd taken the full brunt of their anger. But the prospect of going to their house for a party and being surrounded by their friends was suddenly overwhelming.

She wondered if she could tell Edward she wasn't feeling well. But it was the old Kelly who'd done that. She'd spent enough time when she was a child pretending to be sick to get out of awkward situations.

'The sooner we go, the sooner we're back,' she muttered to herself. She wasn't sure this was strictly true, but it made her feel a little better. She shook Edward. 'Come on, lovely, let's get to your mam's.'

They'd gone to bed at ten the night before, but it looked like Edward's body clock still hadn't adjusted to being awake during the day. Even when he opened his eyes, he had an absent, zombie look about him. But he let her take his hands and help him out of bed. She led him into the bathroom and they stepped into the bath together. She turned on the shower attachment and let the water cascade over his head for a minute. This seemed to wake him up. They washed each other and his cock came alive as she rubbed it with soapy hands. 'Do we have time ...?' he wondered.

'Not now,' said Kelly. 'Save it for later.'

It was a sunny morning, and they walked hand in hand to the station. Despite the crowds, stations didn't worry Kelly. People were always too busy running for a train to pay any attention to her. Edward bought the tickets. There was no queue at the snacks counter so Kelly steeled herself and bought two coffees and a bar of chocolate.

When the train arrived, Edward found the perfect seats for them in the corner of the carriage. He knew she liked to sit by the window, with no one behind her.

The train pulled out. It was almost three hours to Ascot. 'How old is your mam?' asked Kelly.

'Fifty-eight,' Edward replied.

‘Fifty-eight, eh?’ murmured Kelly, trying to sound impressed. ‘That’s great. Do you know how many people are coming tonight?’

He shook his head. ‘Not sure.’

She waited to see if he said anything else, then took a piece of paper and a pen out of her bag. ‘Shall we play hangman?’ she suggested. Edward nodded.

As the taxi went up the curved driveway to Edward’s family home, Kelly was struck again by how different it was from the place where she’d grown up. While his family didn’t live in a palace, there was a large sitting room, a study, and a kitchen on the ground floor with five bedrooms and two bathrooms upstairs. Her parents still lived in a small terrace house where the front door opened directly onto the street.

She put a hand on Edward’s arm. ‘Why don’t we go for a drink?’ she said. Edward frowned, as if this was an odd suggestion. Kelly persisted, ‘There’s a pub at the end of the road. Just a quick one.’

‘You can get a drink in the house,’ said Edward.

‘I know, but it would be nice to spend some time, just you and me.’

Edward smiled. ‘We’ve had three hours alone together. Come on, they’re expecting us.’

Edward used his own key to open the front door and shouted, ‘Hello!’ to announce their arrival. His mother came in from the kitchen, drying her hands on a tea towel. Edward gave her a hug and kissed the top of her head. She was a small woman with gray hair, but an unlined face and eyes that still sparkled with life. ‘Happy birthday, Mum,’ said Edward. Appearing at the door of the study, Edward’s father shook hands with him. Richard was a tall, earnest-looking man with glasses and hair that was still dark brown despite his being two years older than his wife.

Kelly moved in to give Edward’s mother an awkward little hug. ‘Hello, Elizabeth,’ she said.

She was never sure how to approach Richard. She touched his arm briefly and said, ‘How are you?’

He asked her, ‘Are you well?’ Not sure if he wanted an answer, she didn’t say anything.

Kelly and Edward went up to Edward’s old room. One change since the marriage was that his parents couldn’t object to their sleeping in the same room. Edward put their bag down by the bed. Kelly still wanted them to spend more time alone together, so she closed the door and walked toward him. Kissing him passionately, she put her hand under his shirt. He returned the kiss briefly but then gently pushed her away. 'We've got to get ready for the party,' he said. He opened the door and started down the stairs. She thought about staying in his room and refusing to help. But she needed Edward on her side tonight, so she followed him.

There was a lot to do. Kelly spent time with Elizabeth in the kitchen, making sandwiches and mixing up the punch. Kelly enjoyed this. Although they didn't talk much, she felt like part of a team.

They ceremoniously brought the punch into the living room. Edward and Richard had moved the couches to the side of the room and put the dining table against the wall for the buffet.

Richard said they were as ready as they'd ever be. He ladled out a glass of punch for each of them and they drank to a job well done. Kelly was included in the toast. She smiled and drank gratefully. Elizabeth had used a full bottle of gin in the punch, and Kelly almost gasped at the first mouthful. But as she drank, she felt more relaxed and thought maybe the evening would be okay after all.

She was still feeling positive as the first guests arrived. The four of them lined up in the hall to form a welcome party. Richard introduced her as "Kelly" rather than "Edward's wife," or "our daughter-in-law," but she decided not to read too much into that. Most of the people arriving were Elizabeth's friends who'd known Edward all his life. They all said how nice it was to see him. One or two even commented on how much he'd grown, even though Kelly was sure he'd stopped growing six years ago. A few people raised their eyebrows when they saw her but most of them said it was good to meet her. Several women even called her "dear."

When the living room was full of people chatting in low, polite voices, Elizabeth asked Kelly to help with the food. Walking through the front room with a plate of sandwiches, she noticed people smiling at her. There was classical music playing softly in the background. She didn't recognize it, but it was pretty. She thought this was definitely going to be a pleasant evening. But then she overheard a man and woman talking.

'Who's the girl with Elizabeth's son?' asked the man. 'Is she the latest girlfriend?'

Kelly bristled at this, but felt worse when the woman said, 'Believe it or not, that's his wife.'

‘Really?’ said the man, laughing heartily. ‘Some boys get a tattoo. Others buy a motorbike. I suppose this is Edward’s way of rebelling.’

‘Richard’s sure Edward will come to his senses soon.’

Kelly’s whole body tensed. Part of her wanted to go up to them and ask what they thought was wrong with her. But she knew she wouldn’t do that, so she put the plate down on the buffet table and looked around for Edward. He’d been at the drinks trolley, pouring wine for the guests. But he wasn’t there now. When she couldn’t see him, she felt the panic rising. Then she spotted him talking to an old woman at the other side of the room. Kelly went up and said, ‘Edward, could I—?’

He interrupted her by saying, ‘This is Aunt Julia, my mum’s oldest sister. This is Kelly.’

‘His wife,’ added Kelly. She didn’t want any more confusion about that.

Aunt Julia raised her eyebrows at Edward. ‘Your wife?’

Edward looked embarrassed, which didn’t make Kelly feel any better. ‘It all happened very quickly. We didn’t have time to let many people know.’ Aunt Julia looked down at Kelly’s belly. ‘No, she isn’t,’ he said.

‘Whatever happened to Rachel?’ asked Aunt Julia.

Kelly pretended to look at the books on the shelf.

‘She went off to university,’ said Edward, quickly. ‘How’s Peter doing these days?’

But Aunt Julia persisted, ‘Are you still in touch with her?’

‘No,’ said Edward.

‘Why not? She was perfect for you. Pretty. Intelligent. Well-read.’

Kelly took Edward’s glass of wine from him and drained it.

Edward didn’t react to having his drink stolen. He just said, ‘We were at different places in our lives.’

Aunt Julia turned to Kelly. ‘Did you ever meet Rachel?’

‘No,’ said Kelly, trying to keep her voice calm, even though her heart was beating fast.

‘She and Edward were the sweetest couple you ever saw. Edward doted on her.’

For a moment, Kelly’s anger was replaced by sheer disbelief. Why would anyone say things like that to her?

Aunt Julia seemed on the point of saying something else so Kelly was grateful when Edward said, ‘We’d better see if Mother needs any help.’

Edward took Kelly's arm and led her away. 'Are you okay?' he asked, in a low mutter. Kelly didn't reply. 'Aunt Julia's never been the most tactful person in the world,' he continued. 'And she's reached the age where she doesn't care anymore. But she has given you hours of pleasure. The TV in our living room was a present from her.'

Kelly was on the point of telling him where Aunt Julia could stick her TV, when she heard a voice behind them.

'Ah, Edward.' Kelly turned to see a middle-aged man in a sickly green jacket who had an unevenly trimmed ginger mustache and hair the same color combed over his bald crown.

Edward shook his hand. 'Kelly, this is Mister Turner, my old history teacher. Mister Turner, this is'

Kelly tried for a polite smile but Mister Turner wasn't interested in her. He kept his attention focused on Edward. 'What are you doing these days?'

'I'm living in Cambridge. How are things at—?'

'Splendid!' said Turner, clapping Edward on the shoulder. 'Which college?'

Edward sighed. 'I'm not actually at the university.'

Turner shook his head, as if he couldn't imagine any other reason to be in Cambridge. 'So ...?'

'I work in a glass factory,' said Edward. Kelly thought there was a hint of defiance in his voice.

Turner looked crestfallen. 'But you always said you wanted to read history. We worked so hard to prepare you for—'

'I still write the occasional paper,' said Edward.

Turner nodded sadly, as if that was scant reward for his efforts. He finally addressed Kelly. 'Are you at the university?'

She managed a micro-smile. 'No.'

Turner looked her up and down. 'No, I suppose not.' He made no effort to hide the contempt in his voice. Kelly had had enough. She turned and walked out of the room.

Chapter Nine

Edward looked at Turner angrily, but found it hard to be mad at someone who had helped him so much over the years. He settled for saying, 'Excuse me,' in a stiff voice and going after Kelly. Before he reached the door, he was stopped by another voice. 'Edward. A word.'

It was his father. 'I need to see if Kelly's all right,' said Edward.

'She'll be fine for a few minutes,' replied Richard, calmly.

'Dad!' protested Edward, realizing he sounded like a petulant teenager.

'Let's step outside.'

Richard went to the drinks trolley and poured two glasses of whiskey. He handed one to Edward, and they went through the French windows into the garden, which was moodily lit by the light from the house. The swing Edward used to play on was so rusty it would have collapsed if anyone had sat on it.

'Any more thoughts about the future?' asked Richard.

Edward took a sip of whiskey. It was an eighteen-year-old Laphroaig with hints of salt and smoke. 'What do you mean?'

'You're not planning to make a career of working in a glass factory.'

'It's not too bad. Some of the people there are nice.'

'Fine for a summer job,' said Richard, with a dismissive wave of his hand. 'Are you doing much history these days?'

'Some. I read that book you got me for Christmas—Causes of the English Civil War.'

'It was interesting, wasn't it?'

'I don't know if I agreed with everything in it. It made the war sound like a personal vendetta between Cromwell and the King.'

Richard nodded. 'It hardly touched on the religious aspects.'

'Trying to sneak Catholicism in through the back door of the church.'

'That's a good way of putting it.' Richard looked straight at him and Edward was shocked to see so much sadness in his father's eyes. 'Do you discuss things like this with the people at the glass factory?'

'Well ... no,' admitted Edward.

'Imagine being at university. You could discuss these things with some of the leading people in the field. You could spend all your time on something that interests you, instead of grabbing ten minutes here and there.'

‘It would be difficult at the moment. Maybe if Kelly had a job, I could study and work part-time.’

‘Ah, yes. Kelly.’ Richard looked out into the garden.

‘I know you don’t like her, Dad.’

‘It’s not that I don’t like her. She’s a nice enough girl. But I wonder sometimes—’

‘It’s too late to wonder, Dad. We’re married now. That means forever.’

Richard smiled. ‘I sometimes think you’re even more old school than I am. The world is changing. Nobody has a job for life anymore. Maybe marriage is going the same way.’

‘Not for me,’ said Edward.

He could see his father was trying hard to be amiable, but there was definite anger in Richard’s voice as he asked, ‘Why on earth did you marry her?’

Edward knew he should have been offended. How dare anyone question the commitment he’d made to his wife? But the truth was that he’d asked himself the same thing a couple of times—normally when he looked at his watch and realized he had another five hours of work in a glass factory ahead of him.

Richard looked straight at his son and asked, ‘Were you just cunt-struck?’

Edward’s eyes widened and his mouth fell open. He’d never known his father to say anything stronger than “Blast it!” so it was a shock to hear language like this. For a moment, he couldn’t reply. Then he said quietly, ‘No, I wasn’t. I was in love. She’s not stupid, you know.’

‘I didn’t say she was, but ...’ Richard trailed off and took a gulp of whiskey. ‘Forget I’m your father for a moment. We’re just two men having a drink, talking about women. What was it that first attracted you to Kelly?’

Edward spoke tentatively. ‘Well, when she answered my ad—’

Richard shook his head. ‘I always wondered what sort of person you’d meet that way.’

Edward ignored this and said, ‘She enclosed a photo and she looked ... nice.’

‘You mean sexy?’

‘And when we met, she was just so ... womanly.’

‘In other words, she has big tits,’ said Richard.

‘Dad!’ protested Edward, unable to forget Richard was his father. Edward took another sip of his drink and calmed down. ‘But yes, that was part of it. Rachel was pretty, sure, but there was something ... boyish about her.’

Richard nodded. ‘I know what you mean. And am I right in thinking Rachel let you fool around with her a little but didn’t ... go all the way?’

Edward looked out into the garden, too embarrassed to answer.

Richard carried on. ‘Whereas I’m guessing Kelly took you to places you didn’t know existed outside those porn films that I’m not supposed to know about.’

Edward looked up at the sky. He could feel himself sweating and his stomach was churning. Why couldn’t his father stick to discussing the English Civil War? It was so much safer.

‘I do understand,’ said Richard. ‘I was the same at your age.’

Edward definitely did not want to imagine his father as young and horny.

‘When I was at university, I had a girlfriend,’ continued Richard. ‘We missed lectures and seminars because we wanted to spend all day in bed. But then I almost failed my first-year exams and realized I had to say goodbye to her or risk my whole future.’

‘That must have been difficult,’ mumbled Edward.

‘Yes, it was ... emotionally. But in practical terms, it was straightforward, because we hadn’t got married. Which brings us back to the question: why?’

Edward thought for a moment, then began, ‘You remember those family holidays we took in Scotland when I was a kid? Sometimes the cousins and I would have a midnight feast in the attic?’

Richard nodded, but also frowned as if he wasn’t sure how this was relevant.

‘The truth is,’ said Edward, ‘the feast itself was never that much fun. Sitting in the dark eating cake and drinking lemonade felt a bit silly. But organizing it was great. Saving up pennies to buy the lemonade. Hiding the bottles. Sneaking cake out of the kitchen. Creeping up to the attic, trying not to wake the adults. Well, the same thing happened with arranging the wedding. We’d had a few too many one night and I said, “We should get married.” It’s the sort of thing that sounds good when you’re drunk. We immediately went online and looked up how to get married in secret—still more as a joke than anything else. But ... the arrangements built up a momentum of their own. We got so caught up in the logistics of the wedding that we didn't think about the marriage. A lot of alcohol was involved and,' Edward paused and then decided to add, 'there was the promise of a mind-blowing wedding night.'

Richard nodded. 'I remember talking to one of your teachers,' he said, switching back into father mode. 'What did he say? "Edward is highly intelligent, but sometimes appears to lack even the most basic common sense."' '

Edward wanted to say he'd done a lot of growing up since then, but wasn't sure he could back that up, so said nothing.

Richard spoke slowly and seemed to be choosing his words carefully. 'All I'm saying is ... there's still time. You're only twenty-five. And if you'd like to pick up your studies again, your mother and I could ensure that your path through university is fairly smooth—maybe not academically ... but financially.'

'If you want to help, Dad, Kelly and I could do with—'

Richard smiled, but shook his head decisively. 'That's not the offer on the table, Edward. I've told you before; you chose to marry Kelly'

Edward took a sip of his drink. He couldn't deny his father's offer had its attractions. The next day, he could phone in his resignation to the factory and spend Monday night in bed rather than carrying large panes of glass around. If he got his application in quickly, he could maybe start university in just seven months. But then he thought about Kelly and put his glass down. 'Excuse me, Dad, I'm going to see how my wife is.'

Edward went upstairs and saw the light on in his old bedroom. He went in and found Kelly lying on his bed. She looked sad, but wasn't crying. He sat next to her and put his arm around her. 'I'm so sorry,' he said. 'I wanted to tell Aunt Julia to shut up, but it's hard to intimidate someone who used to wipe your bottom. And as for Mister Turner—'

'Why does everyone hate me?' she asked.

'They don't. They just—'

'They just wish you'd married some posh bird like Rachel.'

'Maybe you weren't ... quite what they expected. Think how your folks would have reacted if you'd come home' He tried to think of an analogy and wasn't too surprised at the first thing that popped into his head. 'Imagine you'd come home with a black guy. What would they have said?'

Kelly looked past him and focused on the wall. 'My dad chased away all my boyfriends. It didn't matter what they looked like.' Edward bent down to kiss her. 'You've been drinking whiskey,' she said.

'Sorry,' he said. 'Do you want me to brush my teeth?'

'No, you're all right. I don't mind the good stuff. It's just the cheap shit I can't stand.'

Even so, Edward hugged her rather than kissing her. Then he said, 'Well, I suppose we should get back to the party.'

'Just a minute,' said Kelly, sitting up. 'I want to show you something.' She unbuttoned her shirt to reveal her breasts inside a red bra. 'Rachel didn't have tits like these, did she?'

'No.'

'Tell me about hers.'

'I'm not sure ...' began Edward, feeling uncomfortable.

'Come on, Edward. How many times have you asked me about Preston? She had tiny little boobs, didn't she?'

'Yes,' admitted Edward. He looked into her eyes and saw the sadness had been replaced by a sort of manic intensity.

'I bet she had a flat stomach and no arse, as well. She was more a boy than a girl. You needed me to turn you on to a real woman.'

He couldn't argue with this: it was essentially what he'd just told his father. Kelly took off her bra and showed him her big pale breasts with their prominent red nipples. 'These are the tits you need.' She put his hands on them. 'Feel them. Squeeze them.' She put her hands behind his head and pulled it down to her chest. Supporting her left breast with her right hand, she fed it into Edward's mouth. 'Suck it. Lick it. Bite it.'

She stood up and unbuttoned her jeans. Taking his hand, she forced it down the front of her panties. 'You're touching my cunt,' she said, articulating the word clearly. 'You love it when I talk about my cunt, don't you?'

Edward was finding it hard to control his breathing.

'What did Rachel call it?' asked Kelly, with a little sneer.

Edward still didn't want to talk about Rachel, but he said, 'Down there.'

She gave a brief contemptuous laugh. 'Down there?'

'As in, "Would you like to touch me down there?"'

‘I would just tell you to get your fingers up my cunt and frig me senseless.’

Edward took this as an invitation to get his fingers up her cunt right now. He knelt in front of her and pulled down her jeans and panties to her ankles. She spread her legs as far as she could and he kissed her cunt and inhaled her rich feminine scent. Kelly must have heard him breathing in deeply because she said, ‘I smell good, don’t I?’

Edward nodded. He used two fingers to rub her clit in small circles. Then he slid his fingers down and pushed them inside her.

‘Best you’ve ever had,’ she said. ‘But sorry, Edward, you’re not going to get it right now.’

Edward stood up. He was trembling with desire but trying to think straight. ‘Yes, people will be wondering where we are. We need to go back downstairs. We’ll carry on with this later.’

‘That’s not what I had in mind,’ she said, with an evil grin.

Their bag was lying beside the bed. She pulled out a tub of moisturizing cream and offered it to him. He knew immediately what that meant. He asked her, ‘Are you sure? It’s not five years yet.’

‘You’ve earned an early present,’ she said.

He wasn’t sure what he’d done to deserve this, but he wasn’t going to say any more.

Kelly took off her jeans and panties, lay down on her front and lifted her groin off the bed. This had the effect of parting her butt cheeks. ‘Use lots,’ was the only thing she said.

He put the open tub on the bed and used his thumbs to spread her buttocks even farther. Kelly’s asshole was pink and looked very tight—no more than a square millimeter. He couldn’t believe he would ever get his cock into it. He scooped a finger full of cream out of the tub. As he worked it into his wife’s asshole, he was surprised by its elasticity. He was soon able to slip his finger in easily. It wasn’t long before he had two fingers inside and spread them to open her up even more.

‘Rachel never let you do this, did she?’ asked Kelly, over her shoulder.

‘No,’ said Edward, wishing that she’d stop talking about Rachel and let him concentrate on the moment.

But she continued, ‘Those toffee-nosed posh girls never do. You need a working-class slut in your bed. She didn’t understand what you need. But I do. You need me.’

‘Yes.’

‘Say it.’

‘I need you.’

‘Show me how much.’

Edward knelt on the bed with his knees between her legs. He put some cream on his cock, then tossed the tub aside and put his hands on either side of her torso. He knew he was leaving greasy stains on his mother’s sheets, but he didn’t care. He had thought this was definitely something that didn’t exist outside the world of “those porn films.” His chest was against her back. He supported himself on his left elbow so he didn’t put too much weight on her. With the index finger of his right hand, he felt her asshole. Then he held on to the base of his cock and tried to maneuver the tip into the place his fingers had been a moment before. But the whole area was so slippery, it was difficult to keep his cock in the right place. One time he thought his cock was going into her, but it was just sliding down her crack. She gave him instructions, ‘Down a bit, straighten up, now push.’ He finally felt his cock going into her. She gripped him tightly but softly and he was more aware than usual of his wife’s body heat around his cock. When he was fully inside her, he started to move slowly. ‘Fuck me hard,’ she said. He increased the speed of his thrusts, but didn’t want to hurt her. He kissed the back of her neck. ‘Don’t worry about being affectionate,’ she said, with a hint of annoyance. ‘Violate me.’ She turned her head to the side and managed to look up at him. ‘My asshole is always here for you, Edward. You can finger it, lick it, fuck it. Or if you just want to have a look, I’ll spread my cheeks for you.’

All these promises were too much for Edward. He was about to pull out when she said, ‘No, this is my chance to feel your spunk pumping directly into me.’

He closed his eyes and felt his cock pulsing harder than it ever had before.

Afterwards, he lay on top of her for a while. She didn’t mind him kissing the back of her neck now. Pulling out of her slowly, he asked, ‘Do you want me to make you cum?’

She shook her head. ‘Just hold me.’

He lay on his back. She rolled over and put her head on his chest. ‘Your heart’s beating fast,’ she said.

‘I wonder why.’ After a few minutes, he ventured, ‘We should go and rejoin the party.’

She raised her head and looked at him. ‘You can’t do something like that and then abandon me.’

‘I’m not going to abandon you. We’ll go back together.’

‘Wait a few minutes.’

She laid her head back on his chest, put her arm around him, and wrapped her left leg around his. There was no way he could move unless she did. She started to snore. He shook her gently. ‘Kelly,’ he said. Then more loudly, ‘Kelly!’

She didn’t respond. She was sleeping or pretending to sleep. Edward lay there, feeling guilty. He knew he should be at his mother’s party. He also knew his mother would be upset. But he supposed Kelly was right: he couldn’t leave her.

Chapter Ten

Their train back to Cambridge was delayed and it was nine o'clock at night before Edward and Kelly were back in the apartment. There was a bottle of wine in the fridge, which Kelly opened to share with Jodie. Edward allowed himself half a glass, but he had to be at work by midnight so he'd start drinking coffee soon. He brought his laptop into the living room and turned it on. He wanted to order flowers for his mother.

'How was the party?' Jodie asked.

'Not great,' said Kelly. 'Edward's mam knows some rude people.'

Edward leaned over and put his hand on Kelly's shoulder.

'Fortunately, we slipped away and had our own party,' said Kelly, sharing a knowing look with Jodie.

Rolling his eyes, Edward sat back. He'd accepted that Kelly and Jodie had no secrets from each other, but that didn't mean he liked it.

'And what did you get up to last night?' asked Kelly.

Jodie grinned. 'It was amazing. Tray and Anthony came over at about eight—'

'Tray was here?' asked Kelly, sharply. 'You were with both of them?'

Edward took a sideways look at his wife. There was something in her tone. Was it jealousy?

Jodie laughed. 'I wish!' Then Jodie seemed to realize that wasn't the right thing to say and she became more serious. 'Tray just brought Anthony round. I don't think Anthony can drive yet. We all got to talking. Tray's a nice guy.'

'I know,' said Kelly, still with a note of suspicion in her voice.

'Then, by the time Anthony and I had ... finished, it was getting late, so Tray spent the night in your room,' said Jodie. 'I hope that's all right.'

Kelly nodded and looked relieved. 'Fine by me. So, you and Anthony ...?'

Jodie smiled. 'He's learned a lot since Friday. I think he's been doing some research. He was a lot more dominant too. As soon as we were in the bedroom, he pointed at me and said, "I want you naked—now!"'

Kelly made a little growling noise in the back of her throat. 'Nice.'

Edward kept looking at the flowers on his laptop screen, but his attention was on Jodie.

'I took my clothes off nice and slowly,' continued Jodie. 'I was wearing a black bra with knickers to match. When I was down to them, I spent a minute twirling around, letting him see me in my underwear.'

'Enjoying the contrast,' said Kelly.

Edward noticed she'd used a word that had featured prominently on the interracial cuckold website. Was she trying to send him a message? As far as he knew, Jodie hadn't seen the website and all she said was, 'I've been enjoying black and white a lot recently.'

'Slut!' said Kelly, with a giggle.

Jodie said, 'I took off my knickers first and then slowly removed my bra—revealing an inch of tit at a time.'

'He'd seen them before,' Kelly pointed out.

'And that made him even more desperate to see them again. Making him wait was a lot of fun. But finally, I was naked in front of him.'

'He still had all his clothes on?' asked Edward, looking up and abandoning all pretense that he wasn't listening.

Jodie nodded. 'I liked that he wasn't thinking about his body just then. He was all about mine. So much so that he told me to play with myself in front of him. Usually, I hate it when a guy wants me to do that. It's like, what do I need him for if I'm going to do all the work myself? But I didn't mind it this time. He watched me with his mouth hanging open as I rubbed my tits with my left hand and my right went down between my legs. He was getting worked up and I didn't want to do it too much in case he had another accident. He told me to come over to him. He put his hand between my legs and touched me' Jodie stopped and fanned herself with her hand. 'And it was incredible. He knew where to touch me and how. He wasn't too rough or too gentle. The speed was perfect. He made me cum like a bitch. I thought I was going to be his teacher, but he's been getting lessons from someone else.'

Kelly smiled reflectively. 'I think I can guess who.'

'While he was doing that, I tried to touch him,' said Jodie, 'but he brushed me away. He was probably still worried about finishing too quickly. He only got naked after I'd cum.'

'Good idea,' said Kelly. 'Even if he only lasted a second, you couldn't complain.'

'True. When he did take his clothes off, I ran my hands over him. He's not a huge bloke, but he's got a bit of meat on him. And I do love his dark skin. I know I said I'd run after the next hot white bloke I saw, but now I'm not so sure.'

‘You’re never going back?’ asked Kelly.

‘Put it this way ... after Anthony, I’m going to look for another black guy. I’m not going back immediately. Anyway, he still didn’t want me to touch his cock. But I touched him everywhere else. I was already wet as hell from touching myself. But I was fucking dripping after touching him. He lay me down on the bed. We were both so turned on that he didn’t have to bother with any more foreplay. But even so, he kissed my neck a lot and made me tingle.’ She paused and smiled affectionately. ‘And then he moved down to my tits. He showed he can be a bit of a kinky bugger when he lifted my left tit up and licked the sweat from under it. He kissed both of them and sucked them. And this time, when he bit down on my nipple, it was enough to make me gasp but not wince. He worked his way down my legs, kissed my feet, and sucked my toes.’

‘That was brave of him,’ said Kelly, with a grin.

‘Fuck off,’ said Jodie, throwing the cork from the wine bottle at her.

Kelly laughed as she batted the cork away. Then her expression changed and she asked Jodie seriously, ‘Did he use anything this time?’

Jodie nodded. ‘We used a very effective method of contraception. He came over my tits.’

‘Oh, Jodie!’ said Kelly, shaking her head.

‘Well, the first time he did,’ said Jodie. ‘The second time I was sucking him and he got most of it in my hair.’

‘You are a complete whore,’ said Kelly.

‘And loving it,’ replied Jodie. She puffed out her cheeks. ‘Talking about it is almost as tiring as doing it. I think I’ll turn in.’

‘Dream about Anthony,’ said Kelly.

‘He’s all I can fucking dream about at the moment!’

Jodie went into her room and closed the door. Kelly looked at Edward. ‘Aw, she’s in love.’

Edward nodded. Kelly stood up, came over to Edward and straddled his legs with hers. She bent down and kissed him in that aggressive way of hers, forcing her whole tongue into her mouth. Then she asked him, ‘Do you want to go to bed?’

‘I’ve got to work in a couple of hours.’

‘I know. I wasn’t talking about sleeping.’

They went into their bedroom. Kelly said, ‘One of your dreams came true last night. I had a black man in my bed.’

Edward kissed her. 'Do you wish you'd been with him?'

Kelly didn't reply immediately. She picked up one of the pillows and sniffed it. 'It still smells of Tray's aftershave.' She held it under Edward's nose. He breathed in a strong musk with hints of wood and leather. 'This is how I'd smell if I spent the night with Tray.'

'You seemed to like it when Anthony told Jodie to get naked.'

Kelly nodded. 'I'm not sure that would always work for me, but with the right guy'

'Who do you think the right guy might be?' he asked.

She didn't say anything but put her lips against his. While she was kissing him, his mind was working. There was something he wanted to ask her about, but wasn't sure how she'd react. He decided to chance it. 'I saw you reading that website.'

'Which one?' she asked, innocently.

'You know which one. What did you think?'

'It was bollocks, really. Saying all black men are the same.'

'But did it turn you on?'

'I guess so.'

'Did it turn you on more because you'd just met Tray?'

She was still playing the innocent. 'Why would it?'

'You might ... imagine doing ... some of those things with him.'

Kelly was quiet for a moment. Edward wondered if he'd gone too far. Her next question came as a surprise, 'Why did you marry me?'

It seemed everyone was asking him that.

'Was it a Fuck you! to your parents?'

'No, it wasn't that,' he said.

'Because, to me,' she said, 'being married isn't like going out with someone. A husband and wife aren't just a more serious boyfriend and girlfriend. Marriage is two people being faithful to each other.'

Edward was always surprised that, given her background, Kelly had such a traditional view of marriage. 'Or it's two people who love each other,' he countered.

'It's the same thing ... or should be, anyway.'

'That's just tradition. Most men are selfish. The guy wants to keep the woman all to himself, because he's jealous, or he's afraid she'll leave him. But what if two people really trusted each other? Then they'd be free to do what they wanted.' He paused and looked at her, trying to work out what she was thinking. Her face didn't give much away, so he tried his luck again. 'Think about it, Kelly. You could go off, have a good time with Tray, and I'd be here waiting for you when you came home.'

'And I suppose you'd want to hear all about it.'

Edward smiled. 'It's what we call a win-win. Good for you. Good for me.'

Kelly hadn't slapped him or stormed out of the room, so it was going well.

'It feels ... wrong,' she said. 'We're married.'

'We didn't get married to stop you doing what you want.'

'I don't know if it's what I want,' she said. She paused, bit her lip, and looked at him guiltily. 'It might be what I need, though.'

These words hit Edward like an electric shock. He felt a wave of dark lust go through him at the thought of his wife needing another man.

'But what if I can't stop once I start again?' she asked.

'You haven't gone with anyone else for a long time. That proves you're strong enough. If you decide you don't want to keep doing it, you can be that strong again.'

'Can we compromise?'

'What are you thinking?' he asked.

'What if I text Tray and tell him me and Jodie want to go out for a drink with him and Anthony?'

'Good start.'

'You can hang around somewhere in the pub. If I can work it, I'll get Tray to kiss me.'

Edward felt another powerful jolt of lust. 'You're going to kiss a black man in front of me?'

Kelly looked him. 'Yes, Edward, I'm going to do it. But if I don't feel comfortable, I'm going to walk away and we never talk about this again. Okay?'

'I promise.'

'We'll do it tomorrow night.'

'I have to work tomorrow night.'

'Call in sick. You won't be lying. If you want to watch your wife kissing another man, you must be pretty sick.'

Kelly took her phone out of her pocket and tapped the screen for a couple of minutes. Edward felt his excitement build even more as he watched his wife arranging to meet another man. She turned her phone around and showed him the screen: Hi Tray, if you and Anthony are free tomorrow night, me and Jodie would LOVE to see you!

‘That should do it,’ said Edward.

She sent it off, and a moment later, her phone beeped. She smiled as she read the reply. Edward looked over her shoulder and read: Mr. Robinson and Mr. Davis will be delighted to attend.

Chapter Eleven

Kelly felt uneasy as she sent the message to Tray. She was crossing a line, starting down a road that seemed to have only one destination. But when Edward saw Tray's response, he pushed her down onto the bed and kissed her. He lay on top of her and his hand went under her sweater. As he squeezed her left breast, he said, 'You're going out to meet a black man and you're going to kiss him.' He unbuttoned her jeans and pulled them down, along with her panties. He put a finger inside her cunt and said, 'You're wet. You obviously like the idea of kissing a black man.'

Kelly wasn't so sure. Her body liked the idea very much, but her mind was still troubled.

Edward ripped off his own trousers and rolled a condom over his cock. Kelly didn't do anything to stop him, but she didn't really want to have sex just then. She wanted to go through every possible outcome and hear Edward's reassurance that, whatever happened, they'd be all right as a married couple.

It took him less than thirty seconds to cum. Afterwards, he seemed to realize what she needed. Instead of offering to lick her, he held her tight with her head on his chest and told her, 'You're my wife. Nothing's going to change that.'

The next evening, Kelly and Jodie were in Jodie's room, getting ready to go out. 'I don't have anything to wear,' complained Kelly. 'Maybe I should cancel.'

'Don't be silly,' replied Jodie. 'You've got loads of nice clothes. And I can lend you some.'

Kelly tried on a black dress that came down to her knees. 'How do I look?'

'Great,' said Jodie.

'Do you think I need stockings?'

'Is he the kind of guy who likes stockings?'

'I don't know.' She sat down heavily on the bed. 'Jodie, I'm not sure I can do this.'

Jodie sat next to her and put an arm around her. 'Don't take this the wrong way, lovely, but you've had sex with hundreds of men—'

'It's not hundreds!'

‘Not far off,’ said Jodie, with a teasing smile. ‘And now you’re worried about kissing a guy?’

‘It’s different this time.’

‘Because you’re married?’

‘It’s partly that,’ said Kelly. She opened the door and looked out to make sure Edward wasn’t listening. ‘The truth is, I like Tray. It’s not every day you meet someone you think could be a friend.’

‘Why do you need another friend when you’ve got me?’ asked Jodie, with a little pout.

Kelly kissed her on the lips. ‘Don’t worry, darling. You’ll always be my number one.’

‘So long as we’re clear on that,’ replied Jodie. ‘But you’re worried that if you do anything with Tray, it’ll mess up your friendship.’

‘Well ... yeah,’ said Kelly. ‘I know some people can still be friends after they’ve fooled around together, but I’ve never managed it.’

‘You’ve managed it with me,’ retorted Jodie.

‘That doesn’t count.’

‘Because it’s not real sex if it’s two women?’ Jodie counted on her fingers. ‘So, you’re a racist, you hate lesbians’

Kelly couldn’t get to Jodie’s ass so slapped her thigh instead. ‘Shut up, Jodie.’ She paused and thought for a moment. ‘And the other thing is, I don’t want to use Tray.’

‘No guy in the history of the world has complained because a sexy girl kissed him.’

‘Yeah, but if he thinks it’s the start of something more How’s he going to feel if he knows I’m only doing it to turn my husband on?’

Up to this point, Jodie’s tone had been playful, almost mocking, as if she thought Kelly was making a fuss about nothing. Now, she looked at Kelly sternly. ‘Listen, lovely,’ said Jodie. ‘I’m a slut and damn proud of it, because it’s my right to fuck anyone I want. But the important word here is “want.” Nobody makes me do anything I don’t want to do. And if you don’t want to kiss Tray, I’ll phone him right now and call it off. You are not going to be forced into anything by Edward or any other fucker.’

Kelly looked down and mumbled, ‘It’s not only because Edward wants me to.’

‘Admit it, you fancy Tray in the worst way.’

Kelly looked at the opposite wall for a moment and then nodded reluctantly.

‘Little Miss I’m-not-into-black-guys,’ said Jodie.

‘I still don’t know if I’m into black guys in general. I just know I’m getting more and more into this one.’

‘That’s all right, then. Now let’s get you tarted up so Tray won’t be able to keep his fucking hands off you.’

Twenty minutes later, they opened the door and went into the living room. Jodie was wearing a deep-red blouse with a black skirt and shoes. Kelly was in the black dress with matching stockings and high-heeled shoes. Edward was pretending to watch TV, but obviously eager to find out what Kelly was wearing. He gazed at them appreciatively. ‘You both look fantastic,’ he said.

With a dismissive wave of her hand, Kelly said, ‘We look like two girls going down the pub. Nothing special.’

Kelly sat down in the armchair next to Edward’s and took her wedding ring off.

Edward paid all three of their fares as they got onto the bus. They sat at the back, and Edward explained the plan. ‘Okay, when we get there, you two go in first. If the guys have already arrived, hook up with them. If not, get yourselves a drink.’ He took out his wallet and gave Kelly a twenty-pound note. ‘Don’t sit in a booth or anywhere too hidden away. When I come in, I’ll ignore you and sit on my own.’

‘Copy that,’ said Kelly. She smiled at Jodie, who grinned back.

‘If anything goes wrong, scratch your right ear and I’ll step in.’

‘What if I have an itchy ear?’ asked Kelly.

‘Scratch your ear, then your nose, then your ear again.’

‘Understood.’

They got off the bus outside the pub. Edward gave Kelly a quick kiss. ‘See you later,’ he said. ‘Remember the signal.’

Kelly kissed Edward back and said, ‘We’ll rendezvous for the debrief at oh eight hundred.’

Edward frowned. ‘That’s eight in the morning. I hope to see you before then.’

‘We’ll see how the night goes,’ said Kelly, with a little laugh.

All the talk about signals and debriefs made Kelly feel like this was just a game. They were pretending to be spies on a secret mission. The lighthearted mood soon left her as she and Jodie walked in to the pub. People looked up from their drinks and watched them—with desire or disapproval, she wasn't sure which. She had an urge to take the twenty pounds to the supermarket, buy some bottles of wine, and have a quiet evening in the apartment. She'd talk to Edward about cheating on him with black men as much as he wanted. She was happy to fantasize with her husband because that was just words. Being here to meet another man suddenly seemed grossly physical.

Her feelings changed again when she heard that deep voice behind her. 'Good evening, ladies.' She turned and saw Tray, with Anthony beside him. Tray was smiling broadly and Kelly immediately felt more relaxed. There was no need to feel nervous. She was here to spend time with a friend. And if she ended up kissing him, so what? People kiss their friends all the time.

'We owe you guys a drink,' said Kelly, holding up Edward's twenty-pound note.

Tray waved it away. 'No, we'll get these. Smirnoff and lemonade, right?'

Jodie nodded. 'Double.'

By the time Tray came back from the bar, Jodie already had a proprietary arm around Anthony's shoulders. 'Shall we give the lovebirds a bit of privacy?' Kelly suggested to Tray.

Jodie made a face when she heard the word "lovebirds," but she led Anthony to a table at the other end of the room.

Kelly and Tray sat down. Kelly saw Edward, three tables away, sipping a pint of Guinness. He probably thought he was being discreet, but he was watching them intently. Kelly made sure Tray had his back to Edward as they sat down. She didn't want Tray feeling uncomfortable because someone was looking at him. 'So ... how are you?' she asked Tray.

'I'm good,' he replied. 'How are you?'

'Not too bad.'

There was a silence and Kelly felt a little nervous again. She wasn't sure how to lead up to kissing another man in front of her husband. She took a long drink, hoping the alcohol would make it easier to talk. But this just made her feel guilty. 'Are you okay with me drinking in front of you?' she asked.

Tray smiled again—and he had such a beautiful smile. ‘Go right ahead. When I’m with the guys from the base, I’m normally the only sober person in the room. I’m used to it.’

Kelly took another drink. ‘Er ... what do you like to do when you’re not working?’ she asked. It sounded like the sort of lame question you ask on a first date, but she couldn’t think of anything else to say.

‘I love sports,’ said Tray. ‘I don’t play much anymore, but I watch a lot. I support the South Dakota Coyotes basketball team.’

‘I’ve never heard of them,’ admitted Kelly.

Tray nodded. ‘Don’t worry. There are people in South Dakota who don’t know them. I’ve been trying to get into English football since I’ve been here. It’s all some of the guys talk about.’

‘You have to support Everton,’ she told him, with a smile.

‘Noted,’ he said. ‘I don’t like cricket, though.’

Kelly shook her head, remembering the time Edward had dragged her along to a cricket match. ‘A game that lasts five days and normally ends in a draw.’

Tray chuckled. ‘Only in England.’

‘Do you like it over here—generally, I mean, not just for sport?’

Tray thought for a moment. ‘I do. I miss home from time to time. But in some ways, it’s easier over here.’

‘What do you mean?’

‘There aren’t too many black people in Rapid City.’

‘Did you take a lot of shit when you were growing up?’

‘Some. Most of it was subtle. As I walked past, people gripped their bags a bit more tightly. People who saw me coming suddenly found a reason to cross the road. I don’t feel like people are afraid of me here.’

‘You might not be so lucky everywhere, but you’re probably okay in Cambridge. Lots of students from all over the world.’

‘It’s not a bad place to be,’ agreed Tray. ‘How did you end up here?’ he asked.

She took a moment to look at him closely. All she saw in his eyes was kindness and understanding. She looked around and didn’t think anyone else could hear her. She decided to tell him the truth. ‘You know when you said about hiding upstairs, waiting for the fifth hiss as your dad opened another beer?’ Tray nodded. ‘Well, I used to hide from my dad too. I went to bed wearing eight layers of clothes. Everything I could find. I turned the light off and closed my eyes as tight as possible—as if that gave me any protection. I heard my dad’s footsteps on the stairs and ... I’m not proud of this. Sometimes I used to hope he’d go into my sister’s room and leave me alone. But it was normally my bedroom door that opened and shut and I could hear him moving toward me. I smelt the cheap whiskey on his breath. And then I heard him say, “I know you’re not asleep.” And ... well, you can guess the rest.’

There was a lot of sadness in Tray’s eyes as he said, ‘Unfortunately, I can.’

‘And if I tried to stop him, he hit me.’

‘I know that feeling.’

‘I went to school looking like a Dalmatian. I always said I was too ill to do gym, so I wouldn’t have to get changed in front of the others. But if a teacher did see my bruises, I’d say I got hit by a ball playing rounders or I fell down when I was climbing a tree.’ She paused and swirled the drink in her glass. ‘I don’t know why I covered up for the bastard.’

‘You were afraid of what he’d do if you ratted him out.’

‘And then I started down the same road as you—only not so bad.’ She immediately realized what she’d said and put a hand to her mouth. ‘Sorry. I don’t mean I’m better than you or anything. It’s just—’

He put his hand on her arm. ‘Say whatever you want, Kelly. You won’t offend me.’

She smiled gratefully at him and said, ‘My dad kept all the booze in the house under lock and key. That was for him. But I started going with a group who hung around the local park. Some of the lads played footie. The rest of us sat on the benches. There was a guy who was a bit of a twat, but we kept him around because he looked a lot older than he was. He could go into a shop for some bottles of cider and hardly ever get ID’d. The lads were keen to get the girls drunk, but to be honest, a lot of us would have put out even if we’d stuck to cherryade. Then a strange thing happened—pretty much the same as what happened to you. I sagged off school one Friday afternoon and went to the park. I drank a whole bottle of cider then went home. My dad was the only one in the house. And he did ... what he always did. It was still horrible of course, but I was a bit numb to it. I think you know what I mean.’

Tray looked down at the table. ‘I wish I didn’t.’

Kelly carried on. 'Some of the guys smoked dope. I tried it, but it wasn't my thing. However much I tried to look cool, I coughed up a lung most times. But it had the same effect. It numbed me to what was going to happen later.' She looked into his eyes again. She didn't see any judgment, so she said, 'But my real drug wasn't dope or even alcohol'

'It was sex?' he asked her quietly.

She nodded. 'I got myself a boyfriend. He was more than happy—having a girl who was always up for it. He wasn't so happy when I fucked his best friend. It didn't last though. My dad frightened him off. My dad said nobody was allowed to touch me except him. Then, when I came down here, Jodie and I went out every night. And you've seen her. We're as bad as each other.'

They looked over to where Jodie and Anthony were sitting. Jodie was sitting on Anthony's lap, facing him. Her legs straddled his, causing her skirt to ride up. They were kissing with their mouths open wide, and his hands were on her ass. 'They'll get thrown out if they're not careful,' said Kelly. She took another sip of her drink and went on with her story. 'Anyway, we went home with different guys every night. If we couldn't find a guy, we fooled around with each other. It was an addiction. I couldn't go a day without sex. I got into a panic if I didn't know where my next shag was coming from. I couldn't say no to anyone.'

'But you said no to me. Well, you pretended to be asleep.'

She looked away guiltily. 'Don't take it personally. You're a pin-up compared to some of the streaks of piss I've been with. Sorry, that came out wrong.'

He smiled. 'It's okay.'

'But I said no to you for the same reason you drank Coke all night.'

He nodded. 'I understand. I'm so sorry you had to go through all that.'

'My mam knew what was happening, but she was too scared to do anything.'

'And sometimes you get mad at her for not doing more to protect you?'

Kelly nodded. 'You know what it's like.'

'Are your mom and dad still together?' he asked her.

'Yes,' she said, sadly.

'So are mine,' he said, looking down at the table.

‘I don’t know how my mam can stand to be with him after what he’s done, but’

Tray joined in and they said together, ‘She has nowhere else to go.’

He smiled at her and she gave him a shy little smile back. She remembered she still hadn’t answered his question about how she ended up in Cambridge. ‘One night, when I tried to resist my dad, he dragged me out of bed by the collar of my nightshirt and pulled me downstairs. My nightshirt ripped, and I got carpet burns all down my back. That’s when I decided I’d had enough. I let him do it that night, but I felt a bit more in control, because I had a plan. The next day, I went into town with my sister, broke away from her, and went to the police station. Before, I’d always been afraid the coppers wouldn’t believe me. But now I had these carpet burns all over me, they could see something wasn’t right. Anyway, they moved quickly. My dad was arrested. I was taken into care and moved to a home in Cambridge. That worked out all right, actually. I got a better education here than I ever got at my shitty school in Liverpool. I met Jodie and we’ve been together ever since. Sisters in arms.’

Tray nodded and there was a silence. Kelly broke it by putting on a high-pitched American voice and saying, ‘That’s my story!’ Tray gave a low chuckle.

Jodie and Anthony ran past them. ‘We’re going to find a quiet place outside where we can have some fun,’ said Jodie.

Anthony had the look Kelly had seen on the night he’d met Jodie—that of a man who’d won the big prize. She’d also seen Edward looking like that a few times. ‘I love this girl so much,’ said Anthony.

When Jodie heard that, she looked at Kelly, wide-eyed. Jodie and Anthony ran out.

‘Someone’s about to get lucky,’ said Kelly.

Nodding, Tray watched them go, then turned back to Kelly. ‘Do you ever miss Liverpool?’

‘Sometimes,’ said Kelly, a little sadly. ‘Most people are friendly up there. Down here, they’re just polite—well, mostly.’ She shuddered slightly as she remembered some of the people at Elizabeth’s party.

‘I must go up there sometime,’ said Tray.

Kelly shook herself out of the bad memories and grinned. ‘I’ll give you a crash course in speaking Scouse, so you can understand people.’

Tray smiled. ‘Okay, what do I need to know?’

‘Well, the first thing is: if I say I’m made up, it doesn’t mean I’ve got my lipstick on. It means I’m very happy. As in, When I got into the club for free, I was made up.’

‘So ... I’m made up to see you tonight?’

‘That’ll do. And if a man calls you love, it doesn’t mean he’s gay. It doesn’t even mean he likes you. It’s just the way some fellas talk to each other. Don’t say it down here, though. People will get the wrong idea.’

‘I’ll remember,’ said Tray. ‘Do you like it down here?’

‘Cambridge isn’t too bad, I suppose. The college buildings are nice. It’s a shame they’re full of students.’

‘Are they ... wankers?’ asked Tray, grinning. ‘I’ve heard that word a lot since I’ve been here.’

‘You don’t say that where you come from?’

‘We normally just call someone a jerk or an asshole.’

‘Both good words,’ said Kelly, nodding. ‘And most students are wankers, jerks, and assholes. They reckon they’re better than you, because they’re at university, and you’re not. Some of them are okay, I suppose. Also, this isn’t the most exciting town in the world. That club we were at on Friday is the most happening spot in town, believe it or not.’

‘That place is all right,’ said Tray. ‘You meet some nice people there.’

Kelly found herself gazing into Tray’s eyes for a little too long. She looked away and saw Edward sitting at his table, the pint of Guinness almost finished. She’d forgotten what she was here for. Talking about her childhood was not the best way to segue into an erotic encounter. She remembered he’d kissed her finger after she’d burnt it. Could she think of a plausible story about burning her lips? She decided not to bother. She’d just kiss him and blame it on the drink if he objected.

He was looking at a couple of lads who seemed on the point of starting a fight. He turned back to her. ‘Some people shouldn’t—’ he began.

She pressed her lips against his in a first kiss.

He made a little noise of surprise, but he didn’t pull away. Rather, he put his hand on the back of her head and kissed her more intensely. She opened her mouth slightly and ran the tip of her tongue around his lips.

His mouth tasted different than Edward’s—not better, not worse, just different. And this difference excited her. She pressed her body tighter against his. She wanted him to feel her breasts against his chest. She wanted him to be excited by her womanly body.

As their kiss became more passionate, she felt a mix of strong emotions. She imagined this was how Tray would feel if he put a bottle of whiskey to his lips. On the one hand, she hated going back to something she thought she'd left behind forever. But on a physical level, it was so good to feel the old drug flooding her body again. She had a deep, dark desire for Tray, and it suddenly frightened her.

'I'd better go,' she said, quickly.

He raised his eyebrows. 'No need to do that.'

'Yes, there is,' she said, picking up her bag. 'I'm sorry. I invited you out for a drink and then jumped on you. It was wrong.'

'I don't mind,' he said, with a gentle smile.

'Well, I do.'

'You're making a habit of running out on me.'

'I know. I'm sorry. Goodbye, Tray.'

She went out without looking at Tray or Edward. There were a couple of big bins outside the door of the pub. She ducked behind them and hid as Tray came out the door and looked around. Part of her wanted to reassure him that he hadn't done anything wrong, but she couldn't face him at that moment. Fortunately, he went off in the other direction. When he was out of sight, Kelly straightened up and waited. Edward emerged a moment later. She went to confront her husband.

Chapter Twelve

Edward's whole body was burning with desire as he went up to Kelly. He couldn't believe what he'd seen. It had been so much more than a kiss. He'd have been excited by a peck on the lips. But he'd watched his wife open her mouth and lose herself in a passionate kiss, while pressing her sexy body against another man. He was so blinded with lust that he didn't notice Kelly's expression as he went up to her. Wanting to taste the other man on his wife's lips, he tried to kiss her. He was shocked back to his senses when she pushed him away roughly. 'Fuck off, Edward!' she spat at him.

'What's wrong?' he demanded.

'What sort of a pervert are you?'

'I've never tried to hide my perversions from you,' he said with a smile, trying to turn it into a joke.

'It's not funny,' she yelled at him. 'Another man kissed me!'

'We knew it was going to happen,' he said.

'It's fine to talk about it, but you shouldn't have let it actually happen. I want you to find Tray and punch him on the nose.'

'I don't think that would help,' said Edward.

'You mean you're scared shitless,' she replied, contemptuously. 'Are you really a man, Edward?' He didn't know how to reply, so said nothing. 'Because sometimes I wonder,' she continued. 'When you saw me kissing another guy, you should have been straight in there to break it up. That's what a man would have done.'

'Maybe you're right,' he said in a soothing voice, trying to calm her.

'Of course I'm fucking right! I'm' Her voice stuttered to a halt as she started crying.

Edward wanted to put his arms around her, but thought she'd push him away again. 'Shall we go home?' he suggested.

Seeing a taxi going past, he put out his hand. They couldn't really afford it, but he didn't want Kelly to have to face other people on the bus. He didn't say anything in the taxi and looked out the window. He wondered what would have happened if he'd knocked Tray on the floor with a single punch, like she'd said. Then he realized that could never have happened. Edward would have been the one who ended up on the floor. He remembered the words of the website, "Black men are superior to white men. They're bigger and stronger." The bigger, stronger man had kissed his wife. He became aroused as he thought about this and wondered if he'd ever be able to talk to Kelly about it without her getting angry. He thought Kelly was still mad at him, so was surprised when, five minutes later, he felt her hand on his leg. He turned his head to face her and saw the look of fury had been replaced with a sad smile. 'Sorry,' she mouthed.

He'd expected to spend the rest of the night apologizing to her.

When they got home, Kelly went to the fridge and gave a little cry of delight when she found a bottle of white wine. She opened it, took two glasses from the draining board, and went into the bedroom. Edward followed her. She sat on the bed, holding a glass out to him. 'I wish you were a racist,' she said.

'Er ... sorry to disappoint you,' was all he could think of saying.

'Imagine if you were one of those tossers with a shaved head and a "white pride" neck tattoo. Watching me kiss a black man would drive you crazy. How kinky would that be?'

Edward had no idea what to say to that. She'd already yelled at him for being a pervert, so he didn't want to say anything that might land him in trouble again.

'So, did you enjoy watching me with a black man?' she asked.

He knew this could be a dangerous question, but she was looking at him with a roguish smile, so he risked nodding.

'Do you wish he was here now?' It was probably a good thing she didn't give him time to answer, but asked, 'Why do you want me to fuck Tray?'

She was breathing heavily—but with excitement instead of anger. He'd always known Kelly's moods could change in a second, but even so, he was surprised at how quickly she'd gone from hating the whole situation to being turned on again. Nevertheless, he continued to tread carefully. He thought it best to put the focus on himself, rather than her. Standing by the bed, he pulled down his trousers and showed her his cock. For the first time in his life, he was hoping his cock would be soft and limp. He was disappointed that it was standing out, straight, proud, and big. But he decided to ignore that. 'Do you think this dick could ever satisfy you?'

She looked at it for a moment, like it was her turn to be unsure how to react. He was glad when her lip curled into a sneer and she said, 'No chance.'

'It's too small for you, isn't it?'

She didn't say anything but held up her pinkie finger. Ironically, this had the effect of making his cock grow to an even more impressive size.

'You remember our first time?' he asked.

She nodded with a cruel look in her eyes. 'I put my hand inside your pants—all excited about what I might find. Then I had to hunt around for ages, trying to find the bloody thing.'

'And our first fuck?'

She laughed. 'That was not a fuck. That was having some wanker lying on top of me for ten seconds.'

'Am I wanker? Is that what you think of me?'

'It's what I thought the first time I saw you.'

He bent down to kiss her, put his hand up her dress, and gave a little moan as he found she wasn't wearing any panties. 'What else am I?'

She bit her lip in pleasure as his finger rubbed her clit. 'You're a wimp. You can't satisfy a woman, so you get off on imagining a real man doing it.' She paused and looked Edward in the eye as he slid a finger into her cunt. 'You know what I think, Edward? I reckon you fancy Tray. You watched him kissing me and desperately wished he was kissing you. You dream of kneeling in front of him and sucking his big, black dick. You say you want him to fuck me, but what you really want is for him to hold you down and ram his black cock into your tight, white, posh boy's arsehole.'

'But what would you do if he were here now?' he asked her.

'Well, I'd kiss him again for a start,' she said. 'He's a good kisser. And he has those lush full lips. Would you like to see me kiss him again?'

'Yes.'

Kelly sat up against the headboard and pushed her dress straps off her shoulders. Pulling down the front of the dress, she exposed her breasts. 'Do you think he'd like these?'

'He'd love them,' said Edward.

'What do you think he'd do with them?'

By this time, Edward was fairly sure Kelly wasn't going to turn on him and get angry again so he sat down on the bed next to her. 'I think he'd kiss them all over.' He leaned forward and kissed them. He started just below her neck and worked his way down.

'I think he'd suck them,' she said.

Edward took her left nipple into his mouth and sucked it. Then he held it gently between his teeth while he ran his tongue over it.

‘What do you think he’d do next?’ she asked.

She raised herself off the bed so he could push the skirt of her dress up to her waist. She spread her legs and he lay between them. ‘I think he’d do this,’ he said, as he teased her clit with the tip of his tongue.

She moaned with pleasure and then added, ‘Maybe black guys don’t go down.’

‘They’re missing a lot in that case,’ he said, as he worked his tongue up and down her inner lips.

He licked her clit with rapid little movements. When he sensed that she was close to cumming, he licked her even faster. She put her hands behind her and held onto the headboard as she came.

‘That was good, lovely,’ she said, ‘but I don’t think it’s what he’d do.’

She lay down on the bed and pushed her breasts together. Edward knew what that meant. He took off his trousers and shorts and knelt with his knees on either side of her. He didn’t bother to take off his shirt, but lifted it out of the way. She let her breasts part so he could put his cock between them. Then she pushed them together again, enclosing his cock in the soft warmth of her flesh.

He couldn’t believe this was happening. When she’d been yelling at him outside the pub, he’d have put money on her pointedly going to bed and turning away from him as soon as they got home. But now he was moving his cock between her beautiful breasts.

‘Imagine him doing this,’ she said, looking up with a grin. ‘Think of the contrast. I bet his cock is black as tar. My tits are white as snow. Imagine him putting his big black cock between these and keeping it there until he shoots his’

She stopped when Edward illustrated what she was saying by cumming all over her chest and neck.

After they’d cleaned up, they got back into bed and turned the light off. Edward’s mind was racing. Seeing his wife being kissed by a black man had been a powerfully erotic experience. There could be no doubt how turned on she’d been. Maybe it wasn’t too surprising that she’d reacted against it. But he’d been shocked by how angry she was. Then, after he and Kelly had come home, they’d enjoyed talking about the very thing that had made her so angry.

He was still confused when he woke up. He lay still until he felt Kelly stirring beside him. What mood would she be in when she woke up? She might want to hit him or she might want to have sex with him. It could go either way. 'Good morning,' he said, watching her face, cautiously.

It was a relief to see her smile. 'How you doing, lovely?' she asked.

'I'm good.'

'How do you feel about last night?'

'I liked it. More to the point, how do you feel?'

'It was good. I'm sorry I went off on one. I'm okay now.' She paused and looked at him. 'You know I made you promise to let it go if I didn't like it?'

Edward nodded.

'Well ... I want you to let it go.'

'You didn't like it?'

'No, that's the trouble. I loved it. Kissing Tray made me feel something so strong, I don't know if I can handle it. It frightens me.'

'But ...' began Edward.

'You said you'd let it go, Edward. Keep the promise. I'm never going to see Tray again.'

Chapter Thirteen

Kelly had woken up thinking that the easiest thing would be never to contact Tray again. He knew where she lived, but he didn't seem like the stalker type. If she simply cut off all communication, he'd soon get the message.

But as she showered, she started to think that wasn't fair. Having kissed him and raised his expectations, she couldn't ignore him now. He was a nice guy who deserved at least an explanation.

She decided two things. She was going to see Tray one more time and she was not going to tell Edward about it. She knew Edward would ask a lot of questions like, 'What are you going to wear? Are you going to kiss him again?' He might even insist on coming to watch. Kelly didn't want any of that. She wanted a quiet, dignified meeting with Tray. She would explain the situation and apologize if she'd hurt or disappointed him in any way.

She came out of the bathroom with a towel wrapped around her. Wanting to discuss her decision with Jodie, she hovered for a moment outside her door. Kelly heard Jodie saying, 'Oh, fuck, yeah!' Kelly walked away, smiling. At least somebody's love life was going smoothly. Jodie and Anthony seemed to be getting on well. Kelly thought it might be embarrassing when she ran into Tray at Jodie and Anthony's wedding, but she'd cross that bridge when she came to it. She was a bit surprised to see her own bedroom door closed, but assumed it meant Edward was masturbating to thoughts of her with black men. She decided to leave him to it for a while. Sitting on one of the armchairs in the living room, she checked her phone. She felt a pang of guilt as she saw three missed calls and a text from Tray. The message read, Worried about you. Are you ok?

Kelly leaned back in the chair and sighed. Why did Tray have to be nice? Why couldn't he be more like the black men described on that website? Any one of those guys would just have said, 'Fuck her!' as soon as she'd run out and would have moved on to the next willing white woman.

She switched her phone to silent and replied, I'm ok—sorry about last night. Can I see you again tonight? She looked at what she'd written and deleted the word "again." She didn't want him thinking it would be another meeting like the night before. She remembered that Edward started work at nine that evening, so would leave the apartment at a quarter past eight. She added, Around 8:30? to the text.

Jodie's door opened. Kelly looked up as Jodie emerged with a man—a white man Kelly had never seen before. Kelly raised her eyebrows at Jodie. 'Good morning,' she said.

'Morning,' said Jodie, briefly, and hurried the man toward the front door.

'I'll give you a ring some time,' said the man, as he went out.

'Of course you will,' said Jodie, sarcastically, and shut the door.

Jodie came back into the living room, looking sheepish.

'Anthony's changed a bit,' said Kelly.

Jodie slumped down on the armchair next to Kelly's. 'I'm a bitch,' she said, with a deep sigh.

'What happened?'

'I got spooked when Anthony said he loved me.'

'I don't think he meant it,' said Kelly. 'It's just what a guy says when he thinks he's going to get laid.'

'Well then, it backfired big style. He didn't get laid. When we got outside, I came up with some stupid reason to have a row with him then stormed off to the next pub I could find and picked up that guy.'

'Who is he?'

Jodie shrugged. 'Fuck knows. The owner of a dick.'

Kelly looked at her with pursed lips. 'Jodie, are you doing that whole hurt-him-before-he-hurts-you shit?'

Jodie looked down at her knees. 'Maybe.'

Kelly got up, sat on the arm of Jodie's chair and hugged her. Jodie leaned her head against Kelly's breast. 'Why don't you give Anthony a chance, lovely?' said Kelly. 'He seems okay and he's obviously crazy about you.'

'You think I still can after last night?'

'Did Anthony see you with ... Mister Dick Owner?'

Jodie shook her head. 'I don't think so. I'm pretty sure he didn't follow me.'

'Then call him and he'll be here in five minutes with a bunch of flowers and a cock so hard you could smash rocks with it.'

Jodie seemed to be wavering for a while, then she said, 'No. Because I know what will happen.'

Kelly sighed. 'You don't.'

Jodie was insistent. 'Yes, I do. He'll start calling himself my boyfriend and he'll think that gives him some sort of power over me. Because he's fucking me, he can tell me what to do.'

'Not all guys are like Gary,' said Kelly. She'd lost track of how many times she'd said that, but Jodie never seemed convinced.

'Yes, they are,' said Jodie. 'Eventually I'll tell him to piss off and he'll smack me in the mouth. I know how this game is played.'

'Not always,' said Kelly. 'I can't imagine Tray ever doing that.'

Jodie was quiet for a moment. Then her expression changed to a knowing smirk. 'You do realize you've just given me the my-man's-not-like-the-others line? And you were talking about Tray?'

At that moment, Kelly's phone vibrated. It was Tray's reply. Yeah, sure. I'll pick you up at 8:30.

Chapter Fourteen

Kelly felt guilty as the car approached and she saw Tray's smiling face through the windscreen. She wanted him to look like a black wolf stalking its prey. Instead, he looked like a man in love, excited about seeing his girl.

Instinctively, Kelly clenched her left hand and pointed her knuckles at the ground. She didn't want to take that look off Tray's face, not immediately, anyway.

She got into the passenger seat. Tray put his arm around her and kissed her cheek. 'How you doing?' he asked.

Kelly nodded. 'I'm okay. Sorry again about last night.'

'Don't worry about it,' he said, gently. 'We all freak out sometimes. By the way, I got something for you.' He reached into his pocket and took out a soft toy clownfish.

Kelly felt a tightening in her stomach. She loved the toy, but hated that he'd bought her a present. As they set off, Tray said, 'I wanted to ask you something. In a couple of weeks, there's going to be a dance at the base. It would be great if you could come.'

She didn't reply.

'Where do you want to go tonight?' he asked.

'Somewhere quiet. I need to talk to you.'

'Sounds serious,' he said. 'How about our place? Anthony's gone for a drink with a few of the guys.'

'How is Anthony?' she asked.

'Worried about Jodie. I hear she ran out on him, as well.'

'Like you say, we all freak out sometimes.'

When they arrived at the house, Tray went into the kitchen. He came back with a vodka and lemonade for her and a can of Coke for himself.

He sat next to her on the couch and she realized she couldn't delay it any longer. She unclenched her left hand and held it in front of him. It took him a second to realize what she was showing him, then his face fell. 'I'm guessing you're not wearing your grandmother's old ring as a keepsake.'

She shook her head.

'You're married?'

She nodded.

He looked out the window and scratched his nails across the stubble on his chin. 'You should have told me,' he said, quietly.

'I know,' said Kelly. 'I'm sorry.'

‘Is it that Edward guy you mentioned in the coffee shop?’

Kelly nodded. ‘If I tell you the whole story, do you promise you won’t find my husband and beat him up?’

Tray said tonelessly, ‘Yes, I think I can promise that.’

Kelly thought it best to check, ‘And you won’t hit me, either?’

‘I can definitely promise that.’

She took a large gulp of her drink. ‘Okay, here goes. When I first got together with Edward, I told myself I wasn’t going to fuck this up by messing around with other guys. I was going to try to have a normal relationship with someone. But ... saying you’re going to quit and actually quitting are two different things.’

Tray sipped from his can. ‘Ain’t that the truth?’

‘I met this bloke on a course and we ended up in bed. Stupidly, I reckoned it was best to be honest, so I told Edward about it. I thought he’d tell me to fuck off. But no, he wanted to hear every detail. It was all he could talk about. And he still won’t shut up about it now. The truth is, the idea of me having sex with another guy turned him on. According to those websites he likes so much, he’s a cuckold. And it seems like, for a lot of cuckolds, the ultimate is for their wife to go with a black guy.’ She thought Tray might recoil in disgust if she touched him, so she looked into his eyes and said, ‘I’m sorry, Tray. You don’t deserve to be just a black guy in someone’s fantasy. You’re worth so much more.’

He looked sad and a little confused, but not angry. ‘I’m not here to judge anyone,’ he began, shaking his head. ‘But I can’t understand this at all. Maybe I’m selfish, but when I love someone, I want her all to myself. I want her smile to be the first thing I see when I wake up. I want to hold her tight as she’s going to sleep and let her know that no one’s going to hurt her while I’m around. And the idea I would let someone else get intimate with her ... well, I’d be jealous of the waiter she spoke to in the restaurant. I’d be jealous if the postman touched her hand when he gave her the mail. Because that’s what love is to me. It’s total commitment—the absolute certainty that two people mean everything to each other. There would be no room for anyone else inside that emotional bond. If that makes me sound like a psycho, then fine, I’m a psycho. But the woman I love would know she was loved every second of every day.’

Kelly looked back into Tray’s eyes. Then she threw herself at him, put her arms around his neck, and crushed her lips against his.

Chapter Fifteen

Tray asked Kelly if she wanted to spend the rest of the night at his place. When she said no, he just nodded and picked up his car keys. She felt a rush of gratitude toward him for not putting any pressure on her or even asking any questions. When he parked outside the apartment, he said, 'When you know what's happening, give me a call.'

'Thank you,' she said. She kissed him on the cheek and got out of the car. Once inside, she looked at the clock in the kitchen. It was three in the morning. Depending on when the factory knocked off, she might have one or two hours before Edward came home. She opened the door to Jodie's room and peeped in, checking that Jodie was alone. 'Lovely,' she said, quietly.

'Come in,' said Jodie. 'I can't sleep.'

Kelly turned the light on and sat on Jodie's bed. Jodie's eyes lit up as she breathed in. 'Have you been fucked?' she asked.

'Yes,' said Kelly, simply.

'You stink of cum, you slag. Who was it?'

Kelly smacked the quilt where she judged Jodie's butt to be. 'Tray, of course. Who else would it be?'

Jodie sat up. 'You've finally taken black cock! How was it?'

'Can we talk about that later? I need your help with something. Have you got any slutty underwear?'

Jodie laughed as if that was the stupidest question she'd heard in a while. She got out of bed and looked through her drawers.

'Something you don't mind getting roughed up a bit. I'll pay you back.'

'Don't worry, I've got loads. How about this?' Jodie pulled out what looked like a shapeless bundle of black mesh. 'I hardly ever wear this because it's a bitch to put on, but I think you'll like the way it looks.'

Kelly took off her clothes, and Jodie helped her climb into the garment, which turned out to be a see-through bodystocking in black fishnet. It covered Kelly's feet and legs. The stockings were attached to the bodice by thick black straps that went over her hips, but there was nothing covering the crotch. 'Do you want any panties?' asked Jodie.

Kelly shook her head. 'I want to show I'm ready for business.'

The bodice was in the same see-through material, with her breasts and nipples clearly showing. 'How do I look?' asked Kelly.

‘Every black man’s dream,’ replied Jodie.

‘It’s not enough yet. Are you sure you don’t want this?’

‘I’ll never wear it again,’ said Jodie.

‘Good, because I want you to do a couple of things. And is it okay if I tell you why later?’

‘All right, but make sure you do. What do you want?’

‘Can you rip the front so my left boob pops out?’

Jodie gave a low, excited moan. Her lips were parted and her eyes gleaming as she grabbed a handful of the material that covered Kelly’s breast. The mesh of the fishnet was large enough for Jodie’s fingernails and she got a good grip. Jodie pulled hard, but it just caused Kelly to stagger toward her. Kelly had to grab hold of the chest of drawers. Jodie pulled three more times and eventually the material ripped.

‘And now I want a few marks,’ said Kelly. Jodie’s eyes got even wider. ‘Nothing too serious. I want a love bite on my neck and another one on my boob. Do you think you can do that?’

‘With pleasure,’ said Jodie, her voice hoarse with desire. She put her arm round Kelly’s neck and kissed her on the lips. Then she moved down. Kelly felt Jodie’s breath on her neck, followed by the warmth of her lips. Kelly always loved this moment of feeling soft lips and knowing she’d soon feel the delicious pain of teeth against her skin. Jodie didn’t hold back with her love bites. She sank her teeth into Kelly’s neck and sucked hard. Kelly was so turned on that she could hardly stand and had to clutch the chest of drawers again to stop herself from falling. When Jodie had finished, Kelly looked in the small mirror on the back of the bedroom door. On her neck was a large strawberry-colored mark, bruised purple at the edges.

‘Beautiful,’ said Kelly. ‘Now my boob.’

Jodie bent down and lifted Kelly’s right breast. Once again, Kelly felt warm, soft lips followed by the sharpness of teeth. Kelly gasped with both pleasure and pain.

Jodie took her head away and Kelly looked down at the livid red mark. ‘Look what you’ve done to me, you bitch!’ she said.

Jodie grinned. ‘You deserve it, slut,’ she said. ‘Do you want any more?’

‘No, that’ll do. I just need the final touch. Have you got any lipstick?’

‘Every shade you can imagine.’

‘This is no time for subtlety. I need bright red.’

‘How about Scarlet Siren?’

‘Perfect.’ Kelly took the lipstick from Jodie and applied it thickly. ‘Now give me the biggest, wettest kiss you’ve ever given anyone. I want this smeared everywhere.’

They sat down on the bed together. Jodie opened her mouth and pushed it against Kelly’s. Their tongues locked together. This wasn’t strictly necessary for the purpose of smearing Kelly’s lipstick, but she didn’t complain. When she finally managed to break away from Jodie’s hungry mouth, Kelly got up to look in the mirror again. She didn’t want to look like a vampire with blood running down her chin, nor did she want any suggestion of the Joker. She was happy with what she saw: a woman who’d obviously been passionately—almost violently—kissed.

‘Why do you want to look like that anyway?’ asked Jodie.

‘When Edward comes home, I want to look like I’ve been fucked by a black man.’

‘You look like the queen of the sluts now.’

‘Thanks for all your help, lovely. I’d better go and wait for Edward.’

‘Not so fast. You can’t turn me on like that and just leave me. Could you ... maybe ... lick me?’

Kelly was surprised. ‘That’s crossing a line,’ she said.

‘You’ve already crossed the most important line tonight, lovely.’

‘I’ll get lipstick all over your cunt,’ was the only thing Kelly could think of saying.

‘I don’t mind.’

Kelly thought of an excuse. ‘And I want my breath to smell of cock rather than cunt when I kiss Edward.’

‘Could you finger me, then?’ asked Jodie.

‘Then my hand will smell of cunt.’

‘Tell Edward you haven’t been able to stop masturbating ever since Tray fucked you. Edward’s never been close enough to my cunt to smell it, so he won’t know the difference.’

Kelly shrugged. ‘Okay, why not?’

Jodie hitched up the white shirt she’d been wearing in bed. She looked at Kelly shyly. ‘And can you ... talk to me?’

‘You want me to call you names?’

‘A bit of that would be nice. But ... I know you’re not always comfortable doing this’

‘I’m pretty much up for anything right now.’

‘Why did Gary leave me?’

‘Oh, lovely, are you sure this is what you want?’

Jodie nodded enthusiastically. Kelly bit her lip. She was still aroused, but also nervous about the strong feelings involved in this game. Nevertheless, she sat on the bed, level with Jodie’s thighs.

Jodie didn’t believe in shaving or even trimming, and her pussy was framed by thick, dark pubes. Kelly noticed that Jodie’s prepuce was longer than hers and led down to a prominent clitoris. Jodie reached down to part the lips of her cunt and Kelly saw the muscular-looking entrance to her friend’s vagina. It looked strong enough to squeeze every last drop of cum out of any cock that entered it.

Kelly was breathing heavily. She’d never seen inside Jodie before. This new level of intimacy felt taboo and that excited her. She slid two fingers inside Jodie’s cunt and felt it tighten around them. ‘You loved Gary so much, didn’t you?’ began Kelly.

‘Only real boyfriend I’ve ever had. You know that.’

‘Yes, I do. And I knew that when I fucked him.’

Jodie writhed with excitement. ‘Why did you fuck him?’

‘Because he was yours.’

‘Where did it happen?’

‘Right here, in your bed. As soon as I got him alone, I kissed him. After that, it was easy. I took my clothes off and his mouth fell open. He said I had the best body he’d ever seen.’

‘Better than mine?’

‘So much better than yours. We both agreed you’re a fat slag with horrible tits.’

Jodie moaned. ‘Did he prefer yours?’

‘Of course he did. Mine are bigger and better than yours.’

‘Did you like his body?’

‘I can’t even remember it. He was the love of your life. To me, he was just a fuck. And all the time, he kept saying, “Oh Kelly, you’re the best—so much better than Jodie.” ’

‘Why did you do that to me?’

‘Because I hate you.’

That was enough to push Jodie over the edge. She lifted her butt off the bed and Kelly could feel Jodie’s cunt pulsating round her fingers, squeezing them so tightly it almost hurt.

After Jodie had cum, she lay in Kelly's arms. 'You do know I never laid a finger on Gary,' said Kelly. 'He did love you in his own way, and he adored your body. Obviously, I love you too.'

Jodie raised herself up and put a finger to Kelly's lips. 'Don't spoil it,' said Jodie. 'You fucked my ex because you both hate me, okay?'

'Okay,' said Kelly, laughing and kissing the top of Jodie's head. 'Now I must go and wait for my husband.'

'He'll want to fuck you when he hears about you and Tray.'

'He'll probably just want to wank himself. Either way, it's a busy old night.'

Chapter Sixteen

Edward felt tired as he let himself into the apartment. It had been a long night. He'd been carrying heavy units of double glazing around and his shoulder hurt. He wanted to get into bed and sleep.

His feelings changed as soon as he opened the bedroom door and saw his wife. She was sitting on the bed with her back against the headboard. Her lipstick was smeared and her breast was hanging out of her ripped clothes. As he gazed at her, open-mouthed, one word came into his mind: pornographic. He'd never seen his wife looking so pornographic and he'd never felt such lust for her. 'What happened?' he asked, breathlessly.

'I've had the best fuck of my life. That's what happened.'

'With Tray?'

'Of course it was with Tray!'

Edward ripped off his coat and dropped it on the bedroom floor. He pulled down his trousers and pants as he ran to the bed. Sitting down, he put his hand on his cock. 'Tell me everything,' he said. 'From the moment he picked you up until you got back home.'

There may have been a hint of contempt in the look Kelly gave him but he didn't care. She began calmly, 'In the car, he was normal. He asked me about my day and told me what he'd been doing at work. Even when we sat in his living room, he was talking about video games. Everything was normal. But when we got up to his room, he changed.'

'In what way?'

'The second we got into his room, he closed the door behind him and said, "Strip, bitch." '

Edward gasped and rubbed his cock gently. The story had only just begun and he already felt that he was close to cumming.

Kelly carried on, 'I took all my clothes off and stood in front of him, naked. He looked me over, checking out my tits and my cunt. Then he grabbed me by the shoulder and turned me round, so he could look at my butt. Well, I guess my body passed the test, because he threw me down on the bed and got on top of me. He was still fully dressed, so I felt his clothes rough on my skin and there were buttons and zips digging into me.'

Edward had to take his hand off his cock. 'Then what did you do?' he asked.

'I couldn't do anything,' she replied. 'I was pinned down under a six-foot black man.'

This was such a powerful image that Edward massaged the head of his cock lightly between finger and thumb, but he didn't dare do anything else.

'It was more what he did,' she continued, showing Edward the love bite on her neck. 'He did this to me. He said he wanted it in a visible place so I couldn't cover up what I'd been doing, couldn't hide what a whore I'd been. Then he kissed me, but there was nothing affectionate about it. He forced his tongue in—penetrating my mouth before he penetrated my cunt. His tongue felt so big inside me that I could only imagine what his dick would feel like. He moved his head down to my chest. I thought he was going to suck my nipples, but instead he bit my left boob.'

'Let me see,' said Edward. When he saw the red mark on Kelly's breast, he let out a groan of lust. 'Then what did he do?'

'He turned me over and spanked me. He said I needed to be punished for being such a white slut.'

Edward's breathing was ragged. 'Turn over. Let me see.'

She rolled over onto her front. Edward saw patches of vivid pink on both his wife's buttocks.

Looking over her shoulder, Kelly said, 'And he must have reckoned this was a good position for me, because the next thing I knew, he was undoing his zip. He couldn't be bothered to take his clothes off. He just got his cock out. He pulled me up so I was on my knees. If I tried to change position myself, he slapped me. He was going to put me exactly where he wanted me. Then his hands were on my hips. I felt the head of his cock nudging up against my cunt for just a second before he rammed it into me. He must have known it was the biggest dick I'd ever taken, but he didn't care.'

She rolled over and looked straight at Edward. 'Neither did I.' Edward gazed at her in dumb excitement, as she said, 'It was a good thing I was wetter than I've ever been in my life or it would have hurt like a bastard. Even so, I gasped at the sudden feeling of being so full. I took that huge dick and loved every inch of it. I was so turned on, I screamed out, "I am a filthy white girl who loves black cock." When he was ready to cum, he pulled out of me. He turned me round so I was facing him and stuck his cock in my mouth. It was too big for me and I gagged on it, but all he cared about was having somewhere to dump his cum. It wasn't long before he filled my mouth with spunk and told me to make sure I swallowed every drop. But there was so much of it, I couldn't get it all. A lot dripped down onto my chest.'

She pulled Edward's head down to her chest and commanded him, 'Smell the black man's semen on your wife's tits.' Edward breathed in. It was the first time he'd smelled any cum other than his own. It wasn't so different from his, but the knowledge of what it meant made the scent overpoweringly erotic.

Kelly pushed his head back so she could look him in the eye as she said, 'Then he just stood up and headed for the bathroom. On his way out, he said, "Get lost, bitch." As soon as he'd finished using me, he didn't want to know me anymore.'

Edward found it hard to take in what he was hearing. 'And how did —?' he began.

Kelly interrupted him by taking his cock in her right hand and pulling it hard. 'And all the time he was fucking me,' she said, 'he was calling me a white whore, an English slut who lives for big black American cock.'

Edward had a hundred questions he wanted to ask and tried desperately not to cum, but it was no good. He ejaculated into her cupped hands.

Dazed and shaking a little, Edward handed her a tissue and used another one to clean his cock.

'So how do you—?' began Edward, again.

Kelly cut him off by yawning. 'It's been a long night for both of us. Let's get some sleep.' She turned the light off and lay beside him.

Despite the release of cumming, Edward was too excited to sleep. His fantasy had come true. As he thought about what Kelly had told him, his cock became hard again. When he was sure she was asleep, he reached down and curled his fingers around it. He couldn't remember ever having such a strong emotional response to anything. All other desires and ambitions seemed to fall away. It wasn't important if he ever became a student at Cambridge University or if he published papers in historical journals.

The only thing he cared about was that his wife kept getting fucked by a black man and kept telling him all the details.

Chapter Seventeen

Kelly woke the next morning and went into the bathroom. She saw herself in the mirror and shuddered. Her hair was tousled, the lipstick even more smeared and the ripped bodystocking half hanging off her. The night before, she'd looked like a sexy woman, back from a wild night. But now she resembled a prostitute who'd woken up down a back alley, not sure how she'd gotten there.

The bodystocking was already ruined so she tore it off and put it in the bin. Getting into the bath, she turned on the shower attachment and vigorously scrubbed her face and breast. After washing her hair and every inch of her body, she stepped out of the bath and wrapped a towel around herself. She looked in the mirror again and saw someone who looked more like Kelly. She went back into the bedroom and sat beside Edward while he woke up. 'Good morning,' he said, sleepily.

'Morning,' she replied, briefly.

'How are you doing today?'

'Fine.'

He didn't seem to pick up on her short answers and realize the mood in the room had changed from the previous night. He sat up and said, 'When you say Tray had the biggest dick you've ever taken, how big—?'

'Not now, Edward,' said Kelly, testily. 'I'm not in that place.' She hugged herself and said more quietly, 'I shouldn't have done what I did last night. It wasn't fair.'

Edward smiled. 'I didn't mind.'

Kelly looked at her husband. For someone who claimed to be smart, he could be slow at times. 'I'm not talking about you, Edward. It wasn't fair on Tray.'

'He got to have kinky sex with a hot white woman. It must have been awful for him.'

Kelly sighed. 'All my life, men have used me. But in a way, I've used them as well. After everything I'd been through, I needed to make some different memories, so I pretty much fucked every guy I met. And I always thought more or less what you've just said. They're getting their end away, so they must be happy. But some of them probably wanted more. Maybe some of them actually liked me and wanted to be my boyfriend. But that's not what I was offering. Fuck him and move on. If it hurts him, too bad. It's better than him hurting me. After a while, that makes you sick at heart. And all the vodka in the world doesn't make it any better—not long-term, anyway. But then I saw a chance to break the cycle. I met a nice guy who was polite and held the door open for me. I thought he was someone I could actually be in a relationship with. That's why I wanted to get married.'

Edward was looking downhearted and more than a little guilty. He raised his eyes and mumbled, 'I love you, Kelly.'

She smiled wryly. 'When did you start loving me, Edward? Was it when I first kissed Jodie in front of you? Or when we were out that night and you saw Jodie and me flashing our boobs at a passing bus? Or was it when I admitted to cheating on you less than a week after we got together? Bisexual. Exhibitionist. Nymphomaniac. I bet those are all words you read in your dirty magazines when you were growing up.'

Edward stayed silent. She suspected he didn't want to admit the truth of what she said—either to her or to himself.

'Do you want to know what happened last night?' she asked.

Edward looked confused. 'You already told me.'

She shook her head. 'I told you what you wanted to hear. Do you want to know what really happened?'

He nodded.

Kelly began in the same calm voice she'd used the night before. 'He took me back to his place. I know I'd been there before but—'

'Hang on,' said Edward, holding up his hand. 'When were you there before?'

'The night we met them. We went back to their place. But nothing happened that time.'

'You told me—'

'I know. I lied so you wouldn't ask me a hundred questions. Do you want me to carry on?'

'Yes.'

'The room was the same, but something had changed. This time it wasn't the room of some random guy I'd met in a club. It was the room of someone I knew, a friend. We sat down on the bed together. He took my hand and looked into my eyes. He wanted me—no doubt about that. But I saw something else. There was a mixture of strength and gentleness I'd never seen in a guy's face before. I was excited, a bit scared and ... curious. I was about to do something I'd never done before.'

'What did he do?' asked Edward.

‘Ran his eyes up and down my body. I wondered what he was doing.’

‘Just looking at you, I guess.’

‘No, there was something else Anyway, he put his hands on me, and next thing I knew, I was lying on the bed. He kissed me on the lips. My whole body tingled when I felt those big, soft lips on mine. He moved his head back and brushed the hair away from my forehead. Staring deep into my eyes, he said, “You are amazing.” I put my arms around his neck and pulled his lips back to mine. Then he kissed along the line where my hair meets my forehead before moving to my cheek, my ear, and my throat. He undid one of the buttons of my blouse and gently pushed it away from my left shoulder. He reached down and unzipped my skirt without looking. That’s when I knew why he’d been looking at me like that. He was noting where every zip and button was.

‘As I lifted my bum off the bed so he could pull down my panties, I wondered how he’d react to my cunt. I read somewhere that a lot of American girls shave. Would he be turned right off by my bush? It blew my cover as a natural blonde, but he’d probably figured that one out anyway.’

‘How did he react?’

‘If he was horrified, he didn’t show it. He said, “Beautiful,” and got his head between my legs. He circled my clit with the tip of my tongue, then licked along my inner lips. When he reached the hole, he let his tongue flick the entrance. Then he pushed in his tongue and swirled it around the inside of my cunt. He was making appreciative noises, so I reckon he liked the way I taste.

‘He licked me for a few minutes. I wondered if he was going to make me cum with his tongue. But he moved to kiss my inner thighs and went down my legs until he reached my feet. Taking the big toe of my right foot in his mouth, he sucked it gently. It was like every little part of my body excited him. He gently turned me onto my front and caressed my back with both hands before stroking my arse. He seemed a bit shy about asking me, but he said, “Is it okay if I spank you?”

‘I said, “Go for it,” and waited to feel the sting of his first smack, but he went on stroking me. It was like he knew the anticipation was the most thrilling part, and he was letting it build. It was working: I could feel my cunt getting wetter as I felt his strong hand on my skin, knowing what was going to happen.

‘The first spank, when it finally happened, was perfect—neither too hard nor too soft. It didn’t hurt: it was just a delicious sting. He spanked me six times then went back to caressing the sore cheeks. “You can do that some more, if you want,” I said.

‘He said, “No, that’s enough,” and turned me onto my back again. He stood and I watched him get undressed. I’d seen some of it the last time. But I hadn’t seen his dick before. He stood there for a moment in his white boxers, letting the excitement build again. There was quite a bulge, so I was sure I wouldn’t be disappointed. He pulled them down’ She paused for a second to smile to herself. ‘His cock’s lovely—about eight inches long.’

‘Bigger than mine,’ muttered Edward.

‘And it’s nicely thick. I knew I’d feel it when he put it in me, but I also knew it wouldn’t hurt. He’s circumcised, so this brown dome was shining at the end of his cock. The skin was smooth with one thick vein running along the top. And it was a gorgeous brown, like chocolate. It looked delicious.’

‘Did you taste it?’

‘You know I did, Edward. I can’t remember the last time I saw a cock and didn’t put it in my mouth. None of them tasted like this, though. A hint of salt, but also something sweet.’ She looked her husband in the eye. ‘Tray’s cock tasted good. If he’d wanted to cum in my mouth, I’d have let him. I’d have swallowed every drop and then thanked him. But he wanted something else. He put on a condom and lay on top of me. He got his cock into me as expertly as he’d got my dress off me. As he started to move, he laced the fingers of both his hands into mine and held them behind my head. It made me feel like he was in control—which he was. Dominant but not aggressive. I was already so excited that it only took a few minutes for me to cum. He checked to see if I was satisfied. If only all men would do that. And he asked if it was okay for him to cum. I nodded. It still took him another ten minutes. I was well on the way to a second orgasm, but I didn’t want him thinking about that. I wanted him to enjoy his first cum inside me.

‘I thought I might feel guilty afterwards. But, in Tray’s arms, I didn’t regret anything. We lay there until I felt his cock getting hard again. I wanked him off. He came in my hand and I rubbed his cum over my tits. He replied by using his fingers on me and pushing me to a quiet but intense orgasm. I left feeling like I’d been played No, that sounds wrong. I don’t mean he’d tricked me or anything. It was like I was an instrument and he was the virtuoso.’ She looked up at Edward. ‘I told you I’d been fucked by a black man. The truth is, I made love with a man. And I couldn't give a damn what color he is.'

Edward was silent for a moment. He seemed to be letting all of this sink in. He'd listened to her intently, but he hadn't touched his cock or even taken it out of his pajamas. Did this version of the story not turn him on? He asked her in a voice that was almost scared, 'Well ... does it make much difference what sort of sex you have with him? You can still go and see him any time you want and then come back and tell me ...' he trailed off as he saw Kelly shaking her head.

'No, I couldn't. Tray would never accept anything like that. If I got with him, I'd have to be with him, and him alone.'

'So maybe you need to find another black man—a bit more like the ones they talked about on that website.'

Kelly felt sorry for him: he was clutching at straws. 'That's your solution?'

'Can you think of a better one?'

'Actually, I can.'

She took her wedding ring off and handed it to him.

Chapter Eighteen

Edward looked out the window and faced the reality of being an interracial cuckold. His wife got into a car and was driven away by a black man.

‘Has she gone?’ asked a voice behind him.

He turned to see Jodie. ‘Yes,’ he said.

‘Is she coming back?’

‘I don’t know.’

She came over to Edward and hugged him. ‘I’m sorry, Edward. I didn’t think it would go this way.’

‘Nor did I,’ he said.

‘What are you going to do now?’

‘I’ve still got three months on my contract for this place. So, I’m not going anywhere immediately. She might change her mind, who knows?’

‘And you’ll let me stay?’ asked Jodie, in a small voice.

‘Of course I will,’ he said.

She hugged him again.

He spent the next six weeks in a daze. He missed Kelly, but a large part of him found the situation darkly exciting. He didn’t get much sleep because he spent his days in an empty bed, masturbating to thoughts of what his wife might be doing, a few miles away in the black man’s bed. He could even imagine that his nights in the factory were part of a cuckolding scenario. He’d read stories about cuckolds being tied up in the basement or locked in the wardrobe while their wives were having sex. His torment was to slave away in a hot factory while his wife had fun with her hot lover.

At the start of the seventh week, he got a text from Kelly. It read, Can we talk?

They were into April and the weather was warmer, so they arranged to meet on Parker’s Piece. Edward waited by the lamp post with the appropriate name of Reality Checkpoint. He had showered, shaved and was wearing the dark-blue sweater that she’d once said looked good on him. He felt strangely nervous about seeing her and hoped she’d come alone: he didn’t want to make polite conversation with Tray.

He saw her walking toward him, past a group of students who were playing football. Several of them took their eye off the ball and looked at this striking woman with long, blonde hair and a curvy, sensual body.

Kelly gave Edward a quick, dry-lipped kiss and said, 'All right?'

Edward nodded, and they sat down on a patch of grass where no one else could hear what they were saying.

'I've got some news for you,' said Kelly. 'The U.S. Air Force are pulling their guys out of Mildenhall. Tray's going back to the States.' She paused and looked over at the guys playing football. Then, in a low voice, she added, 'I'm going with him.'

Edward wasn't sure how he felt about this, so he focused on technicalities. 'Won't you need a visa or something?'

'The admin guys at the base are helping with a temporary one. If I'm going to live out there permanently, though ... well, the easiest way will be if I'm married to an American citizen.'

'Anyone in mind?' asked Edward, with a dry smile.

'And that means ... you and I will have to'

There was a voice somewhere in his head telling him to fight for his woman, to use every argument he could think of to make her stay.

But he just nodded.

'It's something I used to think about when I was a kid—going to America, starting again,' said Kelly.

'Do you think Tray will look after you?'

She looked at him with a knowing smile. 'Oh yes, he always takes good care of me.'

Edward was dully aware that this was a joking attempt to turn him on a little bit, but all he felt was sad resignation.

Kelly seemed to realize this wasn't the moment for innuendo and her tone softened. 'In a lot of ways, Edward, you treated me well. And I'll never forget what you did for Jodie. But ... I think it is time to move on.'

She stood up and motioned him to do the same. She hugged him and he felt her in his arms—he was sure it was the last time. Her big, soft breasts were against his chest. Her perfume was cheap, but, to him, that made it even sexier on her. He kissed her, wondering if he could feel her tongue in his mouth one more time.

She kept her mouth closed, gave his arm a quick squeeze, and walked off.

Edward watched her go, then went back to the apartment. He was sad but not shocked. And underneath the sadness, there was a growing conviction that this might be the best solution for everyone.

As he let himself in through the front door, Jodie looked past him, obviously hoping Kelly would be with him. 'Is she coming back?' asked Jodie.

Edward shook his head and sat down heavily in one of the armchairs. Jodie sat in the chair next to his.

'Have you thought about what you're going to do?' she asked.

'Apply to university, I suppose,' he replied. 'Do what everyone has always wanted me to do.' He looked at her. 'And what about you?'

'I'll be all right,' she said. 'I'm always all right.' But even as she said it, a tear ran down her cheek.

Edward put his hand on hers.

She managed a small, grim smile. 'There's one thing I'm good at. Maybe I should turn professional.'

Chapter Nineteen

Edward phoned his father to give him the news. When Richard heard “divorce,” it was like the code word had been given to trigger a well-planned operation. Everything went ahead more quickly than Edward had expected. He was particularly grateful to his father for finding Jodie a room in a shared house and giving her two hundred pounds for the deposit. They agreed it was a loan until she found a job, but Edward knew his father wasn’t expecting to see the money again. ‘Thanks, Dad,’ he said, quietly. ‘You didn’t have to do that.’

Edward moved back into his old room in his parents’ house. Although the deadline for applications to Cambridge had passed, Mister Turner pulled strings with the history tutor of his old college and arranged for Edward to have an interview.

Just five months later, Edward was back in Cambridge. The streets were the same, but this time, he wouldn’t be walking through them at eight in the morning with lungs full of glass dust. He’d be going from the library back to his college with a pile of books under his arm.

At the porters’ lodge, he had to queue for five minutes behind some people who looked impossibly young. When his turn came, he stepped up to the window and said, ‘I’m starting at the college today.’ Over the past year, he’d often assumed he’d blown his chance of ever saying these words. His father helped him carry his bags. His room wasn’t exactly what he’d dreamt of. He was in a modern accommodation block, some way from the gothic pointed arches of the main college buildings. There was no polished oak paneling or Pre-Raphaelite art on the walls. It was a small, functional room with a bed, desk, basin, and chest of drawers. The only thing on the wall was a notice board. The view from his window was of another, identical block.

His parents took him out to dinner. Not being sure what meals in college would be like, he ate a lot. Although he was older than most students and had lived away from home, he felt a bit emotional when it came time for his parents to leave. The place he’d spent years dreaming of suddenly looked large and intimidating. But he smiled bravely as his mother hugged him.

In a room off the porters’ lodge was a pigeon hole that already had his name on it. Inside was a photocopied flyer that said, “Welcome freshers.

Drinks—college bar—8 till late.” Part of him wanted to hide away in his room until he felt more confident. But he told himself he must go and start making friends.

He didn’t want to be the first to arrive, so he waited until half past eight before making his way through the corridors to the bar. When he got there, though, he found most people were already in groups, and it was hard for him to break in. He managed to talk to a couple of people, but he was back in his room before ten o’clock. He went to bed and allowed himself a night of missing Kelly.

Things got better over the next few days. The first week was devoted to introductory talks and get-togethers. At one of these, he met Jess, who was also reading history. One day, when they were walking back from a lecture, she linked her arm with his and they quietly became a couple.

He knew his parents would love her. She was demurely pretty with short brown hair and deep blue eyes. Most importantly, she was highly intelligent and had a well-educated accent. The only thing that worried Edward was the inevitable moment when Jess would say, ‘So, tell me about your last relationship.’

Chapter Twenty

Kelly and Tray moved into an apartment in Rapid Springs. It was not the sort of place she'd imagined. In her dreams of going to America and starting again, she'd seen herself vaulting up steps to the arched entrance of her building, pulling across the gate of an old-style elevator and going up to her apartment, where she could sit and look out at a tree-lined avenue.

The place Tray took her to was called an apartment community. It looked to her like a military base, with low gray buildings evenly spaced between access roads and well-kept lawns. She wondered if this was the sort of place Tray felt most comfortable in. She didn't like it, but couldn't say anything. She was tired and disoriented after a long flight. She also felt vulnerable. She was in a strange country, where she knew just one person. Tray was her only means of support, both emotional and financial. Suddenly, her stomach dropped. Before she'd left England, she'd been so caught up in the logistics of obtaining a visa and arranging to move away, she hadn't thought through what it really meant to live in another country—maybe forever. Now she was in a place that didn't look like home and she wanted to get back on the plane and return to England.

It wasn't long before she settled into a routine, though. She had no complaints about the way Tray treated her. He couldn't go out drinking with his buddies in the evening, so he was home most of the time he wasn't working. The U.S. Air Force paid its people more than a small glass factory could, so there was more money coming in than she was used to. And Tray never mentioned the bills she ran up, making transatlantic calls to Jodie. Nonetheless, Kelly was disappointed that her life hadn't changed more. It wasn't like Sex and the City. She didn't spend her time going to glamorous parties and drinking cocktails in bars full of celebrities. She still went out to the supermarket most days. The novelty of buying different brands and paying in dollars soon wore off. The afternoon soaps and game shows on TV weren't so different from their British counterparts.

At least now she had her man in bed with her at night. But she discovered that, even if you're with a black man, you don't necessarily have mind-blowing sex every night. Some evenings, he came home tired and just wanted to watch a basketball game before going to sleep.

Kelly found herself asking, Is this all there is? Then one day, she looked at the calendar and realized it had been three months since her last period. The doctor confirmed that a big change was on the way.

Tray was delighted when he heard the news. He hugged her, kissed her, and started turning the spare room into a nursery.

A month later, she walked home from the shops with two light bags of groceries. Tray didn't like her doing any shopping in her condition, but she told him she'd go crazy if she never left the house. When she arrived home, she was surprised to find Tray in the front room. He was home early and looked pleased with himself. 'What's going on?' asked Kelly.

'I thought maybe you could use someone to help you,' he said.

Kelly felt uneasy. 'Your mam isn't moving in, is she?' She'd met Tray's mother a couple of times and liked her, but didn't want to live with her.

Tray chuckled. 'No.'

'We can't afford a nanny, can we?'

'I've found someone who'll do it cheap.'

'We're going to pay a Filipino maid ten cents a day and make her sleep in a cupboard?'

'You just try making me sleep in a cupboard,' said a familiar voice from the next room. Jodie walked in.

Kelly gave a little scream, ran up to Jodie, and hugged her. 'I've missed you so much, lovely,' she said.

'Life's been crap without you,' replied Jodie.

Kelly looked at Tray. 'How ...?'

'The admin guys worked their magic again. It's only temporary for the moment, but we'll try to work something out. If anyone asks, Jodie works here as an au pair.'

Kelly turned to Jodie with a grin. 'I'm your boss now, bitch.'

Jodie lowered her head in mock subservience. 'I hope I can give you satisfaction, ma'am.'

Kelly hugged her again. Then she hugged Tray and whispered, 'Thank you, darling,' in his ear.

When Kelly and Jodie were alone, Kelly said, 'It's so good to see you.'

Jodie kissed Kelly and put her hand on Kelly's breast. 'I missed you, lovely,' said Jodie.

Kelly gently moved Jodie's hand. 'Missed you too. But Tray doesn't want anyone else touching me.'

'Surely that doesn't include me,' said Jodie.

'I'm pretty sure that includes everyone.'

Jodie gave Kelly a searching look. ‘Are you okay, lovely? Is Tray good to you?’

Kelly thought for just a second, then nodded. ‘I think this is what I need right now.’

‘I’ll have to get my jollies somewhere else, then.’ Jodie looked at Kelly shyly. ‘To be honest, I’ve missed Anthony as well. Do you ... ever see him?’

Kelly smiled. ‘We’re going out with him on Friday night. Come along. I’m sure he’d love to see you.’

Chapter Twenty-One

Edward was alone in his college room one evening. He had started his second year of university. After his initial wobble, he was loving academic life.

Jess was out with the girls while he worked on an essay. He took a break and logged in to his Facebook account. None of his friends had done anything interesting in the fifteen minutes since his last log-in, so on a whim, he did a search for Kelly.

His eyes widened as he saw the photo on her page. It was one of the ultimate images of interracial cuckoldry. There was Kelly, smiling proudly with a black man's baby in her arms. She'd always believed she couldn't get pregnant. But Tray had come along with his big black cock and proved her wrong. Edward saw a contentment in her eyes that he'd never seen before. She was, as she would say, made up. There couldn't be any doubt they'd done the right thing. But he also felt strangely aroused by the image. There shouldn't have been anything erotic about a photograph of a woman holding a baby. But Kelly was looking straight at the camera. Edward could feel her looking straight at him and the message was clear: You wanted me to do this, and here's the result. Now I'm bonded to my black lover in a way I never was to you, husband.

Rob Matthews was born in London and divides his time between Britain and the United States. He lives with his wife Tina and their dog Boris. Rob is the author of the Cuckold Odyssey series: Come Home with Us, I Can Do It Better, and We Make Our Own Rules. Coming soon: the fourth book in the Cuckold Odyssey series.

Follow Rob on Facebook and Twitter:
<http://facebook.com/robertpatrickmatthews> and @robandtina1

Table of Contents

BLACK AND BLUE

Rob Matthews

Chapter One

Chapter Two

Chapter Three

Chapter Four

Chapter Five

Chapter Six

Chapter Seven

Chapter Eight

Chapter Nine

Chapter Ten

Chapter Eleven

Chapter Twelve

Chapter Thirteen

Chapter Fourteen

Chapter Fifteen

Chapter Sixteen

Chapter Seventeen

Chapter Eighteen

Chapter Nineteen

Chapter Twenty

Chapter Twenty-One